Cyprian. lib. 2. adverſ. Iudæos.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Luke 18.

Joſhua 5. 15.

Pythag. Nudis pedibus vota ſacram faciunto adorato. Tertul. in Apologet.

Note.
1 Cor. 11.
Pſal. 95.

ſonally

nally injoined, and at ſome particular times only. And as for being bare-footed, let this be in putting off worldly thoughts and ſinnes, which only pollute, as hath been ſaid.

But how is it ſaid; the ground that thou ſtandeſt upon is holy? Anſ. This was only in reſpect of Gods appearing there, and vvhileſt he ſanctified this place to deſcend upon it to give the Lavv there. Whence vve may gather, that places ſet apart for Gods people to ſtand before him, to learne his vvill, and to pray unto him, are holy places, and there we ought to be with all reverence. Thus the place, where God appeared to Jacob, came to have the name of Bethel, that is, the Houſe of God, which is holy, and the Temple at Jeruſalem was holy. But the time being expired of doing ſacred duties there, the Lord ſhewed, that it was no longer to be counted the holy place to aſſemble in, by demoliſhing it down to the ground, as he had before pronounced, that not at Jeruſalem, nor upon Mount Gerizim God ſhould novv be worſhipped, but in every place in ſpirit and truth. The going for religions ſake to Bethel, after that it was polluted, is condemned by Hoſea, who counted it now holy no longer. More of the holineſſe of places, ſee in my Expoſition upon John 4.21.

John 4.21.

Hoſea 4.

And he ſaid, I am the God of thy father, of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and Moſes hid his face, &c. If it be demanded here, whom he meaneth by father? Some anſwer, ſaith Simlerus, that Abraham is meant, and ſome Amram: I think, that the word father belongeth to the three here nominated, as if he had ſaid, of thy father Abraham, thy father Iſaac, and thy father Jacob. If it be further demanded, why God entituleth himſelf by theſe three more then by any other? It is commonly anſwered, becauſe to every of them he had anciently promiſed to give the land of Canaan, and hereby Moſes might know that he was mindeful of his Covenant, & with the more aſſurance by faith expect the accompliſhment of this promiſe now. If it be demanded, why God is named three times here; the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob? I anſwer, partly to intimate the myſtery of the Trinity, and partly the ſpeciall Providence of God, appearing over each of theſe in their times, and the excellency of every one of them for ſome ſingular grace in him; as of Abraham, for faith and obedience; of Iſaac, for purity of minde and innocency; and of Jacob for patience and conſtancy, that we might imitate them herein, and ſo have God for our God. Whereas Moſes is ſaid to cover his face, Elijah did the like, 1 King. 19.13. and another time when the Lord would paſſe by Moſes with his glory, he ſaid, that he would cover him with his hand, and after take it away, that he might ſee his back-parts, but his glory he might not ſee. And as men, ſo Angels cover their faces before the Lords glory with their wings. And this is a Symbol of reverence, the glory of God being hereby ſhewed to be ſo great, that no creature is able with open face to look upon it. And to this height of ambition is the great Turke come, that as if he were a God, every man that cometh before him, muſt alſo be with his face covered. Under the new Teſtament the man is appointed in praying and propheſying to be uncovered, and the woman onely to be covered, whereby is ſignified, that all things were covered under the Old Teſtament, and as it were hidden, but revealed under the New, ſo that now we may with open face behold the glory of the Lord.

Verſe 6.

Queſt. 1.

Simlerus.

Queſt. 2.

Ferus.
Calvin.

Queſt. 3.

Exod. 33.22, 23
Eſay 6.2.
1 Cor. 11.

2 Cor. 3.18.

And the Lord ſaid, I have ſurely ſeen the affliction of my people in Egypt, and have heard their cry, &c. In the Hebrew it is, By ſeeing I have ſeen; which is ſo ſpoken to ſhew the certainty. He nameth their cry, becauſe oppreſſion and blood-ſhed, whereby they ſuffered, are crying ſinnes.

Verſe 7.

And he ſaith, He came down to deliver them, &c. not that he deſcendeth or aſcendeth, but then he is ſaid to deſcend, as alſo againſt the men of Babel, & of Sodom, when he doth actually either ſuccour his or execute judgements upon the wicked. And as he ſaith, that he came to deliver them out of the hands of the Egyptians, ſo he ſaith, that he came to bring them up into a large and good Countrey, flowing with milke and honey. To the place of the Queſt. the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites Perizites, Hivites and Jebuſites. It may be demanded here, how the land of Canaan could be called a large Countrey, and how it could be ſpoken of as ſo fertile, and what theſe people were, that did now inhabit it? For the largeneſſe thereof, it was but 160 miles in length, where it was longeſt, viz. from Dan to Beerſheba, and 46 miles in breadth, as Jerome ſaith, and therefore it is here called large, onely in compariſon of the land of Goſhen, in which the Iſraelites now dwelt, and becauſe that afterwards being more increaſed in the dayes of David they were further inlarged by the addition of other Kingdomes to theirs. For the fertility, much is ſpoken alſo in other places, as, Deut. 8. Deut. 32. Deut. 11. Levit. 26. and Lev. 25. God promiſeth, that the land ſhould bring corn enough in one year for three years, that they might keep the ſeventh year a Sabbath. When the ſpies who were ſent to ſearch the land, returned, they certified Moſes, that it was indeed a land flowing with milke and honey, and in token of the great fruitfulneſſe, they brought a cluſter of grapes upon a ſtaffe between two. And the ſame is reported by Ariſtæus, vvho brought the Septuagint to Ptolomie to tranſlate the Bible: for he ſaith, that this Countrey vvas full of olive-trees, and all kinde of corn and pulſe, and that it abounded vvith Vines and honey, and moſt fruitfull paſtures, and innumerable Cattel. Hecatæus Abderita alſo ſaith, that there vvere three hundred thouſand acres of the beſt and moſt fruitfull grounds. Joſephus ſo highly extolleth it for fruitfulneſſe, that he ſaith, he ſhall not erre, that ſhall call it a divine tract, becauſe the beſt things do plentifully grow there, and the deareſt, neither can any Countrey almoſt in all the world compare with it in other fruits, it doth ſo multiply whatſoever is ſown there. Brocardus likewiſe, who ſpent ten years in that Countrey 300 years agone, ſaith, that corn doth wonderfully increaſe there upon their ground, although not ſo well tilled, and without the help of dunging, and there are abundance of all manner of moſt rare fruits, and ſpecially of the apples of Paradiſe, which, he ſaith, grow after the manner of cluſters of grapes, 100 on a cluſter, of the bigneſſe of an hens egge, of a moſt delicate taſte, and ſweet as honey, and in concluſion he ſaith, there are all the good things of the World, that a man may truly ſay, it is a Countrey flowing with milke and honey. Yet Strabo on the contrary ſide, ſaith, that the Jews eaſily obteined Jeruſalem, as for which none would greatly contend, for it is rocky, conteining a Region about for the ſpace of ſixty furlongs barren and dry. And Jerome ſaith, that Jernſalem was the worſt part of all that Province, being rugged with rocky mountains, and dry, uſing rain-water, which is preſerved in Ciſterns, inſtead of that of ſprings, which is rare. And travellers at this day report the like, that for the ſpace of 15 miles about Jeruſalem, the ground is almoſt barren, not yielding ſo much as a tree, or ſcarce a ſhrub: but of old certainly it was moſt fruitfull, otherwiſe, the Lord could not have ſpoken ſo of it, neither could ſo great a multitude have been mainteined within ſo narrow bounds, never being forced by their increaſe to ſeek habitations in other Countreys: it flowed then with milk by reaſon of the cattel, yielding plenty of milke, and with honey, which was, as Joſephus ſaith, there not onely, as in other places, but alſo there were Palmes in abundance, vvhich being preſſed, yielded very much honey, and that not much inferiour to the beſt. But ſince, and as it ſeemeth, even ſince the time of Brocardus, that fruitfull land hath been turned into barrenneſſe, being much changed before in Jeromes dayes, ſo that he could vvrite no better commendations of it. As for the inhabitants, they are here but ſix ſorts, in other places ſeven, in ſome but three, and in ſome ten, the reaſon hereof ſee before, Gen 10 14.

Hieron. Epiſt. 129. ad Dardan.

Numb. 13. 27.

Ariſtæus.

Hecatæus.

Joſeph. lib. 5. antiquit.

Brocard.

Strabo lib. 16.

Hieron. in Eſa. 49.

Verſe 9. Here the ſame is repeated again of his ſeeing the oppreſſions of the Iſraelites, that Moſes be the more aſſured, that he took their miſeries to heart, and would novv provide for a redreſſe.

Verſe 10. Come therefore, and I will ſend thee to Pharaoh, to bring forth my people, &c. He could, ſaith Lyrus, have done it himſelf, but he vvill uſe means, yet ſee Lyrus.

vvhat

what weak means he chooſeth, a ſimple ſhepherd, and no man of power, ſo likewiſe afterwards he ſendeth Fiſher-men Apoſtles to bring his people out of ſpirituall miſeries, that he alone might have all the glory. He biddeth Moſes come, that is, vvith his minde, being therein ſet to do, as he commanded, and had given encouragement to him to do by his promiſe of delivering them.

And Moſes ſaid, Who am I, that I ſhould go to Pharaoh, &c? Verſe 11.

As Moſes, ſo Jeremiah and Iſaiah afterwards ſought to be excuſed from the Propheticall office, to which they were called, the one alledging that he was a childe and the other that he was of polluted lips, and unto theſe we may adde Jonah, and Ammanius when he ſhould have been made a Pesbyter, is ſaid to have cut off one of his eares, that ſo for the want of a member he might be thought unfit, and when it was ſaid, that perfection not of the parts of the body ſo much, but of the minde was required in a Miniſter, he threatened, if they urged him any further to cut out his tongue alſo. So hardly have ſome beene drawn to be Leaders to Gods people in this kinde. But two things certainly wrought with Moſes. 1 The remembrace of the Egyptians hatred againſt him for killing one of them, 2 The ingratitude of his own countreymen, rejecting him, when he had before offered himſelfe for a Deliverer unto them. He doth then here onely plead his ovvn unfitneſſe, and there vvas certainly novv a great vveakneſſe of faith in him, till he vvas further confirmed, vvhich vvrought vvith his other conſiderations to make him unvvilling to go about this matter. Yet in all humility appeared, and a due vveighing of the greatneſſe of the office to be a Leader, for the cenſuring of thoſe vvho looking at nothing but the dignity and the benefit of Prelacies, are farre from refuſing them, for they contrariwiſe without any pondering of their unworthineſſe thruſt themſelves with all forwardneſſe into them: and yet if to be a Leader in temporall things be ſo great a burthen, it is ſo much more in ſpirituall, when as if any die in their ſins, and be not admoniſhed, their blood ſhall be required at their Leaders hands.

Sinlerus. Jer.1.

Ferus. Note.

Ezech.3. Heb.13.8.

And he ſaid, I will certainly be with thee, &c. The Lord to incourage Moſes againſt his fears, promiſeth to be with him; and to confirme his faith, giveth him a ſigne, that the people ſhould after their coming out of Egypt, worſhip him in that Mountain, which when it was come to paſſe, as other like ſignes to Saul and Hezechiah of things to come, availed not a little to confirme him touching the Divine Providence in all things, happening from this time till then. The Hebrews refer theſe words, This ſhall be a token that I have ſent thee, to the preſent burning of the buſh and not conſuming it: but both Ferus, Calvin and others reject this, and imbrace the former, as being indeed the true ſenſe.

Verſe 12.

1 Sam.13. 2 Kings 19.

Ferus. Calvin. Sinlerus, &c.

And Moſes ſaid unto God, When I ſhall come to the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c. and they ſhall ſay to me, What is his name? what ſhall I anſwer? Then God anſwered, I am that I am, ſay thus to the children of Iſrael, I am hath ſent me to you.

Verſe 13. Verſe 14.

Some think that Moſes asked Gods name, as being through his corrupt education in Egypt altogether ignorant of God: but this is certainly falſe, for he is commended before this to have had faith in God. Some think that he inquired thus out of curioſity, but neither is that true, for it ſtood him in hand to be well informed to ſpeak and prove, that God appeared unto him, or elſe he ſhould in all likelihood return again without doing any good upon the children of Iſrael. The drift of his queſtion then is, by what means he might perſwade them, that God had appeared unto him, and would deliver them. He inquired not ſo much, ſaith Calvin, after a name conſiſting of words and ſyllables, as after a note of difference. Errour, ſaith Ferus, had made many gods, and therefore he deſired to know, how he might perſwade them, that he came in the name of the onely true God. But others, by what means he would deliver them, whether by inward motions and inſpirations, turning Sinlerus.

Calvin. Ferus.

turning Pharaohs heart, or by outward judgements: I reſt in the other, & the anſwer alſo maketh for it, & Moſes his further inlarging of his queſtion, Chap. 4. 1. Touching the Anſwer of the Lord, I am that I am, in Hebrew הָיָה אֲשֶׁר הָיָה, I will be that I will be in the Future tenſe, but the future, ſay the Hebrew Talmudiſts, conteineth all differences of time, preſent, paſt and to come, and therefore it is rightly uſed to ſhew Gods eternity comprehending all times. And becauſe the future is often uſed amongſt the Hebrews for the preſent, it is rightly tranſlated, I am, as alſo by the Septuagint, ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ὤν. Thus alſo Philo rendreth it, ſaying, that the meaning is, no name agreeth to me properly, to whom alone it belongeth to be. And the being or eſſence, by which God here calleth himſelfe, ſaith Dionyſius, is rightly ſpoken of when his name is asked, becauſe it is more ancient then all other participations, as life and wiſdome, &c. and from this have all other principles their being. Juſtine Martyr likewiſe ſaith, that God called not himſelfe by any proper name, but by a Participle, ille ens, to put a difference betwixt himſelfe and all falſe gods, which are called gods indeed, but are not, whereas he is. Gregory Nazianzen ſaith, I am that I am, as much as I was, am and will be; or more rightly, I alwayes am, was and ſhall be, being proper to the creatures: for he comprehendeth all that which is in himſelfe, neither having beginning nor ending, being a certaine immenſe and boundleſſe Sea of eſſence. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, In the nature of God there ſhall not be any thing, but what now is, neither hath there been any thing which ſtill is not, but only that which is eternity it ſelfe; wherefore let men, ſaith he, hope in thee which know this thy name, I am that I am, and let them not hope in things that by the volubility of time flow away, having nothing but ſhall be, and hath been: becauſe that which ſhall be; in them, when it is come, is by and by paſt, being expected, till it cometh, with deſire, and loſt, when it is come, with griefe. And why, ſaith Jerome, doth God take unto himſelfe the name of eſſence as his proper name? becauſe he hath his eſſence of himſelfe, and all other things have their eſſence of him. And are not Angels, and Heaven and earth and men, &c. ſaith Gregory, that of God it is ſaid, I am? Certainly they all are; but it is one thing to be, and another principally to be, one thing to be mutably, and another immutably. God only is the firſt being, and is immutable, all other things are of him, being made out of nothing, and would ſoon again return to nothing, if he did not uphold them. Tho. Aquinas ſaith, that this name (I am) is the moſt proper name of God in three reſpects. 1 For the ſignification, vvhich is not of any form, but of himſelf. 2 For the univerſality, other names are leſſe common, or elſe do determine him by adding ſomething according to reaſon. 3 This ſignifieth one in preſent, ſuch as God is, whoſe eſſence knovveth not either paſt or to come. Others, that go upon the future, I will be, expound it, as having reference to the help vvhich he vvould give to the children of Iſrael, as if he had ſaid; I will be a Deliverer to them, as R. Solomon, or as if the latter vvord vvere an expoſition of the former, I will be, becauſe I will be for ever without end, as other Hebrevvs. But moſt follovv the former reading (I am) underſtanding it, as implying God to have his being of himſelf, to be eternall and immutable, and to give being to all other things, ſo that they cannot be ſaid to be, but of and through him, and are ſubject continually to mutations, that vvhich is novv in a moment of time being ſuch, as that for it is, vve muſt ſay it was, and ſhall be only, if God vvill, ſo likevviſe Revel. 1. 8. and Heb. 13. 8.

Verſe 14. Talmudiſte.

Septuagint. Philo.

Dionyſ. Areop. lib. de divinis nomin. Iuſtin Martyr exhort. ad Gentes.

Gregor. Naz. Orat. de Nativ. Domini.

Auguſt. in Pſ. 9.

Hieron. in Epheſ. 3.

Gregor. in Job 33.

Tho. Aquinas part. 1. queſt. 13 artic. 11.

R. Solomon.

Verſe 15. And God ſaid againe to Moſes, Say thus to the children of Iſrael, The Lord God of your Fathers, of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, &c. In Hebrevv Jehovah Elohei. The name Jehovah is alſo taken from eſſence, noting Eternity, and the force, from vvhich all things are, of vvhich he is the cauſe efficienter, formaliter and finaliter, as the Schoolmen ſpeak. Many names of God are found in the holy Scriptures, as Jerome noteth, out of the Hebrevvs. 1 El. ſtrong. 2 Eloha. 3 Elohim.

Tremel.

Hieron. Epiſt. 136. ad Marcellam.

Iohim. 4 Sabbaoth, the Lord of Hosts. 5 Elion, excelsus. 6 Adonai, the Lord. 7 Shaddai, omnipotent. 8 Jah. 9 Ehejeh. 10 this name Jehovah, in Hebrevv יהוה, all three from one radix הוה to be. The last name is called by the Hebrevvs Nomen Tetragrammaton & ineffabile, a four lettered name, and unspeakable. And the reason, vvhy it is unspeakable, is, because it is uncertaine, with what points these 4 Letters are to be supplied. And to make it the more probable, that to pronounce this name aright as a great secret, they render the next words, this is my name for ever, by these, this my name is secret or hidden, affirming that the word לעלם being written without vau signifieth not ever, but hidden: but when the Messiah cometh, he will reveale the right pronouncing of it. Then the Lord shall be King over all the earth, as Zachary speaketh, and there shall be one Lord, and his name shall be one, viz. this one name rightly pronounced, which (they say) none ever could do, since Simeon, who pronounced it taking Jesus in his Armes. For he was the last that pronounced it, and since none know the right pronunciation thereof. But when the Messiah cometh, it shall be knowne, according to that of the Prophet, Then shall my people know my name, wherefore in lib. Sanedrim it is said, Whoso shall dare to pronounce this name, shal have no part in the life to come; and it was forbidden altogether to be pronounced out of the Temple, and there when it occurred, Adonai was read instead thereof. Now it cannot be denied indeed, but that by the confession of the most learned in the Hebrew tongue, it is uncertaine, how this name should be pronounced, the pronouncing of it by Jehovah being new and unheard of in former ages: Thus Genebrardus. The name Jovah or Jehovah is neither amongst Christians nor Jews a name of the Lord, and cannot come from any other, but Jove. We Christians have not heard by the Apostles, or by any of the ancient Fathers, that God was ever so called, although Dionysius, Jerome, Theodoret, Rabanus and Joa him Abbas have written whole books of the names of God, both in Greek and Latine. And the Jews deny, that they have amongst them any such name, and detest this appellation, as a prophanation thereof. For if this were the name, say they, all our Ancestours certainly should not have been ignorant of it, Rabbi Moses Egyptius, Joseph, and Albo, Jacob, Moses the Author of the Maiemonim, Abraham. Aben-Ezra, Lyranus, Burgensis, Ritius, and Felix, who were converted from Judaisme to Christianity, and have written professedly of this Nomen Tetragrammaton, and of all other the names of God. Wherefore he inveigheth against this name, in the words of Origen, saying, that it is a most detestable errour of the Gentiles, to give God a new, uncertaine, strange and unused name, yea he addeth, that he thinketh the spirit of Varro is called from Hell againe, who thought Jove to be the God of the Jews, to the overthrowing of the truth of God: thus he.

Our late Writers, who are for Jehovah, do not think that it commeth from Jove, but rather that the Heathen hearing of this, as the name of the true God, called their chiefe God so, from Jehovah Jove. But according to this it must be granted, that anciently it was thus pronounced, whereas Antiquity hath given us no light into this pronunciation. Irenaus pronounceth it Jaoth; Isidore, Jodiod, as if it were to be founded by Iod doubled; Macrobius, Iao; and Clemens Alex. saith, This mysticall name consisting of 4 letters may be called, Iao, which is, and which is to come. Theodoret saith, that the name of foure Letters is called by the Samaritans Jave; by the Hebrews. Iah. But although it may be known, how this name is to be pronounced, yet Moses certainly was taught to pronounce it, when he was bidden to go and say thus to the children of Israel, and therefore the next words cannot be read; This is my name in secret, but for ever, as we read it, which also further appeareth by the words added for the explication of this, and my memoriall from generation to generation. And the word לעלם is used also in other places without vau in this sense, but as with vau it signifieth eternity, so vvithout it, saith Jerome, it is put for a time that shall be determined, yet both vvayes it is translated (in Hebraei.

Zachar. 14. 9.

Esa. 52.

Genebrard. in 1. Epist. ad Iacob.

Irenaeus. Isidor. Macrob. Sat. c. 18. Theodoret. in Exod. 15.

Hieron. in Gal.

seculum) for ever. The radix of עולם seculum is עלם to hide, and therefore is the word comming hence rendred for ever, because the end of the time hereby signified is hidden and cannot be seen into, and for this cause not only eternity is hereby set forth, but a long durance, the end of the time whereof is to man unknowne. The Hebrews, as is most probable, out of a superstition so seldome pronounced this name, that at length the right pronunciation was forgotten, especially in the captivity of Babylon, at what time their whole language was much corrupted; yet it is rightly called uneffable, because the thing set forth hereby cannot according to the essence be sufficiently uttered, and because God and the things of God are not lightly, and commonly to be spoken of, but with great care and reverence. It is also an incommunicable name, because when as the name Elohim is communicated to Angels and to Judges, this is not spoken but only of the Lord, and of Christ, hereby appearing to be one essence. The Hebrews hold, that this name doth mystically set forth the whole Trinity. י principium, the Father, ה vivere, the Sonne, and ו a Conjunction copulative, the Holy Ghost, and ה is twice, but י once, because the Sonne hath a double relation, to the Father, as begotten, and to the Holy Ghost, as proceeding from him, together with the Father. In ancient Hebrew books, for this name, three Jods are set down, with Camets under, all inclosed in a Circle, the 3 Jods setting forth the 3 persons, Camets the divine nature common to each one, and the Circle their Unity. Others finde the Trinity here otherwise, which I spare to set downe. Now if in this name the Trinity be set forth, there is some verity in that which they hold touching the Messiah, that he shall teach his people this name, for so hath Christ done, as Joh. 1. 18. it is spoken of him, when he so clearly taught the Trinity, saying Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And they say, that whoso knoweth rightly this name, may do any thing, work Miracles, cast out Devills, &c. and therefore Jesus knowing it did such wonders, and if so, then by their own grounds it is plaine, that he is the true Messiah. This name is also by superstitious persons held to have vertue to represse and to call forth Devills, and to cure diseases, for which cause it is much used by inchanters, but that is a foule abuse.

Simlerus.

Rabbini.

The Letters of this name ingraven in Gold in the high Priests miter, when he came forth to meet Alexander the Great, strook such reverence into the King, that he fell down and adored it. And being asked by Parmenio, why he so reverenced that Priest, when he was reverenced of all men? he answered that he reverenced not him, but God, whose high Priest he was. To conclude, if it be demanded, why God set himselfe forth by this name singularly? I answer. 1 Because it signifying essence doth most fitly set forth him, that hath his essence of himselfe. 2 That giveth essence to all other things. 3 That giveth being to his promises, as he did now in the time of Moses, but not of Abraham, for which cause he saith, that he was not known to him & to the other Fathers by this name. 4 Because he is eternall, ה aptly being put for fuit, י for erit, and הו for est. 5 Because he is immutable. But how saith he touching this name, the God of Abraham, &c. this is my name for ever; for now this name ceaseth, he being called the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ? Ans. To this Calvin saith, that the Covenant made with Abraham was in Christ performed, and therefore his name is not by this blotted out, but rather renued, and therefore Abrahams name ceaseth not under the Gospell, but he is still under Christ the Father of the faithfull. God still goeth under this name, to shew that his Saints departed are still living, as Christ argueth. If the name Ehejeh, or יהוה should seeme strange to the children of Israel, to heare of the God of Abraham, &c. would not, but his promises to them would thus come into their mindes to hope the more, that they should now be delivered.

Joseph.

Quest.

Exod. 6. 2.

Quest.

Calvin.

Matth. 22.

Verse 16. Go gather together the Elders of Israel, and say unto them, The God of your Fathers hath hath appeared unto me, &c. The Elders of the people were not all the old men amongſt them, but the Princes of the Tribes, who were by Pharaoh ſet over the reſt to exact their works upon them, as we may ſee, Chap. 5.14, &c. where they are ſaid to be beaten, becauſe the people had not done their tasks impoſed upon them. Theſe muſt be called together, and not all the people, who being ſo numerous, could not without confuſion have been gathered together, and ſpoken unto by Moſes, and from them the reſt were to hear this meſſage, that there being a conſent amongſt them, Pharaoh might afterwards be ſpoken to. Their Princes, ſaith Ferus, muſt firſt be dealt withall, who excelling the reſt in power and wiſdome, and knowing the promiſes of God made to their fathers, were more docible, and if they were vvonne, the common ſort being led by them in all likelihood, vvould the rather be dravvn on alſo. For the common people led by force, not by reaſon, vvould othervviſe haply have rejected this motion coming from one man, although it tended to their good. Princes and Governours and chief men then knowing that the people are apt to be led by their examples, ſhould give them good examples in all things, and not evill.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Note.

The words, which Moſes was commanded to uſe unto them, are, I have ſurely remembred, &c. alluding to thoſe of Jacob, The Lord will be with you, and bring you back into the land of your fathers, and of Joſeph, God will viſit you, and make you to aſcend, &c. that recounting Gods ancient promiſes, they might the rather believe and obey. For when they ſhould hear theſe two words הוה being; and פקד viſiting, ſay the Hebrews, they might know the time to be now come. The words following, Verſe 17. are the ſame that were uſed to Moſes before, and therefore the ſenſe may be ſought there.

Gen.48.22. Gen.50.24.

Hebræi.

And when they ſhall hearken to thy voice, thou and the Elders of Iſrael ſhall go in to the King of Egypt, and ſay unto him, The Lord God of the Hebrews hath met us, now therefore let us I pray thee go three dayes journey in the Wilderneſſe to ſacrifice to the Lord our God. The Lord could have by his power brought them out, no leave being asked of the King, but becauſe he is for good order and obedience to Kings, he directeth them thus to do. And Pharaoh refuſing to yield, there would be juſt cauſe of bringing judgements upon him to his deſtruction. And he biddeth them ſay, The Lord hath met us, intimating that this motion came of the Lord, and was not a motion of their own, but came unexpectedly unto them out of his great mercy. He putteth none other reaſons into their mouthes, as that they being but as ſojourners there, he did them wrong thus to inthrall them, and to murther their children, but only this, that the Lord commanded them this ſervice, and if any Lord upon earth ſhould withſtand his will, he ſhould ſhew himſelf worthy to be deprived of all Lordſhip and Empire for rebelling againſt the great Lord of all. But how are three dayes going out to ſacrifice onely ſpoken of, when the intent was, that they ſhoud go altogether away, never to return again? Anſw. This was all that God would have at this time revealed unto Pharaoh, reſerving the further manifeſtation of his good pleaſure, till afterwards. We are not bound to diſcover all our intentions to our enemies, the liberty of a few dayes is onely to be propounded unto him, that his obſtinacy in not yielding in ſo ſmall a matter, might appear to be the greater, and the more worthy of ſevere puniſhment, eſpecially the people, to whom this was denied, being ſuch, as that they ought alwayes to have been free to go at their pleaſure. But how can it be ſaid that they went to ſacrifice, when as Stephen ſaith, that they offered no ſacrifice to God in 40 years, out of Amos 5.25? Anſw. They did ſacrifice, when Jethro came to Moſes, and when the Tabernacle was ſet up, as is expreſly related, and probably at many other times, ſee my Expoſition, Act. 7.41. but their neglect of this duty, is inveighed againſt by Amos, his meaning being, that within a while, all the ſacrifices which they offered, were made to idols, and not to the true God, and therefore are ſaid not to have been done to him.

Verſe 17. Verſe 18.

Ferus. Simlerus.

Calvin.

Queſt.

Queſt. Acts 7.42.

Verſe 19. Calvin.

And I know, that the King of Egypt will not ſuffer you to go, but with a ſtrong hand. This is foretold, leſt when they ſhould come to Pharaoh, and be ſtiffly denied, they ſhould be altogether diſcouraged: for now they were armed to bear the repulſe, it being no more then according to the divine Prediction they might expect. Queſt. But why would the Lord have them go to Pharaoh to intreat that which they ſhould not obtein? Anſw. For the greater glory of God, when afterwards that ſhould be juſtly extorted from him vvhich he unjuſtly denied, being ſo courteouſly intreated. Simlerus. Theſe vvords, but or unleſſe with a ſtrong hand, are in the Hebrevv ולא even not with a ſtreng hand, whereupon divers expound them diverſly; ſome referring them to the Hebrevvs, as if it had been ſaid, He vvill haply let ſome of you go, but not vvith all your bands, vvhich are as a ſtrong hand; ſome to the Egyptians, thus, He vvill not let you go by his ſtrong povver, for hereby he vvill think to hold you; ſome to the Lord thus, He vvill not let you go, no not vvhen I ſhall ſend my plagues upon him: for he ſuffered them not to depart for all the nine former plagues, till the laſt vvas ſent, vvhich, according to this Expoſition, muſt be meant in Verſe 20 here follovving, but there it is, I will ſmite Egypt with all my wonders, and afterwards he will let you go: and therefore the beſt is to expound it by this vvord, unleſſe or vvithout, ſo Simlerus. Tremelius rendereth it, ne quidem manu forti, and Fagius likewiſe, and to this do I rather incline, and the next words may aptly be expounded, as agreeing to it, being thus taken, Therefore I will ſmite Egypt with all my wonders; that is, not onely with thoſe, that he ſhall not be moved by, but bringing ſtill judgements upon Egypt, till that by the laſt he ſhall be compelled to let you go, who would not yield for the former. And thus underſtood, they might be more confirmed, when God ſhould come with a ſtrong hand in many plagues, and yet he ſhould obſtinately deny leave unto them to depart, whereas otherwiſe, a ſtrong hand being uſed in theſe plagues, and yet not prevailing, they might haply have doubted of the event.

Verſe 20.

Verſe 21. Calvin.

And I will give this people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, and it ſhall come to paſſe, when ye go away, that ye ſhall not go empty. 22 Every woman ſhall aſk of her neighbour, &c. veſſels of ſilver and gold, &c. This is added for encouragement, that with the more alacrity they might go about this buſineſſe, God that hath all hearts in his hands, ſaith, that he will turn the hearts of the Egyptians ſo, as that whereas now they hated the Hebrews, they ſhould be loving and beneficent towards them, and ſend them laden away with great riches. And this may be a great comfort to us, and a Bulwark againſt the fear of moſt fell and powerfull enemies, when God will, he can tame and turn them, and make them gentle. Note. If it be demanded, Queſt. how this may be juſtified, for to take from one to give to another is againſt Juſtice, and the juſt Judge of all ſhould preſerve to every one his right rather? I anſwer, that whatſoever any man hath, is the Lords, and therefore at his pleaſure he may take from one without injuſtice, and give to another. Some anſwer otherwiſe, that the Egyptians had gotten their goods out of the Hebrews labours unjuſtly extorted from them, they being hardly in the mean ſeaſon mainteined, and therefore in requiring theſe goods now of them, they required but their own. But there needeth no reaſon to be rendered of the Lords doings but his wil according to that of Auguſtine: The command of God is ſuch, that a man may not judge of it, but obey it, becauſe he knoweth how juſtly he commandeth, and it is a ſervants part to do obediently whatſoever he commandeth. There cannot be a juſter titleto any thing, then by his donation, for he is above all Laws, and his will is a Law to himſelf, and to all things: thus Calvin. And this defence is ſufficient; neither could the goods thus taken away be counted ſtolne, becauſe the true Lord and Owner of them all thus diſpoſed of them. Veſſels of gold, of ſilver and raiment onely are named, but they had precions ſtones alſo, as is moſt probable, becauſe we read of them afterwards in the building of the Tabernacle, and of oil and ſweet ſpices, therefore Auguſt. Mandatum Dei eſt, de quo non eſt judicandum, ſed cui eſt obtemperandum, &c.

Simlerus.

therefore the whole prey that they ſhould carry away, was comprehended under theſe. And it is ſaid, that the women ſhould ask them, becauſe many of them perteined to women for ornament and uſe about their bodies and houſes. And it is ſaid, They ſhould put them upon their ſonnes and daughters; that is, ſaith Calvin, they ſhould have ſuch plenty, that they ſhould all go out laden with them. For the Allegory, Moſes ſent to Pharaoh with judgements may not unfitly be thought to ſet forth the Law given by God to deſtroy the Devil and his workes, that men who were mancipated to him, might be called hereby from his ſervice, but the Law effected not this no more then Moſes by ſpeaking to Pharaoh, yet the Lord Chriſt by his death and reſurrection did it, as the Lord deſtroyed Pharaoh, and delivered Iſrael, by a ſtrong hand: thus Rabanus Maurus. And for the rich things of the Egyptians which they ſhould carry away, they figured out the diverſity of learning amongſt the Gentiles, which ſhould be turned under the Goſpel to the adorning of the Doctors of the Chriſtian Religion: ſo Iſidore.

Calvin.
The Allegory.
Rabanus Maurus.
Iſidor.

CHAP. IV.

THen Moſes excuſed himſelfe, ſaying, They would not believe, that the Lord had appeared unto him, wherupon he was bidden to caſt his rod down upon the ground, and it was turned into a ſerpent. The Hebrews ſay, that Moſes ſinned here in ſaying, that the people would not believe him, and therefore he was puniſhed with terrours before his rod turned into a ſerpent, and with a leprous hand. But theſe are vain imaginations. Moſes knowing how ſtiffe they were, and having ſome experience hereof, when before he offered himſelfe for a Deliverer unto them, but was rejected, could not but be doubtful of their believing him, and therefore deſires to be further inſtructed, how to make them believe. The Septuagint therefore by Paraphraſe render the words thus, If they will not believe nor hear me, what ſhall I ſay unto them? as if he had ſaid, What ſigne ſhall I do in their ſight, that they may believe? And this ſeemeth indeed to be the end of his ſpeech, becauſe he had hitherto onely been taught, in what words to ſpeak unto them, but no preſent power was yet conferred unto him, to ſhew his calling, which, as I ſaid before, was a thing that he deſired to be ſatisfied in, when he asked the Lord his Name, and having not hitherto obteined it; now he moveth again for it, and hath power to ſhew ſignes given unto him. Firſt, his rod or ſtaffe, for ſo the word מטה here uſed, ſignifieth, is turned into a ſerpent, when he had caſt it upon the ground. It was doubtleſſe a ſhepherds ſtaffe, which he uſed in keeping his ſheep, and this is choſen by God for the thing, about which he would now ſhew his power, as moſt apt for the preſent purpoſe. Hereby ſaith R. Abraham Aben-Ezra, is Pharaoh ſet forth, who at the firſt entering of the Hebrews in Egypt, was as a rod, eaſie to be handled, but afterwards as a ſerpent, for which cauſe he is by the Prophet called a great Serpent or Dragon. And again, at the time of their going out he was as a rod gentle and harmleſſe. Lyranus ſaith, that hereby the ſtate of the children of Iſrael was ſet forth, who at the firſt under Joſeph had dominion, ſignified by a rod, but afterwards were caſt down, and hated, as a Serpent; but finally, at their going out of Egypt returned to their power and authority again, when Moſes took up this Rod at his comming to the Iſraelites: thus alſo Ferus, who ſaith moreover, that hereby was ſignified the horrour of Gods judgements, till they be brought, none feare them; but being brought, the very beſt are made to tremble; but being removed again, all feare is taken away. Calvin and Simlerus ſay, that Moſes was ſet forth by this ſtaffe: for he in himſelf, being but a ſhepherd, obſcure and living in exile, was no more to Pharaoh to move him, then a ſtaff in a ſhepherds hand; but going to him at the command of the Lord, he became as the ſtaff at his command caſt upon the ground, a terrible Serpent to him, he ſhould

Verſe 1,2.
Verſe 3,4.
Hebræi.
Septuagint.
Rab. Abraham.
Ezec. 29.
Lyranus.
Ferus.
Calvin.
Simlerus.

ſhould not need any other armes to terrefie Pharaoh, but going naked with this ſtaffe by a divine vertue he ſhould be made to fear before him. But in that being laid hold upon by Moſes again, it is turned into a ſtaffe, it was ſignified, that the ſame which ſhould be terrible to Pharaoh ſhould be a ſupport and comfort to Moſes, and to Iſrael. And this I take to be the beſt, as moſt agreeable to the preſent purpoſe. For the Allegory, to which this is alſo turned. Rabanus will have this rod a figure of Chriſt, who being caſt upon the ground by his incarnation and paſſions, the Jews fled from him, as abhorring to acknowledge him to be their Saviour, but they ſhall take hold of his tail as it were, when in the laſt times they ſhall be turned to the faith, and then ſhall he come again in power to judge the world, of which the rod is a ſigne. Iſidore ſaith, that he was made like a ſerpent, when being crucified, his Diſciples fled from him, but riſing again he became again what he was before, &c.

The Allegory. Rab. Maurus. Iſidore.

Auguſtine will have Chriſt crucified ſet forth, and by his death, ſubduing the Devill that he cannot hold the people of the Lord any more in bondage, as Pharaoh could not hold the Iſraelites, &c. I think it better here to follow no Allegory but for the preſent purpoſe, unleſſe we ſhall with Ferus make one in generall of all theſe ſignes thus. Moſes beginning with all ſignes of terrour, figured out the Law given by him, which is to terrour, but theſe being turned again, and all terrour taken away, the Goſpel is full of conſolation. If it be demanded, whether this were a true ſerpent or onely in appearance? I anſwer with Calvin, that it was by Gods almighty povver made a true ſubſtantiall ſerpent, and this vvas proved aftervvards, vvhen the rod of Moſes thus turned devoured the rods of the enchanters of Egypt. Note here, hovv man differeth from himſelfe, being left to his ovvn vveakneſſe, or ſtrengthened by Gods grace; being left, he feareth and fleeth; being ſtrengthened, he feareth nothing.

Auguſt. Serm. 86. de Tempore. Ferus. Queſt. Note.

Verſe 6. Then God ſaid unto him, Put thy hand into thy boſome: and he did ſo: and having plucked it out, it was leprous, as white as ſnow, &c. Hereby, ſaith Lyranus, vvas ſet forth the ſtate of the people, vvhen he ſhould firſt take them into his Patronage, they ſhould be more afflicted, but aftervvards they vvere healed, and vvholly delivered. Thus alſo Ferus, becauſe God bade Moſes to carry them in his boſome, but being taken as it vvere into his boſome, they became more abominable to the Egyptians, as the Leproſie, as they complained, Thou haſt made us to ſtinke before the Egyptians; and as the Leproſie cannot be cured by any but by God, ſo by Gods povver alone they vvere made more gracious; and as a man can eaſily put his hand into his boſome, ſo eaſily could God alter their caſe, vvhen they vvere ſo hated.

Verſe 6. Lyranus. Ferus. Numb. 11. Exod. 5.

Calvin, and after him Simlerus touch both the former ſignification of Ferus, and moreover, bring another, viz. that Moſes vvas ſet forth by the hand made leprous, becauſe he had been a long time ſeparated, and ſhut up in Madian, like a leprous perſon, but novv he vvas reſtored again to his former dignity.

Calvin.

Verſe 8, 9. After theſe two ſignes, in caſe they ſhould not for them believe, a third is given; Thou ſhalt take of the waters of the river, and poure them upon the dry land, and they ſhall be turned into blood. Becauſe by tvvo or three vvitneſſes every thing is confirmed, here is a third ſigne added, touching vvhich Joſephus vvriteth, that fetching vvater from ſome neer place, he poured it dovvn there, and it vvas turned into blood: but Philo more agreeably to the truth, ſaith, that this vvas not done till he came into Egypt. By this ſigne, ſaith Lyranus, vvas ſignified, that God vvould novv be revenged upon that bloody ſin of drovvning Infants by deſtroying the Egyptians. And like unto this is that of Ferus, the ſhedding of the blood of their firſt-born for the caſting of the Hebrevvs Infants into the River vvas ſignified by this turning of the vvater of the River into blood. The turning of the River-vvater into blood, might ſerve to remember the Egyptians of their bloody ſin committed in thoſe vvaters, and that that now the time of revenge was therefore at hand, and it was a Præludium of their periſhing in the Red-ſea. This ſigne of taking water out of the River, and turning it into blood, was done before the Elders of Iſrael, but the water in the River was turned into blood before Pharaoh, and continued ſo ſeven dayes to the great annoyance of him and his people, wherein there was a repreſentation of that, which hapneth by a ſingular providence about murthered corpſes, the murtherer comming neare, they bleed: ſo the Infants here drowned bleed as it were, and with their blood comming out and crying for revenge, change the waters into a bloudy colour.

Joſeph. Philo. Lyranus. Ferus. Simlerus.

And Moſes ſaid (O my Lord) I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor ſince thou haſt ſpoken to thy ſervant, but I am ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſlow tongue. Verſe 10.

In the Hebrew, for eloquent is (a man of words) and ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt and Aquila alſo render it; it is a Phraſe in that language to ſet forth eloquence, as Joſephs Brethren were called men of cattel, and Noah a man of the earth, that is, an Husbandman, as they were Shepherds; for the next words, neither heretofore, in Hebrew, neither yeſterday nor the third day, that is, the day before that, and ſo it is rendred by all both Greek and Latine Expoſitours. But the meaning is the ſame: for theſe words are commonly uſed for all the time going before, or for a long time before, ſo Jacob ſaith, that Labans countenance was not towards him, as yeſterday and the day before, that is, as in times paſt, and Exod. 21. If an Oxe had uſed to puſh yeſterday, or the day before in the ſame ſenſe, and it is ſpoken of a man not hating his Neighbour before, Deut. 19. Only in one place, two or three dayes before only are meant hereby, as when David told the High Prieſt, that they had conteined themſelves from women, two or three dayes, uſing theſe very words. Whereupon ſome will have the meaning here to be, that Moſes being aſtoniſhed with Gods glory, ſince his beginning to talk with him, which they hence gather was 3 dayes one after another, was thus diſabled to uſe his tongue. For, ſaith Rupertus, Hereby it is plaine, that Moſes his conference with the Lord continued to the third day, ſince which time, he found, that although before he was eloquent, yet now in this divine buſineſſe he ſeemed a childe unto himſelfe, and unable to ſpeak before men, ſo likewiſe Philo and Origen and Gregory illuſtrating the ſame by Jeremiah complaining of his inability in like manner. So that according to theſe, Moſes was not naturally defective in eloquence, but ſince his communing with God: and for this that of Stephen, Act. 7.22. may ſeem to make, where he calleth him, A man mighty in word and deed. But the Septuagint, which held Moſes naturally to be of a ſtuttering and ſtammering tongue, anſwer, that he might notwithſtanding be mighty λόγοις, that is, in the ſpeech, which is the invention and ratiocination of the minde. But whatſoever is or can be ſaid for Moſes his defect in eloquence growing now upon him, the Text maketh plainly againſt it, wherein the time, ſince the Lords ſpeaking to him is disjoined from that ſet forth by yeſterday and the other day; as if Moſes ſhould have ſaid, I have not only wanted eloquence heretofore, but even ſince thou haſt ſpoken unto me, I have not found this fault amended. And if he had been taken with a want of words at this time only, there would have been no need of one to be joyned unto him to play the Oratour, but he being gone from this aſtoniſhing preſence might have bin able to do it himſelf; Wherefore Calvin is for a naturall defect this way in him, & Pererius alſo. Some ſay, that being formerly eloquent, he now having led a Shepherds life ſo long, had loſt that faculty; ſome, that he meant his inability for want of uſe to ſpeak in the Egyptian tongue to Pharaoh; and the Hebrews ſay, that when in his childehood he had caſt Pharaohs Crown to the ground, of which I ſpake before out of Joſephus, Pharaohs Daughter excuſed the fact, ſaying, that the childe did it out of ſimplicity: then a wizard of the Kings would needs have his wit proved by holding an hot coale to his mouth, which he did, and the childe put his tongue to the coale, whereby it was burnt, and thus

Gen. 46.
Gen. 9.
Gen. 31.
Exod. 5. 7.
1 Sam. 21.
Rupertus lib. 1. in Exod. cap. 18.
Philo de vit. Mos.
Origen hom. 3. in Exod.
Gregor. hom. 8. in Ezech.
Septuagint.
Calvin.

thus he was ever after hindred in his ſpeech. But leaving all theſe as imaginations, I reſt in that, which hath been ſaid. The laſt words ſlow of ſpeech, are Cavad, heavy or ſlow, he wanted words readily to expreſſe his minde, or laboured in pronouncing them. And ſuch an Inſtrument did God chooſe for his owne greater glory: and this doth Moſes write of himſelfe, laying open his imperfections, and backwardneſſe in obeying Gods calling in humility, whereby we muſt alſo learne to lay open and confeſſe our own faults, that they may be forgiven unto us out of Gods mercy.

Note.

Verſe 11. But the Lord anſwered him: Who hath given the mouth to man, or made dumbe or Verſe 12. deafe, &c. Have not I the Lord? Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, &c.

Hebræi. The Hebrews in rendring a reaſon, why the Lord ſpeaketh of his making dumb and deaf and blinde as well as giving a mouth to ſpeak, ſay, that theſe things were ſpoken in alluding to his operations paſt about Moſes, becauſe when he had ſlaine the Egyptian that wronged the Hebrew, and was by Pharaoh therefore committed to the Goaler, the Goaler was immediately ſmitten with blindeneſſe, and ſo Moſes had opportunity to eſcape from him, and the King ſeeing him when he fled, was ſtricken dumb, ſo that he could not ſpeak nor make any ſigne to have him apprehended againe. But whether this be true or no is uncertaine, but it is certaine, that God can thus in judgement ſmite whom it pleaſeth him, as he did the Sodomites with blindeneſſe.

Queſt. If it be demanded, why God did not heale his imperfection, but only promiſed to be with his mouth? I anſwere, that this was more, then to make him moſt eloquent, becauſe thus he ſhould be ſure of good ſucceſſe, whereas eloquence ſeparated from wiſdome (that is, unleſſe God giveth wiſdome to move thoſe that are ſpoken to, to good) doth more hurt to the Commonwealth then good, as Cicero ſpeaketh. Againe, when Moſes having no good utterance by ſpeaking ſhould prevaile, the power of God ſhould be more magnified; and laſtly, there would be the better uſe of Aaron joyned unto him, one not having all gifts, but one ſome, and another others, the communion of the members of the Church being the better preſerved by this diſtribution of gifts.

Sinlerus.

Verſe 13. And he ſaid, I pray the (O Lord) ſend by the hand of him, whom thou wilt ſend.

Rupertus expoundeth this requeſt of Moſes, as meant of the Meſſiah, as if he had ſaid, Send him, whom thou didſt promiſe by our Father Jacob to ſend to deliver thy people, when he ſaid, The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, till Shiloh cometh, that is, mittendus, the man to be ſent. And whereas the Lord was angry with Moſes for ſpeaking thus, he ſaith, that this was either becauſe it was not for Moſes to take upon him to ſet down the time, when the Meſſiah ſhould be ſent, which the Lord had reſerved to himſelfe, or he was ſo angry, that he would not vouchſafe him an anſwer touching that matter, but urged him now to go: thus alſo Juſtine Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian, Euſebius, and Baſil Others diſliking this, becauſe God was wroth, and anſwereth nothing touching the Meſſiah, as he would have done, if that had been the drift of Moſes his ſpeech, ſay that his meaning is, as if he had ſaid, Lord ſend by any other more fit, whom thou pleaſeſt: Thus Calvin, and Toſtatus and Cajetan. Others ſay, that Moſes foreſaw by the Spirit, that not he but another, viz. Joſuah ſhould bring the people into the Land of Canaan, and therefore he prayeth, that God would now ſend him alſo: thus R. Solomon. Others, that Aaron was famous amongſt the Hebrews before this for propheſying: for Ezechiel ſaith, that God ſpake to them, before they came out of Egypt to put away their abominations, and not to ſerve the Idols of Egypt, and this they ſay, was by none other, but Aaron his Prophet then. And it ſeemeth to be ſo, becauſe God ſpake to Aaron, to come and meet Moſes, v. 27. as if it were a thing uſuall with him ſo to do. And therefore, he hearing of the authority of Aaron amongſt the people, being alſo his elder Brother, deſireth that Rupert. lib. 1 in Exod. cap. 18.

Gen. 49. 10.
Juſtin. Martyr.
Tertull.
Cyprian.
Euſeb. adverſ. Judæos.
Baſil in Eſa. 6.
Calvin.
Toſtatus.
R. Solomon.
Lyranus.
Ezech. 20. 7.

that he might rather be sent: thus some of the Hebrews. The words will beare any of these constructions, but Calvin readeth them, by the hand, by which thou wilt send; the Chaldee Paraphrast, send now by the hand of him, who is worthy to be sent. In the Hebrew, word for word it is, Send now, or I pray thee, by the hand thou shalt send; an ecliptical speech, which must be supplied with (which) or (of him which) and according to this latter we render it, following Pagninus. Touching Josuah, it is a meere imagination, that he had any Revelation, so that he should meane him. That touching Aaron, or of one at large, may indifferently be received. But because so ancient and famous Writers follow the first, and nothing of force can be brought against it, but much for it, I chiefly imbrace that. Thus also Simlerus, who saith, as making it the common exposition of our Church, Ours expound it of Christ, neither is it any thing strange, that Moses should now desire, that the Messiah might be sent, who in all straits was desired by the faithfull, as by Jacob, saying, I expect thy salvation (O Lord) when by the spirit he foresaw a dangerous time, and spake of it. If it be objected, that Moses knew, that the Messiah should not yet come, because the Scepter must first depart from Judah, and he himselfe spake after this of a Prophet like unto himselfe, whom the Lord should raise up unto them; It is easily answered, that Moses, as all other Prophets was inlightened by degrees, and therefore now might be ignorant of that, and the knowledge which he then had of the Messiah was but obscure and not so punctuall, as to be able yet to distinguish the times particularly. For Gods being angry with him objected also before and answered; it may further be said, that he was angry for his seeking to withdraw himselfe from the office injoined him, not respecting so much now, what was said of him, that was to be sent. These words, by the hand, are an Hebraisme, it being meant by that instrument, or man, &c. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Moses, & he said, Do not I know thy brother Aaron, the Levite, that he can speak well? & behold, he cometh forth to meet thee, &c. These words, that he can speak well, are rendered by Calvin, Loquendo loquuturus est; and by Simlerus, Loquendo loquutus est; & it is both in the Hebrew and the Septuagint, by speaking he shall speak; but the Septuagint have it, λαλῶν λαλήσει σοι, he shall speak for thee: the meaning is, he can certainly speak well, and hath not that defect in speaking, which thou objectest, and I therefore I will joyne him unto thee. In that the anger of the Lord was now kindled against Moses, the like to which hath not been said: for any reluctation made hitherto, some hold, that he sinned by seeking to put off the office, to which he was called, to another; but others that he did not sinne, because he desired that another might be sent more worthy, only out of humility, and not that he utterly refused to obey his calling. Simlerus is for the first, that he was not without fault, because God would not otherwise have bin angry with him, & Calvin saith, that he obstinately denied now, & therefore God would not spare him any longer. The Hebrews also hold, that he sinned greatly by diffidence & distrust, & therefore for a punishment he was not suffered to enter into the land of Canaan; & Rab. Solomon saith that he was for this deprive, of the Priestly office, which should also otherwise have bin conferred upon him as well as the Regall. Some also, saith Simlerus, hold that he was punished by the Angell that met him in the Inne afterwards, and would have killed him; and some, that his punishment was the continuance of his impediment in his speech, which haply should otherwise have been taken away. But I rather hold with Calvin, that the Lords sharp reproving of him was his only punishment; for it is not a light, but a great punishment to a man for the Lord to be angry with him and in wrath to reprove him. Touching the Angels meeting him to kill him, and his being not permitted to enter into Canaan, there be other reasons yielded. And it is but an imagination, that he should otherwise have been High Priest also, because this office belonged to the first-born, as his right, & therefore to Aaron rather, who was his elder Brother. Only it may be, that he thus was prevented of the healing

Hebræi.

Simlerus.

Gen. 49.

Object.

Verse 14.

Simlerus.
Calvin.
Hebræi.
R. Solomon.

Calvin.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 35. c. 13. Quia mentis humilis extitit, nobilitatem prioratus tanti reginibais quoniam expavit.

Moſes precibus renititur, ne Hebræi populo præponatur, Paul. ad adverſa prompto animo ducitur, ille præſentis poteſtatis gloriam voluit, Deo jubente declinare; iſte Deo ſpernente ſi ſtuduit ad graviora præparare. Baſil. in Eſa.

Hieron Epiſt. 142. ad Damaſ

Pereirius.

Cajetan.

Pſal 103. 9.

Queſt.

Calvin.

of his imperfection in ſpeaking, becauſe the Lord had promiſed to be with his mouth and to put words into it, whereas now he propoundeth to uſe another mouth to ſpeak by. For the other opinion is Gregory, Baſil & Jerom, &c. Gregory ſaith, that Moſes in humility refuſeth the glory of being made ſo great a Governour. There was a great difference betwixt him & Paul. For he hearing by Agabus that which might have diſcouraged him from going to Jeruſalem, with great reſolution anſwered, I am ready, not only to be bound, but to die at Jeruſalem for the name of the Lord, but Moſes, that he might not go into Egypt complaineth of his tongue. But the caſe is divers, Authority was propounded to Moſes, Croſſes to Paul. And ſo Paul is carried with a ready minde to adverſity, but Moſes even when God bade him, would have declined the glory of this power: he, God appointing him to hard things, ſtudied to endure greater; but this man ſtriveth by Prayer againſt this Preſectureſhip over the Hebrews; Wherefore by the inviolate vertue of both theſe Leaders going before us we are inſtructed, if we would truly endeavour to carry the palme of obedience, to go a warfare in proſperity being ſet awork only by command, but in adverſity even out of devotion. Baſil comparing Moſes and Eſay together, ſaith, that he deferred, and deſired, that he might not go to Pharaoh and to this people, becauſe he knew the proud, ſtout and inexorable heart of Pharaoh, and the ſtubborne wit, unſtable minde, and ſtiffe neck of the Hebrews, of which alſo he ſpake, Exod. 32, and deſired therefore the comming of the Lord, who only could ſave and forgive ſins; but Eſay moved by other conſiderations offered himſelfe to be ſent. And Jerome ſaith, that he heard it of a certaine Hebrew, his Maſter, who once diſputed this queſtion, that Moſes was to be praiſed herein for his humility and meekneſſe, as thinking himſelf unworthy this miniſtery, and therefore was of God made greater: but Eſay truſting not to his owne merit, but to Gods mercy, after that he heard from the Seraphim, that he was purged from all ſinne, offered himſelfe in the zeale of faith. Whereas Gods anger againſt Moſes for this his refuſall is objected, as arguing it to be ſinfull; it is anſwered, that he was not angry with him, as with ſinners, but as one friend with another, or a Father with his childe, by the ſhew of ſuch anger teaching them only, what they would have them do, and thus inducing them to do it: ſo Pererius; or as Cajetan hath it, the Lord was but a little angry after the manner of a man being moved with a ſudden paſſion, becauſe it is not ſaid, he was angry but furor ejus iratus eſt, as if one ſhould ſay of a man, accenſa eſt cholera ejus intimating, not that he was angry purpoſely, but his choler was moved for the time; yet, Cajetan and Toſtatus alſo think that he ſinned venially, & lightly. I do not think with thoſe Hebrews, that it was a great ſinne, becauſe there was no puniſhment inflicted upon him therefore, but a ſinne of weakneſſe, which is incident to the beſt, againſt which although Gods anger be ſtirred, yet out of his infinite mercy, he is ſoone pacified againe upon their repentance. But a ſin I cannot but hold it to have beene, becauſe the Lord was provoked to wroth hereby, and for the name of veniall, it was certainly none otherwiſe ſuch, but as all the ſinnes of Gods ſervants, for which upon their repentance they have pardon. That Moſes ſoon repented, appeareth by his yielding forthwith after this to do what the Lord injoyned him. Neither do the diſtinctions & ſimilitudes brought prove it no ſin, becauſe one friend is not moved to choler againſt another, but for his fault, nor a father againſt his child whom he dearly loveth. As for the divers imaginations of divers touching his puniſhment, they are vaine, ſith that when a man offendeth, but perſiſteth not in ſinning, God uſeth only to chaſtiſe it, if it be but a diſobedience begun, with reproof, hereby turning his ſervants, that are out into the right way againe. If it be demanded, whether Aaron ſhould have bin joyned with him if he had not thus provoked the Lord, or whether this were yielded upon his pleading of his inability to ſpeak? Calvin anſwereth well, that there is nothing done, but was decreed by the Lord from everlaſting, yet he appointeth alſo the intervening vening of means, whereupon this or that is done, and ſo it was in this caſe, God meant before to joyn Aaron with Moſes, but he taketh this occaſion of his backwardneſſe with a kinde of indignation to joyn Aaron unto him, that he might have part of that honour with him, who by back-ſliding had falne from a degree of his dignity. And he calleth him the Levite, to ſhew the Tribe, which he had choſen, according to Malachi, and that his purpoſe of advancing that Tribe was not changed for the diſobedience of Moſes, who was of that Tribe. Behold, he cometh forth to meet thee, &c. Here the forwardneſſe of Aaron is oppoſed to the backwardneſſe of Moſes, as if he had ſaid, to ſtimulate him the more, He is come forth with all cheerfulneſſe a long journey into the wilderneſſe to fetch thee forth about this buſineſſe, ſo ſoon as I called him, but thou being commanded frameſt excuſe after excuſe, and ſtandeſt aſtoniſhed through diffidence not being yet made, after ſo great confirmations to ſtirre one foot as yet, and he cometh forth with this cheerfulneſſe, to be but thy ſecond, although he be thy elder brother, the envy of thy preference not hindering him, but thou being promoted to be chief art grieved at the office enjoyned thee. Thus God partly by fearing Moſes with his anger thruſteth him forth, and partly by offering one ſo near a companion unto him, allureth him, and by giving another ſigne of Aarons coming out to meet him confirmeth him. Mal. 2. 4.

Thou ſhalt therefore ſpeak unto him, and put words in his mouth, &c. And he ſhall be for a mouth unto thee, and thou ſhalt be inſtead of God unto him. The phraſe of being as a God unto him, ſetteth forth nothing elſe, but that he ſhould teach and guide him, and be a Prince unto him, and therefore the word אלוהים is often communicated to Princes and Judges in the holy Scriptures, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth it accordingly, Thou ſhalt be a Prince or Maſter unto him. It is weak, which the Arrians infer hereupon, that as Moſes was a God to Aaron, ſo Chriſt was God, but not otherwiſe: for he is not onely called God, as a Prince, but in all things is partaker of the divine glory, and by him the World was made. Verſe 15,16 Calvin.

Verſe 17. And thou ſhalt take this rod in thy hand, and therewith do ſignes: Why muſt he take that rod? Anſ. Becauſe God commonly will have outward meanes uſed to work miracles, although there be nothing of worth in them, that it may appear, that his ſervants uſing theſe means did them, and ſo be believed. And a ſhepherds ſtaffe is taken to confound proud Pharaoh, when it ſhould prevail againſt his ſcepter. The Hebrews feign, that this rod grew in Jethro his garden, and that none could pluck it up, till Moſes came, who did it eaſily, and uſed it in keeping his ſheep, ſtriking terrour hereby into wilde beaſts, and fraying them away. And that it was ſquare, having the four letters of Gods name engraven in the four ſides thereof. Artapanus ſaith, that this ſtaffe was had in great honour amongſt the Egyptians afterwards, a ſtaffe in the remembrance of it being kept and worſhipped in the Temple of Iſis: for they think Iſis to be that earth, which ſmitten with the ſtaffe, brought forth ſo many prodigies. See Euſeb. lib. 9. de præparat. Evang. cap. ult. Verſe 17.

And Moſes returned to Jethro his father in law, and ſaid unto him, Let me go I pray thee to my brethren in Egypt, and ſee whether they be yet alive, &c. It is a marvel that Moſes telleth not Jethro of his viſion to incline him the rather to be willing, but pretendeth another common reaſon. But it is to be thought, that he concealed his Viſion, as which would ſeem incredible to Jethro, and make him haply think Moſes a vain man, as being carried by fantaſies. And therefore he dealeth thus onely with his father in law, and forſomuch as upon this motive, Jethro is willing that he ſhould depart with his daughter, it ſeemeth that Moſes was in good credit with him, ſo that he ſuſpected not any fraud, as lurking under this pretence. So Calvin. But whether was it not a fault in him to uſe this delay, for when one being called by Chriſt offered onely to go firſt and bid thoſe of his houſe farewell, he was forbidden to make this delay, and threatenened therefore. And Jacob omitting to go to Verſe 18. Calvin.

Laban, went immediately into Canaan when he was bidden? Some Ancients have hereupon thought Moſes vvorthy of blame, but he did herein no more then he vvas bound by the band of nature to do. Indeed vvhen parents or friends ſtand in the way, and may be an hinderance to the obeying of Gods calling, they are to be pretermitted, becauſe God is firſt and chiefly to be obeyed, but vvhen both obedience may be yielded to God, and reſpect ſhevved to friends, both are to be done. The lavv of crucifying our affections, ſerveth not to take avvay naturall affection, but to moderate and govern it. Thus Simlerus.

Verſe 19. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes in Madian, Return into Egypt, for all thoſe men are dead that ſought thy life.

Calvin. Ferus. Simlerus. Some think, that this was ſpoken before, and placed here out of order, as Calvin; but Ferus better, and after him Simlerus, that this was a new apparition for his further confirmation and encouragement; for God appeared often to Moſes, and therefore there is no need to imagine an Hyſteron Proteron to be here. When a man beginneth to obey God, he ſhall have comfort upon comfort.

Note.

Verſe 20. And Moſes took his wife and his ſonnes, and ſet them upon an Aſſe, and returned into Egypt, and the rod of God in his hand.

The Lord did not bid Moſes to carry his wife and children with him, but being bound by the Law of marriage ſo to do, he thought it his duty to have them with him, and that this would be no hinderance unto him to the execution of his office, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh of leading about a ſiſter a vvife. He took them with him, ſaith Ferus, that they might ſee the marvels of the Lord, and ſo be brought to know and fear him, and that they might be joyned to the people of God. And thus all men ſhould bring their families, where they may hear the Word of God, and learn to fear him. Whereas he is ſaid to ſet them upon an Aſſe: it may be doubted, hovv one Aſſe could carry them all? It is anſvvered, either that they vvere very young, or by an Aſſe is meant each of them upon an Aſſe, but I think rather that they vvere little ones. Here vvas a poor going out for one, that ſhould be a Prince vvith onely one Aſſe and a ſtaffe, for which he might have been contemned, but his glory ſtood in the ſtaffe of God, which he carried with him. Outward ſplendor doth not honour Gods Meſſengers, but Gods Ordinance, his power and preſence with them. We read before but of one ſonne that Moſes had, but here of ſonnes, and who this other ſonne was, ſee Exod. 18. 4. he was called Eliezer, becauſe God, ſaid he, hath been mine help. Wherefore he was now born unto him alſo, although no mention be made of him till then. Touching the rod, called the Rod of God, and by the Septuagint τὴν ῥάβδον τὴν παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ: it was ſo called, becauſe God did work wonders thereby, and God appointed him to take it with him, as if he had brought it and given it him.

Note. Queſt.

Note.

Verſe 21. Then God charged Moſes to do all the wonders, which he had given him power to do, before Pharaoh: but he ſaith, that he would harden his heart.

Calvin. Calvin, and after him Simlerus and Cajetan gather from hence, that God appointed Moſes, even in Madian to do all the wonders which he did afterwards in Egypt, becauſe he ſaith, all the wonders, and he foretelleth the obduration of Pharaoh, that Moſes ſeeing it, might not be diſcouraged, as thinking, that he ſhould never prevail with him, whom ſo many ſignes would not bow to Gods Will. For Gods hardening of any mans heart, ſee Rom. 9.

Verſe 22, 23 And thou ſhalt ſay to Pharaoh, Thus ſaith the Lord, Iſrael is my firſt-born ſonne. I command thee to let my ſonne go, That he may ſerve me, and if thou refuſe to let him go, I will kill thy ſonne, thy firſt-born.

Calvin. That the requeſt of Moſes to Pharaoh might not ſeem unjuſt, in that he ſhould deſire, that Pharaohs ſubjects might go from under his dominion, the Lord intituleth them his ſonne, and by conſequence free from being ſervants to any man, and he addeth, My firſt-born; having reſpect unto the Gentiles, out of whom he would take to himſelfe a

Church

Church afterwards. But a generall rule cannot be drawn from hence, that the ſonnes of God by adoption and grace ought not by any to be kept as ſervants any longer, for it was a ſingular priviledge of the Iſraelites onely, whom the Lord by expreſs words was pleaſed thus to grace: ſo Calvin. To ſerve Pharaoh ſtill, ſaith Simlerus, and to become a peculiar people of God, enjoying his promiſes in poſſeſſing the land of Canaan, and ſerving him there, were contrary, and therefore living in Egypt, and ſerving Pharaoh being an hinderance from ſerving God, thus muſt ceaſe, and they muſt go out free. Again, Iſrael is not onely called the firſt-born of God in reſpect of the Gentiles, which ſhould afterwards be taken into the adoption, but in reſpect of creation, whereby all people are Gods ſonnes, but Iſrael for his ſingular priviledges, as his firſt-born ſonne. In that he threateneth to ſlay Pharaohs firſt-born, it appeareth, as was ſaid before, that God told Moſes of all the ſignes that he would do, before he came into Egypt, becauſe this was the laſt. He ſpeaketh onely of his firſt-born, to terrifie him the more: a puniſhment like to his ſinne is threatened: for killing Iſrael Gods firſt-born, his firſt-born ſhall be killed. Or by firſt-born, ſaith Ferus, may be underſtood every thing moſt precious, as if he had ſaid, I will deſtroy all thy moſt precious things, but this is ſomewhat forced.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

And it came to paſſe, that in the way the Lord met him in the Inne, and ſought to kill him; And Zippora took a ſharpe ſtone, and cut off the fore-skin of her ſon, and caſt it at his feet, ſaying, A bloody husband art thou to me, &c. It is not agreed amongſt Expoſitours here, whom the Lord ſought to kill: for ſome hold, that it was the childe, as Auguſtine, who ſaith, that it may be doubted whether Moſes be meant, of whom it may ſeem to be ſpoken, as being over that company: or the childe, who was by and by ſuccoured by his mother, circumciſing him, this offering to kill him being to take revenge upon him for being uncircumciſed, as was threatened in the law of circumciſion. Yet if any man will have it underſtood of Moſes, I will not greatly contend. And Tertullian ſaith, the ſonne of Moſes had been ſtrangled by the Angel, had not Zipporah cut away his fore-skin with a ſtone. The interlinear gloſſe referreth it either to Moſes, or to his ſonne. But the Hebrews and moſt Expoſitors referre it to Moſes. For it muſt needs be ſpoken of him that God had appeared to before, and not of the childe of whom if it had been meant, he ſhould have been named. And indeed the fault was altogether in Moſes, and therefore he and not the childe was now in danger. And this may be thought to be the reaſon, why not Moſes, but Zipporah circumciſed the childe, becauſe he being terrefied through the danger of preſent death threatened unto him, could not do it, wherefore ſhe to deliver him with all ſpeed did it. But in what manner was he indangered? R. Solomon feigneth, that an Angel appearing like an huge Dragon, devoured Moſes unto that part of the body which was circumciſed, whereby his wife gathering, that this was, becauſe the circumciſion of the childe had been neglected, ſhe preſently circumciſed him, and ſo Moſes was delivered. But to let paſſe ſuch fables, moſt of the Hebrews thinke, that he was ſmitten with a mortall diſeaſe, and it being conceived, that this was becauſe he had not circumciſed his ſonne, ſhe did it, he through weakneſſe being unable at that time, but giving her this charge. Theodoret and Diodorus ſay, that an Angell appeared unto Moſes, threatening to kill him with a ſword in his hand, as afterwards to Balaam. But Calvin arguing thoſe of preſumption, that determine, how the Lord would have killed him, ſaith, that it ſufficeth to know, that he was ſo terrefied, as that he was in danger of death, ſo likewiſe Tremel. and this is ſafeſt But what was the cauſe of this ſudden change of the Lord towards him? Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that ſome thinke Moſes to have been thus indangered, becauſe it diſpleaſed the Lord that he ſhould take his wife and children with him, as an hindrance to the execution of the office, to which he was called. And therefore upon this he ſent them back again, untill his coming out of Egypt, when

Verſe 24,25

Auguſt. quæſt. 11. in Exod.

Tertull. lib. contra Iudæos.

Gloſ. interlin. Hebræi.

Quæſt. R. Solomon.

Hebræi.

Theodoret. Diodorus. Tarſenſ. Calvin.

Quæſt. Auguſt. quæſt. 2. in Exod.

Exod. 18.

Euſebius. vvhen they vvere by Jethro again brought unto him, ſo likevviſe, Euſebius Emiſſenus and Euſebius Cæſar. who ſay alſo, that his bringing of his wife & children into Egypt might make the Hebrevvs ſuſpect, that he did not make account indeed, that he ſhould bring them out, becauſe then he vvould have left them behinde him, till that they ſhonld have come to Mount Horeb, vvhich vvas neare to Madian. Theodoret and Diodorus yield this as the reaſon, that by terrefying him he might make him the leſſe to fear Pharaoh, the fear of a greater, expelling the feare of a leſſer out of him. But that neither of theſe vvas the reaſon is plaine from the Text, vvhereby it plainly appeareth, that it vvas becauſe his ſonne vvas uncircumciſed. It is to be thought indeed, that he took this occaſion, as Auguſtine and Theodoret note, to ſend her back vvith her children to her Father, becauſe he having haſte of his vvay could not tarry, till the ſonne novv circumciſed vvas fit for travell againe: ſo that it is moſt probable, that they having tarryed a vvhile at that Inne returned home againe, from vvhence they vvere aftervvards brought unto him being in the vvilderneſſe. Thus God vvas offended vvith Moſes, becauſe he had not circumciſed his Son at this time which is alſo held by R. David Chimhi, and Lyranus, Iſidore, Rupertus, Calvin, &c. And Tertullian ſaith, that God vvas therefore ſo ſevere, that others hearing of this touching their Governours Sonne might be moved with more reverence towards this ſigne, and at his inſtruction receive it. He that met Moſes, and would have ſlaine him, is ſaid to be the Lord, but in the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and the Greek Tranſlation it is, the Angel of the Lord, an Angell perſonally, and the Lord repreſentatively.

Theod. quæſt. in Exod.

Exod. 18.

R. David Chimbi.
Iſidore.
Lyranus.
Tertull. lib. contra Judæos.

Queſt. But what was the reaſon, that the Lord was now ſo infeſt againſt Moſes for not circumciſing his ſon? Ferus defending his former neglect ſaith, that this ſin was not imputed to him whileſt he was amongſt the Gentiles, and in another mans houſe and hindred by his Wife, and haply it was not thought neceſſary, becauſe one Parent only was an Hebrew, but now Moſes being at his owne liberty, and about to carry his ſonnes amongſt Gods people to be joyned with them, the Lord cometh fiercely upon him to kill him for not circumciſing them. Firſt, that his Wife ſeeing it might learne to feare God, and hereafter haſten to circumciſion. 2 That Parents might know, that they ſhall anſwer for their childrens ſinnes committed through their default. 3 That we might know, that the uncircumciſed are not acceptable to God, although comming of holy Parents. 4 Becauſe it would have been a great ſcandall to the Iſraelites, if Moſes had carried his ſonnes to them uncircumciſed. 5 To ſhew, that diſobedience ſhall be puniſht even in the Elect, and if God be ſo ſevere againſt his Saints ſinning, where ſhall the wicked appeare? 6 To ſhew his ſeverity againſt Prelates and Rulers, if they ſin. 7 To try Moſes his conſtancy in obedience, and whether he would not being ſo hardly dealt withall be diſcouraged from going on.

Queſt.

Ferus.

Simlerus. Simlerus ſaith, that ſome think, God was angry, becauſe for his Wives ſake and his children he tarried too long in the Inne, but he rejecteth it, as it is worthy. But how is it, that mention before being made of ſonnes, now Zipporah is ſaid to have circumciſed her ſonne? did ſhe circumciſe but one, or both, and if not, when was the other circumciſed? Cajetan, and ſome others hold that they were both hitherto uncircumciſed; but it is ſaid, that Zipporah circumciſed her ſonne, the ſingular number being put for the plurall by an Enallage of the number, and Ferus ſeemeth to have been of the ſame minde, becauſe ſhe called her Husband for this a bloudy Husband to her, as if it had been a new thing to her, to which ſhe had never been uſed before. But others think, that one of them was circumciſed before, and the other not, and theſe are againe divided amongſt themſelves; ſome, as Calvin ſaith, holding that the eldeſt was left uncircumciſed, becauſe Moſes being a ſtranger in Madian would not ſo ſoone by the circumciſing of him, diſcover his Religion: but he is for the youngeſt, becauſe Moſes was long in that Countrey, before he had any childe, and when he had one, having circumciſed him, his Wife and her Cajetan.

Ferus.

Calvin.

her friends did so abhor from this bloudy ceremony, that to the end he might have peace amongst them, he did forbeare to circumcise the other: thus also Simlerus. Againe, others holding also, that the younger only remained uncircumcised, do some of them yield this reason, that Zipporah kept one of them from being circumcised, because as Moses had one, after the manner of his Countrey circumcised, so she would have one after the manner of her Countrey uncircumcised: so Hugo de Sancto Victore. But some, that the reason, why the younger Son remained uncircumcised was this, viz. because he was but newly borne, when Moses was warned to go into Egypt, and the Lord hastening his journey, although the eight day was come, upon which he ought to have been circumcised, yet he would not stay to do it; lest it should be an occasion of delay unto him; So Lyranus and Tostatus, and the Hebrews, and divers others. But this last is well confuted by Calvin, because it is not probable, that Moses would have taken a woman with him in that case, so soon after her deliverance, and a childe so young and tender, and in the case of being upon travell, the experience of the whole Congregation afterwards shewed, that it was a lawfull reason to forbeare circumcising, as making sore and unable to travell: for which, as one cause, there was no circumcising all the time that the children of Israel wandred in the Wilderness, even 40 years, and the best Expositours agree: yet neither can I assent to Calvin or the rest, that hold that one of his sonnes was circumcised before: from whence may we learne this? and if no where, it is a meere conjecture. The first therefore doth most arride me, that neither of them was before this circumcised, but now Zipporah circumcised them both. And the reason why a sonne only is spoken of, may be, because the birth only of one son was before related, having respect unto which, as if no notice were hitherto taken of the other sonne by the Historian, he saith, she circumcised her sonne; but forsomuch as there were two, the other is left to be understood by the Reader to have been circumcised at the same time also.

Simlerus.

Hugo de Sancto Victore.

Lyranus Tostatus.

Why Moses did not circumcise now, but his wife, we may gather from that which hath been already said. And in that this neglect of Moses was so severely animadverted against, if he did it for quietnesse sake, as is most probable, or in what respect soever, we may learne, to how great danger he standeth exposed, that neglecteth the Sacraments, which be of divine institution. The toole wherewith Zipporah circumcised, is said to be a sharp stone, in Hebrew צר, which word, the Hebrews say, is a word of doubtfull signification, and may be expounded a stone, a flint, or a Sword, or Rasor, and therefore both here, and Jos. 5. they render it by this word Rasor, and the Jews circumcise with a Rasor at this day. Tremelius also rendereth it Cultrum acutum, a sharp knife, saying, that they, who render it, a sharp stone, were deceived by the ambiguity of the word, because it is so taken, Ezech. 3. 9. but for a sharp knife, Jos. 5. 2. and Psalm. 89. 44. and reason sheweth that it was a knife, because if they had a knife amongst them, as it is not to be doubted, but that, it had bin a vaine thing leaving the knife to go about seeking a stone fit for the purpose. Indeed if God, when he instituted circumcision, had appointed a stone for the Instrument, it had been necessary to use it, but seeing it is left to the discretion of the Circumciser to use what toole he pleaseth, there is no reason to think, that a stone rather then a knife was now used, except the word did necessarily imply so much. Jos. 5. 2. The same word is used with another signifying a Sword or a Knife, and is rendred in our new Translation, sharp knives, חרבות צרים the plurall, of צור being translated sharp: It cometh of צור to straiten, or of צר to strengthen, whence צור a rock or a stone which is strong, or a sharp cutting thing, the strength whereof lieth in cutting. Wherefore it may as well be rendered here, she took a sharp, or the edge, and no more. What this sharp thing was, being left to be understood, as a stone, and it agreeing more with reason that a knife should be meant then a sharp stone. I cannot but think, that Tremelius hath most aptly

Note.

Hebr.

Tremel.

aptly translated it so. Yet both the Septuagint, the Chaldee Paraphrast, and all other Translations have a sharpe stone. And hereby Augustine being led, and Bernard, and the Master of the Sentences have taught, that Circumcision was made alwayes of old with a sharpe stone, to figure out Christ the Corner-stone, in whom true Circumcision is atteined. But others more indifferently, that Circumcision was made either with a stone, or a knife or Rasor, as Justin Martyr, Hugo de Sancto Victore, Th. Aquinas, Tostatus, &c. If it be demanded, whether a womans circumcising be justifiable, and if so, whether her baptizing in the case of danger? It is answered, that here was a necessity, Moses being, as is likely, through astonishment in that case, that he could not now do it, neither indeed did the Lord appoint who should circumcise, when he first instituted Circumcision, and therefore if a woman did it, here was nothing done against precept. But to baptize they that preach the Word are appointed, and therefore what need soever there be, it is not warrantable for a woman to do it: thus also Epiphanius contra Cataphryges, and the Council of Carthage forbiddeth any lay-person to baptize in any case, and Augustine doubteth, whether it be a venial sin, if a lay-person baptizeth any. Touching the next words, she cast it at his feet, the vulgar Latine readeth them, she touched his feet, but neither agreeable to the Hebrew, nor to any other Expositor. For the Septuagint have it, She fell at his feet, the Chaldee Paraphrast, She offered it before him; the Targum Hierosol. She applied it to his feet; so likewise Simlerus. Tremelius, She moved it to his feet, and Calvin. She cast it at his feet, and thus the word וַתַּגַּע most properly signifieth. But at whose feet she cast it, and why, is much controverted, Some say, at the Angels feet, to pacifie him; according to the Chaldee Paraphrast, She offered it before him, saying, For the blood of this Circumcision let my husband be granted to us; and the Targum Hierosolym. She applied it before the feet of the destroying Angel, saying, My husband would have circumcised him, but my father would not suffer him, now therefore be favourable to the sinne of my husband for the blood of this Circumcision. Some, to the feet of the childe; and some, of Moses, which is most genuine, as the following words do declare: for she did it in wrath, as being compelled by shedding the blood of her children to redeem his life. Some following the Septuagint, She cast her selfe at his feet, hold nothing else to be meant here, but her humbling of her selfe at the feet of the Angel to pacifie him. And some, that she fell at the feet of her husband, desiring, that she might return home again; so greatly was she terrefied with this vision. But the words following being to her husband in anger, shew that here was no falling down to the Angel or to him, but a casting of the fore-skin at him as a man that casteth the thing at him in indignation, which he will needs have and can be held no longer from him.

August. Serm. 141. de Tempo. Bern. Serm. 1. de Circumcisione Domini. P. Lombard. l. 4. Just. Martyr Dialog. cum Tryphone. Hugo de Sancto Victore, lib. 2. de Sacram. Quæst. Calvin. Simlerus. Epiphan. Concil. Carthag. Can. 109. Augustin. lib. 2. Epist. ad Parm. Child. Paraphrast. Targum Hierosolymitanum. Cajetan. Rupertus lib. 1. in Exod. c. 20.

For the words used by her, Thou art a bloody husband to me. R. David Chimhi, holding, according to one opinion before recited, that by his feet, the childes feet were meant, to which the blood ran down, or the fore-skin was cast down, will have these words also spoken to him: because amongst the Hebrews as the husband, so the childe newly circumcised was called by the word Chasan, here used, which signifieth sponsus: so likewise R. Abraham Zepharadi, who saith, that she spake thus to the childe flatteringly; but Rabanus and others better apply them to Moses, and then the meaning must be, I may truly call thee a bloody husband, because I have been compelled to redeem thy life with shedding the blood of my sonne.

R. David. Rab. Manus.

Verse 26.

So he let him go. This by Lyranus is applied to Zipporah, dismissing her husband hereupon and departing home to her father again. By Paulus Burgensis to Moses, as if it had been said, he dismissed his sonne into the land of Madian. But the true meaning is, the Angel let Moses go and did not kill him, as before he was about to do. Thus Augustine and Ferus, &c. and the Septuagint make it plain by rendering it thus, The Angel went from him. It is indeed most probable, that Zipporah hereupon was sent back again for a time by by Moſes to her father, being afterwards by him brought again unto him with her children, but that ſhe put him away upon this occaſion, and departed, it being a foul fault, ſeeing the Scripture doth not charge her herewith, is by no meanes to be thought: ſo Simlerus. And it is to be noted, that the Verb here uſed is maſculine, and that theſe words were again uſed after this, Thou art a bloody husband to me: whence it is plain, that they were not ſpoken of her. For the myſtery of this, Gregory Nyſſenus ſaith, that Moſes taking a wife a Gentile, and having a ſonne by her, that remained uncircumciſed, figured out the Chriſtian Doctor tainted with Philoſophicall opinions, which muſt forthwith be rejected, or elſe they will turn to his deſtruction. The ordinary gloſſe maketh Zipporah a figure of the Church of the Gentiles, which cutteth away from her children old heathen errours, by preaching the Rock Chriſt. Ferus ſaith, that the departing of Zipporah figured out the abſence of the Gentiles, when Chriſt wrought all his wonders, as ſhe was away, when Moſes wrought his; but afterwards were brought unto him, as Zipporah with her children to Moſes. And as by blood Moſes his life was ſaved, ſo are we ſaved by the blood of the Son of God. Rabanus following the Septuagints tranſlation, in which it is, The blood of my ſonne ſtood: Inſtead of theſe words, Thou art a bloody husband to me, hath another Allegory, which becauſe it is upon a ſtrange foundation, I omit.

Lyranus. P. Burgensis. August. quæst. 11 in Exod.

Exod. 18.

Simlerus.

Myſtery.

Gregor. Nyſſen.

Gloſſ. ordin.

Ferus.

Rabanus.

The beſt is the morall; we that are Gods meſſengers, muſt not onely be circumciſed in heart our ſelves, but labour that our people and domeſticks may be ſuch alſo, or elſe we ſhall incurre the danger of death. After this Aaron is brought to meet Moſes in the deſart, in the Mount of God, and he kiſſed him, and Moſes told all theſe things unto him. And they went on and gathered together the Elders of Iſrael, and when Aaron had ſpoken unto them the words of the Lord, and the ſignes had been ſhewed, they believed and bowed themſelves and worſhipped.

Note.

Verſe 27, 28
Verſe 29, 30
Verſe 31.

Moſes being ſpoken to and confirmed by ſignes, was yet unwilling to go whither the Lord bade him: but Aaron forthwith obeyeth, ſeeing no ſigne, and not knowing yet to what end his going out tended, but onely that he ſhould ſee his brother Moſes, who he might well think in this long time of abſence had been dead, yet notwithſtanding Moſes is made the chief, the cheerfull and forward and elder is allotted to a place inferiour, and the unwilling and ſlow to obey to a Superiour, as it pleaſeth God, one man is preferred before another, not for his own deſert, but onely of grace, which is thus the more magnified. There is an excellent harmony betwixt theſe two brethren at their meeting, the one in love kiſſing the other, Moſes repreſenting the Magiſtracy, and Aaron the Miniſtery; for in like manner betwixt theſe two there ſhould be all good concord, and then the people will bow themthemſelves, and worſhip the Lord, whereas by their differences they are much hindered. Aaron as Miniſter to Moſes both ſpeaketh and doth the ſignes, and the people believed, that is, this part of them, the Elders gathered now together, they being called the people Synecdochically, the part for the whole. But here was no ſetled faith, as appeareth by the ſequel, neither do all that believe, believe with a true and lively faith, and out of this worſhip the Lord, but the ſeed ſpringing to this onely ſuperficially in their hearts, and vaniſhing again in perſecution.

Note.

Note.

Note.

CHAP. V.

AFterwards came Moſes and Aaron, and ſpake to Pharaoh, Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, Let my people go, that they may hold a feaſt unto me in the wilderneſſe. When Moſes was at the firſt appointed to go to Pharaoh, he was bidden to go together with the Elders of Iſrael, why then did he not ſo, but with Aaron onely, as is here ſaid? The Hebrews anſwer, that the Elders were afraid

Verſe 1.

Queſt.

Hebræi.

afraid to go with him, and therefore were afterwards kept from being with him in the Mount, when God talked there with him: but this is a vain imagination, becauſe Aaron was not permitted to be preſent at that Colloquy, neither Toſtatus ſaith, that the command of taking with him the Elders was before the joyning of Aaron to him, but he being now joyned, that command held no longer.

Toſtatus.

Lyranus.

Lyranus ſaith, that the Elders went with them, although it be not expreſſed, as appeareth, in that Pharaoh rejecting their motion ſaith to them, as if they had together with Moſes made that motion, Verſe 17. Ye are idle, therefore ye ſay, Let us go and ſacrifice to the Lord. 18 Go now therefore and work, &c. But Moſes and Aaron onely are ſpoken of as the chief, and as they that moved for the reſt. To this alſo inclineth Simlerus. But the argument brought by Lyranus is of no force to prove it, becauſe Pharaoh might haply ſpeak ſo to the Elders, although they had not been with him before to deſire that liberty, for he might mean, when Moſes and Aaron deſired it, for them and by their conſent that they deſired it. Yet the words uſed before by the Lord, Chap. 3. 18. make for this: for as he ſaith, they ſhould believe, ſo he ſaith alſo, that Moſes and the Elders with him ſhould go, and therefore as they did the firſt, ſo it is probable that they did the laſt alſo, though it be not expreſſed, becauſe the Lord ſaid, they ſhould do ſo, and his Word falls not to the ground. And that the joyning of Aaron was a ſuperſedeas to the going of the Elders with him, is but a conjecture. If it be held that they went alone, the Elders refuſing to go with them, it was through fear; thus alſo Ferus. For they might indeed well be afraid ſeeing they could not but imagine that the meſſage would be moſt unpleaſing to the King, to have his works ceaſe, to be in danger of loſing ſo many ſervants, and to hear his gods in effect vilified, as if it were not as good ſerving them, as the God of the Hebrews. And therefore they might well expect ſome hard meaſure from the King inraged for comming upon ſuch a meſſage, and fear keep away. And this ſerveth to ſet forth the magnanimity of Moſes and Aaron the more, in that no fear of the Tyrants wrath could keep them from executing the office to which they were called. But it is to be noted, that they went not treacherouſly to kill the Tyrant, neither did they ſtirre up the people to tumultuate, but went fairly to him for leave to depart: againſt the practice of the Jeſuits and their Inſtruments, and of Popes and Papals, who if a King be an enemy to their Roman Catholick Religion, will have him made away by any meanes, and ſtirre up his own Subjects againſt him.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Note.

To hold a Feaſt, and to do ſacrifice a day, or two, or three together is all one; why this onely is ſpoken of, and their going quite away concealed, ſee before, Chap. 4. 18.

Verſe 2. And Pharaoh ſaid, Who is the Lord, that I ſhould hearken to his voice to let Iſrael go? I know not the Lord, &c. It may ſeem ſtrange, that any King ſhould be ignorant of God, it being a principle in nature, that there is a God, as alſo appeareth in Heathen men of all Countreys, who worſhip ſome God. Wherefore Pharaoh moveth not this queſtion, as who ſhould ſay, Is there any God? but partly making a mock of the new name, of which he had never heard before, and partly out of a doting conceit, that there was none other God ſuperiour to the gods of Egypt, that he ſhould need to ſtand in fear of him, and partly out of pride, to which he was grown by his great wealth and power, as Nebuchadnezzar afterwards, he asked, Who is the Lord? what Lord is there, that I ſhould be moved by his authority, when as my power and dominion is ſo great? For thus it is prayed, Prov. 30. Give me not riches, leſt being full, I deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? Thus Senacherib proſpering wonderfully, asked, ſaying, Who is the Lord, that he ſhould deliver out of my hand?

2 Kings 18.

Verſe 3. And they ſaid, The God of the Hebrews hath appeared unto us, let us therefore go, we pray thee three dayes journey into the Deſart to ſacrifice, leſt he fall upon us with peſtilence or with the ſword. If it be doubted, how they could move onely for three three dayes, when as they came not to the place, where they ſacrificed, viz. to Horeb in leſſe then three moneths? It is anſwered, that Pharaoh not yielding, no not for ſo little a time, might be the more juſtly condemned, as moſt rebellious againſt the Lord. They make mention of judgements, which they might fear, if they went not to ſacrifice, becauſe it was commonly received, that by ſacrificing the anger of the gods was averted: but withall Pharaoh might hence gather, that if the Hebrews ſhould be in danger for not going to ſacrifice, he muſt needs be in danger much more for not permitting them to go. The words ſpoken by them here related are very few; but they are all which the Lord firſt appointed Moſes to ſpeak, with an addition of danger that might hang over their heads for not going. Joſephus ſaith, that they ſpake in many more words, commemorating alſo the benefits done to Egypt by Joſeph; and Simlerus thinketh that they did more largely relate the Viſion.

Queſt.

Calvin. Simlerus.

Joſeph.

And Pharaoh ſaid, Why do ye Moſes and Aaron make the people to ceaſe from their workes? 5 Behold, there is much people in the land, and ye make them ceaſe from their works. it is a marvel, that Pharaoh did not in rage for this attempt preſently to ſlay them, or commit them to ward, being ſo bloody a Tyrant: but God by his ſpeciall Providence, as by a ſhield defended them. Artapanus, ſaith Euſebius, telleth, that Moſes was immediately put in priſon, but in the night the keepers were ſmitten with death, and the priſon-doores being broken open, he went to the Court, and to the Kings chamber, whereas the King being aſtoniſhed, he asked, What was his Gods name, and Moſes having told it him, he was by and by dumb, but Moſes reſtored him again, this with more like fabulous ſtuffe is uttered by that Authour, which I ſpare to repeat, becauſe if any ſuch thing had been done, doubtleſſe Moſes that wrote of leſſer things, would not have concealed it. Pharaoh challengeth Moſes and Aaron as enemies to the Common-wealth, aggravating their fault by this, that they were the occaſion of idleneſſe, not to a few, but to very many people; and thus to have their actions miſ-interpreted, is the lot of Gods ſervants. Some yet, as Simlerus noteth, take theſe words of much people being in the land, as ſpoken to their laſt words, leſt he come upon us with plague or the ſword, as if he had ſaid, I care not though a deſtruction be made amongſt you, for there are ſo many, that I ſhall have enough of them ſtill, but the other is more genuine.

Verſe 4.
Verſe 5.

Euſebius de præparat. Evang. lib. 9. cap. 27.

Note.

Simlerus.

And Pharaoh the ſame day commanded the Task maſters and Governours over the people, ſaying, Ye ſhall not give ſtraw to the people to make brick, as heretofore, but let them go and gather ſtraw, &c. The uſe of ſtraw, as Lyranus ſaith, was to mix with the maſſe of which the brick was made, to make them to hold the better together, and the more durable. But what the common uſe is, is known to every one, viz. partly to lay next the ground for the brick to lie upon, partly to cover the brick newly made from the heat of the Sun, and the nipping of froſts, and partly where other fuel was wanting to burn them. So that the Hebrews labour was now greatly increaſed, they having as much impoſed upon them before, as they could do. When God is about to deliver them, their ſervitude and miſery is augmented, and the malice of their enemies is more ſtirred up againſt them. Wherefore let not us deſpair, when our miſeries are moſt increaſed, but hope rather that they are neer to an end. Towards the end of his Reign the Devil rageth moſt, knowing that his time is but ſhort, and the beginnings of grace through his Tyranny are moſt preſſed with troubles in the minde. By ſtraw or chaffe which is light, ſaith Bernard, may aptly be ſet forth, evill cogitations coming lightly into the minde, becauſe as this is ſoon ſet on fire, and ſoon extinguiſht, ſo evill cogitations through our corruption quickly grow into a flame in our mindes, but being by grace reſiſted they are ſoon extinguiſht again: but if they burn ſtill, brick is burnt as it were hereby, and hardened to endure, that is, if they be cheriſhed, and come into act and cuſtome, they are as a wall of Verſe 6.

Lyranus.

Note.

Bernard. Serm. Par. 34. Palearum eſt levitas accendi & in momento conſumi, ſic & malæ cogitationes citò in mentibus noſtris accenduntur, carnis mollitie conſentiente, ſed ſi viriliter ſtudeamus reſiſtere & Deo juvante, protinus extinguuntur, &c.

Aug. lib. 21. de Civit. Dei. c. 4.

hard bricke hardly to be demoliſhed againe. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that it hath two contrary qualities, one to keep ſnow coole being covered therewith, the other with the heat to ripen Apples: ſo carnall pleaſure keepeth the ſpirit coole towards any good, but ripeneth evill thoughts and deſires unto vice. Pharaohs denying them ſtraw now, which he had formerly given them, ſetteth forth, how a man beginning to come out from the Devils dominion is not permitted to be at quiet any more, as formerly, according to that, When the ſtrong man armed keepeth the houſe, all things are in quiet. Bernard Serm. 18 de converſione Quotidiana diſcimus experimentis, eos, qui converti ad Deum deliberant, tentari acriùs, & graviùs urgeri in peribus luti & laterum, qui Ægyptum egredi, & Pharaonis imperium effugere moliuntur. Greg. lib. 9. Moral. c. 14. Cùm divina lux in mentes humanas ſpargitur, mox ab occulto adverſario contra fulgentem mentem tentamenta ſuccreſcunt, &c.

Verſe 10, 11
Verſe 12, 13

When Pharaoh had given this charge to the Task-maſters, they preſently deny ſtraw to the people, but yet charge them to do their task, whereupon they were ſcattered all over Egypt to gather ſtubble inſtead of ſtraw, &c. The Taskmaſters were Egyptians ſet over theſe workmen by the King, and under them were other Officers of the Hebrews, the King politickly diſpoſing of it ſo, becauſe by them all the people of their own Nation fit for labour might beſt be found out and imployed. And yet theſe together with the other declare the Kings will unto the people, and urge them to do it; there is not one found who is not a Sycophant to the King, that would ſpeak againſt the injuſtice and impoſſibility of this command. As it is a common thing in all Princes Courts, every one is ready through flattery to execute their commands upon others, how unjuſt ſoever, as afterwards the Elders of Nabaths City were for Jezabel.

Note.

1 King. 21.

This hard charge was given doubtleſſe, not that they meant, that they ſhould alwayes do thus, but to make them expell Moſes and Aaron, and to be altogether averſe from their motion, that ſo they might never have a thought in their mindes of going out of the Land, and he might alwayes reap the benefit of their labour, as of his inancipated ſlaves.

Verſe 14, 15
Verſe 16, 17
Verſe 18, 19

Their tasks not being done, the Officers are beaten, and challenged for it. Hereupon they complaine to Pharaoh, and he ſaid, Ye are idle, ye are idle, therefore ye ſay, Let us go and ſacrifice to our God, go therefore now and worke, for no ſtraw ſhall be given you, &c. Here the Officers ſmart for their former humouring of the King, they that were ſo forward to preſſe the Kings command, are beaten for all. They lay the fault upon the Kings owne people, that is, the Taskmaſters, for not giving ſtraw, but this helpeth them not. Some referre thoſe words, The fault is in thine owne people, v. 16. to the Hebrews, as if they had ſaid, It is unjuſtly dealt with thy people, but the firſt is beſt. Some alſo referre theſe words, v. 19. to the people, they ſaw that they were in a bad caſe: and ſome, they ſaw, that is, they looked ill or terribly upon the people, as they had been terribly lookt upon and dealt withall, being ready to do the like unto them. I think, the meaning is nothing elſe, but that they now conſidering their owne caſe with their Countrey-men, as making all one body, ſaw that they were in a miſerable caſe, which made them look ſorrowfully and grieved; and thus Ierus expoundeth it. Here was doubtleſſe inſulting and mocking them and their God now on the Egyptians, enough to make them ſtagger in their faith, they being now in a worſe caſe then ever, and yet now deliverance was even at their doors.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Verſe 20, 21

Then they met Moſes and Aaron, and ſaid unto them, The Lord look upon you and judge: becauſe ye have made our ſavour to ſtink before Pharaoh, &c.

They lay a great fault upon the holy ſervants of God, in whom there was none, and who a little before were received by them with all joy; whereby we may ſee the inſtability of the people, and of how little faith they commonly are, as appeareth, when ever they are tried. Moſes had proved by ſignes, that he came from the Lord, but becauſe they have not preſent deliverance, they impute couzenage unto him, and caſt away all hope, being affected fected only and poſſeſſed altogether in their mindes vvith the preſent ſenſe of miſeries. Ye have made our ſavour to ſtink, and have put a ſword in their hands to kill us, are Hebraiſmes, to ſhevv that they vvere by their meanes abhorred by the Egyptians, and novv occaſion vvas given them utterly to deſtroy them. Moſes and Aaron are novv in an hard caſe, for that peoples ſake the King vvas highly offended vvith them, and here the people fall upon them alſo. This is oft the revvard of Gods faithfull Miniſters executing their office faithfully, which is enjoyned them by God. Simlerus. Note.

Note.

Then Moſes returned to the Lord and ſaid, Why haſt thou (O Lord) ſo evill entreated this people? why haſt thou ſent me? for ſince the time that I came to Pharaoh, thou haſt afflicted thy people, and haſt not delivered them. Verſe 22. Verſe 23.

Calvin expoundeth Moſes his returne to God of his defection and falling from his office, as if being affected vvith tediouſneſſe, he vvent to crave a diſmiſſion. And he blameth him for expoſtulating vvith the Lord, and imputing all this evill done by Pharaoh to the Hebrevvs unto him, yet he correcteth himſelfe and ſaith, He came grievingly vvith the complaints of the people, and ſpake not out of his ovvn ſenſe, yet his bitterneſſe is not altogether excuſable, becauſe he repenteth him of his calling, and is moved vvith indignation, that a matter was committed to him without all ſucceſſe: Thus Calvin. There vvas no reaſon indeed, vvhy Moſes, things ſucceeding no better at the firſt, ſhould take it ſo heinouſly, becauſe the Lord had told him, that he would harden Pharaohs heart. But haply he thought, that the caſe of the Hebrevvs ſhould have been ſomewhat amended at his firſt comming, as Simlerus hath it, yet he ſaith, that he vvas too much terrefied, and darkened in his underſtanding by the peoples bitter complaint. Contrariwiſe. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, theſe were not the words of contumacy and of indignation, but of inquiry and prayer, as appeareth by that which the Lord anſwered, for he did not hereupon argue his infidelity, but opened unto him what he meant to do, and this is beſt, and Ferus commendeth Moſes herein, as fleeing to prayer. But why doth he call Pharaohs ill intreating of the people the Lords ill intreating of them? Anſ. Becauſe the Lords ſending of him to Pharaoh was the firſt cauſe hereof, & yet of every affliction he is to be lookt at as the Author, whoſoever is the Inſtrument. He expoſtulates with God, but rather by admiring then arguing, as Ferus ſaith. Calvin. Simlerus. Auguſt. queſt. in Exod. Ferus. Queſt. Ferus. Dicè Moſes cum Deo expoſtulat, magis tamen mirando quàm arguendo.

CHAP. VI.

AND the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Now thou ſhalt ſee, what I will do to Pharaoh, with a ſtrong hand he ſhall let them go, &c. Verſe 1.

In ſaying, that he ſhould ſee, the Lord ſecretly reproveth his haſte, letting him to underſtand, that this deliverance was not to be wrought preſently, but in time, that the mighty power of the Lord might be the more conſpicuous to all the World: for he would work ſo, as that Pharaoh ſhould not only be willing with their departure, but urge it, as a thing moſt deſirable to him, and beneficiall, the ſame alſo was foretold, Exod. 3.19. but now iterated againe for their greater confirmation; of ſo weak faith are we, that we need to have the ſame promiſes iterated again and again. Calvin. Note.

And God ſaid, I appeared to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name יהוה I was not knowne to them. I have alſo eſtabliſhed my covenant with them, to give them the Land of Canaan. Verſe 2. Verſe 3. Verſe 4.

For the name שדי God Almighty, ſome, ſaith Calvin, derive it from שדד a waſter, formidable and dreadfull, others from שד ſignifying a Dugge, and ſome from ש and די which is ſufficient, and thus the all-ſufficiency of God, and how he floweth with all good things, ſhall be ſet forth. It is taken both wayes in the Holy Scriptures, ſometimes for a terrible waſter, as Eſa. 13.9 and Job 23. it is ſaid שדי terrefied me. But when he comforted Abraham, ſpeaking of Calvin.

Gen.17.1. o f himſelfe by this name, he reſpected not ſo much his power to ſpoile, as to exerciſe perfect beneficence. So that in ſaying, he was known to them by the name of אל-שדי; it is, as if he had ſaid, he ſhewed, what power he had Oleaſter. to defend them, and to fill them with his benefits. Oleaſter imbraceth both, ſaying, that he ſhevved himſelfe as a fountaine of good, from whom benefits did abundantly flow, as milk from a Dugge, and as a terrible waſter able to take other mens goods from them, and to give them to them, as Labans to Jacob, and the Philiſtines to Iſaac. For the tranſlation (God Almighty) he diſſallovveth, but without reaſon, ſeeing to ſay of God that he is a mighty waſter, what is it but to ſay he is Almighty, ſeeing his might is infinite? But

Queſt. hovv ſaith he, by my name Jehovah יהוה I was not known to them? Anſ. The meaning is not, that this name was never heard of before by them: for to Abraham he ſaith, I am יהוה, and againe he thus nameth himſelfe, *Chap.*18

Ger.15. and the uſe of this name vvas frequent vvith Abraham. Gen. 12. 13. ch. 24.
Ger.22.14. and he called Mount Moriah יהוה-יראה. Some therefore hold, that his
R. Solomon. meaning here is nothing elſe, but that hovvſoever he made liberall promiſes Sixtus Senenſis lib.2. Biblioth. to them of great good, yet he did not actually performe them, for then only
P. Burgenſis. is he knovvn by his name יהוה vvhen he performeth vvhat he promiſed, as Gloſſ. ord. mar. he vvas novv about to do. Some, that he gave not the povver to vvork mi-Gregor. hom.16 in Ezech. racles, as to Moſes. Some, that he did not reveale himſelfe to them ſo clearly Lyranus. and diſtinctly, as to Moſes, but that their knovvledge of him vvas more dark Toſtatus. and obſcure, this being the order vvhich the Lord hath obſerved by little and little to reveale himſelfe unto his ſervants. Some, that although they had the name conſiſting of theſe letters revealed unto them, yet they had not the knowledge of the true radix thereof, and that hereby the eternall being of God was ſet forth, as was revealed to Moſes, when he told him, that his Oleaſter. name was (I am) at the firſt. Laſtly, Oleaſter deriving this name, not from היה to be, as all others do, but from הוה to waſte or to deſtroy, holdeth, that the meaning is, he was not known a waſter or deſtroyer of Nations for their ſakes to them, but now he ſhould be known to be ſuch to Moſes and to that people in the deſtroying of the Egyptians and divers Nations more. I do hold both with them, who think that God manifeſted himſelfe more clearly now then in times paſt, and that hereby he meant that now he would give being to his promiſes, which hitherto he had not done. And this compariſon is entred into for the greater reproofe of the Hebrews; if their Fathers not having ſo cleare light, living long before the time, and no miracles to confirme their faith, yet certainly believed, and joyed in believing, how much might they be aſhamed, when they had more means of confirmation, and deliverance was even now at their doores, to be unbelieving and uncomfortable, For the new invention of יהוה to come of הוה, I can by no meanes aſſent unto it, becauſe the Lord himſelfe laid a ground before to finde out the true radix of this name, in ſaying אהיה.

Verſe 4,5. Verſe 6,7,8. For the words following even to verſe 9. there is nothing in them, but a commemoration of his Covenant, of his pittying them in their miſeries, and a repetition in more words of his promiſe now to deliver them and to bring them into the Land of Canaan, that they might be his peculiar people, and know what he now ſpake of, viz. that he vvas the Lord, vvhom no povver could vvithſtand, and therefore the Expoſition may be ſought before. Only Verſe 8 where we render it, of which I ſware, in Hebrew it is, Touching which I lifted up mine hand. The Ceremony uſed by man in ſwearing being put for the thing per Anthropopatheian.

Note. The main end of all Gods favours towards us, is that we may be his people for ever, and ſerve him, and know him better, and more confidently believe in him.

Verſe 9. And Moſes ſpake ſo to the children of Iſrael, but they hearkened not unto him for anguiſh of ſpirit and cruel bondage. Moſes having been anew encouraged,

Ferus. goeth joyfully to the people, but they regard not what he ſaith, partly vexation on of minde, and partly of body, hindering them from giving any eare. Here was a new temptation offered again to Moſes: for ſeeing the people ſo ungratefully rejected what he came to ſpeak unto them from the Lord, he might fear that their neglect would now make the Lord to revoke his promiſe of delivering them. Thus Chriſt was alſo rejected by the Jews, but he ceaſed not to come and ſpeak again and again unto them: Neither muſt it ſeem ſtrange to Gods Miniſters, if at any time they be likewiſe dealt withall, neither ought they therefore to give over their office of preaching unto them, but preach ſtill to the ſtupid, and ſuch as at the firſt turn away their eares. Simlerus.

Then the Lord ſpake to Moſes, ſaying, Go and ſpeak to Pharaoh, &c. And Moſes ſaid before the Lord, Behold, the children of Iſrael hear me not, and how then ſhall Pharaoh hear me, who am of uncircumciſed lips? Moſes being plunged again by the averſeneſſe of the people, ſo that he might thinke his Legatſhip now at an end, is here again anew inſtituted into it. For his pleading that he was of uncircumciſed lips; the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, as before, when he ſpake of the impediment in his ſpeech, I am ſlow of ſpeech; the Septuagint, I am of a weak voice: Whereupon Auguſtine inquireth, whether as this was an impediment to him to ſpeak to many people, ſo it could be an impediment in his ſpeaking to one onely, Pharaoh? and ſaith, Haply he might not be ſuffered to come neer unto him, but muſt ſtand afarre off to ſpeak to his Majeſty. But the ſpeech, as all conſent, is Metaphoricall; as he that is uncircumciſed hath ſome defiling thing that is not cut away, ſo the uncircumciſed in heart or in tongue, or lips, is one that hath ſome vice, defect or impediment, from which he is not purged or healed. He meaneth then, that he was ſtill without that ability to ſpeak which was requiſite before a mighty King. Simlerus thinketh, that he ſaid thus, becauſe he was now bidden again alone to go to Pharaoh: but that this was not ſo, is plain from the next words, Verſe 13. and 26. it was therefore ſpoken rather by way of excuſe, as before, Moſes being weary now of this buſineſſe, and therefore willing to underſtand the Lord, as if he had bidden him to go alone and ſpeak, that he might again excuſe himſelfe by his tongue: for which cauſe the Lord expreſly appointeth Aaron again to be his mouth, as he had done before, Chap. 7.1. Moſes, a man in great favour with God, and of great perfections, yet laboureth with one little imperfection which God could eaſily have taken from him, but would not, to ſhew, that they ſometimes, upon whom great things are beſtowed, yet are defective in little, that it might appear, that no man can in this life be altogether perfect and wanting nothing, to pull down the pride of the moſt dignified, as Pererius himſelfe noteth contrary to the common Tenet of the Church of Rome, that a man may be perfect even in this life. Verſe 10,11 Verſe 12. Auguſt. quæſt. 17. in Exod. Simlerus. Note. Pererius.

The Law, ſaith Ferus, and that not unaptly is figured out by Moſes: in that as he ſpeaking to the Hebrews in bondage, they would not hear him; ſo carnall men being under the grievous bondage of ſin, do neither hear nor regard the Law taught unto them, they are ſo ſtupified hereby. Again, as the Law ſpeaketh good things, but hath an impediment, becauſe it ſpeaketh by figures and ſhadowes darkly and not plainly; ſo Moſes had an impediment in his ſpeech. Ferus.

And the Lord ſpake to Moſes and Aaron, and gave them a command to the children of Iſrael, and to Pharaoh, &c. This is added by way of capitulation, to put a period here to the relation hitherto continued of the Lords ſpeaking and appointing Moſes and Aaron again and again to ſpeak to the Hebrews and to Pharaoh, and to bring them out, and therefore Calvin rendereth it, The Lord had ſpoken to Moſes and Aaron; and this capitulation is made here, becauſe he was now to paſſe to the Genealogies of Moſes and Aaron, and of the children of Iſrael, who vvere at this time to be delivered, as follovveth. Verſe 13. Calvin.

Theſe are the heads of the houſe of their Fathers. The ſons of Reuben, Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron, Carmi, &c. Becauſe many and great things vvere done by Verſe 14. Verſe 15.

Moſes

Moſes and Aaron, vvhich ſhould afterwards be related, their Genealogie is here ſet dovvn, as Calvin hath it, that it might appear, that they came of Abraham, contrary to the reports of ſome vvho have vvritten othervviſe. And becauſe they came of Levi, the third ſonne of Jacob, the children of his two elder brethren Reuben and Simeon are firſt ſet down, *v.*14,15. and then in his order the Genealogy of Levi. Although Moſes was now raiſed to the higheſt dignity, yet in humility being to write his own Genealogy, he would firſt touch the children of the elder brethren. And it is to be noted, that he goeth no further here, but to theſe three, who were in times paſt moſt hardly cenſured by their father, to ſhew, that although their wickedneſſe was great, yet they were not cut off from having their Tribes, as well as the reſt. And his purpoſe being to declare more fully, who Moſes and Aaron were from their originall, and not to draw the lines of all the Tribes here, having come to their Tribe, he cutteth off his genealogicall diſcourſe, reſerving the reſt to be ſpoken of afterwards in a more fit place, and nameth no more as heads of their fathers houſes in ſpeaking of Reuben and Simeon, then thoſe that came into Egypt with them, as we may ſee, *Gen.*46. But coming to Levi, of whom Moſes came, he ſaith more largely, Theſe are the names of the ſonnes of Levi, Gerſon, Cohath, Merari; and the yeeres of the life of Levi were 137. The ſonnes of Gerſhom, Libni, and Simei, &c. v. 18,19. The age of Levi is here ſet down ſingularly, and then of Cohath his ſonne, and Amram his ſonne, of whom Moſes came, becauſe this Tribe was now ſingularly preferred, that the reckoning of years might be made hereby, as the chief. Levi then being elder then Joſeph about four years was about 43 when he came into Egypt with his father Jacob, wherefore when he had atteined to 137, the people had been in Egypt 94 years, and Cohath his ſon being one of them that came then into Egypt with Jacob alſo, although he vvere but a year old at that time, living 133, made up in his life-time but 39 years more, and Amram vvho lived 137, but begat Moſes, Anno 77 of his age, but born 14 years before Joſephs death, according to Euſebius but 71 years more vvhich being added together make onely 204, and then Moſes his time 60 years, vvhileſt his father lived, being deducted, onely 20 years more of his life are to be added, and then the vvhole is 224, or otherwiſe reckoned, as I have ſhewed upon Gal. 3.17. (214,) and upon Gen. 15. 15. (215,) where alſo the computations of theſe years are examined.

Calvin.

Note. Gen.49.

Verſe 16. Verſe 17.

Euſeb. Chronic.

Verſe 20. And Amram took Jochebed his fathers ſiſter to wife, &c. What is to be thought touching this marriage, ſee before, *Exod.*2.1.

Verſe 23. Simlerus. And Aaron took Eliſhaba the daughter of Aminadab, the ſiſter of Naaſſon to wife, &c. The marriage of Aaron with the Tribe of Judah is ſet down, to ſhew the joyning together of the Prieſtly and Kingly family, ſo Jehoiada the High Prieſt married afterwards the ſiſter of Joaſh the King, and Zachariah the Prieſt had Elizabeth to Wife, who was Kinſ-woman to the Virgine Mary, who was of the linage of David. For the Tribe of Levi having none inheritance, when the land of Canaan was divided, was not tied from marrying into other Tribes, as they were, that their inheritances might not be confounded together, but kept diſtinct from generation to generation.

Verſe 26,27 Verſe 28,29 This is that Aaron and Moſes, &c. Here in many words the perſons and office committed to theſe two are deſcribed after a view given of their Genealogy. And theſe things are inculcated, to ſet forth the grace of God the more in delivering the children of Iſrael by two ſuch mean perſons. For what were they to do this ſo great a worke, eſpecially Moſes labouring with ſuch an impediment in his ſpeech, as is again commemorated, Verſe 30? And what were they to govern and lead ſo numerous a people? Moſes therefore in making theſe repetitions, would have them doubtleſſe to look up to God, as the Author of all good unto them, and wholly devote themſelves to his ſervice: to this effect Calvin.

Verſe 30. Calvin.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

AND the Lord said to Moſes, Behold, I have made thee a God to Pharaoh, & Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy Prophet. A like ſpeech is uſed before, *Exod.*4.16. He ſhall be a mouth to thee, and thou ſhalt be a God to him, ſpeaking of Aaron, for Aaron was his Prophet, none otherwiſe, but becauſe as a Prophet hath that revealed to him, which he is to ſpeak from the Lord, ſo from Moſes was revealed to Aaron what he ſhould ſay, as is ſhewed, Verſe 2. which is added, as an Expoſition of this. But as he vvas there made Aarons God for Revelations, ſo here he is made Pharaohs God for the confounding of him and his forces, becauſe as by God who alone hath power over Kings without all force of arms, ſo he ſhould have power over Pharaoh. And this is aptly ſpoken here, as anſwering to the plea of Moſes, fearing that he ſhould do no good with Pharaoh in this matter, becauſe he would not hear or be moved by him being of uncircumciſed lips: for what could better be oppoſed againſt that, then this, I have made thee Pharaohs God? as if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt not need to fear him as thy Superiour, for I will inſtruct and furniſh thee vvith greater povver then he hath, ſo that he ſhall not be able to vvithſtand thee any more then a mortall man is able to ſtand againſt the eternall God. To this effect Ferus. O thou of little faith, vvhat doeſt thou fear? Who is more povverfull the King or God? Let him then be as great a King as he can, yet thou ſhalt be greater, for I have made thee a God unto him, he ſhall not be able to hurt thee, but thou him, and therefore he may fear thee, and not thou him, vvhereby vve may ſee the preferment of humility in Moſes, ſeeing that he humbling himſelfe as vile and unvvorthy vvas thus graced by the Lord. Excellently Rupertus; Becauſe thou art the meekeſt amongſt men, and judgeſt thy ſelfe unvvorthy to ſpeak to Pharaoh, and thus caſteth thy ſelf dovvn to the duſt, behold, I vvill lift thee up above the height of the Clouds, and make thee a God, not vvhich he may humbly adore, but vvhich he ſhall ſervilely fear. Verſe 1. Ferus. Note. Rupert. lib. 1. in Exod c. 26. Ecce ego extollam te ſuper altitudinem nubium, faciamque te Deum, non quem ille fideliter adoret, ſed quem ſerviliter formidet.

But I will harden Pharaohs heart, and will multiply my ſignes and wonders in Egypt, &c. Of all this paſſage, Verſe 3,4,5. ſee before, *Chap.*3.20. *Chap.*4.21. *Chap.*6.1. Onely here it is moreover added, The Egyptians ſhall know that I am the Lord. Before he had ſaid, the Hebrews ſhould know, that he was the Lord their God, *Chap.*6.7. they ſhould know it by being more confirmed in their weak faith to their comfort, but the Egyptians ſhould know it, when as madly having ſtriven againſt his will, they ſhould finde to their ſmart, that they had not fought againſt men but againſt God, and experimentally know, that there is no power againſt the Power of God, being at the point of utter perdition, and hereby eſcaping, but then being plunged into it. And ſo ſhall all Atheiſts and Reprobates know one day, that the Lord is God, againſt whoſe will they have hardened their hearts, to their greater horrour. Verſe 3. Exod 14.25.

And Moſes and Aaron did as the Lord commanded them. As hitherto Moſes had been ſlow and backward, ſo now the Lord having put life and courage into him, he failed not afterwards in every thing to execute his command, wherein he doth arrogate nothing to himſelfe, but aſcribeth all to God, from whom it was that they did any thing, and all that they did was but obeying his commands, the whole device and worke of deliverance was from God alone. Verſe 6. Calvin.

And Moſes was fourſcore years old, &c. In the Hebrew, it is the ſonne of 80 years by an Hebraiſme. The age of them both is ſet down to ſhew under what aged and worne out Leaders God brought forth his people, that his power might be the more magnified, as whereby alone, and not by any arm of fleſh this was done. Verſe 7.

Then God bade Moſes, that Aaron ſhould caſt down his rod before Pharaoh, that Verſe 8,9.

Verſe 10,11
Verſe 12,13

it might be turned into a ſerpent, which he did, and the inchanters of Egypt being called by Pharaoh, did likewiſe, but Aarons rod devoured their rods, and ſo he was hardened againſt hearkening to them. The Lord knew, that Pharaoh would aske a ſigne, and therefore he biddeth, when he did aske to ſhew this ſigne, which had been done in other places twice before. We read not, that he did ask any, but it is to be conceived, that this is paſſed over, as taken for granted by reaſon of the words of the Lord uſed before. Haply Pharaoh thought by demanding a ſigne to put them to ſilence, but that he might be the more juſtly condemned, for not believing, when at his owne requeſt a ſigne was ſhewed, the Lord ordered it thus, that when he asked, a ſigne ſhould be given. For the myſtery in this ſigne, ſee before where it was firſt done. The Inchanters are called wiſe-men, Sorcerers and Magicians, in Hebrew the firſt word is חכמים wiſe-men, whether in divine, civill or artificiall things, the ſecond word מכשפים whichcometh of כשף, to deceive the ſight, ſo that a Sorcerer is one, that maketh things to appear to the eye in another forme: the third word is חרטמי, turned by ſome Genethliaci, Arioli; by others, Necromantici. Rab. Levi ſaith, They are thoſe that by the uſe of naturall things do wonders, or ſeem to do wonders, whileſt their ſubtlety is not perceived. R. Saadias deriveth the word from Cor and Athum, a hole and ſecret, becauſe they did ſhut ſome man up in a ſecret place, and ſo when they inquired touching any thing he made anſwer, and other ſtanders by were deluded, and ſometime they would ſhut one thus up in a Sepulchre. That whereby they are ſaid to have done the like, is להטיהם, this Aben-Ezra deriveth from Lahut fire, or the blade of a ſword, and turneth it the brightneſſe of Armes, for Sorcerers uſed not only words, but certaine ſacred things in their incantations. Others turne it, Inchantments; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, ſuſurrations. Some will have the verſatile agitation of Sorcerers, which is as Gladius verſatilis, whereby they ſhew by a ſlight, one thing for another, ſet forth hereby. Thus Simlerus. Ioſephus ſaith, that theſe Magicians, for ſo was their common name, were Prieſts, who were ſuch for the opinion of wiſdome amongſt the Egyptians, as the Brachmans amongſt the Indians, the Gymnoſophiſts amongſt the Ethiopians, the Philoſophers amongſt the Grecians, and Prophets amongſt the Jevvs. They are ſaid by the Chaldee Paraphraſt to have done the like by their ſuſurrations, becauſe as the word turned magi, ſignifieth ſecret, ſo the vvords ſung by them vvere uttered vvhiſperingly, that the ſtanders by knevv not vvhat they ſaid. For the manner of Pharaohs proceeding in calling for them, Joſephus ſaith moreover, that the King ſeeing Moſes his Rod turned into a Serpent, called him a vvicked run avvay of Egypt, that having in times paſt learned the Art Magick there, came novv ſo confidently to deceive him thereby. And he ſaid, that he had Prieſts alſo, vvho could ſhevv the ſame ſignes. But Moſes nothing moved hereby, ſaith, I am not ignorant of the arts of Egypt: but vvhat I do, is ſo much more excellent then theirs, by hovv much divine things excell humane, and novv I vvill ſhevv, that vvhat I do is from God, and no deceit; vvhereupon his rod vvent to theirs, one after another, and devoured every one of them.

R. Levi.
R. Saadias.
Aben Ezra.
Calvin.
Simlerus.
Joſeph.

Who theſe Magicians were by name is not here ſet down, but by Saint Paul they are ſaid to be Jannes and Jambres. Theſe two, ſaith Numenius, were ſo powerfull in their art, that they alone were thought the only men that could reſiſt Moſes. Palladius ſaith, that they were Brethren, and that for the excellency of their skill, they were in greateſt authority in Egypt, and that they made them a Sepulchre in a Garden, a moſt pleaſant place, with great coſt, and laid up much Treaſure there, which was afterwards kept by Devils. It hath been an ancient opinion, that Zoroaſtres, otherwiſe called Cam, was the firſt inventor of this wicked art. Caſſianus ſaith, that Adam firſt received the knowledge of the ſtarres and of ſublunarie things from God, all delivered the ſame to Sheth, which he and his poſterity kept undefiled, till their mingling in Marriages with Cains iſſue, uſing that skill only in the woſhip

2 Tim. 3. 8.
Numen. Pythagoric. lib. 3. de bono.
Pallad. in vita Macarii.
Caſſian. Coll. 8. c. 2.

of

of God, and for the common good. But this mixture being once made, it was derived by the instinct of the Devil to prophane & hurtful things, & maleficious Arts and Sorceries and Magical superstitions were out of it instituted. And as we have by old tradition, Cham was infected with this depraved skill, and therefore before the coming of the floud, he took care to preserve it, and ingraved it in plates of Iron placed upon Pillars of stone and Brick, thus transmitting it to posterity. He is said to have been born laughing.

What wonderfull things may be done by Art Magick, I will not stand here to dispute, in many the sight is only deluded, but often-times, as the Devill can by his skill and power being an Angell, wonderfull things are by these his Instruments by his help done indeed. For there is admirable vertue lying hid in certaine Waters, Juices, Gems, Stones, Wood and living creatures, yea and in mens bodies, of incredible operations. And these, wherein they lie hid, how to be compounded, and at what times are known to the Devill, and he can carry them unseen of men, whither he will with wonderfull celerity. Any thing then that may be done by naturall meanes, although we are ignorant how he can do, but no miracle, which is altogether supernaturall. See my Expos. Math. 24.24. August ibid. Touching the wonders done here by the Inchanters of Egypt, both in turning their Rods into Serpents, and water into bloud, &c. If it be demanded, whether the sight were only deceived, or these transmutations were truly made? Some hold that they were no true mutations, but only a delusion of the sight: as Josephus who saith, that the Serpents of the Magitians crept after the manner of true Serpents, but indeed they were delusions, so likewise Justine Martyr responsione ad quæst. Orthodoxorum qu. 26. and Tertullian, Greg. Nyssen, Rupertus, &c. But others hold, that as the Rod of Moses was truly turned into a Serpent, and water was by him truly turned into bloud, &c. so the mutations made by them were true, as Theodoret, Augustine, Thomas Aquinas, Lyranus, Tostatus, &c. and some holding, that these were true Serpents, yet seek another way out of their comming thither, viz. the Rods being invisibly taken away, and the Serpents brought suddenly by the Devill in the roome of them. But then there was no true change, as these learned Writers maintaine. I hold with them, that are for a true change. 1 Becaus as it is said of Moses his rod, that it was turned into a Serpent, so it is said of theirs, whereas if a shew of a change only had been made, some touch would have been given thereof. 2 Beeause the Devill would now doubtlesse use his uttermost power against Moses, and therefore if he could produce by any means true Serpents, he would not make shews only, lest being detected in his fraud by Moses, his Instruments should have been confounded. 3 Because when Moses had turned the dust into lice, they could not make any true change here, but an end was put now to their Magicall power, whereas if in the other things the sight only had been deceived by them, they could have done it in that also. Or if they had brought the Serpents suddenly thither from some other place, they could also have done the like for lice. But how could a rod by any Diabolicall power in so short a time be turned into a Serpent? Ans. By bringing such Agents and Patients together, as were fit to produce it, which although we know not, yet they are very well knowne to the Devill, for he can tell out of what Serpents are produced, and with wonderfull celerity effect such a production. And time he had to bring such matter to the Inchanters rods whilest Pharaoh was sending for them and they coming, and to make it ready for this production. If it be demanded, why the Lord would permit the Devill to do such wonders? Answer, he permitteth this often-times to try the faithfull, and that the Reprobate might by such strong delusions be carried away from the truth, which they never loved. If Pharaoh had not been blinded with malice, as well as by his inchanters gestes, he might easily have perceived God to have been with Moses, in that his rod devoured the rods of the Inchanters, and that neither he nor his could stand Quæst. Joseph. lib. 2. Antiqu. Justin. Martyr. Tertull. lib. de anima. Gregor. Nyssen. Rupertus. Theod. quæst. 3 in Exod. August. lib. qu. 83. in quæst. 79. Tho. Aquin. part. 1. qu. 114. artic. 4. Lyranus. Tostatus. Cajetan.

Reason 1.

2.

3.

Quæst.

Quæst.

againſt that God, in whoſe name Moſes came unto him, in that they were now overcome in their own profeſſion, but eſpecially when they could not produce lice, but acknowledged that to be the finger of God.

Theod. quæſt. in Exod.

Theodoret yieldeth another reaſon of Gods permitting theſe enchanters to do ſuch wonders, viz. to puniſh Pharaoh the more by their water turned into blood, and frogs, and hereby he plainly differenced Moſes from them againſt the calumny of ſuch, as ſay that Moſes was a Magician, becauſe he both brought plagues and took them away, and produced lice out of the duſt, which they could not do. So likewiſe, ſaith Chryſoſtome, None can ſay, that the Apoſtles were Impoſtours or Sorcerers, becauſe they withſtood Simon Magus, and other ſuch kinde of men, as Moſes did the enchanters of Egypt, and they were confounded before them.

Chryſoſt. hom. 46. in Act. Apoſt

Verſe 14,15
Verſe 16,17
Verſe ,1819
Verſe 20,21
Verſe 22,23
Verſe 24,25

Then Moſes is bidden to go to Pharaoh in the morning, when he came out to the River, that is, to Nilus; and again to require leave for the people to go, and if he yet denied, to ſmite the River with his rod, which he did, and the water was turned into blood, and ſo was the water in all Ponds and Veſſels, and it ſtank, and the fiſh died. Then the enchanters being called for, do the like, and Pharaohs heart is hardened, and this plague laſted ſeven dayes.

Hitherto the Lord had dealt with Pharaoh without doing any hurt unto his land, but now he beginneth to ſhew ſignes for his puniſhment. The plagues wherewith he ſmote him were ten, neither more nor fewer, becauſe this is a full number, and when afterwards he gave ten Commadements to his people, they might remember theſe ten plagues, and ſo conſidering how full the Lord was of plagues for ſuch as offended him, more carefully flee all offences againſt them. As the ſinnes of the Egyptians, ſaith Philo, were come to the full, ſo that animadverſion of God againſt them was every way full and perfect. And it is worth the noting, to ſhew the fulneſſe of their puniſhment, that they were puniſhed by all the Elements: the earth, when the duſt of the earth was turned into lice; the water, when that became blood; the air, when the winde brought Catterpillers upon all their land; and the fire, when a hail was ſent mingled with fire. They were alſo puniſhed in all their ſenſes, their ſeeing by the three dayes darkneſſe, their taſting and ſmelling by the water turned into blood which ſtanke, and was moſt diſtaſtefull, their feeling by the lice and ſore ulcers, and their hearing by terrible Thunder-claps. They were plagued by God, by men, Moſes, and Aaron, by Angels and by all creatures, with which wickedneſſe hath been at any time puniſhed, Frogs, Graſſe-hoppers, Catterpillers, Hail, and unto outward judgements was added inward terrour of the minde. And they ſuſteined loſſe in every kinde, in their corn, fruit, cattel, fiſh, children, gold, ſilver, and houſhold-ſtuff, and finally, they loſt their lives in the Red-ſea. Of theſe plagues it is ſpoken again, *Pſal.*78.*v.*43. and *Pſal.*105.26. But there they are ſaid to have been done in the land of Ham, and in the field of Zoan, but Egypt is called the land of Ham, becauſe Miſraim a ſonne of Ham poſſeſſed it, and gave the name unto it, and Zoan was the Metropolitan City, the ſeat of the King, and therefore it is ſingularly named, becauſe firſt and chiefly ſmitten, and from thence the plagues went all over Egypt, onely the land of Goſhen, where the Hebrews dwelt excepted: for by their being excepted, *Chap.*8.&c. it is plain, that their land was not ſmitten at all, but at the fourth plague they begin firſt to be expreſly excepted, becauſe then the enchanters of Egypt did no more the like. *Aug. Queſt.*26. in Exod. If it be demanded, whether the Egyptians dwelling together with the Hebrews in Goſhen were not free alſo from theſe plagues? I anſwer, from ſome of them they muſt needs be free, yea from moſt, but onely thoſe, whereby mens perſons were ſmitten, as the biles and lice, and the ſlaughter of the firſt-born, and haply the hail and fire killing men and cattel abroad. Saint *Auguſt. Queſt.*44. in Exod. ſaith, that they were ſmitten with none other plague but the laſt in their firſt-born, but Toſtatus, becauſe they alike hated the Hebrews, that they ſuffered by all theſe plagues as other Egyptians did. I ſee no reaſon to hold with either of them, but as hath been already ſaid. For the reaſon brought by Toſtatus, from their hatred againſt the Hebrews, the cauſe expreſſed of Gods ſmiting that land now, was not that, but Pharaohs refuſing to let Gods people go. The Hebrews in their greater Chronology, ſay, that theſe plagues laſted twelve moneths from the beginning to the end of them, ſome diſtances coming between one and another, and this is followed by Genebrardus in Pſal. 104. How long time they laſted we cannot certainly ſay by the ſacred Hiſtory: for hereby, if one followed immediately after another, they were all finiſhed in 28 dayes, as will eaſily appear to him that computeth the times. If it be demanded, why God was ſo long in bringing plagues upon the Egyptians, when as he could ſuddenly have deſtroyed them all by one plague? I anſwer, partly for his mercy, becauſe he would give them time to repent, and partly that his deſtroying of this mighty and flouriſhing Nation might be the more remarkable to the greater glory of his power, and for a warning to other wicked Nations to repent for firſt judgements, leſt going on in ſinne, judgement be brought upon judgement to their utter deſtruction alſo. And hitherto of the plagues of Egypt in generall. Touching this firſt plague, The Lord, ſaith Philo, did firſt puniſh the Egyptians in the River Nilus, becauſe they gloried greatly therein, as being the cauſe of all fertility to their Countrey, and therefore gave divine honour unto it, and there celebrated many Ceremonies of impiety both about the worſhip of their God Apis and of Crocodiles, as Pliny and Solinus write. They greatly gloried, ſaith Theodoret, in the River Nilus, accounting it as God, becauſe it was to their land, as the Clouds of heaven: for which cauſe God firſt puniſhed them herein, and becauſe they had drowned the Hebrews children therein, whoſe blood did now as it were appear, and call for revenge. This plague of turning water into blood, ſaith Philo, was a means to kill up ſo many men, that periſhed with thirſt and with the ſtinke of the dead fiſh, that the living were ſcarcely ſufficient to bury the dead. And Joſephus ſaith, that if any taſted of the water now, he was taken with a ſharpe pain, but to the Hebrews it was pleaſant and good, as before. I cannot think with Philo, that ſo many men died of this plague, for then it would have been recorded by Moſes himſelfe, and the Egyptians would then have been ready to urge them to depart, as when their firſt-born were ſlain. Moreover, it is ſaid, that they digged for water to drink during this time, v. 24. The River Nilus now turned into blood, ſaith Philo, was blood as farre as from Ethiopia to the Sea, that is, from the riſing thereof unto the end: but we have no warrant for this here, neither is it probable, becauſe the Lord vvould puniſh the Egyptians onely, and not other Nations alſo. The conſideration of this River flovving out of Ethiopia through Egypt, maketh the miracle the more manifold and vvonderfull, in that the change into blood muſt needs ſo be yielded to have been not at once onely, but all theſe ſeven dayes ſtill, as any vvater came dovvn, it vvas continually turned into blood. The periſhing of the fiſh hereby vvas a grievous loſſe to the Countrey, becauſe they lived much hereupon. But the greateſt queſtion here is hovv the Magicians are ſaid to do likevviſe, conſidering that all vvaters being turned into blood, there was none left for them to turn alſo? To this divers anſwers are invented by divers. Saint Auguſtine hath two, one that the enchanters did not this, till after the ſeven dayes ended; and the other, that they might have water fetcht from Goſhen, where the Hebrews dwelt. He alſo ſaith, that the ſweet waters onely being turned, the Sea-water which was not farre off might ſoon be fetcht for the Magicians to try their skill upon, and this anſwer hath Theodoret alſo. Juſtin Martyr hath a fourth anſwer, viz. that the water turned by the Magicians might be that in pits digged now by the Egyptians to drink. It may ſuffice to anſwer any of theſe wayes, but I do ſpecially approve of that of water brought out of Goſhen, or from the Sea, if they had tarried till the end of ſeven dayes, or till the Hebræi.

*Philo lib.*1 de vita Moſis.

plagues

Queſt.

Philo. Plin. lib 8. c. 46. Solinus c. 35. Theod. quæſt. 19 in Gen. Fluvius ille in ſanguinem mutatus conquerebatur de cæde puerorum per Ægyptos commiſſa. Philo. Ioſeph. lib. 2. antiquit.

Queſt.

Auguſt. quæſt. 23. in Exod. Epiſt. 7.

Theod. quæſt. 20 in Exod. Juſtin Martyr reſponſ. ad 27 qu. orthodoxor.

the Egyptians had been forced by digging to seek water for their need, Moses had had too long a time to triumph over them. Others have devised other answers, but most improbable, as the Hebrews, who think that the River-water onely was turned into blood; and some others, who think that although it be said, all ponds and Vessels having water were turned, yet here and there one might escape; and Cajetan, who thinketh that there might be water in brazen, and gold, and silver Vessels not turned; and Tostatus and Lyranus, who think that the Devil might suddenly bring them water invisibly; and others lastly, that think they might by their Art Magick turn some water again to that it was before, and then make it blood. But this is the most improbable of all, that they should have power to alter Gods Works. And if the Devil had brought them water, as mens eyes were held when it was brought, so they would doubtlesse have thought that their eyes were onely deceived in the change. For the three former solutions, they are either directly against the text, or by consequence. Some think, that all the waters even in Goshen also were turned into blood, but being drawn and used by the Hebrews, they were sweet, and distastefull to the Egyptians onely, as may be gathered out of the saying of Josephus before, and if we receive this, and it is most consonant to the History, telling that all the waters in Egypt were turned into blood, not excepting that part which was called Goshen, then it must be held that the water turned by the Magicians was brought from the Sea.

Hebræi.

Cajetan.
Tostatus.
Lyranus.

For the time that this plague lasted, it is said to be seven dayes, yet Eusebius expounding these seven dayes of the time passing between this plague and the next, will have the continuance of this but one day: but so the plague had been very small, and their thirst could not have been so great in so short a time. How this plague ceased it is not said, but Philo saith, that Moses was sought unto by the Egyptians; Josephus, that Pharaoh when he saw that there would otherwise be none end of his peoples miseries, gave the Hebrews leave to go and sacrifice, and so it ceased, but immediately he hardened himselfe again, and would not suffer them to go. Tostatus saith, that it continued till another plague was sent, and then ceased, and this is most probable, because if it had been done, as Philo or Josephus say, Moses would have remembred it here as well as afterwards in speaking of other plagues, and shewing how they ceased. Or it may be thought, that God not purposing to destroy the Egyptians by this first plague, when it had rained a sufficient time, ceased it again, purposing shortly to bring another. For the mystery of this first plague, it is by Augustine, and after him by Ferus applied to the sinne against the first Commandement, as the other are to the rest, the ten to the sinnes against the ten Commandements. For this first, as all things were made out of the water, so all things are made of God, rightly therefore typified by the vvater, and water turned into blood setteth forth carnall men darkened in their understanding, as touching the knowledge of God, and so transferring his glory to carnall and corruptible things. Thus Augustine and Ferus saith, As it is an horrible thing to see vvater turned into blood, so it is horrible to see God turned into an image much more, and his glory thus transferred to creatures. And hereby is shevved, that to those that thus debase God all things are turned to blood, that is, to destruction, as all things turn to good to those that love God, as Saint Paul teacheth, Rom 8. 28.

Eusebius Cæsariensis.

Philo.
Iosephus.

Tostatus.

August. princip. Tom 9.

Ferus.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1, 2. Verse 3, 4. Verse 5, 6, 7 Theodoret.

HEre the Lord appointeth Moses to go again to demand leave of Pharaoh for the people to go, and to threaten a plague of frogs, if he denied, that should come into his house and bed-chamber and bed, &c.

This plague of frogs croaking and cravvling about in all places, saith Theodoret, vvas a fit punishment to put them in minde of their sinne in stopping their their ears in times past against the pittifull cries of the Hebrews children, when they drowned them: for children go upon all four like unto Frogs. And it is to be noted, that here again their punishment cometh from the waters, whereby they had sinned most heinously, as was shewed before, for he saith, the River shall swarm with Frogs, the Hebrew word is שרץ signifying to multiply after the manner of fishes and creeping things most abundantly. Now it is commonly knowne, that Egypt lying low by a great River, and many ditches of water derived therefrom being in every place, abounded alwayes with Frogs, insomuch as that they worshipped the bird called Ibis, as a God, for devouring of the Frogs, that so much annoyed their Countrey. But ordinarily they were brought forth by degrees, and kept about watery places only, the abundance of them not being so great, as to fill mens houses also: but now by Gods power they are suddenly thus multiplied, and come out of their bounds into all places. If this shall seeme to have been no great judgement, Varro telleth of the Attariots in India, that they were compelled by Frogs to leave their Countrey, and to seek another, and some people likewise about Peonia and Dardania, and a certaine City in France, saith he, was forsaken by the Inhabitants because of Frogs, and a people called Abderitæ, were driven from their houses by Frogs and Mice. God in causing Frogs now to come so abundantly out of the River shewed, that he had hitherto by his providence restreined them from so greatly annoying Egypt, and the Egyptians could not but be much vexed to see themselves overcome by so contemptible a creature: thus Calvin. The Hebrews say, that the frogs did not only go into their houses, but into their bodies by their mouthes, when they were asleep, but this is fabulous. Philo and Josephus say, that they could go no whither, but Frogs were still in their way, and the waters did so abound with them, that they were infected with a filthy slime comming from them, and with their croaking ceased not night or day to molest them, neither could they make ready any thing to eat, but Frogs were seen in it, so that the annoyance by them was intolerable. If it be demanded, how the Magicians could do the like, seeing all places were already full of frogs? August. qu. 23 in Ex. answereth, that they might bring some in Goshen.

Athanas. l. 8. c. 2. Varro.

Orosius lib. 3. Calvin.

Philo.

Verse 8.

Then Pharaoh called Moses and Aaron, and said, Pray the Lord to take away the Frogs from me, and my people, and I will let the people go that they may sacrifice, &c. By this speech of Pharaoh speaking of himselfe and his people, the Egyptians, it appeareth, that this plague was upon the Egyptians only, and not upon the Hebrews. As Pharaoh here is affected with Gods judgements for the present, and humbleth himselfe, but being delivered, returneth to his vomit againe: so do all Hypocrites, and this sheweth an Hypocriticall penitentiary like Pharaoh, and such the Israelites are shewed by the Psalmist afterwards to have been also. If it be demanded, why Pharaoh did not crave as well that the first plague might be removed? It is answered, that it was not so grievous, because thereby they were not so punished, but that they could use some meanes to be supplied with water, as by digging, and the richer sort had wine to drink, but by this of frogs they were so punished, as that they could by no means help themselves, and the Magicians, that brought frogs also in some places, had no power to help them by taking them away in any.

Calvin.

Note.

Psal. 78. 34.

Quest.

Perus.

Verse 9.

And Moses said, Glory over me, and say, when I shall pray for thee and for thy servants, &c. v. 10. And he said, To morrow, &c.

Pharaoh had hitherto gloried in his own power, and in his Magicians, now seeing his glorying in them was vaine, Moses biddeth him to glory in him; for when at his command Moses should pray, and Frogs should be taken away, he might well glory, that he had such a man in his Kingdome, as by whose prayers he might be delivered from this great judgement: so that in this speech there is a secret Antithesis to his glorying in his Magicians, and bearing himselfe proudly upon his power, as if he had been able to contend with with God. To glory in Moſes then is, to glory in his Patronage, and to count it a great happineſſe that he did interpoſe himſelfe by Prayer to reconcile the Lord againe unto him, and hereby it was not derogated from Gods glory, but Pharaohs pride was abated, and God was glorified, whileſt he acknowledged no means available to ſave him and his people, but Gods mercy, and therefore ſought the prayer of his ſervant unto him. Thus Calvin, who alſo ſaith, that ſome expound it of an honour done to Pharaoh by Moſes, in that he biddeth him; appoint the time; and ſome, that Pharaoh ſhould ſafely glory, when the Frogs were taken away, but he rejecteth the one, and is not ſatisfied in the other. But the words ſeem plainly to put us upon this Expoſition, Take this honour over me to command, and appoint me the time to pray. The Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth it, Take power, Tremelius ſaith, that both he yielded in theſe words, this honour and power to Pharaoh to ſet the time, and withall touched Pharaoh by the way, who had hitherto gloried in his Magicians. Neither was this a preſumption in Moſes to offer the takingaway of this plague, when he ſhould appoint, for he knew that he had this power given him of God, and was herein moved by the ſecret inſtinct of Gods Spirit, that Pharaoh might know, that as the bringing of theſe Frogs was meerly by a divine power, not tied to any obſervation of time, ſo ſhould the taking of them away be alſo, and thus be left without all excuſe. And he ſaith, that they ſhould remaine in the River only, that is, in and about it, as in times paſt. If it be demanded, why Pharaoh appointed the day following, and not the preſent? Calvin anſwereth that they are deceived, who think theſe words, to morrow, have reference to the removall of this judgement, for hereby is appointed the time, when he would let the people go to do ſacrifice, and he appointeth it (to morrow) that he might gaine time. But all others, that I have ſeen, expound it of the time of removing this plague, yielding this, as a reaſon of his delay, that he might ſee, whether Moſes wrought by inchantment or no, becauſe if he did, he thought it might ceaſe before the next day of it ſelfe. For the Magicians uſed to look at certain Conſtellations, whereby they knew the time of the determination of evills, and haply he might think, that Moſes by ſuch skill ſaw the time of the ceſſation of this to be at hand, and therefore ſo confidently offered to intercede for the removall of it. According to the time ſet by Pharaoh, the Frogs at the prayer of Moſes are taken away, being killed in every place, and their very great abundance appeareth in this, that they were gathered upon heaps: in the Hebrew to expreſſe it the more, it upon heaps, heaps, and they ſtank, to ſhew, that they were Frogs indeed, but Pharaoh againe hardened his heart, and would not let them go. If any man ſhall aske, why the Egyptians would not kill up theſe poore creatures themſelves? I Anſw. They multiplied ſo unceſſantly, that it was impoſſible: ſo it is commonly knowne, that the Biſhop of Mogune was followed by Mice into the midſt of the Rhine, and eaten up in a Tower there called to this day therefore the Tower of Mice. See alſo two other like Examples, Jam. 5. D. 4. By theſe Frogs Auguſtine underſtandeth myſtically Philoſophers and Hereticks, who teach vainly touching God and Jeſus Chriſt, being good for nothing, but to fill mens eares every where with an horrid noiſe, as the Frogs did all parts of Egypt; & ſo this plague ſetteth forth the ſin againſt the third commandment, forbidding the taking of Gods name in vaine. Ferus alſo following the ſame Allegory, ſaith, Becauſe, God having given us our tongues to bleſſe him withall, we contrariwiſe ſpeak vanity, he hath puniſhed us with Hereticks, Arrius, Pelagius, &c. filling our Eares with vaine diſputes and clamours, like Frogs. Rupertus applieth it to vaine and pratling Poets. Gregor. Nyſſenus to voluptuous perſons and diſſolute livers, who talk filthily and offenſively. Frogs may well reſemble Hereticks, for by Frogs ſuch are alſo ſet forth, Rev. 16.13. Then Moſes and Aaron are commanded to turne the Duſt into Lice, which the Magicians attempting to do, were not able, but confeſſed it to be the finger of God. And Pharaohs heart was hardened.

Calvin.

Chaldee Paraphraſt. Tremelius.

Queſt. Calvin.

Verſe 12. Verſe 13. Verſe 14. Verſe 15.

Auguſt. Principi. Tom. 9.

Ferus.

Rupertus. Gregor. Nyſſen. de vita Moſis.

Verſe 16,17 Verſe 18,19

Hitherto

Hitherto have been plagues with warning before given, but now without; becauſe the ſame thing had been hitherto demanded with a threatning added in vaine. The former plagues were by the water; this is by the earth, vvherein the Egyptians had further ſinned againſt the Hebrevvs by compelling them to make Brick out of the earth. The vvord כנם Chinnim, tranſlated (Lice) ſignifieth a moſt peſtilent kinde of lice, as Fagius ſaith, or both lice and other like animalcula, gnats, fleas, noiſome wormes, and aſyli. Philo ſaith, they vvere very little creatures, vvhich crept about the skin, entered into the eares and noſtrils, cauſing an hurtfull & troubleſome itch in all parts, and were greatly offenſive to the eyes. Joſephus calleth them lice. The Septuagint render it σκνῖπες, and after them the vulgar Latine, Sciniphes, vvhich ſeemeth to be taken from the Hebrevv, as vvhich could not be ſufficiently expreſſed by any one vvord in another language: the Chaldee, (Calmeta) Origen hath it Sciniphes, ſaying, that it vvas a certain little creature flying in the air, being ſo ſmall, that it can ſcarce be ſeen, but it boareth the body, vvhere it lighteth with a moſt ſharp ſting. Some think it a creature never ſeen before, but made now to puniſh the Egyptians, and that it cannot be a louce, becauſe that is bred of mans body, but this of the duſt of the earth. But who can ſay, that God cannot bring lice out of the duſt, when it pleaſeth him? Let the Reader follow which Expoſition liketh him beſt. If they were lice or what little contemptible creature ſoever, they were ſufficient being ſent of God to deſtroy Pharaoh, as lice ate up Herod, Act. 12. and the other Herod, that ſlew the infants, and Sylla.

Simlerus.

Fagius.

Philo.

Origen in Exod.

But why could not the Inchanters produce lice as well as frogs? Rupertus ſaith, that they did produce them, but becauſe they did not bite as well as the lice produced by Moſes, they were diſcovered to have hitherto deceived the ſight onely, and not to have done any thing in truth, as Moſes had done. But ſomething here ſaid is contrary to the text, for although it be ſaid, That they did likewiſe with their enchantments to bring forth lice, yet it is added, but they could not; Wherefore no more is to be underſtood by the firſt words, but that they endeavoured to do likewiſe, but were not able. Indeed, if they had done nothing truly before but made ſhewes onely, this may be a good reaſon why they could not now do ſo any more, becauſe the lice were felt in their biting. But it hath been already ſhewed, that it is moſt probable, that they did the other things truly, and therefore this reaſon cannot hold. The Hebrews ſay that the Devil cannot produce any living thing leſſe then a grain of Barley, and therefore although he could cauſe frogs, yet he could not cauſe lice. But this is a meer imagination, for by this reaſon he ſhould afterwards have made Catterpillers and Graſſehoppers, which were greater, whereas he could after this do nothing more. Some ſay, that their Inchantments were not fitted to bring forth ſuch an effect, but this is unlikely, ſeeing the Devil is preſent by pact at their incantations to do for them any thing which they deſire without limitation, if God reſtreineth not his power. The beſt reaſon is that of Calvin, Simlerus, and others, that God now began to reſtrein the Devils power, and he reſtreined it in the leaſt things for their greater confuſion.

Quæſt. Rupert. lib. 1. in Exod. c. 23.

Hebrews.

Calvin. Simlerus.

Saint Auguſtine inquiring the reaſon, ſaith, None can be yielded, unleſs haply the myſtery of the Trinity be hereby ſet forth, becauſe this was the third plague, and that no worldly wiſdome can ſearch into this, might be hereby ſet forth. The Heathen Philoſophers knew ſomewhat touching God, but they could not attein to any but a little obſcure knovvledge of the Trinity, as the Magicians when they came to the third plague, could do nothing herein, and this may be a myſticall reaſon hereof. The Magicians having tried their skill, in vain confeſſe, and tell Pharaoh that this was the finger of God, that is, done by a divine power, as the Phraſe is aftervvards uſed in the Goſpel, and elegantly the finger is named, to ſhevv that the leaſt povver of God is incomparable by any other povver vvhatſoever, and is ſufficient to do moſt mighty acts. Pharaoh hardening himself after this, bewrayeth his intolerable malice, and all his resistance afterwards was a plain fighting against God, there being no colour of being deceived. If it be doubted, how they were brought to speak thus? It is most probable, saith Calvin, that they were sharply reproved and much urged by Pharaoh, because they did not this; wherefore in excuse of themselves, they say, This is the finger of God. By the Divine Power the finger of God here is expounded, by the Hebrews generally, the Greek Expositour, Tostatus, Cajetan, and also Rupertus; although Rupertus imbraceth withall another Exposition, understanding by the finger of God, the Spirit of God, because the finger of God spoken of, Luc. 11. as whereby Christ cast out Devils, is in other words set forth, Math. 12. to be the Spirit of God. And excellently is the Spirit of God set forth by the finger of God. 1 Because he proceedeth from the Father, as a finger from the hand. 2 As there be many fingers of an hand, so many be the operations of the Holy Ghost. 3 As the left hand hath as many fingers as the right, so there is no lesse need of grace patiently to bear adversities, then moderately to use prosperity: but he saith, that Caiaphas like the Magi said herein, they knew not what they meant, onely to speak of the power of God, but unwittingly they were guided so by God, that they spake of his holy Spirit. And of the Spirit Augustine also understandeth it, and Jerome in Math. 12. and other Fathers. But I imbrace the Exposition before delivered. If it be demanded, how the Magicians confessing the true God here, could be brought afterwards again to withstand Moses, (for that they did is intimated, Chap. 9. 11?) I answer, This confession was sudden like a flash of lightening, extorted at this time from them, but the remembrance of Gods power soon vanishing out of their mindes again, they were put on afresh to resist Moses, as Pharaoh having spoken of praying to the Lord one day, had the next day forgotten him again. Lyranus thinketh, that they meant not God when they spake so, but the Prince of Devils, by whom they made Pharaoh believe, that Moses wrought, for Devils are wont by their followers to be called gods: but this is improbable, because although Devils be so called, any one is never so called without addition. God enlightened them at this time for his own glory, that they might acknowledge his power, but this light ceasing again, they persisted in their Diabolicall course.

Auguſt. quæſt. 25. in Exod.

Luke 11.

Calvin. Tostatus. Cajetan. Rupertus. August. Hieron. Lyranus.

August. Mystically by these molesting animalcula, that wil not suffer men to be quiet, is the sin against the fourth Commandement (which is for the rest) set forth. The contentious then, and turbulent, and railers, and sowers of discord are typified hereby, because their heart is disquieted, and body also by divers passions, as these disquieted mens bodies. For the Commandement prescribeth rest in the minde, and peace and quiet of the body from worldly distractions, and because the Sabbaths of the Lord, saith Ferus, are neglected, and we will not be so free to attend then upon Gods service, as we should, we are justly punished, as with Sciniphes, with much disquiet and vexation in our labours upon other dayes.

Ferus.

Verse 20,21 Verse 24,25 Verse 26,27 Verse 28,29 Verse 30,31 Verse 32. Verse 22,23

Before the next plague, which was of swarmes of flies, Moses is sent again to Pharaoh, comming out to the Rivers side, to speak to him to let the people go, and to threaten this plague, which is accordingly brought, and he humbleth himself so far, as to offer to let them sacrifice in that land, and this being not accepted of, to let them go out to do sacrifice, but he desireth to be prayed for, which Moses granteth, admonishing him not to deal deceitfully any more, and so this plague ceaseth, but Pharaoh is still hardened.

And here is expresse mention made of the difference that should be betwixt the Hebrews and Egyptians, as had not been hitherto, although it must be understood as hath been before said. But here it is at length expressed, because Pharaoh haply had not hitherto taken notice thereof. And it is to be noted, that Moses is bidden to go meet Pharaoh coming out to the water, that in an open place, as in a publick Theatre, all things might be done in the view of many, and

Calvin.

and into the Court Moſes might not now come, and no mention is made of any rod to be uſed here, ſo that it is ſometimes uſed and ſometime not, nor any other thing, to ſhew, that God can work by means and without meanes at his pleaſnre. Thus Calvin. And it is to be thought, that Pharaoh went every morning out to the River to worſhip it, becauſe, as hath been ſaid before, the River was worſhipped for a god amongſt the Egyptians: ſo Simlerus, who alſo ſpeaking of the ſwarmes of flies rendereth them by none other word, then the Hebrew word Arof, ſaying, that the word ſignifieth properly a mixture, and by the word Eraf, coming hereof, the mixt multitude that went out of Egypt with the Hebrews are afterwards ſet forth. In the Greek Tranſlation it is rendred κυνομυίαν, Muſcam Caninam, or κοινομυίαν omne genus Muſcarum, as it is in the vulgar Latine. Some think that hereby wilde beaſts of all ſorts are ſet forth, as Lions, Beares, Wolves, &c. But this cannot be, becauſe they came into their houſes, and if there had been a mixt multitude of ſuch creatures, they would ſoon have deſtroyed them all. R. Solomon thinketh, that they were venomous creatures; ſome, that they were Serpents and Scorpions. But moſt hold them to have been inſecta animalcula of divers ſorts, as Flies, Hornets, Waſps, &c. and therefore Calvin readeth it, examen inſectorum, ſo alſo Vatablus. Tremelius rendereth it, Colluvium animalium, the word in Hebrew is ערב, a mixture. Philo following the firſt recited Tranſlation of the Septuagint κυνομυίαν, ſaith, that it was the boldeſt of all creatures, moſt wiſely thus called by thoſe, that had moſt skill in names, from κυνὸς a Dog, and μυῖα a Flie, the one exceeding all birds in raſhneſſe, and the other all four-footed beaſts: for they come upon any creature withhout feare, and cannot be made to depart againe, till they be ſatisfied with fleſh and bloud, they ſtick ſo faſt to the skin, but now were they the more troubleſome, becauſe ſent, as a judgement.

Simlerus.

R. Sepha adi. Aben Ezra.

Calvin. Tremel. Philo de vita Moſis.

By which deſcription it ſeemeth, that he thought them to be ſuch flies, as we call Horſe-flies. But Jerome preferreth rather the other reading κοινομυίαν, all kinde of flies, yet Origen, Auguſt. Theodoret, and the reſt of the ancient Fathers follow the other reading, which becauſe it was in the dayes of Philo, who lived in Chriſts time, may well be thought to be moſt incorrupt. Joſephus ſaith, they were little beaſts, the like to which were never ſeen till that day, whereby many were deſtroyed, and diſeaſes were bred by their poiſon, neither could men by reaſon of them till their ground. Aquila rendereth it παγμυίαν Cajetan thinketh, that they were no flies, but little field-creatures, which came and filled and ate up the Land. But he is herein againſt all Writers, becauſe all agree, that they were flies, except two or three Rabbines. And whereas he ſaith, they filled and ate up the Land, he is contray to the Text, ſaying, that they came into and filled mens houſes. They were then certainly a mixt company of all ſorts of flies, annoying and troubling men only, but not killing, as Joſephus hath it. And this plague of flies was much like to that of Cinnim before, but that theſe did flie about mens houſes, and ſo came and ſtung and troubled them exceedingly, thoſe by creeping upon their bodies. Of the annoyance of flies read Pliny, who ſaith that the Elei worſhip the god Meiagron becauſe of the flyes, wherewith they are annoyed, bringing the peſtilence, and when they ſacrifice to him, they periſh the ſame day, whereupon that god was called by this name, as the hunter and deſtroyer of flies. Verſe 23. I will put a diviſion between my people and thine. The word is פדות redemption, I will put redemption between my people and thine, the meaning being all one, and therefore the Septuagint render it ſo, δώσω διαϛολὴ. Simlerus, I will put a diviſion of redemption. Verſe 26. It is not meet ſo to do, becauſe we ſhould ſacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians our God, &c. The Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth theſe words thus, We ſhould take the beaſt, vvhich the Egyptians worſhip, and can vve do this and they not ſtone us? For becauſe of the beaſts, which the Egyptians worſhipped, as Oxen and Sheep, but the Hebrewes killed in ſacrificing this was ſpoken; every thing,

Hieron. Epiſt. 135

Joſephus.

Aquila. Cajetan.

Plin. l.10. c.28.

Verſe 23.

Verſe 26.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

which is made a God, being their abomination, who make it such. See before *Gen.*43. As the life of the just, saith Augustine, is an abomination to the wicked, so the sacrifices of the Hebrews to the Egyptians. Rupertus saith, that their Faith, Justice, Piety and other vertues are meant by their sacrifices, which were an abomination to the Egyptians, but this is meerly Allegoricall.

August. qu.28. in Exod.

Ferus.

For the Allegory of these flies, divers bring divers: but that of Ferus is best; For having said, that this plague answered well to the divers sorts of oppressions, whereby the Egyptians had oppressed the Hebrews, here being divers sorts of flies brought to afflict them; he addeth, This plague rightly answereth to the sin against the fifth commandement: for children dishonouring their Parents are like the flie that corrupteth a Box of precious Ointment, they being so a disgrace to their Fathers house; and as flies suck out the bloud, so do these children their Fathers temporall estate; and as flies they soone perish and are cut off therefore, it being a grace of God towards such as honour Parents to grant them a long life; and whilest they live, they are commonly punished in their kinde with children like flies, that are disobedient unto, and vex and consume them. Augustine saith, they are like the Dog, whereof and of a fly this creature was composed. Isidore maketh these flies a type of those that are of dog-like conditions. Origen of the Cynicks, and Gregory of carnall and worldly cogitations disquieting the minde uncessantly.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1,2. Verse 3,4. Verse 5.6,7.

HEre Moses is bidden againe to go to Pharaoh, and threaten him with a murraine upon all sorts of their cattell, which was sent accordingly the next day, and they all died, but of the Hebrews not one, but Pharaoh was still hardened.

Neither this plague nor the former was brought by Moses his rod, but by God immediately, to shew, that there was no art Magick used herein, if they should suspect any to have been used before: so Cajetan. This plague upon their beasts, that carried burthens, was just for their over-loading the Hebrews with burthens, and their beasts, and haply they violently took some of them away from them. For these words, upon thy cattell which are in the field, in the vulgar Latine it is, upon thy fields, but erroneously, because in the originall it is, as was said before, and in the Septuagints Translation, and the Chaldee Paraphrast. But how is it said, that they all died, seeing in the next plague of biles the beasts are said to be smitten, and in the last the first-borne of man and beast? The common answer is, that by all are Synechdochically to be understood a very great company, so that they, which survived were counted as none in comparison of them that died, or else of al these sorts. Or that all the cattell, which died were of the Egyptians, and none of the Hebrews. But none of these Expositions do satisfie fully: for first, if some only of all sorts had died, and not all, or only the greatest part, Pharaoh would doubtlesse have desired Moses to pray for the removing of this plague, that the rest might be saved which he did not; and when the Hebrews cattell, which are opposed to these of the Egyptians, are spoken of, it is said, that not one of them died, all of the Egyptians then, and every one must needs be understood on the contrary side. Againe, to say that the meaning is, all that died were of the Egyptians, is both to pervert the words, & to extenuate this plague: because although all that died were theirs, yet if nothing else be meant by these words, the plague might haply be but small, a few only dying. I think therefore, that the true meaning is, all the cattell of the kindes nominated, that were in the fields, died, but not those in Cities and Towns, in houses or yards, because it is expressely said, the hand of the Lord shall be upon all the Cattell in the field, that is, upon the Herds and flocks kept in more

Cajetan.

Quest.

more ſpacious and open places: ſo likewiſe, v. 25. the hail was upon beaſts in the field. If it be demanded, why Pharaoh ſent to ſee whether it were ſo with the Hebrews cattel or no, which he is not ſaid to have done before in the time of other plagues? Anſw. Haply when Moſes told him in the former plague of ſuch a difference that ſhould be, he regarded it not at the firſt, and ſo ſent not to know, but now he thought he would try the truth of Moſes in this, not with a minde if he found it ſo to yield, but if otherwiſe, as he peradventure hoped, he might have ſome juſt cauſe of exception againſt Moſes. This circumſtance of the ſending of Pharaoh to ſee is omitted by the Septuagint, who have onely theſe words: Pharaoh ſeeing that not one of the Hebrews cattel was dead, hardened his heart. But both here and in divers other places they looked at the ſenſe, and not ſo much at the words. In that he is ſaid here to have hardened his heart, but in other places, that the Lord hardened it; Auguſtine noteth, that the originall of vices is in the will of man, not upon divers cauſes, but in a divers manner, according to the proper qualities which come from their wils. But becauſe it is ſaid, Pharaoh ſeeing that none of the Hebrews cattel died hardened his heart, he further inquireth, how he could upon this harden his heart, which was rather apt to mollifie it? and anſwereth, that this is ſpoken by way of aggravating his ſin, as if it had been ſaid, His obduration proceeded even hitherto, that ſeeing all things to make him relent, he was yet hardened, or as Ferus ſaith, he hardened his heart through envy againſt the Hebrews, who ſuſteined no loſſe. And this plague agreeth well to the ſixth Commandment: Thou ſhalt not kill, for they that kill are killed up like beaſts, and they periſh miſerably like beaſts both in body and ſoul, they are killed by men, for if ye bite and devour one another, ſaith the Apoſtle, ye ſhall be devoured one of another, and they periſh for ever by Gods judgement.

Quæſt.

Septuagint.

Auguſt. quæſt. 19 in Exod. 8. In voluntate hominis eſt origo vitiorum, moventur autem cauſis corda hominum, alia ſic, alia verò ſic etiam, non diverſis cauſis, ſed diverſo modo ſecundum proprias qualitates quæ ex voluntatibus veniunt. Quæſt. 30 Illa ingravatio etiam hucuſque progreſſa eſt. Ferus.

Then God commanded Moſes and Aaron to take aſhes, and to ſprinkle them towards heaven before Pharaoh, and ſo biles ſore and painfull were upon man and beaſt, and the Magicians could not ſtand before Moſes by reaſon hereof. It is worth the noting, how divers wayes the Lord dealeth with Pharaoh; ſometimes he worketh by Aaron, that Moſes might not be thought to do what he did by Art Magick; ſometimes as in this plague by Moſes, who muſt ſprinkle the aſhes towards heaven, that he might be acknowledged to be the chief, as bringing greateſt plagues, and doing that which was to be done in ſuperiour places, as Aaron did in inferiour, the river, the earth and duſt, over which he ſtretched the rod; ſometimes the Lord uſeth neither of them, leſt they ſhould be counted gods, as Paul and Barnabas were; ſometimes by the rod, to ſhew that he is of all-ſufficient power to work by the weakeſt means; ſometime without, to ſhew that there was no vertue, adhering to the rod, but all of God; ſometime he uſed them, and did not ſtrike immediately, leſt men ſhould onely in generall acknowledge that God can do all things, and not ſeeing any ſuch power to be given to theſe men contemn them: thus Ferus, who alſo ſaith, that God having begun with leſſer plagues, in this Chap. proceedeth to greater, from annoying them with lice and flies, to the ſtriking of them in their goods and then in their bodies, to ſhew that if we be not brought to repentance by leſſer judgements, we ſhall be deſtroyed and conſumed by greater, according to that of the Lord, Go thy way, and ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing befall thee. Philo ſpeaketh ſomewhat like to that of Ferus, noting that Moſes muſt ſprinkle theſe aſhes, ſaying, Both the brethren muſt take them up, and Moſes onely ſprinkle them, becauſe they were taken from the earth, the charge of laying plagues whereupon was committed to Aaron and to Moſes from the aire and heaven. Saint Auguſtine alſo by enquiring onely ſeemeth to reſolve it in the ſame manner, becauſe Moſes was as God in heaven. This plague was by handfuls of aſhes taken from the furnace, as the Hebrews had been made to their great toil to burn bricks in the fiery furnace, a juſt thing with God to plague the Egyptians now by that whereby they had plagued others. The Hebrew

Verſe 8,9.
Verſe 10,11
Verſe 12.

Philo.

Auguſt. quæſt. 30. in Exod.

Hebrew word is כיור ſuffiation, ſo that being rendered word for word it is, Take your hands full of the ſuffiation or blowing of the furnace: that is, the lighteſt aſhes comming of the ſparkles raiſed by the blowing thereof. Auguſtine and Vatablus render it favillam, hot embers, ſo likewiſe the Chaldee Paraphraſt, the Septuagint, and the vulgar Latine, aſhes. And it ſhall become duſt upon all the land of Egypt, that is, ſaith Simlerus, clouding over all the land, as when a duſt is raiſed, thickening the air. Theſe few aſhes by the power of God made a duſt in the aire every where throughout the land, which falling upon mens bodies, and beaſts bred in them ulcers, and mattery ſwellings, having a kinde of hot burning quality, ſaith Philo, whereby they were miſerably vexed, as by inflammations and exulcerations all over their bodies, ſeeming to be but one ſore, even from the head to the foot. And hereby the Magicians being ſmitten alſo, were made through anguiſh to depart, ſo that hence-forth they ſtood not by Pharaoh to animate him any more, which ſheweth his obſtinacy and malice to be the greater. For that hitherto they withſtood Moſes, notwithſtanding their confeſſion made, Chap. 8. 19. I ſhewed before upon that place. Laſtly, here the Lord is ſaid to have hardened Pharaohs heart, but not after any of the former plagues, he hardened himſelfe firſt, and now for a juſt puniſhment, the Lord by withdrawing all grace from him hardeneth him; ſo that he did not ſo much as flee to the prayers of Moſes, as before; but ſtood ſtoutly to the enduring of this judgement to the uttermoſt, although he and his people ſhould have periſhed under it.

Augu?.
Vatablus.
Simlerus.
Philo de vita Moſis.

For the Allegory, Ferus applieth it beſt, ſaying, that it anſwereth to the ſin againſt the ſeventh Commandement, forbidding Adultery. For that and all fornication and fleſhly uncleanneſſe here forbidden commeth from the fire of evill concupiſcence, and therefore the body is tormented with filthy diſeaſes, as with the burning of fire which abound outwardly, as luſts do inwardly, and are inflicted in new kindes, as new kindes of luſts and wayes to ſtirre them up are deviſed. So that it is rightly ſaid by the Apoſtle, He that committeth fornication, ſinneth againſt his own body. Thus alſo Proſper and Rupertus. What is the Adulterer burnt with the ſulphureous fire of luſt, but as aſhes out of a chimney? For all Adulterers, ſaith the Prophet, are as a furnace heat to boil withall, Hoſ. 7. and the aſhes are taken and ſprinkled towards heaven, Ulcers hence ariſing; when the Adulterer is taken from the burning of his Adultery commited to judgement from heaven, and being all over ulcerous and ſwelling through the puniſhment, he beareth everlaſting burning both in ſoul and body.

Ferus.
1 Cor. 6. 18.
Rupertus.
Proſper.
Quid eſt adulter combuſtus libidinis igne ſulphureo, niſi cinis de camino? ut Hoſ. 7. Cinis de camino tollitur & in cœlum ſpargitur, fiuntque ulcera veſicarum turgentium. quia adulter de perpetrati adulterii incendio ad cœleſte judicium rapitur, æternâq; pœnâ turgens, & totus ulcerоſus ſempiternum animâ & corpore portabit incendium.

Then the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Riſe in the morning and ſtand before Pharaoh, and ſay to him, &c. Verſe 14. For I will at this time ſend all my plagues upon thine heart, and upon thy people and ſervants, that thou mayeſt know that there is none like me in all the earth. Verſe 15. For now I will ſmite thee and thy people with peſtilence, that thou mayeſt be cut off. Verſe 16. And indeed for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, to ſhew in thee my power, and that my Name may be declared, &c. Verſe 17. Doeſt thou yet exalt thy ſelfe againſt my people, not to let them go?

Verſe 13.
Verſe 14.
Verſe 15.
Verſe 16.
Verſe 17.
Simlerus.
Calvin.

Pharaoh having been hitherto hardened, God ſendeth now unto him, as at ſometimes before, but more terribly then ever, threatening all his plagues at once, which ſome, ſaith Simlerus, referre to the next judgement, becauſe it conſiſted of many particulars, but others, to all the judgements following which he liketh beſt: ſo likewiſe Calvin. And whereas he ſaith, At once I will ſend them; his meaning is onely before he made an end of plaguing him; for although in the very next plague there were divers terrible things together, yet it cannot be ſaid that they were all the plagues which the Lord purpoſed to ſend, but part onely. And he threateneth to ſend theſe plagues upon his heart, intimating the terrour, wherewith he ſhould be inwardly taken, when he ſhould hear the thunder-cracks, and ſee the fire falling down, as if the day of the laſt Judgement had been come, and feel the darkneſſe, &c. And he addeth, that he might know, that there was none like him in all the earth, to beat down his vain confidence in the gods of Egypt.

The

The next words, Verse 15. are in Hebrew, For now I have extended my hand, and I could have destroyed both thee and thy people with the plague. Agreeably to which the Chaldee Paraphrast thus: I was nigh the sending of the plague of my fortitude, and smiting thee and thy people with death, and so thou shouldest have been destroyed from off the earth. They that follow the common reading, Now I will stretch out my hand and strike thee, &c. refer the plague here spoken of to the last destruction of the first-born, and of all in the Red-sea. But this is neither so warrantable in the reading, neither doth it so well agree with the words following, whereas the other agreeth excellently, when I smote the cattel with a plague that they all died, I could as easily have smitten thee and thy people. But for this cause I have set thee, that thou mayest see my power, &c. that is, I would not destroy thee at once, but by smiting thee at sundry times and divers wayes, that by multiplying thy punishments I might make a deeper impression in mens mindes of my power and severity against disobedience, that others may ever after fear to do the like, and that no god may be thought comparable to me, or worthy the name of a God but I alone. Some as Simlerus saith, expound these words, as if he had said, For this cause I have set thee up for King, raising thee to so great dignity: but the words have reference rather to Gods counsell of old, because not now first, but from the beginning Pharaoh was set for an example, as Saint Paul applieth it, entreating of election and reprobation, Rom 9.17. And doest thou yet lift up thy self, &c? The Hebrew word signifieth either to lift up or to tread under foot. The Chaldee Paraphrast rendereth it, Doest thou force to bondage? how darest thou after all the former plagues brought upon thee to do thus still?

Behold to morrow at this time I will send a most grievous hail, the like to which hath not been in Egypt, &c. Hail cometh for the most part of naturall causes, and sometimes terrible hailes are noted in Chronologies to have faln, as in France, Anno 825. in the dayes of Lodowick, son to Charles the Great, it is said that an hail fell, which destroyed many, both men and beasts. But the hail now threatened was most miraculous. First, because it fell in Egypt, that was not commonly subject to Tempests. For hail, saith Josephus, was never seen before in Egypt, and Philo saith, that Egypt is so hot, that it suffereth no winter, being neer the torrid Zone, and so there are not there any winterly Tempests, but onely neer the Sea there fall in the more winterly time some thin showers, and few, but never upon Memphis, where the Kings Court is, and the cause of this is partly the heat, and partly the overflowing of the River Nilus all the Summer time, and consuming the Clouds. And what he saith of Rain and Hail, Pliny saith of Thunder, it is neither in places very cold, nor very hot; not in the cold, because if there by any exhalation of a fiery vapour, the cold extinguisheth it; not in the hot, because hot and dry vapours of the earth do never make any other but thin and weak Clouds; for the first reason Scythia is free from thunder, and Egypt for the second. Secondly, here was hail now mingled with fire, hot and cold together, the Rain of hail not extinguishing the fire, nor the fire melting the hail, but both coming with a like violence upon all things. Thirdly, this was all over the land of Egypt, so as stormes commonly are not, but in some part: yet Goshen was free. Fourthly, the day and the hour was set so as never any Astrologer could do. And therefore the Egyptians could not but acknowledge it to be a judgement from God being angry with them. If it be demanded, how it can be said, that there should be such an hail, as was never seen in Egypt since it was built, if there never fell any hail there in times past? for in such a Countrey any little hail was such. I answer, in the more Northerly parts there fell some little raines, and haply hailes sometimes; and by these is the comparison made.

If it be further demanded, why the Lord gave the Egyptians warning to take in their cattel out of this danger, seeing he sent it for a judgement to destroy men, cattel and all things, that were in the fields? To this it may be diversely answered, as Theodoret hath it, that God did thus both that he might mingle

Verse 15.

Chald. Paraphrast.

Verse 16.

Simlerus.

Verse 17.

Verse 18.

Joseph lib. 2. Antiqu. Philo lib. 1. de vita Mosis.

Plin. lib. 2. c. 50.

Quest.

Quest.

Theod. quest. 21 in Exod.

mingle mercy with judgement, to ſhew how full of mercy he is, and that they which feared God amongſt them, might be ſpared, and laſtly, becauſe heathen people thought, that divers Gods were over divers things, ſome over the aire, ſome over the earth, ſome over the water, or fire, ſome over mountains and ſome over plains, according to which the Syrians ſaid, The Iſraelits God was the God of the mountaines, and not of the plaines, therefore God to ſhew himſelfe to be the God of all things, that he only made, and ruleth over Aire, and Water, and Earth, and Fire, and all things, would have them know, that he puniſhed them thus, when this fire and haile ſhould come, and feare before him alone. And yet this feare, whereby any of them feared God, may be ſuſpected to have been only a ſlaviſh feare, becauſe although they eſcaped this judgement, that feared now, yet they were afterwards again altogether puniſhed, and ſpoiled, and drowned. The feare of God, although it be not ſincere, doth ſometimes profit for the eſcaping of ſome evills, but never for the eſcaping of finall moſt horrible deſtruction in the Abyſſe of hell fire.

Calvin. Note.

For the Allegory, Auguſtine ſaith, that this plague anſwereth well to the ſeventh commandement againſt theft, becauſe what a man getteth by thieving upon earth, is loſt from Heaven; he that ſtealeth getteth a Garment, but loſeth credit by a judgement from Heaven; where there is gain, there is loſſe, viſibly gaine, inviſibly loſſe; &c. This alſo is followed by Ferus, noting moreover, that this puniſhment ſuited with the ſin of the Egyptians, they by withdrawing ſtraw from the Hebrews made them wander over the fields to gather ſtubble, now their fields are ſmitten, and themſelves therein, if they haſtened not out into the houſe for ſhelter. They had ſtolne from the Hebrews, although not by taking theirs from them, yet by damnifying them, and therefore now they were damnified, and for the like ſinne we often ſuffer in the fruits of the earth, and ſeldome do ill gotten goods come to the third heire. And which is worſt of all, God ſendeth his haile into the heart and conſcience, wherein grace is deſtroyed, when goods are unjuſtly gotten. Moreover, he ſaith, that this was the greateſt judgement hitherto inflicted, whereby not only beaſts, but alſo men periſhed, ſo as they had not done before, and therefore it is ſet forth in more words. And worthy it is to be dilated upon, becauſe it figured out the perdition of hell. 1 As it came with a noiſe of thunder, ſo the laſt judgement ſhall come with a great noiſe. 2 As here were divers things together for puniſhment, ſo then ſhall be all manner of miſeries, Pſ. 11. fire and haile, ſtorme and tempeſt. 3 All in the fields are ſmitten, ſo all out of the Church. 4 There was not the like haile to that, ſince Egypt was a Nation, ſo there was never the like puniſhment to that of Hell fire.

Auguſt. Quod per furtum contra Dei præceptum ſeducis, de cœlo perdis. Qui furatur, acquirit veſtem, ſed cœleſti judicio perdit fidem; ubi lucrum, ibi damnum, viſibiliter lucrum, inviſibiliter damnum.
Ferus.

Verſe 27. Pharaoh being thus plagued acknowledgeth himſelfe to be a ſinner, and God to be juſt, but only out of feare, not true penitency, as the ſequel doth declare. Entreat the Lord, (for it is enough) that there be no more mighty thunderings and haile, &c. The Hebrew is very obſcure here, being word for word, and much if the Thunder of God and Haile be not, or from the being of Thunder, &c. and therefore it is rendered by Simlerus, & multum tonitrua Dei & grandinem fuiſſe, by Calvin, Magnum erit, ſi non ſint tonitrua Dei & grando. The vulgar Latine leaving out the word much, Orate Dominum, ut deficiant tonitrua Dei & grando. Tremel. as our Tranſlation hath it. The moſt agreeable to the originall is to render it, pray to the Lord, that the thunder of God and haile may be no more, and I will count it much, or notwithſtanding my loſſes hereby, I will count it a great favour, and let the people go.

Verſe 28.

Verſe 29. Then Moſes ſaid, When I ſhall be gone out of the City, I will ſtretch out my hands to the Lord, &c. why would he not do it in the City? ſome think, becauſe the City was full of Idolatry, and he by going out would ſhew, that the worſhip of God was not to be mixed with their prophane ſuperſtitions, which was the cauſe, why he required leave for the people to go out three dayes into the Wilderneſſe to ſacrifice. And he would be out of Pharaohs ſight, when he prayed thus to taxe his infidelity, as moſt oppoſite to faithfull prevailing Queſt. Simlerus.

Prayer:

Prayer: and theſe reaſons are good, if we further adde, that Pharaoh ſeeing Moſes free from danger in the fields might be moved the more to reverence him, as ſingularly protected by the Lord, when none elſe going out could eſcape.

But for thee and thy ſervants, I know, that ye will not yet feare the Lord. Verſe 30. Moſes knew by revelation, that Pharaoh was appointed to perdition, therefore he ſpeaketh thus, meaning that they would not feare, to become truly penitent. Moſes in ſtretching out his hands without the City, ſaith Ferus, was a type of Chriſt ſuffering without the City.

The Barley and the Flax were ſmitten, but not the Wheat and Rie, becauſe they were within the grownd. Verſe 31,32 The courſe of things growing there was contrary to that with us, becauſe, as is moſt probable, they having but one ſeed-time for all manner of graine, when the grounds began to be drie from the overflowing of Nilus, and therefore ſowing all graines at the ſame time, Barley, which groweth ſooneſt, came up firſt, and ripened firſt, and Wheat afterwards.

Moſes, according to his promiſe prayeth, but Pharaoh is ſtill hardened, when the rod was taken off, as in former times. Verſe 33,34 Verſe 35.

CHAP. X.

THen the Lord bade Moſes go againe to Pharaoh, but he ſaith, that he hath hardned his heart, that he might do more wonders, and that they might tell their children afterwards of them, &c. Verſe 1,2.

God reſpecteth the good of his people in multiplying evills upon Pharaoh and his people ſeeking hereby the more to excite them to all faithfull and carefull obedience. And their children and childrens children muſt be inſtructed in theſe things throughout all Generations. To neglect the inſtruction of children is a moſt ſinfull neglect in Parents, contrary to Gods expreſſe charge given unto them. Note. The word tranſlated, which I have done in Egypt, v. 2. is התעללתי, ſignifying properly, as Simlerus hath it, to illude, becauſe theſe judgements were brought upon the Egyptians to their illuſion and ignominy, whereby God did but as it were for a long time play with them, ſeeing by one judgement at the firſt he could eaſily have deſtroyed them all, and ſo have made way for his people to depart. Simlerus. The vulgar Latine hath it contriverim.

Then Moſes and Aaron came to Pharaoh and ſaid, How long doſt thou refuſe to humble thy ſelfe before me, &c? Pharaoh had humbled himſelfe before the Lord, but becauſe his humiliation was not to reformation, it is counted as no humiliation, whereas the judgements of God ſhould cauſe every one to humble himſelfe to ſubjection unto the holy will of God, and not to ſpurne againſt it any more. Verſe 3.

The judgement threatened now is of Locuſts, to conſume what had eſcaped the haile, and to annoy them in their houſes, and in every place, and ſo Moſes went out. Verſe 4,5,6.

The Egyptians had grievouſly oppreſſed the Hebrews, by whoſe means they had in times paſt been preſerved from famine, and therefore it was juſt, that they ſhould now be puniſhed with a deprivation of all growing fruits to the famiſhing of them: to this effect, Calvin. And becauſe Pharaoh had ſet Exactours over them, ſaith Ferus, now theſe Locuſts are ſent as Exactours over the Egyptians. Calvin. Ferus. And this judgement is ſet forth in many words, as the former was, becauſe Locuſts do uſually annoy many places of the world, eating up all green things, as in Syrenaica, Syria and Lemnos, where the Inhabitants make Warres, as it were againſt them continually, as Simlerus noteth. Simlerus. But here the time is appointed, to morrow, at once altogether, their multitude exceedeth, they fill houſes alſo, they were ſuch as the like to them had never been ſeen before, and they make an end of all growing things, ſo as never was done before in any place. It is ſaid, they ſhould cover the ground, Chald. Paraphraſt. the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, They ſhould hide the brightneſſe of the Sun from ſhining upon the earth. The Locuſt is called Rab in Hebrew, ſignifying many, becauſe of their multitude; in Latine Locuſta, ab uſtione locorum, from burning, becauſe what green things they touch, they burn as it were and conſume, as alſo by eating. In the Pſalmes not onely Locuſts, but Graſſehoppers are ſaid to have been brought, which are a kinde of Locuſt without wings. The Locuſt is great and winged, flying like fowls in the air, and making a noiſe with their wings, as Pliny ſaith, and in their flying they darken the Sun: and for greatneſſe, There have been, ſaith he, in India ſeen, ſome three foot long, whoſe thighs when they have been dried, have ſerved for Savves. They vvill fly over huge Seas many dayes together ſuffering hunger, till they come at a Countrey vvhich they may feed upon; but this is thought to be a plague comming from the vvrath of the gods: they cover the corne vvith a direfull Cloud, burning many things by touching, and eating up all the reſidue, and even eating through the doores of houſes. They came often from Africa into Italy, cauſing Famines. In Cyreniaca there is a Law for the deſtroying of them three times in the year. 1 In their egges. 2 In their young. 3 When any eſcaping are grown up. In Lemnos a certain number of them killed is appointed for every one to bring to the Magiſtrates, and they worſhip Caddowes for chaſing them away. And in Syria they fight againſt them. They are ſometimes deſtroyed by being blown away with a winde in great companies into the Sea. Yet to the Parthians theſe are grateſull meat. Thus Pliny. And this may ſerve for ſome illuſtration of this Judgement, and of ſome things ſpoken before. A ſilly poor creature this is in compariſon of man, and yet they are called Gods mighty Hoſt by the Prophet, in reſpect of men priding themſelves in their infirmity, and daring to lift up their heads againſt God, when as even little flies can ſubject them, ſaith Rupertus. For Moſes his going out from Pharaoh, and not ſtaying to hear his anſwer, this was doubtleſſe done with a kinde of indignation at the unmolliſiable hardneſſe of Pharaohs heart, which he well perceived by ſome outward ſignes, ſo that Moſes could not endure to ſtay any longer to expect his anſwer. They which thinke that nothing elſe is meant, but that he went backward after the manner of the Egyptians, and of the Turkes at this day, who for reverence go backward, till they are out of the Emperours preſence, are much deceived: for he regarded not the King to do ſo much reverence to him, as the words which he uſed to him do declare, and the word פָּנָה ſignifieth nothing elſe. but that he turned himſelſe away, as making haſte to be gone.

Pſal.105.34.

Plin.lib.11.c.29

Joel 2.

Rupert.lib.1. in Exod.c.38. Fortitudo mea, inquit, Locuſta & vrzonus, non reſpectu ſuæ naturæ virtutum, ſed baſiſimorum comparatione hominum in furiam inſolentiæ ſuperbientium, qui cervicem erigunt contra Deum, quam patiei ſubjiciunt

Verſe 7.

And his ſervants ſaid, How long ſhall this man be an offence unto us, or a ſnare, מוֹקֵשׁ ? knoweſt thou not yet, that Egypt is deſtroyed? In Hebrew, Wilt thou firſt know that Egypt is deſtroyed? The Septuagint for (this man) have (this thing) in the neuter gender, the word זֶה may be expounded both wayes, either of Moſes, or of that obſtinate reſolution of Pharaoh, which was turned as it were into a ſnare, to make them fall and periſh. Pharaohs ſervants now begin to yield, but not out of any true penitency, but for fear of utter ruine. If any man ſhall marvail, that none offered violence to Moſes in all this time, it is to be thonght that ſeeing him ſo powerfull, none durſt, leſt it ſhould have turned to his own preſent deſtruction, and God doubtleſſe reſtreined them that they could not.

Septuagint.

Verſe 8,9.
Verſe 10,11

Then Moſes was brought back to Pharaoh, & he yielded to let them go, that were men, but none elſe, as Moſes required, for he required to go with old and young, & with their cattel, wherefore he was threatened, & thruſt out from Pharaohs preſence. Once before he yielded that they ſhould do ſacrifice in that land, now being more terrefied, he yieldeth, that the men ſhall go forth, & after another plague, that all ſhall go, but onely their cattel. Reprobates never agree to all things required of them by the Lord, but to ſome onely, as alſo Herod afterwards. For the words uſed by Pharaoh, The Lord be ſo with you, as I will let you go: This, ſaith Calvin, is an ſcornfull ſpeech, as if he had ſaid, Then ye may well ſay, the Lord is he

Note.

Verſe 10
Calvin.

that

that leadeth you forth, when I suffer you to depart upon these termes, which I mean never to do. He doth not onely herein mock at them, but at their God, as if he could not bring them out without his leave. Similerus hath another Exposition thus, The Lord be so with you and no otherwise, as I will let you go, as if it were spoken by way of imprecation. When I recount the saying of Moses to Pharaoh at the first, Exod. 5.3. Let us go and do sacrifice to the Lord, lest he fall upon us with pestilence or with the sword. It seemeth to me that Pharaoh in saying thus had respect to that, whereby was implied, that the Lord might be with them, and not against them, as if he had said, If your welfare dependeth upon your going to do sacrifice, let the Lord deal with you, as he will; for if ye will not go but with all things, as ye say, I will never suffer you to go, and so ye shall lie open to his Judgements. Look to it, for evill is before you: this is spoken by way of commination, as if he had said, Ye shall by and by smart for your insolency, and then ye shall see, how vainly ye have trusted in the Lord, who shall not be able to deliver you out of my hands: to this effect Calvin. Or else, the meaning may be, The evill of pestilence or of the sword, which ye said ye feared from your God, is before you or ready to fall upon you: for if he had threatened them, he would likewise have by and by attempted to do somewhat against them in his rage, which he did not, but onely thrust them out from his presence. Some referre it to the evill that was covertly in their hearts, as if pretending onely to go to sacrifice he had by this their demand found out that they had a secret purpose to revolt altogether from his obedience. And therefore he saith, that he granteth as much as they at the first desired, that the men onely should go, laying the fault of the difference now upon their inconstancy, whereas Moses did not indeed nominate at the first, who should go, but indefinitely required, saying, Let us go. Pharaoh would by all means keep their children, as pledges of their return. And he cast them out from the presence of Pharaoh, that is, he commanding the Officers carried them out with indignation, so that Pharaoh did now much more increase his sinne.

Sir Lanc.

Calvin.

Verse 11.

Then Moses stretching out his rod, the Lord brought an East-winde all that day and night, and in the morning it brought Locusts, &c. For an East-winde the vulgar Latine hath it, Ventum Urentem; the Septuagint, a South-winde, and Philo likewise, who saith, it was a South-winde, which in respect of Egypt was a burningwinde more then any other: but the Hebrew is קָדִים, an East-vvinde, and therefore I marvell that many Expositours should say, that it is not set dovvn, vvhat vvinde brought them, but onely vvhat vvinde carried them avvay; onely Tostatus conjectureth, that it vvas an East-vvinde, because contrarivvise the West-vvinde, vvhich vvas cold and moist, as the East is hot and dry, and burning, ridded the Land of them again. But they vvere deceived by the vulgar Latine. The East-vvinde of Egypt, saith Calvin, is vvholesome and milde, yet somevvhat stormy in respect of Judea, and therefore it vvas the more miraculous, that it should produce such an effect. But vvhether it vvere so or not, the coming of these Locusts vvas plainly miraculous, as hath been already shevved. Then Pharaoh hastened to call Moses and Aaron, and said, I have sinned against the Lord your God and you, &c. If it be demanded, whether Pharaoh was not now truly penitent, or wherein he was defective? Calvin answereth well, that in confessing his sinnes and craving pardon he was onely moved with fear of Gods Judgements, harbouring malice and impiety still in his heart, he confessed not in sincerity, as one seeing into his inward corruption, & throughly shaking it off. Confession of sin without a good purpose to leave it, saith Ierus, is no true repentance. That slavish fear wrought onely with him appeareth, because in the next words he desired Moses to pardon him, and to pray to the Lord to remove that death, not his sin, but the judgement under which he now trembled. Such was the repentance also of Ahab, Judas, or Antiochus Epiphanes, Maximianus and Licinius. For his confession, I have sinned against the Lord that is, by refusing to obey

Verse 12,13
Verse 14,15

Philo.

Tostatus.

Calvin.

Verse 16,17
Quest.

Calvin.

Verse 17.

bey his command, and against you, that is, by using you so contumeliously, and casting you out yesterday, forgive I pray you my sin, that is, which I have committed against you, and pray to the Lord, that my sin against him being remitted, this plague may cease.

Verse 18,19 Verse 20. Calvin. Simlerus.

Then Moses went out and prayed, and the Lord sent a strong West-winde, and took away the Locusts, and cast them into the Red-sea, &c. Moses prayed not, because he thought Pharaoh now converted, for he heard the contrary before from the Divine Oracle, but for Gods glory, and to make way to other plagues to follow. The Red-sea, in Hebrew ים סוף so called from Bul-rushes and Whirlwindes; it was Sinus Arabicus, saith Calvin, that is, otherwise called, Mare Erythreum, saith Simlerus.

The Allegory. August. Rupert. lib.1. cap.33.

For the Allegory, This plague, saith Augustine, answereth to the ninth Commandement; Thou shalt not bear false witnesse, for as Locusts, so false witnesses do bite and devour, as the Apostle noteth, Gal. 5.15. Rupertus saith, that Hereticks and all that speak lies, are hereby typified, as also, Apoc. 9. the force of the lying of Hereticks is set forth by Locusts comming out of the smoak of the bottomlesse pit. For as Locusts are not carried with their own flying, but with the winde to the destruction of the Egyptians, so all false witnesses, whether in the Court or in the Council, when they bring false testimonies out of the Scripture against the faith of Christ, are lifted up & carried with the stinke of Diabolicall pride to the destruction of their hearers, and finally, of themselves also. Calvin saith, that they set forth fanaticall men with their impious errours, and infection, destroying the people in those Countreys, where the Pharaohs of this age do hinder with their cruel threatenings the pure worship and service of God. Ferus saith, that by this Commandement we are forbidden to refrein from speaking evill with our tongues, which because we do not, the world is filled with Locusts, one kinde of which are flatterers, another slanderers, a third railers, and a fourth hereticall Preachers and these waste and spoil our goods, our body, good name, and soul. And we are all as Locusts soon living, and when we are carried aloft by the wings of pride soon dead. And Gregory saith, Flatterers are like Locusts, because by immoderately praising the good deeds of the worldly, they corrupt their mindes by inclining them to good workes through the affectation of transitory praises, as the Locusts spoiled the fruits of Egypt by lighting upon them.

Calvin. Ferus. Gregor. Moral. lib.31.c.20. Quid Locustæ perficiunt, quæ plus quàm cætera minima animantia fructibus nocent, nisi linguas adulantium, quæ terrenarum hominum mentes, si quando bona aliqua proferre conspiciunt, hæc inconsideratius laudando corrumpunt, &c?

Then God bade Moses stretch out his hand towards heaven, that there might be darknesse in all the land of Egypt, which might be felt: and he did so, &c. Pharaoh had sinned by obscuring Gods glory, yea, as much as in him lay, extinguishing it by his impious contempt lastly shewed, and herein did bewray horrible darknesse to be in his understanding, and therefore this plague was aptly sent as suitable to his sinne, the Sun and all heavenly lights denying their usuall light unto him and his people, and they being all given over to horrible darknesse, as Calvin noteth. This plague of darknesse, as Ferus saith well, was the most uncomfortable of any that had yet been sent, both because now they could have no comfort of one anothers presence as they had had in the time of all other plagues, and because it was a representation of the most hideous darknesse of hell, wherein the damned shall have no comfort from one another, neither shall they be able to flirre out of that place for ever.

Verse 22,23 Calvin. Ferus.

Hels torments a concourse of all these plagues.

But the torments of hell shall consist of all the rest of Egypts plagues also, of destruction for ever set forth by bloud, perpetuall horrour by frogs, perpetuall vexation by the lice, the worme that never dieth by the flyes, a perpetual subtraction of all help by the death of the beasts, a continual paine in the body by the boiles, a perpetuall terrour by the haile, a perpetuall want of all good by the Locusts, and a perpetuall death by the death of their first-borne, causing crying and lamentation for ever. This plague of darknesse is thus described by Philo. The day being faire was suddenly overspread with darkness, either by a greater Eclipse of the Sun then ordinary, or by continuall thick Clouds gathered together, or by a great constipation shutting out the Sun-

Philo.

beames

beames for three dayes together, as if it had been all one continall night. Then the Egyptians either ſtirred not, or being urged by the neceſſity of nature went feeling after the manner of the blinde: for the fire was either by the aire troubled put out, or elſe was overcome by the thick darkneſſe, ſo that although they had eyes, they could ſee no more, then as if they had been blinde. And being deprived of the benefit of this ſenſe, they could neither ſpeak nor heare, nor take meat, but in ſilence lay vexed with famine all this time. In the book of Wiſdome alſo it is ſpoken to the ſame effect, They were ſhut up in their houſes the Priſoners of darkneſſe, and fettered by the bands of a long night, and it is added, they were horribly aſtoniſhed and troubled with ſtrange apparitions, for noiſes of water falling downe ſounded about them, and ſad viſions with heavy countenances appeared unto them; No power of fire might give them light, &c. whereby we may partly ſee, how the doubts ariſing here may be reſolved; As how it became thus dark? and the darkneſſe could be called palpable, ſeeing that belongeth to the ſenſe of ſeeing, this of feeling? both the Sun-beames were withheld by a divine power, and thick vapours troubling the aire did ariſe, not only cauſing darkneſſe, but thickneſſe in the aire, ſo that it might be felt: thus alſo Toſtatus, Lyranus and Cajetan and Calvin. Paul. Burgenſis, who will have only the thickening of the aire the cauſe of this darkneſſe, erreth groſſely in ſaying, that it was ſo thickned, that no man could go in it, for then they could not have breathed, and ſo they ſhould ſoone have been all ſtifled. The ordinary gloſſe ſaith, It is Hyperbolically called palpable darkneſſe, the interlinear gloſſe, that the want of light from the Sun was the only cauſe of that darkneſſe, but then how could it be called palpable? the words tranſlated darkneſſe which may be felt, are ימש חשך, which may be turned alſo actively, he ſhall feel, or it ſhall feele the darkneſſe, meaning Egypt, that is, the people therein, the word ימש ſignifieth alſo to take away, as if it were meant, that this ſhould take away the darkneſſe of the night, it being nothing in compariſon of this, and to go back, as if it were meant, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, that it ſhould remaine, when the night darkneſſe was gone away. Againe, if it be demanded, whether they had not the fire or candle-light in this time? It is anſwered no, for the vapours were ſo thick, as that they would not ſuffer any light to burne to give them light. The Septuagint to ſhew, that no candle could keep light, have theſe words, There was darkneſſe, and a whirlwinde or tempeſt, which Toſtatus following ſaith; if there was at that time any fire amongſt the Egyptians, it was extinguiſhed by the ſtormy tempeſt of the aire, or reſtreined by God from giving light; but I preferre the former, which is according to Philo, and the book of Wiſdome.

If it be further demanded, whether theſe words are ſtrictly to be underſtood, No man moved out of his place for three dayes? It is anſwered, yes, becauſe the darkneſſe was ſo great, that they were hereby tied as by chains in Priſon in their houſes, and there they durſt not ſtir neither, they were ſo terrefied with viſions, as Lyranus and Toſtatus have it, following that Wiſd. 17. But Calvin and Simlerus hold, that when it is ſaid, that they could not go out of their places, nothing elſe is meant, but that they went not forth about any buſineſſe, but only as men might do in a dark night, as neceſſity inforceth them. And Cajetan thinketh, that it is meant, they moved not out of their place by the light coming from above, but by lights made with fire they might ſee to go. The literall ſenſe may ſtand very well, and therefore no need is there to flee to figures, eſpecially the judgement being hereby leſſened, whereas it was doubtleſſe every way moſt grievous. Laſtly, if it be demanded, how Pharaoh could then ſend any for Moſes? It is anſwered, that he could not, whileſt this darkneſs continued, but at three dayes end it beginning to ceaſe, he ſent, and therefore no mention is made of his deſiring Moſes to pray that it might be taken away, or of the ceaſing thereof afterwards, ſo Lyranus alſo and Toſtatus. If it be objected, Pharaoh being delivered would never have ſent for him. I anſwere, he ſaw that now the Lord began to ſend plagues Wiſdom 17. 2,3.&c.

Queſt. 1.

Lyranus. Toſtatus. Calvin. P. Burgenſis.

Gloſſ ordin. Gloſ. Interlin.

Queſt. 2.

Septuagint. Toſtatus.

Queſt. 3.

Lyranus. Toſtatus. Calvin. Simlerus.

Cajetan.

Queſt. 4.

Lyranus. Toſtatus.

Object.

plagues without warning & remembring that Moses had threatened all Gods plagues against him, till he was cut off; he feared some greater judgement to come forthwith, although he were now delivered, and therefore to prevent it, he sent and offered to let them go with their little ones also. I like not therefore that of Calvin, Cajetan, Simlerus, &c. who will not have the words of not moving from their place understood, but as was said before, and that they went feeling in the dark, to finde out Moses, or by candle-light. A most admirable thing in the time of this plague was that light was to the Hebrews in all their habitations, because they dwelt mixt with the Egyptians in Goshen, and so in one house there was light, and in another adjoyning darkness that might be felt. Verse 24.

Quest. If it be demanded, how they knew the time to be three dayes, seeing there was nothing to distinguish the dayes? I answere, the Hebrews knew it by their light during all that time, as at other times. Verse 25,26

Pharaoh yielding now more then hitherto, viz. that their little ones should go with them, but not their cattell, Moses standeth for the going of all their cattel with them, saying, that they would not leave an hoof behinde, because therewith they must do sacrifice, and knew not, till they came there, what number of sacrifices the Lord would have them offer. Pharaoh haply thought, that having their cattel still, he should not lose all, or else that the poore men would be glad to come back againe rather then lose them; but Moses will have all, or stay still to plague him further. Verse 27.

Pharaoh then was hardened againe, and threatened death to Moses, if ever he saw his face any more; unto which he willingly consenteth, neither did he see him indeed, because when the next plague was sent they were urged to depart in haste. Verse 28,29

For the Allegory, this plague agreeth fitly, saith Augustine, and after him, Ferus, to the 10th Commandement Thou shalt not covet thy Neighbours wife: for he is in darkness of minde like a brute beast, that lusteth after his Neighbours wife; and darkness is upon him so, as that he seeth not to regard God, his conscience, honour, or losse, or his Neighbours rage thus stirred up against him. For any other darkness in respect of grace typified hereby, see before. August. Ferus.

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. AND the Lord said to Moses, I will yet bring one plague upon Pharaoh and upon Egypt, afterwards he will let you go, &c.

These words together with those v. 2, 3. come in by a Parenthesis, as conteining the reason of Moses his confidence, when Pharaoh charged him not to see his face any more, the Lord had said thus unto him, and therefore Calvin and Simlerus read it so, he spake thus not now, but long ago, and Moses knew by the Spirit, that only this plague was now to come before their deliverance. Of Pharaohs driving them out the Lord spake, Chap. 6. 1. of the favour that they should have from the Egyptians, Chap. 3. 21. and of Gods destroying their first-borne, Chap. 4. 22. That then which is said, Verse 4. About midnight will I go out into the midst of Egypt. 5 And all the first-borne of the Land of Egypt shall die, &c. is to be conceived of, as spoken by Moses to Pharaoh, before he went out from him, as if when he had said, Chap. 10. v. 29. Thou hast spoken well, I will see thy face againe no more; he had immediately added, yet let me tell thee this before I go, thus saith the Lord, About midnight, &c. As is plaine by that which is added, v. 8. And he went out from Pharaoh in a great anger. Verse 4,5. Calvin. Simlerus.

He shall surely thrust you out. v. 1. The word translated surely is, כֻּלָּה, omnino, altogether, that is, whereas he hath hitherto sought to detaine some things of yours, your little ones first, and since your cattel, he shall now drive you with all that is yours out, detaining nothing. Some will have nothing else meant by כֻּלָּה, but he will be so farre from holding you, as that he will not suffer you to delay your going. If any shall hold, that God spake thus Simlerus.

to

to Moses the second time, and not in those places only before mentioned, as Calvin doth, I will not oppose it, but then it must be conceived to have been done, before his coming to Pharaoh after the plague of darkness. Calvin.

For the things, which the Hebrews should take with them of the Egyptians, see the Exposition before, Chap. 3. 21. Verse 2.

And the Lord gave the people favour, &c. the Hebrew is, shall give, and so all other Expositours read it, and sense requireth it so to be read. And the man Moses was very great, &c. This is added, as a meanes to move the Egyptians to give them their desire. Moses by the wonders, which he had done, had purchased unto himself so great authority amongst the Egyptian people, as that at his appointment, they were ready to do any thing, althouh not by true repentance to turne to the Lord. God moved their hearts inwardly, but he was the instrument, by whom; yet it is a wonder, that they should not rather hate, then reverence him, by whom they had been so greatly plagued; but it was Gods doing thus to turne their hearts. Verse 3.

Then Moses denounced this last judgement against the first-borne both of man and beast, setting the time, at midnight, and the grievous lamentation that should be, and the difference between the Hebrews and them, and lastly, the humble coming of the Egyptians to him to desire him to depart, and then he went out very angry. Verse 4. Verse 5. Verse 6. Verse 7, 8.

If it be demanded here, why Pharaoh and the Egyptian men sinning, God punished their children, and cattel with death, I answer not because he meant to spare them, as the sequel declareth, but thus to aggravate their punishment, before their drowning in the Red-sea. For this was the greatest judgement, which was sent hitherto, both because in every house one or more were smitten, and that at the most terrible time, at midnight, with death, and also because the first-borne, who were now smitten, were most deare unto them, and many a man doubtlesse had no more but one to lose, to whom this must needs be an exceeding great griefe, Zach. 12. 10. Moreover they had destroyed the Hebrews children, who were the Lords first-borne, as he speaketh, Exod. 4. 22. and therefore it was just with God to destroy their first-borne; thus Theodoret. There were none of these first-borne, but were sinners, and therefore they had no wrong done them by punishing them with death, and if the Lord to punish their Parents the more by cutting them off first, would destroy them, who can speak against it? And for the beasts, they were tee Egyptians goods, and for their service, and therefore when they were smitten, the Egyptians were punished in them also. The Hebrews say, that they were killed in detestation of the Idolatry which was in Egypt committed with them, for they made gods of many of them; wherefore to explaine this, Chap. 12. v. 12. it is added, after that he had spoken of the beasts, Against the gods of Egypt I will execute Judgement. Jerome out of the Hebrews traditions saith, that the Temples of their gods were then also overthrowne, either by Earthquake or by Thunders. The Hebrews say moreover, that the Idols made of stone were beaten to pouder, the wooden putrefied or burnt to Ashes, and those that were made of metall, molten. Some think, that they were cast downe and mutilated, as Dagon afterwards before the Ark. The Hebrews are full of fictions, and therefore I cannot tell, whether any credit may be given to these things; for in killing the first-borne of beasts, Judgement was executed upon beasts, the gods of Egypt, and all their gods were judged, when they that served them, were so lamentably destroyed, they not being able to afford any help, and so exposed to derision and vilification. But whether any thing more were done unto them or no, is uncertaine. If it be doubted, how it is said here by the Lord, v. 4. At midnight I will go through Egypt, and the first-borne shall die, yet Chap. 12. 23. he saith, I will not suffer the destroyer to come in, speaking, as if some other sent by him smote the Egyptians first-borne, and Ps. 78. 49. He sent evill angells amongst them. I answer, the Lord did it, but by the Angels, the Executioners by him appointed, and these were not good, as some contend, (although sometimes

Quest.

Theod. quæst. 22 in Exod.

Calvin. Simlerus.

Hebræi.

Hieron. in trad. Hebræorum.

Quest.

good good Angels have done execution, as upon Sodome, Gen 19. for they are expreſly called evill Angels, and here it is to be noted, that they were not one, but many in ſuch a populous and large Kingdome, ſmiting in every houſe at the ſame inſtant ſome, which could not have been done by one onely. And therefore when he is ſpoken of in the ſingular number, the deſtroyer, it is, per Enallagen numeri.

For the phraſes uſed, From the firſt-born of Pharaoh which ſitteth upon his throne, to the firſt-born of the maid-ſervant, which is at the mill. Hereby is meant from the moſt honourable to the baſeſt. The firſt-born of Pharaoh is deſcribed by ſitting upon his throne, becauſe he ſhould therein have ſucceeded him, or haply he was now crowned together with him, as Solomon, David yet living. The firſt-born of the baſeſt was of the maid-ſervant behinde the mill, or as it is, Chap. 12. 29. the firſt-born of the captive in the dungeon, ſo called, becauſe ſervants taken in the warre were ſet to grinding all day, and ſhut up in priſon at night, leſt they ſhould eſcape away.

Verſe 6. And there ſhall be a great cry, ſuch as never was, or ſhall be. The note of ſimilitude, כמהו Camohu is of the maſculine gender, but the word cry of the feminine, and therefore it muſt be referred not to the cry, but to the calamity cauſing it. And the like to this was never in any age before or ſince in any Kingdome, that ſome at the ſame time periſhed in all the families farre and near.

Verſe 7. Againſt the children of Iſrael a dog ſhall not move his tongue, &c. This is another part of the miracle, there ſhould be all ſilence and tranquillity amongſt the Iſraelites, although they in ſo great multitudes ſhould depart at that unſeaſonable time of the night, there ſhould not ſo much as a dog barke, which commonly is a moſt vigilant creature, and apt to bewray by barking any ſtirring in the night: or this is ſpoken by way of oppoſition, the Egyptians ſhould be deſtroyed, but the Iſraelites ſhould not ſuffer ſo much as the leaſt hurt in voice or deed.

Verſe 8. For Moſes his anger, in which he went away, it was doubtleſſe an holy anger comming from zeal, when he ſaw Pharaoh ſo obdurated, and to proceed thus on ſtill in his rebellion againſt God, and hereby his courage appeared, and by this his threatening after Pharaohs threatening of him, that he no whit feared that Tyrant.

Note. And thus we ſhould in Gods cauſe be angry, as if ſome great matter were done againſt us, when he is offended, onely becauſe we are ſubject to be carried away with naturall paſſions in our anger, we muſt pray for the ſpirit of moderation, whereby we may be able to keep within juſt bounds, thus fulfilling that precept, Be angry, but ſinne not.

Verſe 9. 10. Simlerus. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Pharaoh ſhall not hearken to you, &c. This is nothing but a repetition of Gods ſaying to Moſes before touching Pharaohs hardening of his heart, being added, as a reaſon of the indignation of Moſes, in which he is ſaid to have gone out from him. For the Allegory of this plague, Saint Auguſtine proſecuting his compariſons betwixt the ten Commandements and the ten plagues of Egypt, ſaith, that it doth moſt aptly anſwer to the tenth Commandement alſo, Thou ſhalt not covet any thing that is thy neighbours.

The Allegory. Auguſt. In primogenit is tuis puniris, qui concupiſcendo res alienas, i. quod tibi jure non defertur, quaſi juris umbram perquiris.

For when a man coveteth any thing of his neighbours, that is dear unto him, and ſeeketh by unjuſt meanes to gather much to enrich his heire, it is juſt with God to ſtrike his heir, and to take him from him, that he may have none after him to leave all this unto: for his coveting that which is dear to another, to deprive him of his firſt-born, who is moſt dear to him. He that coveteth another mans goods loſeth alſo the firſt-born of his heart, that is, his faith, which is much more. For no man worketh any good, but he in whom there is faith firſt, all thy good workes are as it were thy ſpirituall children, but faith is thy firſt-born, and by inwardly and ſecretly coveting, thou loſeſt this inward grace. His coming at midnight to deſtroy may alſo figure out the Lords comming at the laſt, which ſhall be at midnight, in time of greateſt ſecurity, and therefore let us alwayes watch againſt that time. Laſtly, becauſe this was done after the killing of the lambe, it may figure out the deſtruction of sinne and death the first-born, as it were of the Devil by Christs Passion.

CHAP. XII.

AND the Lord spake to Moses and Aaron, This shall be to you the first moneth of the year. Here to the Hebrews for their sacred Feasts and meetings to celebrate Gods praises for his great mercies towards them, a new beginning of the year is appointed in the moneth Nisan, answering to our March, or the Moon, that was next to the Vernall Equinoctiall; for from the beginning the moneth Tisri answering to our September, and signifying beginning, was the first, as I have shewed at large, Gen. 1. 11. And upon the like reason in remembrance of our deliverance by Jesus Christ do we begin our year, March 25. which was the time of his Conception. This moneth is called the moneth Abib, Exod. 13. 4. not that the Hebrews then called their moneths by any proper names, but by numbers, as the first, second, third, &c. for the first giving of names unto them was after the Babylonish Captivity, and therefore they are all Chaldee. 1 Nisan answering to our March, viz. to that part which beginneth at the New Moon, following the Vernall Equinoctiall, &c. and to so much of April, as from thence wanted of a full moneth: of this moneth see Ester 3. 7. Whereas it is called Abib, it is to be understood, that this was no proper name, but an Epithite. For Abib signifieth a stalk bearing an eare of corne, and therefore the moneth Abib is nothing else but the moneth of earing, because Barley then grew into eares in that land, whereas the second moneth is called Zif, 1 King. 6. 1. and the seventh moneth Ethanim, 1 King. 8. 2. neither were these any proper names, but Epithites, whereby those moneths were set forth. For Zif signifieth apertion or opening, and the second moneth was called the moneth of opening, because flowers then chiefly were open in every place, and shewed themselves in their greatest beauty, and Ethanim signifieth fortes, strong, as the Chaldee Paraphrast hath it, and the seventh moneth was so called, because then the corne which serveth to strengthen man was laid into the barne: so Vatablus. The proper name of the second moneth was Tiar, the third Sinan, the fourth Tamuz, the fifth Ab, the sixth Elul, the seventh Tisri, the eighth Marthe, the ninth Casleu, the tenth Tebeth, the eleventh Sebath, the twelfth Adar, of which see Ester 3. The Hebrews in these their moneths followed the course of the Moon, every new Moon being to them the beginning of the moneth, and because thus there were in every year some dayes redundant, they added a moneth to every third year, which was called annus intercalaris, and therefore that year the moneth Adar, which was the last, was reckoned twice over.

Verse 1, 2.

The twelve moneths how called.

Chaldee Paraphrast.

Vatablus.

Speak to all the Congregation of the children of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this moneth they shall take to them every man a lambe, &c. The circumstances about the Paschall lamb are notable; for first, it must be taken the tenth day, & being kept till the 14, then it must be killed at even by all the Congregation, that is, in every family, which being all considered together, make the whole Congregation. The Hebrews yield these reasons of keeping it in their house four dayes before the killing. 1 That if there were any blemish in it, it might be the better perceived. 2 That through the trouble at the time of their departure they might not forget to do this thing. 3 That by the sight thereof they might be the more confirmed in their faith, to believe their deliverance to come: Every bleating of the lambe in this time, saith Ferus, was as the sounding of a trumpet for their departure. 4 To daunt the Egyptians the more, when they should see them thus boldly in every house to take in a lambe to be killed, which at other times if they had done, they would have been ready to stone them, and that the Hebrews might herein see, how God did hold his hand of protection over them, so that whatsoever they did now novv the Egyptians could not or durſt not ſtirre againſt them. Unto vvhich Ferus further addeth, that there might be no ſleighty or perfunctory memoriall kept of their approaching deliverance, that they might provide all other things neceſſary, and borrovv in that time Veſſels of gold and ſilver, &c. of the Egyptians. Ferus.

Verse 3.

Hebræi.

Joſeph. lib. 2. Antiquit. Jud.

Joſephus erred greatly about the time, vvhen he vvrote, that it ſhould be prepared, from the 13 day to the 14; for it vvas from the 10 to the 14. This circumſtance of taking it the 10 day, is not ſpoken of any more afterwards, where the inſtitution of the Paſſeover is commemorated, Chap. 23. Deut. 16. &c. and therefore it is moſt likely, that they were not afterwards tied unto it, there being no more the like reaſon in every reſpect, that there was at this time. By every man who is appointed to take a lambe, is to be underſtood every houſeholder, who had company ſufficient to eat it, and the whole Congregation is bidden to kill it, as if it were but one, becauſe they were all one in the end, for which, viz. to prefigure one Chriſt, and in the faith, in which they killed and ate it, as Ferus rightly ſpeaketh. Ferus.

Verſe 5. And the lambe muſt be a male of the firſt year, becauſe after that it is no lambe but a ſheep, and becauſe it muſt be moſt perfect and ſtrong, for ſo the males were, to ſhew that we muſt ſerve God with a perfect heart, and with all our might, when we are moſt ſtrong and able. And without blemiſh, not blinde or lame or ſick, or any way defective, or lean and ill-favoured, to ſhew that we muſt not ſerve God in our ſinnes. And it might be taken, either of the ſheep or of the goates, the word שה tranſlated lamb ſignifieth either a lamb or a kid, ſo that ſome families ſhould take lambes, and ſome kids. Some, ſaith Simlerus, will not have it underſtood, as if a kid might be taken, becauſe the Goat, of which the kid commeth, figureth out the wicked, Math. 25. and therefore they ſay that ſheep and goats feeding in one flock together; when the Lord biddeth, take a lambe of the kids and of the goats (for the Conjunction ו and is uſed, and not or,) he meaneth nothing elſe but a choice lambe taken from amongſt them feeding together. But it muſt be underſtood, that although goates be ſometimes ſpoken of, as repreſenting the wicked, yet they were beaſts appointed often for ſacrifice, as well as ſheep, and therefore I aſſent rather to them that hold that a lamb or kid was to be taken, ſome of one kinde, and ſome of the other, and ſo it was moſt ſignificative, as by and by ſhall be ſhewed in the myſtery. Simlerus.

Verſe 6. This lamb or kid muſt be kept till the 14 day, and then killed between the evenings, for ſo it is in the Hebrew. The Hebrews ſay, that all this time it was tied to a bed-poſt in a chamber, into which all the family came. But what meaneth this, between the evenings? There are amongſt Expoſitours divers conjectures; ſome holding that the lambe was killed at night, and in the ſame night roſted and eaten, and becauſe the whole night, in which this was doing, is between the evening or twilight of the day before, and the twilight of the day following, it is ſaid to be between two evenings. But thus the twilight in the morning muſt have the name of an evening, as it is never in any place called, and the lamb appointed to be killed the 14 day ſhould not have been killed till the 15, ſeeing the night following the 14 is the beginning of the 15 by the ancient account under the Law. The Rabbins of the Jews are divided about this, ſome holding that the evening of the 14 day was all the afternoon, in which time they killed and prepared the lamb, and all other things to be uſed about the Paſſeover, as Rab. Nathan, Rab. Simeon, and Rab. Solomon, who alſo ſaith, that the reaſon why this time is ſaid to be between the evenings is, becauſe it is between the beginning of the obſcuring of the day by the declining of the Sun, and the totall obſcuring of it by the comming on of the night. But R. Nathan yieldeth none other reaſon but the tradition of their Elders. Others of the Rabbins hold, that theſe two evenings were the firſt from the Sun-ſetting unto the totall ceſſation of all light of the day, the other immediately after when all was covered with the darkneſſe of the night. Joſephus ſaith, that they uſed to kill the Paſſeover from the ninth hour of the 14 day, till night: for Quæſt.

Lippomannus.

Rabbi Nathan. R. Simeon. R. Solomon.

Aben Ezra. Ioſeph. lib. 7. de bello Jud. c. 17.

for at the ninth hour which is three of the clock in the afternoon began the laſt part of the day conſiſting of three houres, and called the evening. And this is followed by Andreas Maſius, and by Cajetan, and is moſt probable, becauſe if the latter part of the day, when the Sun grew low, were called the evening, what was done in that time, was between two evenings. The Chaldee Paraphraſt for, between two evenings, hath, between two Sunnes. Lyranus and Toſtatus follow that of the whole afternoon, and I cannot ſee any abſurdity in it, if we hold that the lamb might be killed any part of the 14 day, becauſe the day is between two nights which are called evenings: and to kill and flea and to make ready the lamb to be laid to the fire, and other things would ask ſome time. Matth.26.17. It is ſaid, that when the firſt day of unleavened bread was come, the Diſciples came to Chriſt to know, where they ſhould make ready the Paſſeover, at what time he ſendeth them following after at night when all things were ready: whence it is probable, that the day was ſpent in preparation, being called the firſt of unleavened bread, becauſe that although they ate not the Paſſeover or unleavened bread till the fifteenth day, which began at the coming on of the night, yet they made their unleavened bread that day. Verſe 18. It is ſaid they ſhould eate unleavened bread the 14 day at even, but that even is to be underſtood to be the beginning of the 15 day, for that was the firſt of the 7 dayes, in which the feaſt of the Paſſeover was kept. For the myſticall ſignification of this Lamb, no doubt but that the Meſſiah was prefigured hereby, becauſe he is often ſet forth under this name; and in the Cabala of the Jews there is this memorable ſaying; In the ſame day, viz. the 15th of the moneth Niſan, Iſrael is to be redeemed in the dayes of the Meſſiah, as they were upon that day redeemed out of Egypt, as it is written, In the dayes of thy going forth out of Egypt, I will ſhew wonderfull things: thus the Cabala, one of the ancient Monuments of the Jews, written long before the comming of Chriſt, being now a plaine evidence to convince the Jews, ſeeing Chriſt, by whom the redemption is made, ſuffered upon that very day.

Andr. Maſius in Joſh.5. Chald. Paraphraſt.

Levit.23.6.

The Myſtery.

1 Cor.5.7.

Lib. Cabalar.

And the 15th day of the moneth when the paſſeover was kept, ſaith Rupertus, was the full Moon, to ſhew that the Meſſiah ſhould come in the fulneſſe of time: and it was the full Moon after the vernall Equinoctiall, when the dayes begin to be longer then the nights, there being before ſhort dayes and long nights; but now the light overcometh the darkneſſe, to ſhew that the World was held in the dark night of ſin before, and under dark legall rites; but now ſin is overcome, and the light is greatly increaſed, all things touching the Kingdome of Heaven being made manifeſt. And this was in the ſpring, when all things grovv green and are revived, to ſhevv, that being novv renued in the ſpirit of our mindes, joyfull through hope, and flouriſhing by charity, vve ſhould be preſent at the ſpirituall banquet of our paſchall Lamb. Again, as this Lamb vvas taken the 10th day of the moneth, and kept to the 14th, and then killed: ſo Chriſt came to Jeruſalem upon the ſame day, that being the place of his immolation, and continued there till the 14th at even, vvhen he firſt in a figure ſacrificed himſelfe in inſtituting that holy Supper amongſt his Diſciples, and then vvas taken and crucified and ſlaine. Thus alſo Ierus, vvho ſaith, that he came to Bethany ſix dayes before the Paſſeover, and the day followving to Jeruſalem riding upon an Aſſe, that being the 10th day, the next day anſwering to our Munday, being the 11th, Tueſday, the 12th, Wedneſday the 13th, Thurſday the 14th, at the even after which the Lords Supper was inſtituted. And this is according to *Joh.*12. He alſo addeth, that the taking of the Lamb the 5th day before, ſignified Gods manifeſting of his purpoſe to ſend his Son in the fifth age of the world after. For ſo ſoon as man had ſalne, the ſeed of the woman is promiſed, and one age having paſſed from Adam to Noah, 2 from Noah to Abraham, 3 from Abraham to David, 4 from David to Chriſt, whoſe age was the fifth, he was ſacrificed. Moreover, it was either a Lamb or a Kid that vvas taken, to prefigure Chriſt; a Lamb to Rupert.in Exo. Gal.4.4.

Ferus.

Gen.3.

ſhew him to be the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſinnes of the World; and a Kid of the Goats, to ſhew, that he was in the account of the wicked Jews a ſinner, and did beare the ſinnes of us all. And this Lamb was without blemiſh, to ſhevv that in himſelfe he vvas vvithout all ſpot or ſteine of ſinne. And it vvas taken out of the flock, becauſe he vvas a man like untous. And laſtly, if the houſhold vvere too little, another vvas appointed to joyne vvith it, to ſhevv that the Gentiles ſhould be taken in to the Jevvs. Thus Ferus. Rabanus ſaith, that the tenth day ſignified the Decalogue, becauſe under the Law Chriſt was taken as it were, being under the Law figured out, but not ſlain, till afterwards under the Goſpel. And a Lamb or a Kid muſt be taken, to ſhevv, that he came, as of righteous ſo of vvicked Progenitours: and the Lamb vvas killed in the evening, to ſhevv his Paſſion in the evening of the vvorld.

Rabanus.

Verſe 7. And they ſhall take of the bloud, and ſtrike on the two ſide-poſts and the upper poſt, &c. Verſe 13. The bloud ſhall be to you a ſigne. Verſe 22. Ye ſhall take a bunch of Hyſop and dip it in the bloud, that is in the baſon, and ſtrike the lintel, and the two ſide-poſts with the bloud, and none of you ſhall go out of the doore of the houſe, till the morning, &c. This bloud appointed to be a means to preſerve the Hebrvvs from death, figured out the bloud of Chriſt, vvhereby vve are delivered from ſin & everlaſting death, the ſtriking of it vvith a bunch of Hyſop, vvhich vvas alſo uſed to ſprinkle bloud at other times, as to cleanſe the Leaper, Levit. 14. 4, 5. and Hyſop vvas alſo uſed to make a vvater for the expiation of ſin, Numb. 19. The bunch of Hyſop, ſaith Rupertus, figured out the faith and humility of Chriſts paſſion, becauſe humility by faith dipped in Chriſts bloud, ſaveth from death, whereby through the ſwelling of pride in the firſt man we were all indangered, alluding to which David ſaid, Waſh me with Hyſop, and I ſhall be cleane. For Hyſop is a low hearb growing in rocky places, and healeth the ſwelling of the Lungs. For theſe words, the bloud in the baſon, the vulgar Latin hath, in limine, and the Septuagint likewiſe; whereupon Auguſtine inquireth, what bloud that was at the threſhold? and anſwereth, that either the lamb was killed there, the bloud running out in that place, or elſe it was brought, and ſet there for this purpoſe, but the Hebrew is plaine, in the Baſon. But what meaneth the ſtriking of this bloud upon three poſts? Anſw. The Angell, that came to deſtroy, had no need of a ſigne, for he knew the Hebrews houſes from the Egyptians without it; but this was given, as a ſigne to them, that they might believe the great care of the Lord over them, for their preſervation. And touching the poſts of their Doores, they muſt have bloud put upon them, to ſhew that we muſt alwayes, when, vve come in, and vvhen vve go out, remember the bloud of Chriſt ſhed for us, and that we ought to make open confeſſion of him, and not be aſhamed of his Croſſe, as Ferus ſaith. And three poſts are marked with bloud, to ſhevv the Baptiſme in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Goſt, and that we muſt not receive Chriſts bloud only externally vvith the mouth, and internally by faith, but to imitate him, thus marking herevvith the upper poſt alſo. And none muſt go out of the Doore thus marked till the morning, to ſhevv, that vve muſt not go out of the true Church after any Hereſies; for if vve do, there is nothing but deſtruction vvithout, but vvithin there is ſafety: ſo Rupertus.

Verſe 22. Rupert. lib. 2 in Exod. cap. 22.

Pſal. 51.

Auguſt. queſt. 46. in Exod.

Queſt.

Ferus.

Rupertus.

Verſe 8, 9. And they ſhall eat the fleſh that night roſted with unleavened bread and ſower hearbs. Ye ſhall not eat of it raw or ſodden, but roſt, &c.

It vvas not enough to mark the Doore-poſts vvith bloud, but they muſt alſo eat the fleſh, to ſhevv, that vve muſt receive Chriſt, not one, but tvvo vvayes, by faith, and by eating the Sacrament, it is not enough to receive him by believing, but vve muſt alſo receive him by eating, leſt vve ſhould ſeeme to contemne his Ordinance. And this eating vvas in the night, to ſhevv that our eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is myſticall, and inviſible, for the eye of reaſon muſt be ſhut, and vve muſt deale only by faith. It muſt be eaten roſt, to ſhevv that Chriſts fleſh vvas put into the fire of tribulation, not ſodden vvith vvater, becauſe it vvas not mingled vvith ſin, vvhich is as vvater. And ravv, or ſodden it muſt not be eaten, to ſhevv that vve muſt not come to eat Chriſts fleſh vvithout preparation, or thinking the bread to be nothing but bread, or carnally thinking vvith the Capernaites, that vve cannot eat his fleſh, for this is to eat it ravv. And by carnall reaſon vve cannot finde out, hovv it can be fleſh, the water of our reaſon muſt not thus ſeeth this fleſh, but we muſt attribute all to the operation of the Holy Ghoſt, who is as fire to roſt it, by faith wrought by the Spirit believing it to be ſuch; for this is to eat it roſt, not ſodden vvith vvater. The bread vvherevvith it muſt be eaten, is unleavened, the leaven of malice and vvickedneſſe muſt be excluded, and vve muſt eat vvith the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth: there muſt be true repentance in thoſe, that eat, for this is not a Sacrament of remiſſion of ſinnes, that is proper to repentance: he cometh like a Dog, that cometh in his ſinnes, and this is not the bread of Dogs, but of Sonnes. The ſauce is bitter hearbs, to ſhevv that the Diſciples ſhould eat the Sacrament in much bitterneſſe and griefe of Spirit, as they did, for the vvords then ſpoken by Chriſt, and that vve muſt eat it vvith a bitter remembrance of our ſinnes, vvhich may cleanſe avvay from the ſtomack of our minde, the humours of a perverſe life. His head with his legs and purtenance, to ſhevv that Chriſt muſt be all received, and not part of him only; his head, that is, his Divinity muſt be believed, his feet, that is, his humanity, and his purtenance, that is, his ſoule, for if with ſome Hereticks we deny him to be God, with others, man, or with others, his ſoule, we receive him not; for Chriſt will not be divided, he muſt be received whole or not at all. And we muſt receive him all, his promiſes, gifts and precepts, and not in part, as moſt do, that will none of his precepts. And nothing muſt remaine of it till the morning, for before the morning of the future life, all muſt be done, there will be no time for it after: and nothing muſt be left for Dogs or Egyptians: this Sacrament muſt not in any part be left to be conculcated. That which remaineth muſt be burnt with fire, that is, the bones, and what myſtery remaineth, that we cannot pry into, we muſt leave to Gods holy Spirit to reveale in his good time. Hitherto and to this effect Ferus. Saint Auguſtine inquiring vvhat could remaine, ſeeing a ſufficient company muſt be taken to eat it all up? Anſwereth, that a bone thereof vvas not to be broken, and therefore they vvere the bones that remained to be burnt. Simlerus ſaith, that the fire, vvherevvith it vvas roſted, ſignified affliction, or the Spirit, and that they eat it ravv, vvho abhor from Chriſts croſſe, and they ſeeth it in vvater, that take it vvith the vvater of humane traditions and cogitations, and that bitter Hearbs ſignified their bitter afflictions in Egypt, and that the remainder muſt be burnt, that it might not be expoſed to contempt. I think that by burning the reſidue, vvas moſt aptly figured out, that the Egyptians and ſuch as they vvere, Idolatrous people, have no part or parcell of Chriſt to do them good, although it be ſaid of him, that he is the Lamb of God, that taketh avvay the ſinnes of the world; or that none but Iſraelites, that is, the faithfull ſhould be ſuffered to eat any of this Supper. And whereas Auguſtin and Ferus think, that the reſidue to be burnt was the bones, it might fall out that they not being able to conſume all the fleſh, ſome of that might remaine to be burnt alſo. And by this burning of all that remained, the Lord would intimate their certaine departure early in the morning, ſo that they ſhould have no further time to make uſe thereof. For the manner of proceeding, Toſtatus ſaith, that this was the cuſtome of the Jews. The Lamb being killed, and the blood ſtriked upon the Door poſts; they flead it, and took out the entrailes, which being waſhed and purged, they put in againe and roſted it whole.

Ferus.

or

Raw is by Rab. Solomon expounded, not ſufficiently roſted, for men in nature abhorred to eat raw fleſh, and if it had been eaten in part raw, it might have cauſed a nauſea, and ſo a caſting of it up againe. And boiling asketh a longer time, then roſting; and Lamb boiled is not ſo firme nouriſhment as roſted, wherefore it muſt not be boiled but roſted. And the Lamb roſted did Nos cum lactucis comedimus, ſi corpus noſtrum affligamus, quatenus amaritudo pœnitentiæ abſtergat à mentis ſtomacho perverſe humorem vitæ.

Verſe 10.

Auguſt.

Simlerus.

Toſtatus.

R. Solomon.

did moſt aptly ſet forth Chriſt in his paſſions, becauſe there vvas no mixture of any vvater of conſolation to allay the heat thereof, as to his Martyrs there vvas aftervvards. The vvord tranſlated, bitter herbs, is מרורים Merorim, bitternesſes, but the Chaldee Paraphraſt and Lyranus hereby underſtand bitter herbs in generall. The Septuagint render it πικρίδες, which Theod. Gaza in Ariſtot. de Hiſtor. Animalium, Cap. 7. tranſlateth ſylveſtres lactucas, and thus it is rendred in the vulgar Latine, agreſtes lactucas, wilde lettice.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Verſe 11. Ye ſhall eat it, your loines girt, your ſhoes on your feet, and your ſtaffe in your hand. All this was thus appointed, to ſhew their going out with all haſte; and it was afterwards done in the ſame manner, to preſerve the memory of this their deliverance. They uſed to weare looſe garments, wherefore when they travelled, they girded them, that they might not be hindered hereby in going, and whereas commonly they put off their ſhoes, when they went to meat, now they muſt have their feet ſhod, to ſhew that when the time came, they ſhould not have ſo much as leaſure to put on their ſhoes. Laſtly, every one muſt have his ſtaffe in his hand to travell withall, that they might not delay to ſeek that. But whether they ſhould ſtand with ſtaves in their hands, is not ſaid, but it is gathered hence, and the Hebrews ſay, that they ſtood, becauſe ſervants uſed to take their meat ſtanding, and therefore this geſture ſerved to put them in minde, that they were ſervants in Egypt. Pererius taxeth Philo for ſaying that they ſtood, when they ate the Paſſeover; becauſe no ſuch thing is expreſſed, and if it had been ſo inſtituted, Chriſt would doubtleſſe have eaten it ſo, whereas we read, that he roſe from ſupper and put off his garment, and then he ſate down again, intimating, that he ſtood not but ſate at ſuppper. Simlerus ſaith, When Chriſt is ſaid to have ſitten down, it is to be underſtood, that the Paſchall Lamb was eaten before, and then he ſate down with his Diſciples to eat ſomewhat elſe, the lambe having been received, not as meat to fill the belly, but as a Sacrament. Wherefore he ſeemeth to think that he ſtood in eating the lambe, but ſate down to eat other meats, after which he inſtituted his Supper, and thence the Feaſts preceding the Communion in the primitive Church called Agapæ, which were eaten firſt, took their beginning. I ſee no neceſſity to hold, that Chriſt ſtood, or that ſtanding was of divine inſtitution, although it were afterwards uſed by the Jews; yea, I think rather that he ſtood not but ſate at the Paſchall Supper; yet not going herein, as is commonly held, and as I have formerly held from the firſt inſtitution, becauſe the geſture of ſtanding was occaſionall for that time of their departure onely: but now I ſee that he ſtood not but ſate, there being never any ordinance for ſtanding, but onely it was by the Jews collected, forſomuch as they muſt have ſhoes upon their feet and ſtaves in their hands, that they ought to ſtand. It is the Lords Paſſeover. This Sacrament was ſo called, not from the paſſing of the Hebrews out of Egypt, but from the Lords paſſing over the Hebrews houſes at this time. In Greek it is rendered πάσχα, which ſome have thought to come from paſſion, as Nazianzen ſheweth, but reproveth

Perer. in Exod.

John 13. 4.

Verſe 12. Simlerus.

Nazian. Orat. 2. de Paſ hate.

The Allegory. Ferus. Epheſ. 6.

For the Allegory, the girding of the loines, ſaith Ferus, figureth out the chaſtity of thoſe that come to the Lords Supper, and refreining from following fleſhly luſts; the being ſhod, the being ſhod with the Preparation of the Goſpel of peace, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh, which is, when we do all things according to the Word, for thus we go herein as in ſhoes, our feet muſt not be naked, that is, in our affections we muſt not cleave to earthly things; the ſtaffe in the hand, the having of that about us, whereby we may both be ſupported againſt our weakneſſe, and drive thoſe away that would perſwade us to evill, that is, the ſame Word of God in our mindes; and the Paſſeover muſt be eaten in haſte, to ſhew, that we muſt not deferre preparing our ſelves againſt the Lords coming, but do it ſpeedily: for the time is ſhort, ſaith Paul, ſo that fear of being prevented, as a deſire to be with Chriſt, muſt work upon us for this end.

1 Cor. 7.

They

They that ate the paſſeover, ſaith Gregory, are bidden to have their loines girded, to ſhew, that we muſt tame pleaſures, and reſtrein the fleſh from luxury, that we may not be ſubject to correction for any vice. By ſhoes he underſtandeth the examples of the godly departed, becauſe ſhoes are made of skins of dead beaſts, of which before, when Moſes was bidden to put off his ſhoes. And the ſtaff, he ſaith, is the paſtorall ſtaffe, firſt, the loines muſt be girded, and then this office undertaken. And as the Paſſeover muſt be eaten in haſte, ſo he ſaith, the myſteries of Redemption and the Joyes of Heaven ought to be known vvith haſte, and the precepts of life muſt be fulfilled in haſte, becauſe to day vve knovv vve may do vvell, but vve knovv not vvhether vve ſhall to morrovv. Therefore, let no man be ſlothfull in the journey of this life, leſt he loſe a place in his heavenly Countrey; let no man make delayes through ſtudying after vain things, but let him perfect that vvhich is begun, leſt he have no time to fulfill it.

Gregor. hom. 22 in Evang.

Feſti ergo Paſcha comedite, ad ſolennitatem patriæ cœleſtis anhelate, nemo in hujus vitæ itinere torpeat ne in patria tocum perdat, &c.

For I will paſſe through the land of Egypt this night, and ſmite every firſt-born in all the land, from man to beaſt, &c. Verſe 12.

Here is the reaſon of marking the door-poſts vvith the blood of the lamb, that the Hebrevvs might be preſerved, vvhen the Egyptians vvere deſtroyed. In that, after the killing of the lamb, the firſt-born of Egypt are killed, the deſtroying of originall ſin by the death of the lamb Chriſt Jeſus is ſet forth, ſaith Rupertus. And I will execute judgement upon all the gods of Egypt; of this ſee before, Chap. 11.*v.*5.

*Rupertus l.*2. in Exod. c. 17.

And this day ſhall be to you for a memoriall, ye ſhall keep it a feaſt to the Lord, &c. Verſe 14,15 Verſe 16,17

After the Lavv of the Paſſeover ſet dovvn for that time, here it is eſtabliſhed for a Sacrament perpetually. Seven dayes muſt unleavened bread be eaten, and if any ſhould eat leavened bread in that time, he is threatened to be cut off, and of theſe dayes the firſt and the laſt are appointed for holy Convocations, no vvork muſt be done in them, ſaving about that vvhich they muſt eat. God will not have his great benefits forgotten, and therefore this feaſt muſt be kept, that hereby their deliverance out of Egypt might be remembred for ever, and God might be praiſed therefore: for the time, perpetually, or for ever, ſee before of Circumciſion, Gen. 17. The feaſt of unleavened bread muſt laſt ſeven dayes, becauſe all that time they could not ſtay to leaven their bread. Joſephus ſaith, that when the Jews had continued their journey out of Egypt three dayes, they came to Baalſephon by the Red-ſea, and finding nothing there, becauſe it was deſert, they ſuſteined themſelves with a little meal made into bread and a little baked. And thus they lived 30 dayes, uſing it ſparingly, and then their proviſion brought with them was all ſpent, in the remembrance whereof we keep eight dayes, eating unleavened bread: thus Joſephus. But here it is ſaid, ſeven dayes, and Levit. 23. Numb. 28. Deut. 16. Yet Rupertus alſo ſtandeth for eight dayes, becauſe the reckoning beginneth at the 14 day, and endeth the 21. But the reckoning is made from the 14 excluſively, not incluſively, from that day, but that day is none of the number. And if they ate unleavened bread 30 dayes, as Joſephus ſaith, it may be demanded, why they kept but ſeven afterwards? It may be anſwered, that ſeven was an holy number in reſpect of the ſeventh day from the Creation, and therefore God would have no holy Feaſt to laſt above ſeven dayes. The number of ſeven is often put for many, as Ruth 4.15. Prov. 26.16,25. and in that ſaying, The righteous falleth ſeven times in a day. Wherefore ſeven dayes, that is, many dayes in ſignification were enough to remember the many dayes, wherein through neceſſity they ate unleavened bread, and ſeven dayes were likewiſe appointed, to remember their dwelling in Tabernacles fourty years.

Joſeph. lib 2. Antiquit.

Verſe 18,&c

Queſt.

Levit. 23 34.

But why is the firſt day and the ſeventh amongſt theſe to be kept as Sabaths, with reſting from labour, all but about the meat to be eaten? Anſw. it would have been an importable burthen to keep ſo many dayes together ſtrictly, with reſting from all work, and therefore God in mercy appointeth onely onely the firſt to be kept thus, and the laſt to make an holy concluſion of this Feaſt, requiring no more upon the dayes comming between, but that they ſhould eat unleavened bread, but of this ſee more, *Levit.*3.7,8. But which was the firſt day, is not agreed amongſt all. Rupertus ſaith, that the 14 day was the firſt, but this cannot poſſibly ſtand, becauſe it is expreſly ſaid, ſeven dayes they ſhould keep this Feaſt, and the 21 was the laſt, ſo that by his account the dayes would have been eight. The time indeed began the 14 day at even, but then the 15 day began, as hath been already ſhewed. The exception, ſaving about that which every one muſt eat, ſerveth to diſtinguiſh the reſt of this Sabbath from the Sabbath of the ſeventh day: for in it no work muſt be done without any exception; they muſt bake what they would bake, and ſeeth what they would ſeeth the day before, and not kindle a fire upon it. For the place where the Paſſeover ſhould be kept, although at this time it was in their private houſes, yet afterwards when they ſhould come into the land of Canaan, they were forbidden to ſacrifice it in any of their gates, but onely in the place which the Lord ſhould chooſe. If any did eat any leavened bread in theſe dayes, he muſt die for it: and ſo all the lawes about the Sacraments and Sabbaths and ſervice of God were ratified by threatening death to tranſgreſſours. Yet there was ſometimes a caſe, wherein it was no ſin to eat leavened bread upon theſe dayes, viz. if he were hindered from keeping the Paſſeover this moneth, either becauſe he was unclean, or forth in a journey: for then he was not tied to keep the Paſſeover at this very time, but the 14 of the moneth following at even, and therefore this tie was not upon him this firſt moneth, but the ſecond, as is ſhewed, Numb. 9.11. and practiſed, 2 Chron. 30.13.

Verſe 16. Queſt.

Rupertus.

Exod.16.23.
Exod.35.3.

Deut.16.5,6.

Juſtin. Martyr. Dial. cum Tryphone.

Now becauſe, as was before ſaid, the Paſſeover muſt not be eaten but at the Temple, and the Temple was long ſince deſtroyed, it is plain, ſaith Juſtin Martyr, that this Sacrament is at an end, and ought not to be uſed any longer.

Verſe 21. Verſe 22. Then Moſes called all the Elders of Iſrael, and ſaid to them, Take to you a lamb, and kill the Paſſeover. Verſe 22. And ye ſhall take a bunch of Hyſop, &c. Here Moſes, according to the Lords direction appointeth it in every family to be done, and if there be any thing added, or otherwiſe propounded, then before, we muſt not think that Moſes did it of himſelfe, but by the guidance of the Spirit for further explication. They are forbidden to go out of their houſes that night, not becauſe the Angel could not diſtinguiſh them from the Egyptians, if he met them without, but to ſhew, that their ſafety ſtood in the blood of the lambe, and ſo doth all ours in the blood of Chriſt. And this Sacrament is appointed to be uſed for ever, and their children muſt be informed of the reaſon of it. And the time of beginning is ſet, viz. not before, but when they ſhould inherit the land of Canaan, yet it was once kept in Sinai the next year, *Numb.*9.1,2,3. And they did, as was commanded, and God did, as he had threatened. Pharaoh therefore roſe in the night, he and all his ſervants, and there roſe a great cry in Egypt, for there was no houſe wherein there was not one dead. If it ſhall ſeem doubtfull, how this could be ſo, conſidering, that in many houſes there is not any firſt-born, for ſome have no children. Saint Anguſtine anſwereth, that by a ſpeciall Divine Providence it was ſo diſpoſed of, that at this time there was a firſt-born in every houſe: ſo likewiſe Lyranus. Cajetan ſaith, that by the firſt-born may be underſtood alſo the ſurvivour, when the firſt is dead. Toſtatus ſaith, that they may be underſtood as firſt-born, whether males or females who were born firſt, although their Parents were dead. Hugo Sancti Victoris ſaith, that it may be underſtood every houſe wherein there was a firſt-born: Aben-Ezra by every houſe underſtandeth the farre greateſt part. But I hold with Auguſtine, that one was ſmitten in every houſe, for men had divers wives, and therefore it is no marvell, although there were ſome children in every houſe, or a man thes firſt-born of his father departed, yea becauſe one man had more wives having all

Verſe 23,24
Verſe 25,26
Verſe 27,28
Verſe 29.
Verſe 30,
Queſt.

Auguſt. qu.44. in Exod.
Cajetan.
Toſtatus.
Hugo Sancti Victoris.
Aben Ezra.

all children, there might be more first-borne in the same house slaine. Novv Pharaoh is overcome after the bloud of the Lamb striked upon the Posts of the doore, and he speaketh flatteringly to Moses, saying, Depart and blesse me, the Lamb having by death overcome sinne and the Devill, the Devill novv likevvise croucheth to him, but as Pharaoh being compelled through feare, all in vaine. Verse 32. Ferus.

And the people took their dough, before it was leavened, &c. Verse 34.

As they going into a desert place, took provision with them, so must we in the Wilderneſse of this world alwayes have the bread of the word with us. Ferus.

And they borrowed of the Egyptians Vessels of Silver, and Vessels of Gold, &c. Verse 35.

How just the Israelites spoiling of the Egyptians at this time by the command of the Lord was, I have already shewed, Exod. 3. 21. But forsomuch as they borrowed these things of them, and neither meant nor did ever restore them againe, it may be questioned, how this can be justified from fraud? Quest. Augustine answereth, that although it be said now, that they borrowed them, yet it is to be understood, as spoken by way of capitulation, this borrowing being before in the space of the foure dayes, from the taking of the Lamb, and now they being thrust out in haste, the Egyptians not requiring them, they might go away with them. Elsewhere he saith, There were secret reasons, that we cannot search into, and this may suffice for their justification, God commanded them thus to do, and in doing his command there is no sinne, but in doing against it. August. qu. 45. in Exod. Lib. 22. in Faustum cap. 71.

Tertullian saith, that there is an old tradition, that the Egyptians sent after the Israelites, requiring them to restore their goods borrowed, but they required then of the Messengers satisfaction for their labours so many yeares in Egypt, promising upon this condition to restore them, and the recompence for their work being counted came to so much, that it exceeded far the worth of the goods carried away, which when the Messengers perceived they left them for their stipend. I am not of Augustines minde, or theirs, that think these goods to have been borrowed before this time, for whilest the Egyptians were hardened against the Hebrews, as they were before this blow, there is no probability, that they would lend so much, or colour for the Hebrews to borrow. But now urging thē to depart, they might require them to lend vessels for their sacrifices and service of the Lord, and apparell, and ornaments fit for them to put on to keep an holy day to the Lord, and they counting it a benefit to be rid of them any way, would not doubtlesse now deny them any thing, by whose stay they thought all their lives would be hazzarded. And for justifying their borrowing, and not restoring, I think, that although they desired only to borrow, the Egyptians might to redeem their lives give them, and so send them away, and then it was no fraud in them to aske to borrow, they beleeving that God would work so, as that they should not be tied in conscience to restore againe. And that it is probable, that they asking to borrow, the Egyptians freely gave, appeareth by the next words, The Lord gave the people favour in the eyes of the Egyptians, &c. for though the word lending be used, yet they might lend so, as never looking for any restitution of them again. And if it were only borrowed and lent, it may be justified by the after-dealing of the Egyptians pursuing the Israelites, for hereby they came into termes of hostility, in which case they might as against their enemies have come, if they had been able, and taken their goods from them, and therefore having them already in their custody, keep them. Lastly, the Egyptians were drowned in the Red-sea, before the time of restoring came, so that they remained not to whom restitution should have been made; and come back to restore they could not for the sea between them and Egypt, without going farre about, and it would have been dangerous for those that should have gone amongst such inraged ememies. Tertull. lib. 2. contra Marcion. Verse 36.

For the Allegory, the Hebrews borrowing precious things of the Egyptians, which were used afterwards about the The Allegory.

Tabernacle in the worſhip of God, figured out Chriſtian Theologues borrowing of all parts of humane learning from the Heathen, amongſt whom it was firſt invented to ſet forth the Doctrine of truth. Thus Auguſtine as the Egyptians had Idols, which the Hebrews deteſted, ſo they had precious things, which they carried cloſely away from them, as being ill uſed by them, but better by the Hebrews: in like manner the Gentiles had many things to be abominated by us Chriſtians, coming out from their ſociety, and they had liberall Arts, and profitable morall precepts, vvhich being abuſed by them are to be taken away by us Chriſtians, and uſed in preaching the Goſpell. And what elſe have many of our faithfull men done? with how much Gold and Silver and precious ſtuffe came Cyprian furniſhed out of Egypt, and Lactantius, Victorinus, Hilarius, &c. And it is indeed worth the noting, that heathen men were Inventors of all Arts; Socrates, Plato, Ariſtotle of Philoſophy; Gallen and Hippocrates of Phyſick; Euclides, Archimedes and Ptolomie of Mathematicks; Iſocrates, Demoſthenes and Cicero of Rhetorick; and Homer, Pindarus and Virgil of Poeſie; Herodotus, Thucidides, Saluſtius, and Livy of Hiſtory. And although theſe Arts remained along time amongſt their Heires and ſucceſſours, Heathen men, yet they were at length taken from them, and they were ſpoiled thereof, as the Egyptians of their goods, and they remained only amongſt Chriſtian Doctours, Juſtine Martyr, Tertullian, Clemens, Alexandrinus, Origen, Arnobius, Lactantius, Euſebius, Jerome, Auguſtine, Cyrill, Theodoret, &c. who ſeem to have taken out of the ſtore-houſe of the Heathen for the adorning of Chriſtian Doctrine, all manner of learning, and to come laden out of Egypt, as the Hebrews with the rich ſpoiles of the Egyptians, and the Heathen remaine thus ſpoiled, and without all learning at this day. Thus alſo Porphyrius, the enemy of the Chriſtian Religion of old ſaid of Origen, that he gat unto him, as a ſupport to confirme the ſtrange and feigned Fables of the Jews, the Doctrine of the Greeks; for he had Platoes Books alwayes in his hands, he was much converſant in the writings of Numenius and Cronius he uſed familiarly Apollophanes, Longinus and Moderatus, Nicomachus, and other famous Pythagoreans, Theremon the Stoick, and Cornutus &c. And of what availe the knowledge of theſe Liberall Arts is for the furtherance of our Doctrine, Julian the Apoſtata perceived very well, when he ſtraitly forbade the ſtudy of all humane learning to Chriſtians. The Gold of Egypt, ſaith Ferus, which they carried away, is wiſdome; Silver, Eloquence; Garments, morall virtues: for the World hath theſe in many, as in Scipio, Fabius, Brutus, Lucretia, &c. but they abuſe them to vaine glory, wherefore we muſt take them to us, and uſe them well to Gods glory, and ſo we ſhall ſpoile the Devill and inrich the Church of God, which ſhould be the care of us all.

Auguſt. lib. 2. de doct. Chriſt. c. 40

Porphyrius lib. 3 adverſ. Chriſtianos.

Quòd ſpectat ad opiniones cùm de aliis rebus tum de divino numine, quas tenebat Origenes, in illis Græcorum conſuetudinem imitatus, etiam eorum doctrinam ad peregrinas & commentitias Judæorum fabulas confirmandas tanquam ſubſidium ſibi comparavit, &c. Ferus.

Verſe 37.

And the Children of Iſrael went out of Rameſes to Succoth about 600000 men, only on foot, beſides little ones. Their number is ſet downe, that their admirable increaſe in this time, they being alſo ſo greatly oppreſſed, might be taken notice of to the greater glory of God, by whoſe power they were ſo exceedingly multiplyed. And if the men only were 600000, and they were reckoned from 20 yeares old and upward, but none under 20, as Numb. 1. 3. the women, and males under that age might well be twice or thrice as many more, and then the whole company of them, beſides the mixed multitude, could not be leſſe then 18 or 2000000. And all theſe came from Rameſes, which was in Goſhen, where they dwelt for the moſt part, although by reaſon of their multitudes we cannot but think that they muſt needs fill divers other parts of Egypt alſo, but now they were congregated thither expecting this time. Whereas it is ſaid about 600000, Toſtatus thinketh, that there was no vvant of this number, but rather a Surpluſage, becauſe Numb. 2. 32. it is ſaid, that they vvere 603550, and yet the Levites vvere not counted, vvho are counted here, and 3000 vvere cut off for their Idolatry, he ſaith, followving the vulgar Latine 23000. And I do think the number vvas rather greater greater, then leſſer, becauſe, howſoever that numeration, Numb. 2. was a yeare after, in which time many, that were but 19 yeares old, then might come into the count, yet it is not probable, that there were ſo many, as to countervaile the ſlaine, the Levites, that number above 600000, and the number that died in that yeare alſo by a naturall death. Succoth, to which they are ſaid to come, was part of the Troglodites Countrey, being eight miles from Rameſes. The mixed multitude, v. 38. that went up with them are thought by Calvin, Simlerus and ſome others to have been people of other Nations drawn to dwell in Egypt by the fertility of that place, but now ſeeing all things deſtroyed by Gods judgements, they went away together with the Hebrews, and ſome of the Egyptians alſo, groaning under the tyranny of that King. It ſeemeth more probable to me, that they were for the moſt part ſuch, as came of the ſervants brought by Jacob into Egypt, and ſo belonged to his children, and ſome ſtrangers of other Nations offering to go with them, becauſe Moſes being ſent to deliver the Hebrews only, and to carry them into Canaan, would not doubtleſſe receive many others, except in the nature of ſervants.

Toſtatus.

Exod. 32. 28.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travele.

Verſe 38.

Calvin. Simlerus.

And they baked of the dough, which they had brought out of Egypt, unleavened cakes, &c.

Verſe 39.

Although the Iſraelites had free liberty of departing out of Egypt, yet there was ſome mixture of adverſity with this bleſſing, in that they had but ſimple proviſion, viz. of Meale, which they could only make into unleavened Cakes, called the bread of affliction, Deut. 16. 3. So the children of God, ſaith Calvin, are not every way happy at any time in this world, but have adverſity mixed with proſperity, that they might be kept from loving the World, and the things thereof. And we muſt, ſaith Ferus, do the like unto the Iſraelites in this place, that is, carry the food of our ſoules, that is, the word of God with us, and by often meditating thereupon make us cakes to feed our ſoules, but they muſt be unleavened, that is, the word of God muſt not be uſed to liberty and wickedneſſe, but unto piety and devotion.

Calvin. Note.

Ferus.

Now the dwelling of the children of Iſrael in Egypt was 430 yeares. v. 41. And at the end, &c. Of this time enough hath been ſaid before upon Gen 15. where I have ſhewed, that the common received opinion is, that they dwelt in Egypt, ſince Jacobs coming down thither only 215 yeares, and that the other halfe of this time was ſpent partly in Egypt, when Abraham came firſt down to ſojourne there, and partly in Canaan, and Meſopotamia: but it hath been alſo conſidered, whether this whole time may not be counted to have been ſpent in Egypt.

Verſe 40, 41

It is a night to be obſerved to the Lord, wherein he carried them out of the Land of Egypt, &c.

Verſe 42.

There cannot but be ſome doubt made here, how they are ſaid to have gone out in the night, becauſe Moſes had before commanded them, Verſe 22. not to go out of their houſes, till the morning, and Numb. 33. 3. it is ſaid, that they went from Rameſes the morrow after the Paſſeover? Rupertus anſwereth, that they began not to go out, till the light of the morning began to approach, and this was truly the morning, but becauſe it was ſtill ſomewhat dark, the night was not altogether gone. The cauſe, why Moſes warned them not to go out of their houſes till the morning, was, leſt they ſhould be ſmitten by the Angel of the Lord, but this danger being once paſt, and the Egyptians urging them to be gone, there was no reaſon, why they ſhould ſtay till day-light, and yet they being ſo great a multitude, could not all depart in the order of Armies, as they did, till the next day. It is to be held then, that they began their Journey before day, for which it is ſaid, that they were brought out in the night, and the laſt of them went away by day, for which it is ſaid, that they went out the morning after the Paſſeover. To make this their expedite going out in ſo great Companies the more credible, Joſephus ſaith, that Moſes had before gathered them together and diſtributed them into Companies, as they ſhould march forvvard. This is the ordinance of the Paſſeover, no ſtranger ſhall eat thereof. 44 But every man-ſervant, after thou haſt circumciſed him, ſhall eat thereof, &c.

Queſt.

Rupertus l. 2. cap. 18.

Joſephus.

Verſe 43,44 The reaſon, vvhy none might eat the Paſſeover but the circumciſed, vvas becauſe it vvas eaten in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, and of their preſervation, vvhen the firſt-borne of the Egyptians vvere all ſlaine, and therefore if any that vvere not of the children of Iſrael at the leaſt in Religion, as the uncircumciſed vvere not, their eating of the Paſſeover vvould have been but a prophanation of this moſt holy Sacrament. And by the like reaſon no man that is unbaptized may eat of the Lords Supper, and if any unbaptized vvithin, that is, living impenitently in ſinne eateth thereof, he alſo prophaneth it, although he be outvvardly baptized; yet ſuch are not by the Miniſter to be put back, but becauſe they are members of the viſible Church, to be admitted, but vvith premonition of the danger, vvhich by comming thus they incurre. For the queſtion made here by Expoſitours, vvhether bought ſervants might be compelled to be circumciſed, that ſo they might eat the paſſeover? it hath been reſolved already, Gen. 17.15. Toſtatus gathereth from the different vvords uſed touching a ſervant and a ſtranger, that the laſt might not be compelled, but the firſt might; and Cajetan, that he might be compelled to receive Circumciſion, as a mark upon his body, as any other mark that his Maſter would put upon him, but not as a ſigne of the Religion profeſſed by the Iſraelites: but this is a diſtinction without all ground. And for the collection of Toſtatus, if he meaneth by compelling, threatening him vvith being cut off in caſe he refuſed to be circumciſed, as the Lord appointed at the firſt inſtituting of that Sacrament, Gen. 17. it is true, but not otherviſe, he utterly refuſing and reſiſting.

Toſtatus.

Cajetan.

Verſe 46. It ſhall be eaten in one houſe, neither ſhalt thou carry forth of the fleſh thereof, and ye ſhall not break a bone thereof. None of the lambe muſt be carried out, in remembrance of the firſt uſe thereof in Egypt, where it was eaten whole in the houſe, in which it was prepared; and if any remained, it was burnt, and none could then be carried out, becauſe they might not go out of their houſes for fear of the deſtroying angel: ſo that Lyranus erred, when he ſaid, that they might not ſend any forth of the doors, becauſe they had no leaſure to do now, as at other feſtivall times, viz. to ſend part to their neighbours. This charge of eating the whole lamb in one houſe, doth myſtically ſet forth the unity that ſhould be in the Church of Chriſt, all thinking and ſpeaking the ſame things: if there be Schiſmes, ſome of the Paſchal fleſh is carried forth, and the law of this Sacrifice is broken, if the Sacrament be given to thoſe that are ſchiſmaticall, or live in diſſenſion with their neighbours: to this effect Ferus. Touching the caution of not breaking a bone, this was, becauſe they were in haſte, they muſt not ſtand to break the bones and to pick out the marrow: and myſtically that which befell the Lord in his paſſion, was figured out, not a bone of him was broken, as it is applied by the Evangeliſt. And the word, wherein the meat and drink of our Sacrament conſiſteth, ſaith Ferus, ought not to be broken by drawing it into divers ſenſes, but taken whole and as it is, and as the Evangeliſts not daring to change any thing therein, and the Apoſtles have delivered it.

Lyranus.

The Myſtery.

Ferus.
Calvin.
Cajetan.
John 19.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1,2. AND the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, ſanctifie unto me every firſt-born that openeth the wombe both of men and beaſts, it ſhall be mine. The Lord having ſpared the firſt-born amongſt the Hebrews when he ſlew all the firſt-born in Egypt, now maketh a law for ever after, that all their firſt-born ſhall be his. And herein he dealt moſt equally, he could have taken more, but he taketh onely ſuch as he had preſerved, the firſt-born are further ſaid to be all ſuch as open the wombe, becauſe otherwiſe a man having more wives might have thought that one of his children onely had need to be redeemed. In bidding that they ſhould be ſanctified unto him, he meaneth that they ſhould be ſeparated from a common uſe unto an holy. But the firſt-born of men might be redeemed, and how they ſhould be redeemed is appointed, Numb. 3. unleſſe any of them ſhould be peculiarly choſen for the Lords ſervice, as Samuel was, 1 *Sam.*1. being by his mother vowed unto him. And the firſt-born of an unclean beaſt might be redeemed, as of an Aſſe, or elſe his neck muſt be broken, that he might not come to any common uſe: and the firſt-born of clean beaſts muſt be ſacrificed, v. 12. *Chap.*22.29. *Chap.*34.18. But by the firſt-born here is ſhewed that the males onely are to be underſtood, as was noted before, Chap. 12.5. to figure out the perfection and beſt ſtrength required to be ſpent in Gods ſervice. For the firſt-born of men the Levites were taken, and for the firſt-born of cattel their cattel, Numb. 3.41. and for thoſe that were more of all the children of Iſrael at that time of numbering, five ſhekels apiece were appointed to be taken by the poll, being ſhekels of the Sanctuary, that is, 2 ſhil. 6 pence the ſhekel, and given to the Levites, v. 47,48, &c. Afterwards ſuch firſtlings as fell of clean beaſts, were after ſeven dayes to be given to the Lord, becauſe as Rab. Menahem hath it, in ſeven dayes there was a Sabbath to ſanctifie it, but before the ſeventh day of the age was paſt, it was not lawfull to kill it for common uſe, Exod. 22. 30. Calvin ſaith, that in appointing the eighth day, it was alluded to Circumciſion upon the eighth day, and that before this time it was nought worth, and ſo unworthy to be offered up in ſacrifice. The words tranſlated, every one that firſt openeth the wombe, are v. 12. every apertion or opening of the wombe. And the firſt ripe of their fruits were alſo to be given to the Lord, *Chap.*22.29. As for the firſt-born of men, they were to be redeemed, but with what price is not ſet down here, but, *Numb.*3.47. five ſhekels were appointed, and Numb. 18.16. this was the price from time to time, no more was required of the rich, and the poor paid no leſſe. Heb. 12.23. the faithfull are called, the Congregation of the firſt-born, wherefore in this law of ſanctifying the firſt-born was figured out their Sanctification, and how they ſhould be ſeparated from the reſt of the world, to ſerve God in holineſſe; and likewiſe the whole people of Iſrael, Exod. 4.22. for as they by the blood of the Paſchall lamb, ſo we by the blood of Chriſt, are ſaved from death, and do therefore owe our lives to the Lord. Chriſt is alſo called the firſt-born amongſt many brethren, and therefore the ſanctifying of the firſt-born figured him out, and the prime of our ſtrength and actions which ſhould be ſanctified to the Lord,

the

Exod.13.12.

R. Menahem Maimony Treatiſe of forbidden meats, ch. 4. *Sect.*4. Calvin.

Note.

And Moſes ſaid unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, &c. Here the ſecond time Moſes putteth the people in minde of keeping duly the Feaſt of the Paſſeover, and then according to that which the Lord further ſaid unto him, *v.*1,2. he delivereth to them the law of ſeparating every of their firſt-born unto the Lord, *v.*12,13. If it be demanded, why he remembreth the ſame thing here over again? The Hebrews anſwer, to intimate a ſecond and more myſticall ſenſe of the Paſſeover beſides the firſt, viz. that hereby our Saviour Chriſt might be figured out, who was to come; as in reſpect of things paſt, it was a memoriall of their deliverance out of Egypt: ſo Simlerus, who alſo addeth, that this repetition is made to inculcate it the more into their mindes, that they might never forget ſo great a benefit, or to keep this ſolemnity in remembrance of it.

Verſe 3.

Queſt.

Simlerus.

This day came ye out in the moneth of Abib. Here firſt, the firſt moneth hath a name given unto it, but of this name enough hath been already ſaid, Chap. 12.2. In Canaan the corn was eared, and began to be ripe at this time, and therefore in way of thankfulneſſe and acknowledgement, that all increaſe of the fruits of the earth came from God, the firſt fruits were appointed to be brought and offered to the Lord.

Verſe 4.

And when the Lord ſhall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, Hittites, &c.

Verſe 5.

Here

Here the time of beginning to keep this Feaſt from year to year is ſet down. Before they came in that land they were fed with Manna, ſo that they had neither leavened bread nor unleavened to keep this Feaſt withall. Here are five Nations onely mentioned, the other two Gergeſites and Perezites underſtood are ſupplied in the Septuagints tranſlation. And he ſpeaketh of this Countreys flowing with milk and honey, to intimate that they would be moſt apt in the midſt of ſuch plenty to forget their former poor eſtate, and therefore even then eſpecially he biddeth them remember this ſervice. Of the meaning of this phraſe, flowing with milk and honey, ſee before, Chap. 3. 17. And of ſpeaking hereof to their ſonnes injoyned, verſe 6, 7. ſee Chap. 12. 26.

Verſe 6,7,8. Verſe 9.

And this ſhall be for a ſigne upon thine hand, and for a memoriall betweene thine eyes, &c. To the ſame effect it is ſpoken again, v. 16. and again, Deut. 6. 8. Deut. 11. 18. and Numb. 15. 38. they are commanded to have fringes upon their garments in their borders, and upon them a riband of blew for a remembrance of all the Commandements of the Lord to do them; and Deut. 22. 12. The Jews upon theſe grounds made them little rolles of parchment, and upon them wrote four Sections out, called Peraſhoth 1 Sanctifie unto me every firſt-born, &c. from Verſe 2. of this 13 Chap. to the end of v. 10. 2 And it ſhall be when the Lord ſhall bring thee into the land, &c. from v. 11. to the end of v. 16. 3 Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God, the Lord is one, &c. Deut. 6. 4. to the end of v. 9. 4 And it ſhall be, if ye hearken diligently to my Commandements, &c. Deut. 11. 13. to the end of v. 21. And theſe four rolles were ſeverally covered with leather, and being all folded in one piece tied upon the head with ſtrings from the crown to the forehead. And the ſame four Sections were again written in one piece of parchment in four columns, and tied to the left arme with ſtrings neer the elbow, that they might be before their eyes, and neer to their heart. But the Sadducees wore them upon their forehead and hand. And ſo preciſe were the Jews about the writing out of theſe paſſages, that unleſſe they were written word for word without any fail or alteration, they held them unlawfull to be worne. And ſo ſuperſtitiouſly opinionated were they of them, that they counted great vertue to be in the wearing of them, for they taught, that whileſt a man had theſe on upon his head and arme, he was meek and fearing God, and not drawn away by laughter or vain meditation, nor conceived any evill thoughts, but turned his heart to the words of Truth and Juſtice. Their chief time of putting them on was when they went to prayer, or to reading the Law, wherefore they called them Tephillin, Oratories or Prayer-ornaments in the Chaldee tongue, although they allowed the wearing of them by day at all other times alſo, except upon the Sabbath, becauſe it is ſaid, the Sabbath ſhould be a ſigne unto them: but they allowed not the wearing of them by night. Thus Maimony. The word uſed, v 16. is טוטפות Totaphoth, which we render frontlets, the Septuagint Phylacteria, conſervatories, or keepers in memory. Chryſoſtome and ſome others think, that by this conſtitution of the Lord they were tied to weare theſe memorials about them, but Jerome and others that the meaning was onely that they ſhould alwayes have the law before the eyes of their minde, and put the ſame in practice: ſee my Expoſition Matth. 23. 5. In imitation hereof ſuperſtitious perſons under the Goſpel uſed to wear amulets with a piece of the Goſpel written therein, placing great holineſſe in thus doing, but this was long ago condemned by the Council at Antioch. The beaſts marke is ſaid to be in the forehead, and upon the right hand, Revel 13. 16. I think with Jerome, that the meaning is not, that they ſhould outwardly weare any writing, but onely by theſe ſpeeches is meant that they ſhould have them in their minde, and do accordingly, as we may gather from Deut. 6. 6, 7, 8. Prov 6. 21. ſo likewiſe Simlerus, who ſaith, that herein it was alluded to the cuſtome of the Heathen, who ware earings, and other enſignes in honour of their gods.

Maimony in Tephillin, chap. 4. Sect. 3.

Synod. Antioch.

Simlerus.

When

When the Lord shall bring thee into the land of Canaan, &c. Thou shalt set apart unto the Lord all that openeth the Matrix, &c. In Hebrew it is, Thou shalt make to passe to the Lord; what this is, is shewed, *v.*15. viz. to make to passe through the fire, to sacrifice. See also *Deut.*18.10. 2 *King.*16.3. *Ezech.*20.26. *Levit.*18.21. *Numb.*18.17. In the Septuagint it is, Thou shalt set apart, that is, from thine own to the use of the Lord, to the same effect.

Verse 11,12

But every first-born of an asse thou shalt redeem with a kid, and if not, break his neck. Touching the redeeming of their sonnes, see before, *v.*1,2. for Asse, Numb. 18.15. is unclean beasts, but this, as R. Solomon Jarchi hath it, was the asse onely. The word translated kid, signifieth lamb or kid, as was shewed before, *Exod.*12. and this was to be given unto the Priest, *Numb.*18.15. After the redemption made, a man might use his asse, but otherwise not, Deut 15.19. For break the neck, the Targum Hierosolym. hath, kill it, the same word is rendered, cut off the neck, Deut. 21.4. The redeeming of the first-born of an asse with a lamb, figured out the changing of our unclean nature into innocency, as Gregory speaketh, saying, what is signified by an asse, but uncleanesse? what by a sheep but innocency? therefore the first-born of an asse must be changed for a sheep, that is, the beginnings of an unclean life must be turned to the simplicity of innocency, that after a sinner hath done those things, which being unclean the Lord refuseth, he may now bring forth such clean things, as he may offer in sacrifice unto him.

Verse 13. R. Solomon Iarchi. Gregor. Quid per asinum nisi immunditia, quid per ovem, nisi innocentia designatur? Asini ergo primogenitum ove mutare est immundæ vitæ primordia ad innocentiæ simplicitatem convertere, ut postquam illa peccator egit, quæ immunda Dominus respuit, eam agendo proferat quæ Dei sacrificio imponat.

And it came to passe, when Pharaoh let the people go, that the Lord led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, though that was neer, &c.

Verse 17. Aben Ezra. Philo de vita Mosis. Gen.10.19.

How neer the Philistines were to Egypt, and what cause there was that the Hebrews should be afraid of them, we may gather, 1 Chron. 7.21,22,23. where some are said to come from Gath, which was in the Philistines Countrey and to have slain some of the children of Ephraim, for whom Ephraim their father mourned many dayes. Aben-Ezra saith, that the way through the Philistines Countrey from Egypt to the land of Canaan was but 10 dayes journey; and Philo, that the bounds of the land of Canaan were from Egypt but three dayes journey. The bounds are said to be from Sidon to Gerar and Gaza, which Gerar and Gaza were part of the Philistines Countrey, Gen 20. *Josh.*10. and Gerar was between Cades and Sur, which Sur was neer to Egypt, for the Hebrews having passed through the Red-sea, are said presently to have been in the wildernesse of Sur, *Exod.*15. This way of the Philistines which was West and North, the Lord would not lead them, although the neerest and the most usuall way, for this way Alexander came out of Phœnicia into Egypt, by Rinocorura, Gaza and Azotus, but East and Southward to the Red-sea, and so forth about by huge desarts. And the reason is rendered, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and return into Egypt. This was one speciall reason, because they not being used to war, but to servile labour were cowardly and fearfull, and so might, if the Philistines being a warlike people should come out against them, be moved forthwith to return into Egypt again, and the shortnesse of the way might be a motive unto them. For how timerous they were, even when they had seen many experiments of Gods Providence fighting for them, and doing miraculously for their sustentation, appeareth, because when they were come to Cadesh-Barnea, hearing that the inhabitants of Canaan were mighty, they would have made them a Captain to lead them back into Egypt again, although they knew not any way but through the Red-sea, and many vast and barren wildernesses. Scholast. Histor. Non duxit eos per Palestinam, propter antiquum odium patrum, tum pro mandato Domini jubentis, ut duceretur populus ad montem Sinai, ad immolandum ibi. Whereas it may be said, that even in this way they went not without war, for when they were in Rephidim, the Amalekites came out to fight against them. I answer, that this was above 40 dayes after their coming out of Egypt, for from hence they went immediately to Sinai, where the Law was given, and the time of their coming thither is noted to have been

Numb.14.

Object.

Exod.17.

been the third moneth after their comming out of Egypt, that is, as vvill appear to him that ſhall compute it from the 14 of the firſt moneth 46 dayes, and from Rephidim to Sinai vvere but eight miles. And in this ſpace of time they had ſeen the Egyptians drovvned, and many vvonders more done for them to confirme them; vvhereas if they had been led directly into the Philiſtines Countrey, they might haply have met vvith enemies vvithin four or five dayes, being without theſe experiments of Gods favour. Another reaſon of leading the people ſo farre about, was to tempt and to try them, what was in their minde, and whether they would keep his Commandements, and to give them proofs of his Providence in feeding them ſo miraculouſly.

Deut.8.2,3.

Queſt. But what is this that he ſaith, leſt peradventure, did not God certainly know what they would do? Anſw. This is ſpoken according to the manner of men, wiſely providing againſt thoſe adverſe things that might happen, and that it might appear, that the will of man is not enforced by neceſſity to the evill which he doth, but that he doth it of his own will. But could not God have deſtroyed thoſe Philiſtines before them, and ſo have given them a paſſage; and if ſo, why is this alledged as a reaſon? I anſwer, the Lord yet did thus to teach us, that we muſt wiſely provide as much as in us lieth to avoid dangers ſo farre as we can, and not caſt our ſelves needleſly upon his miraculous power. Hereby it is ſhewed, ſaith Auguſtine, that all things ought to be done which may rightly be done by counſell to avoid adverſity, even when God is apparantly an helper. Rupertus ſaith, that God would have the Philiſtines reſerved by them to puniſh his people afterwards ſinning againſt him, and therefore he would not now lead them through their land to deſtroy them. And this was alſo, ſaith he, done in a myſtery, to ſhew that when God bringeth a man out of the Egypt of ſin, he ſpareth him for a time after his converſion, not ſuffering Satan to fight againſt him by his temptations, becauſe he is yet weak and tender, and not able to bear them. So likewiſe Gregory, *Moral. lib.*24 *cap.*13. He ſuffereth not one newly converted to be aſſaulted as yet with temptations of the world, the fleſh, and the Devil, leſt they ſhould be driven back from the ſervice of God, wherein they have begun. So Chriſt would have his Diſciples let go, when he was taken, and God, ſaith the Apoſtle, will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that, which ye ſhall be able to bear.

Queſt.

Auguſt. quæſt. 49. in Exod. Hinc oſtenditur omnia fieri debere quæ rectè conſilio fieri poſſunt, ad evitanda adverſa, etiam cùm Deus apertiſſime eſt adjutor.

*Rupert. lib.*2 *in Exod. cap.*26.

1 Cor.10.13.

Verſe 18. And the children of Iſrael went up armed out of Egypt. The word tranſlated armed is חמשים five, and accordingly it is by Theodotion rendered πεμπαιξενλες five and five, after the manner of Souldiers marching But becauſe the word ſignifieth five, and a man having his ſword on, girdeth it againſt his fifth rib, Pagninus rendereth it, accincti; Aquila, καθωπλισμένοι; ſo likewiſe R. Solomon and the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and Jerome, who ſaith, that the whole Bench of the Jewiſh Doctours herein ſubſcribe to Aquila, armed. The Septuagint, in the fifth Generation, but erroneouſly, for God promiſed, that they ſhould go out in the fourth. And armed they could not be, although the word be uſed in this ſenſe, Joſ. 1.14.*c.*4.12. *Judg.*7.11. Becauſe Joſephus ſaith, that the Hebrews went unarmed out of Egypt, but when the Armour of the Egyptians was driven upon the ſhoare, they being drowned in the Red-ſea, Moſes diſtributed their Armour amongſt them. And it is not probable, that Egyptians fearing them for their exceeding great number would ſuffer them to keep any Armour in their houſes. Scholaſt. Hiſtor. Armati, i.e. multâ ſupellectile muniti; whereas ſome think, that they might borrow Armour, as other things of the Egyptians to defend themſelves in the way, it is but a conjecture, becauſe they were not bidden ſo to do. According to this of going in order five and five, holdeth alſo Simlerus, and Oleaſter, and Calvin, who accordingly rendereth the word חמשים, diſpoſiti. They went not out then tumultuouſly after the manner of runawayes, but marſhalled into ranks.

Gen.15.

Joſeph.

Toſtatus. Lyranus. Simlerus. Oleaſter. Calvin.

Verſe 19. And Moſes took with him the bones of Joſeph, for he had made the children of Iſrael ſweare, &c.

The

The Hebrews ſay, that when they ſought for the Cheſt with Joſephs bones, and could not finde it, immediately a Sheep ſtood by them, and ſpake, and ſhewed them the place, where it was, for which cauſe they carried that Sheep with them into the wilderneſſe, calling it Joſephs ſheep, and according to this, they ſay it was ſpoken in the Pſalme, which leadeſt Joſeph as a ſheep; but this is an invention of theirs. And no better is that of Comeſtor in his Scholaſticall Hiſtory upon Exod. 37. that the place where Joſephs bones lay, being drowned at that time with the overflowing of Nilus more then ordinary, Moſes wrote the name יהוה in a plate of Gold, and caſt it into the water, and this ſwam upon the water, till it was over the place, where Joſephs bones were, and ſo they took them up, and they propheſied of the difficulty of the journey, which they ſhould have, according to that, Eccleſ. 49. The bones of Joſeph, after his death propheſied; but that is to be underſtood only, that they did prophetically as it were demonſtrate their departure out of Egypt to come: As they, ſaith Ferus, going out of Egypt took Joſeph with them, ſo muſt we take Jeſus with us, when we turne from our ſinnes. Of Joſephs adjuring his Brethren to carry his bones, and whether the like were done touching the reſt of the Patriarchs, ſee Gen. 50.

Hebræi.

Thus ſaith Pererius, Gen. 50. but I no where finde it in Comeſtor. Scholaſt. hiſtor.

And they took their journey from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the Wilderneſſe. Verſe 20.

Etham vvas eight miles from Succoth: Etham vvas a City, but then deſert, ſaith the Scholaſt. Hiſtory, by Joſephus called Lycus, and afterwards, when Cambyſes waſted Egypt, Babylon vvas built there, but not Nebuchadnezzars Babylon, but another.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels. Scholaſt. hiſtor.

And the Lord went before them by day in a Pillar of a Cloud to lead them in the way, and by night in a Pillar of fire to give them light, that they might go on both day and night, &c. v. 22. Verſe 21. Becauſe in the vaſt Wilderneſſes, through which they were to paſſe, the way would have been uncertaine, the Lord erecteth a viſible ſigne to guide them, in the forme of a Pillar erect, called therefore a Pillar, as ſmoak ariſing in this forme, Judg. 20. 40. and Joel. 2. 30. is called Pillar of ſmoake. The Lord that went in this Pillar, was the Angel of the Lord, Chap. 14. 19. The uſe of this Piller was. 1 To guide them in the way. 2 To inlighten them in the dark time of the night. 3 To ſhadow them, and cool them in the heat of the Sun, vvhich vvould othervviſe have been grievous to be borne. Pſal 105. 39. He ſpread a Cloud for a covering. 1 Cor. 10. 2. They were all Baptized in the cloud. Thus the Hebrevvs ſay, that they vvere covered from the heat of the Sun vvith that Pillar of a Cloud 40 yeares ſo likevviſe Lyranus, Hugo de Sancto Victore; Ambroſe, Juſtine Martyr, vvho ſaith, that it defended them both from heat and cold; and Genebrard ſaith, that of this Pillar there vvas a three fold uſe. 1 To guide them in the vvay, becauſe in thoſe vaſt Wilderneſſes, vvhere the ſands are continually blovvn about vvith the vvindes, no vvay can be diſcerned, but Travellers muſt uſe Inſtruments to direct them, as Mariners upon the Sea. 2 To protect them from their enemies, for to this end did God remove it and place it behinde the children of Iſrael betwixt them and the Egyptians, Chap 14. 3 To ſhadow and protect them from the heat of the Sun, which in theſe deſarts of Arabia and of the Saracens was moſt ſcorching. Yet becauſe in reaſon this pillar could not cover them, ſaith Toſtatus, it is not to be held that it did, being properly underſtood, but that the Lord being in this pillar did ſo temper the air about this hoſt, that they were not annoyed with the heat of the Sun, no more then if they had been ſhadowed with a Cloud therefrom. For, 1 The figure of it being as a pillar was not fit for a covering. 2 It is ſaid often to have covered the Ark, but not the whole hoſt, that which covered it, being indeed unfit to cover a place of ſo great extent. 3 It went continually before them, except at one time, when the Egyptians purſued them, ſo that except the Sun had alwayes been in their faces, it could not ſhadow them continually: thus alſo Cajetan. Some, conſidering theſe reaſons, Hebræi. Lyranus. Hugo de Sancto Victore. Ambroſ. in Pſ. 118. Juſt. Martyr Dial. cum Typhone. Genebrard. in Pſal. 104.

Toſtatus.

think, that there were two Clouds, one like a pillar to direct, and the other to ſhadow them. But becauſe here is mention made of one onely, this is to be rejected. One Cloudy pillar being at the firſt appearance, and at ſundry other times in the forme of a pillar erect, might at the pleaſure of God be ſo dilated, as neceſſity required in the manner of a Cloud, as that hereby the whole hoſt might be ſhadowed, and yet again at ſtanding times ſo contracted, as that it might appear for the moſt part over the Arke onely. The fourth uſe of this pillar was that which hath been already touched by Genebrard, to protect them from their enemies. The fifth, that out of it the Lord ſpake to Moſes, and revealed his will divers times unto him, Pſal.99.7.

This pillar appearing by day as a Cloud, and by night as a light fire, although it may ſeem to have been double, yet it was but one onely, one ſide whereof was cloudy and dark, and the other ſide ſhining and light, Chap 14. 20. ſo that when it appeared as a Cloud, the dark ſide was turned to Iſrael; but when as fire, the light ſide. If it be demanded, when it began firſt to appear? Jerome ſaith, that now in Etham it appeared firſt, for here firſt is mention made of the appearing thereof: but this reaſon proveth it not, ſeeing Moſes is not ſaid to have taken the bones of Joſeph away with him, till their comming to Succoth had been ſpoken of, which was notwithſtanding done before, and therefore this pillar might alſo appear before, although it be not ſpoken of till now: and ſome hold more probably, that it appeared at their firſt coming from Rameſes, becauſe they had as much need of a guide then as now. And the time of the appearing of this pillar unto them was 40 years, even till they entered into Canaan, as may be gathered hence, v.22. He took not away the pillar of a Cloud by day, nor, &c. The ſame uſe ſtill continued of it till then, viz. to guide them in the way, ſtanding ſtill over the Arke when they were not to journey, and removing and going before them when they ſhould journey. There were divers continued miracles all that time, whereof this was one; another was the feeding of them with Manna: a third, their garments waxed not old in ſo many years, neither did their feet ſwell: and a fourth, there was not amongſt ſo many thouſands one feeble perſon, ſo that they had need in their travels either to ſtay for him, or to leave him behinde. When the pillar moved, the Levites took up the Ark, and followed, and Moſes uſed theſe words, Ariſe (O Lord) and let thine enemies be ſcattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee. When it ſtood, they ſet it down, and then he uſed theſe words, Return, O Lord, to the multitude of the hoſt of Iſrael. And all this was alſo done in a myſtery, Chriſts guiding of us towards the heavenly reſt being figured out hereby, as is intimated by the Prophet Eſay, ſaying, When the Lord ſhall have waſhed the daughter of Sion, he will create upon every dwelling place a Cloud, and ſmoak by day, and the ſhining of a flaming fire by night. And accordingly he baptized with water anſwering to the Cloud, and with fire, Math.3.11. 1 Cor.10.2. As a pillar, ſo he with his ſtrength ſupporteth us in our infirmity and weakneſſe. 2 As that pillar, ſo he guideth us; for I am, ſaith he, the way, the truth, and the life. 3 He is, as that, both a Cloud for his humane nature, and a fire for his divine; as long as it was night, he was onely fire, that is, God; but when the day began to appear, he was made a Cloud, that is, man, his Divinity being covered under his humane nature. 4 As the light is greater in the day, though the Sun be covered with a Cloud then in the night, although fire ſhineth; ſo he having taken upon him our nature, the light was greater then in the night of the Old Teſtament, when he gave light onely in the fire of his divine. 5 Chriſt is ſtill a fire, that is, terrible to the wicked, and ſo will be at the laſt day; and a Cloud, that is, milde and comfortable to the godly. 6 Chriſt is a fire in the night, to enlighten thoſe that in humility acknowledge their own darkneſſe, but he is a Cloud in the day, hiding himſelfe from the proud, according to that, I came into the world; that the blinde might ſee, and the ſeeing be made blinde; and again, Queſt. Hieron. Epiſt. ad Fabiolam de 42 manſion.

Num.9.17,18.

Deut.8.4.

Pſal.105.37.

Num.10.35,36

The Myſtery.

Eſay 4.4,5.

Ferus.

John 14 6.

Thou

Thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe, and revealed them to babes. Thus Ferus. And Rupertus before him ſaith, In every place of this heaven of the Scripture occurre bright ſtarres, all looking to the fountain of their light, viz. the true Sun Chriſt, &c. Rupertus lib. 2. in Exod cap. 8. Ubiq; in hoc ſanctæ Scripturæ Cœlo lucida occurrunt ſidera, omnia in fontem ſui luminis; ſcilicet in verum ſolem, Chriſtum reſpicientia, &c. Quiſnam hic Dux itineris, niſi qui & Dux & via nobis eſt, Jeſus Chriſtus; ipſe nimirum columna ignis, qua verus Deus, &c. Sol ut tolerari poſſit, venit in nube, id eſt, Deus ut cum hominibus verſaretur venit in carne, ſecundùm illud, Eſa. 19. 1. Ecce aſcendet Dominus ſuper nubem levem, & ingredietur Egyptum, &c. Et ad quid hujuſmodi columna nos præceſſit? niſi ut oſtenderet nobis viam fugiendi à Pharaone, id eſt, à diabolo, & aperiret nobis viam Maris rubri, id eſt, gratiam baptiſmi ſanguine ſuo rubentis, & ingreſſi poſt nos Egyptii cum Pharaone, id eſt, baptizatos nos idolatræ perſequentes perirent de memoria noſtra cum diis ſuis, ſecundùm illud, Eſa. 19. 1. & movebuntur ſimulachra Egypti à facie ejus. Origen ſaith, that Etham ſignifieth fortitude, and Othon his ſignes, according to that which was here done.

John 9. Matth. 11.

Origen.

CHAP. XIV.

AND the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, Speak to the children of Iſrael, that they turn and encampe before Pihahiroth, betwixt Migdol and the ſea, over againſt Baalzephon.

Verſe 1,2

The word Pi ſignifieth mouth, ſo that it was the mouth of Hahiroth, ſignifying, as ſome ſay, liberty; others, a den; others, a mountain; and laſtly, others, ſcratching, becauſe of the ragged rocks that were there: ſo Simlerus. One expoundeth it, a mouth cut or carved out, ſaying, that it was 16 miles from Etham. This place had the name from the forme thereof, being a place between two huge rocks or mountains, the Sea being before. And becauſe they are bidden to turn thither, we may gather, that they went not at this remove ſtreight on, but kept neer unto Egypt, the Lord appointing it that Pharaoh might be drawn to purſue them, as intangled here to his own deſtruction. The word Migdol ſignifieth a Tower, and it was the name of a City of the Egyptians, Jer. 44. 1. ſo that they being between this and the Sea, and hemmed in on both ſides with mountaines, were in a place moſt diſadvantageous for them, and advantageous for the enemy to purſue and deſtroy them. Thus Pet. Comeſtor ſaith, that they turned towards Egypt, and pitched their tents in Pharaohs Countrey, for Migdol was a Town in Egypt, to which they fled in Jeremiahs time, when Gedaliah was ſlain.

Simlerus. Numb. 33. 8

Hen Bunting Patriarchs travels.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Baalzephon was the Temple of an Idol of the Egyptians ſo called, and therefore in the Targum Hieroſolym it is rendered, the Idol of Zephon. Baalzephon ſignifieth the Lord of defence, becauſe they held that this their god reſiſted fugitive ſervants: but by this place God would carry them, to ſhew the vanity of this Idol. Origen turning this into an Allegory ſaith, that Pihahiroth is os nobilium, Migdol, turris, and Baalzephon, Dominus Aquilonis: for by the mouth of Doctours we muſt be turned to the Tower of vertue, and remember to fight againſt the Lord of the North. He expoundeth alſo Baalzephon, aſcenſio ſpeculæ, aſcending being by work, and ſeeing by faith.

Targum Hieroſolymitanum.

Origen.

This was a ſtrange thing, when the leading of them into Canaan was propounded, to turn them again towards Egypt. But God would thus try their faith, draw forth Pharaoh to his deſtruction, and magnifie his power, that they all might more firmly believe. So we in our travell towards heaven, muſt look for many a turn-again through ſtraits and adverſities.

Ferus.

And Pharaoh will ſay, They are intangled in the land, the wilderneſſe hath ſhut them in. If they had gone ſtreight on, three dayes being now paſt, Pharaoh could not have had any hope, if he ſhould purſue, to overtake them; but now ſeeing them to return, as held ſtill in his land, the Hebrewes ſay, he thought that Baalzephon by his divine power held them there, and ſo he doubted not but by the help of his God he ſhould bring them back to his ſervitude again: thus Simlerus.

Note. Verſe 3.

Simlerus.

Verſe 4. And I will harden Pharaohs heart, &c. By this means contrary to mans reaſon God provideth for the ſafety of his, and for a full revenge taking upon Pharaoh, ſaying, that thus he would be glorified. And indeed now was his power fully glorified, and likewiſe greateſt glory redounded unto him, when Chriſt by his death overcame the Devill.

Ferus.

Verſe 5.6,7. Verſe 8,9. News being now brought to Pharaoh, both he & his ſervants reſolve to purſue them, and he went out with 600 chariots, &c. Theſe chariots were choice chariots, moſt probably the beſt armed, there being in all likelihood many more, for it is further ſaid, and all the chariots of Egypt, and his horſe-men, and his whole army, as Joſephus hath it, of 50000 horſe-men, and 200000 foot. Pharaoh with all his army being come neer them, it is ſaid that they went out with an high hand; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, capite aperto, that is, cheerfully and boldly, without all fear, not running away like fugitives, as it had been told to Pharaoh.

Chald. Paraphraſt.

Verſe 10,11 But when they ſaw this great army purſuing them, They were greatly afraid, and cried to the Lord. Verſe 11. And ſaid to Moſes, Was it, becauſe there were no graves in Egypt, that thou haſt brought us out to die in the deſart, &c?

Queſt. It is a queſtion here, how they could be ſaid to have cried unto the Lord, and yet to have expoſtulated with Moſes, who was the Miniſter of the Lord? Calvin anſwereth, that it is not to be thought, that ſome of the moſt godly cried to the Lord, and the reſt expoſtulated thus, becauſe the ſame that cried are ſaid to have uſed theſe words, neither is there any diſtinction made in the relation. But when they had through fear, as all men by the inſtinct of nature being in great danger do, cried to the Lord in a tumultuary manner, they madly expoſtulate with Moſes, ſhewing not onely how little they had profited in faith by all the forepaſſed ſignes, but great ingratitude and impudency in that they durſt commemorate their former murmurings, to juſtifie themſelves herein, and to condemn the Lord in his ſervant Moſes, and that with an Irony. But they looked, as Ferus ſaith, at the Egyptians purſuing them, not at the pillar before them, which was the cauſe that they were ſo terrefied. And who can look at the multitude of his ſinnes, and at the helliſh hoſt herewith purſuing him, but he muſt needs ſhake through fear, if he doth not alſo look to the pillar ſet to protect him, Chriſt Jeſus?

Calvin.

Ferus.

Verſe 13. And Moſes ſaid to the people, Fear not, ſtand ſtill, and behold the ſalvation of the Lord, &c. Moſes being greatly urged by the rebellious and unbelieving people, ſheweth his great meekneſſe, in that ſparing to reprove their murmurings he onely comforteth them in this extremity. In bidding them ſtand ſtill, he meaneth that they ſhould be quiet and without perturbation in their minde, and although they were able to do nothing to defend themſelves againſt the Egyptians, yet they ſhould not be troubled, for they ſitting ſtill and doing nothing God would fight for them.

Verſe 15. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, why crieſt thou to me? ſpeak to the children of Iſrael to go forward. This is by Calvin rendered by the preterpluperfect tenſe, God had ſpoken, holding that he had this Revelation before he comforted the people. But if not, he ſpake out of a firme faith, whereby he was fully perſwaded without particular Revelation at this time, that God would deliver them, and having ſpoken, he had this Revelation for further confirmation. Moſes was a man full of the Spirit, and hereby was guided to ſpeak upon the ſudden, as God by and by ſhewed, that it ſhould be. Why crieſt thou to me? The children of Iſrael are ſaid to have cried to the Lord, *v.*10. but amongſt them none is ſpoken of as crying to the Lord, but Moſes; their crying was onely the fruit of a troubled minde, and of an unpatient ſpirit, breaking out by and by into murmuring, and therefore the Lord would not hear it. Many may pray, but yet he onely is accounted to pray, that in faith and obedience crieth

Calvin.

Note. Ferus.

crieth unto God, and he onely ſhall be regarded. The Chaldee Paraphraſt relating Gods anſwer, ſaith, I have accepted thy prayer, ſpeak to the children of Iſrael, &c. intimating that he cried to the Lord for pardon, fearing leſt they ſhould be deſtroyed for that their murmuring. Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Verſe 16.

Lift up thy rod, and ſtretch out thy hand upon the Sea, and divide it, &c. This Sea is before ſaid to have been the Red-ſea, Chap 13.*v.*18. but touching the reaſon of this name divers ſpeak diverſly. Some think it was ſo called from the red ſcales that grow therein, being therefore called in Scripture the ſcaly ſea: ſome from the red ſand upon the ſhore thereof: ſome, that it ſeemeth by reaſon of the Sun-beames reflecting upon it from the mountains adjoyning, for it is not of a red colour in the water but cleer, as the reſt of the Ocean. Strabo ſaith, that it was ſo called from Erithrea, the ſon of Perſeus and Andromeda, who dwelt in the Iſland thereof, and ἐρυθρὸς in Greek is red or purple. It is alſo called the Arabian gulf, and by the Hebrews, Jam Suph, a ſcaly ſea: thus Henry Bunting. Andreas Maſius ſaith, that it was called the Red-ſea from a certain kinde of red herbe, wherewith the ſhores of that ſea abounded, and Stephanus, ſaith he, citeth Uranius a Punick Writer, who ſaith that the rain falling upon the mountains, and ſo down into this Sea gives it a red colour. R. Solomon ſaith, that Suph ſignifieth a bulruſh, and that from the bulruſhes it is called Jam Suph, a bulruſhy ſea. Cteſius Gnidius, that a certain fountain running with red water floweth into it. The opinion moſt commonly followed by Pliny, Pomponius Mela and the Greeks is, that Erithrea before ſpoken of, gave the name to it, who in times paſt reigned there. Hen. Bunting. Patriarchs travels. *Strabo lib.*16. *Andr. Maſius in cap.*2. Joſuæ. R. Solomon.

Verſe 21.

Here God biddeth Moſes ſtretch out his hand, and ſo he with a ſtrong Eaſt-winde blowing all that night made a dry way through the Red-ſea. The Septuagint render it a South-winde, and Philo likewiſe, but erroneouſly. The vulgar Latine, a ſtrong winde, not naming the part from whence it blew. The winde raiſed was the meanes, but God wrought extraordinarily hereby, otherwiſe it could not have blown the waters away to the bottome, and divide and hold them ſo one part from another in one continued track of ground. Pet. Comeſtor following the Hebrew Doctours, ſaith, that there were twelve diviſions made for the twelve Tribes to paſſe ſeverally, and then Moſes exhorting them to follow him, Reuben, Simeon and Levi feared ſo to do, but Judah entered firſt, being therefore worthy of the Kingdome. Moreover, the Hebrews ſay, that in their journey through this Sea, they went not directly on, but wheeled about, as the boſome of an huge mountain lay into the Sea, thus arriving again on the ſame ſide, from which they entered, but on the other ſide of the mountain: for the Sea was ſo ſpacious, that they could not go through in one night, as they did, and ſuch is the nature of the Sea that it caſteth up any thing drowned therein the ſame way that it entered, and accordingly it is to be held, that it caſt up the dead bodies and armour of the Egyptians, wherefore they being caſt up on the ſhore, where the Iſraelites came and armed themſelves with them, it appeareth that they arrived again upon the ſame ſide; thus he out of the Hebrews traditions. If there were twelve diviſions made in this Sea, they muſt needs be the ſooner over, but we have nothing but tradition for this, and it is not probable, becauſe they all followed Moſes, who could not go but in one path, and if there had been more, Pharaoh ſhould have been doubtfull which way to take after them; to ſay nothing that the miracle had been ſo much the greater, and therefore Moſes certainly would for the greater glory of God have made mention of it. Theodoret therefore rejecteth that of twelve diviſions as fabulous, ſaying, that we ought to follow the undoubted verity of the Scriptures; ſo likewiſe Euthymius and Lyranus. But Origen relateth it, as having heard it of his Anceſtours, and ſaith, that he thought he was bound in piety towards them not to conceal it Toſtatus approveth it, and Genebrard alledging for it Aben-Ezra and Epiphanius. Their common reaſon is drawn from *Pſ.*136.13. Septuagint. Philo. Scholaſt. hiſtor. *Theod. quæſt.*25 in Exod. Euthym. in Pſa. 136.13. Lyranus. Origen. Toſtatus. Genebrard. in Pſal.

He

He divided the water into parts, therefore say they into many parts. But to this it is answered, that it is so said, because being one before, now it was parted into two; or if it be read into divisions, the plurall is put for the singular, which is a thing not unusuall in the Scriptures, especially a great and large way being made equall to many divisions. For the fear said to have been in the rest of the Tribes, and that Judah entered first, Jerome speaketh of it by the name of a Jewish fable. Touching their wheeling about and not going directly on to the opposite shore, very learned Expositors are much divided. For Tostatus, Paulus Burgensis, and Thomas Aquinas are for it, alledging both the site of the Land of Canaan, which was such, that if they had gone directly over the Red-sea, they could not have come into that land without returning again, because the Red-sea was the East-border or boundary of Canaan. For the Red-sea, saith Orosius, cometh from the parts of India, and flowveth on the South-side of the Mountain Caucasus in Aracusia, Persia, Media, and other Nations, from thence descending into Arabia, and afterwards into Egypt, all which tract is more Easterly then Canaan, so that the children of Israel going out of Egypt had this Sea on the East, and if they had gone directly over it, they must needs have returned again, otherwise they could not have come into Canaan; the passage to which from Egypt was without coming over any sea, as we may see in Jacobs coming down thither in times past with his droves and in chariots, and Abrahams, &c. Moreover, before they entered the sa they were in the wilderness of Etham, & after this again, Numb. 33. they are said to have wandered three days in the same wilderness, although Exod. 15. 22. it is said that they wandered thus long in the wilderness of Shur, whereby we may gather that Etham and Shur were one wilderness called by these two names. But from these things thus compared together it is plain, that they were in the wilderness of Etham before their passing through the Red-sea, and again after, therefore they went not over to the opposite shore, but because an huge craggy mountain in Etham neer the sea suffered them not to passe, they were let through the Sea, wherein having fetcht a compasse they came up again on the other side thereof in the same wilderness of Etham or Shur, for so it is most probable, that that part of Etham was called, the generall name being Etham, and the particular in that tract Shur.

Hieron. in Hosea 11.

Tostatus.
P. Burgensis.
Tho. Aquinas.

Exod. 23. 31.
Orosius.

On the contrary side Iosephus saith, they went to the opposite shore, and by a singular Providence the dead bodies of the Egyptians were cast up thither, and their armour for the greater comfort of the Israelites, that they might be sure that they were delivered from the Egyptians, and make use of their armour: so likewise Philo, and Lyranus followeth this, labouring to confute the other, and Cajetan; but this last Author delivereth a thing most improbable, viz. that the shore on both sides of the Red-sea was one wilderness of Etham. But the main reason touching the site of the land of Canaan is by them all left altogether untouched. Wherefore till I shall see better reason to the contrary, I hold with Tostatus that in passing through the Red-sea, they onely fetcht a compasse therein, and arrived on the same side of it again, the breadth of an huge mountain in that wilderness onely being between. And the words seem not to set forth any further proceeding in the Sea, then unto the midst, for it is not said, that they went through, but into the midst of the sea.

Joseph. lib. 2. Antiquit.
Philo lib. 3. de vita Mosis.
Lyranus.
Cajetan.

Verse 22.

Verse 23. And the Egyptians pursued, and went in after them, &c. The Egyptians, saith Comestor, thought them mad at the first, when they saw them enter in, but then perceiving that they went safely, they followed.

Scholast. histor.

Verse 24, 25 But in the morning-watch the Lord looked upon the host of the Egyptians, and troubled it, and took off their chariot-wheels, &c. There are four Vigiliæ or watches of the night. 1 Conticinium, or bed-time. 2 Intempestivum. 3 Gallicinium. 4 Antelucanum, and this last is the morning-watch; when God troubled the Egyptian host, sending intolerable showers & grievous Thunders and Lightenings upon upon them, whereby they being terrefied ſought to flee back again when they were now come into the depth of the ſea. And that rain and thunder was ſent upon them firſt to their terrour is moſt probable, becauſe the Lord is ſaid to have looked upon them out of the Cloud: thus alſo Artapanus in Euſebius: and Simlerus ſaith, Either terrours ſurprized their mindes, or they were terrefied with tempeſts. And their horſes being with the tempeſt ſcared brake ſome of their chariot-wheels, or rather the tempeſt braſt them, whereupon they ſaid, Let us flee, for the Lord fighteth for Iſrael; ſo that without doubt the Lord fought againſt them, firſt, by a terrible tempeſt, and then he brought the ſea upon them to their utter deſtruction, ſee *Pſ.*77.17. The Targum Hieroſolym. hath it, God threw down upon them pitch and fire and hail-ſtones, and aſtoniſhed the hoſt of the Egyptians.

Scholast. histor.

Euſebius lib.9. de præparat. Evang.
Simlerus.

And this was done when the morning appeared, that by the light of the day the Iſraelites might ſee Gods judgements upon their enemies, and be thankfull. Verſe 27.

Manethon writing againſt Appion ſaith, that Pharaoh himſelfe was not drowned, but his people, for he reigned after this 25 years: but Pharaoh is expreſly ſpoken of, *v.*8. and *v.*6. Pſal. 136.15. The old opinion of the Hebrews is, that he was drowned laſt of all, that ſeeing his people periſh firſt, he might be the more vexed. Touching this diviſion of the Red-ſea, the Heliopolites in Egypt, ſaith Artapanus, held the ſame, that is here delivered, that Moſes by his rod divided it; but the Memphites, that he being skilfull in the times of ebbing and flowing of this ſea, took his opportunity to lead the Iſraelites over, which the Egyptians beihg ignorant of periſhed. But this muſt needs be moſt falſe. 1 Becauſe that ſea being the Egyptian ſea, they certainly had as much knowledge of it, as any other man could. 2 As Diodorus Tarſenſis, Chryſoſtomes School-maſter reaſoneth, although the ſea ebbing maketh ſome part bare next the ſhore, yet it never is hereby made bare in any part, water ſtanding up as a wall on each ſide, as it did at this time. Joſephus, to make this miraculous diviſion of the ſea the more probable, ſaith, that God did the like once for Alexander and his Army, the Pamphilian ſea made way for them to paſſe that he might deſtroy the Perſian Empire. This, ſaith Strabo, was done, he taking the opportunity of the ebbing of that ſea, and paſſing in a ſtrait place by the mountain Climax, where the ſea uſed to flow, and it being winter, there was notwithſtanding ſo much water, which came down, that they waded an whole day in the water up to the middle. And hitherto hath been ſet forth the departing of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, and the manner and true cauſe thereof, but Manethon, Cheremon, and Lyſimachus Egyptian Writers out of an hatred of the Jews have written of the leproſie and the ſcab amongſt them, which was the cauſe of their expulſion.

Manethon.
Artapanus in Euſebio.
Diodorus Tarſenſis.
Joſeph.lib.2. Antiqu.
Strabo lib.13.

For the myſtery; The Red-ſea figured out baptiſme, as it is applied, 1 Corinthians 10.1. and as the Iſraelites entering the Red-ſea were purſued by the Egyptians, ſo we being baptized are purſued by our ſpirituall enemies, but we having lived a life anſwerable to our baptiſme to the end, come ſafe to the ſhore of happineſſe, ſinging there a new ſong, and all our enemies are deſtroyed for ever by vertue of the red blood of Chriſt ſet forth in baptiſme; for by death he deſtroyed him that had power of death, that is, the devill. We are purſued by them yet whileſt we live, but after death ſet forth alſo by the Iſraelites going into the deep, we ſhall never ſee them nor be troubled with them any more for ever. Wherefore let us comfort our ſelves in this, and not cowardly yield to Satans temptations, but manfully reſiſt them, being aſſured that if we yield not, they ſhall not be able to do us any hurt; for the cloudy and fiery pillar ſtandeth betweén us and them: but aſſaulted we muſt look to be till death bringeth us to the ſhore of everlaſting happineſſe.

The Myſtery.
Revel.14. Chap.15.3. Heb.2.
Note.

And Iſrael believed the Lord and his ſervant Moſes. In the Hebrew it is, Verſe 31.

They-

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

They believed in God, and in his ſervant Moſes; by the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendered, They believed in the Word of the Lord, and in the prophecie of his ſervant Moſes. A like ſpeech is uſed, 2 Chron. 20. 20. Believe in the Lord, and in his Prophets. Exod. 19. 9. 2 Cor. 2. 3. Gal. 5. 10. Iſa. 14. 32. Now there is a diſtinction received in Schools, credere Deum, to believe that there is a God, credere Deo, to believe that which God hath ſaid, to be true, and credere in Deum, to put our confidence in God: according to this laſt we deny credere in hominem aliquem: or in Eccleſiam, holding that our confidence muſt be put in God onely. Wherefore it is not ſo ſpoken in the Scriptures according to this diſtinction alwayes, but that ſometime one is put for another, as Joh. 2. 23. They are ſaid to have believed in Chriſt, to ſome of whom he would not commit himſelf, as knowing that they had not ſuch a perfect confidence in him. Joh. 20. 31. That ye might believe, and believing have eternall life: here ſaving faith is ſet forth by giving credit to, as elſewhere by believing in, and Beth in, and Lamed to, ſaith Simlerus, the moſt learned Hebrews acknowledge to be promiſcuouſly uſed. Wherefore to believe in Moſes, here is no more but to believe his prophecie, according to the Chaldee Paraphraſt; or to put confidence in his faithfulneſs, when they ſaw ſuch ſignes and wonders wrought by him. They believed not in him, as though by his own power he could ſave them, but in God onely, and in him declared mightily to be an Inſtrument under God to ſave them. For we are forbidden ſtreightly to truſt in man, and threatened if we do. Maimony ſaith, that the Jews believed in Moſes now, but not ſo certainly, till they heard God ſpeaking to him out of the Mount, for then they had a confidence in his word, as which they were ſure came from God, but all the ſignes ſhewed before could not work that confidence, becauſe they might be done by Art Magick, but this is onely his conjecture.

Simlerus.

Pſal. 146. 3. Pſal. 20. 8. Maymony in Miſn. c. 8. Sect. 1

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 1. THen Moſes and the children of Iſrael ſung this ſong unto the Lord, ſaying, I will ſing to the Lord, &c.

There are divers holy ſongs made and ſung after this by divers, but none before it; ſo that this is the moſt ancient of all. It may rightly be called an Hymn, or Pæana, or Euchariſticall ſong, becauſe it was made to celebrate the Lords praiſes. It was ſung by Moſes, and the men by themſelves in dances, and then by his Siſter Miriam, and the women playing with Timbrels thereto; ſee the like Judg. 11. 1 Sam. 18. And it ſeemeth to have been the firſt beginning of dances, perverted ſince to vanity and prophaneneſſe. Philo ſaith, Moſes leading the men, ſang one Verſe, and they another, and ſo likewiſe Miriam and the women; he ſinging great, and ſhe ſmall, and ſo likewiſe the whole body of the men great, and the women ſmall, making the more delightfull harmony, but we may note, v. 21, that they ſang the ſame after them. Joſephus ſaith, that Moſes made this ſong in Hexameter Verſes, and that they continued by the ſhore ſeven dayes together, and ever ſince, ſaith he, upon the ſeven Paſſe-over-dayes we go out to the fountains to ſing likewiſe in remembrance hereof. And although the unskilfull Reader, ſaith Jerom, cannot perceive this ſong to be Metricall, yet both it, and almoſt all the ſongs of Scripture, and almoſt the whole book of Job are ſuch, running in a Dactyl and a Spondee, and ſometime for the Idiome of the language they receive other feet of the ſame time, though not of the ſame ſyllables, witneſſe Philo, Joſephus, Origen, Euſebius Caſarienſis, &c. And this he that hath skill in Verſe may eaſily perceive if he looketh into this ſong There were two cauſes, ſaith Simlerus, of compiling it, one to teſtifie this famous deliverance, when ſo many thouſands joyned together in ſetting it forth: the other, to expreſſe high thankfulneſſe to God therefore, and to ſet forth his moſt worthy praiſes.

Philo.

Joſeph.

Hieron. præfat. in Job.

Simlerus.

Rupertus.

Now this Hymne is myſticall, as Rupertus, and after him Ferus hath obſerved, ſerved, our deliverance by Chriſt being herein ſet forth, as well as their deliverance at that time from Pharaoh. And therefore the Church, ſaith Ferus, uſeth this ſong, as is moſt meet, ſeeing the redeemed by Chriſt are ſet forth ſinging it, *Revel.*15.3. and this is to ſing with the voice, and with the ſpirit and underſtanding, as Saint Paul ſpeaketh, to perceive or apprehend the myſtery inwardly, which is ſet forth in the outward fact.

Cantare mente eſt in exteriori facto myſterium intus perſentire.

For he hath triumphed glorioufly, the Horſe and his Rider hath he caſt into the Sea. This was done when Pharaoh and his horſmen were drowned in the Red-ſea, but never did the Lord triumph ſo glorioufly as in our Redemption, his wiſdome, power and mercy ſhining more herein then in the very creation of all things; and ſpecially may he be ſaid to have triumphed glorioufly, when breaking the bands of death he aroſe again and went up into heaven, for then, as one riding in triumph he led captivity captive. The Horſe and his Rider are the world and the devil, ruling it as it were with a bridle, and turning it to all evil. For, according to this, Now, ſaith Chriſt, is the judgement of this world, now ſhall the Prince of this world be caſt out: and as Pharaoh he is caſt into the Sea, that is, into hell, whither his horſe the world ſhall be caſt after him; and therefore take heed that thou be not the devils horſe turned about to vice by his bridle, leſt thou periſh horribly together with him. The horſe, as Philo noteth, may aptly ſet forth the world, becauſe it is a proud and violent kinde of creature, uſed to the warres, and running headily to his own deſtruction, and is moſt unruly and violent in his deſire to the female. And horſes were creatures in which men were moſt apt to put their confidence; for which cauſe it is ſo often inveighed againſt in the Pſalmes, and a charge is given to the Kings of Iſrael not to multiply horſes, for they that had troops of them were hereby puffed up with pride, and by their chariots, thinking their force invincible.

Epheſ.4.8.

John 12.
Eſay 14.

Note.
Rupert. Iſtum aſcenſorem aſcendentem ſuper equum, i.e. ſuper effrænatam ſtultitiam ſuperbientium, & à ſe deceptorum hominum dejecit in profundum lacus, in barathrum ardentis inferni.
Deut.17.

Verſe 2.

The Lord is my ſtrength and ſong, and he is become my ſalvation, &c. Pharaoh, and his army, that ſeemed ſo mighty, were overthrown, and ſo ſtrength appeared to be in God onely, who is therefore alone to be accounted our ſtrength. And worthily may the ſame be ſaid of Chriſt, yea theſe words are uſed in praiſing him, Pſal. 118.14. *Eſa.*12.2. Iſraels ſalvation from Pharaoh, being premiſed, *Eſa.*11.15,16. and then applied to that by Chriſt, ſhewing it, and the praiſe given for it to be typicall, figuring out this. The word tranſlated, the Lord, is יה, firſt uſed here, and ſeldome uſed but in Songs or Pſalmes. The Greeks tranſlate it, Lord, the Chaldee, fear, the Targum Hieroſolym. the fear of all the world, it ſignifieth being, as יהוה doth, and is held by ſome Hebrews to be an abridgement thereof. This is reteined in the Greek, Halelujah, *Revel.*19.1,2,3,4. My ſong, that is, the ſubject of my ſong or melody. Chriſt is called our ſalvation, *Luk.*1.71,74. *Luk.*2.30. He is my God, and I will make him an habitation: in Hebrew זה־אלי this is my God, it is ſpoken in oppoſition to the gods of Egypt, who were no gods, and of no divine power, but vainly ſo called, but the true God, who is of all power, is my God. Lyranus here commemorateth an opinion of the Hebrews, that Moſes meant by this, God manifeſting himſelf by ſome viſible appearance to the people of Iſrael, as a Warriour fighting eagerly for them, ſo as he never did ſhew himſelf at any other time, no not to his Prophets: but he rejecteth it, becauſe no ſuch thing is ſpoken of in the Scripture, yea we may gather from that which is ſpoken in Scripture, that this is moſt falſe, becauſe *Deut.*4. it is ſaid, Ye heard a voice, but ſaw no likeneſſe. God knew the proneneſſe of that people to Idolatry, and therefore he alwayes avoided giving occaſion by ſhewing himſelf in any likeneſſe. I will make him an habitation, the Chaldee Paraphraſt hath it, a Sanctuary; ſo that Moſes together with the people here binde themſelves to ſet up a Tabernacle to God: the Septuagint and vulgar Latine read it, I will glorifie him; but this followeth next, He is the God of my father, and I will exalt him: becauſe it was an impeachment to ſerve a new God, here antiquity is aſcribed unto God, the God of my father Abraham, to whom all the promiſes were made long ago, which begin now to be fulfilled, and then to Iſaac and Jacob, but Abraham was the head and the firſt, with whom God made his Covenant and with them in him, and therefore he ſaith in the ſingular number, The God of my Father. Touching the myſtery, this, ſaith Rupertus, that is, this man ſo much deſpiſed by the Jews, and ſo poor in appearance, even Chriſt Jeſus is my God, and I will make my ſelfe his habitation, for he dwelleth in the heart by faith, and let no man object, that ſo I ſhould ſet up a new god unto me, contrary to the Comandement of the Lord; for even this is the God of our Father Abraham, who ſaw his day and rejoyced.

Lyranus.

The Myſtery.

John 8.

Verſe 3. Exod.4.10.

The Lord is a man of Warre, the Lord is his name. A man of war is an excellent Warriour; as a man of words, one very eloquent; a man of arme, a mighty one, Job 22.8. the Septuagint, a breaker of warres, the Chaldee, a Victour of warres; the name יהוה is elſewhere ſet forth with this addition, of hoſts, the Lord of hoſts, *Pſal.*83.14,19. *Pſal.*46.7,8,12. it ſignifieth a being of power, to execute all judgements upon his enemies for the ſalvation of his elect.

Ferus.

There have been many famous Warriours amongſt men, ſaith Ferus, but none comparable to God, for they all, Pompey, Alexander, Cæſar, &c. when they have ſlain others, have periſhed themſelves, but God continueth for ever. The vulgar Latine rendereth it, The Lord is as a man of warre, his name is omnipotent. From generals Moſes here proceedeth to particular matter of praiſing God, and this notably agreeth alſo to Chriſt in the myſtery: for he, ſaith Rupertus, ſhewed himſelf an excellent Warriour, in that not being to fight againſt fleſh and bloud, but ſpirituall powers, he armed himſelf accordingly, not with ſword and ſpeare, but with humility and obedience againſt their pride, and with charity againſt their malice, and thus he threw down the chariot of the aiery Pharaoh, whereby he thought, he could ride above the altitude of the Clouds, and be like to the moſt high, and his whole army both of vices and Idols, which he had ſet up to be adored as gods, according to that which followeth, *Pharaohs chariots and his hoſt he hath thrown into the ſea, &c. v.*4 thus alſo Ferus; and thus Chriſt is ſpoken of, *Pſal.*24.8. *Revel.*19.11. Pſal. 45. 3.4. And he ſaith not onely his hoſt, but alſo his choſen Captaines, that is, the wiſeſt, nobleſt, ſtouteſt, and moſt valiantt; Chaldee, the faireſt.

Rupertus.

Eſay 14.

Verſe 4.

Verſe 5.

The depths have covered them, they ſanke down into the bottome, as a ſtone; that is, never to riſe up again, and therefore the phraſe is varied, v. 10. They ſank as lead, ſee *Nehem.*9.11. and ſo the ſpirituall enemy is caſt down, being never able to riſe again to hurt thoſe that are in Chriſt, and Babylon the ſeat of Antichriſt and his Kingdome is caſt as a ſtone into the ſea.

Revel.18.21.

Verſe 6.

Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power, thy right hand hath daſhed in pieces the enemy, &c. that is, not by accident, or by the power or policy of man, but by thy power alone have they been confounded.

Verſe 7.

Thou haſt overthrown them that roſe up againſt thee, thou ſenteſt forth thy wrath, which ate them up as ſtubble. The Chaldee hath it, which roſe up againſt thy people, for they that injury Gods people, ſet themſelves againſt God, *Zach.*2.8. *Matth.*25.45. *Act.*9.4. Thy wrath; not his Angels, but his wrath was ſent forth, for that is as a fire, before which the wicked are but as ſtubble, Pſal. 89.47. *Eſa.*5.24. *chap.*47.14.

Verſe 8.

With the blaſt of thy noſtrils the waters were gathered together, &c. The ſame thing is here inculcated with many words, to beat the remembrance of it the more into the mindes of the rude people. The blaſt of Gods noſtrils is commonly put for his wrath, as Job 4.9. but here it is alluded to the winde ſent to dry up a way in the ſea, *Chap.*14.26. which was done in favour to the Iſraelites, but in wrath againſt the Egyptians, that they might thus be drawn to enter in to their deſtruction. And therefore in the vulgar Latine it is, in ſpiritu furoris tui, according to the ſenſe of the words.

The Myſtery. Ferus.

Hereby alſo is myſtically ſet forth, how God under the Goſpel in his wrath beat down and deſtroyed the dumb Idols, whereby the Gentiles were led,

as

as Jupiter and Venus, &c. which now are no where to be found. Their proud neighing horſes, the wicked Kings and Rulers, which tyrannically ſhed the blood of many Martyrs, were now devoured alſo, the trumpet of the Goſpel, the breath of Gods noſtrils blowing upon them. And the people, which are as many waters, were hereby gathered together, when they were converted unto Chriſt, yea the great deeps in the midſt of the ſea were gathered together, in that wicked men out of the hidden places of darkneſſe, and the depths of vices came flocking together to Chriſts baptiſme: for by the abyſſe or deep the wicked and unſearchable evill heart of man is ſignified: Thus Ferus.

Apoc. 17. Quando pravi homines de occultis tenebrarum, & de profundis vitiorum confluxerunt, ad unicum & universale Chriſti Baptiſma. Jer 17. 9.

The enemy ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake and divide the ſpoile, my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them, &c. Here the fact of the Lord againſt them is further amplified, they being brought in by a Iroſopopeia vaunting themſelves, ſee the like, Judg. 5. 30. for (my luſt) is נַפְשִׁי my ſoule, but will or luſt, is hereby ſignified, ſo Pſ. 27. 12. Iſ. 41. 3. 78. 18. My hand ſhall deſtroy them, or repoſſeſſe them, for thus the word is uſed, Numb. 14, 12, 24. The Septuagint render it, Have dominion over them. And this is moſt probably the meaning, becauſe when they firſt went out after them, they ſaid, Why have we thus done to let Iſrael go from ſerving us? Yet it is not to be doubted, but that they purpoſed to ſlay Moſes, and Aaron, and the chief amongſt them.

Exod 4. 5. Simlerus.

Thou didſt blow with thy winde, the ſea covered them, they ſanke as lead. When they preſuming upon their ſtrength made juſt account to overthrow them, the Lord to ſhew the greatneſſe of his power, did but blow with the breath of his mouth, and eaſily confounded them all, when he turned the winde to bring the Sea upon them. When wicked men are moſt ſecure, then deſtruction commeth ſuddenly upon them, ſo likewiſe Senacherib, Siſera, &c. They ſanke as lead, iniquity is heavy as a talent of lead, ſinking the ſinner into the pit of deſtruction, but faith maketh light, as Peter, who walked upon the waters, but yet he had ſome lead, that is, ſin in him, not ſufficiently yet purged, which made him to ſink; wherefore let us put away our ſins, leſt we ſink at the laſt day into the deep of hell. Lead, as Origen hath it, will melt when it cometh to the fire, and ſo ſhall the ſinner, that is all leaden at the laſt burning, when the gold, that is, the godly ſhall be purged, and ſhine more gloriouſly. Myſtically the Devil purſuing the faithfull maketh juſt account to devour him, but by the breath of Gods mouth he is reſtreined, as when he was not ſuffered to touch Jobs life, and ſhall finally fall as lead into the abyſſe of hell.

Verſe 10.

Note.

Zach. 5.

Matth. 14.

Origen.

Ferus.

Who is like to thee, O Lord, among the gods, who is like thee, glorious in holineſſe, fearfull in praiſes, doing wonders? From the amplification of this wonderfull overthrow Moſes now proceedeth to an Epiphonema; by gods, here I underſtand with Calvin, not Princes or Angels, but the Idols of the Heathen, by them worſhipped and truſted in, as being of great power, as gods: and God is ſaid to be incomparably glorious in holineſſe, to tax the prophaneneſſe of thoſe gods on the contrary ſide: fearfull in praiſes, becauſe we cannot ſeriouſly apply our ſelves to praiſe him, duly conſidering his geſtes in overthrowing ſo many thouſands of men in an inſtant, but a kinde of trembling and amazedneſſe muſt needs ſurprize our mindes. And the next words, doing wonders, ſeem to be added to direct us to explain this clauſe thus. Simlerus yieldeth three other reaſons. 1 Becauſe to praiſe God ſufficiently exceedeth our ſtrength, and therefore we cannot but tremble when we praiſe him. 2 Becauſe all our praiſing of God muſt be with reverence and fear. 3 Becauſe as the Devils malicious works affect the minde with fear, ſo ſhould Gods laudable acts. But all theſe are rejected by Calvin, and onely the firſt followed, which is indeed the beſt and moſt genuine. But when God is ſaid to be terrible, ſaith Ferus, it is to be underſtood to the wicked, whereas his faithfull ſervants have joy of that which he doth terribly againſt them, and praiſe him therefore with glad hearts: and the former words, amongſt the gods, he following the vulgar Latine readeth it in fortibus, concluding that we ought Verſe 11.

Calvin.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

to look at theſe four things in God, that we may be rightly affected towards him, that he is moſt mighty, holy, terrible to the wicked, and gracious to the godly.

Verſe 12. Thou ſtretchedſt out thy right hand, and the earth ſwallowed them. They were drowned in the waters, and yet he ſaith, the earth ſwallowed them, but this was in regard of mire at the bottom, wherein they ſtuck, ſaith Simlerus. But how did they ſtick there, when they were caſt up? wherefore this is ſpoken in regard of the deep hollow in the earth, wherein they were drowned, ſuch as the channell of the Sea is, ſo Jonah ſaith of himſelf, The earth with her bars was about me: Or becauſe being deſtroyed by death, they went into the land of darkneſſe, as Ferus noteth out of Job, ſaying, that in theſe words he beginneth to ſet forth in order the things touched upon before; for firſt Gods might was ſpoken of, which appeared in drowning the Egyptians, this was the wonder of his might, the wonder of his mercy and holineſſe followeth next, *v.*13. Thou in thy mercy haſt led forth the people, whom thou haſt redeemed. This leading was by the hand of Moſes and Aaron, Pſ. 77.21. but aſcribed to God as the principall Leader. Calvin rendreth it, Thou wilt lead, but it is in the preter tenſe, and ſetteth forth that which is paſt, as the next words, Thou haſt guided them in thy ſtrength unto thy holy habitation, are a prophecie of that which was to come, when they ſhould be brought into Canaan: ſo Ferus, who alſo applieth the firſt unto Chriſt, becauſe as a good ſhepherd he led his forth in mercy, whom he hath redeemed. And for the other to come, he ſpeaketh alſo in the preter tenſe after the manner of a Prophet, becauſe he knew by the Spirit, that this ſhould be as certainly done, as if it had been already fulfilled, and he uſeth another word properly ſignifying to beare, or carry, intimating his power, and their weakneſſe, being able to do nothing, and his great ſollicitude and love towards them, for which it is ſaid elſwhere, that he carried them, as upon Eagles wings. In thy ſtrength, this is added for their comfort, becauſe they ſhould meet with many obſtacles, that they might be confident through his power of overcomming them all, unto thy holy habitation, that is, to the land of Canaan, where the Temple was afterwards built, & where his flock, the people of Iſrael did ſafely dwell, and reſt: ſee Jer. 50.19. & Jer. 33.12. Eſa. 33.20. Pſ. 78.52, 53, 54. And this prophetical continued to the 19 V. is the laſt part of this Hymne.

Verſe 14. The people ſhall heare and be afraid, ſorrow ſhall take hold upon the inhabitants of Paleſtina, &c. The vulgar Latine rendreth it, Aſcenderunt populi, & irati ſunt; but it is שמעו, they heard, and were ſtirred with anger and fear. Ferus following the Vulgar ſaith, that here it is propheſied with what oppoſition they ſhould meet, the Philiſtines, Edomites, Moabites and Canaanites coming out againſt them, but it is plainly ſpoken of their hearing of theſe wonderfull judgements, whereas they ſhould tremble, which came accordingly to paſſe. For the feare of Moab is ſhewed, Numb. 22. and of the reſt, Joſ. 2 Ch 5, &c. For the Edomites feare, although they may ſeem not to have feared, becauſe they came out armed to their borders, to deny them paſſage, but it was feare that moved them thus to do, leſt they ſhould enter and poſſeſſe their Countrey, and haply they came to their borders, becauſe moſt advantageous for them in regard of the Mountains there to make reſiſtance: ſo Simlerus.

Verſe 15. And he ſaith, The Dukes of Edom, becauſe the Edomites were governed by Dukes: of their fear, ſee Deut. 2.4. Trembling ſhall take hold upon the mighty men of Moab, this is ſpoken of thoſe, that are overcome with feare. The inhabitants of Canaan ſhall melt away, that is, faint with feare, as Joſ. 2 9. Ch. 5.1. by a ſimilitude taken from vvax melting before the fire.

Verſe 16. They ſhall be as ſtill as a ſtone, till thy people paſſe over. The Septuagint render it Lapideſcent, as Niobe is feigned by the Poets for ſorrovv to be turned into a Stone; hereby the extremity of feare is ſet forth, bringing ſuch a cold upon the heart, as that a man is ſtill and unable to ſtir, as a ſtone, as Nabal hearing of Davids comming againſt him vvith 400 men, it is ſaid, His heart died within him, and he became like a ſtone.

Thou

Thou ſhalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance; that is, in Canaan a mountanous Countrey, and ſpecially having mount Zion therein, and the vvord planting is uſed to ſhevv a ſtable and ſetled abiding that they ſhould have there, Pſal 80.9. Pſal. 44.3. It is a Metaphor taken from a Vine deep rooted in the ground. For the myſtery; as they had Philiſtines, Moabites, &c. for enemies in their paſſage to Canaan, ſo vve have Jevvs, Pagans, Hereticks, falſe Chriſtians, and ſpirituall vvickedneſſes, upon vvhom vve muſt pray vvith Moſes, that fear may come, and they may be ſtill as a ſtone, vvhileſt vve are paſſing to the heavenly Canaan, that is, alvvayes, vvhileſt vve are living in this vvorld, for our paſſing is never at an end, till vve be gone from hence. We muſt therefore alvvayes be praying, that vve may be planted in that mountain of Gods inheritance, never to be removed again: thus Ferus. And this is our comfort, that vve which are the true faithful people of God, ſhall in ſpite of all our enemies by Gods grace and povver be undoubtedly at length planted there for evermore.

Verſe 17.

The Myſtery. Ferus.

The Lord ſhall reign for ever and ever; in Hebrevv לעולם ועד for ever and ſtill. The vulgar Latine follovving the Septuagint, in æternum & uſq; Pagninus, in ſæculum & uſq; in perpetuum; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, in ſæculum, & in ſæcula ſæculorum. This addition of the laſt vvord, uſq; ſtill, hath given occaſion of much inquiry to Expoſitours, hovv it could be ſo ſpoken, ſeeing that beyond eternity there is nothing. But I vvill not trouble my Reader vvith their divers vvayes of reſolving this. For Origen hath reſolved it vvell for all, vvhen this vvord in ſæculum is uſed, oft times a long duration of time is meant, which ſhall yet have end, but when uſq; is added, abſolute eternity, ſo that name what long ſpace of time thou can't, and he ſhall reign all this time, and ſtil for ever without end. And this is the concluſion of this ſong with another Epiphonema, having reference to the Lords reigning perpetually in the holy land amongſt his true Iſraelites here, being as a King unto them to protect and provide for them, and in the heavenly Jeruſalem, of which this was a type for evermore.

Verſe 18.

Origen.

Becauſe the horſes of Pharaoh with his chariots entered into the ſea, and the Lord brought the waters upon them, &c. This is no part of the ſong, but is added as a reaſon of the Lords reigning for ever, and of all the praiſes here given unto him, as in the Revel. it is ſaid, Now ſalvation is of God, and the Kingdome is Chriſts, becauſe the accuſer of the brethren is caſt out: ſo Ferus and Calvin. But Simlerus thinketh, that it may be a part of the ſong, anſvvering to the firſt Verſes, and being the ſumme of them together. But it differeth from all the reſt, being of many more feet then come into a Verſe, and therefore I ſubſcribe rather to them that hold it for an addition, prefixing this word becauſe, which is not in the Hebrevv, to make it the plainer.

Verſe 19.

Revel. 12. Ferus. Calvin.

And Miriam the Propheteſſe, the ſiſter of Aaron took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her with timbrels & dances, &c. The men after Moſes having done ſinging, the women now anſvver in the ſame words, haply Verſe by Verſe. And Miriam is called the Propheteſſe, becauſe, as may be gathered, Numb. 12.2. ſhe had divine Revelations, and ſhe is ſaid to be the ſiſter of Aaron, becauſe Aaron was the eldeſt brother, and ſhe had alvvayes lived with Aaron. God hath divers times not onely uſed men but women, as his inſtruments to reveal his will, as Deborah, Hulda, Hanna, &c. but vvhether they might teach publickly, as Prophets did, is a queſtion? Simlerus holdeth, that they might, and alledgeth for this the example of Deborah judging Iſrael, and the ſaying of the Apoſtle, A woman praying or propheſying. And vvhereas he ſaith a woman ſhould not ſpeak in the Church; it is anſvvered, it is true, ordinarily, as none but the Levites were to teach the people yet extraordinarily ſome have been ſtirred up of other Tribes. But Calvin contrariviſe: ſee my Expoſition, 1 Cor. 11. The vvomen beſides voices uſed timbrels, vvhich the men did not, ſaith Ferus, becauſe they are the vveaker ſex, and need more helps.

Verſe 20.

Micah 6.4. I ſent before thee Moſes, Aaron and Miriam. Simlerus.

Ferus.

And

Verſe 22. Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels. Simlerus.

And Moſes brought the children of Iſrael from the Red-ſea, and they went into the deſart of Sur, &c. Here they travelled in three dayes 40 miles, ſaith Henry Bunting. Of this deſart it hath been already ſpoken, and that it was the ſame with Etham. Simlerus noteth, that the word tranſlated, brought them up, ſignifieth properly, drew them out, to intimate, that they ſtuck to the ſpoil of the Egyptians, hardly ſuffering themſelves to be drawn from thence. Here travelling three dayes they found no water, and then coming to water, it was bitter, being therefore called Marah, bitter, whereupon they murmured againſt Moſes. Here begin their tentations, and the effect thereof, murmuring. And as they ſometime found no water, then bitter water, ſo we in our pilgrimage to our heavenly Countrey ſometimes are without all worldly comforts, and ſometimes we meet with many adverſities in theſe things, which we have, and our weakneſſe is never ſo much tried, as when we thus ſuffer, now it appeareth, that we are fleſh, and of little or no ſtrength.

Verſe 23, 24

Verſe 25. Scholaſt. hiſtor. Targ. Hieroſol. Moſes prayed, and God ſhewed him the tree Aridiphne, with flowers like Lilies, but very bitter. Fagius. Joſeph.

Then he cried to the Lord, and the Lord ſhewed him a tree, which he caſt into the waters, and they were made ſweet, &c. The Hebrews, ſaith the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, held, that this Tree was bitter, and that the power of God might the more appear, he cauſed bitter to be put to bitter, hereby making ſweet, and this is commemorated by Fagius, and that they held, that this tree had no vertue in it to ſweeten, but to make the waters worſe, but God to ſhew, that he can do all things, would thus work by contraries. Thus Eliſha, by caſting in ſalt made the waters of Jericho ſweet, and Chriſt by anointing blinde eyes with clay made them to ſee. Joſephus ſaith, that this water was in a pit being corrupted for want of motion, and into it Moſes caſt his rod, being cut with a long ſciſſure in the midſt, and then cauſing much water to be drawn and poured out, that which remained with frequent concuſſions was purged and made potable. But this is a derogation from the miracle, and therefore to be rejected. It may be, ſaith Comeſtor, that this tree had ſuch vertue in it, as being prepared of God, and ſhewed to Moſes in the wilderneſſe, where no tree grew. It was certainly a great miracle, howſoever, becauſe no tree could naturally have any ſuch vertue to ſweeten ſo much water upon the ſudden, as this did, wherefore God wrought hereby, who could have done it without any meanes, but he would hereby rebuke the fooliſhneſſe and infidelity of the people, as Calvin ſaith, as if he had ſaid, Do ye ask what ſhall we drink? as if it were impoſſible to give you good water here. Lo, I can eaſily do it by any weak means, and for proof hereof, do but caſt that tree into the waters, and they ſhall be ſweet; and if by a tree I can ſweeten your bitter waters, then never doubt any more of my power to provide for you in any time of want. And in regard of thus much ſpoken here in effect, it is added, There he made him a ſtatute and judgement, and there he proved him, that is, Iſrael. Peter Comeſtor ſaith, that he is ſaid to have given it there, becauſe now he promiſed to give it, if they would obey him. The ſtatute given here, ſaith Ferus, is orall onely, not in writing. And it is expreſſed in the next words.

Eccleſiaſtic. 38. verſe 5.

Calvin.

Scholaſt. hiſt.

Ferus.

Verſe 26. Lyranus. Simlerus. Calvin.

If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and do that which is right in his ſight, &c. It is a generall precept to keep all his Statutes and Commandements with a promiſe of keeping them free from the diſeaſes brought upon Egypt, that is, the plagues ſent for their rebellions to their utter deſtruction. Lyranus ſaith, that the law of the Sabbath was here in ſpeciall given them, and therefore is obſerved, Chap. 16. and the law of the red Cow, and ſome judicials, and this he hath from the Hebrews. Simlerus thinketh that the laws obſerved by their fathers, and coming to them by tradition, were now eſtabliſhed, that they might know, that they were of God, and did not depend upon cuſtome onely. But theſe are all conjectures; for if God had ſaid any more, it ſhould certainly have been related as well as this generall. In the former words, proved him, is by ſome underſtood, ſaith Calvin, as ſpoken of the people, as if they had tempted the Lord, after this law given, but he rejecteth this, and referreth it, as we commonly do, to the Lord trying the people by affliction.

he

The waters of Marah do myſtically ſet forth the Law, which is bitter to the carnall man, and in the carnall Rites to the Chriſtian, but let the tree of Chriſts Croſſe be caſt in, which is, underſtand them with reference to Chriſts paſſion, and they will be ſweet and wholeſome: or by Marah underſtand afflictions ſweetened by the remembrance of Chriſts paſſions: thus Ferus. And Elias in Lexico Cald. ſee Galat. 3.13. 1 *Pet.*2.21. 2 *Cor.*1.5,7,10. The Myſtery. Ferus.

And they came to Elim, where were twelve fountains, and 70 Palm-trees, &c. God brought them hither, ſaith Calvin, in condeſcending to their weakneſſe, that they might have a more comfortable ſtation. The Palm-tree is good for ſhade, and the boughs were uſed in rejoycing, *Levit.*23.40. In Targum Hieroſolym. the twelve Palm-trees are made figurative of the twelve Tribes, and ſeventy Palm-trees of the ſeventy Elders, and of the ſeventy ſoules that came into Egypt, the Apoſtles alſo were twelve, and the Diſciples ſent out ſeventy, *Luk.*9.1. And according to this laſt Simlerus ſaith excellently, that as the Iſraelites, ſo the true Church after Baptiſme cometh to Marah by afflictions, but through Chriſt their afflictions are ſweetened, and they are recreated eſt-ſoones with the doctrine of the twelve Apoſtles, as clear fountains, and by the ſeventy as Palm-trees, and all other holy Fathers, whoſe writings being watered with theſe fountains do greatly delight and nouriſh the Church of God. Verſe 27. From Marah to Elim were eight miles. Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels. Calvin. Targ. Hieroſol. Simlerus.

CHAP. XVI.

AND they took their journey from Elim, and all the Congregation came to the wilderneſſe of Sin. This was 16 miles: from Zemeh a buſh, cometh Zin or Sin, a thorny place. Here their going to the Red-ſea from Elim mentioned, *Numb.*33.10. is omitted, and from the Red-ſea they came into this wilderneſſe, being a journey of 16 miles. Verſe 1.

There is a ſtrong City in Egypt called by this name, *Ezech.*30.15. but this wilderneſſe ſeemeth to have taken the name from the Mount Sinai, which ſtood here, of which ſee before, *Chap.*3. This is ſaid to have been betweeen Elim and Sinai, becauſe there was another wilderneſſe called Sin neer the Borders of Canaan, called alſo Paran and Kadeſh, and the remove from Elim to the Red-ſea is here omitted, and their coming to Sin next to Elim is ſet down, becauſe the moſt noted places of their abode onely are here mentioned, every particular elſe being reſerved to *Numb.*33. The time when they came hither is noted to have been the 15 day of the ſecond moneth. So that from their going out of Egypt hitherto had paſſed 30 dayes, all which time haply their proviſion brought out of Egypt laſted them, but now it was all ſpent, ſo Joſephus, ſee before, *Chap.*12.16. Calvin thinketh, that they found ſome food, till now, as they paſſed, but this is improbable at that time of the year. Simlerus. Calvin.

And all the Congregation murmured againſt Moſes, &c. Here again the corruption of man appeareth ſo ſoon as he is in any want. This murmuring, although it be ſaid to be of the whole Congregation, yet ſome faithfull perſons there were doubtleſſe that murmured not, as Joſuah, and Caleb, Eleazar, Ithamar, &c. It was a generall murmuring that overſpread all the Tribes, and the thouſands of Iſrael, and therefore the whole Congregation is ſaid to have murmured. The temptation indeed was great, to want all ſuſtenance, and to be in a wilderneſſe, but if we conſider, that God knoweth our wants, it is by his providence, that we come into them, not for our hurt, as out of hatred, but to prove and ſo to better us, and that he is of power ſufficient to ſupply our wants whatſoever they be, we ſhall never murmur againſt him, as they did. Verſe 2. Simlerus. Ferus.

And they ſaid, Would to God we had died in Egypt, when we ſate by the fleſh-pots, and Verſe 3.

and did eat bread our fill, &c. Hebr. Who will give, that we might have died, &c. by the hand of the Lord. In the Septuagint, πληγῆναι ὑπὸ κυρίου, being ſmitten of the Lord. This was groſſe ingratitude to prefer being ſmitten with the Egyptians, before being delivered ſo graciouſly. Or the meaning may be, we wiſh rather that we had continued ſervants, and ſo lived and died. Having through hunger ſuffered a little while in their journey to Canaan, they are more vexed, then at all the miſeries indured in Egypt: ſo whatſoeverr we ſuffer being in our worldly wayes, is counted light, but if we ſuffer but a little for godlineſſe it is counted grievous.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Note.

Verſe 4.

Then the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Behold, I will rain you down bread from heaven, and the people ſhall go out and gather, &c. The Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, When Moſes had prayed to the Lord, he anſwered thus, and this doubtleſſe is here to be underſtood. God ſaith, he will rain, to intimate the abundance, and from heaven, becauſe the earth where they were, was barren, a certain rate every day, Hebr. דבר יום ביומו, a dayes word for his day, that is, a portion, for דבר is put for thing, as well as for word. God would ſend food, but they muſt gather it, and go out for this purpoſe, man muſt labour for his living, and he would ſupply them with no more, but ſufficient for the day, that he might teach them to depend upon his providence, and prevent murmuring for time to come, and according to this we are commanded, Care not for to morrow. This was the third time of their murmuring, yet God paſſing by ill-deſerving, for his own glory, without rebuking them, thus graciouſly ſupplieth their wants, but he will not alwayes thus bear with mens ſins, but be avenged upon them at the laſt. That I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law or not. Here is a difference, ſaith Calvin, amongſt Expoſitors; ſome holding that the meaning is, when I ſhall thus extend my bounty towards them, I ſhall ſee, whether they will be won hereby to better obedience or not; others, whether they will be content with my allowance, or long after daintier meat, or a greater quantity. But he preferreth the firſt and the beſt. Simlerus ſaith, that God in ſaying, Whether they would walk in his Law, meant the law of keeping none till the morrow, and of not going out for it upon the ſeventh day. But this is too particular, the meaning is more generall, whether they would by his bounty be brought to more conſtant obedience, not murmuring for any want, ſeeing by daily experience, that God could from heaven provide for them, when all meanes in this world failed. This bread did myſtically ſet forth Chriſt ſent down from heaven to feed the ſoul to eternall life. And it is worth the noting, that this was not ſent, til that they had paſſed through the ſea, & all the proviſion brought out of Egypt was ſpent, to ſhew, that we cannot be fed with Chriſt, till that we have been baptized, and we neglect all worldly comforts in compariſon of this, we muſt be ſpiritually hungry. Again, the time is noted to be the 15 of the ſecond moneth, which was the time appointed for the ſecond Paſſeover, if any could not be prepared to eat it in the firſt moneth, Numb. 9. becauſe they were farre off in a journey or unclean, to ſhevv that the Gentiles ſhould have the true Manna given unto them, Chriſt Jeſus, vvho vvere afarre off and unclean, vvhen the firſt Paſſeover of the Jevvs vvas celebrated.

Matth.6.34.

Calvin.

Simlerus.

John 6.
1 Cor.10.
Ferus.

Epheſ.2.

Verſe 5.

And upon the ſixth day they ſhall prepare that which they bring in, and it ſhall be twice ſo much, &c. Here we may ſee, that the Sabbath-day was holy, before the promulgation of the Law, even ſince the creation, as was noted, Gen.2. contrary to the opinion of ſome, although no mention be made hereof again, till now. The Sabbath is a type of the future reſt in heaven, and whoſo will reſt there, muſt gather ſo much as will ſuffice him then, he muſt lay up a treaſure, Matth.6. 1 Tim.6.17.

Verſe 6.
Verſe 7.

At even ye ſhall know, that the Lord hath brought you out of Egypt: and in the morning ye ſhall ſee the glory of the Lord, for he heareth your murmurings, &c. They had mentioned the fleſh-pots of Egypt, and the fulneſſe of bread there, verſ.3. and therefore, that they might be ſatisfied in both theſe, they are promiſed miſed fleſh in the evening, and bread in the morning, *verſ.*8. Moſes and Aaron ſpeak to them firſt generally, In the evening ye ſhall know, &c. and in the morning ye ſhall ſee the glory of the Lord, and then expreſſe further, how they ſhould know, that not they, but the Lord brought them out of Egypt, becauſe they had complained, Ye have brought us into this wilderneſſe, to kill this whole aſſembly with famine, this they ſhould know, that he brought them out, not to famiſh them, but to feed them with fleſh, becauſe in the evening they ſhould have fleſh. Then they expreſſe, what they meant by their ſeeing the glory of the Lord in the morning, viz. they ſhould fill themſelves with bread. And herein it is ſaid they ſhould ſee the glory of the Lord ſpecially, becauſe with this bread they ſhould be fed fourty yeers together, and ſo Gods glory ſhould ſhine moſt of all in this, ſo Simlerus. Whereas it is added, as a reaſon, why the Lord would do thus, for he heareth your murmurings; It is not ſo to be underſtood, as if hereby they prevailed to get this food: for to ſhew, that it was not granted to their ſins, but that God did thus ſtrive with their perverſe contumacie, he ſaith, Ye ſhall ſee the glory of the Lord, for he heareth your murmurings, that is, God will appear unto you, that in the brightnes of his countenance, ſeeing your impiety, ye may at length be aſhamed, and feel, that it was a ſacrilegious tumult, which ye ſo audaciouſly made againſt him, as Calvin ſpeaketh. As here, ſo to Elijah God ſent bread and fleſh, ſaith Auguſtine, by the evening, when fleſh was ſent, Chriſts paſſion; and by the morning, wherein Manna, his reſurrection being ſignified. Or by the evening, when they ſhould know, that the Lord brought them out of Egypt, this life is ſet forth, as Ferus hath it, becauſe now under the Goſpel this life is, as it were, the evening of the world; by the morning, the life to come: for here we know, that Chriſt hath brought us out of the bondage of ſin, but there we ſhall ſee his glory: or by the evening underſtand the time of the Law, when they had fleſhly rites; by the morning, the time of the Goſpel, wherein we have the bread that came down from heaven, Chriſt himſelf. Or becauſe the fleſh was ſent onely to fill their bellies, and the Manna, as a Sacrament that cometh in the evening, ſetting forth darkneſſe: this in the morning, ſetting forth Gods grace, as the morning often doth, *Pſal.*30.6. 143.8. Lament. 3.22,23. ſo Ainſworth. Yet in the courſe of nature, quails having flown all day, come to their reſting place at night, and the dew falleth in the morning, with which Manna came down. Whereas it was noted before out of Simlerus, that by the glory which God would ſhew, is meant the ſending of Manna, both this and the appearance of Gods glory to the eye, ſpoken of *v.*10 is meant, as Ainſworth alſo hath it. The appearing of that glory made it manifeſt, that they murmured againſt God, and it could not but be terrefying and ſo ſhewed, as a dreadfull rebuke for their murmuring.

Verſe 8.

Simlerus.

Calvin.

*Aug. in Exod. quæſt.*60. 1 Kings 17.

Ferus.

Ainſworths Annotations in Exod.

Come neer before the Lord, for he hath heard your murmurings. And when Aaron ſpake to all the congregation, they looked towards the deſert, and behold, the glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud. This by the courſe of the hiſtory muſt needs have been done in the morning, when the Manna was fallen. The cloud was that, wherein God went before them to guide them in the way, in it was an extraordinary appearance of a terrefying brightneſſe at this time, and by ſhewing his glory thus, God did alſo at other times repreſſe the tumultuous rage of the people, as *Numb.*14.10. 16.42. 12.5. And hereby they were convinced, that not Moſes, but God led them out of Egypt, and that he was amongſt them, and therefore they did impiouſly to murmure, whereas they ſhould rather in their neceſſity have called upon him.

Verſe 9. Verſe 10.

Simlerus.

And the Lord ſpake to Moſes, ſaying, I have heard the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, &c. Some, ſaith Simlerus, hold, that God ſpake here the ſecond time to Moſes out of the cloud, but that is improbable; for the time of this glorious apparition doth not ſo agree with the words ſpoken. It is doubtleſſe a commemoration of that which was ſpoken before by the Lord unto Moſes, that in promiſing them fleſh in the evening, and bread in the morning, it might appear, that he ſpake not without ground, which might before this be queſtioned; becauſe he had hitherto declared onely, how the Lord had promiſed to rain bread from heaven, no mention being made of fleſh, *verſ.*4. And therefore Calvin and ſome others read it, For the Lord had ſpoken. This was the ground of Moſes his ſpeeches, *verſ.*6,7,8.

Verſe 11.

Calvin.

Verſe 13. And it came to paſſe at even, that the quails came up, and covered the camp, and in the morning the dew lay round about the hoſt, &c. The word tranſlated quails, is by the Septuagint rendered Ortygometræ, which bird (they ſay) is the king of quails; by Joſephus, Ortygia: but all others render it, quails. But it is put in the ſingular number, quail came up, for the plurall, quails; as before, frog, for frogs, *Exod.*8.6. Touching this kinde of fowl, Avicen and ſome other Phyſicians, ſaith Simlerus, write that they are very unwholeſome, becauſe they feed upon Helebore, and have the falling ſickneſſe, and ſpecially at the ſpring-time, which was now. But others ſpeak to the contrary, comparing the quail to the partridge, as Ariſtotle, who handleth them both together, as being alike in nature. And Galen preſcribeth a medicine againſt the falling ſickneſſe out of a quail. They feed ſometimes indeed upon Helebore, but that groweth not in all places, neither doth it argue them to be unwholeſome, becauſe many creatures do feed upon that which would be hurtfull to man, and yet are themſelves good meat for him. It is well known, that they feed upon corn, and Ferus is ſo far from yeelding them to be a mean kinde of food, as that he hence magnifieth the bounty of God, in that he gave them no courſe fleſh, but the moſt dainty. And Cogan in his Haven of health, preferreth them, as the moſt wholeſome and fineſt of meats. Touching theſe quails, ſome queſtions offer themſelves. As firſt; How the coming of quails could be counted miraculous, and a ſingular act of God, ſeeing it is well known, that they flee in great companies from one countrey to another, as into Italy about Piſaurus, at the latter end of the ſpring, where their coming being obſerved, an huge multitude of them is yeerly taken, and ſometimes as men ſail upon the ſea, they are ſeen coming in ſuch great multitudes to ſhips, and to light ſo thick upon them, that they indanger them of drowning; And the very time of their remove noted, was the ſpring-time, wherein they came about the hoſt of Iſrael? I anſwer: All this being granted, yet it was a very great miracle. 1 That ſuch an infinite multitude ſhould now be brought hither to ſatisfie ſix hundred thouſand perſons, and afterwards, *Numb.*11. a moneth together, when as a man would think, as Ferus ſpeaketh, that all the quails in the world could not have ſufficed. 2 That they ſhould come into the wilderneſſe, whereas they naturally flee not, but to places, where they may finde food. 3 That they ſhould come at once, and at the time ſet by Moſes, that very evening.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Cogan.

Queſt. 1.

Queſt. 2. Secondly, whether the ſending of quailes, mentioned, *Numb.*11.31. be the ſame with this, or another? It is generally anſwered, that it was another, and a year after this, ſaith Ainſworth; but Ferus ſpeaketh, as if it were all one. The circumſtances alſo ſhew, that it was another; for this was in the wilderneſſe of Sin, that in Chibroth-Hattaavah; this before the giving of the Law, that after; this before they had Manna; that when they were weary of being fed onely with Manna, this without any expoſtulation on the part of Moſes, and but for once, that for a moneth, Moſes alſo expoſtulating, and asking, how they ſhould get fleſh enough for an whole moneth? So that quailes were ſent doubtleſſe two times. 1 No revenge being taken for their murmuring, becauſe they were hungry, and in extream want. 2 Deſtruction following after, becauſe having food enough, they would not therewith be content. If it be ſaid, This ſeemeth not to have been ſo, becauſe Moſes having experience once of Gods giving fleſh, would not have doubted, how he could do it the ſecond time: I anſwer, as he doubted at the waters of Meribah, after many miracles, ſo he might then, notwithſtanding the ſame miracle done before.

Ainſ. in Ortl.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, why did they complain, as if they had been in ſo great want of fleſh, vvhen they had many cattel? To this Auguſtine anſvvereth, that the vvilderneſſe being a barren place, theſe could not be ſo fruitfull in increaſe, and therefore if they ſhould have been ſpent for food, they vvould have been vvanting for ſacrifice. Queſt. 3.

Fourthly, vvhy vvas fleſh given onely one evening, but Manna every morning continually, vvhileſt they vvere in the vvilderneſſe? I anſvver, God in giving fleſh did onely intend to ſhevv his povver to provide fleſh for them in the vvilderneſſe as vvell as in Egypt, but not to ſatisfie their vvanton deſires, vvherefore he giveth it once onely, but becauſe they could not live vvithout ſome food, Manna continually to teach them frugality, and to be content to be mainteined and fed as it pleaſed him, and not as they themſelves out of their intemperance deſired. Queſt. 4.

The Manna fell vvith the devv in the morning; And when the dew was gone, there lay in the wilderneſſe a ſmall round thing, as ſmall as the hoar froſt. And the children of Iſrael ſaid, It is Manna, &c. Verſe 31. this Manna is ſaid to have been, *like Coriander-ſeed, white; and the taſte of it like Wafers made with honey. Numb.*11.7. the colour of it is ſaid to have been, as the colour of Bdellium, and the taſte of it as the taſte of freſh oil, and for the uſe of it, *Numb.*11.8. they ground it in Mils, or beat it in a Mortar, and baking it in a pan, made Cakes thereof. Theſe things being rightly underſtood, there is no difference; for Bdellium is vvhite, and the taſte of it unbaked vvas as that of Wafers vvith honey, but being baked, as of freſh oil. So Tremelius, vvho ſaith, that by Bdellium the gum of Bdellium is meant, vvhich is light through the vvhiteneſſe like vvax, *Plin. nat hiſt lib.*12.*c.*9. and for vvafer he hath Epichyti, affirming that Athenæus calleth this kinde of Cake, Attanita. Verſe 14,15. Tremelius. *Athenæus l.*14.

It ſeemeth, that it lay under the devv, for that being gone in the morning, it continued being hard and not diſſolveable by the heat of the Sun. For the name thereof, Manna in Hebr. מן-הוא, that is Man. Some render it, what is this? as the Septuagint, and the vulgar Latine, for מה ſignifieth what, and in the Chaldee Man is put for Mah. Tremelius rendereth it, cibus præparatus, ſo likevviſe Calvin, noting that the people herein ſhevved themſelves gratefull, as if they had in this name acknovvledged, that they vvere obliged unto God not onely for food, but for having it ready provided vvithout any hard labour. Thus alſo ſome of the Rabbins, calling it a prepared bread ſent from heaven vvithout mans labour, agreeable to every mans taſte, and able to content and pleaſe every one. Man properly ſignifieth a prepared portion. Philo, Joſephus, Rab. Solomon are for the firſt, and to them Simlerus ſubſcribeth, becauſe the reaſon following here, for they knew not what it was, implieth, that in saying מן-הוא they onely queſtioned vvhat it vvas. Ferus ſaith, that man-hu ſignifieth, this is a gift, as if they meant in vvay of extolling, this is a great gift indeed, but ſome have taken it, as ſpoken in contempt, as if they had ſaid, This is a goodly gift indeed, nothing but a little round thing, is this the bread promiſed in ſuch plenty? vve knovv not vvhat this is. But if in this ſenſe, they ſhould certainly have been reproved. I hold vvith Calvin, &c. that prepared meat is meant, and the next vvords, they knew not what it was, do onely imply, that they called it by this common name, becauſe they knevv not, hovv properly to call it. And that they ſpake not theſe vvords by vvay of queſtion, but as naming hereby this thing, appeareth, v. 31. vvhere it is ſaid they called it Man. And hovv to ſubſcribe unto the other, I knovv not, becauſe the Hebrevvs had none acquaintance vvith the Chaldees at this time, that they ſhould uſe any vvord of their language in any other ſenſe, then in their ovvn. Were not this obſtacle in the vvay, that other reading, vvhat is this? I confeſſe vvould be moſt current, Myſtically, as the Manna fell vvith the devv, ſo Chriſt cometh dovvn in the preaching of the Goſpel, and to the Manna lying under the devv, it is alluded, *Revel.*2.17. vvhere the Spirit ſpeaketh of the hidden Manna, ſo that this is alſo a type of the heavenly happineſſe Septuagint. Tremelius. Calvin. Wiſdom 16.20 Philo. Joſeph. R. Solomon. Simlerus. Ferus.

R. Iſaack. R. Menahem.

to come, which ſome Rabbins have acknowledged, as Rab. Iſaac on Gen. 1. and R. Menahem on Exod. 16. ſaying, It is a figure of the food of juſt men in the world to come.

There is a thing called Manna, which is uſed in Phyſick, of which Galen and other Phyſicians write, which falleth naturally in ſome parts of Arabia, but this was not of that ſort; for that was onely for Phyſick, this for nouriſhment; that fell onely in the Spring-time, this all the year; that fell onely in certain places, but never in any other, this in all places, whither the children of Iſrael went; that fell not, as the Hebrews affirm, in the wilderneſſe of Sin, but this fell there; that was ſoft enough, this hard to be beaten in Mortars; that laſteth all the year, this would not laſt till the next morning, unleſſe it were the Sabbath-day. So that this was ſent altogether miraculouſly, and came not from naturall cauſes, as that did. Yet for the ſimilitude that was between them, it is to be thought, that this Phyſicall Manna took the name from that. And touching this miraculous Manna, there is another admirable thing added, v. 21. When the Sun waxed hot, it melted; it indured the baking with the heat of the fire, and yet melted away with the heat of the Sun, but the Manna that falleth naturally from ſweet exhalations, melteth not.

Verſe 16.

This is the bread which God hath given you to eat. Verſe 16. This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, gather of it every man according to his eating, an Omer for a man. An Omer, in Greek called a Gomer, was the tenth part of an Ephah, v. 36. that is, a Gallon, according to Budæus, who will have an Ephah to be a buſhel and a peck of our meaſure, but according to others an Ephah is a pottle leſſe then our buſhel. If we follow the rate of Budæus, each one had half a peck for a day, both the head and the inferiour perſon, the great and the ſmall, which was a liberall allowance. One meaſure is appointed to each man myſtically, to ſhew that all the faithfull partake alike of Chriſt, Gal. 3. 28. 2 Pet. 1. 1. and that howſoever one man gathereth more worldly goods then another, yet he enjoyeth no more, becauſe he enjoyeth no more then he uſeth for the ſuſtenance of his life, and he that gathereth leaſt, hath ſo much alſo. Some obſerve a miracle in this, that he which gathered moſt, had but an Omer, and he which gathered leaſt had ſo much: but I ſubſcribe rather to them, who hold, that it was brought into a common place, and diſtributed thence by meaſure, and the miracle was rather in this, that ſome bodies requiring more food then others, yet the Lord made an Omer ſuffice the greateſt ſtomack, which was but ſufficient for the leaſt. If the quantity before ſpoken of may ſeem too much for any man; it muſt be conſidered, that men in thoſe dayes had ſtronger bodies, requiriug more food then our bodies in theſe times, and the wilderneſſe where they were was an hungry place.

Budæus. See more of this Levit. 27. 16.

Verſe 19. Verſe 22, 23 Verſe 24, 25 Verſe 26. Verſe 20. Verſe 27, 28 Verſe 29.

The conditions ſet in this gathering and uſing of Manna, were both that they ſhould keep none till the morning, and that they ſhould go out to gather none upon the Sabbath, but both gather and make ready againſt the Sabbath upon the ſixt day.

Queſt. Ferus.

Againſt both theſe ſome tranſgreſſed, but the Manna kept till the morrow was full of worms and ſtank, and they which went out upon the Sabbath to gather, found none, but a rebuke from the Lord for their labour, whereupon they kept the Sabbath better aftervvards. If it be demanded, vvhy the Lord would not have them gather more then for one day at once? Ferus anſvvereth vvell. 1 To ſhevv that he would have us to depend upon his providence from day to day, he vvould try by this, vvhether being fed to day, they vvould beleeve that they ſhould be fed to morrovv. 2 To teach them and us to fear the Lord, ſeeing they depended upon him to be fed from day to day, and ſo likevviſe do vve. 3 To teach that no man ſhould be covetous, or deſire abundance, but be content vvith things neceſſary. And if any, as the diſobedient Iſraelites, will reſerve ſomevvhat till the morrovv, that is, covetouſly extend their care to after-times, their riches ſhall alſo cravvl vvith Worms, the worm vvorm of conſcience checking them for unjuſt gettings, the vvorms of cares, which never ſuffer them to reſt in quiet, and the vvorm that never dieth in the vvorld to come, and their riches are like ſtinking and unprofitable things, not benefitting them in their life, and much leſſe at the day of death and judgement.

It is here noted, that in the heat of the ſun the Manna melted, intimating, that they muſt go out betimes in the morning to gather it, intimating, that we muſt uſe diligence in our callings,& ſpecially ſeek for the heavenly Manna betimes, and not defer this care, *Prov.*10.4,5. *chap.6.6,8. Joh.*12.35. *Gal.*6.10. Verſe 21.

And on the ſixth day they gathered twice ſo much, and all the Rulers came and told Moſes, &c. Joſephus ſaith, that they gathered ſo much as they uſed to do, and vvhen they came to meaſure it, it vvas by miracle doubled, and this vvonder vvas that vvhich they told Moſes. Calvin and Simlerus charge the Rulers here to be more ſtupid and ſlovv to obey, then the people,becauſe they doing as Moſes had before commanded,the Rulers ſeem to complain of them. Ferus commendeth them for their ſollicitude, leſt the people ſhould provoke God again in any thing: and that of Joſephus ſeemeth to be probable, Rulers and people having forgotten the precept of the Sabbath, God did miraculouſly give them occaſion to go to Moſes to be put in minde of it. Verſe 22. Joſeph. Calvin. Simlerus. Ferus.

Bake that which you will bake, &c. and the remainder lay up till to morrow. The Sabbath was a day of reſt, and therefore they muſt neither go out to gather Manna, nor bake it being gathered upon that day, but upon the ſixth, for they might not kindle a fire upon the Sabbath,*Exod.*35.3. Simlerus ſaith, that theſe words may be taken two wayes, either that they ſhould bake upon the ſixth day for the ſeventh alſo, or elſe bake their proportion for the ſixth, and reſerve the reſt, as they gathered it, unbaked, and if ſo, the miracle was the greater, ſeeing that if it had been baked, it might have been thought, that by this means it kept from putrefying, and not by the meer power of God. In that the Lord would not have them to reſerve any before this, till the morrow; but now the ſixth day being come, he willeth it: This, as Ferus well noteth, ſheweth that we muſt not be ſollicitous for this world, ſet forth by the ſix dayes, but for the world to come, ſet forth by the Sabbath, we ſhould be carefull: for God knoweth that we need worldly things, and therefore vvill provide them for us; but vve muſt lay up treaſures in heaven, and ſeek the kingdom of God; for as Manna kept till the Sabbath putrefied not, ſo treaſures laid up in heaven are not corrupted vvith moth or canker, but contrarivviſe treaſures laid up here,as Manna reſerved at other times. Verſe 23. Simlerus. Ferus. Math.6.18.&c. 1 Tim.6.17.

Six dayes ye ſhall finde it in the field, but the ſeventh there ſhall be none. This alſo is myſtically verified, in the time of this life vve may vvork, and be revvarded in the vvorld to come; but after death there is no more working of good, for which we may be revvarded. Thus alſo the Rabbins, as in the ſix dayes a man muſt prepare for the Sabbath in reſpect of vvork and food, ſo unleſſe a man prepare his vvorks aright in this vvorld, he ſhall have nothing to eat in the world to come. For the Sabbath, of which it is ſaid, in it ſhall be none, ſignifieth the world to come, which ſhall be all Sabbath, for there ſhall be no doing of the Law, but receiving of reward. Whoſo labour-eth in the evening of the Sabbath, ſhall eat in the Sabbath: ſo Rab. Elias: wherefore walk, ſaith the Lord, whileſt ye have the light; and Paul, Whileſt we have time, let us worke the good: and behold, now is the acceptable time of the Lord. Verſe 26. Rab. Elias in Sepher reſhith Camah. Joqn 13. Gal.6, 2 Cor.6.2.

Whereas ſome went out upon the Sabbath, and found none, it ſheweth the infidelity of ſome, they will not believe, but that they may obtein grace even at the laſt, ſee *Math.*7.22. *Luc.*13.25. but they ſhall be deceived, and even here God curſeth mens labours upon the Sabbath, ſo that they get nothing but diſpleaſure hereby. It ſhall be found at the laſt to be true, which Gods Prophets have foretold to the confuſion of unbelievers, although they have lightly regarded it here. Verſe 27. Note. Note.

Abide

Verse 29. Abide ye every one in his place, let no man go out of his place upon the Sabbath-day. This is not meant so, as if they should keep in their tents or houses, a in prisons, shut up upon the Sabbath-day, for they were to go to the holy Assemblies, *Levit.*23.3. *Act.*15.21. but that they should not go out to labour. The Jews hereupon held it unlawfull for any man to go out of his City upon the Sabbath-day, and becaus̃e the limits thereof were 2000 Cubits, they determined this space to be a Sabbath-dayes journey. See my Exposition, *Act.*1.12. Chaldee Paraphrast, Talmud. Rabbin. &c.

Verse 32,34 Fill an Omer of it, and let it be kept for your generations. 34 So Aaron laid it up before the Testimony to be kept. Here becaus̃e Moses would set down the whole history of this Manna together, he addeth this of the keeping a pot full thereof, which was not done till a year after, when the Arke was built, in which this was put. The pot wherein, is said, Heb. 9. to have been a golden pot, and so the Septuagint render it here, *v.*33. Take a pot, Septuagint, a golden pot. The Hebrews, saith Comestor, say, that they had a little Tabernacle at the first, at which they asked counsell of the Lord, and in this the pot of Manna was now placed, and this is not improbable, becaus̃e, *Chap.*33.7. the Tabernacle is said to have bin removed, before that the Tabernacle was made, which was not till, Chap. 36. And if it were so, then the opinion generally received, that this is spoken, per Prolepsin, is not true, for it is spoken in the proper place, when indeed it was done.

August. qu.61. Simlerus. Calvin. &c. Scholast. hist.

Verse 35. And the children of Israel ate Manna 40 years, till they came to the border of the land of Canaan. This is spoken by anticipation, to set forth together the infinite power and mercy of God, in that he fed them not one day, or moneth, or year, but 40 years, being so great a multitude, without any thing growing out of the ground, neither did he with-hold this gift from them notwithstanding their sinnes. Why they were kept 40 years in the wilderness̃e, is shewed, Numb. 14.

The Mystery. For the mystery, I have said already, and shewed Manna to be a figure of Christ, for which cause it is called spirituall bread, becaus̃e, as Ambrose hath it, it was prepared by divine vertue without commixtion of elements, and not by mans industry according to the course of the world, having therein a figure of the mystery to come, which we now take in remembrance of Christ our Lord: and for this it is also called the bread of Angels, becaus̃e created by the vertue, whereby Angels subsist, figuring out him that was to come from heaven to feed us spiritually. Ferus upon this, Man did eat Angels food, saith, It was not so called, becaus̃e the Angels live by bodily food, for they are spirits: but 1 Becaus̃e it was prepared by the ministery of Angels. 2 Becaus̃e it was superhumane. 3 Becaus̃e it figured out Christ, into whom the Angels desire to look. 4 Becaus̃e in the faithfull it effecteth the same, that invisible food doth in the Angels, viz. that they live for ever without waxing old. Ob. Christ saith, Your fathers did eat Manna and are dead. Sol. This is spoken of those that looking carnally upon the Manna, ate it onely to fill their bellies; but not spiritually by faith, looking up to him that was figured out hereby, and they that receive the Sacrament of Christs body and blood thus at this day, shall die and perish also. And it is to be noted that Manna doth aptly figure out Christ in every thing; that was a gift coming from heaven, so was Christ; when that was sent, they knew not what it was, so they knew not who this man Christ was; Manna was given to tempt them, so Christ is preached by his Ministers to try whether we will believe in him, having not seen him, and in the Sacrament, whether we will believe more then we see or perceive by our outward senses. Again, Manna was small, yet of great vertue, so Christ, being of little reckoning in outward appearance; Manna was white, so Christ without all spot of sin; Manna tasted pleasantly, so Christ to the penitent sinner; Manna was beaten in a Mortar, so Christ by many passions; Manna came in the dew, so Christ in the Word; Manna was alike distributed to all, so Christ; Manna was kept for a memoriall to posterity,

1 Cor. Ambros. Manna & aqua de rupe dicuntur spiritualia, quia non mundi lege sed Dei virtute creata sunt habentia figuram futuri mysterii, &c. Psal 78.25. Ferus.

Object. Sol.

rity, ſo the Sacrament ſerveth for a remembrance of CHRIST.

They muſt go out in the morning to gather Manna, ſo we muſt betimes, firſt ſeek the Kingdome of God; in the heat of the Sun it is melted, if we deferre long, he will vaniſh from us. Upon the ſixth day they gathered for the Sabbath, ſo we in the time of this life muſt get Chriſt, and we muſt gather him daily, till we come into the heavenly Canaan, all the years of our life: to this effect Ferus and others, and he alſo compareth the Word of God unto Manna, but Rabanus Maurus moſt excellently. It will appear to him, that ſhall compute the time, that Manna began to fall the firſt day of the week, which is our Lords day, for the ſixth they muſt gather twice ſo much, the next after which was the Sabbath. Upon our Sabbath then falleth the true Manna, but none upon the Jewes Sabbath; we have the word of God ſet forth upon ours, but as no Manna fell upon theirs, ſo that of the Prophet is now verified upon them, The children of Iſrael ſhall ſit many dayes, without a King, a Prieſt, a Prophet, and without a Sacrifice. But as the people knew not, but enquired of Moſes what the Manna was, ſo muſt Chriſtian people inquire of the Miniſters of Gods Word, what the meaning of it is. Again, as Manna was ſweet, ſo is the Word, yet it is alſo as the hoare froſt, having ſome ſharpneſſe for correction therein, and it is moſt white and pure, &c.

Rab. Maurus.

CHAP. XVII.

AND the children of Iſrael journeyed from the wilderneſſe of Sin, and pitched in Rephidim, and there was no water to drink. Numb. 33. 13, 14. mention is made of two other places, to which they came, before at Rephidim, viz. Daphca twelve miles from the wilderneſſe of Sin, and Aluſh twelve miles from thence; and from Aluſh they came to Rephidim, eight miles. Theſe are here omitted, it being onely inſerted, according to their journeys, becauſe nothing memorable happened in theſe places. Rephidim, or as the Greeks have it, Raphidim ſignifieth a graſſe bench, of Raphad, to make a place to lie down on. Rabanus noteth, that all theſe ſtations, Suph, Sin, Daphkah, Alus and Raphidim were all one wilderneſſe of Sin, taking the name from mount Sinai, neer to which they now were being in Raphidim. And it is ſaid, they made their journeys at the commandment of the Lord; becauſe he, by going before them in the pillar, ſhewed them whither they ſhould go, and where they ſhould reſt.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

Rabanus.

Numb. 9. 17, 18

And the people chode with Moſes, and ſaid, Give us water to drink: and Moſes ſaid, Why contend ye with me? why tempt ye the Lord? &c. A like hiſtory to this is ſet forth alſo, Numb. 20. Which ſome, ſaith Calvin, think to be the ſame, but their errour ſufficiently appeareth by the diſtance of this place from that, appearing Numb. 33. 15, 36. to be two and twenty journeys, and whereas this was the ſecond moneth after their coming out of Egypt, that was about the fourtieth: but a little before Aarons death, Numb. 33. v. 38. And therefore Pſal. 106. it is commemorated, verſ. 32. after all other ſins of theirs in the wilderneſſe, as being committed but a little while before their paſſing over Jordan. And although in ſome things there is ſuch agreement, that a man would think both theſe hiſtories to be one, yet the places being divers and far diſtant, evince the contrary, this was in Rephidim of Sin, that in Zin or Kadeſh, between Ezion-Gaber and Cadeſh-Barnea, not above an 120 miles from Jeruſalem towards the South, whereas the wilderneſſe of Sin was 156 miles towards the South-weſt, and there is much difference in many circumſtances. If it ſhall ſeem improbable, that Moſes having once brought waters out of a rock without any infidelity, ſhould in the like caſe doubt afterwards; Simlerus anſwereth well, that haply he might fear that God would be ſo offended with the people for murmuring upon the ſame occaſion the ſecond time, that he would not vouchſafe the ſame favour again unto them, and Verſe 2.

Calvin.

Hen. Bunting Patriarchs travels.

Simlerus.

and therefore doubted then. Gods giving them water twice out of a Rock, ſeemeth alſo to be implyed by the ſaying of the Apoſtle, The Rock that followed them: for in that being farre from the firſt place, they were yet watered out of a Rock ſo long after, the Rock did as it were follow them. Here again the people ſhew themſelves to be moſt wicked, in that having had ſo lately ſo great experience of Gods power and mercy when they wanted food, they were again without all faith, when they wanted drink, and this aggravateth their ſin, that they mutiny againſt their Governour, and require of him to give them drinke, which was not in his, but in the power of God alone. He chargeth them with tempting the Lord and ſinning againſt him, becauſe he that believeth not, but out of infidelity is moved with vvrath for any vvant, and chargeth the Lord or his Miniſters vvith unjuſt dealing, tempteth him, that is, tryeth his patience, and provoketh him to take revenge upon him, as upon a Rebel.

1 Cor. 10.

Verſe 4. And Moſes cryed to the Lord, ſaying, What ſhall I do to this people, for they are almoſt ready to ſtone me. This prayer of Moſes, ſaith Calvin, vvas not rightly compoſed, but confuſed and mingled vvith much perturbation of the minde, as if he held himſelf to be unjuſtly burthened to be ſet over to unruly a people. But all others applaud Moſes herein as a pattern to us, teaching us in his example in the time of diſtreſſe to flee to God by prayer, to be directed by him, as not knovving of our ſelves vvhat to do. And Ferus ſpecially praiſeth Moſes, in that he deſired not revenge to be taken upon the people, but prayeth for them, not timerouſly ſpeaking of their being ready to ſtone him, but fearing if they vvere not preſently ſupplied, they might commit this great ſin to the provoking of God againſt them to their own deſtruction, to vvhom I rather ſubſcribe herein, becauſe no fault is here laid to the charge of Moſes.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Verſe 5. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Go on before the people, and take with thee the Elders of Iſrael, and the rod wherewith thou ſmoteſt the River, &c. Here again the infinite mercy of God appeareth, in that being again provoked, he yet commeth at it. He biddeth Moſes not to flee avvay, as fearing the fury of the people, but to go on before them towards Horeb, and there he ſaith, that he would ſtand at the Rock, and make the waters to flow out, when he ſhould ſtrike it with his rod, that is, he would ſtand in the cloudy pillar. But why muſt he go with the Elders to this place, and not with all the people? Ferus anſwereth, becauſe the people for their infidelity were unworthy, and yet ſome eye-witneſſes muſt ſtand by to teſtifie the miracle, and for this purpoſe the Elders were fitteſt, who might inſtruct the people in the fear of the Lord, thus alſo Calvin and others.

Verſe 6.

Queſt.

Ferus.

Calvin.

His rod alſo, wherewith he ſmote the River that is in Egypt, turning it into blood, he muſt take in his hand, that by this outward ſigne, wherewith he had done ſo great miracles, and eſpecially upon the River in ſmiting therewith, he might be the more confirmed, that now again in ſmiting the Rock, he ſhould by the divine power bring out waters.

God could as well without Moſes and his rod, as Ferus noteth, have brought out waters, but he would thus win authority to Moſes, the Enſigne whereof was his rod: for if the Miniſter of God be without authority, he ſhall be ſubject to contempt amongſt the people. Whereas in the preceding hiſtory it is ſaid, Aaron ſmote the River, not Moſes, but here Moſes; whereupon Auguſtine maketh a queſtion, whether by the River be not meant the Sea, which Moſes ſmote? it is eaſily reſolved, as he alſo finally reſolveth it, that it is ſaid to have bin ſmitten by Moſes, becauſe Aaron did it at the command of Moſes. And the rod elſewhere called the rod of God is here called the rod of Moſes, becauſe God imparted his authority to Moſes, a ſigne whereof it was. And the Lord promiſeth to ſtand there in the cloudy pillar, to be ſeen, that Moſes might have the more confidence, and yet be kept humble, as not doing it by any power in him, but ſtriking onely, and God bring-Auguſt in Exod. quæſt. 61.

Ferus.

ing

ing out the water, and that the people prone to Idolatry might not think any vertue to be in the Rock to adore it. Of the name of Horeb and Sinai, see before, *Ch.*3.1. they were two tops of one Mountain, one eastward called Sinai, the other westward called Horeb, and a Plain fruitfull and pleasant is between them, this, Brittenbacchus saith, he with many others went and saw Anno 1483, in the moneth of September, the mountain is all one in the base, and is both great and high, so that they could not without great labour go up unto it, this was from Raphidim eight miles. This miracle is for the greatnesse of it much celebrated, *Deut.*8. *Nehem.*9. *Psal.*78. *Psal.*105. *Esa.*48, &c. Some, saith Simlerus, to derogate from this miracle, and say, that the rod of Moses was of Adamant, and so he brake the Rock therewith, and thus a fountaine lying hid there before flowed out, but this is vain: if there were any fountaine, God brought it forth by his Almighty Power, or rather at this instant he created a new fountain there.

Beat. Brittenbac.

Patriarchs travails.

Simlerus.

And he called the name of the place Massah and Meriba, that is, temptation and contention, that by the name they might be put in minde of their sin to repent, and take heed of tempting the Lord by murmuring any more: for this name was a perpetuall memoriall, that when they tried it, the Lord shewed himself to be amongst them, not of their merit, but of his grace, when they deserved to be forsaken.

Verse 7.

For the mystery, this rock figured out Christ, 1 *Cor.*10. he is therefore often compared to a rock, upon which the Church is built, at which some stumble, and which breaketh those in pieces upon whom it falleth, *Matth.*16. *Rom.*9. 1 *Pet.*2. *Matth.*21. *Esa.*8. *chap.*28. *Dan.*2. *Zach.*3. *Psal.*117. *Eph.*2. *Act.*4. And as the rock yeelded water to drink, so Christ yeeldeth both the drink of his spirit, *Joh.*7. and of his blood. But as the rock, so Christ must first be smitten with the rod of affliction, and his side must be pierced with a spear, and then cometh forth blood and water, so Ferus. Or as Isidore hath it, the wood of the crosse was as the rod wherewith he was smitten, and the peoples murmuring, which gave occasion to bring water out of the rock, figureth out trouble and want found, when a man looketh to the Law, but then the Rock Christ is shewed, whereby refreshing cometh, and unto him also Moses leadeth.

The Mystery.

Ferus.
Isidore.

And Amalek came and fought with Israel in Rephidim, and Moses bade Josuah chuse out men and go fight with Amalek, &c. The Amalekites are thought by many to have come of Amalechus the bastard son of Eliphaz, the grand-childe of Esau, spoken of *Gen.*36. But because *Gen.*14.7. mention is made of Amalekites in Abrahams time, this seemeth to be false; but they might be called so, saith Simlerus, by anticipation, because in the time of Moses they were called so, when this history was written. Strabus, saith the Scholasticall History, affirmeth the Amalekites to have been Ishmaelites, or Saracens, coming of Ishmael. Josephus saith, that they were a warlike people inhabiting Goboch and Jaboth, and that they were hired of those that dwelt about the rock to come and fight against Israel. Some say, that they came to fight with them to be revenged for the injury done by Jacob unto Esau: Others, that they were brought by envie to hinder them from coming to Canaan: Some, that they came for prey onely after the manner of the Arabians, or fearing, lest they should invade their bounds, to keep them off. No reason is here rendered, but it seemeth that they would stop their passage, being stirred up by Satan, as his instruments to prevent their coming to the land of Canaan, that Gods promises might be frustrated; and therefore God would have the memoriall of them, as of his enemies, quite blotted out, for which cause he afterwards sent Saul against them. And I think that they were neither Ishmaelites, nor Edomites, but a people, before they had any being, coming of some other strein, as is noted, *Gen.*14. and with the Edomites, because they were their brethren the Lord would not let them fight, *Numb.*20. and mount Seir was given to Ishmael for an inheritance for ever, wherefore

Verse 8.
Verse 9.

Simlerus.
Scholast.histor.

Joseph.

1 Sam.15.

God would not have any people of them cut off for Abrahams ſake, of whom they came. But Expoſitours hold generally, that they came of Amalechus the grand-childe of Eſau. If it be demanded, why God would have them now exerciſed with war? Calvin ſaith, To puniſh their murmuring, & to keep them from mutinying hereafter, which men are moſt apt unto, when an Army is kept together without action, for being hitherto favoured they grew more and more petulant. Simlerus addeth, that being inured to war, they might be the better fitted to encounter with the Canaanites. But Ferus, that having taken the ſpoil of the Amalekites, they might uſe their armour in their following wars, and reſpect was herein had to their further confirmation by a new miracle, victory being gotten by the lifting up of the hands of Moſes. In that Joſuah is ſent to encounter with them, ſelecting ſome men, and not taking all with him, but Moſes keepeth aloof upon the top of the mountain; this was done to ſhew, that the people were unworthy to have Moſes with them, ſo Calvin expounding it, as a ſigne of Gods indignation for their late offence, that they might be the more humbled, and ſeek reconciliation again with God and victory by prayer more earneſtly poured out: But Ferus, and after him Simlerus better; Moſes was aged, and a Prophet, and therefore it was not fit for him to go out to fight, but for Joſuah a young man and valiant. God had not committed to Moſes a ſword, but a rod, working by that after an extraordinary manner. And therefore after his example, whileſt others fight, the Miniſters of God, as Moſes taking Aaron and Hur, Prieſts with him, pray in the mean ſeaſon, The weapons of our warrare are not worldly, but ſpirituall. Joſuah is ſent, no doubt, God appointing it, becauſe he ſhould afterwards be their leader, that prevailing now under his conduct, they might the more willingly ſubmit to him afterwards. And he taketh ſome choſen men onely with him, not all, becauſe God would give the victory not by the ſtrength of a fleſhly arm, but by his own power, and if all had gone out, many of them for want of ſtrength, or courage, would rather have been an hinderance then a furtherance in the time of battell. He is derided in the Comedian, as a coward, who when he ſent others out to war, got himſelf a ſafe ſtanding. But Moſes doth not thus go aſide, but by the lifting up of the rod of God, and his hands in prayer to aid them fighting, and to encourage them, as aſſured of the victory, when they ſhould ſee him with this rod (whereby he had ſubdued Egypt) there.

Queſt. Calvin.

Simlerus. Ferus.

Verſe 9.

Calvin.

Ferus. Simlerus.

Aaron and Hur called Prieſts by Simlerus, but 1 Chron. 2. 19. we read of Hur, as coming of Caleb, of the Tribe of Judah.

Verſe 10. So Joſhuah did as Moſes had ſaid, and Moſes, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill. When two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them, ſaith the Lord; wherefore Moſes taketh Aaron and Hur with him to go and pray for victory.

Verſe 11. And when Moſes lifted up his hand, Iſrael prevailed, and when he let it down, Amalek prevailed, &c. This lifting up of the hand was, as all Expoſitours agree, in prayer; and becauſe he had the rod in his hand, it is to be thought that he held that up alſo, and being ſo held, ſaith Simlerus, ſome think that there was the form of a Croſſe, typifying the Croſſe of Chriſt, wherein the Devil and all our ſpirituall enemies are overcome. But to leave this to Rabanus the Authour thereof. It is an uſuall thing to lift up the hands in prayer, to ſhew, that the help which we ſeek is from Heaven, towards which place we lift them up. And therefore Moſes lifteth up his hands for the ſame end, and this ſheweth that when we pray, the affections of our heart, as the hands thereof, ſhould be lifted up. But it may be demanded, becauſe when Moſes lifted up his hand Iſrael prevailed, but not when he let it down, why it was ſo, ſeeing the power of prayer lieth in the heart, and not in the hand? Simlerus anſwereth well, Becauſe by this externall ſigne it appeared unto the people, that their help came from Heaven, which could not otherwiſe have been ſo well perceived by them. But all this was not done without a myſtery, as Ferus hath well obſerved. Whileſt we are in the way to the heavenly Canaan, our ſpirituall enemies ſin and Satan fight againſt us, and ſtop our paſ-

Simlerus.

Rab. Maurus.

Queſt.

The Myſtery.

ſage,

sage; against them not Moses, but Joshuah is sent out, that is, we are saved not by the law, figured out by Moses, but by Jesus, of whom Joshuah was a notable type. Again, Moses set upon a stone figured out the Law written in tables of stone, his hands being heavy, the weakness of the Law to save: Aaron supporting one, signifieth the mountain of fortitude; Hur, the other, signifying fire, to shew that by Christ the Rock or Mountain, and by the Holy Ghost, who is as fire, we are comforted against the terrours of the Law, and our hands feeble and hanging down for fear are lifted up, when remission of sins and salvation are pronounced to the penitent and believing: to this effect Rabanus. Ferus. Rab. Maurus.

Calvin nameth another Allegory, In these two men are figured out the Lavv and the Gospel, whereby our prayers must be supported, that they may prevail, but he slighteth both this and all others brought here, holding that Aaron and Hur did onely by holding up the hands of Moses shew, that they holpe him in praying, joyning their prayers together also. But to me the foregoing mystical significations seem excellently to agree. We may also note from hence, that the power of prayer is more then all the force of Armes, but the heart must be lifted up as the hands of Moses, but vve are feeble through the flesh, as Moses vvas through age, and therefore they vvill ever and anon be falling dovvn, unlesse they be supported and held up, and that by these tvvo, good vvorkes and meditations placed in heaven; for by good vvorks vve lay up a treasure in heaven, and vvhere the treasure is, there vvill the heart be also, and an heavenly minde is lifted up to things above. And vve must not let our hands fall dovvn, till the Sun of our life setteth, but alvvayes be praying, even till Amalek, that is, our spiritual enemies be quite vanquished. Calvin. Note. Matth. 6. 18. Col. 3. 1.

And the Lord said to Moses, Write this for a memoriall in a Book, and rehearse it in the eares of Joshuah, for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven. This famous Victory must be written, that by reading, it being alwayes kept in minde, they might both be continually thankfull, and incouraged to all future battels against other enemies, when they should recount Amaleks overthrow, that first came out against them, and the curse laid upon him therefore to the rooting out of his name for ever. And it must be rehearsed in the eares of Joshuah, as their future Judge, and other Judges and Kings his Successours, till they were utterly destroyed, which vvas not till about 400 years after, when Saul vvas King, and by remembring this decree God vvould continue an hatred of Amalek in Israel for ever: see also Deut. 25. so Maimony in Misn. Treat. of Kings, Chap. 5. Sect. 5. As Amalek, so Antichrist shall one day be rooted out for ever, but to shevv a long time to come before this, he biddeth that it should be vvritten. Rab. Menahem saith, that the destruction of the seed of Esau in the dayes of the Messiah vvas figured out hereby. Verse 14. Maimony. R. Menahem.

And Moses built an Altar, and called the name thereof, Jehovah Nissi, &c. that is, Jehovah my banner, or my exaltation. This vvas done in vvay of gratitude, sacrifices being there also vvithout doubt offered, for the one place for oblations was not yet appointed. Verse 15.

And he said, Because the Lord hath sworn, the Lord will have war with Amalek for ever; Heb. כי יד על כס יה, because the hand upon the throne of Jah. Now because God is said to lift up his hand to heaven, vvhich is his throne; vvhen he svveareth, it is commonly rendered, The Lord hath sworne, hand being referred to God. So the Chaldee Paraphrast, With oath this is said from before the fearfull God, whose Majesty is upon the throne of glory, to vvage vvarre against Amalek, &c. so likevvise the Targum Hierosol. saying, that it vvas fulfilled in Saul, and in Mordecai and Hester destroying Haman, called the Agagite, because he came of Agag King, of Amalek. The Septuagint, With hidden hand the Lord vvill vvarre, &c. or othervvise, Because the hand, that is, of Amalek, is upon the throne of Jah, that is, upon or against his peo- Verse 16. Chaldee Paraphrast.

ple, and conſequently againſt him, *Zach.*2.8. *Act.*9.4,5. *Jer.*3.17. the Lord vvill have vvarre vvith Amalek for ever, and being thus underſtood, the vvords vvil beſt agree, except vve ſhall by hand underſtand povver thus, becauſe, or as ſurely as there is an hand or povver upon the throne of Jah, &c. To have vvar for ever, is to be alvvayes at enmity, and ready to bend his force againſt Amalek till they be utterly extirpated in this World and in the World to come, as ſaith Rab. Eliezer.

R. Eliezer.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſe 1. AND Jethro the father in law of Moſes heard of all which the Lord had done for Moſes and for Iſrael his people, &c. The deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt

Exod.15. was ſo notable, that the fame thereof was ſoon ſpread far and wide, according to that in the ſong of Moſes, The people ſhall hear and tremble; and therefore Jethro being no far-dweller, might eaſily hear of it by the common fame.

Simlerus. Or, as Simlerus hath it, Moſes haply ſent a meſſenger unto him, to ſignifie what had paſſed, and by him ſome preſent in way of love and kindneſſe, which he ſaith alſo might be intimated in the laſt word of the next Verſe, after he had ſent her, as if it had been ſaid, after he had ſent them, that is, gifts unto him. But this is worthily counted frigid by Calvin, becauſe it is plainly ſpoken of the wife of Moſes, before ſent unto her father. It is but an ima-

Ferus. gination then, that Jethro had a meſſage firſt from Moſes, it was the fame which he heard that drew him hither, as Ferus noteth, that he might ſee ſomething for his further confirmation, that he might congratulate with Moſes that great deliverance, praiſe God together with him therefore, and publiſh

Note. the ſame to others at his return again home. And this is vvorth the noting, that an Heathen is moved by Gods vvonderfull acts done for his people to magnifie him, vvhen his people vvere ever and anon ready to murmur againſt him, ſlighting all his famous vvorks. This vvas nothing but a figure of that vvhich happened in the time of Chriſt, for then the Jevvs vvere not affected but vvith indignation at his miracles, but the Gentiles vvere. Who Jethro vvas, and vvhether Prince or Prieſt, and vvhere Madian is, from vvhence he came, and hovv farre diſtant from Mount Sinai, I have ſpoken, *Chap.*2.

Verſe 2,3,4, Verſe 5. Jethro cometh vvith his daughter Zipporah, the vvife of Moſes, and his tvvo ſonnes Gerſhom and Eliezer, vvhom Moſes is ſaid to have ſent back. This ſending back, according to moſt Expoſitours, vvas, *Chap.*4. *v.*26. upon occaſion of the difference about the circumciſing of his childe, he finding that vvife and children vvould be a trouble to him in executing his vveighty Office at Calvin. that time in Egypt, and haply being adviſed thus to do by Aaron, vvho met him, ſee before, *Chap.*4.26. Calvin contrarivviſe holdeth, that Moſes being come to this place, vvhere he vvas not farre from Jethro, ſent his vvife and children over to viſit him, that they might mutually rejoyce in ſeeing one another, ſhe haply deſiring it, and hereupon Jethro to requite this kindneſſe, came back again vvith them. And to the former opinion, he thinketh, that vve may not conſent, becauſe if Moſes ſhould have ſent his vvife and children back before, he might by Jethro have been ſuſpected of fraud, and his ovvn children never coming into Egypt ſhould not have been partakers of the Redemption, of vvhich he vvas the Miniſter, vvhich is improbable, ſee-

Simlerus. ing they vvere to be Prieſts aftervvards. But Simlerus vvell ſhevveth theſe reaſons to be vveak, becauſe Moſes might eaſily make it appear, that he left his wife and children behinde him for none other end, but that he might with the more expedition go about that whereunto he was called: for if he had taken his family with him, either he muſt have neglected it, which had been impious, or in caring for that, he muſt needs have been troubled in his calling in thoſe dangerous times. Touching the other reaſon, his children did partake of the redemption in their father, and by circumciſion were joyned as one people to the reſt, and ſo capable of any dignity in the Church of God. Of the ſonnes of Moſes, ſee before, Chap. 2. and 4.

one

And he ſaid to Moſes, I thy father in law Jethro am come to thee, &c. that is, he ſaid thus by a meſſenger ſent before to Moſes to tell him of his comming: for Moſes was in great authority, and by the incurſion of the Amalekites it is likely, that the people kept watch and ward, ſo that none coming with any company could come neer without ſending firſt, and ſignifying the cauſe of their coming, ſo Simlerus; and to expreſſe this, the Septuagint have it, It was told Moſes, ſaying, Jethro thy father in law is come. — Verſe 6. Septuagint.

Then Moſes went out to meet his father in law, and did obeyſance, &c. He was ſtill the ſame humble Moſes, notwithſtanding the dignity by the Lord put upon him, and therefore ſheweth all ſignes of reverence to Jethro, as in times paſt, and ſo the greateſt ought to do towards fathers and mothers, or fathers in law, &c. thus Solomon ſet his mother upon his right hand. — Verſe 7.

Then Moſes told all that had paſſed to Jethro, and he greatly rejoyced, and bleſſed God for it, and acknowledged him to be above all gods. Becauſe Jethro, as is moſt probable, came to know, what great things God had done, Moſes ſatisfieth his deſire herein. And by his rejoycing and praiſing of the Lord, it ſeemeth, that he had ſome knowledge of the true God before this: but hereof ſee ſomewhat before, Exod. 2. 16, 17. — Verſe 8, 9. Verſe 10.

And Jethro took a burnt-offering and ſacrifice for God, and Aaron and all the Elders of Iſrael came to eat bread with him before God. To take an offering for God is to do ſacrifice, to take it, to offer it up in ſacrifice. If it ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that Jethro ſacrificed to God, ſeeing this Office belonged to Aaron and to his ſonnes; It is anſweeed, that the Leviticall Prieſthood was not yet ſet up, and therefore any Prieſt or Prince of his family might do ſacrifice, after the example of the ancient Fathers: ſo Simlerus, but Calvin denyeth, that he offered, as a Prieſt, onely the liberty given before the Law to any to do ſacrifice is here uſed: for that the fact was juſtifiable, appeareth, becauſe Aaron and the Elders by their preſence approved thereof: yet Auguſtine, ſaith Peter Comeſtor, will not yield, that Jethro ſacrificed, but Moſes; according to another tranſlation, Jethro took ſacrifices of thoſe that were offered by Moſes, and ate. By his burnt-offrings he firſt expiated his ſinnes, and then he offered ſacrifices. that is, of peace and thankſgiving, and of theſe laſt they ate together, as is allowed, Levit. 7. 15. and this name of ſacrifices is expreſſed, Exod. 24. 5. Of the burnt-offerings for ſin they might not eat, Levit. 1. 9. But what is meant by eating before God? To this Auguſtine anſwereth, that eating to the honour of God is meant, becauſe yet no Tabernacle was erected, that their eating there ſhould be meant. For when a Tabernacle was erected, to eat there was to eat before God, Deut. 12. 7. 1 Chron. 29. 21, 22. but now to keep an holy feaſt to the honour of God. For in all ſacrifices this was the order, to lay part upon the Altar, and to eat the reſt together, and this cuſtome was followed by the Heathen ſacrificing to Idols, at whoſe feaſts Chriſtians are forbidden to be preſent, leſt they ſhould thus become partakers of Devils tables. The phraſe ſetting forth feaſting, is, to eat bread, ſo likewiſe, Eccleſ. 10. 19. Dan. 5. 1. Levit. 3. 11. Chap. 21. 16. Numb. 28. 2. ſo that to eat bread here, is to eat both bread and fleſh, yea to feaſt. One ſaith, They ate before God, that is, before the cloudy pillar the ſigne of his preſence. To eat before God, that is, in the fear of God, which Ferus addeth, and ſo to refrein from exceſſe, and from corrupt talk at feaſting-times, although it be neceſſary to be inculcated, yet it is not the thing properly meant in this place. — Verſe 12. Simlerus. Calvin. Auguſt. qu. 66. in Exod. 1 Cor. 10. Ainſworth. Ferus.

And the next morning Moſes ſat to judge the people, and they ſtood by him from morning till evening. This Jethro diſalloweth, as a thing over-wearieſome both to him and to them, and preſcribeth another form of government. In reproving the courſe followed by Moſes, he firſt inquireth, verſ. 14. What is this that thou doeſt? &c. he anſwereth, The people come to me to ſeek the Lord, — Verſe 13, 14. Verſe 15, 16. Verſe 17, 18. Verſe 19, 20. Verſe 21.

when

when they have any cauſe they come to me, and I judge between one and another, and make them know the ſtatutes and laws of God, v.15,16. He is not raſh in finding fault with ſo great a Prince, but proceedeth moſt warily & wiſely, taking heed to ſpeak nothing that might offend him: for thus circumſpectly muſt Rulers be handled by thoſe that will do any good upon them, and not provoke them to their own hurt. He could not but commend and admire the labours of Moſes for the good of the people, in that even at this time, when he had a ſpeciall friend with him, he yet attended upon his office for the common good, and ſat about it all the day long, and therefore his words are words of admiration, What is this that thou doeſt! But it was the charge laid upon him by God, and his love to the people that made him to do thus, becauſe he knew not whether he might commit this office to any other for him, or not. And where love and conſcience of duty is, any burthen is made light; but contrariwiſe, where there is ſelf-love and ignorance of Gods Law requiring it, every little burthen born for others is heavie. To ſeek the Lord, this is by the Septuagint rendered, To ſeek judgement of God; the Chaldee Paraphraſt, To ſeek doctrine from the face of the Lord. In any caſe of difference betwixt man and man, he that goeth to law, ſeeketh the Lords judgement; if otherwiſe to ſatisfie his ovvn corrupt deſires, he cometh with bribes, he altogether forgetteth the end, vvhy a Judge is appointed. They come to me, and I judge, that is, firſt bringing their matters to God: See *verſ.*19. *Numb.*27.5,6. and Chap. 15.33,34,35. But here a queſtion lieth, Whether Moſes went every time to the Lord to enquire, and hovv he could ſhevv them Gods ſtatutes, before they were made, for the Lavv was not yet given? Auguſtine anſvvereth, It is not likely that he went to enquire in every caſe, for the Lavv of God is written in every godly minde, a man knovveth, ſaith Ferus, by the Lavv of Nature, vvhat is right, and vvhat vvrong, and ſo in ordinary matters to give a right judgement. He might then by this light ſhevv them, vvhat vvere the lavves and ſtatutes of God, although they vvere not yet vvritten. But Moſes vvas more then an ordinary man, and through the great meaſure of the Spirit, vvhich he had, could not onely by the light of Nature, but hereby underſtand to judge according to the vvill of God. And thus much is intimated, when the Lord ſaith, *Numb.*11. that he vvould take of his Spirit, and put it upon the Elders that ſhould govern vvith him. And it is vvorth the noting, that the judgement of Moſes vvas not his ovvn, but Gods vvill, and his lavv. And ſo ſhould it be vvith every Judge, private affections ſhould bear no ſway, but ſimply Gods judgement ſhould in every matter be declared. And therefore it is ſaid, that Moſes ſat to judge the people, the ſitting of the Judge ſhewing the quiet that ſhould be in his minde, and freedom from diſquieting affections, as Ferus hath it. The lavv of God and laws made according to it muſt be the rule to go by, and not the pleaſure of men, vvho are in high place, becauſe all men are variable, but the Law is conſtant, and alwayes like it ſelf. He that will have the Law to rule, ſaith Ariſtotle, ſeeketh to ſet God over things; but he that would have men, ſetteth beaſts over them. And yet it is ſtrange to ſee, that now vve are judged by Lavvs, yet it is a moſt hard thing to have a right judgement, the courſe of the Lavv is ſo intricate. He that hath a juſt cauſe, muſt ſpend ſo much time and be at ſo great charge, that he had as good leave it as follow it. There are ſo many ſubtleties and ſnares, that a juſt cauſe may be loſt, either becauſe he that followeth it is not ſufficiently inſtructed herein, or his caſe is not duly propounded, that moſt impious rule being objected for the defence of all this, Vigilanti jura ſubveniunt, as Ferus complaineth, and that not without cauſe, the greater is the ſin of Judges. Touching the reproving of the courſe followed by Moſes, and the counſell of a Forreigner given unto him. If it ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that Moſes ſo familiarly inſtructed by God, ſhould yet need counſell from another; Saint Auguſtine ſaith, That this was done to ſhew, that good counſell ought not to be contemned by whomſoever it be given, and that Simlerus.

Ferus.

Note.

Queſt.

Auguſt. quæſt. 67. in Exod.

Ferus.

Note.

Deut.1.
2 Chron.19.

Ariſt. Polit.3. Qui legem vult dominari, Deum quærit rebus præficere, qui homines, is beſtiam præponit.

Auguſt quæſt. 68. in Exod.

that Moſes might hereby be kept from being proud of his elevation alone above all, when as he ſaw yet that there was another, who went in ſome things beyond him in counſell, in reſpect of externals, ſaith Ferus; for in regard of divine things, he excelled all men in the knowledge thereof. Heathen men have their excellencies in outward things, and go ſometimes herein beyond the children of light. Again, hereby is ſhewed, that no man is in every reſpect perfect, but defective in ſome things, that if ſo great a man as Moſes, had his errour, we may look carefully to our ſelves, leſt if we be remiſſe, we prove full of faults.

Ferus.

Note.

Calvin.
Simlerus.

It is not good that thou doeſt, &c. It was not ſimply evil which he did, but very commendable for the matter; but the manner was not ſo commodious, which he meaneth, when he ſaith, It is not good. Verſ. 19. I will give thee counſell, and God ſhall be with thee. Hereby is intimated, ſaith Auguſtine, that the minde too much intent to humane affairs is without God, of whom it is ſo much the more full, by how much the more extended more freely to things ſupernall and eternall. And by ſaying thus, he meaneth not that Moſes ſhould follow his counſell, but with the allowance of God, as he further expreſſeth, verſ. 23. ſo Simlerus. By all theſe ſpeeches it ſeemeth that Jethro was both wiſe and godly, although none of the children of Iſrael, and that Job was not alone amongſt the Heathen to be commended. Be thou for the people to God-ward, to bring their cauſes to God, the Chaldee Paraphraſt addeth, inquiring doctrine from the face of the Lord. For cauſes in Hebrew is (words) but their hard matters are meant, wherein none but God could judge, and therefore Moſes did accordingly afterwards, Numb. 19. 33, &c. He doth wiſely, ſaith Ferus, diſtinguiſh betwixt the two ſorts of power, the ſpirituall and the temporall; the ſpirituall is that which is to God-ward, this he doth not adviſe ſhould be communicated to any other, but retained by Moſes, viz. 1 To pray to God for the people, and to ſhew what anſwer he giveth in doubtfull caſes. 2 To ſhew them, according to what rites and ordinances they ought to worſhip God, Thou ſhalt teach them the ſtatutes and laws, verſ. 20. 3. To ſhew them which way to make their journey, Thou ſhalt ſhew them the way that they ſhall go. 4 The works to be done by them.

Aug. in Exod. quæſt. 69. Mihi ſignificari videtur nimis intentum humanis actionibus animum Dei quodammodo vacuari, quo ſit tantò plenior, quantò ad ſuperna & æterna liberius extenditur.
Simlerus.

Rab. Maurus.
Chaldee Paraphraſt.
Ferus.

But for the temporall power to judge all matters, v. 21. Moreover, thou ſhalt provide out of all the people able men, ſuch as fear God, men of truth, hating covetouſneſſe, and place ſuch over them to be Rulers of thouſands, hundreths, fifties, and tens. Deut. 1. 13. Moſes recounting this chooſing of able men to rule over them, ſaith, that he bade them to chuſe wiſe men and underſtanding, and he would make them Rulers, &c. But here Jethro counſelleth him to provide ſuch, and he is ſaid to have done in all things, as Jethro counſelled, v. 24. Here is no difference, Moſes provideth them in appointing the people to nominate them, and being nominated committing the office of judging and ruling unto them: for the chief authority to make them Rulers ſtill reſted in him, as appeareth, Deut. 1. v. 15. So I took the chief of your Tribes, and made them heads over you,, &c. The people do more willingly obey thoſe that be ſet in authority, when they themſelves have an hand in the choice of them, and therefore all Officers were choſen amongſt the Romans by the people, and the Knights of the Shire amongſt us in England, who together with the King and Nobles enact all Laws. And in the Primitive Church Presbyters were nominated by the people, who might preach the Goſpel unto them, and ordained by the Biſhop, as being of chief authority, able men, Deut. 1. 15. They are called the chief of their tribes, wiſe men and known: for it availeth much to appoint men to rule, that are nobly and not baſely born, if ſo be that they have wiſdom and courage to help the oppreſſed, and this be a thing well known and obſerved in them. The word tranſlated able, is חיל, whereupon the Hebrews ſay thus, Able men are ſuch as be mighty in the Commandments, and exactly look to themſelves and ſubdue their affections, ſo that there is no diſhoneſt or contemptible thing in them, nor evil name.

Verſe 21.

Simlerus.

name. And ſuch as have a ſtrong and couragious heart to deliver the oppreſſed out of the oppreſſours hand, Maimony in Sanedrin, Chap 2. Sect. 7.

Maimony. Simlerus.

In the Septuagint it is rendered juſt men: and ſome, ſaith Simlerus, render it vviſe, ſome valiant, ſome ſtrong of body, and ſome vvealthy, but he prefereth that, vvhereby it is rendered, men of courage, and valiant. But our reading is beſt, able men, that is, both for vviſdome, and courage, and vvealth, and bodily ſtrength, and ſo fit to be ſet over others. Fearing God, this muſt be in a Judge to expell the fear of man, vvhich might hinder him from doing juſtice. Men of truth, that is, inquiring into the truth of matters that come before them, and judging accordingly, and therefore neither partiall, nor deceitfull, nor blinded by malice. Hating covetouſneſſe, this vice, as the root of all evil, muſt not only be away, but be hated, and this is oppoſed to taking of bribes. How bribes corrupt juſtice, ſee Deut. 16. 19. 1 Sam. 8. 3. Prov. 1. 19. Ezech. 22. 27. Eſa. 56. 11. The Chaldee hath it, hating to receive Mammon, hating, ſay the Hebrews, their ovvn Mammon, and not haſtening to gather riches. Some obſerve three more properties added, Deut. 1. 15. wiſdome, and underſtanding, and fame, for they muſt be known men, and therefore the Hebrews ſay, that in every Ruler there ought to be theſe ſeven things, wiſdome, meekneſſe, the fear of God, hatred of Mammon, love of the truth, love of their fellow-creatures, and a good name. And unto theſe an eighth may be added, he muſt be ancient, Numb. 11.

1 Tim. 6.

Lib. Sanedrin. c. 2. §. 7.

Rulers over thouſands, &c. This is commonly rendered Tribunes, becauſe, as Comeſtor hath it, each one was over a Tribe, not for that in one Tribe there were no more but juſt a thouſand, but he was called a Chiliarch or Ruler over a thouſand, a certain number being put for an uncertain. If ſo, then there were but twelve of theſe, otherwiſe ſix hundred, and of the next ſort ſix thouſand, under each one ten Hecatontarchs, under each of them two, and under each of them five. And if this be underſtood of Judges, where, ſaith Simlerus, could ſo many be had able to judge amongſt this rude people? and therefore he underſtandeth by theſe all that did bear any Office in leading the people in their rankes. The Hebrews, ſaith he, refer theſe numbers to Apparitours, ſaying, That ſome Judge had under him ten, ſome fifty, ſome a hundred, and ſome a thouſand to execute their judgements. But it is plain, that ſo many Rulers were appointed; thoſe over ten to decide triflng matters, for which it was neceſſary to keep them the better in order to have one neer unto them, to whom they might go. After all theſe Rulers named in the Hebrew text, the Septuagint adde moreover, γραμμάτων εἰσαγωγεῖς ſome to lead to the knowledge of letters, about which Auguſtine is much troubled, not knowing what to make of it, unleſſe they had then the knowledge of letters, which when it began he knoweth not, unleſſe, as ſome think, from Adam, and after from Noah and Abraham, &c. But becauſe no ſuch thing is in the Hebrew, I leave this, as not worth the inquiring into here.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Simlerus.

Auguſt. in Exod. quæſt. 69.

Verſe 24. Moſes in all this hearkened to Jethro, ſo great was his humility, that he ſcorned not the counſell of another man, although he himſelf was ſo full of underſtanding.

But all this was not done without a myſtery, for hereby was figured out, in that Jethro a Gentile inſtructeth Moſes, that the Church of the Gentiles ſhould in time to come inſtruct the Jews, teaching them a ſpirituall and good ſenſe of the Law, and bring them to follow that, who before, although ſometime they were the onely Doctours of the Law, were overmuch toiled, and that without profit in following their own ſenſe, but when this time ſhall come, which ſhall be at their converſion to Chriſt, they ſhall follow it in all things: to this effect almoſt Iſidore.

Iſidore.

Verſe 27. Then Moſes ſent away his father in law, and he went to his own Countrey. Although he went not to the ſame Countrey with the Iſraelites, becauſe that was promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, yet he was joyned to them in pietty towards the ſame God, and his ſonne Hobab went with them, Numb. 10. v. 29.

29. comming again after his return to his own Countrey, see Judges 1. 16. *Chap.*4.11. 1 Samuel 15.6. 2 Kings 10.15. 1 Chron. 2.55. Jerem. 35. which places are plainly for it, of him came the people called the Kenites or Cinai.

CHAP. XIX.

AND the third moneth, when the children of Israel were gone out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they into the wilderneſſe of Sinai. It was ſaid before, that Sin and Sinai were one vvilderneſſe, parts whereof were Suph, Rephidim, Alus and Daphcah, taking the name from Mount Sinai, *Chap.*17.1 but now they come to that part properly called the wilderneſſe of Sinai, where the Mount ſtood, and to this place they come, the third moneth the ſame day, that is, the firſt day of the moneth, according to ſome, or the third day, according to others; but Calvin ſaith, this is forced. To me it ſeemeth plain, the ſame day is the ſame day that the moneth began, being their new Moon, and ſo a ſolemn feaſt-day afterwards appointed. And ſo accurate is Moſes in ſetting down the time, becauſe this was the moſt remarkable ſtation of all others. For here they were appointed at the firſt to come forth and ſacrifice, Exod. 3. here they ſaw many ſignes, and heard God ſpeaking, and the Ark was reared up, and here they tarried longer then in any other place, for they came hither the firſt day of the third moneth the firſt year, and removed not till the twentieth day of the ſecond moneth of the ſecond year, ſo that they ſtayed here an whole year, wanting ten dayes. Before they came to this place, paſſed but 15 dayes, ſince their comming into the wilderneſſe of Sin, in which they were miraculouſly ſupplyed with meat and water, and delivered from Amalek, and Jethro came to the camp, and went avvay again: for their coming to Sin vvas the 15 day of the ſecond moneth, and their coming hither the firſt of the third. And it is to be noted, that this vvas the 47 day, ſince their coming out pf Egypt, 16 of the firſt moneth, 30 of the ſecond, and firſt of the third, unto vvhich three more being added, they make fifty, upon vvhich day the Lavv vvas given, and therefore at that time the feaſt of Pentecoſt vvas moſt aptly appointed to be kept, and the Spirit as the finger of God cometh to vvrite the Lavv in our hearts, as the Lavv vvas novv vvritten by the the finger of God in tables of ſtone, ſo Rabanus.

Verſe 1.

Schol. Hiſtor. Simlerus. Aug. Quæſt. Calvin. Jo. us.

Numb.10.11.

Exod.16.1. Chap.17.c.18.

But Moſes went up to God, for the Lord had called him out of the mountain, ſaying, &c. Some think, ſaith Simlerus, that he uſed ſometimes to go aſide to pray, and that it is moſt probable, that he did ſo at this time: but he holdeth rather on the contrary ſide, that God by an audible voice called him up to the Mount, becauſe it is not likely, that he would otherwiſe have preſumed to go up into ſo holy a place. Calvin thinketh, that going aſide by himſelfe to ſeek unto God, as his uſuall manner was, God called unto him. I ſubſcribe rather to Simlerus, for certainly, as Ferus noteth, having been once forbidden, Come not hither, for the ground whereupon thou ſtandeſt, is holy ground; he would not have preſumed to go nigh, unleſſe the Lord had called him. From hence forward unto *Numb.*10.11. are ſet down the things done onely in this place in the ſpace of almoſt one whole year. Moſes his going up to God was onely his going to the place where God appeared unto him; for to ſpeak properly, a man can go to no place, but God is there as well as in another. And here God is now ſaid to be, becauſe the cloudy pillar, the ſigne of his preſence ſtood here, *v.*9.

Verſe 3.

Simlerus.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Thus ſhalt thou ſay to the houſe of Jacob, and tell the houſe of Iſrael. Verſe 4. Ye have ſeen, what I did to the Egyptians, and I have born you upon Eagles wings, &c. This is ſpoken in way of preparation to the giving of the Law, as the like ſpeech is uſed afterwards, it being renued, *Deut.*29.2. and *Chap.*32.11. the Septuagint have it, as upon Eagles wings, that is, ſafely and ſpeedily, as an Eagle

Verſe 4.

gle taketh up her young ones upon her back, carrieth them, and openly not onely over lands, but alſo over waters, as if they had flown: for ſome

Ferus. ſaith Ferus, hold, that the Eagle tranſporteth her young ones from place to place upon her back, flying aloft ſo, as that if any arrow ſhould be ſhot, it cannot come at them, becauſe her body is between, or her flight is too high for any ſhot to reach unto them, and in like manner God did carry his people ſafe from all dangers. And as is further explained, Deut. 32. 11. She ſtirreth up her neſt, fluttereth with her wings, &c. that is, both with wings and talons defendeth her young ones from any aſſailant, ſo God defended his people from all dangers. And he ſaith, that he brought them to himſelf, the Chaldee, to my ſervice, Targum Hieroſol. to the doctrine of my Law, he meaneth as he had appointed Moſes to bring them out of Egypt to this mountain to ſerve him, ſo he had now done it, notwithſtanding all the obſtacles in the way. And here is an Antitheſis betwixt Pharaoh and himſelfe, before they had ſerved Pharaoh, but now they were come to ſerve a better maſter, the Lord; all which is ſpoken, that they might hold themſelves the more obliged unto God, and ſo the more readily obey his Commandements, which were now to be delivered unto them. And he doth not onely commemorate favours paſt, but promiſeth further.

Verſe 5. If ye ſhall obey my voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, ye ſhall be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all people, &c. That which God had already done for them was enough to binde them to him for ever, but as if he had done nothing for them already, he addeth here new promiſes, a peculiar treaſure, in Hebrew, Segullah, ſignifying a mans own proper good, which he loveth and keepeth in ſtore for himſelfe, and for ſpeciall uſe; the Septuagint render it, a peculiar people, which Saint Peter following, ſaith of the faithfull likewiſe, 1 Pet. 2. 9. and Saint Paul, Tit. 2. 14. the Chaldee rendereth it, beloved. How the word

R. Menahem. is uſed, ſee 1 Chron. 29. 3. Eccleſ. 2. 8. Rab. Menahem ſaith, that he meaneth beloved, as a ſpeciall treaſure, in which a King is ſo delighted, that he will not commit it to the keeping of any other, but keep it himſelf, ſee Deut.

Verſe 6. 10. 14, 15, Pſal. 135. 4. and ye ſhall be unto a Kingdom of Prieſts, the Septuagint have it, a Kingly Prieſthood, ſo likewiſe Saint Peter, applying it to the faithfull. They are thus called, both becauſe they ſhould offer ſacrifices to God, and be of greateſt dignity, for this is ſet forth by Kings and Prieſts, the Ferus. Excelſi eritis & glorioſi. higheſt degrees of men. Ye ſhall be high and glorious, ſaith Ferus, and hereby is alſo ſhewed, that Chriſt ſhould come of them, who is both King and Prieſt. And an holy Nation, that is, ſeparated from all other Nations to ſerve God in holineſſe. Or a Kingly Prieſthood, ſaith Simlerus, is an holy Kingdome, not prophane, as other Kingdomes are, a Kingdome of God, ſaith Simlerus. Calvin. Calvin, whereas others were the Kingdomes of wicked tyrants of the world. Of this the Jews boaſt themſelves ſtill, but forſomuch as they have rejected the faith of Chriſt, they have loſt this honour, and the faithfull company of Chriſtians whereſoever have it rightly by Saint Peter applyed unto them. For they onely are now, a peculiar people, redeemed for ſuch by the blood of Chriſt, an holy Nation, ſanctified thereby, a royall Prieſthood, becauſe both members of him, that is, King and Prieſt, and becauſe they are Gods perpetuall Kingdome, and alwayes offer up the clean ſacrifices of praiſe and prayer.

Verſe 7. Verſe 8. According to theſe words Moſes ſpeaketh to the Elders, and all people promiſed to obey. By the Elders the people in their ſeveral ranks are informed hereof, but their promiſe of obeying was but words, as the ſequel proved, although haply they purpoſed ſo to do at this time, but their humane frailty wrought to the contrary in them.

Verſe 9. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Lo, I come to thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I ſpeak with thee, and believe thee for ever. The Septuagint, to explain what this thick cloud was, have it, in the pillar of the cloud: for, believe thee, it is in Hebrew, believe in thee, that is, have a confidence in thy word, as in in the word of God, ſee before *chap.*14.31. Whereas it is twice ſaid, Moſes returned the words of the people to the Lord, verſ. 8. and again, *Moſes told the words of the people to the Lord, verſ.*9. This ſecond is nothing elſe, but a repetition of the ſame, as the cauſe why the Lord promiſed to come and ſpeak with Moſes in the cloud; thus he would do yet more to confirm them; for Moſes had reported their promiſe of obedience in all things, ſo Calvin; and therefore he rendereth it, Indicaverat autem Moſes, &c. Some think that Moſes went to relate their promiſe, but before he ſpake, was prevented by the Lords ſpeaking again firſt unto him, and then he related it after, ſo ſaith Simlerus, but approveth it not, referring the laſt words, as ſpoken in the Preterpluperfect Tenſe, Moſes had told their words to the Lord, to their words ſpoken long before, *chap.*6.12. but this ſeemeth to be far fetcht.

Calvin.

Simlerus.

Verſe 10.
Verſe 11.

And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Go unto the people, and ſanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them waſh their clothes, and be ready againſt the third day, &c. Before the giving of the Law, the people muſt be ſanctified, becauſe pearls muſt not be caſt before ſwine, nor holy doctrine put into unclean veſſels. In that it is commanded, that they ſhould be ſanctified, both the uncleanneſſe of man by nature is ſhewed, and that he is uncapable of good by the Law of God, unleſſe he cometh prepared and ſanctified unto it; and hence it is, that ſo many reap ſo little good by the Word, becauſe they prepare not themſelves, but come raſhly unto it, as to other humane actions, or to a ſtage-play, ſo Calvin. The inward ſanctification of the heart indeed is that, which chiefly commendeth us to God, but outward waſhing ſerved to put them in minde hereof, becauſe when it was required that they ſhould waſh their garments two dayes together, they might well think with themſelves, if God will not have any to come neer unto him to hear his Law, unleſſe all filthineſſe be waſhed from their garments, he will much leſſe admit of any, that are unclean in ſoul by ſin. Again, this outward waſhing ſhewed how much they made account of God and of his Law, becauſe when we are to come before ſuch as we make high account of, we will have care that our very garments be clean and decent, ſo Ferus, who ſaith for theſe cauſes veſtiments peculiar are appointed to be worn in the ſervice of God, to ſhew what high account we make hereof. But this is a weak ground, ſith they changed not, but waſhed their garments onely. Their ſanctifying is explaned to have been by waſhing their garments, and afterwards by keeping from their wives, *verſ.*15. becauſe although there be no pollution in the huſbands companying with the wife, yet the carnall delight hindereth, that a man cannot be ſo wholly intent to heavenly matters; and therefore that we may be poſſeſſed altogether with theſe, that is for the time prohibited, ſo likewiſe 1 *Cor.*7.5. From this the Heathen took up their cuſtom of waſhing, when they came about their Superſtitions. This figureth out the waſhing by the Holy Ghoſt, wherewith whoſoever is not waſhed and prepared, is not capable of any good by hearing the law and will of the Lord ſet forth. And a man is then waſhed in his garments, vvhen the members of his body, vvhich be as garments to the ſoul, are vvaſhed; and theſe are waſhed when we repent us of our ſins acted hereby, and till it is thus with us, vve are not accepted of in hearing the Lavv, but our coming before God is rejected as abominable, *Eſa.*1.12,13,14,15,16. And to ſhew that we are not eaſily cleanſed from ſin, they are bidden to vvaſh to day and to morrow, and to be ready againſt the third day; all the time of our life vve muſt be ſanctifying our ſelves, that vve may be ready the third day, ſetting forth the reſurrection, becauſe Chriſt roſe upon the third day. If it ſhall ſeem prepoſterous, that they muſt be ſanctified firſt, and then hear the Lavv, vvhen as by hearing faith is attained, vvhich purifieth and ſanctifieth the heart: Calvin anſvvereth, that a godly deſire to learn, humility and reverence are the beginning of faith, hereby vve are ſanctified, as the ſeat of faith is thus prepared, but then are vve truly purged, vvhen vve do by faith apply Chriſt unto our ſouls.

Calvin.

Ferus.

Rab. Maurus.

Calvin.

Verſe 11. And it is ſaid, The Lord will deſcend upon mount Sinai, becauſe ſome illuſtrious viſible ſigne of his preſence ſhould be ſeen there.

Verſe 12. And thou ſhalt ſet bounds to the people round about, ſaying, Take heed unto your ſelves, that ye come not up into the mount, neither touch the border thereof; whoſoever toucheth it, ſhall ſurely be put to death, &c. This is ſpoken to prevent curioſity in them, whereby we deſire to be prying into that which is not revealed, this is ſtraightly forbidden upon pain of death to every one, we muſt be wiſe, but according to ſobriety, according to that which is written, we muſt by any means take heed of coming raſhly to divine things, and every one muſt herein keep within the bounds ſet him. No doubt, but the people were deſirous to have gone up to ſee and talk familiarly with God, as Moſes, but this is not permitted to every one, all muſt keep within the limits of their calling. Moſes may come where God calleth him, but the people muſt ſtand aloof, there muſt not be any confuſion of offices in the Church of God. This charge was alſo given, ſaith Simlerus, for reverence to the divine Majeſty, for if none may come nigh an earthly King for reverence, unleſſe he be called, neither may they come nigh the place where the heavenly appeareth. And if we muſt not curiouſly pry into the things of God, but be content with that meaſure of revelation that is made unto us by his Prophets, then they ſin dangerouſly, that by the ſtrength of humane reaſon ſeek to pierce into the myſteries of the God-head, this hath been the fountain of many damnable errours, and the deſtruction of many ſouls.

Ferus. Rom.12.3. Deut.29.29.

Simlerus.

Note.

Verſe 13. The puniſhment of him that came to the mount, He ſhall be ſtoned to death, or ſtricken thorow with a dart, whether man or beaſt, a hand ſhall not touch it. Theſe words, ſhall not touch it, are not to be referred to the mountain, but to the man or beaſt going beyond the bounds, it ſhall be counted ſo execrable, that they ſhal not touch him with the hand to put him to death, but ſtone him, or ſhoot him thorow with a dart, which might be done afar off, and without purſuing him to fetch him back, or ſtaying till his return, ſo Calvin, Simlerus, Ainſworth and Tremelius, who to make this ſenſe the more plain hath it, Let no hand touch it, but let it be ſtoned, &c. and this will appear the better to be the very meaning to him that ſhall look into the Hebrew Text. Having before adjudged him that went beyond the bounds ſet him to the death, now he ſheweth by what manner of death he ſhould die. Now this ſevere puniſhment, and the dread not to be endured accompanying the Law, ſerved to ſhew how terrible the Law is, and ſuch, as that none are able to bear it, becauſe thereby is no juſtification to be attained, that the Goſpel might be the more welcome, and be the more readily imbraced, as the Apoſtle applieth it, Heb. 12.18,19,20, &c. If a beaſt touched the mount, it muſt die, this was for a puniſhment to the owner to make him the more carefull of his beaſt, that it might not come neer. Myſtically by beaſt is meant the beaſtly minded, or the minde ſubjected to unreaſonable luſts, which are of beaſts; for if any indued with ſuch a minde cometh to contemplate ſupernall things, he is ſmitten with iudgements from above to his deſtruction, as Arrius and other Hereticks, ſo Rabanus and Ferus. When the trumpet ſoundeth long, they ſhall come up to the mount. What is this, they muſt not come up to the mount upon pain of death, *verſ.*12. and here, the trumpet having ſounded long they ſhould come up? This is commonly anſwered, that they muſt be guided by the Lords will, to ſtay when he willeth, and to come up when he willeth; and therefore whileſt the ſignes of Gods glorious preſence continued, they muſt not come neer, but when theſe were away, a ſigne wherof ſhould be the long ſounding of the trumpet. Thus the Chaldee, When the trumpet ſhall be withdrawn, they ſhall have leave to go up. And the Septuagint, When the voices, trumpet and cloud are departed from the mountain, they ſhall go up. So likevviſe Tremelius, The ſound of one tone protracted, which is commonly at the end of muſick, ſhould be a ſigne unto them, that the religion of that place was at an end, the Lord thus departing and terminating this ſacred action by this Calvin. Simlerus. Ainſworth. Tremelius.

Ferus.

Rab. Maurus.

Queſt.

Chaldee Paraphraſt. Septuagint. Tremelius.

this signe. But Calvin and Simlerus say, that God by giving liberty at such time to come up, would give them comfort, lest they should desperately cast away the care of keeping the Law, they not being at any time permitted to come up to this holy place. Hereby if they meant liberty to come up, whilest the Cloud continued there, and the place was specially sanctified, as v. 23. it is in that, v. 23, contradicted, and in the whole course of this story. By the trumpet sounding Simlerus understandeth a trumpet, which Moses caused to be sounded for a signe, and this is most probable, because Gods trumpet sounded long and lowd, whilest God was there, v. 19. at what time they might not come up to the Mount. Mystically at the sound of the trumpet of the Gospel, we should ascend in our mindes up to divine contemplations: thus Rabanus: but Simlerus better, The trumpet soundeth longer under the Gospel, and we ascend up the Mount by having all things laid open more plainly, then under the Law, when it sounded also, but not in this manner, and we shall go up into the Mount at the last trumpet, and then we shall see as we are seen. Calvin. Simlerus.

Be ready against the third day. Come not at your wives. This, although it be not expressed before, yet certainly Moses had it from the Lord also, because he would not adde any thing of his own. And a man is forbidden now to come at his wife, because that even in his lying with his own wife there is outward uncleanneſſe, Levit 15. 18. but no sin, for to touch a dead body, for a woman to have her flowers was an uncleanneſſe, and to have an issue in the body, but neither of these a sin. In that the body must now be kept clean from all outward pollution, this served to figure out the inward purity of the soul, which is required to be in every one of us. But even under the New Testament we are bidden to refrein for fasting and prayer, wherefore a mans companying with his wife hindereth his prayers, and for this cause it seemeth to be necessary, that Ministers of Gods holy Word and Sacrament should not marry. I answer, this is so appointed for our greater humiliation at that time, and that being separate from all delights of the flesh we might be wholly addicted to spirituall things: but because so great humiliations are not required alwayes, but at some speciall times upon speciall occasion, it sufficeth, that a man then refreineth: but from marriage to keep any man therefore altogether of what condition soever, is a doctrine of Devils. Verse 15. 1 Cor. 7. Object. 1 Tim. 4. 1, 2, 3.

And the third day in the morning there were thunders and lightenings, and a thick cloud upon the Mount, &c. Thunder and lightenings are terrible to all men, yea the most couragious, as being signes of Gods anger, 1 Sam. 12. 18. by the Poets it is called for this, Διὸς βέλος. Wherefore God appeared thus in giving the Law to strike terrour into us, that none may dare to transgresse against it, God shewing hereby that he will be most terrible to transgressours. And unto this, other reasons are added by Ferus, viz. that the rude people might see a difference betwixt the true God and Idols, in the celebrating of whose feasts all manner of abuses were committed, but they might now fear to commit the like before the Lord; and again, as at other times God hath appeared in some likeneſſe to the thing, about which he appeared, as to Abraham in the likeneſſe of men, when he promised a man-childe; to Moses in the likeneſſe of fire, when he promised deliverance of his people out of their fiery affliction in Egypt; so here being about to give the law, which would terrefie and trouble the conscience of the sinner, he appeared terribly, but in the Gospel, which is for comfort mildely; for Christ was meek and gentle. Verse 16. Ferus.

The next thing spoken of was a thick cloud, by the Septuagint rendered a dark cloud, which the Apostle following saith, blackneſſe and darkneſſe. This was to shew, that God is unto man as darkneſſe, by reason of the darkneſſe of his understanding, although in his own nature he be light, wherefore this vale of darkneſſe intimated his glory, which mortall eyes cannot behold, in that Heb. 12. 18. Simlerus.

that vvhen he came to ſpeak unto them, a curtain was thus as it were drawn before him, that their eyes might not be dazelled with his glory. And the ſound of a trumpet exceeding lowd, hereby the miniſtery of Angels wat ſet forth, Gal.3.9. for the Law was given by the miniſtery of Angels. Myſtically, the three perſons of the Trinity were by theſe three things figured out, the Father by the thunder and lightening, the Son by the thick cloud, becauſe he put upon his divine light the darkneſſe of mans nature, and the Holy Ghoſt by the trum-Iſidore. pet, becauſe he governeth in the trumpet of the Goſpel: ſo Simlerus. Iſidore applieth all this to the Holy Ghoſt coming down at Pentecoſt; the faithfull aſſembled then were 120, *Act.*1.15. ſo Moſes, by whom the Law was given, lived 120 years; as here all the people heard the voice of the thunder, &c. ſo then people of all Nations ſaw the fiery tongues, and heard their voices, &c.

Ferus. Again, the thunder, ſaith Ferus, better figured out the terrour to tranſgreſſours of the Law; the lightening, the knowledge vvhich the people of God had, ſoon vaniſhing, as the lightening; the fire, the illumination of the godly; the darkneſſe, the blinding of the wicked; and the ſound of the trumpet, the gathering together of the faithfull by the Word of God. For Aaron and his ſonnes were afterwards appointed to blovv vvith trumpets to aſſemble the people together, wherefore the ſounding of the trumpet moſt aptly figured out the ſound in the miniſtery by preaching the Goſpel, which ſound is ſaid to have gone out into all lands, *Rom.*10.18, And all the people in the camp trembled: when God appeareth, man is not able to ſtand vvithout terrour; this ſheweth vvhat the effect of the Lavv is, that none may ſeek juſtification thereby.

Verſe 17. And Moſes brought the people out to meet the Lord, &c. that is, out of their tents to the bounds ſet them, the Prieſts for the firſt-born firſt, then the Heads and Rulers, after them the Elders, then the Officers, after them the men, then the little ones, the vvomen next, and laſtly, the ſtrangers, as in re-Aben Ezra. Scholaſt. hiſt. ex tradit. Hebr nuing the Covenant, *Deut.*29.10,11. ſo Aben-Ezra. The Scholaſticall Hiſtory in ſetting down the terrible apparitions, ſaith, When the third day was come early before the Sun, they heard thundering and lightening, and ſaw a dark cloud, and ſmoke came out of the mountain, as out of a furnace, then they were all afraid, and thought Moſes to have been deſtroyed. But at length Moſes appeared joyfully, and fair weather with him returning to them. And then he ſaid, Ye ſhall heare to day not Moſes the ſonne of Amram, but him who ſmote Egypt for you, which led you through the ſea, gave you meat from heaven, and water out of a Rock, &c. wherefore let his words be more amiable to you then your wives and children.

Verſe 18. And mount Sinai was altogether on a ſmoke, becauſe the Lord deſcended upon it in fire, &c. The Targum Hieroſolym. hath it, becauſe the glory of the Majeſty of the Lord was revealed upon it in a flame of fire. The Lord gave ſignes of his preſence Targum Hieroſolymitanum. Chaldee Paraphraſt. Simlerus. before, but now the people being aſſembled about the mount, he revealed himſelf, ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſt, by more evident ſignes, fire and ſmoke, the mount moving and a voice. And the Lord appeared in fire, to ſhew either his glory like unto the purity of fire, as *Chap.*24. or his zeal againſt ſin, in reſpect of which he is ſaid to be a conſuming fire, *Deut.*4. and as a ſmoking furnace, to ſhew that the wicked are as ſmoke before him, hurting the eyes of the godly by ſeeing their wickedneſſe, but ſoon vaniſhing avvay: ſo Simlerus. But becauſe ſmoke darkeneth, and fire enlighteneth, I reſt in the former Expoſition made by Ferus upon, verſe 16. For the moving of the mountain, the Septuagint have it, All the people were aſtonied, but here vvas a greater argument of Gods povver, in that the very mountain, vvhich is ſet ſo faſt moved at his appearing, and accordingly Gods praiſes are hereby celebrated, Pſal. 114.4. *Pſal.*68.6. *Judg.*5.5. *Habak.*3.10.

Verſe 19. And when the ſound of the trumpet was longer and lowder, Moſes ſpake, and God anſwered him by voice. It is not here ſaid, vvhat Moſes ſpake, or God anſvvered, but but Heb. 12. 21. Moſes ſaid, I tremble and quake, ſo that it is likely Moſes uttered words of fear, and God ſpake to comfort him, and to Daniel in the like caſe, Dan. 10. 8, 16, 17. This was that which the Lord promiſed verſ. 9. to purchaſe unto Moſes authority amongſt the people, and figured out the voice of the Goſpel comforting againſt the terrours of the Law.

Verſe 20.

And the Lord deſcended upon mount Sinai, upon the top of the mount, and called Moſes up, &c. The Lord had before given this charge, that the people ſhould not come paſt the bounds ſet them, verſ. 12. but knowing how prone we are to do that which is forbidden, the ſame is here by him given in charge again, with threatening that the Lord would break forth upon them to the deſtruction of many. We muſt not once propound, but inculcate the charge of the Lord again and again to the people. Touching the Prieſts, of whom it is ſaid in ſpeciall, that they ſhould ſanctifie themſelves, when they came neer to the Lord, a queſtion may be moved, who theſe were, ſeeing no Prieſts were yet appointed? Ferus anſwereth, The firſt-born and the Princes of the people, who yet ſupplied the place of Prieſts, Simlerus the Elders and chief of the people. But that they were the firſt-born, in whoſe ſtead the Levites were afterwards ſet up, and not the Elders, appeareth, becauſe they are called, the young men, Exod. 24. 5. And it is not improbable, as Calvin hath it, that they were ſome choſen from amongſt the firſt-born to this office, as all Nations had their Prieſts, but amongſt ſo great a multitude it is not likely, that every family had a particular Prieſt. But why are theſe ſpecially commanded to be ſanctified? To this Simlerus anſwereth, Becauſe the Prieſt muſt ſpecially be ſanctified for example to others: but Ferus better, Becauſe haply they being in an holy order, might think themſelves more priviledged then the common ſort, and ſo be bolder to go beyond their bounds, they therefore are commanded alſo to be ſanctified with fear and reverence, the mount being then as the Sanctum Sanctorum, into which they might not enter no more then the people; for God putteth no difference between perſons, but will alike be reverenced of all men. Leſt the Lord break forth upon them. The Chaldee, Be ſtrong, or very angry, even to the ſlaying of them, as when waters break forth, 2 Sam. 5. 20. chap. 6. 6, 7, 8.

Note.

Queſt. Ferus Simlerus.

Calvin.

Queſt. Simlerus. Ferus.

Verſe 23.

And Moſes ſaid, The people cannot come up, for thou haſt charged to ſet marks, &c. Moſes meaſuring the people by himſelf, thought that the charge given before was ſufficient to contain them, but by Gods anſwer it appeareth, that he was deceived; and therefore he goeth, and doth again as God bade him: for whatſoever we ſhall think, Gods will and his authority muſt ſway us, even contrary to our own imaginations.

Note.

CHAP. XX.

Verſe 1, 2.

AND God ſpake all theſe words and ſaid, I am the Lord thy God, &c. Now cometh that, for which all this preparation was made, even the Law of the ten Commandements, in the explication whereof I will ſay nothing here, becauſe I have already done it largely in my Catechiſme. The Law-giving begun here, as Ferus noteth, is continued thorowout this and the three books following, onely things touching the progreſſe of the children of Iſrael in their journey to Canaan being inſerted. This of the ten Commandments is called the Morall, the other Lawes following are partly Judiciall, and partly Ceremoniall, this bindeth perpetually, thoſe not. The Ceremoniall Laws being nothing but figures of that which was to come; their Temple figured out the Church; their Sanctum Sanctorum, Heaven; their Prieſts, Chriſt; Sacrifices, his paſſions; their expiations, the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, and remiſſion of ſins, which being all come, thoſe Ceremonies are quite aboliſhed, and to uſe them ſtill, were nothing elſe, but to profeſſe that we beleeve not that the Meſſiah is come. Unto theſe ten Commandments, Calvin referreth all

Ferus.

Calvin.

all the lawes following, as indeed there is not one but may well be brought under theſe heads.

Verſe 18. Verſe 19. And all the people ſaw the thunder and the lightening, and the mountain ſmoking, and they removed and ſtood afarre off, and ſaid to Moſes, Speak thou with us, &c. They ſaw, that is, perceived, as Jacob is ſaid to have ſeen, that there vvas corn in Egypt, vvhen he heard it, *Gen.*42.1. *Act.*7.12. This is more fully ſet dovvn, *Deut.5.22,23,&c. Theſe words the Lord ſpake with a great voice, and when ye heard the voice out of the darkneſſe, ye came neer unto me, even all your heads, and ſaid, We have heard Gods voice, &c.* vvhich may ſerve for a further explication of theſe vvords. In that they are ſaid to have ſeen, Ferus thinketh, that either their great ſtupidity is noted, in that they attended more to the ſignes accompanying the giving of the Lavv, then to the voice of God uttering it, or elſe the efficacy of Gods voice is noted to be ſuch, that it pierced their mindes as a thing ſeen invvardly vvith the eye thereof. I imbrace the former being the plain meaning, for as they are ſaid here to ſee, ſo *Deut.*5.2. to have heard. Theſe thunders, lightenings and trumpets ſound muſt be conceived to have ceaſed for a time, vvhileſt God ſpake, as Simlerus noteth, and then to have begun again for a concluſion, as vvhen the Kings pleaſure is declared by ſound of trumpet, it is both begun and ended vvith ſounding. They ſtood afarre off, ſome Hebrevvs ſay, certain miles off. Leſt we die, vvonderfull great was their fear, and hereby was intimated that the Law ingendereth unto bondage by fear, there being nothing but death to be expected by them, that are under the Law. As the Iſraelites could not indure to hear God ſpeaking, leſt they ſhould die, ſo carnall men nre averſe from hearing the Word of God, leſt they ſhould hereby be compelled to mortifie the fleſh. Gods voice when he gave the Law had a double effect in the people, both to make them afraid, and to go farre off, and the ſame effects hath the Law in the truly penitent, as we may ſee in the Publican, he feared to look up to heaven, and ſtood afarre off. And as they deſired a Mediatour to ſpeak between God and them, when the Law-giving terrefied them, ſo the Law muſt, as a ſchool-maſter ſend us to Chriſt our Mediatour, *Gal.*3.24. *Heb.*12.24. And according to their deſire God did not onely make Moſes a Mediatour, but promiſed the Prophet, *Deut.*18.10. to whom vve ſhould alwayes hearken, and upon this deſire of theirs. It was not thus with man from the beginning, for before ſin he could familiarly converſe with God, but immediately after ſinning he feareth at the comming of the Lord, and hideth himſelfe from his preſence. So that ſin, of which the conſcience accuſeth, is the cauſe why man is afraid when God appeareth; this fear yet being in the godly nothing but a filiall reverence towards their heavenly Father, but a ſervile feare in the wicked.

Ferus.

Simlerus.

Hebræi.

Gal.4.24.

Note.

Luke 18.

Verſe 20. And Moſes ſaid, Fear not, for God is come to prove you, that his fear may be before your faces, that ye ſin not. The Septuagint render it, Be of good comfort, he ſeeketh hereby to comfort them againſt their exceeding great fear of the Lord, as coming to ſlay them. For all fear is not to be expelled out of the minde, no not of Gods anger or judgements, but onely the hurtful fear which maketh a man to flee from God; the profitable fear, which maketh a man to take heed of ſinning, being reteined. God is come to prove you, the Chaldee, Gods glory is revealed, &c. Here are three ends which God aimeth at in his coming amongſt men. 1 The proving of them. 2 Their fearing of him. 3 Their refreining from ſin; and the firſt of every of theſe ſtill is the cauſe of the other, or ſhould be. God proveth man by ſhewing himſelfe terrible, that man knovving himſelfe unable to bear the preſence of his povver and Majeſty by reaſon of his vveakneſſe and corruption, and much leſſe his vvrath and indignation might hereupon ſhevv, vvhether he be good, vvhich is, if humility and obedience follovv hereupon, or evill, if frovvardneſſe or deſperation. And vvhen men are thus proved, in thoſe that are godly, the fear of God follovveth, and vvhere the fear of God is, there is a refreining from ſin.

Simlerus.

And

And the people ſtood afar off, and Moſes drew neer to the darkneſſe where God was. This is rendered by the Septuagint a tempeſt, *Deut.*4.11. and thus likewiſe it is had, *Heb.*12.18. Ye are not come to the mount, &c. and to darkneſſe, and blackneſſe, and tempeſt. Moſes was herein a type of Chriſt, for he came down likewiſe amongſt us, and then aſcended up into the Heavens, where he is hidden from our ſight, as in thick darkneſſe, to be a Mediatour for us with the Father, vvho in the mean vvhile ſtand afar off, but he vvill deſcend again, and take us up vvith him at the laſt day, that vve may there abide for ever. Verſe 21. Simlerus.

And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Say to the children of Iſrael, Ye have ſeen that I have ſpoken to you from heaven, ye ſhall not make with me gods of ſilver, &c. Becauſe the pure vvoſhipping of God is the foundation of all true religion, the Lord doth here inculcate the command touching that again, as who knew well, that the people would be moſt prone to idolatry, the greateſt corruption in the ſervice of God, and experience proved this preſently to be true, in that, notvvithſtanding this ſtrict charge, they made unto them golden Calves, even before they went from this mount. But hovv is this a reaſon againſt making other gods? Anſw. Either theſe very words contain an argument, Ye have ſeen that I have ſpoken to you, that is, ye have had experience of my power and terrour, who forbid this, therefore make none other gods, or elſe being ſupplied out of *Deut.*4.12,15,16. When I ſpake unto you, ye ſaw no ſimilitude, therefore make no ſimilitude, or image, which is to the Idolater as a god. Verſe 22. Verſe 23. Queſt.

But what is this, Thou ſhalt not make with me gods of ſilver? The Chaldee rendereth it, before me, and thus it is propounded *verſ.*3. and theſe words, with me, are thus uſed, *Eſth.*7.8. 2 *Sam.*6.7. 1 *Chron.*13.10. Yet ſome, ſaith Simlerus, refer it to the minde, becauſe they vvhoſe mindes are taken up vvith the love of vvorldly profit or pleaſure, make theſe their gods, being therefore called Idolaters. Others to the Cherubims, to be made at Gods appointment afterwards, as if he had ſaid, Although I ſhall appoint ſhortly certain images to be made, as it pleaſeth me, yet ye ſhall not do the like with me, making other idols at your pleaſure, thus ſome of the Hebrews. But the plain meaning is, as hath been ſaid, Ye ſhall not make them, to be vvorſhipped together with me, as they afterwards did, ſerving both God and Baal, and as did the Samaritanes, 2 *King.*17. neither ſhall ye make them to repreſent me, for ye ſavv no image. Other places againſt Idols are, *Exod.*34.17. *Levit.*19.4. *Levit.*26.1. Queſt. Simlerus. Col.3.5.

An altar of earth ſhalt thou make unto me, and ſhalt ſacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, &c. Haply, ſaith the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, this altar vvas to be made before that of the Tabernacle to be carried about, or elſe that was to be made of earth. And indeed there vvas an altar made, *Exod.*24.4. before the brazen altar, *Exod.*38. and this moſt probably, yea certainly vvas of earth, becauſe it vvas here ſo appointed, and upon ſuch an altar the fathers of old offered, *Gen.*8.20. *Gen.*12.7, &c. an altar of earth is oppoſed to gods of ſilver and gold, vvhich are goodly to the eye, and ſo apt to bevvitch the heart, and doth not unfitly figure out Chriſt the true Altar, (upon vvhich vve muſt offer the ſacrifice of prayer) in his humane nature. But whereas the Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, that the altar of the Tabernacle was to be made of earth, the contrary is true, it vvas not appointed to be made of earth, but of vvood, and to be covered with braſſe, and Solomon overlaid the altar of the Temple vvith gold. So that the charge here given of making an altar of earth did not binde at all times, and in all places, but touching altars that were let go to ruine again, there being no further uſe of them, but for the preſent, or for a ſhort time. Wherefore Simlerus rendereth this, as a reaſon, why it muſt be either of earth, or of unhewen ſtone, becauſe ſuch an altar cannot continue long; and yet withall he ſaith, that the Lord appointed it thus in oppoſition to the curioſity and coſt beſtowed by the Heathen upon their altars. And he alſo addeth, that this typified Chriſt in his humane nature, being earth, as we are, and rude and unpoliſht Verſe 24. Scholaſt. hiſt. Heb.13.10. Exod.27.1. Simlerus.

in outward appearance, as an Altar of unhewn ſtone. Whereas it is ſaid, in every place where I record my name, it is not meant, that an Altar of earth ſhould be ſet up in every ſuch place, for an Altar of braſſe is afterwards appointed; but this is to be diſtinguiſht from the words before-going as a ſentence by it ſelfe, In every place where I record my name, I will come to thee and bleſſe thee, that is, vvhereſoever I ſhall appoint ſervice to be done unto me, either in the wilderneſſe, or in the land of Canaan afterwards, I will not be as Heathen gods drawn onely by outward pompe and ſplendor, but though the monument ſet up for a memoriall of me, be but a ſimple Altar of earth, I will there be with thee and bleſſe thee. All Altars then beſides the ſtanding Altar, which ſhould alwayes continue, were to be made of earth, or unhewn ſtone, and therefore ſuch an Altar was uſed by Gideon, Samuel, and Elijah; and Joſuah, according to the appointment of Moſes, *Deut.*27.5. at their Calvin. firſt entrance into Canaan, built ſuch an Altar, Joſ 8.30. Calvin upon this ſaith notably, that they have given great occaſion of erring, that have read this verſe as one continued ſentence, holding that ſuch an Altar muſt be built after wards upon mount Sion; for in ſaying, in every place where, &c. an objection is rather met withall, Muſt we then alwayes have recourſe to this Altar to ſerve God here? The ſolution is, No, but what place ſoever God ſhall ſanctifie, if thou ſerveſt him there, he will bleſſe thee. And in appointing this to be made of earth or unhewn ſtone, he provided againſt ſuperſtition to come, when the Temple and Altar to continue ſhould be built, forſomueh as this kinde of Altar could not ſtand long, nor any remembrance of it remain. Whereas otherwiſe they might haply have been drawn in time to come; leaving the place appointed to endure, to go to ſacrifice where Altars had been formerly erected, thinking that they could not any where offer ſacrifice more acceptably, then where their fathers in times paſt had worſhipped.

Thou ſhalt ſacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. For peace-offerings Calvin hath ſacrifices of proſperity: but all others turn it peace-offerings, as the vvord שלמים ſignifieth, although it ſignifieth proſperity alſo, as effected by peace. For the Altar of unhevvn ſtone, the Verſe 25. reaſon, vvhy the ſtone muſt not be hevved, is rendered, Becauſe if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou haſt polluted it. The vvord tranſlated tool, is Chereb, Scholaſt.hiſtor. vvhich cometh from deſtroying, and ſignifieth a ſvvord, or any other edged Note. tool, and becauſe hereby blood is ſhed, it is counted polluted, and that polluted, vvhich is cut vvith it. This, as one vvell noteth, may ſeem ſtrange, that the thing vvhich ſmootheth and poliſheth ſhould pollute, but ſo it is, in divine things that which in the wiſdome of man ſhould ſeem available in preaching of the Word, that is humane eloquence, doth fruſtrate it and make it of none effect, 1 Cor. 1.17. 2.4,5. Of Altars to be made of unhewn ſtone, ſee *Deut.*27.5,6,&c.

Verſe 26. Thou ſhalt not aſcend by ſteps unto my Altar, leſt thy filthineſſe be diſcovered, *Chap.*27.1. an Altar is appointed to be made three cubits high, and 2 Chron.
Tremelius. 4.1. 10 cubits high, ſo that, as Tremelius hath it, they muſt needs aſcend by Queſt. three ſtops to the one, and by ten to the other, how is it then that aſcending by ſteps is here forbidden? I anſwer, this was to teach humility, becauſe Simlerus. their Altar was low, as Simlerus noteth. But as other Ordinances here laſted but for a time, ſo did this. The true reaſon is that which is rendered, leſt they ſhould diſcover their filthineſſe: for as yet they were not ſo cloathed, as it ſeemeth their privy parts in aſcending were hidden, but afterwards linnen breeches being made for the Prieſts, whereby they were hidden, their Altar was to be aſcended to. The obſervation of Ferus here is excellent. All things are now appointed about the ſervice of God mean and ſimple, but afterwards ſplendid and glorious. Was God herein contrary to himſelf? no, but by preſmiſing this Law of ſetting up ſo mean an Altar, he would teach that we muſt worſhip him rather piouſly then pompeouſly, for he ſeeketh rather the minde

then

then gold. Wherefore he exacteth nothing curious or precious, that we might know, that the splendid things afterwards did not please of themselves, but onely for the minde of the offerer, yet on the contrary side the pious minde pleaseth without these externall things For so the sacrifices of the Ancients, Noah, Abraham, Abel, &c. who had simple low Altars, pleased God better then those of the Jewes in after-times, in whose worship all things glittered with gold. So the Church then did most flourish, when God was rather religiously then splendidly worshipped, for then there were golden hearts, although base things onely in outward appearance, but now all things outwardly are golden, but hearts inwardly earthen.

To shew then that the internall service is more pleasing then the externall, these things were thus ordeined, and that the poor might not think, that they cannot so acceptably serve God, because not so splendidly, nor be despised in their simple appearance, when they come to worship. And mystically, saith the same Author, the earthen Altar figured out Christ of our earthen nature, in whom when we believe, as being very man, we make us an Altar of earth, and an Altar of stone, because our faith is fixt upon a rock or stone, and onely upon stones firm and strong, that is, the Articles of our faith. And these must not be cut, that is, the unity of faith must not be broken. Or our works must be sincere, not divided by glosing, vain hypocrisie and seeking to please men rather then God, for then the work is polluted. Lastly, their not ascending by steps figured out our not mingling of carnall affections vvith divine things, for this vvere to discover our filthinesse, as if when we are exercising of our gifts, we be proud of them.

To conclude, hereby is shewed, that all things must be decent in the service of God, and nothing externally obscene: for even the Romans being heathen in their idolatrous worship provided by law, that their Flamines should not ascend by steps, which they called Greeces, above three, Aul. Gel. lib. 10. cap. 15.

Fcrus.
Præcepturus de splendida illa tabernaculi & altaris structura præmisit, ut primò altare quàm simplicis. erigerent, ut scirent, quòd Deus magis spiè, quàm splendidè vult coli, & animum plus quærit, quàm aurum, &c.
The Mystery.
Rab. Maurus.
Secti lapides hi sunt, qui unitatem scindunt, ac dividunt se à societate fratrum per odia & schismata. Non ascendes gradatim, id est, non unum alio præferens ad me pervenies, quasi unus esset prior, alius posterior, ut Ariani faciunt.
A. Gellius.

CHAP. XXI.

These are the Judgements which thou shalt propound unto them. The Hebrews begin here the sixt part of this Book, saith Simlerus, which they call Mishpatim, because in these two Chapters and part of Chap. 23. lawes are set down, according to which the Judge was to judge them, and they ought to deal one with another, so that they tend to prevent and to end strifes amongst men. The lawes about Ceremonies in the worship of God, and about sacrifices are called statutes and decrees, Exod. 12. 24, 43. Chap 27, 21. Chap. 29. 9. Levit. 3. 17. Chap. 6. 18, 22. as the law of the Decalogue, Commandements, and these judiciall laws, judgements, by the Septuagint rendered, δικαιώματα, just judgements. These were Politick lawes for the government of that Commonwealth, not delivered by word of mouth, as the Decalogue, but by Moses for the peculiar use of the Israelites, and therefore they binde not us, but onely teach with what equity our judiciall lawes ought to be made, especially for that reference which they have to the Decalogue by the punishments to offenders appointed, terrefying from the breach thereof, Which thou shalt propound or set before them: from hence Rab. Solomon gathereth, that it was unlawfull for them to have their causes judged before Infidels, because they were set before them, that is, the Magistrates of the Israelites. And a like precept is had, 1 Cor. 6. where Christians are forbidden to seek to be judged by Infidels.

Verse 1.

Simlerus.

When thou buyest an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve thee, but in the seventh he shall go free. It was then allowed either for theft, when a man had nothing to restore, that he should be sold for a servant, or in the case of poverty a man might sell himselfe for the time; or a man being indebted, his ſonne might therefore be taken as a ſervant, 2 King.4.1. the Hebrews make a diſtinction, ſaying, That ſuch as were ſold for theft, went out free in the beginning of the ſeventh year, but if the year of Jubilee happened within one year after, he went out free then, Levit 25.40,41. If a man ſold himſelfe he might do it for ten or 20 years, yet in the year of Jubilee, if that fell out in the mean ſeaſon he muſt go out free. How the Hebrew ſervant muſt ſerve, ſee Levit. 25.39,&c. not as with the ſervice of a bond-ſervant with rigour, but as of an hired ſervant; and ſuch like ſervants were amongſt the Theſſalians, they that were not ſervants by kinde, but by fortune, being held in a middle condition between ſervants and freemen, and called πενέσται, not δοῦλοι. To buy men for ſervants was then allowed, to figure out the ſervitude under the law, & how that when the ſeventh year, the time of grace by Chriſt came, we are ſet free, Joh.8.32. Eſa.61.2. Luk.4.18. and the ſame word, as it is tranſlated in Greek, ἄφεσιν is uſed: for men under the law are as ſervants, Gal.4.25.

Verse 2.

Exod. 22. 3.
Deut. 15. 12.

Maimony in Miſn. Treatiſe of Servants. c.2 § 2,3.

Verſe 3.

If he came alone, he ſhall go alone, &c. Deut.15.12,13. Send him not away empty, but put liberally upon his neck of thy flock, thy floore, and of thy wine-preſſe. A ſervant ſet free, not having any thing given him to begin the World withall, doth little differ yet from a ſervant, becauſe he cannot ſtock any ground upon which he might beſtow his labour, wherefore it was neceſſary, that his Maſter ſhould be appointed to exerciſe ſome bounty towards him, and in the Comedy when Syrus had his liberty together with his wife given him, he had ground aſſigned unto him, and ſome money. What quantity ſhould be given him is not ſet down, but he muſt be dealt liberally withall. And the reaſon hereof rendered, is firſt, v.15. Remember that thou wert a ſervant, &c. that is, thou ſhalt let him go free, and deal thus with him in remembrance that thou wert a ſervant in Egypt, and cameſt out free, and laden with the ſpoils of Egypt, Levit. 25.42. the reaſon is, Becauſe they are my ſervants, whom I have redeemed out of the land of Egypt. They muſt therefore be ſet at liberty, becauſe Gods ſervants, and by their perpetuall ſervitude he ſhould be deprived of his right over them. If it ſhall ſeem, that in their ſerving ſix years he loſt his right for that time, it is anſwered, it was not a meer ſervitude, to which they might be taken for that time, but to be uſed without rigour, v.43. and thus the Lord was content to depart from his right, as it were, for a time, and to let them ſerve in ſuch a manner, but he would continue a memoriall of his grace in ſetting them free out of Egypt, by appointing the ſeventh yeer for the yeer of ſetting them free. And as the Jews, ſo Chriſtians are admoniſhed to uſe their ſervants well by this conſideration, that they have a maſter in heaven. A ſecond reaſon is rendered, Deut.15.18. Becauſe he hath ſerved thee double, or hath been worth a double hired ſervant in ſerving thee ſix yeers. That is, thou haſt had much more benefit by him, then by an hired ſervant, becauſe as the Hebrews ſay, an hired ſervant ſerved but three years, which was but half his time. Some referre this to the greater, and more workes done by a ſervant then by an hireling, in that his task doing was more exactly ſtood upon, he ſerved abroad and at home in waiting upon his maſter, and both by day and by night, watching and looking to his cattel, when others ſlept, to this effect Simlerus. Of the reaſon of the Hebrews Calvin alſo ſpeaketh, but approveth rather of the other, holding that to be a meer divination or conjecture of theirs. Laſtly, ſervants muſt be thus diſmiſſed, that the Lord may bleſſe thee in all that thou doeſt, by Gods bleſſing it ſhould be reſtored again, that was thus departed withall. It vvas not thus with ſervants of other Nations, vvho ſerved them, for they might be kept as ſervants for ever, Levit. 25.45,46. and uſed as ſervants. And there it is alſo provided, that if any ſtranger had bought an Hebrevv ſervant, he ſhould not be ſuffered to rule rigorouſly over him, and if it may be, he muſt be redeemed, if either a Brother or an Uncle, or any kinſman vvould do it; if not, in the year of Jubilee he vvith his children muſt go out free. Whereas, v.41. it is ſaid, that the Hebrevv ſervant ſhall go out free, both he and his children vvith him in the year of Epheſ.6. Colloſ.3.

Simlerus.

Calvin.

Levit.25.43, 49,50,51.&c.

of Jubilee, it is not meant, that then onely he ſhall go free, for the ſeventh yeer is the ordinary time of his freedom, and his childrens, if he had any, when he was bought for a ſervant; but in caſe he marrieth, and getteth children whileſt he is a ſervant, and therefore refuſeth to go out free the ſeventh yeer, becauſe he cannot then go with his wife and children, but leaving them behinde him, whereby his ſervice is prolonged ſtill, he ſhall yet go free when the yeer of Jubilee cometh, and thoſe children with him; but of his wife nothing is ſpoken, becauſe if ſhe were of another Nation, ſhe muſt ſerve ſtill perpetually, although Toſtatus denieth it, holding that even a ſtranger, an Hebrews wife ſhall then go free. For if the wife alſo had been meant, ſhe ſhould have been named; and moreover, ſtrangers being ſervants, could not go out by their husbands right without injury to their maſters, neither was the Jubilee ordained for them, but onely for Hebrews. And this is held alſo by Lorinus.

Moreover, in appointing freedom in the yeer of Jubilee is meant, that if the Jubilee fell out within the ſeven yeers, he ſhould then go free, and not ſerve out ſix yeers. This Calvin thinketh coact, and therefore bringeth another, the Jubilee may be taken more largely for the ſeventh yeer, which I can by no means ſubſcribe to, neither doth he finally reſt in it, but in that which hath been already ſaid, *verſ.*40. He ſhall be as an hired ſervant, &c. He muſt not be hardly ruled over, *verſ.*43. in Hebrew, Bepharech, that is, ſaith Cajetan, being put to break the ground by drawing in a plough: but the word Pharas ſignifieth to break, not Pharec. The Hebrews by rigorous ſervice underſtand ſervice not determined, or which is not needfull, as to dig, where there is no need, or to work till his maſters coming, no time when being ſet. Maimony. The Septuagint have it, Thou ſhalt not rack him with labour: but rigour alſo is in beating, *Exod.*1.14. and in threatening, *Epheſ.*6.9. Maimony.

The Rabbins in ſetting forth the ſtate of an Hebrew ſervant ſay further, that he muſt not carry his maſters veſſell after him to the bath, nor untie his ſhoe, becauſe he was enough dejected in being a ſervant, another Hebrew might do it, but not he. 2 The maſter muſt make the ſervant equall to himſelf in meat, drink and lodging, for which good uſage it is ſaid, *Deut.*15.16. becauſe he is well with thee. Hence the ſaying came up, He that buyeth an Hebrew ſervant, buyeth himſelf a maſter. 3 Yet if he ran away, or were ſick a yeer or more of his ſix, he muſt make them up afterwards, &c. Maimony. *But the ſervant and maid, which thou ſhalt have, ſhall be of the Heathen round about you, &c. verſ.*44. Some hold that the Hebrews might take of the Canaanites for their ſervants: and whereas to the contrary it is ſaid, that they were all to be deſtroyed; it is anſwered, That this charge held but during the time of the firſt conqueſt, and for ſuch Cities onely, as ſtood out againſt them, others that ſubmitted, might be ſpared, and of them they might make ſervants, and for proof is brought *Deut.*20.16. But that place is plainly againſt this opinion, there being none allowance to ſpare any, but ſuch as were not of theſe Nations, as will appear to any that ſhall look into it. Their Heathen ſervants then, touching whom this Law was made, were ſuch as they ſhould take in war, *Deut.*20.11. or buy with money of the Nations about Canaan, and Gibeonites ſaved unawares for their oaths ſake. To rule over theſe ſervants, and to keep them to themſelves and their children, as their poſſeſſion for ever they are allowed, nothing being ſpoken againſt the hard uſage of them. Yet becauſe there muſt be a difference betwixt the people of God and the Heathen that know not God; the Hebrews ſay, that things equall and juſt onely muſt be done unto them, neither might they uſe them tyrannically, as the Heathen did their ſervants, and becauſe they muſt be imitatours of God, whoſe mercy is towards all. And the points of equall dealing with them, they ſay, were, 1 Not to make his yoke heavie upon him. 2 To give him meat and drink of all ſorts. 3 Not to uſe him contemptuouſly by word or deed, becauſe he was given him for ſervice, not for ſhame and contempt. Rabbini.

Willet in Levit.

4 Not

Maimony. 4 Not to refuſe to hear his plea, Job 31.13. Thus Maimony. The difference then betwixt an Hebrew ſervant and another was. 1 In his uſage, he might be uſed with more rigour then an Hebrew. 2 He muſt ſerve for ever, both he and his poſterity after him, being left by the father to the ſon. 3 He might be ſold from one to another, as might not an Hebrew, *verſ.*42. This is myſtically applied by Heſychius to the Heathen ſubjected unto Chriſt, a Jew by the preaching of the Goſpel: for they are his poſſeſſion, and he holdeth them as his ſervants for ever. And hitherto I have digreſſed to other places touching this point of ſervitude alſo, now to return, Verſ. 3. If he were married, his wife ſhall go out with him, that is, his wife whom he brought to ſerve his maſter with him, and by the ſame reaſon, his children begotten of her in that time. But if his maſter hath given him a wife, and ſhe hath born him children, ſhe and her children ſhall not go out with him, but remain to his maſter. This is not to be underſtood of an Hebrew woman, but of an Heathen bond-woman, for an Hebrew woman, as well as a man, muſt go out free the ſeventh yeer, *Deut.*15.12. Touching the maſters power to give a wife to his bond-man, Maimony ſaith, that if any Hebrew were ſold to a maſter, his maſter might compell him to take a bond-woman, which he would give him to wife, of her to beget him more ſlaves; but if any man ſold himſelf, he could not be compelled unto it. And it was further provided, that he who had no Hebrew wife and children, could not be compelled to take an Heathen, neither might two Heathen women be put upon him, but one onely. If it be demanded, how this may be juſtified to ſeparate man and wife? Simlerus anſwereth well, that here is no ſeparation allowed, but of thoſe that were unlawfully coupled together, for if ſhe were an Hebrew, ſhe went out free with him, and therefore the wife left behinde was an Heathen, with whom it was unlawfull for an Hebrew to marry. And touching the tolerating of a maſter, to give ſuch a wife to his Hebrew ſervant, it was done as divorces, for the hardneſſe of their hearts.

Heſych. in Levitic.

Verſe 3.

Verſe 4.

Maimony.

Queſt.
Simlerus.

Verſe 5.
Verſe 6.

If the ſervant ſhall ſay, I love my maſter, my wife, and my children, I will not go out free, &c. In this caſe his ear muſt be boared, and he ſhall be a ſervant for ever: but this, for ever, is to be underſtood but till the yeer of Jubilee, *Levit.*25.41. and thus Maimony explaineth it, or by this word, for ever, may be underſtood onely during his maſters life, he could not leave him for a bond-man to his ſon after him, for it is ſaid, He ſhall ſerve him for ever, not any other man, to whom he ſhall leave him. And thus theſe words, for ever, are uſed, 1 *Sam.*1.22. whereas it is ſaid by the ſame word לעולם, that an Heathen ſervant ſhall ſerve for ever: Jerom will have it underſtood in like manner, but till the yeer of Jubilee, becauſe it is written by Vau Holem, intimating the Jubilee meant. But there is no ſuch thing any where expreſſed: but contrariwiſe, the time ſet for ſervants of other Nations, is without end, for them and their children. And the ſervant that will not go out free, muſt be brought before the Judges, in Hebrew, the Gods, becauſe they were Gods Deputies, ſo likewiſe, *Pſal.*82. Yet Maimony ſaith, that none were called ſo, but Judges in Iſrael onely, who were wiſe men, and ſought out for their wiſdom, and ordained by the impoſition of hands. If the maſter might have taken and boared his ear, there might have been deceit uſed, he ſaying through covetouſneſſe, that his ſervant was willing, when he was not; wherefore he is appointed to bring him out before the Judges, that they might examine him, and then finding him willing, appoint him to be boared, which being done, the maſter taketh him to the poſt, or to the door, that is, either at the place of judgement, or rather at his own houſe, and boareth thorow his ear, this being appointed as an apt mark for a ſervant, who muſt alwayes be ready to hearken to and obey his maſters precepts. And this ſharp iron awl, wherewith he was boared thorow the midſt of his right ear did well figure out, ſaith one, the ſharp precepts of the Law, whereby they were in ſervitude, till the death of the Law their maſter, and the Jubilee of grace came.

Levit.25.46.
*Hieron in Gal.*1

Simlerus.

Ainſworth.

Rom.7.1.

From

From this cuſtom of boaring thorow the ear they excepted a Prieſt, becauſe if he had been ſo blemiſhed, he could not have returned again to his Prieſtly Dignity. In all the Eaſt-parts they were wont to mark their ſervants, or fugitives, or malefactours upon their foreheads, as with a mark of ignominy, ſaith Calvin; but God would have the Hebrews to bear the badge of their ſervitude upon the ear. Calvin.

And if a man ſelleth his daughter, ſhe ſhall not go out as men-ſervants do, but if ſhe pleaſeth not her maſter, &c. This may ſeem to be contrary to *Deut.*15.12,17. where there is one Law both for men and for women-ſervants. But the caſe is onely different, there women are ſpoken of, that are ſold by the appointment of the Law, or that ſell themſelves: here is put the caſe onely of a man ſelling his daughter being a girle, in which kinde of ſales the Hebrews ſay, a reſpect was alwayes had unto a future marriage with the maſter, or with his ſon. And they ſay alſo, that it was not lawfull for a man to ſell his daughter, but to one that might betroath her. It is meant here then, in caſe a mans daughter be thus bought, ſhe ſhall not go out at the end of ſeven yeers, or in the Jubilee, becauſe being betroathed to her maſter, ſhe cannot be at liberty again, but either by a bill of divorce, or by his death, as other women betroathed are. Verſe 7. Maimony.

If ſhe pleaſe not her maſter, who hath betroathed her to himſelf, then ſhall he let her be redeemed, &c. Some read it, Who hath not betroathed her, and לא ſignifying not, is in the Text, but לו to himſelf, in the margine, and this is followed by the Chaldee, and by ſome Greek Tranſlations; but Theodotion and Symmachus have it, Not betroathed: but the firſt is to be preferred, he cannot, when he hath betroathed her, reduce her to the ſtate of a meer ſervant, or ſell her to another, but he muſt cauſe her to be redeemed: in the Septuagint, He ſhall redeem her, that is, he ſhall let her go free even before the ſeventh yeer, ſhe ſhall not be retained any longer by him: and by a ſtranger here, to whom it is ſaid, he ſhall not ſell her, is meant not onely one of another Nation, but of another Tribe: ſo Calvin, who yet alloweth not of our reading, betroathed her to himſelf, but the negative, hath not betroathed, becauſe he thinketh it abſurd, that a Law ſhould be made againſt his ſelling her to another after betroathing. But there is nothing ſo abſurd, but that people would have done, if they had not been by Law reſtrained. Amongſt the Athenians a man might ſell his ſons, but Solon forbade the ſelling of daughters, unleſſe it were for whoredom. In the Laws of the old Romans, which were the Laws of the twelve Tables, the like was allowed. and by the Law of Conſtantine, a man preſſed with great poverty, might ſell his children to releeve himſelf. So that the power of fathers was great over their children, ſome remainder of which is ſtill kept afoot in their binding them to maſters. Seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her, that is, failing of that which was expected at his hands, viz. that he ſhould have loved her, and kept her as his wife; whereas after betroathing ſhe pleaſed him not, that is, he liked not to have her for his wife. By this Law God provided againſt whoredom, becauſe when a man took a maid-ſervant, he muſt firſt betroath her, and ſo if he did go in unto her, this was not inordinate, as it would have been, if otherwiſe. But yet herein a great corruption was tolerated, that after this he might refuſe her, but it was for the hardneſſe of their hearts, as is ſpoken of divorces, *Matth.*19. Verſe 8. Calvin. For a ſtrange Nation, the Chaldee hath it, to another man.

And if he hath betroathed her to his ſon, he ſhall do unto her after the manner of daughters. Hereby it appeareth, that the former verſe is to be read affirmatively alſo, for firſt the caſe is put, If he hath betroathed her to himſelf, and here, If he hath betroathed her to his ſon; and the concluſion is the ſame, in caſe he giveth her not food and raiment, and the duty of marriage, ſhe ſhall go out free. To do unto her after the manner of daughters, is to give her a dowry, as *Chap.*22. 16,17. If he take him another wife, he ſhall not diminiſh her food, raiment, or marriage-duty, that is, if ſhe being eſpouſed to him, he yet neglecting her marrieth another, he ſhall deal by her in providing for her, as by his eſpouſed wife, ſo Verſe 9. Verſe 10,11 Rabanus Maurus.

ſo Rabanus. Or rather if beſides her, he taketh another wife, he muſt do theſe three things unto her, about the laſt of which there is a queſtion, what is ment. The Hebrew word is עונה, by ſome rendered mariage-duty, but by ſome, pactum, as Simlerus hath it, or conſtitutionem, as Calvin, expounding it of all ſuch things, as were agreed upon. The word properly ſignifieth humiliation, and is put here for his going in unto her as an husband to his wife, and accordingly the Septuagint render it, companying together, and the Rabbins, going in unto her after the way of all the earth, as *Gen.*19.31. And beſides theſe three they ſay a dowry of 50 ſhekels muſt be given her, *Exod.*22.17. and the conditions of the dowry muſt be performed. 1 To heal her, if ſhe be ſick. 2 To redeem her, if ſhe be taken captive. 3 To bury her, if ſhe be dead. 4 If ſhe ſurviveth him after his death, to let her be nouriſhed with his goods, and to dwell in his houſe as long as ſhe liveth a Widow. 5 To nouriſh her children with his goods till they be eſpouſed. 6 To let her male-children to enjoy her dowry beſides their portions in his goods. And on the other ſide the wife muſt, 1 Let the works of her hands to be her husbands. 2 Her preſence and attendance muſt be upon him. 3 He muſt eat of the fruits of her goods. 4 If ſhe dieth before him, he muſt inherit them. Thus the tradition of the Scribes, ſaith Maimony. Rabanus addeth at the end of this law after theſe words, She ſhall go out free, but if he hath given her to an Hebrew ſervant; and expoundeth it, if he hath not given her to his ſonne, but to an Hebrew-ſervant of his, ſhe ſhall together with him go out free, but whence he had this addition I cannot tell. And myſtically he ſaith, that an hearer, who hath joyned himſelfe to any teacher, is here figured out, who muſt either ſtill continually have his due teaching at ſuch a teachers hands, or be let go to chuſe his teacher where he thinketh good, and not be turned over to a ſtranger, that is, to an Heretick.

Duties of husbands & wives.

Maimony Treatiſe of wives, Chap. 12.

Verſe 11. Rab. Maurus.

Whoſo ſmiteth his neighbour that he dieth, ſhall be ſurely put to death, but if he lay not in wait, but God delivered him into his hand, &c. How is a man ſaid to be delivered into the hands of another to be killed? Rabanus anſwereth, not that he whoſoever he be, that is killed, is not by God delivered into his hands that killeth him, but when the ſlayer ſeeketh it not, but God offereth him to be ſlain, this being Gods act onely, he is ſaid by him to be delivered: If he doth maliciouſly kill, he is by God delivered alſo, but in this caſe, he both killeth and God deliver eth, God not delivering him unjuſtly, but he ſlaying him unjuſtly, and therefore is worthy to be puniſhed, not becauſe he ſlayeth him whom God would not have ſlain, for that cannot be, but becauſe through iniquity, for he offereth not his ſervice to God bidding, but to his own malignant luſt putting him on. The vulgar Latine hath it, *v.*12. Qui percutit vicinum, volens occidere, which is added for expreſſion, as oppoſed to ſmiting unawares: for indeed the malicious will of the ſmiter is that which maketh his killing mortall to himſelf. And according to this for the generall, that the murtherer ſhall die, it was decreed long before, Gen. 9. and again, Levit. 24.17. and *v.*19,20,21,22.

Verſe 12,13 Verſe 14. Queſt.

Non ſicut Deus homo, Deus enim non niſi juſtè, homo autem plerumque injuſtè, non quia illum occidit, quem Deus nollet occidi, ſed quia per iniquitatem, non enim miniſterium Deo jubenti præbuit, ſed ſuæ malignæ cupiditati ſervivit.

He that killeth a beaſt ſhall reſtore it, but he that killeth a man ſhall die, there ſhall be one judgement for the native and for the ſtranger. The Cornelian Law of the Romans adjudgeth the murtherer alſo to death, and him that maketh a tool or ſelleth one poiſon for this purpoſe, or was any way the cauſe of death. And *Numb.*35.16,17,18,19,20,21. He that ſmiteth a man with an iron tool, or he whoſe hand ſmiteth him with a ſtone or wooden Inſtrument is a murtherer, and muſt die, a kinſman muſt kill him. But how is this to be underſtood, might he kill the murtherer without proceeding legally againſt him? Simlerus anſwereth, that it is meant, the kinſman ſhould accuſe the murtherer before the Judge, and he being upon proof condemned publickly to die, this was the kinſmans ſlaying of him, for that there muſt be a legall proceeding, appeareth, becauſe no man muſt be put to death, but by the mouth of two or three witneſſes. Or elſe, the Judge not doing his office, the kinſman meeting

Levit.24.17,21 Lex Cornelia. Numb 35.

Queſt.

Simlerus.

Numb.35.30. Deut.19.15.

meeting him might kill him, or if he killed him when he met him howſoever through anger for his kinſmans death, the cauſe being proved juſt, he was to be tolerated herein. Calvin thinketh, that this is no Ordinance to allow private revenge, but an opening of the danger in caſe that a murtherer is not by the Judge puniſht with death, a kinſman will take revenge, & ſlay the murtherer therefore, and this revenge being juſt, he ſhould be tolerated herein, becauſe he was carried unto it by the love of his own blood, which is natural to every one, but this was onely tolerated for the hardneſs of their hearts, not approved Toſtatus ſaith, that it is to be underſtood after his condemnation by the Judge, or afterwards finding him out of a city of refuge, & this was granted for the hard neſſe of their hearts, becauſe if the kinſman did not kill the murtherer with his own hands, he thought that he did nothing, yet he muſt not kill him by any other death but by ſtrangling. I cannot ſubſcribe to Calvin, becauſe the words appointing the kinſman to ſlay the murtherer are the plain words of a poſitive law often repeated the kinſman ſhall kill him. Yet I do not think, that he might do it without a legall proceeding, for this had bin to open a gap to many murthers and barbarous confuſion. When it is ſaid then, when he meeteth him he ſhall ſlay him it is meant, ſo ſoon as he can apprehend him, he ſhall proſecute the law againſt him, and he being publickly condemned, execute him. Or rather, as appeareth by the words following, if he met him before he came at a City of refuge, he might inſtantly ſlay him, if not, he muſt proceed by order of law againſt him, which yet is not ſpoken to animate to preſent revenge, but to excite to a ſpeedy flight, becauſe that people was ſo violent, that otherwiſe their fury could not be ſtaied. Whereas Toſtatus ſaith, he muſt be ſtrangled, Maimony ſaith contrariwiſe. The death of a murtherer as of Idolaters was with the ſword, & by ſtrangling, he that lieth with another mans wife, he that ſmiteth his father or mother, he that ſtealeth a ſoul of Iſrael, the Elder that rebelleth againſt the decree of the Senate, *Deut.*17.12. the falſe prophet, and he that propheſieth in the name of another god. Beſides theſe there were two other kindes of death more terrible: the one by burning, thus the Prieſts daughter playing the whore muſt ſuffer, he that lieth with his own daughter, her daughters daughter, or his ſonnes daughter, or his wives daughter, or with her daughters daughter, or ſonnes daughter, or with his mother in law, or with his mother in law, or her fathers mother in law. The other of ſtoning, thus he that lay with his own mother muſt ſuffer, or with his fathers wife, or with his daughter in law, or with a betrothed maid, or with a male, or with a beaſt, the woman that lieth down to a beaſt, the blaſphemer, the idolater, he that giveth his ſeed to Moloch, he that hath a familiar ſpirit, the Wizard, the inticer to idolatry, the Witch, the profaner of the Sabbath, he that curſeth father or mother, or rebelleth againſt the. I wil give him a place, to which he ſhal flee. This place was appointed afterwards both on this ſide Jordan & beyond: for there muſt be 3 Cities of refuge in the one place, & 3 in the other, *Numb.*35.11,12,&c. & unto one of theſe he that had killed a man unawares might flee, neither was it lawful for any man to kill him there, but he muſt be by order of law brought back & tried before the Judges, & if it be found, that he kill'd him unawares, he ſhould return again to the City of refuge, & dwell there till the death of the High Prieſt, and then return to the inheritance of his fathers, but if before this time he were found out of the City of refuge, the kinſman, who was appointed to be the revenger of the blood of the ſlain might kil him. And no price muſt be taken to let a wilfull murtherer go free, or to ſuffer one that hath killed unawares to live out of a City of refuge, till the death of the High Prieſt, becauſe blood polluteth the land, & is not expiated but by ſhedding the blood of the murtherer. Whereas there may ſeem to be ſomething contradictory in this law, for that the avenger of blood is allowed to kill him, that hath ſhed blood out of the City of refuge, and yet he muſt come forth to be tried in the Congregation, whether he did it wilfully or no, it is eaſily reconciled, he might kill him if he found him coming ont of the City of refuge of his own minde, but not called by publick authority

Calvin.

Toſtatus.

Maimony in Sanedrim, c.12.
Deut.13.15.

Levit.20.27.
Deut.13.6.
Deut.21.

Numb.35.11, 12,13 14,15.

Verſ.24,25,26.

Verſ.31,32,33

Toſtatus.

ty to be tried. Toſtatus ſaith, that when kinſman met him that had killed, and aſſaulted him, if he by defending himſelf ſlew this kinſman, he ſhould not be puniſhed for it, becauſe he was not as a publick perſon, neither did he purſue the killer out of duty or neceſſity, but onely through permiſſion to avoid greater inconveniencies. For the time limited, when he might return to his poſſeſſion, viz. at the death of the High Prieſt, Becauſe then, ſaith Calvin, another coming on, he made peace and reconciliation betwixt God and man; and therefore good reaſon there was, that all offences ſhould then be remitted. But the myſtery was without doubt chiefly reſpected herein, viz. our deliverance by Chriſt his death, who were before as Exiles, and could not come to our heavenly inheritance. The like law to this, ſaith Philoſtratus, was before in Egypt, and it was called Memphitarum lex, he that killed another, although againſt his will, muſt flee to the Gymnoſophiſts, and being abſolved by them he might return, having firſt facrificed at the grave of the ſlain. And the Romans afterwards had the like Law for acquitting him that killed againſt his will. He that killeth another is wont to be abſolved, viz. if he did it not with a minde to kill, and he that killeth not, but would have killed, is condemned as a murtherer. This providing for one that killed accidentally, to flee to another place was a kinde of baniſhing of him, although his will was in no fault, and this puniſhment he muſt notwithſtanding undergo that murther might appear to be moſt hainous, and that one man might have the greater care of the life of another. And in the Roman Lavvs Hadrianus provided, that if laſciviouſneſſe were the cauſe, whereupon the murther aroſe, the party killing, although againſt his will, ſhould be baniſhed for five yeers, and pay two thouſand to the father of the ſlain, if he were a poor man, that others might take warning of falling into the like courſe of laſciviouſneſſe. Of the hainouſneſſe of murther, ſee Gen.9.6. This Law of appointing Cities of refuge is again repeated *Deut.*19.1,2, &c. being made *Numb.*35.6,11, &c. three muſt firſt be appointed, and afterwards the whole land being conquered, three more. And a caſe is ſet down, whereby it may appear, who is accounted to kill another againſt his will. In all which places it is ſo plain, that he who ſtriketh another with any inſtrument fit to kill, although but then provoked, or that doth any thing purpoſely to take away another mans life, is a murtherer, as Calvin alſo hath it, that I cannot but wonder that even in ſome ſuch caſe men are often acquitted, as not guilty, and the land cannot but be polluted hereby.

Calvin.

The Myſtery. Rabanus Maurus. Philoſtrat. de vita Apol. c.3.

Ulpianus referens Adriani reſcriptum.

Note. Hadrianus.

Deut.19.1,2,3, 4,5.

Calvin.

Verſe 14. Deut.19.11.

*But if a man cometh preſumptuouſly upon his neighbour, and ſlayeth him with guile, thou ſhalt take him from mine altar, that he may die. Deut.*19.11. If he ſhall flee to any of the Cities of refuge, the Elders of that Citie ſhall take him from thence, that he may die. Firſt it ſeemeth, that the altar was a place of refuge, and then certain Cities were moreover appointed, and if he that was purſued were ſafe in one of theſe Cities, much more fleeing to the Altar, and this of fleeing to the Altar continued ſtill, as vve may ſee in the example of Joab, and of Adonijah, and amongſt the Heathen the Temple was an Aſylum, a place of ſafety from purſuers, and ſo called from συλᾶν, auferre, and a ſtereticon, becauſe he could not be taken from thence. Anciently Temples, Altars, and Images were Aſyla, for thoſe that fled unto them. Amongſt the Romans, that place between the Tovver and the Capitoll was appointed by Romulus and Remus for an Aſylum, afterwards the ſtatues of Emperours. And amongſt the Athenians, the Temple of Mercy, built by the poſterity of Hercules. And the like courſe was taken amongſt Chriſtians; Theodoſius and Valent. Emperours upon this reaſon decree, that Temples ſhall be places of refuge to thoſe that flee unto them, becauſe Idolaters appointed Temples dedicated to Idols to be Sanctuaries for the diſtreſſed, from vvhich none might take them; and therefore, ſay they, much more ought vve thus to honour our true Religion, vvherefore vvhatſoever vvas vvithin the firſt gates of the Temple, Gardens, Courts, Halls, &c. were all Sanctuaries. And if any did take thoſe avvay that fled to theſe places, it ſhould be a capitall crime. And when Alaricus vvarred againſt the Romans, he commanded that all which fled to the Temples ſhould be ſpared. And for this priviledge ſtood Chryſoſtome moſt earneſtly. And Auguſtine threateneth Boniface a Count with excommunication for taking one avvay from the Sanctuary, and this hath been confirmed by many decrees of Councels. But Sanctuaries have been greatly abuſed, as we may gather by the decree of Juſtinian, There is no place of refuge for adulterers and ſtealers of virgins, theeves, and murtherers; and therefore he much abridged the priviledge of Sanctuaries, recounting this firſt Lavv of Moſes, allovving places of refuge onely for ſuch as offended unavvares. But the priviledges of theſe places have notvvithſtanding amongſt the Pontificians grovvn ſo great, that vvicked perſons in any kinde have been there patronized, and that, as Calvin hath it, out of a corrupt imitation of the Heathen, as they mixed God with Idols in their adulterate vvorſhip. And herein they have not been ſo carefull, as the Heathen, to diſtinguiſh betvvixt the guilty and the innocent, but by entertaining the vileſt, they have made the houſe of God a den of theeves. Whereas the Heathen took avvay ſacrilegious and impure perſons from Temples, according to that ſaying of one related by Livy, Seeing the whole preface of holy things, or Sacrifices, forbiddeth them the Sanctuary that have not pure hands, will ye ſuffer your inward parts to be defiled with the bloody body of a robber? The abuſes of Sanctuaries being taken avvay, and they being maintained onely for thoſe that flee from the unjuſt rage of them that are too mighty for them, and that have raſhly and inconſiderately offended, there may ſtill vvell enough be ſome uſe made of them, ſo that reſpect be had to proceed according to the firſt conſtitutions of the Lord, and that there be not over-many, ſo Simlerus. And I ſee no reaſon, but forſomuch as there have alwayes been Sanctuaries to flee unto, as the caſe required, both amongſt the people of God and the Heathen, there ſhould be ſuch alſo ſtill in all Chriſtian Countreys and Nations, proviſion being made againſt the abuſe. Theſe words, Thou ſhalt take him from mine altar, the Targum Hieroſol. expoundeth, yea, although he be the High Prieſt that miniſtereth at mine altar. Whereas it is ſaid, If a man cometh preſumptuouſly upon his neighbour, he that by treachery killeth another, ſhall die for it alſo, but all malicious murdering is ſpoken of in this phraſe, becauſe there is a kinde of preſumption, whereby he doth inſult over him, to bring him thus under his foot, although he doth ſecretly contrive his deſtruction.

1 Kings 2.28. 1 Kings 1.50.

Conſtituti ad Antiochum præfectum.

Chryſoſt. Orati. in Eutropium. Auguſt. Epiſt. 187.

Juſtinian. Conſtit. οὐκ ἔστιν ἀσυλίας τόπος μοιχοῖς καὶ παρθένων ἁρπαξι καὶ φονεῦσι καὶ ἀνδραποδίσταις.

Calvin.

Livius. Cum omnis præfatio ſacrorum eos, quibus non ſunt puræ manus, ſacris arceat, vos penetralia veſtra contaminari cruento latronis corpore ſinetis? Simlerus.

Targ. Hieroſol.

He that ſtriketh his father or his mother ſhall die, and he that curſeth father or mother: the ſame Law is alſo, Levit 20.9. and *ye ſhall fear every one his mother, and his father, Levit.*19.3. And again, If any man hath a perverſe and rebellious ſon, not obeying his father and mother, and they have chaſtiſed him, he continuing ſtill diſobedient, they ſhall bring him out to the Elders of his City, &c. *Deut.*21.18,19. All theſe Laws ſerve to ſet down the duty of children to their parents, and their puniſhment if they ſin againſt them, and therefore they are to be conſidered together. Children muſt fear their parents, that is, fear to offend them; and if any childe doth not, but rebelleth, and is incorrigible, they muſt bring him forth, that he may be ſtoned to death. There was a Law, ſaith Calvin, amongſt the Romans of old, whereby parents had granted unto them the power of life and death over their children, it being preſumed that no man would deal unjuſtly with his own bowels, but ſince it being found by experience, that ſome are like unto cruell beaſts, yea, worſe to their own children, this liberty hath been taken away. And here it is provided, that their cauſe ſhould be heard and judged publikely, that if the ſon accuſed had any thing to ſay for himſelf, he might be heard. And it is to be noted, that although they could not accuſe him of any particular crime, yet if they could ſay that he was a glutton, and a drunkard, he ſhould be ſtoned to death, intemperance being hereby branded as moſt hatefull. If any ſon or daughter ſtriketh father or mother, although death followeth not, he muſt be put to death, yea if he doth but ſmite him with his tongue by curſing, hereby ſhewing a vilipending and contemning of him, he muſt be put to death for this alſo. Thus hainouſly doth God take it, that they from whom any hath received life and nouriſhment ſhould not be honoured, but contemned by him. Hebræi. The Hebrews upon theſe Laws note, that any ſtriking of a parent was not deadly to the ſtriker, or any malediction, becauſe there may be ſtriking lightly and in jeſt, and a light reviling ſpeech ſuddenly falling from the mouth: but an earneſt and violent ſtriking, or a malediction out of contempt. The Rabbins ſay, that ſtriking leaving ſome print is meant, and curſing is either of parents alive or dead. For ſuch as kill their parents here is no Law made, but it is implied in this, if the ſtriker muſt die, then the murtherer, the parricide by a moſt terrible death.

Verſe 15,17

Calvin.

Solon. It is reported of Solon, when he gave Laws to the Athenians, that he gave none againſt parricide, becauſe he thought that none would be ſo wicked, as to deprive him of life, from whom he received it. But the Ancients ſewed a parricide up in a ſack together with a dog, a cock, an ape, and a viper, and Plato lib.9.Leg. then having drowned him, caſt him forth to the wilde beaſts to be devoured. Plato following Moſes, baniſheth thoſe that ſtrook their parents and drove them from all holy things, and if at any time they returned, their puniſhment was death, and they that ate and drank with them were unclean. But for parricides he appointed a moſt hainous death, and expoſing without buriall. If any man ſhall think this is too great rigor for ſtriking to put one to death, it is anſwered, Levit.20.9. His blood ſhall be upon his own head, as if he had ſaid, Let no man ſpeak againſt it, for he averreth this puniſhment to be juſt, and that the party puniſht is onely in fault. And from this we may gather, what a great ſin it is to ſtrike, curſe, or to rebell againſt a Magiſtrate, Maſter, or Governour, who are in ſome ſort fathers and mothers, and do repreſent the Divine Authority.

Verſe 16. He that ſtealeth a man and ſelleth him, ſhall be put to death. See the ſame alſo *Deut.*24.7. againſt ſtealing any of his brethren, the children of Iſrael, and ſo Simlerus. both the Greek and the Chaldee render it here. This, ſaith Simlerus, is placed between the other two againſt ſmiting, and curſing of parents, becauſe the man-ſtealer taking away children by ſtealth, when they are little, is an occaſion that they afterwards offer violence by word or deed unto them unwittingly; and therefore, as guilty of theſe indignities, they are juſtly appointed to be puniſhed with death, and becauſe of the excellencie of him that is ſtolen above other things of this world, in that he beareth the image of God. Moreover, liberty and freedom from bondage is a thing moſt deſirable, as a dignity; and bondage abhorred by ſuch as are born free: wherefore to ſpoil any man of his liberty, and to ſell him for a bond-man, as the Plagiarii did, was a moſt hainous ſin and capitall. Laſtly, they that ſtole an Hebrew, ſold him to the Heathen afar off, thus both exterminating him from the Church of God, and fruſtrating the mighty act, that ſometime God did for them in bringing them out of bondage.

Paul.lib.ſentent.5.ad legem Fabian. The Romans condemned thoſe that ſinned thus, if they were of the baſer ſort, to dig in mines, if of the better, half their goods being taken away, to be baniſhed for ever. Within the compaſſe of this ſin it is to be thought, that Monks and Jeſuites come, that againſt their parents conſent receive young perſons into their Orders; and little better do they, that thus take them to the wars by inticement, and they that ſteal mens daughters to marry them. Conſtant.leg.l.1. Conſtantines Lavv is, that Plagiarii ſhould be caſt to the beaſts, if they were ſervants; if free, they ſhould come into the place of ſword-playing, and there be deſtroyed without any weapon given them to defend themſelves. Rab. Maurus. Theſe two Laws, *verſ.*15,16,17. interlaced together, Rabanus applieth myſtically, the firſt to thoſe that blaſpheme God their Father, or the Church their Mother, the ſecond to hereticks, who ſteal mens ſouls away, and inthrall them to errours, they ſhall both periſh everlaſtingly, therefore death ſhall be their reward.

If

Verſe 18.

If two ſtrive together, and one ſtriketh another with ſtone or fiſt, and he dieth not, but lieth in bed, &c. By ſtriking with ſtone or fiſt are meant all other wayes of hurting him, either afar off or neer at hand, if by any means one hurteth another, ſo that he lieth by it, but dieth not, he ſhall be innocent, that is, from the ſin of murther, but not from all ſin, for to be angry with a brother unadviſedly, or to rail upon him is a breach of Gods law. If then in ſtriving one hurteth another, he ſhall as he is worthy, pay ſo much as the time of the hurt mans lying in bed and healing cometh to. Whereas this may ſeem not to be puniſhment enough, the Rabbins ſay, that if his ſtriking made a blemiſh he muſt pay for that alſo, according to Levit. 24. 19, 20. and that he muſt pay for the pain ſuffered, and laſtly, for the ſhame and diſhonour done to him, if there were any. For blowes, whereby little hurt was done, the Magiſtrates (they ſay) appointed other mulcts: for kicking with the foot, five ſhekels; for ſtriking with the fiſt, 13 ſhekels; with the palme of the hand, one ſhekel; if he wrung him by the ear, plucked off his hair, or did ſpit upon him 100 ſhekels, and that for every time ſo much. But what if a man, after that he began to go by his ſtaffe, relapſeth and dieth? To this, ſaith Simlerus, the Hebrews anſwer, that the ſtriker in this caſe muſt ſuffer death: but the Roman lawes not, unleſſe he were deadly wounded, becauſe there is no juſt cauſe of putting to death when the wounded liveth long after before he departeth, Paul. lib. ſentent. ſub. tit. ad Corneliam de Sicariis & Veneficis. Touching the healing of him ſmitten, the Rabbins ſay, that the ſtriker might not be permitted to do it, if he could and would, nor a Chirurgion of his, but ſome other approved one to be paid by him, and if the wounded hindered his own cure by refuſing to follow the Chirurgions direction, the ſtriker ſhould not be tied to pay for his healing.

Verſe 19.

Matth. 5.

Rabbini.

Maimony Treatiſe of Hurts, Ch. 2. Sect. 18, 20.

Queſt. Simlerus.

Verſe 20, 21.

If any man ſhall ſmite his man-ſervant or his maid with a rod, and he dieth under his hand, vengeance ſhall ſurely be taken on him, but if he continueth a day or two, &c. Amongſt the Romans of old, the Maſter had power of life and death over his ſervant, and this continued to the dayes of Auguſtus, when Vedius Pollio caſt his ſervants offending into the fiſh-ponds to the Lampreys, and in former times they caſt their ſervants to the wilde beaſts upon diſpleaſure, which liberty was taken away by the Petronian law. And there was a Judge appointed to hear the complaints of ſervants, and to moderate their cruelty, and covetouſneſſe about their food. The Emperour Adrian baniſhed Umbra, a Matron five years for handling of her maid-ſervants moſt heinouſly. Here if a maſter beateth his ſervant to death, he muſt be killed, as if he had ſlain another man, for this is meant by revenge appointed to be taken on him: if he ſmote him but with a rod, and he continueth, that is, able to go about his buſineſſe a day or two after, he ſhall not be revenged, but if he ſmote him with a ſword or any other inſtrument fit to kill, and he dieth, although it be a year after, he ſhall, ſay the Rabbins, be put to death for it. And this, they ſay, is to be underſtood of ſtrangers that be ſervants, not of Hebrews, whoſe priviledge was greater, nor of other mens ſervants, for who ſo beateth one of them that he dieth, although divers dayes after, he ſhall ſuffer for it as for killing another man, and over Hebrew ſervants they muſt not rule with rigour, Levit. 25. 39, &c.

Simlerus.

Maimony Treatiſe of Murther, Ch. 2. Sect. 14.

Verſe 22.

When men ſtrive together and ſtrike a woman big with childe, ſo that her childe depart from her, but death followeth not, he ſhall be puniſhed, &c. By death here, as all Expoſitours agree, the death not onely of the woman, but of her childe alſo is meant, which the Septuagint make plain by their tranſlation, and it agreeth with reaſon, becauſe the childe in his mothers wombe is a man, conſiſting of a body and a reaſonable ſoul, and it is more heinous to kill him now then being born, becauſe his light is extinguiſht before he cometh to ſee the light, he is murthered in the wombe as in his own houſe, and not in the field, as Calvin ſpeaketh. But why ſhall the man that ſmote the woman be puniſhed, although death follow not? Anſ. Becauſe the woman and childe were

Calvin.

Queſt.

were endangered, and are put to pain and weakened hereby, therefore in Queſt. way of compenſation ſatisfaction muſt be made to the husband. But why to the husband and not to her? Anſw. Becauſe he is the head, and governeth in domeſtick affairs, and the childe is reckoned to the father, whoſe name he Queſt. Simlerus. beareth, and not the mothers. If it be further demanded, whether in caſe that death followeth, it be to be underſtood of any childe how little time ſoever the mother hath gone with it? I anſwer with Simlerus, that we muſt diſtinguiſh between a childe formed and unformed, if the childe were an Embryo, not yet perfected, although it periſhed, the party, by whoſe ſtroke, was not to be put to death, but for ſuch onely as was come to perfection, ſo likewiſe Auguſtine, and Jerome in Decretis, Cauſa 32. *Queſt.*2.Cap.Moſis, and the Auguſt. Hieron. words of the Text, life for life, ſeem to make for it, that a mans life muſt not be paid but for one living and perfected, and the Septuagint make this plain Queſt. by rendering, not death, μὴ ἐξεικονισμένον not formed. If it be ſaid, this ſeemeth contrary to the former law, becauſe it was not a wilfull murther, but accidentall, ſeeing when two men ſtrive together, if a vvoman be ſtricken, ſhe is ſtricken not purpoſely, but by chance, for which a man muſt not loſe his life? I anſwer, there was fighting and ſtriving, and therefore the ſtroke given was voluntary, although not to her, yet it lighting upon her, the ſtriker ſhall be Queſt. judged, as if he had directed it againſt her. Laſtly, if it be demanded, whether without any redemption in this caſe then a man muſt be put to death? Simlerus anſwereth, that a mulct might be impoſed, and his life ſpared according to the opinion of the Hebrews, becauſe it is not here added, as in the Maimony Treatiſe of Hurts, *Ch.*1. *Sect.*3,4. caſe of wilfull murther, no price ſhall be taken, and therefore he underſtandeth this, life ſhall go for life, that is, if it be not redeemed. And the ſame do the Rabbins teach of the penalties following, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, &c. viz. if a price be not paid to ſave them, to which laſt I vvillingly ſubſcribe, and the reaſon is good, becauſe in caſe of vvilfull murther onely it is provided, that no price ſhall be taken, *Numb.*35.31. and therefore out of this caſe there might be a redemption for money. Moreover, vvhen a man in ſtriving hath loſt an eye or an hand or a foot, or a leg or arme hath been broken, his vvork, vvhereby he getteth his living, if he be poor, is hindered hereby, and to have his ſtriker puniſhed vvith the like vvill do him no good, but to have a ſumme of money for his maintenance. Laſtly, the hurt vvhich one man can bear, if it be done to ſome other, may indanger his life, and therefore it is to be held, that theſe things vvere to be ordered by the diſcretion of the Judge, and if he thought it fit to puniſh the ſtriker vvith the like, or in his purſe, he had liberty to judge herein, as beſt reaſon and equity directed. But I ſee no reaſon, why in the caſe of death following, any price might be taken, becauſe here is blood ſhed, and blood defileth the land, for which no
*Gell. lib.*20.*c.*1. expiation can be made but by blood. For this ſame law touching hurts, ſee *Levit.*24.19. Now in appointing ſuch revenge to be taken, God doth not give liberty to any private revenge, but ſtill the Judges muſt judge in all caſes, and the ſtriking of terrour into men apt to be injurious was reſpected, it being the duty of every one patiently to ſuffer, and not in his heat to ſeek to take revenge upon his ſtriker ſo ſoon as he is hurt, as Chriſt, the beſt expounder of the Law interpreteth it, *Math.*5.38,39.

This law Talionis was of force amongſt the Romans alſo, in the 12 tables, where other hurts are appointed to be puniſhed with the like, but not the breaking of a bone which was to be recompenced with money. And that the like is done to them that hurt, when their purſe is puniſhed, appeareth by the ſaying of Sampſon, from whom when the Philiſtines had taken his wife, he burnt their Corn-fields, and ſaid, as they had done to him, ſo he did unto them, which was onely meant, of evill rendered for evill, one evill for another.

Verſe 26. But if any man ſhall ſtrike the eye of his ſervant or of his maid, he ſhall let him go free for his eye, &c By the ſervant here the Hebrews underſtand a ſtranger, a ſervant vant, and not an Hebrew, for if he be hurt, there must be satisfaction given to him as to another; but an Heathen servant of his own was to be recompenced onely with freedome, and yet not so, unlesse he were circumcised, and unlesse he utterly lost the use of his eye. And the like law is for the losse of a tooth, an ear, or any other member, yea, if by accident the Master were the cause of the perishing thereof. God that is the God of servants as well as of masters, provided herein better for servants, then the Romans, by whose more favourable Law a servant being hardly used by his master was to be sold to another man, but his master must take the price, whereas by this law he must lose all, that he cost him. Maimony Treatise of servants, Chap.5.Sect.7.

If an oxe shall goare a man or a woman that he dieth, he shall be stoned to death, &c. Verse 29. But if the Oxe used to goare in times past, &c, The shedding of innocent blood is so heinous before God, that not only man but a beast that killeth must be killed; and his flesh as unclean might not be eaten, because it was as the blood of the man slain and being stoned, his own blood was still in him, and the flesh of any creature, whose blood was not let out, might not be eaten. And if an Oxe did any hurt, his master must pay for it, and so must he do for hurt done by any living creature in his power, saith Maimony; for the oxe is put for an instance, a dog, or horse or any other creature that a man keepeth, being understood also. This law was followed by the Romans in their twelve tables, Si quadrupes pauperiem fecerit, tum Dominus, &c. If any beast shall hurt a man which tendeth to the impoverishing of him, the Master shall pay for it, or lose his beast. The same law was also given by Solon to the Athenians, and by Plato. And by Draco a law-giver of the Athenians it was enacted, that even inanimate things that were the cause of a mans death, should be cast out of the bounds of the Countrey, as guilty. And accordingly when the statue of Theagenes fell upon a man and slew him, his children accused the statue, and by the Thasians it was condemned to be cast into the sea. If the oxe used to goare in times past, and his master was told of it, but neglected to keep him from hurting afterwards, he also was guilty of the blood shed, and must die also for it, or he must pay a price for the redemption of his life. He must evidently be in fault, the quality of his beast formerly coming to his knowledge, or else he cannot be thus punished. For in times past, is yesterday and the third day in the Hebrew, but not onely two, but many dayes before going are meant hereby, as also Exod. 4.10. Pet. Comestor, besides the losse of the oxe killing a man, saith, his master must pay 30 shekels, if he were a servant that was killed, and in this manner respect was had to the 30 generations coming from Ham adjudged to servitude, see verse 32. Before no price might be taken for blood-shed, but here there might, because this was no wilfull murther in the master, but accidentall, and all these lawes tend to shew how precious the death of any man is in the sight of God. Maimony Treatise of damages Chap.1.Sect.1. Verse 28. Verse 29,30 Scholast.histor. Calvin.

The next law here provideth for the safety of beasts; when a man openeth a pit, if any beast falleth into it, the owner shall pay for it, and have the dead beast; if one mans oxe goareth another mans oxe to death, the living and dead shall be divided between them, but if that oxe hath used in times past to goare, the owner shall pay him for the dead oxe. The Hebrews set down the depth of the pit two foot and a halfe, for if it be lesse, although a beast perish in it, he shall not be damnified that oweth the pit. Here is no mulct set down, if a man falleth into it, because he hath reason to keep himselfe out. Verse 33,34 Verse 35,36

Now forsomuch as God respecteth not oxen so much but men, according to that, 1 *Cor.*9.9. Mystically by the oxe and the asse falling into the pit, the clean beast and the unclean, the Believer and the Infidel may be understood, and by opening a pit, the opening of the mysticall things of the Scriptures: for the Doctour is to hide these from the believer, that is weak, and from the unbeliever, because being opened unto them, they may haply be scandalized, and Rab. Maurus.

and ſo deſtroyed hereby. Again, by the oxe goaring his fellow we may underſtand one Chriſtian being an occaſion of ſin unto another, in this caſe the living oxe muſt he ſlain and divided, and the dead alſo, that is, he muſt be ſharply reproved that he may be killed by repentance as it were, as 1 *Cor.*5.5. and ſo the keepers of them both may be ſatisfied, and the dead is divided, when they both condole for the ſin of him that is faln, ſeeking his reſtoring. But if any man giving offence to the deſtruction of others be ſuffered by his Keeper, he bringeth his offence upon himſelfe.

2 Cor.11.29.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſe 1. IF a man ſhall ſteal an oxe or a ſheep and kill it, he ſhall pay five oxen for an oxe, and four ſheep for a ſheep. By the oxe here all greater cattel are underſtood, and by the ſheep the leſſer, as *Deut.*14.4. ſaith Simlerus. But in the Hebrew Canons it is plainly expreſſed, thas onely for an oxe five-fold is to be paid, and for a ſheep four, and not for any other thing ſtolne, for which the thief paid but double, becauſe there was more profit, uſe and ſervice by theſe to the owners then by any other beaſts, and theſe were uſed for ſacrifice. Yet Joſephus ſaith, that they that ſtole livihg beaſts of any kinde, were to be puniſhed likewiſe five-fold and four-fold, but not for ſtealing gold, ſilver, ſtuffe, &c. It may ſeem more probable which the Hebrew Canons have, becauſe if a five or fourfold reſtitution had been meant for other cattel alſo, it had been as eaſie to name any out of the herd or flock; and for paying double for other things ſtolne, there is a plain ground, *v.*4. Yet becauſe it is there ſaid, If the thing ſtolne be found in his hand alive, whether oxe, aſſe or ſheep, he ſhall pay double; it appeareth, that not onely oxen and ſheep are meant in this law, but under them all greater and ſmaller cattel, for which reſtitution muſt be made five-fold or four-fold, becauſe if the aſſe muſt be paid for but double, if found alive, as the oxe; by the like reaſon he muſt be paid for five-fold, if dead or ſold. The word tranſlated ſheep is שה ſignifying a lamb or a kid, as Exod. 12.3. and it may be rendered any ſmall cattel, as *Deut.*14.4. lamb, kid, sheep, goat, &c. Now for ſtealing this, four ſheep muſt be given, אמן being put for שה, whereupon Cajetan gathereth, that the penalty for ſtealing a lambe was greater then for ſtealing an oxe, becauſe four ſheep were appointed to be given for one lambe, and not four lambs, and this was more then five oxen for one. But as the word is varied in ſpeaking of a ſheep, ſo it is in ſpeaking of an oxe, בקור being put for שור, and therefore this obſervation is over-curious, the thing to be noted from the varying of the word rather is, that if the thing called שה, which ſignifieth both a lambe and ſheep; be a ſheep, four ſheep ſhall be reſtored for it, if a lambe or kid, four lambs or four kids, &c. whereas this law toucheth cattel onely and the ſtealing of them, reſpect was herein had to that people, whoſe wealth conſiſted in the herd and the flock, but the ſtealing of any thing elſe is meant alſo, whether by plain theft, or by oppreſſion or deceit in dealing, for Zacheus being guilty in this kinde promiſeth reſtitution of four-fold without putting difference between beaſts and other goods. But in ſaying that this law extendeth to all other ſtolne things alſo, I do not mean for the quantum to be reſtored; for the double onely muſt be reſtored for things inanimate, as was before noted, and therefore the reſtitution of Zacheus was ex abundanti, not ex neceſſitate. Why for other things ſtolne onely a two-fold reſtitution is neceſſary, the Hebrews yield ſome good reaſon, becauſe other things may be kept more cloſely, but cattel muſt go abroad in the fields, being by this means more expoſed to danger, and therefore it was needfull by law to provide by a greater mulct to puniſh the ſtealing of them for greater terrour. Whereas five-fold reſtitution muſt be made for the oxe, but four-fold for the ſheep, the reaſon might be, becauſe the oxe was a ſervant, and the chief amongſt tame beaſts, as the lion amongſt he

Verſe 1.

Simlerus.

Maimony of Theft, Chap.1. *Sect.*6.

Joſeph.

Verſe 4.

Verſe 7.

Cajetan.

Luke 19.

the wilde, whoſe labour his maſter uſed, and being ſtolen, he was not onely damnified by the loſſe of his beaſt, but of his work alſo. And again, the ſtealing of an ox argued a more audacious thief, who durſt not onely ſteal a thing of leſſe price, but a greater, and not onely a thing that he might carry away upon his ſhoulder and hide, but that which muſt be driven, and could not ſo eaſily be hidden, *verſ.*4. If the beaſt ſtolen be alive, two-fold reſtitution onely is required, becauſe the maſter may have his own again. If a wife ſtealeth, ſay the Rabbins, and ſhe hath not to pay, the double worth ſhall lie upon her as a debt, till ſhe be divorced, or her husband die, and then ſhe ſhall pay it. A childe that ſtealeth ſhall not be liable to pay when he is grown up, but be beaten, that he grow not into a cuſtom: a ſervant ſhall be beaten for ſtealing, and that thorowly, and when he goeth out free, he ſhall pay the double: for ſtealing none were put to death then.

Verſe 4. Maimony Treatiſe of Theft. *Chap.*1. *Sect.*7.

If a thief be found breaking thorow, and be ſmitten that he die, no blood ſhall be ſhed for him: But if the ſun be riſen, blood ſhall be ſhed for him, &c. The reaſon of this is, becauſe ſuch theeves as break into houſes, uſe to kill him that reſiſteth, and his breaking thorow is in effect a purſuing of the maſter of that houſe to kill him, wherefore if he killeth in his own defence he ſhall be guiltleſſe. And by this Law, ſay the Hebrews, he ſhall be guiltleſſe whoſoever he be that killeth him, whether the maſter of the houſe, the ſervant, or any other man. Maimony. Like unto this is the Law of the twelve Tables of the Romans, yet it is not ſo to be underſtood, as if the Law did bid a man to kill ſuch a thief; for it were better to apprehend him, and to bring him before the Judges: but in caſe that a man by repelling and fighting againſt him did kill him, he ſhould be guiltleſſe, ſo Simlerus, who alledgeth the Civill Law alſo to the ſame effect, and affirming him not to be guiltleſſe, that when he could have apprehended him, had rather kill him. And this is the Law for night-theeves. For theeves breaking by day, when the Sun is once up, they muſt not be killed, which is to be underſtood, unleſſe they come armed with weapons: if he cometh ſimply to ſteal, and any man kill him, his bloud ſhall pay for it For the Sun riſen, the Chaldee hath, If the eye of witneſſes be upon him. If it be as cleer as the Sun, ſaith Maimony, that he cometh not to hurt thee, but to ſteal. For, there ſhall be blood ſhed for him, in Hebrew it is, bloods for him, as in the former verſe, no bloods for him, but that is the meaning which hath been already ſaid. He ſhall ſurely pay, ſome refer this to the ſlayer in the day, as if it had been ſaid, he ſhall pay his life, but it is certainly ſpoken of the thief, and brought, as a reaſon, why he muſt not be killed, viz. becauſe there is another puniſhment for him that onely ſtealeth, and if he hath not wherewith to pay double, he muſt be ſold. In the Laws of the twelve Tables it is expreſſed, that he who cometh to ſteal by night, or by day, being armed with a weapon in his hand, may be ſlain, if otherwiſe and he had not wherewith to pay for his theft, he muſt be made a ſervant to him from whom he ſtealeth; here he muſt be ſold, that is, as the Rabbins explain it, by the Judges, and the price taken given to him that ſuffered loſſe. If the goods ſtolen be worth an hundred crowns, and the thief be worth but fifty, he ſhall be ſold to make ſatisfaction, if the goods ſtolen be more then his price, he ſhall remain ſo much indebted, till the time of his freedom, and then when he is worth it, pay for it. But the thing ſtolen onely ſhall be reckoned, not the quadruple, or quintuple reſtitution, when his ſelling cometh in queſtion; for he ſhall not be ſold for that, if he hath enough to pay the principall: but after he goeth out free and is able, he ſhall pay that alſo. Maimony.

Verſe 2. Verſe 3.

Simlerus.

Verſe 3. Chaldee Paraphraſt. Maimony.

Maimony Treatiſe of Theft. *Chap.*3. *Sect.*12.

If it be demanded here, How the Laws of theſe times may be juſtified, in that men are hereby adjudged to die for theft, whereas in equity, and according to Gods Laws, goods onely ſhould pay for goods, and ſo it ſeemeth to have been judged by the Law of Nature, ſith the Romane Laws are onely for the ſame kinde of puniſhment? Simlerus anſwereth well, that puniſhments may be aggravated, as the ſins to be puniſhed increaſe and grow more hainous; and therfore in following times upon this reaſon, it ſeemeth that Solomon ſaid, that a thief being taken ſhall reſtore ſeven-fold; and David, He that hath ſtolen the poor mans lamb, ſhall ſurely die. By the Roman Laws of the twelve Tables, a ſervant convicted of theft muſt be beaten and thrown from a rock; and by the Law of Draco, a thief muſt die. Rulers, doubtleſſe, have power for more hainous thefts to puniſh with death, for the greater terror to others, neither is death appointed by humane Laws ſimply for theft. but for ſtealing the firſt time the puniſhment was whipping; for the ſecond, the cutting off of the ear; and for the third, hanging: and in the Conſtitution of Frederick, where death is appointed for the puniſhment of theft, if but five ſhillings be ſtolen, it was in caſe that the publick peace were broken, as appeareth, becauſe it is under the title, De pace violata. And ſo reſpect is, or ſhould be had ſtill to the quality of the offence, if ſtealing be with terrour, or violence, or the thief be incorrigible, or the theft be the more hainous for the thing ſtolen, the thief is worthy of death.

Simlerus.

Proverbs 6. 2 Sam. 12. 5.

Ex Cod. de ſervis fugit.

Verſe 5. If a man ſhall cauſe a field, or a vineyard to be eaten, &c. Here two caſes onely are put, but we muſt underſtand all other like caſes, as if one feedeth or ſpoileth another mans medovv, or orchard, by feeding or treading down, &c. he muſt pay of the beſt of his own.

Verſe 6. If a fire be kindled, and burn down ſtacks of corn, or ſtanding corn, he that kindled the fire, ſhall make reſtitution. By the Romane Laws, he is bound to reſtore onely, that was the cauſe of the burning, Datâ operâ, or in lata, & incauta negligentia or laſcivia. But now it is death to ſet fire purpoſely upon any mans goods or houſe, out of malice, neither is the meaning of this Lavv to reſtrain from thus puniſhing in this caſe, but when the fire being kindled in another place cometh accidentally to another mans poſſeſſion. The Hebrevvs diſtinguiſh about the things laid up at threſhing places, ſaying, That inſtruments of hubandry, if they be burnt up there, ſhall be paid for; but not plate, garments, or houſhold-ſtuff; but if a mans dwelling houſe be burnt, all within it ſhall be paid for, becauſe that is a proper place for a man to lay his goods in. And if a man be hurt by burning, his healing ſhall be paid for, &c. as in the caſe of bodily hurts before ſpoken of.

Ulpianus.

Maimony Treatiſe of damages, Chap. 14. Sect. 7.

Verſe 7. If a man ſhall give his neighbour ſilver, or veſſels to keep, and it be ſtolen, &c. Here is the Lavv, of which it was ſpoken before, that for other things beſides living, if they were ſtolen, double reſtitution muſt be made: for if the thief be found, it is ſaid here, that he ſhall pay double. If not, he to whoſe cuſtody it was committed, muſt come before the Judges to be tried, whether he hath put his hand to his neighbours ſubſtance. Here the Judges are again ſet forth by the name of gods, as Exod. 21. 6. The Chaldee hath it, before God, his triall muſt be by oath, as verſ. 11. whether he hath put his hand, that is, as ſay the Rabbins, not onely to ſteal it, but to uſe it, and to ſerve himſelf therewith, for if he hath uſed it, and after that it be ſtolen, he ſhall pay for it. So Rab. Joſ. Karro. The word tranſlated ſubſtance, or goods, is work in Hebrew, becauſe worldly goods are gotten but by labour.

Verſe 8.

R. Joſ. Karro.

Verſe 9. Upon every difference about ox, aſſe, &c. Which another challengeth to be his, the matter ſhall come before the Judges, and he whom they condemn, ſhall pay the double. For theſe words, challengeth to be his, in Hebrew it is, for every loſt thing which he ſhall ſay, this is he, כי הוא זה, the meaning is, when any thing committed to another mans cuſtody is ſtolen and loſt, and he ſhall challenge his neighbour that kept it, ſaying, He is the man that ſtole it, the Judges ſhall judge it, and not onely in this caſe, but in all other caſes, when one man layeth theft to the charge of another, ſo Calvin, Simlerus, &c. The Rabbins ſay, that he who kept his neighbours goods for him, might juſtly be challenged when they were loſt, not onely if he had put his hand unto them, as was before ſaid, but if he kept them in a place unmeet, as if he kept houſhold-ſtuff or raiment in his yard, or out-houſe, where timber, and brick, and the like might be kept, but not theſe things; or if they being demanded, he ſhould ſay, he knew not now where they were. For whom the Judges condemn, in Hebrew it is, whom the Judges make wicked, that is, judge to be the offender, as to juſtifie is to pronounce juſt and innocent, Deut. 25. 1. Prov. 17. 15. The paying double is by Simlerus referred not onely to him accuſed, but alſo to the accuſer, becauſe it is equall, that he who would bring another unjuſtly in danger of paying double, ſhould have the ſame mulct laid upon himſelf, ſo likewiſe Calvin and Tremelius. The Rabbins note here, becauſe it is ſaid, He whom the Judges condemn, ſhall pay the double, that if a man confeſſeth againſt himſelf, he ſhall onely pay the principall, but if denying it, they judge him guilty, he ſhall pay double.

ſay

Maimony Treatiſe of Borrowing, Chap. 4. Simlerus.

Touching any kinde of cattell committed to another mans keeping, if it were ſtolen, the keeper muſt reſtore, as he was not bound to do in the former caſe, and the reaſon is, becauſe commonly for keeping a mans cattell a price is given, ſo as is not for keeping any dead thing. If it cometh to any hurt, whereby it dieth, the dead or torn carcaſe muſt be ſhewed, and then he ſhall not pay for it. Here are two caſes of loſing cattell put, by theft, beſides the loſing of it by death. 1 If it be driven away, no man ſeeing it, that is, enemies coming and driving them away, which could not be prevented by any diligence of his, in this caſe, he taking his oath upon it, if his own cattell were alſo driven away withall eſpecially he ſhall not pay. 2 If it be ſtolen, and then he ſhall pay. So Simlerus. But here ſeem to be three caſes put rather. 1 Of a beaſt dying. 2 Of a beaſt hurt or torn with wilde beaſts. 3 Driven away, or ſtolen: and touching the firſt it is meant upon oath that he ſhall be acquitted; for the ſecond, he ſhall bring the torn parts, or ſome part forth; and for the third, he ſhall pay, whether it be driven away by enemies, or ſtolen, for who can tell whether of theſe took it, when as no eye ſaw the driving thereof away? For a beaſt torn by wilde beaſts, the Rabbins ſay, that if onely one wolf cometh, or onely two dogs, the keeper is bound to reſcue it, and if he doth not, he ſhall pay for it; but if two wolves, or more dogs come, then he ſhall be quit, or if a Lion, Bear, or Serpent. But if he leadeth the flock to places where wilde beaſts haunt, or robbers, he is bound to pay, or if other ſhepherds being neer, he called not to them to help, or took not up ſtaves when he might; or being one that taketh hire, if he provided not ſtaves and help to reſcue, he ſhall pay. So Maimony.

Maimony Treatiſe of Theft, Chap. 1. Verſe 10, 11 Verſe 12, 13

Simlerus.

Maimony Treatiſe of hired things, Chap. 3. Sect. 1 Verſe 14. Verſe 15

If a man borrow ought of his neighbour, and it be hurt, or die, the owner not being by, he ſhall make it good, &c. Here are two caſes put of borrowing without hire, and for hire; in the firſt if the thing borrowed miſcarrieth, the borrower muſt make it good; in the ſecond he ſhall not, but pay the hire onely. Yet in the firſt it is excepted, if the lender be preſent, then the borrower ſhall not be bound to make it good, becauſe, as Simlerus hath it, there could be no deceit or negligence through which it miſcarried, the owner himſelf being by and ſeeing the uſage thereof. For the borrower is by this Law appointed to pay, howſoever the thing borrowed be broken or loſt, to prevent deceit, and to make him the more carefull of the preſervation of his neighbours goods; but when the owner is preſent, he is made a witneſſe that there was no deceit, and therefore the borrower ſhall not pay. The Rabbins of the Jews expound it otherwiſe, If the owner be with it in the time of the borrowing, for if he be not, although he be preſent when it is broken or dieth, the borrower ſhall pay for it: but I prefer the former as more rationall. For the manner of paying it was thus; they conſidered what the thing was worth, before it miſcarried, and the worth of it being broken or dead, cauſing the borrower to reſtore that, and to make up what it wanted in worth. Yet there were ſome caſes, ſay the Rabbins, wherein the borrower was not bound to pay, viz. If any miſchance came to the beaſt, whileſt it was working, that is, in the plough, or he riding upon it, or treading out corn with it, or if a tool borrowed breaketh whileſt a man worketh with it: but if the beaſt dieth before or after working, or be ſtolen or taken away by violence, or any other thing borrowed be lost, he shall pay. And for hurts, they say, If a beast borrowed be leaner by ill keeping, the borrower must satisfie for the losse of his flesh, but if by working, he shall not satisfie; and when any thing is borrowed for such a time or work, the owner cannot fetch it home, till the work be done, or the time be expired, no not though the borrower be dead, but his heire may keep it, till the expiration of that terme, if no certaine time or worke be set, he may fetch it home when he will.

Simlerus.

Maimony.

Verse 16. If a man entice a maid that is not betroathed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife. This law is again repeated, *Deut.*22.28,29. but there it is said, He shall pay to her father 50 shekels of silver, and take her to wife, neither may he put her away all his dayes. Whereas in this place the dowry is to be given to her, if he marrieth her. Or in case her father will not give her him to wife, He shall pay money according to the dowry of Virgins, but to whom it is not set down. It is to be understood, that there shall be a double mulct imposed upon him, one to be paid to her, and another to her father, who hath been injured by his lying with her: so Simlerus; or else, as he also hath it, onely one dowry is to be paid to the father, in whose power the daughter is. But Tremelius thus, besides the just dowry he shall pay to the father of the maid a mulct for his paternall authority, and his daughters chastity thus violated. Ainsworth saith, that the law in Deuteronomy differeth from this, because here is meant a maid lien with by her consent, but there without consent, and that the Hebrews teach, that if he married her, he was not tied to pay this money, but onely to give her a writing for a dowry, as other maids had. And it was not onely in her fathers power to deny her him, but also in her own to refuse him, and in his to deny to take her: so Maimony in Naguarah, Chap 1. Sect. 3. But this I am sure is contrary to the Law of God, which saith, that he shall marry her, unlesse her father deny to give her, and pay this mulct also. But the difference between this and that in Deut. is observed by Tremelius also, because it is said, He taketh her and lieth with her, that is, being overcome with wine, or in wantonnesse, or by subtlety, she not being drawn to consent by promise of marriage or gifts. And this is the true reconciliation of these two places, here is a case of one lying with a maid, she being wonne to consent by fair promises and flatteries, for this he shall not pay any thing to her father, but onely give her a dowry, if he marrieth her, and if not, he shall pay money to her for a dowry, that another man may be the more willing to take her to wife: in Deut. is the case of a maid deflowred without such consent; and in this, he shall both marry her, and endow her, and pay 50 shekels for a mulct unto her father, and never put her away again. If it be demanded, what if he were a married man that lay with her, or a kinsman within the degrees prohibited? I answer, if she were his kinswoman, he must die for it, because this is the punishment of incest: if not, although he had a wife before, he must either take her to wife also, or pay money to her for a dowry, as Simlerus thinketh, or else as an adulterer he must die for it. But I cannot finde, that any mans lying with a woman, unlesse she were married or espoused, was to be punished with death. Wherefore it is to be held rather, that he should pay money to her for a dowry. If any shall marvell, that no punishment is set down for the maid, Simlerus saith, that this was an indulgence to her sex and young age and simplicity, and a pecuniary mulct could not be imposed upon her, because she had nothing, and for her father to be urged to pay for her fault were unjust. But the true reason, as I take it, was because she was punished with shame and disgrace, being henceforth vilely accounted of, as an whore, and her marriage was spoiled hereby. If it be demanded, why Judah would have had his daughter in law Tamar burnt for the like, she being a Widow, and so as a maid? For this see the solution, *Gen.*38.21, &c. But why is this penalty inflicted upon the man, or he required to marry her? Answ. The Lord would have them married, that a daughter

Simlerus.

*Tremelius in Deut.*22. Præter justam dotem, parenti puellæ numerabit præsentem mulctam patriæ autoritatis, pudicitiæque nomine violatæ. Ainsworth.

Quest.

Levit.18.29.

Simlerus.

Quest.

Quest.

a daughter of Israel might not live longer in infamy and sin, as an whore. But why was so little a punishment inflicted for so foul a sin, and none upon the maid? Answ. In these civill punishments respect was onely had to the staying of the inundation of vice, and if it be well considered, this was a sore punishment: but this is not all the punishment of this sin, but both for the whoremaster and the whore shutting out of the Kingdome of heaven, *Gal.*5.19. 1 *Cor.*5.11. If it be demanded, whether this law should not be still observed in all places? It is answvered, that to punish fornication is morall, but for the kinde of punishment it is politicall, and therefore at the liberty of the Magistrate to set down the fittest punishment for each Nation to make them amend their manners. Amongst the Romans by the Julian law the Stupratour was punished with the losse of halfe his goods, if he were wealthy, if not, his body was punished, and he was banished. The punishment of whoredome should not be lesse but greater now, as sin doth more abound, see before upon *Gen.*38.21.

Quest.

Quest.

Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live. The word witch is of the feminine gender, because the female is most commonly infected with this vice, but the man-witch or sorcerer is also implied, see *Deut.*18.10. vvhere not onely a vvitch is named, but also a diviner, an observer of times, and an inchanter, a charmer, a consulter with familiar spirits, and Necromancer: and *Levit.*20.6. God threateneth to cut off those that go after Wizards, and such as have familiar spirits. Of the divers sorts of such as used these vvicked arts, I have spoken before, *Exod.*7.11. This, saith Simlerus, against vvitches doth fitly follovv after the lavv against enticing to incontinency, because this art is often used to stirre up unlavvfull loves, and hereby the soul fornicateth vvith the Devill. For charmers and charmes much is said by some, as if such vvere not vvorthy of death, but might be tolerated, because vvhat they do is effected by the force of certain vvords, and not by any compact vvith the Devill, but God doth not onely condemn vvitches but charmers also. And good reason, because the name of God and other names of holy Scripture and vvords are abused by them against the lavvs of the first table, vvhich kinde of sin is most heinous and therefore to be punished vvith death.

Verse 18.

Levit.19.26.

Simlerus.

Whosoever lyeth with a beast shall be put to death. This, saith Simlerus, is set betvveen the lavv against vvitches and against idolaters, because they that have yielded to so foul a sin as to fornicate vvith the Devil by vvitchcraft and sorcery, may easily be dravvn to this most filthy sin by the Devil also, and idolaters are given over in Gods just judgement to do things against nature. This sin is so foul, that it should not be once named amongst Christians, yet that there vvas need of a lavv against it appeareth; because the Canaanites vvere before tainted vvith it, and there be some chief men in the Church of Rome that by their vvritings have given allovvance to it, as Casa, Aretinus, Bembus, and others: so Simlerus. *Levit.*20.15,16. vvhen such a foul sin is committed, the beast is also to be put to death, and if a vvoman committeth such wickednesse with a beast, and in appointing the beast to be killed, which was innocent, the Lord sheweth how detestable this sinne is before him.

Verse 19.

Rom.1.

Levit.18.23, 24.

Calvin.

He that sacrificeth to other gods shall be put to death. The word in Hebrew is יחרם, shall be utterly destroyed, or anathematized, or destroyed as execrable, or destroyed without mercy, *Heb.*10.28. in the Targum Hierosol. He shall be killed with the sword, and his goods consumed: but this is thus inlarged out of *Deut.*13.15, 16. the death in particular, to which such were to be put, was stoning, *Deut.*17.5. But the Hebrew Canons here distinguish, saying, That he, who serveth idols willingly and presumptuously, shall be cut off without mercy; but if ignorantly, he is to bring the sin-offering appointed for a sin of ignorance, Numb. 15.27,30. whereas sacrificing to other gods is onely spoken of here, serving of them is also named, *Deut.*13. *Deut.*17. and worshipping them, and the Sun, Moon and Starres are named in particular, as the gods which the Heathen served; to shew, that not onely sacrificing, but giving any kinde of worship and service to them is death.

Verse 20.

Maimony Treatise of Idolatry, *Chap.*3. *Sect.*1.

Thou

Verse 21. Thou shalt neither vex nor oppresse a stranger, &c. The first of these words is referred by the Hebrews to contumelious words: the second to deeds, thou shalt neither vex him by ill and disgracefull speeches, nor oppresse him by hard dealing with him any kinde of way. This law is given against that evill inclination, which is commonly in men towards strangers, preferring themselves and their own Nation, and debasing and abusing them. For our love must be as our heavenly Fathers to all, yea even to strangers, *Deut.*10.18,19. *Levit.*19.33,34. *Zach.*7.10. *Jer.*22.3. *Ezech.*46.18. and in love as a brother, so a stranger must be relieved in his want, and this law is repeated againe, *Chap.*23.9.

Levit.25.35.

Verse 22. Verse 23. Verse 24. Ye shall not afflict a Widow or fatherlesse childe, for if ye do, and they cry to me, &c. These are placed next unto the stranger, because most subject also to injuries for their inability to defend themselves, and of such God professeth to be a speciall Patron. Here is no particular punishment set down, but it is to be understood, that the Judge should do in their behalf, as the case should require, and God threateneth to kill such oppressours with the sword, and so to make their wives widows, and their children fatherlesse.

Verse 25. If thou lendest money to any of my people that is poor amongst you, thou shalt not be to him as an Usurer, neither shalt thou lay usury upon him. For these words, Thou shalt not be as an Usurer to him: Ainsworth hath it, Thou shalt not be as an exacting Creditour; the Septuagint, Thou shalt not be urgent upon him: the word נשה Nesheh, is put for one that is urgent to have his own paid him again of him that is not able, or to have a pawn for it, 2 *King.*4.1. *Psal.*109.11. *Nehem.*5.7,10,11. *Deut.*24.10. For to the poor, that is not able to pay, it is at the seventh year to be released, and he, say the Rabbins, that is urgent at any time upon a poor man, who hath not wherewithall to pay, sinneth against this law. Maimony. Yet a difference is put elsewhere between a brother and a stranger, as *Deut.*23.20. but in case the stranger be poor, he must not be lent unto upon usury, neither, *Levit.*25.35,36. as some, understand it, & as reason sheweth, because he must be relieved, as a brother in his want. This precept touching the lending of money is further inlarged, *Levit.*25.36,37. *Thou shalt not give him thy meat to usury. Deut.*23.19. nor any thing that is put to usury, & to the poor lend we must, *Deut.*15.8. *Luk.*6.35. The word translated Usury is biting, because it biteth and consumeth a man that borroweth in respect of his substance, *Levit.*25.37, it is נשך and מרבית increase or multiplication, whereupon the Rabbins gather, that all increase taken is usury, and because *Deut.*23.19. it is said, Thou shalt not cause thy brother to lend: they hold, that it is unlawfull to borrow upon usury, from these words, לא תשיך לאחיך, so translated by them, affirming, that they had this doctrine by tradition, that this was an admonition to the borrower. And they hold, that he also is guilty of this sinne who hath any thing to do about it as a witnesse, a surety, a scribe, or a procurer, because it is here said, Ye shall not lay usury upon him: for this extendeth to all before spoken of. They distinguish also between usuries, when a man doth not plainly agree to lend for increase, but hath a gift sent him before the borrower cometh to borrow, or after he hath paid him in his money; for that before, they say, is usury afore-hand, this after, after-usury. A man may not make any benefit of his lending, either by dwelling in the borrowers Court-yard for nought, or by hiring in that time any thing of him for lesse then it is worth, or by reteining his servant to work for him, although he hath nothing to do at home, nor by learning of him to read, if he did not use to do so before, no neither must the borrower so much as speak to him first in salutation, unlesse he used so to do before, and this they ground upon these words, *Usury of any thing that is put to usury, Deut.*23.19. which extendeth even to words. If usury be taken, the Judges must see it restored backagain to the borrower, neither shall a bill made for the payment of usury be of any force. Hitherto Maimony, who further saith, that he, which was any way guilty of usury by lending or borrowing, denied the name of the God

Ainsworth.

Deut.15.2.3.

Willet.

Maimony Treatise of lending and borrowing *Chap.*4.5,6.

God of Iſrael, and that he brought them out of Egypt, becauſe this is added as a reaſon to this law, *I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of Egypt, Levit.*25.38. But in cenſuring the poor borrower thus, the Rabbins were certainly in an errour, becauſe he borroweth not upon uſury, but being urged by neceſſity, not doing, but ſuffering vvrong; and it is a true maxime, not he that ſuffereth, but he that doth wrong ſinneth. If that *Jer.*15.10. be urged, I neither lent nor borrowed upon uſury: it is to be known, that the word נשה there uſed ſignifieth onely to lend, and it is ſo rendered by Junius, and נשא is to lend upon uſury, ſo that this place is commonly miſtaken, nothing elſe being meant, but that he had no dealings with the people to deſerve it, and yet they curſed him. Indeed, if a man borroweth upon uſury, not being forced by neceſſity, he is acceſſary to the ſame ſin, and ſo guilty of it. For that which the Rabbins ſay, that all increaſe taken for lending is uſury, it is qualified by ſome, ſaying, That all increaſe ex pacto is uſury; but if othervviſe in vvay of gratitude, becauſe a man gaineth by my money vvhich I lent him, he vvill give me any thing, it is lavvfull for me to take it: others hold that increaſe onely to be unlavvfull uſury vvhich is taken of the poor, but not of others in vvay of Commerce, ſo that a due proportion be not exceeded: and therefore they define uſury to be either a lending to the poor for increaſe or to any neighbour to his damage. The ground of the firſt definition of uſury, a pact intervening, is in theſe vvords, Thou ſhalt not lay uſury upon him, that is, ſaith Junius, by vvay of compact or contract. But Toſtatus vvith the Rabbins ſaith, any taking of increaſe is uſury. And a man may lay uſury upon another, although he compacteth not, but onely expecteth, or elſe he vvill lend no more, and the biting to the borrovver is not in the pact, but in the quantum that he muſt pay, or elſe he cannot borrovv another time. For the other definition, it is grounded partly upon the expreſſion here made, If thou lendeſt money to thy brother that is poor, and partly upon common equity, ſeeing in the dealing and trading of men one vvith another, if nothing be done in buying or ſelling, letting or hiring, to the damage of another, no lavv of charity is broken, at vvhich the vvhole Decalogue aimeth, and ſo no ſin is committed. But to the poor to lend for any increaſe is cruelty, they being not holpen, but more impoveriſhed hereby, vvhereas God by this lavv doubtleſſe ſpecially provideth for their help and comfort. I vvill not ſtand to diſpute the queſtion, vvhether of theſe definitions is rather to be imbraced, or to put caſes, vvherein gain may be taken or not, or to determine of the quantum, for all theſe have been copiouſly performed by others. Onely I wiſh all men to be charitable and conſcionable, and not to think that the not intervening of a pact will be available before God to clear them from ſin, that ſecurely under this ſhelter practiſe the odious ſin of uſury. If any ſhall think, becauſe this law is placed amongſt the judicials of the Jews, that we are not bound hereby any more, then by other civill lawes of theirs, he muſt remember, that this is as a Judaicall, ſo a Chriſtian law, *Luk.*6.35. Lend freely, looking for nothing again, that is, not according to Syrus, not putting the poor out of hope to borrow; becauſe the word is ἀπελπίζοντες, nor, as Beza, not looking for the prineipall again, but not looking for any recompence, as when any rich man lendeth to another, the borrower lendeth to him again another time, and the lender looketh for this requitall; and now the difference of ſtranger, Deut. 23.20. is taken away in Chriſt, in whom we are all brethren, and therefore this rule is to be followed towards all. But by ſtrangers, to whom they might lend upon uſury, are not underſtood all that were not of the ſeed of Iſrael, becauſe ſome of them being poor muſt be relieved, as was ſhewed before; viz. ſuch as ſojourned amongſt them and were circumciſed, not being of the Nations appointed to deſtruction; to the people of thoſe Nations then they might lend upon uſury to waſte and to weaken them, yet Aquinas ſaith, that this was but a permiſſion to take even of them, that they might be the more willing to lend freely to their brethren.

Non qui patitur ſed qui facit injuriam, peccat.

See Deut.15.2 Deut.24.10. for the uſe of the word נשה

Mutuò date in damnum vicini.

Junius. Toſtatus.

Calvin ſaith, that it was a politicall Law of the Jews, and bindeth not us, but yet it was odious even to Heathen people. Syrus Beza.

If

Verſe 26. Verſe 27.

If thou takeſt thy neighbours raiment to pledge, thou ſhalt return it to him before the Sun goeth down. For that onely is his covering, &c. This law is further inlarged, *Deut.*24.12. If thou lendeſt any thing to thy neighbour, go not in to fetch out his pledge, but ſtand without, and if he be poor, ſleep not with his pledge, &c. Verſe 17. Thou ſhalt not take for a pledge the garment of the widow. Verſe 6. Thou ſhalt not take the upper or the nether milſtone to pledge. A poor mans garment is that wherewith alone he cloatheth himſelf in the day, and covereth himſelf when he lieth down to ſleep by night, and ſuch is the garment of the widow that muſt not be taken. By the upper and nether milſtone are to be underſtood all tools, wherewith a man doth work to get his living, ſo that being deprived of them, he is in effect deprived of his life. In the Hebrew Canons it is ſaid, that the meaning is, the thing taken for pledge from a poor man muſt be reſtored to him when he needeth it, if it be any garment which he needeth to vveare by day, or any tool wherevvith he vvorketh, it muſt be reſtored by day, even vvhenſoever he needeth it, for vvhich it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt return it to him before the Sun goeth down, but if to cover him at night, it muſt then be reſtored, for vvhich it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt reſtore it at the Sun going down, *Deut.*24.13. If it be demanded, what benefit it is to a Creditour to take his neighbours garment or tool to pledge, and by and by to reſtore it again?

Queſt.

Simlerus.

Simlerus anſvvereth vvell, By the poor mans bringing of it to him thus from day to day, haply his day-garment at night, and his night-covering in the morning, vvhen he fetcht the other avvay again, it vvas bound over unto him, and this bringing and fetching might put the poor man in minde to vvork the harder, that he might have vvherevvithall to pay his Creditour; and vvhereas the thing taken for pledge vvas the vvorſe for uſing, at vvhich the Creditour might except, he muſt knovv, that God in making this lavv tied him to exerciſe his charity, vvhich if he ſhould refuſe to do, he threateneth him, but if he did, he promiſeth a recompence, *Deut.*24.13.

Verſe 27.

Queſt.

Calvin.

If it be demanded, why the Creditour is forbidden to go into the poor mans houſe and to take a pledge? Calvin reſolveth it well, Rich men are ſo covetous, that they would have choſen for the beſt, and not have been content with that which the poor man would have given, and ſo have put the poor to more loſſe and ignominy.

Verſe 28.

Thou ſhalt not revile the Judges, nor curſe the Ruler, &c. The word rendered Judges is אלוהים gods, but of God it is not here meant, becauſe it is elſewhere provided againſt blaſpheming of God, neither of falſe gods, as Joſephus would have it, for they may freely be reviled, but of Judges, to revile whom is a ſinne, becauſe for their place and authority they muſt be reverenced, as Fathers of the Countrey. Theſe two words, revile, and curſe, are rendered by one word, curſe by Santes, but the firſt being Calal, ſignifieth properly to levifie, or to uſe diſgracefull ſpeeches, whereby the dignity of the Judge is levified, the other, Taor, to curſe. By the Ruler the Rabbins underſtand either the King or the Chief of the great Synedrion. In that no puniſhment is ſet down, it is to be underſtood, that it was left to the diſcretion of the Magiſtrate himſelf to puniſh ſuch indignities offered unto him.

Simlerus.

Maimony in Sanedrim.

Verſe 29.

Thy full ripe fruit and thy liquor thou ſhalt not delay. For liquor in Hebrew is teare, becauſe it is the liquor of the grapes, when they are full ripe, ſo that being preſſed it runneth down like teares. The Chaldee rendereth the firſt words, thy firſt fruits, the Septuagint, the firſt fruits of thy floor; and that the firſt fruits are meant, ſee *Chap.*23.19. ſee *Numb.*18.27. *Deut.*26.2. for the manner of bringing the firſt fruits, *Numb.*15.20. and Deut 26. Some by fulneſſe, ſaith Simlerus, underſtand the firſt fruits of a plentifull year, and by teares of a barren year, a few drops like teares being then to be offered. But the firſt fruits of dry things and of liquid, as wine and oil are meant hereby. There were ſeven ſorts of fruits, ſay the Hebrew Canons, of which they were to bring the firſt ripe, viz. of Wheat, Barley, Grapes, Figs, Olives, Pomegranates and Dates, and not of any other; of liquors onely two, Wine and Oil: this this also they ground upon *Deut.*8.8.where these seven are named as the chief fruits of that land. The quantity is not set down, but by the Rabbins it is taught that one of 60 must be brought at the least,and one of 40 at the most, for they say, what did the wise men set? a good eye, one of fourty, a mean eye, one of fifty, an evill eye, one of sixty, so that they counted the firsts to be then bountifully paid, when one of 40, but most niggardly, when one of 60, between these indifferent. They must not delay, but bring these in due time. For they being for part of the Priests maintenance, God knew what slackness would be in the people to pay them. Hereby God would have them acknowledge, that all their increase came from him, and that they had their land from God, *Deut.*26.9. this being brought as a tribute unto him therefore, and hereby all their increase was sanctified, *Rom.*11.16. And the faithfull, the first fruits of his creatures are figured out hereby, *Jam.*1.18. Revel. 14.4. and such was Israel sometime called, Jerem 2.3. and hereby was figured out, saith Isidore, how the first and chief of our actions should be dedicated to God, or the will, which is first before any action.

Simlerus.

Maimony Treatise of first-fruits, and in Trumoth, *Ch.*3.

The first-born of thy sonnes shalt thou give to me, and of thy sheep and oxen seven dayes, &c. Of the Law for all first-born things, see before, *Exod.*13.2.

Verse 30.

Ye shall be an holy people to me, flesh torn in the field ye shall not eat, &c. To figure out the inward holinesse that should be in us, outward purity is commanded to the Israelites about meats and other things, see *Levit.*17.15. Deut. 24.21. By torn flesh the Rabbins understand either a beast or a fowl torn by wilde beasts, lions, wolves, &c. Or by birds of prey, as the Eagle, Kite, &c. If any part of it be torn, although it be recovered and killed by a man before it dieth, yet because it was inclining to death and could not have lived, it is unlawfull, say they, to eat of it. And that not onely in the case of being torn by other creature, but of being broken by falling from an high place, being shot with an arrow to the heart,or stricken with the hand of God. And it is likewise unlawfull to eat flesh cut from a creature living: so Maimony. In the lawes before pointed to, as torn flesh, so a dead carcase is forbidden to be eaten, and as here they are commanded to cast torn flesh to the dogs, so *Deut.*14 21. it must be given or sold to a stranger, and if any of them did eat thereof,he must wash his garments and be unclean till the evening; which if he did not he should bear his iniquity, and this is pronounced as well of the stranger as of the Israelite. Here is occasion offered of divers queries: as

Verse 31.

Maimony, of forbidden meats, *Chap.*4. *Sect.*6.

1 Why such flesh is forbidden? Answ. Not simply, because the blood was in it which might not be eaten; for this, as Calvin well noteth, is a diverse law from that,because the punishmēt of blood-eating is death,but the punishment of this, to wash, &c. but torn or dead flesh so found might not be eaten; because it was to be numbered amongst unclean meats, and they being an holy people might not eat any unclean thing. The wilde beasts tearing and killing of it, who is unclean, is enough to make it unclean. And by avoiding it God would teach them to avoid cruelty, wherein he that ate of a beast torn by cruel beasts, did as it were communicate with them. Moreover, by wilde beasts tearing other creatures, the Devils tearing our bodies by wicked lusts are set forth upon the sensuall delights suggested, by whom we must not feed. 2 How that people is said to be holy? Answ. Because separated from the rest of the wold,and God did more specially dwel amongst them, and to them were the Word and holy Sacraments committed; and therefore it was necessary that there should be some outward signes of their separated condition, and some obedience in certain Rites by God prescribed meerly for the good will and pleasure of God, although man could not see into any reason of such Ordinances, that yet by obeying herein, they might appear to be the people of God.

Quest. 1. Calvin. Levit.17.14.

Simlerus.

Quest. 2.

3 How do these precepts agree, when as one biddeth cast it to the dogs, but the other to give or sell it to the stranger? Answ. If they did not cast it to the dogs, they might so do, because to others it was permitted indifferently

Quest. 3.

Queſt. 4. Calvin. Rab. Maurus. The Myſtery.

ently to eat of all meats, and the reſtraint was onely of the Jews. 4 But the ſtranger is alſo named, as the Jew, ſo he muſt refrein from ſuch meat? Anſ. Strangers were of two ſorts, ſome ſuch as joyned themſelves in Religion to the Jews being circumciſed, for theſe there was all one law: others did not joyn, and to them it might be given to eat. Myſtically, we muſt not imitate the carnall converſation of thoſe that by vile luſts are torn by Devils, ſuch a converſation being as torne fleſh and the Devils, as the wilde beaſts. And thoſe that live ſo, muſt be caſt to the dogs, that is, be counted as an Ethnick or Pagan, who are as dogs: ſo Rabanus.

CHAP. XXIII.

Verſe 1. THou ſhalt not take up a vain report, put not thy hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witneſſe. The word, take up, may be expounded either of being the authour or raiſer of an ill rumour againſt a mans neighbour, or of giving an ear unto it, and both theſe wayes it is underſtood by the Chaldee, and Septuagint, and vulgar Latine, and Rab. Solomon: ſee *Levit.*19.16. 1 Sam. 24.9. and good reaſon, that as the raiſing of a rumour, ſo the receiving of it ſhould be avoided, becauſe vain rumours would ſoon vaniſh, unleſſe they were ſuſteined and ſtrengthened by vain credulity.

Simlerus.

For, put not thy hand, the Septuagint hath, conſent not, for, a witneſſe of unrighteouſneſſe, Hebrew, a witneſſe of cruell wrongs. This law, as ſaith Simlerus, is ſpecially concerning things comming into judgement, as generally the receiving of falſe rumours is to be avoided by all men, ſo ſpecially by a Judge, and if in no caſe a man may receive falſe rumours, then in judgment he ſhould much more abhorre to teſtifie falſly. If any did ſo, the ſame puniſhment which ſhould have been laid upon the accuſed, ſhall be laid upon him, Deut. 19.16, 19, 20.

Verſe 2. Thou ſhalt not be after many to evil, neither ſhalt thou anſwer in a cauſe to decline after many to pervert judgement. In the Hebrew it is, to pervert; but by the Septuagint judgement is added, and expreſſed, *verſ.*6. Tremelius, Inſiſt not in the ſteps of the mighty to evil, becauſe this is oppoſed to the poor ſpoken of, *verſ.*3. The Hebrews expound it vvell of Judges divided, vvhen the moſt or greateſt are for a vvrong ſentence, yet thou art a Judge fearing God, muſt not give vvith them. It may alſo be underſtood of thoſe that contend, whereof ſome are ſaid to be many, becauſe they come accompanied with many friends and attendants, by reaſon of their greatneſſe, thus ſtriking terrour into the Judge, or moving him in hope of favour and benefit from them to give an unjuſt ſentence, for from their great and high reckoning wherein they were, the Rabbins had their name from Rabbim, many. So Simlerus. And thus this verſe and the next ſeem to be explained, *Deut.*1.17.

Tremelius. Maimony. Simlerus.

Verſe 3. Judices ſæpè propter invidiam adimunt diviti, aut propter miſericordiam addunt paupери. 1 Sam.2.29. And a poor man ſhalt thou not honour in his controverſie, The like phraſe is uſed of the rich, *Levit.*19.15. Oft-times, ſaith the Comedian, the Judges either take from the rich through envie, or adde unto the poor through mercy. And it is an honouring of either of them more then of God, when as for either of their ſakes juſtice is perverted, as Eli is ſaid to have honoured his ſons more then God. And therefore even the Judge, that to get the credit of pity to the poor, ſhall give unjuſtly on his ſide, is judged as a contemner of God for this his vain glory.

Verſe 4. Verſe 5. When thou meeteſt thine enemies ox or aſſe going aſtray, thou ſhalt turn him unto him. Thou ſhalt not ſee his aſſe lying under his burthen, &c. This Lavv is again delivered, *Deut.*22.1,2,3, &c. and is extended to all loſt things, vvhich muſt be reſtored. If the ovvner be not knovvn, he that found it, ſay the Rabbins, was bound to cry it, and he muſt keep it by him, till the ovvner cometh for it, or if he be far off. So that the love of enemies and doing good even to them is no nevv precept, *Matth.*5. but an old one, *Levit.*19.17. and therefore no vvork of supererogation is done hereby. In the case of a beast fallen dovvn vvhich is an enemies, if thou vvouldest through that enmity vvhich is in thee leave him, thou must not but help him up, as the words in Hebrew imply. Novv these offices of love were not so much to the beast, but the man in helping his beast, for the reconciliation of affections so much distracted before.

Maimony.

Thou shalt not wrest the judgement of the poor. Before it is commanded, Thou shalt not honour the poor in his cause. Here contrarivvise against another evil, viz. of contempt, and not enduring to hear and consider fully of the cause of a very poor person, it is provided that by such means, or by enclining to the rich, his cause be not perverted. By the poor are meant especially the widow, the fatherlesse, and the stranger, whose cause who so wresteth is accursed, *Deut.*27.19. Verse 6.

From a word of falshood thou shalt be far, and slay not the just and innocent, for I will not justifie the wicked. By word of falshood understand a false judgement; if a Fellow-Judge through corruption would give a false judgement, thou must not consent unto him. Wherefore Maimony saith, that a good Judge would not sit in judgement, unlesse he knew first who should sit with him, and that he was upright: when a false judgement is given, the just is slain, if it be a matter of life and death, and if of goods, he is impoverished and grieved, which also tendeth to death. So Simlerus. God will not justifie the wicked, that is, he will not suffer such a wicked Judge to go unpunished. Verse 7. Maimony in Sanedrim. Simlerus.

Thou shalt not take a gift, for a gift blindeth the seeing, and perverteth the words of the just. A gift must not be taken, no not to acquit the innocent, or to condemn the guilty, for it is a generall rule, Cursed is he that taketh a gift, and he must restore it again, and his judgement is frustrate: so the Rabbins. And our wise men have taught, say they, that if any giveth a bribe for the office of a Judge, he is to be despised and nought set by, and it is unlawfull to stand to be judged by him. See the same Law, *Deut.*16.19. The Chaldee rendereth it, Blinde the eyes of the wise, as in that place, the Septuagint, the eyes of the seeing; in Hebrew it is פקוחים, open-eyed. Against bribes see more, *Prov.*15.27. Job 15.34. *Eccles.*7.7. *Prov.*17.8. 19.6. 17.23. *Esa.*1.23. The bribe-taker is wicked, and the companion of theeves. But how can the words of the just be perverted, if he be just, he will not speak unjustly? Answ. They that would otherwise have been just, are hereby perverted. The force of bribes is wonderfull, as Cicero sheweth in Verres and in Clodius. Philip the King of Macedon by gifts wan many factious men unto him in every City, by whose means the liberty of Greece was betrayed unto him. Amphiaraus by his wife was betrayed, she being corrupted by a most fair jewell to hang about her neck. Danae a virgin was corrupted in her chastity with gold; and Procris, a matron. And daily experience sheweth, how much even small gifts do work for the moving of the affection, and therefore all Judges and Magistrates ought to beware especially, that they receive none at the hands of those that contend before them. Verse 8. Maimony. Quest. Simlerus.

Ye shall not oppresse a stranger, &c. This is added the second time, for it is once, *chap.*22.21. because the precepts here are directed to Judges especially. And the Jevvs had need to have this Law often inculcated unto them, because as they were hated of all other Nations, so they hated them, and what their contempt of men of other Nations is, appeareth at this day, because being in so abject an estate, they despise all men in comparison of themselves. Verse 9.

Six yeers thou shalt sowe thy land, and gather the fruits thereof; but the seventh thou shalt let it rest, &c. This Law is more largely set forth, *Levit.*25.1,2,3, 4, &c. and *vers.*20,21. This was to be observed onely in Canaan, and in acknowledgement that the land was the Lords, as they rested upon the seventh day in acknowledgement, that they were the Lords. Now they might neither sowe nor reap, prune their trees, nor gather their vintage, unto which Verse 10,11 Maimony of Jubilee, chap 1.

the Rabbins adde, that they might not plow, nor dung their ground, nor gather out ſtones, nor plant, nor graff, nor cut off the withered branches, nor make a ſmoke to kill worms upon them, nor burn the ſtraw upon the ground, becauſe it was fit for the beaſts to eat. And the owners with others muſt enjoy all the increaſe in common, none muſt gather to ſell, unleſſe it were a little to buy other meat with it, no man might lock up his vineyard, or fence in his corn-field, and of the things that grew that yeer, no medicine might be made, but only it might be eaten, becauſe it is ſaid, It ſhall be for meat unto you, Levit. 25.5. Thus Maimony. And if they ſhould doubt how they ſhould live, if they did no acts of husbandry that yeer, the Lord anſvvereth, Levit. 25.20,21. he vvould ſend upon the ſixth yeer fruits enough for three yeers, as before upon the ſixth day he gave Manna enough for tvvo dayes. In appointing this yeers reſt, God aimed at their ſpirituall good, for the Lavv muſt then be read in the ears of them all, Deut. 31.10. and if they ſhould tranſgreſſe againſt this Law, he threateneth deſolation to the land, Levit. 26.34,35. 2 Chron. 36.21.

willet in Levit. For the beginning of their account to this Sabbaticall yeer, it muſt needs be from the firſt yeer of their enterance into Canaan, and ſo our Saviour Chriſts paſſion will fall out in the ſeventieth Jubilee, the Antitype being thus aptly ſhewed by the Type. So Willet, vvho alſo ſaith, that as upon the ſeventh day man vvas to reſt from labour, vvhich ſin brought upon him: ſo in the ſeventh yeer the earth muſt reſt, for the curſe brought by the ſin of man upon it.

Brentius. Whereas it is ſaid, they might not reap, Levit. 25.5. it is meant, as Brentius noteth, that they might not reap each man his field alone, but in common with others.

Auguſt. quæſt. 89. in Exod. Auguſtine inquiring, what the poor ſhould have to eat the ſeventh yeer, if no corn were ſowen, anſwereth, that reaping is forbidden, but not ſowing.

Toſtatus. And Toſtatus thinketh, that they might gather the fruit in their incloſed grounds, but both plainly contrary to the Text.

Brentius in Levit. Another rite of this yeer was, debts were to be releaſed to their brethren, Deut. 15.2. but this Brentius thinketh is not meant of altogether forgiving them, but not requiring them that yeer, but ſtaying till the next, becauſe this were unjuſt for a man to loſe his money. To whom I can by no means aſſent, becauſe the borrower is a poor man, and the rich muſt be vvilling to loſe in charity for the benefit of the poor, and vve are all under God, neither are our goods our own; but at his diſpoſe, if he will take from one and give to another by his Ordinance.

Calvin. Yet Calvin is for that Expoſition alſo, becauſe there followeth an Item to the Creditour not to forecaſt, that the yeer of releaſe vvas neer; for if it vvere then altogether to be remitted, there needed not a contract, as betvveen lender and borrower, but altogether to give it. But whoſo ſhall look into the Text, ſhall finde that this lending is alſo called giving, and Calvin himſelf rendereth it, to a beggar, the right object of charity. And to ſhew that debts were now altogether releaſed, the releaſe is appointed to be made at the end of the yeer, Deut. 15.1. This Sabbaticall yeer men were not commanded to reſt, but the land onely, and by conſequence their reſt was onely from works of husbandry.

The Myſtery. Rabanus Maurus. For the myſtery of this yeer, as in ſix yeers they ſowed, but not the ſeventh, ſo in this world we muſt ſowe by good works, but in the end, when the time of reſt in Heaven cometh, we ſhall reap without ſowing, and we ſhall then enjoy all things in common, the poor and the ſervant, as well as the rich and the free. So Rabanus.

Verſe 12. Simil. 14. Six dayes thou ſhalt labour, but in the ſeventh thou ſhalt reſt &c. This before enacted is here again added, leſt they ſhould think that the ſeventh yeer being all a Sabbath, they were not bound that yeer to keep the Sabbath-day. And the Law of the Sabbath-day is put amongſt the Civill Laws, becauſe there was alſo a civill end herein, viz. the reſt of ſervants and beaſts from labour, and conſequently their preſervation, who if they were continually toiled without intermiſſion, could not ſubſiſt.

Verſe 14. And in all things that I have ſaid unto you, be circumſpect, and make no mention of the names of other gods. Here the Lord reflecteth upon occaſion of the mention mention made of the Sabbath, upon the whole Decalogue, and ſpecially upon that of not having any other gods. Make no mention of their names. In Vulgar Latine, Swear not by their names: The Hebrew Canons ſay, Whoſo ſhal make a vow unto, or ſwear by the name of an Idol, ſhall be beaten, whether he ſweareth by it for himſelf, or for an Infidell, and an Infidell muſt not be made to ſwear by, or to mention the name of his god. But even to ſpeak of them, or to name them as gods with honour, is forbidden; and ſo David ſheweth that he underſtood this Pſal.16.4. I will not take up their names into my lips. And Joſ.23.8. Neither make mention of them, nor ſwear by them, &c. And accordingly, Hoſ.2.17. God ſaith, he will take the names of Baalim out of their mouths. And Zach.13.2. that he will cut off the names of Idols. Thus S. Paul biddeth, that fornication ſhould not be once named amongſt Chriſtians, that is, be ſo out of uſe, as that the very name of it might vaniſh, and no ſound thereof remain.

Maimony Treatiſe of Idolatry, Chap.5.

Epheſ.5.3.

Three times ſhalt thou keep a feaſt unto me in the yeer, the feaſt of unleavened bread, &c. Verſe 14. None ſhall appear before me empty, the feaſt of firſt-fruits, and the feaſt of in-gathering at the end of the yeer. Verſe 15. Three times in a yeer ſhall all thy males appear before the Lord. Verſe 16,17. For three times, Hebr. it is three feet, becauſe they were to travell on foot to the keeping of theſe feaſts. Of the feaſt of the Paſſeover I have ſpoken at large, Exod.12. But for this addition, None ſhall appear before me empty: vvhat is meant by it, ſee Deut.16.16,17. Every one ſhall give as he is able, and that not onely at the firſt feaſt of unleavened bread, but at each other feaſt, every particular male muſt bring his offering, verſ.10. this is ſaid to be a tribute of a free-will-offering, which he muſt give, and in the ſpending of which he muſt rejoyce, and together with him his man-ſervant, his maid, his ſon and daughter, the Levite and ſtranger, the fatherleſſe and widow: for with this offering a feaſt was to be kept. The Rabbins note, that every one at each of theſe feaſts muſt do three things. 1 Appear upon the firſt day, bringing with him a burnt-offering of fowl, or of beaſt, becauſe it is both commanded, and to appear empty is forbidden. 2 He muſt feaſt, that is, with peace-offerings, vvhich vvere not, but of beaſts. 3 He muſt rejoyce, that is, offer peace-offerings, more then thoſe of the feaſt, which are called the peace-offerings of the rejoycing of the feaſt, Maimony in Cagigah, Chap.1. For the further cleering of this place, divers queſtions are to be reſolved.

Maimony. Of the burnt-offerings for ſin none might eat, but of the peace-offerings. See before, Chap.18 12. therefore to burnt-offerings the peace-offerings for feaſting were added.

1 In what place they muſt appear? Anſw. This is not expreſſed, but underſtood, before the Ark of the Covenant, where becauſe the Lord did ſhevv ſignes of his Preſence, and give anſwers, he was ſaid to be. And Deut.16.2. In the place which the Lord ſhould chuſe, and not in any other place, verſ.5, &c. Queſt.1.

2 Why muſt they come all to one place? Anſw. Both to maintain unity and love amongſt themſelves, and unity in Religion; and by this ſolemn meeting to be ſtirred up to the more reverence towards God; and myſtically, one Chriſt was ſet forth by this one place, to whom we muſt all come, that upon him our Altar we may offer acceptable ſacrifices, and through the mediation of him our onely High Prieſt. P. Martyr yieldeth beſides theſe three other Reaſons. 1 That they might be the better inſtructed in Gods worſhip. 2 That their prayers made together might be the more effectuall. 3 For the exerciſe of their obedience in going ſo farre. And for three times in a year, he ſaith, it was to remember the better three great benefits wherein the happineſſe of a State Politick conſiſteth. 1 Liberty. 2 To have lawes of their own. 3 A ſupply of food and other neceſſaries for the body. To remember, the 1 was the Paſſeover inſtituted. The 2 the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, at what time the Law was given. For the 3 the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Queſt.2. Simlerus.

3 Why muſt the males appear and not the females alſo? Anſw. None were prohibited, but women, becauſe of their infirmities, ſometime being hindered Queſt.3.

dered by childe-bearing, ſometime by giving ſuck, were not ſo ſtreightly required to appear, yet that they did, we may ſee in the example of Elkanah and his two wives, &c.

1 Sam.1.

Queſt. 4. 4 What if the enemy ſhould take the advantage of their abſence from home altogether, and come upon their Cities being without inhabitants? Anſw. God promiſeth, that none ſhall then deſire their land, *Chap.*34.24. But neither were their Cities then left altogether naked of inhabitants to defend them, ſaith Simlerus, becauſe all under 20 years ſtayed at home, and above 50 years, as Interpreters think, becauſe they were not numbered but from 20, and above this age all that were able to go forth to war, and ſuch they are to be thought to have been which were under 50, becauſe the Levites were numbred to this age, and ſerved to this age onely, *Numb.*8.25. But this is no ground for ſuch a conceit, becauſe Jeſus being but 12 years old, went up with his parents to the Feaſt, and the Rabbins ſay, that none were exempt from going up, whether young or old, but onely women and ſervants, the deaf and dumb, the childe and the fool, the blinde and the lame, the defiled and the uncircumciſed, and the aged and ſick, and weak and tender, who were not able to go upon their feet ſo farre, or if there were any that was neither male nor female. Yet ſervants and wives and daughters went alſo at ſometimes; becauſe it is ſaid, Thou and thy ſonne and daughter and ſervant, &c.

Simlerus.

Numb.1.

Numb.4.

Luke 2.42.

*Maimonyin Cagigah, Chap.*2.

Deut.16.11.

Queſt. 5. 5 Why muſt they bring gifts with them? Anſw. Both for homage to God, the great King, as none muſt appear before the Perſian King without a preſent, and alſo for the relief of the poor, and the maintenance of thoſe that ſerved at the Altar, and of this the equity remaineth ſtill; he that will ſerve God acceptably muſt not worſhip him with an empty worſhip, but with giving to the poor, and giving to his Miniſters, when he cometh to appear before him. What theſe three Feaſts were is more fully ſet forth, Deut 16. 1 the Paſſeover, *v.*9. from thence, ſeven weeks being paſt, the Feaſt of weeks, Pentecoſt, at the beginning of reaping their fruits. *v.*13. the Feaſt of Tabernacles, of which afterwards when we come to their deſcriptions.

Levit.23.

Verſe 18. Thou ſhalt not offer the blood of my ſacrifice with leavened bread, nor the fat ſhall remain till the morning. The Chaldee rendereth it, The blood of my Paſſeover, and a ground hereof is, *Exod.*34.25. where it is added for explication, Neither ſhall the ſacrifice of the feaſt of Paſſeover be left untill the morning; that is, the fat, which in the Paſſeover as in all other ſacrifices was alwayes to be burnt unto the Lord, *Levit.*3.16,17. why nothing of it ſhould remain till the morning, ſee before, Chap. 12.10. and of unleavened bread. Here is then a Synecdoche, ſaith Simlerus, part, that is the fat, being put for the whole, The fat ſhall not remain, that is, none of it ſhall remain, but the fat is particularly nominated, becauſe that was the Lords part, and might not be eaten, Levit. 3.17. and the offering of the blood of the ſacrifice is ſpoken of, becauſe no part of the paſchal lambe beſides the blood was offered, and that was ſtricken upon the poſts of the doore. Yet it is a generall rule in all ſacrificings alſo, they muſt be made with unleavened bread, *Levit.*2.4,5. Myſtically, hereby is ſhewed, that the leaven of malice and deceit muſt not be in any of our devotion, and we muſt not leave the fat of the works of mercy till the morning of the Reſurrection, becauſe then there will be no time to do them.

Simlerus.

Exod.12.

Rab. Maurus.

Verſe 19. The firſt of the firſt fruits of thy land ſhalt thou bring &c. neither ſhalt thou ſeeth a kid in his mothers milk. For firſt fruits bringing, there was a law before, *Chap.*22.29. where I have ſaid enough of it. How the firſt of theſe firſt fruits ſhould be brought at the Feaſt of the Paſſeover is moſt probably ſhewed here: for the firſt are appointed to be brought in a basket, *Deut.*26.2. and therefore it muſt needs be but a little quantity: and at the Feaſt of weeks more were brought, *Levit.*23. and laſtly, another time, which was a more generall for all, that is, the Feaſt of Tabernacles; for at theſe three times, ſaith ſaith Simlerus, they brought firſt fruits, and for the quantity at the firſt he ſaith it was a Gomer. Some ſay, that this is here added touching the fruits of every ones own land, and not of thoſe which he buyeth upon another mans land, for he is not tied, as is implied by this law, to bring them. And they ſay, if any man ſeparateth his firſt fruits, but they rot, before they be brought to the houſe of the Lord, he muſt bring others inſtead thereof. For the not ſeething of a kid in his mothers milk, it is again enacted, Exod. 34.26. and Deut. 14.21, the word tranſlated kid is either kid or lamb, and the Septuagint render it, a lamb. By a kid in the mothers milk ſome underſtand a ſucking kid, which might not be offered or eaten, but this is without ground, and contraried, Chap. 22.30. and 1 Sam. 7.9. Some ſay, it is meant, that it ſhould not be ſodden together vvith the damme, as a beaſt and the young one muſt not be killed both in a day, Levit. 22. nor a bird taken with her young, Deut. 22. but it is not ſaid, Thou ſhalt not ſeeth a kid and the mother together, but in the mothers milk. And therefore the cuſtome of ſome Heathen people is doubtleſſe aimed at, and ſome Hebrevvs ſay, that the Iſhmaelites uſe thus for daintineſſe to ſeeth a kid in the dams milk at this day. Wherefore the Iſraelites, who were a people ſeparated from them muſt not, as in other meats which they uſed, ſo not in this communicate with them. The Chaldee Paraphraſt rendereth it, Thou ſhalt not eat fleſh with milk: ſo likewiſe the Targum Hieroſol. upon Exod. 34.26. expoundeth it, ſaying, It is not lawfull to eat or ſeeth fleſh and milk together, and by the Talmudiſts it is therefore taught; It is unlawfull to ſeeth fleſh and milk together, or being ſodden ſo, to eat it or to make profit of it, but it muſt be buried. But the ſeething of the fleſh of a kid onely and his dammes milk together is forbidden, not of other fleſh and milk, unleſſe by one kinde we ſhall underſtand all. Saint Auguſtine thinketh, that this precept is altogether myſticall, it being hereby ſignified, that the lamb Chriſt Jeſus ſhould not be ſodden with the fire of his paſſions in his infancy, when Herod ſought to ſlay him, which danger towards him then is alſo hereby intimated: or that he ſhould be boiled with ſufferings in the moneth after his being conceived, that is in April, for that was the time of his paſſion, when he was grown up, and the time of his conception March 25, and ſo the prohibition is to be underſtood, that the good Iſraelites ſhould not partake with the wicked, who by putting this lambe to death then, ſod him as it were in his mothers milk. I approve rather of the former myſtery; and for the literall meaning it is certainly againſt having communion with the Heathen in ſeething fleſh in milk and eating it, as in other meats, becauſe the prohibition againſt this is added to that againſt them, Deut. 14.21 In the Scholaſticall hiſtory it is ſaid, that any thing brought forth by carnall generation, muſt not be eaten with milk, or that which cometh of milk, viz. cheeſe or butter, which is ſo appointed, becauſe birds that come of egges were uſually ſodden in milk and eaten with milk: ſo the Hebrews, ſaith Comeſtor. But to let that paſſe under this, many vices were Symbolically forbidden. As 1 Cruelty, becauſe it is a cruell thing to ſeeth a kid in that wherewith it was nouriſhed; to turn that to the deſtruction which gave life unto it. For he that is cruel to beaſts, is oft-times cruell to men alſo, as Domitian, who according to Suetonius, firſt began with killing flies moſt cruelly; and therefore amongſt the Athenians, a boy that plucked out the eyes of Crowes was cenſured for it by the Judges. 2 Covetouſneſſe, which is not to be content with that which may ſuffice, but to deſire more ſtill, both milk and kid and all. 3 Ingratitude, which is not to be ſatisfied with one benefit, but to exact upon a Benefactour for all. 4 Guloſity and intemperance, by deviſing this new way of preparing meat to pleaſe the palate the more.

Simlerus.

Maimony Treatiſe of Fruits.

Chaldee Paraphraſt. Targ. Hieroſol. Maimony Treatiſe of forbidden Meats, Chap. 9. Auguſt. quæſt. 90. in Exod.

Simlerus.

Behold, I ſend an Angel to keep thee in the way, &c. Cajetan by an Angel here underſtandeth Moſes, but this cannot be, becauſe he brought them not into the promiſed land, as it is ſaid, this Angel ſhould do; neither can Joſuah be underſtood, Verſe 20. Cajetan.

2 Cor.5.19. God was in Chriſt. John 10.38. He is in the Father, and his name is Jehovah. Jer.23.6.

underſtood, becauſe it was not in him to puniſh them or defend them, but Rabanus will have Joſuah meant, who had alſo the name Jeſus in him. By an Angel here the ſonne of God is commonly underſtood, becauſe it is ſaid, *v.*21. My name is in him, that is, to him belongeth the Name יהוה, as to me, for he ſaith not, I will put my name in him, as it is ſaid of the Temple, but, my name is in him, and obedience to him is urged, and if he be provoked, puniſhments are threatened from him. And to ſhew, that Chriſt was this Angel who led them, and was provoked by them, it is ſaid, 1 *Cor.*10.9. that they tempted him in the wilderneſſe, and Rabanus allegorically underſtandeth Chriſt by him.

Verſe 21.

R. Menahem.

Rab. Menahem upon this place, out of other ancient Rabbins teacheth, that by this word, I ſend, is ſet forth the property of mercies, and this Angel is the Redeemer, who did keep their fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and ſhould likewiſe keep them, their children. For the Nations which he ſhould cut off, the Amorites, Hittites, &c. ſee before, Geneſis 15. and Gen. 10.6,7.

Verſe 23.

Verſe 24.

Thou ſhalt not bow down to their gods, nor ſerve them, nor do after their works, &c. This is often given in charge, as a thing to which God knew they would be moſt prone, and they muſt not onely not worſhip Idols, but break them down, and aboliſh all monuments of idolatry, *Deut.*12.2,3. *Deut.*7.5. Numb. 33.52. Hereupon the Hebrew Canon ſaith, We are commanded both in the land of Iſrael, and in all places which we ſubdue, to deſtroy idolatry and the ſervices thereof, and whatſoever is made for the ſame.

Maimony Treatiſe of Idolatry, *Chap.*7. *Sect.*1.

Verſe 25.

But ye ſhall worſhip the Lord your God, and he ſhall bleſſe thy bread, and thy water, &c. By bread and water, underſtand generally meat and drink, and ſo the Chaldee rendereth it. And herein God bleſſeth us, not onely by ſending them, but by making them wholeſome and nutritive, when we have but a little; but to ſuch as ſerve God it is meant here that they ſhould abound. Moreover, freedome from bodily infirmities, increaſe of poſterity, length of dayes, terrour to enemies are promiſed.

Verſe 26.

Verſe 27.

Verſe 28.

And I will ſend hornets to expell the Hivites, Canaanites and Hittites. How this was fulfilled, ſee Joſuah 24.12. as it is alſo promiſed, *Deut.*7.20. In Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory, when the Perſians beſieged Niſibis, James being Biſhop thereof prayed, and flies and gnats were ſent in ſuch abundance againſt the Perſians, that they drove them away, and flies were likewiſe ſent before againſt Egypt. And it may be, ſaith Simlerus, that three Nations onely are named here, becauſe they onely were ſubdued by theſe animalcula, ſee Joſ. 24.12.

Simlerus.

Verſe 29.

I will not drive them out in one year, leſt there be a deſolation, and the beaſts of the field be multiplied againſt thee, &c. The people of Iſrael, although they were exceeding many, yet were not enough to fill all that land, wherefore the inhabitants muſt be expelled by degrees: Auguſt. Queſt. 17. Judic. But why ſhould this be a reaſon, Leſt the beaſts be multiplied againſt thee? could not God as eaſily expell the beaſts as men? By beaſts were figured out ſinnes increaſing for want of warre. Why they were not brought till now againſt them, a reaſon is rendered, *Gen.*15. The iniquities of the Amorites are not yet full, and why after this they were deferred 40 years, *Numb.*14. they murmured through unbelief, and therefore were kept in the wilderneſſe till they were conſumed, all from 20 years old and upward. But when after that time this promiſe was fulfilled, they expelled not all the old inhabitants in a year, no nor in all the dayes of Joſuah, as appeareth, Joſ 13.1. and *Joſ.*23.4,5. nor in the time of the Judges ſucceeding him, till the dayes of David and Solomon.

Verſe 31.

Then was this fulfilled, which followeth, *v.*31. I will ſet thy bound from the Red-ſea to the ſea of the Philiſtines, and from the wilderneſſe to the river, ſee 1 Kings 4. And of this ſlow coming to inherit all, their ſinnes were the cauſe. Of theſe bounds and the performance of this promiſe, ſee before, *Gen.*15.18.

Verſe 32.

Thou ſhalt make no league with them, they ſhall not dwell in thy land, &c. This charge is given, becauſe the Canaanites were a people appointed ſpecially to deſtruction.

deſtruction, but becauſe the reaſon rendered is, Leſt they make thee ſin againſt me by worshipping their gods. Here is a plain ground againſt leagues with people that are idolaters, that is, leagues of mutuall fighting for one another, and againſt the enemies of one another, and here is a ground againſt ſuffering idolaters to dwell in our land: for to us there is the ſame danger, that there was to them. When Jehoshaphat linked himſelf with Ahab, he is reproved, 2 Chron. 19. and Amaziah having hired Iſraelites, idolaters is commanded to ſend them away, 2 Chron. 25.6. And the Prophets condemn leagues not onely with the Canaanites, but alſo with the Egyptians and Aſſyrians. Yet for traffick and commerce a league may be made with ſuch, and being made anciently, it muſt be kept for the oaths ſake, as with the Gibeonites, but for ſuch leagues we muſt have a care that we do nothing againſt God. Eſay 30 31. Ho. 8.12.

The Allegory made by Rabanus here I will not omit. As Joshuah brought the children of Iſrael into Canaan, ſo Jeſus bringeth us to the heavenly Canaan, and giveth it before we come actually to poſſeſſe it. And as they expelled ſeven Nations, ſo we by grace expel ſeven, that is, all manner of ſin out of our hearts, not ſuffering them to dwell any more there, but for vice, vertue cometh in place; for luſt chaſtity, for hatred love, &c. And as thoſe ſeven Nations being the poſterity of Ham, had, as tradition ſaith, expelled the poſterity of Shem from thence dwelling in their room, but were now expelled again by the Iſraelites, who came of Shem; ſo vices intruding themſelves in the room of vertues, when Adam fell, are, when the grace of Chriſt cometh, expelled. But not all at once, ſome remaining ſtill for our exerciſe, leſt by want of exerciſe we ſhould fall into the greater ruine of ſinnes. And the bounds of the Church are from the Red-ſea, that is, the Jews, to the deſert, that is, the Gentiles. Rabanus. Ferus.

CHAP. XXIV.

AND he ſaid to Moſes, Come up to the Lord, thou and Aaron and Nadab and Abihu, and the 70 Elders, &c. Nadab and Abihu were the two ſonnes of Aaron, who afterwards for offering with ſtrange fire were deſtroyed, Levit. 10.1. But who the 70 Elders were may be doubted, becauſe the great Synedrion or body of Judges and Officers ſet over the people, ſeemeth not to have been conſtituted till afterwards, Numb. 11.16. But it is not ſaid, that they were then firſt appointed, but then God put his Spirit upon them, they being appointed before by the Counſel of Jethro, Exod. 18. whereas it may be gathered from that place, that the Rulers then appointed were many more, becauſe they were over thouſands, hundreds, fifties, and tens, and the people were 600000; It is eaſily anſvvered, that the chief of theſe onely are meant, viz. the Rulers over thouſands, whereof there were ſix over a Tribe, each one being over 8 or 9000, vvho together make 72, but for the rotundity of the number called the 70, and the rather in remembrance of the number of 70 ſouls, which was all their company vvhen they came down into Egypt, but from ſo fevv they vvere novv thus mightily increaſed. Theſe vvith Aaron and his tvvo ſonnes muſt come up to the Mount, but not to the dark cloud vvhere God appeared, but to ſtand and vvorſhip afar off, and the people muſt not come upon the Mount at all, and Moſes onely muſt enter into the cloud to ſpeak vvith God. The 70 Elders vvere allovved to come ſo far, as to ſee the glory of God, v. 9. but Moſes alone approacheth neerer, v. 18. Some, ſaith Simlerus, think this to have been done before, vvhen Moſes received the lavvs of the three former Chapters, and to be related here by an Hyſteron Proteron, ſo Ferus calleth this the epilogue of that vvhich vvas done, Chap. 19. ſetting dovvn in vvhat order they vvere placed, vvhen God gave his lavves; but Simlerus thinketh rather, that this vvas another calling of Moſes and the Elders to come up about the inſtructions touching the Tabernacle. I ſubſcribe ra- Verſe 1, 2. Queſt. Simlerus. Ferus.

ther to Ferus, becauſe at the Lords firſt coming down upon the mount, the order how the Prieſts, and Elders, and the People were placed, is not particularly recounted, and yet the Prieſts coming neer is ſpoken of, *verſ.*22.*ch.*19. and therefore what was then wanting is here ſupplied.

And thus theſe words agree beſt with that which followeth, *verſ.*3. Moſes came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all his judgements, whereas between the aſſigning of the place to the Prieſts, Elders and People, and this, nothing was done, wherefore thoſe words may better be read, *The Lord had ſaid to Moſes, verſ.*1. that is, before the giving of the Judicials, and the giving of them being now ended, he came and told them to the people. In that it is ſaid, He ſaid to Moſes, Come up to the Lord, Ferus noteth more perſons in the Trinity implied, he, that is, God the Son ſaid, Go up to God the Father. In that Moſes onely entereth the cloud, but others are ſet further off, yet ſome neerer then others: it is not amiſſe obſerved, that amongſt men there are divers degrees of the knowledge of God, ſo Nazianzen: and every one muſt conſider the meaſure of his own underſtanding, and not aſpire as one more enlightened, ſo Rabanus, meaning doubtleſſe aſpiring after the office of teaching, when his knowledge is not ſufficient for it. For he putteth, ſaith he, his foot upon a precipice, that doth not diſcreetly attend to the limit of his meaſures. But more to the purpoſe, they that ſay, The Law perfectly ſetting forth the will of God, and ſo coming cloſe to God is typefied in Moſes, and by the Elders, Prieſts and People, ſuch as are under the Law, who are brought towards God hereby, and ſome neerer then others, yet none have enterance hereby given them, where he is, for this is onely by Evangelicall Grace. See *Heb.*10.19,22. 1.18,22. The Elders were brought hither, that they might be witneſſes of the Divine Glory to the reſt of the people, to move them to the more reverence.

Nazianzen.

Rabanus Maurus.
In præcipitium pedem ponit, qui menſuræ ſuæ limitem diſcrete non attendit.
Simlerus.
Ainſworth.

Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.

Then Moſes came and declared all the forementioned laws unto the people, and they promiſed all due obedience, and Moſes wrote them in a book, and built an altar under the mount, and ſent young men to offer burnt-offerings and ſacrifices of peace, and about the altar he ſet up twelve pillars, according to the number of their tribes.

Verſe 5.

Scholaſt.hiſtor.

By theſe twelve pillars haply, ſaith the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, twelve Altars are to be underſtood, or rather an Altar conſiſting of twelve ſtones, in each of which the name of a Tribe was written, and the young men ſent to do ſacrifice, were Nadab and Abihu, whom God meant to make his prieſts. But that Expoſition is better, whereby the Altar is expounded to be one ſet up, to ſet forth God on the one part, and the twelve pillars to be twelve ſtones, as alſo the Septuagint render it, to repreſent the people on the other part, becauſe here was a Covenant entered into by the people with God, and therefore the pillars are ſpoken of, as ſet up by themſelves, and that ſtones were uſed for pillars, ſee *Gen.*28.18,22. *chap.*31.45. *chap.*35.14. And the young men were ſome of the firſt-born, who were then the Prieſts of God till the Levites were appointed. and therefore the Chaldee rendereth it, The firſt-born of the children of Iſrael. Here were all things pertaining to a Teſtament and the ratification thereof, ſaith Ferus, the Teſtatour, the heirs, the legacies, the writing, witneſſes and confirmation by death. For God was the Teſtatour, Iſrael the Heir, the land of Canaan the Legacie, the Book now made by Moſes the Writing, the Altar and Pillars the Witneſſes, and becauſe God the Teſtatour is immortall, a Sacrifice is killed. And thus likewiſe is it with the New Teſtament. For the words declared and written by Moſes, both the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, and Ainſworth, and Rabanus ſay, that the Judiciall Laws onely are meant, becauſe the Morall were written in Tables of ſtone. But Simlerus ſaith, that ſome are of opinion, that all the words from the beginning of Geneſis hitherto were now written, and he thinketh, that from the beginning of the twentieth Chapter of this Book hitherto, all was written. And this is moſt probable, becauſe when this is recorded, *Heb.*9.19. it is ſaid, Every precept, according to the Law. As for the writing of the Ainſworth.

Calvin.
Simlerus.
Ferus.

Simlerus.

the Morall Law in the Tables of ſtone after this, with Gods own hand, the other Lavvs vvere alſo appointed to be vvritten by Moſes again, *Exod.*34.27. and therefore if from the after vvriting it vvould follovv, that the Morall Law was not written now, it will likewiſe follow, that neither were the Judicials written at this time; wherefore it is to be held, that all was now written, and this book was the Teſtament ſo much celebrated, Ezech. 16. *Pſal.*73. *Pſal.*77. *Pſal.*24. *Dan.*3, &c. becauſe if the Judicials onely had been written, and not the Morals, the people ſhould have been moſt ſolemnly bound to the obſervance of theſe and not of them, which is abſurd. Hovv this paſſage mentioned, *Heb.*9.19. may be reconciled with the preſent relation, ſee my Expoſition upon that place.

And Moſes took half the blood, and put it in baſins, and half he ſprinkled upon the altar. Verſ.8. And he took of the blood, and ſprinkled it on the people. This diviſion and ſprinkling of the blood was made, ſaith Ferus, to confirm the Covenant on both parts, half vvas ſprinkled upon the Altar for God, becauſe he is a Spirit, and cannot be ſprinkled, and half upon the people: this being as much in effect, ſaith the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, as if he had ſaid, So let his blood be ſhed, and him periſh, that keepeth not, and doth not according to this Covenant. And to the ſame end Joſhuah and Samuel aftervvards in ratifying the Covenant took vvater and poured it out, to ſhevv, that as water being poured out, nothing remained in the veſſell; ſo they that kept not the Covenant ſhould periſh utterly, and all their poſterity, none of them being let to remain; and this cuſtom of confirming a Covenant vvith blood vvas uſed anciently by the Heathen, an hog being ſlain, ſee before, *Gen.*15. Myſtically the ſanctification of our Altar, Chriſt Jeſus, and of us his people by his blood was hereby ſet forth, as the Altar and people were novv alſo by this blood ſanctified, as is taught, *Heb.*9.18,23, &c. and *verſ.*13,14. alſo Hebr. 10.10. The blood of Chriſt doth both ratifie the Covenant of the New Teſtament, and ſanctifie all things.

Verſe 6.
Verſe 7.
Verſe 8.
Ferus.
Scholaſt. hiſt.
Rabanus. Simlerus, &c.

Then went up Moſes and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the ſeventy Elders, and they ſaw the God of Iſrael, and there was under his feet as it were, a paved work of Saphor ſtone, and as the body of Heaven in his cleerneſſe. After the Covenant betvvixt God and the people thus ratified, to purchaſe more authority to Moſes, and to confirm the people in their obedience, this is further done, as vvas appointed, *verſ.*1. They ſaw God, that is, as they vvere capable, ſome ſigne of his glory, for no man ſhall ſee God and live; and Moſes after this deſireth it, as a ſpeciall favour, that God vvould ſhevv him his face, vvhich is not granted, whereby we may gather, that neither he nor they vvith him did novv ſee any more, but as it were a repreſentation of the inferiour parts of his Glory: and therefore the Septuagint to expreſſe this read it, They ſaw the place where God ſtood; and the Chaldee, They ſaw the glory of God. But it will be objected, they are ſaid to have ſeen God, and Moſes is ſaid afterwards to have talked with God face to face, and of other holy perſons it is ſaid, that they feared, becauſe they had ſeen God, they ſhould die, as Manoah. Sol. Hereby is meant nothing elſe, but that they ſaw ſome ſimilitude repreſenting his Glory in ſome ſort, and that appearance was called God, becauſe therein the Divine Glory was in ſome ſort ſeen. God indeed, ſaith Auguſtine, appeared unto them, but not in his own nature, but onely in what ſhape he pleaſed, they ſavv, but vvhat his vvill choſe, not vvhat nature formed; men ſavv him, vvhen he vvould in that ſhape vvherein he would, not in his nature, vvherein he lay hid in himſelf even vvhen he appeared: For the Divinity was not turned into theſe forms, vvhen it aſſumed them, but appeared under them. And this very appearing in divers forms to the Ancients, ſhewed that God vvas never ſeen of them, as he is, ſeeing the nature of God is moſt ſimple, one onely and immutable. Yet God vvas truly ſeen in Chriſt, in vvhom the nature of man vvas taken into the unity of the God-head in perſon, ſo that he whom the Apoſtles ſavv, and vve ſhall ſee, is the true God,

Verſe 9.
Verſe 10.
Exod.33.20. John 1.18. 1 Tim.6.16.
Object. Judg.13. Auguſt. Deus illis apparuit, non tamen ſuâ naturâ, ſed quâ ſpecie voluit, multi viderunt, ſed quod voluntas elegit, non quod natura formavit, viderunt eum homines quando voluit, in ſpecie, quâ voluit, non in natura, quâ in ſemetipſo etiam cùm videretur, latuit, &c.

and our Lord. Again, we can ſee nothing with our bodily eyes but a bodily ſubſtance, ſuch as cannot be, for then he ſhould not be infinite, he is a Spirit, whoſe Image is the inner man renued, which cannot be ſeen. Therefore when Moſes is ſaid to have talked with him face to face, it is not to be underſtood any otherwiſe, but in oppoſition to the revelations made to other Prophets; for to him things were revealed more plainly, which perteined to God, to others more obſcurely, and to be more familiarly acquainted vvith the vvill of God is to talk vvith him as it vvere face to face. In that ſo glorious an appearance vvas under his feet, vve may gather hovv infinitely glorious the Lord is. And more particularly, that the earth ſet forth by a Saphir ſtone, and the Heaven by the ſimilitude of the cleerneſſe of Heaven are his footſtool, ſo Ferus, who alſo ſaith, that the children of Iſrael were ſet forth by the Saphir, whoſe ſervitude of body in Egypt was changed into liberty of ſpirit, but chiefly the ſolidity, purity, and altitude of that Kingdom was ſignified, wherein it is promiſed that we ſhall ſee God. And of this laſt Auguſtine ſpeaketh alſo, and it was doubtleſſe the chief thing intended in this apparition.

Calvin.
Ferus.
Auguſt. quæſt. 102. in Exod.

Verſe 11. And whereas it followeth, Upon the Nobles of the children of Iſrael he laid not his hand, and they ſaw God, and did eat and drink; he ſaith, De Electis Iſrael non diſſonuit nec unus, & apparuerunt in loco Dei, & manducaverunt, &c. By the Elect being meant theſe Elders repreſenting the Elect, and Moſes, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu ſetting forth the four parts of the world, becauſe they are four, &c. which I ſpare to adde, becauſe both the reading and Allegories made here by him paſſe my underſtanding. To return again to the Saphir, the Hebrew is brick of Saphir, that is, Saphir hewed and ſquared like brick, wherewith it ſeemed to be paved under his feet: thus alſo the Septuagint read it. The Saphir is a very precious tranſparent ſtone, of the colour of the skie, and the form of it like brick might aptly remember them of their paſt ſervitude, when they wrought in brick, and foreſhew that the foundation of Gods Church, to be vvhich they vvere novv called, ſhould be in Saphirs, *Eſa.*54.11. and that the poliſhing of the Saints ſhould be vvith Saphirs, and that the throne of God vvas novv to their comfort erected amongſt them, vvherefore the Heaven in the cleerneſſe is alſo ſpoken of, becauſe the cleer Heaven ſignifieth Gods favour, and the cloudy his diſpleaſure, *Jer.*4.23,28. *Zeph.*1.15. Thus Ainſworth.

Ainſw orth.
Lament.4.7.

For Nobles, ſome read Princes, and ſome Select, vvith Auguſtine; the Vulgar Latine, Super eos qui procul receſſerunt, whereupon the Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, Neither laid he his hand upon them that were far off in the tents, that is, he hid not himſelf, but they ſeeing the Majeſty of the Lord, although not him, did joyfully eat and drink, and feaſt. But the word אצל ſignifieth, nigh to, and of this cometh אלוף, vvhich is here uſed, ſignifying Great, Honourable, or Noble, and to lay the hand, vvhen it is ſpoken of God, is commonly put for ſtriking or puniſhing, as *Nehem.*13.21. Pſal. 55.21. So the Chaldee, They had no hurt; and the Septuagint, Not one of them was diſmayed. Theſe choſen men then that came up vvith Moſes are meant, and not the common ſort left behinde, they coming not through temerity, but by Gods call, had no hurt or terrour, but rejoyced as if they had eaten and drunk, ſaith the Chaldee Paraphraſt. And in the book called, Elle ſhemoth rabbah, They fed their eyes with the brightneſſe of the Divine Majeſty, and in this ſenſe Chriſt ſpeaketh of eating and drinking at his Table in his Kingdom. This, that God ſmote not theſe men who ſaw his glory, is noted, becauſe it vvas a common received opinion, that vvhoſo did ſee God ſhould die, and indeed vvhen the mountains melt before him, vvhat is man that he ſhould be able to ſtand? It was therefore a ſingular favour that theſe had no hurt, but lived and were well; to expreſſe which it is ſaid, that they did eat and drink. Calvin thinketh, that their eating part of the Sacrifice before ſpoken of with joy in feaſting, according to the manner, is here meant.

Scholaſt. biſtor.
Chaldee Paraphraſt. Luke 22.30.
Calvin.

Ferus

Ferus is for both the forementioned Expoſitions, as ſound men and unhurt they were able to eat and drink, and were ſo farre from being affrighted at this heavenly viſion, that they had joy thereof, as if they had been at a feaſt. Simlerus mentioneth an Expoſition of ſome, and ſo doth Calvin alſo before him, that by Gods not laying his hand upon the Princes is meant, that he beſtowed not ſuch a meaſure of his Spirit, as to ſuſtein them without food, as he did upon Moſes, to expreſſe which it is ſaid, that they ate and drunk, whereas Moſes did not in 40 dayes, Chap. 34.28. But this is farre fetcht, and the phraſe is not uſed any where elſe in this ſenſe; the plain meaning, as I take it, is that Aaron and the reſt of the chief, when they had ſeen this glorious viſion, went back again alive, and ate and drank, as in times paſt, there comming no hurt unto them hereby. For they are immediately appointed, when the people had any matter to hear it, *v.*14. which could not be, unleſſe they returned amongſt them, who might not come but to the foot of the Mount, and how elſe could Aaron have made them that Idol the molten Calf in the abſence of Moſes? Chap. 32.

Ferus.

Simlerus.

And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Come up into the Mount, and be there, &c. v.12. And Moſes roſe up, and his miniſter Joſuah and he went up. Here Joſuah not hitherto ſpoken of is ſaid to have gone up with Moſes, but by and by he is hidden again, and it is not ſaid that Moſes with him went up, but Moſes went up; but when Moſes had received the two tables, he appeared with him again, *Chap.*32.17. Saint Auguſtine both inquireth what may be meant hereby? and anſwereth, that Joſuah typified Jeſus, or the New Teſtament, which was hidden, as it were, when the old was made, but afterwards appeared to ſuch as underſtand, becauſe in the figures of the law Jeſus is found to have been ſet forth. The Scholaſticall hiſtory ſaith, that Joſuah went up with Moſes, but was again ſent down to a plain place, there to wait for the comming back of Moſes. The name Joſuah was not now given to this man, but afterwards, *Numb.*13.16. and therefore he being called ſo here by a Prolepſis, it is probable that there is this myſtery in it; ſee alſo the ſame name uſed once before, *Chap.*17.9. For Jeſus, as Ioſhuah, was as miniſter to Moſes, becauſe he ſerved in obeying his Law and fulfilling it, and he was with him, becauſe taught and figured out by him divers wayes, for Moſes, ſaith he, ſpake of me: ſo Rabanus. Ferus ſaith, that Jeſus was his miniſter alſo, becauſe he followed him, and theſe two went up to receive, the one the Old Teſtament, the other the New: for both were given in a mount, ſee Math. 5. to ſhew the altitude both of precepts and promiſes. Beda ſaith that Moſes received the Law upon the top of the Mount, which he was to teach below to the people, and Jeſus taught upon a mount, that both Law and Goſpel might be reverenced as divine and ſublime: but the law was given to Moſes alone, but the precepts of the Goſpel to many, becauſe the Law was then given to one people onely, but the Goſpel was to be preached to all Nations, which was alſo ſignified by the Spirits coming down in fiery tongues, and inabling to ſpeak in all languages. And he addeth, that God ſaith, He will give him the Law in Tables of ſtone, which he ſhould teach to the people, to ſhew, that nothing elſe is to be taught but what the Lord hath taught and commanded to be obſerved, and in the obſervation whereof he would have us come to eternall life. And theſe lawes were written in tables of ſtone, becauſe in the examples of the faithful ſtrong in their hearts by faith, they are propounded to us to be imitated. Calvin thinketh, that Ioſhuah was with Moſes, till the ſeventh day, but then Moſes went alone into the cloud, *v.*16,17. and for the writing in tables of ſtone, that the perpetuity of this Covenant was ſet forth hereby, objecting againſt that of Auguſtine, who ſaith, that the law was written with Gods finger in tables of ſtone, to ſhew, that by the Spirit the law is written in the heart, becauſe theſe tables were broken, but the grace of regeneration by the Spirit continueth to the end. But what if we ſhall ſay, that mans heart is ſet forth, as he was by creation by theſe firſt tables, and by the next, as he is by

Verſe 12,13

*Auguſt. in Exod. quæſt.*103.

Scholaſt. hiſtor. Matth.5.17.

John 5.46.

Rabanus Maurus.

Ferus.

Beda.

Acts 2.

Quia in cordibus electorum fide fortibus, fixâ intentione cuſtodienda firmavit, quorum exempla cùm nobis imitanda proponit, quaſi ſcripta in lapide ſtatuto ſuæ legis oſtendit.

Calvin.

by corruption, till by the Spirit the lavv is vvritten in his heart again?

Verſe 14. And he ſaid to the Elders, Tarry ye here, &c. He meaneth not, as Calvin vvell noteth, and as I touched before, that they ſhould keep fixed to that place, but ſtay aloof from the top of the mount, to which he muſt go, becauſe he committeth the care of the people to them, Aaron and Hur in his abſence. Ferus. Who this Hur vvas, ſee before, Exod. 17.10. See, ſaith Ferus, here the care of Moſes, although he vvere called avvay to talk vvith God, yet even in this time he neglecteth not the people, to the ſhame of thoſe that are careleſſe. And Aaron, ſaith he, figureth out Chriſt, and Hur ſignifying fire, the Holy Ghoſt, to vvhom vve muſt alvvayes reſort for direction and aſſiſtance in our need.

Verſe 15,16 And Moſes went up into the Mount, and the cloud covered the Mount, &c. And the ſeventh day he called unto Moſes. God is as a conſuming fire, and therefore Moſes could not indure his preſence without a cloud interpoſed; ſo vvhen Matth. 17.5. Chriſt vvas transfigured upon the mount, a cloud overſhadovved the Apoſtles, and he ſtayed ſix dayes before he vvas called, to ſhevv, that vve muſt vvait the Lords leaſure, and that upon the ſeventh day, that is, the time of the heavenly Sabbath, we ſhall all come and be where the Lord is, and when he pleaſeth and not before, we ſhall have his hidden myſteries revealed unto us.

Verſe 17. And the ſight of the glory of the Lord was as a devouring fire in the top of the Mount in the ſight of the children of Iſrael. By the appearance of fire was ſhewed the ſanctity and purity of the Lord, before whom none iniquity can ſtand Simlerus. any more then ſtubble before the fire; and all Iſrael ſaw this, that they might be the more deterred from ſinning againſt his lavves, Heb. 12.28.

Verſe 18. And Moſes was in the mount 40 days and 40 nights All this time he faſted, Deut. 9.9. and Elias likevviſe, 1 King. 19.8. that in them it might appear, that Chriſt vvas a true man, although he vvent thus long vvithout eating or drinking. Novv Moſes proved in himſelf vvhat vvas aftervvards ſaid, That man liveth not by bread onely, but by every vvord that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, ſeeing he vvas all this time ſuſteined by the vvords of God only, vvhereupon he fed as it vvere upon Nectar and Ambroſia.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſe 2. SPeak to the children of Iſrael, that they bring me an offering of every man that bringeth it willingly with his heart. Verſe 3. And this is the offering which ye Verſe 3. ſhall take of them, gold, ſilver and braſſe, &c.

This of the order taken by the Lord for the building of the Tabernacle is placed by Calvin next unto the 20 Chapter, becauſe, ſaith he, the Tabernacle was ſet up before the giving of the Tables of ſtone with the Commandements written therein, as appeareth, Chap. 33. But although it were ſo, I ſee no reaſon to invert the order followed by Moſes, becauſe howſoever theſe lawes were not given in writing till the Tabernacle finiſhed, that is, written with Gods own hand, yet they might be written and read over together with the judicials by Moſes immediately after the Lords firſt delivering of them; Chap. 24.4. The word tranſlated, offering, is Theruma, an elevation ſo called, becauſe that which was offered to God, was wont to be lifted up on high, Exod. 29.27. the Septuagint render it, firſt-fruits, the Chaldee a ſeparation, and properly it may be turned, an heave-offering, but the word is alſo taken for any thing ſeparated and given unto God, Ezech 48.8,9,10,20.

Aſſyrth. Touching the metals, braſſe, ſilver and gold, they were the pureſt and the moſt glorious of any growing in the bowels of the earth, and hereby is ſet forth the glory of the Church under the Goſpel, Eſa. 60.17. For braſſe I will bring gold; for iron, ſilver; and for wood, braſſe. And therefore the Church to come with her head Chriſt, was certainly figured out by this Tabernacle, and the the materials thereof. For Chriſt, ſaith Ferus, was not then revealed in the fleſh, and yet by him alone ſalvation was to be atteined, and therefore ſacred Rites were then ordained to ſhadow him out, and to declare that darkly touching him, which is now plainly preached: ſo that theſe Rites were as publick ſermons and promiſes of him, whereby faith might be conceived, nouriſhed and confirmed. That theſe Kings were figurative, appeareth; becauſe it was ſaid to Moſes, According to that pattern which I ſhall ſhew unto thee, and again, Make all according to the pattern which was ſhewed thee in the Mount, which pattern was not earthly, but heavenly, Chriſt and his Church and Goſpel; and accordingly Saint Paul ſpeaketh of all things about the Tabernacle as figurative, *Heb.*8.5. God then ſhewed Moſes heavenly things before that he made earthly, and he ſhewed them not by externall viſion, but ſpeaking familiarly to him, as one friend ſpeaketh to another; and therefore he could not but as to a friend impart to him his chief ſecret by man to be known, viz. the future heavenly Prieſthood of his ſonne Chriſt. And as God chiefly reſpected the Meſſiah to come in preſcribing this Tabernacle and ſervice; ſo he would 2 by outward glorious things draw the mindes of a rude people to his ſervice. 3 Becauſe they were prone to idolatry, wherein there was outward pompe, he would have externall glorious things uſed in his ſervice, that hereby being taken up they might be kept from that. Laſtly, he would have an offering from them, when as he needed none of their offerings, to ſhew, that although the heart be the thing which God onely regardeth in his ſervice; yet becauſe we have all outward things from him alſo, he will be ſerved even hereby in acknowledgement, that he is the fountain from which they all flow. To come more particularly now to the things which they muſt offer; gold, ſilver and braſſe are ſpoken of in divers places, to ſignifie excellencies in divers men and things, as *Lament.*4.2. *Dan.*2.32, 38,39. *Revel.*1.20. *Pſal.*12.7. 19.10. *Prov.*8.19. *Ezech.*40.3. *Zach.*4.12. 6.1. By gold, ſaith Rabanus, here is figured out, wiſdome, in the brightneſſe whereof he ſhineth that hath a right faith, and ſo he maketh an acceptable offering to God, and we offer ſilver, when confeſſion is made with the mouth to ſalvation; and braſſe, when we divulge the ſame faith by publick preaching.

Ferus.

Rab. Maurus.

And blue, purple and ſkarlet, fine linnen and Goats hair. 5 Rammes ſkins died red, &c. He offereth blue that lifteth up his heart to heaven, and purple that ſubjecteth his body to ſufferings, and ſkarlet which is twice died, that burneth with a double love in his heart, of God and his neighbour; and fine linnen, that feeleth the chaſtity of the fleſh; and Goats hair, that putteth on the garments of repentance and mourning; and Rammes ſkins, when the leaders of the Lords flock are baptized in their own blood for his ſake; and Badgers ſkinnes, that hope after death to have ſpirituall bodies in heaven; and Shittim-wood, that purging out the thick buſhes of ſins do ſerve the Lord onely with a pure ſoul and body. Oil for the lights is offered, when we ſhine in the fruits of charity. And ſpices, for anointing oil and for ſweet incenſe, when we diffuſe the example of our good life and deeds far and wide. And Onyx-ſtones and ſtones to be ſet in the Ephod, &c. vvhen we bear the rare vertues and miraculous works of the Saints in our hearts, ſet forth by the breſt-plate, and, as it were, upon our ſhoulders, to be ſeen by others, ſet forth by the Ephod, worne upon the ſhoulders. Thus Rabanus, but Origen maketh ſilver and precious ſtones, a type of preaching; braſſe, of patience; incorruptible wood, of incorruptible chaſtity; fine linnen, of virginity; ſkarlet, of the glory of confeſſion; purple, of the brightneſſe of charity; blew, of the hope of eternall life; and as the Church in generall, ſo he ſaith, every Chriſtian in particular is as the Tabernacle, and therefore ought to be adorned with theſe graces. It is to be noted, ſaith Rab. Menahem here, that no iron was amongſt the ſtuffe of the Tabernacle: and 1 *King.*6.7. no iron tool was heard, when Solomons Temple vvas built. But vvhat may hereby be ſignified, he ſaith not, onely

Verſe 4.

5.

6.

7.

*Origen. hom.*9. in Exod.

R. Menahem.

onely *Dan.*2.40. Iron is made a type of contrition and deſtruction under the fourth Monarchy, and 1 King. 8.51. the ſervitude of the children of Iſrael in Egypt is called the furnace of iron, ſo *Pſal.*107.10. iron is joyned to affliction. Wherefore it may be thought, that no iron is ſpoken of to ſhew, that thoſe hard times were now paſt, and ſhould be no more, if they would ſerve God before his Tabernacle, but they ſhould live proſperouſly and comfortably. Yet it is to be noted, that David prepared iron for the Temple for works of iron, 1 *Chron.*29.2. Touching the colours here ſpoken of, although it be not ſaid, what blew or purple or skarlet they ſhould bring, yet it ſeemeth by that of Saint *Paul, Heb.*9.10. where it is ſpoken of skarlet wool, that wool of all theſe colours is to be underſtood, ſo likewiſe the Rabbins, ſee *Maimony Treat. of the implem. of the Sanctuary, Chap.*8. *Sect.*12. The blew or sky-coloured was of great account, and uſed by Princes, and herewith they clothed their idols, and with purple, *Jerem.*10.9. Eſter 1.6. *Ezech.*23.6. The purple likevviſe vvas a precious colour, *Dan.*5.7. Eſter 8.15. it had the name from a ſhel-fiſh called a purple, being like to an oyſter, having a liquor in it, vvherevvith this colour is died. Skarlet in Hebrevv is תלעת-שני, ſo called, becauſe it was tvvice died, of the excellency of this colour, ſee *Jerem.*4.5. *Lament.*4.5. *Matth.*27.28.

Maimony. Scholaſt. hiſtor. calleth it Setam hyacinthini, purpureique coloris.

Simlerus.

Novv becauſe after theſe three colours, ſilk is ſpoken of, Simlerus thinketh that ſilk of all theſe colours is meant, but that is named as a diſtinct thing, and therefore I reſt rather in that vvhich hath been already ſaid. Yet there are that think the ſilk here named, or fine linnen, in Hebrevv called שש, to have been a ſilken cotton, vvhich grevv upon a certain ſhrub in Egypt, called Xylon or Goſſipion, vvhereof fine ſoft linnen ſtuffe vvas made, being much uſed by the Prieſts of Egypt, and this cloth they uſed to die into blevv, purple or skarlet, of this Pliny vvriteth, *lib.*19. chap 1. The Hebrevv Rabbins ſay, vvhat place ſoever ſpeaketh of שש or of bad, it is flax or byſſe. Maimony. And if vve underſtand theſe colours of vvool thus coloured, as vvas ſaid before, vve muſt underſtand it of that vvhich vvas very fine and pure, and ſo apt to make the richeſt cloaths. Theſe colours, ſaith Ainſworth, do well ſet forth the blood of Chriſt, becauſe blood ſometimes floweth out of the body in all theſe colours, and of purple in particular Homer ſpeaketh, ſaying, πορφύρεον θάνατον, and Virgil, Purpuream animam evomuit; and ſilk, ſaith he, here is a ſtuffe white, pure and bright, having the name byſſus, from whiteneſſe, and is uſed to ſignifie the graces and juſtifications of the Saints, Revel. 19.8,14. *Ezech.*16.10. For goats hair, Hebrew is עזים, onely ſignifying goats, but hair muſt neceſſarily be underſtood; and therefore it is ſupplied by the Septuagint, the uſe of this hair was to make a covering for the Tabernacle, *Chap.*26.7,13. and this, although a thing of little worth was appointed to be offered, to ſhew, that the poor as well as rich may have an intereſt in Gods Tabernacle, and bring ſomewhat to the building of it, and be accepted; for it is not the quantity of the gift which is reſpected, but the heart of the giver, the poor widow that caſt into the treaſury of the Sanctuary but two mites, is ſaid to have caſt in more then all the rich bringing great gifts.

Scholaſt. hiſtor. Eſt genus ligni Ægyptii molle & candidum. Plin.

Ainſworth.

*Homer. Iliad.*5. Virgil. Æneid. 9.

Ferus.

Luke 21.

Rammes skins red, ſaith the Scholaſticall Hiſtory, are called Parthian skins, becauſe they uſed to die them red, and firſt invented to put them into this colour; Badgers skins, theſe the Greek rendereth Hyacinth or blew skins, but the word Tachaſh here uſed ſignifieth a beaſt, of whoſe skin fine leather for ſhoes was made, ſaith Ainſworth, and is not named any where elſe, but Ezech. 16.10. and from hence cometh the German word Tachs, and the Latine Taxo a Badger: but there ſeemeth to be a difference, becauſe the badgers skin is not uſed for ſhoe-leather, and the Tachaſh here ſpoken of was held by the Jews to be a clean beaſt, which the badger is not, and therefore he readeth it, Tachaſh skinnes, the Rabbins underſtand a beaſt having many ſpots, called therefore by the Chaldee, Sas gona, gaudens coloribus: Theſe skinnes were for the upper covering of the Tabernacle, *Chap.*26.14. Shittim wood, this, ſaith the Scholaſt. hiſt.

Ainſworth.

the Scholaſticall hiſtory, is the wood of a tree like unto a white thorn in the leaves, and is moſt light, and never rotteth, neither is it combuſtible. The Septuagint render it aſepta, that never rotteth, it is thought to be a kinde of Cedar, of the Shittah-tree, ſee *Eſa.*41.19. where onely it is ſpoken of again, Sethim, ſaith the Scholaſticall hiſtory, is the name alſo of a mountain and of a Region. If it were a kinde of Cedar-wood, as is moſt probable, Solomons Temple was built of the ſame, and the Rabbins ſay, that the King, Chriſt ſhall build the houſe of the Sanctuary of fairer wood, even of Cedars taken out of Paradiſe. Oil for lights, and ſpices, &c. For Onyx ſtones, the Chaldee rendereth it, Beril; of the Onyx, ſee *Gen.*2.12. and of the Beril, Revel 21,19, 20. for, ſtones to be ſet in the Ephod, Hebr. is, מלאים filling ſtones, becauſe the hollow places in the gold upon the Ephod were filled herewith. Touching the myſtery of all theſe, Calvin alſo conſenteth, that by the Tabernacle the Church was figured out, and that the divers gifts offered ſhew the divers gifts required in divers for the building of the ſpirituall Church of Chriſt, and whereas ſome bring nothing but goats hair; others, who are greater, gold and ſilver and precious ſtones: this ſheweth, that as the moſt glorious and excellent, ſo the meaneſt gifts are uſefull, and for the edification of the Church, and therefore not to be contemned.

Scholaſt. hiſtor. Eſt leviſſ. lignum, éſtque imputribile & incremabile.

1 Kings 6. Targum in Cant. c.1.v.17.

Exod.28.17, 20 Calvin.

And they ſhall make me a ſanctuary, that I may dwell in the midſt of them. 9 After the likeneſſe of the tabernacle, that I ſhall ſhew thee, &c. There are four things, ſaith Ferus, then requiſite about the ſervice of God. 1 A place. 2 Veſſels. 3 Miniſters. 4 Sacrifices, and therefore the Lord doth accordingly appoint them all. Touching the place, a Tabernacle or ſanctuary muſt be made, that God might therein dwell amongſt them, that they might not need to come back to ſeek him in the mountain, ſaith Comeſtor. This of Gods dwelling amongſt them is promiſed, to ſtir them up with the more cheerfulneſſe to bring in their coſt. But when it is ſaid, That I may dwell amongſt them, nothing elſe is meant, but that they might have amongſt them, an outward Symbole or ſigne of Gods preſence, unto which reſorting to ſeek unto him, and to offer their ſervice, they might finde to their comfort, that they were not without his gracious preſence: to this effect Calvin. For God is infinite, and the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him, and therefore to ſpeak properly, he dwelleth not in any houſe made with hands, but onely is ſaid ſo to do, for the manifeſtation of his glory, and the revelation of his will there; and becauſe as a potent King in the midſt of them, he protected them whileſt they had his tabernacle with them, and worſhipped him rightly before it. And all things about it, and the Tabernacle it ſelf muſt be made according to the pattern ſhewed him by the Lord, to intimate, that in all the worſhip of God, and in all things pertaining to it, we muſt not follow our own inventions, but go according to the rule of Gods holy will.

Verſe 8,9.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Calvin.

And they ſhall make an ark of Shittim-wood, two cubits and an half ſhall be the length thereof, and a cubit and an half the breadth, &c. The word tranſlated Ark here is ארון, and an Ark Noah was bidden to make before for another uſe, expreſſed by the word תבה, but this was nothing elſe but a cheſt, and therefore the cheſt or coffin wherein the bones of Joſeph were put, is alſo called by the ſame name ארון, Gen. 50. ult. In Greek, as in other languages, there is but one word uſed to expreſſe that of Noah, Heb. 11.7. and this Heb. 9.4. but the Greek Tranſlation here hath it, the Ark of the Teſtimony. Of the matter whereof, viz. Shittim-wood, enough hath been ſaid already. For the length two cubits and an half, Joſephus ſaith, that a cubit was two palms, and ſo the length was five palms, and the breadth three, and ſo was the height. Ainſworth ſaith, that a cubit was ſix hand-breadths, or a foot and half, and ſo the length was 4 foot & an half, or a yard & a quarter, or if the cubit of the Sanctuary be underſtood, which is more likely, it was ſomewhat higher, & likewiſe we are to hold of the other dimenſions. See of cubits upon *Gen.*6.13.

Verſe 10.

Joſeph.

Ainſworth.

And thou ſhalt cover it with pure gold within and without, and ſhalt make upon it a crown of gold round about. The Septuagint, Golden wreathen waves round about, this vvas both for ornament, and to joyn cloſe above to the foreſaid corner. Tremelius rendereth it, Limbus aureus. The Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, Ad modum labii, quod in menſis & ſcacariis fit.

Verſe 11.

Tremelius. Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Verſe 12,13

Verſe 14,15. Maimony Treatiſe of the Inſtruments of the Sanctuary,

And thou ſhalt caſt four rings of gold for it, &c. Theſe four rings were to be faſtened to the four corners of the Ark, and into them four bars being put, it was carried hereby, and it is ſaid, that theſe bars ſhall not be removed from it. By theſe bars the Levites are appointed to bear the Ark, *Numb.*7.9. upon their ſhoulders, and it is commanded that they ſhould never be taken out of the rings, that they might alwayes be put in minde of their duty to bear it, and not for a time onely. The Hebrew Canons ſay, when they bare the Ark, they did it with their faces one towards another, their back-parts being all outward.

Verſe 16.

*And thou ſhalt put into the ark the teſtimony that I ſhall give thee. Heb.*9,4 This Teſtimony is ſaid to be the two Tables of the Covenant, that is, the two Tables wherein the ten Commandments were written, and the Covenant made by the people with God to ſerve and obey him, and his Covenant with them to be their God, and to bleſs them in all things, *Ch.*23.15,&c. *Chap.*24.3,4,&c. And for this name of the Covenant given hereunto, the Ark is called the Ark of the Covenant, *Numb.*10.33. and that the Covenant was written herein, ſee *Exod.*34.28. and for this name, *Deut.*9.9, 11,15. Theſe Tables were alſo called the Tables of the Teſtimony, *Exod.*31. 18. and the Commandements are the Teſtimony, becauſe if they ſhould not keep but ſinne againſt them, they ſhould be a teſtimony to the condemnation of a people ſo diſobedient; and for this name of Teſtimony given to the law, the Ark wherein it was put is called the Ark of the Teſtimony, Exod. 38.21. As here, ſo 1 King 8.9. it is ſaid, that nothing was in the Ark, ſaving the two tables, but *Heb.*9.4. a pot of Manna, and Aarons rod that budded are ſaid to have been there alſo. How this is to be reconciled, and what is ſignified by theſe things, ſee my Commentary upon that place. This placing of ſacred things in an Ark was imitated afterwards by the Heathen, for they carried the myſteries of their gods in coffers, as Apuleius ſaith, and Alb. Tibul. in whom there is ſuch a paſſage, Et levis occultis conſcia ciſta ſacris. And hitherto one of the four ſacred things appointed to be made, the Ark with the dimenſions and forme and barres thereof hath been ſet forth; now followeth the mercy-ſeat, the table of ſhew-bread and the golden Candleſtick, other diſtinct things about the Ark to the end of this chapter. But before I come to ſpeak of them, the myſtery of the Ark is to be declared. That this Ark was made for myſticall ſignification, all agree, and if any ſhould deny it, the authority of the Apoſtle approveth it. Yet Calvin will not have every particular thing myſtically and ſpiritually underſtood, but onely that ſo ſumptuous an Ark was made to lay up the teſtimony in, to ſhew the excellency thereof. But by this ſaying of the Apoſtle, *Heb.*9.5. Of which things we will not ſtand to ſpeak now particularly: it is plain, that every particular is to be ſpoken upon, and myſtically expounded. The Ark then was a type of Chriſt firſt and chiefly, *Heb.*8.2. *Chap.*9.11. John 2.19. and then of the Church in generall, Heb. 10.21. and in particular, *Heb.*3.6. 1 *Tim.*3.15. and laſtly, of every Chriſtian, 1 *Cor.*6.19. ſo Ainſworth. That touching Chriſt is excellently ſet forth by Ferus thus. The Ark did manifeſtly figure out Chriſt, eſpecially in regard of his humanity. For as moſt precious and holy things lay hid here, ſo in him were hidden all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge; and as God dwelt here, ſo the divinity dwelt in him bodily. And as this was made of imputrible wood, ſo the fleſh of Chriſt ſaw no corruption. Again, as the meaſures of the Ark were all humane, or the meaſures of a man, ſo Chriſt taking fleſh revealed himſelf to us every way, that man is capable of knowing any thing, to the eyes being ſeen, to the ears being heard, and to the hands being handled. Again, as the Ark was overlaid with gold within and without, ſo Chriſt outwardly ſhone by miracles, and inwardly by divine wiſ-

*Apul. aſin. aur. lib.*11. Alb. Tibull.

Heb.9.5. Calvin.

Ainſworth. Ferus.

1 John 1.1.

vviſdom. The crown upon the Ark was a figure of his divine nature, as a round thing wanting beginning and end, and moſt glorious as a crown of Gold, and it figured out alſo the Majeſty of his Kingdom. The four rings, by which the Ark was carried, the Preachers of his Goſpel, who carry him about by preaching in the four quarters of the earth, and in that the barres muſt alwayes remain in theſe rings, that the Preachers muſt ever abide in the publiſhing of Chriſt onely and not of themſelves, ſeeking his glory and not their own, as Paul deſired to know nothing but Chriſt, and ſaith, None other foundation can any man lay. If any ſeek themſelves in their preaching, or ſet up others, they pluck the barres out of the rings; And hereby alſo was ſignified, that the Preacher ſhould be alwayes ready to ſet forth the Goſpel. The law was put in the Ark, to ſhew, that Chriſt is the fulfilling of the law, and Manna to ſhew that he is the true bread that came down from heaven, and Aarons rod budding, to ſhew, that although he died, yet he ſhould, beyond all expectation, ſpring forth again. Laſtly, whereas no ſacrifice was to be offered, but before the Ark, this ſignified Chriſt to be the onely ſacrifice, and that no act of divine worſhip done out of him can pleaſe God, and whereas death is threatened to thoſe that uſe the Ark unreverently, and was afterwards inflicted upon Uzzah, and the men of Bethſhemeſh; this figured out the deſtruction of thoſe that ſhould abuſe Chriſt, as Ananias and Sapphira, Judas and the Jews, &c. according to that, He which falleth upon this ſtone, ſhall be broken in pieces. Again, as Simlerus hath it, Chriſt, as the Ark maketh God preſent amongſt us, who were farre ſeparated in our ſins, and his rod buddeth in the midſt of perſecutions, approving the miniſtery ſent out by him to be of God. Rabanus ſaith the ſame with Ferus in all things, but onely that in ſpeaking upon the dimenſions of the ark, he ſaith, the length two cubits and an half, ſetteth forth the long ſuffering of the Lord, and his kindneſſe, in that the came amongſt us with two, Preaching and operation, and the half cubit ſetteth forth the ſlowneſſe of his Diſciples to underſtand and beleeve, the breadth, the breadth of his charity, and the height, the hope of future elevation to glory by him, and he applieth alſo particularly the one cubit, and the halfe, but I paſſe this over as too much ſtreined. For the crown, he maketh that better then Ferus, a type of the crown of glory, ſet upon the head of the man Chriſt Jeſus. For the four rings he ſaith well alſo, that they typified the four Goſpels, and their being placed at the four corners of the Ark, their propagation to the four parts of the World, and the barres figure the Preachers who muſt never have their mindes off from the ſacred Scriptures, or their hands from actions preſcribed therein, as the barres muſt never be out of the rings. Laſtly, the Teſtament is put in the Ark, to ſhew, that we muſt believe onely thoſe things touching Chriſt which are revealed in the holy Scriptures, and that he had the full knowledge of all divine lawes in him.

1 Cor. 2.
1 Cor. 3.

Simlerus.

Rabanus.

And thou ſhalt make a mercy-ſeat of pure gold, two cubits and an half ſhall be the length thereof, and a cubit and half the breadth thereof, &c. Hitherto one of the implements or veſſels of the Tabernacle hath been ſet forth; now followeth another, viz. the mercy-ſeat, the word tranſlated mercy-ſeat is כפרת, ſignifying, as Tremelius ſaith, in the primitive, expiare, or illinere, or liniamento tegere; it is put, Gen.6 14 for covering or plaiſtering over. The Septuagint render it ἱλαστήριον ἐπίθεμα, a propitiatory covering, and ſo doth Tremelius, propitiatorium operculum, and by the name ἱλαστήριον, it is called, Heb.9.5. This propitiatory covering muſt be made not of Shittim-wood, as the Ark, and covered with gold, but it muſt be all of pure gold, of the ſame length and breadth of the Ark, becauſe otherwiſe it would not have covered it all over. And the name covering and propitiatory do both aptly agree unto it, becauſe hereby Gods glory was as it were covered, when he talked with Moſes, as by the cloud, for this was the firſt end of making it, that God might from hence commune with Moſes, *v.*22. and becauſe it was a ſigne of Gods favour to the children of Iſrael covering and protecting them from danger. This vvas certainly alſo a figure of Chriſt, who is called ἱλασμὸν, Propitiation for our ſins, 1 Joh. 2. 2. Rom. 3. 25. and that by his death, to ſhevv that hereby we come to have all our ſins covered, as by a true propitiatory covering. As the Ark then figured out Chriſt in his incarnation, ſo the Mercy-ſeat figured out Chriſt in his paſſion, and the ſame length and breadth, as great an intention of his charity towards us in his paſſion, as in his incarnation, it was all of gold, to ſhevv that his death was moſt precious, it was called a propitiatory covering, to ſhevv that God is through Chriſts death propitious and favourable to us, covering all our ſins; and hence did God talk with Moſes, to ſhevv that he ſpake to us by his Son Jeſus Chriſt. This Propitiatory, ſaith Rabanus, was a table of gold covering the Ark, and it figured out Chriſts blood, the Propitiation for our ſins, and was placed above, to ſhevv that Gods mercy is above all his vvorks.

Verſe 17.

Tremelius.

Ferus.

Rabanus Maurus. 1 John 4. 10. Pſal. 145. 9.

Verſe 18. And thou ſhalt make two Cherubims of beaten gold, at the two ends of the Mercy-ſeat, &c. Of Cherubims we read before Gen. 3. 24. ſome derive it from כרב Sicut, and רביא, Puer, becauſe, as the Hebrew Doctours ſay, it was like unto a young boy. But Ezech. 10. as that which was ſeen in the likeneſſe of a man, ſo thoſe in the likeneſſe of a Lion, an Ox, and Eagle are called Cherubims. Joſephus ſaith, that Cherubims were flying creatures, the like to which hath not been ſeen by any man. It is generally held, that by Cherubims Angels are ſet forth, having wings for their celerity in going about the miniſtery of the Lord committed unto them. The word ſignifieth, as Ferus hath it, fulneſſe of knowledge, they ſerved to ſet forth power and glory; and therefore God is ſaid to ſit betvveen the Cherubims, and to ride upon the Cherubims, that is, to ſhew himſelf in great power and glory. The Cherubims were ſimilitudes of delicate young men, repreſenting the Angels of Heaven, who alwayes miniſter before God. Princes for their great power and glory are ſometime called Cherubims, Ezech. 28. 14.

Joſeph.

Ferus.

Verſe 19. Of the mercy-ſeat ſhall ye make the Cherubims, that is, of the ſame matter, of pure gold, of beaten work, that is, of whole peeces beaten out with the hammer, yet ſo, as that the Mercy-ſeat and Cherubims were one body framed up in the two ends to theſe ſimilitudes.

Simlerus.

Verſe 20. And they ſhall ſtretch forth their wings on high covering the Mercy-ſeat, and their faces ſhall look one to another. Their vvings muſt be ſo extended and ſpread aloft, as that they muſt cover the Mercy-ſeat, and hide their faces for reverence therefrom. For, one to another, Hebrevv it is, man to his brother, an Hebrevv phraſe uſuall to ſet forth thus much.

Verſe 21. And thou ſhalt put the Mercy-ſeat above upon the Ark, &c. Here is the uſe of this cover, and the reaſon of the name, this muſt cover the Ark, and the Cherubims with the wings muſt cover it, and from above the mercy-ſeat betwixt the two Cherubims, the Lord ſaith, he will commune with Moſes.

Verſe 22. The Myſtery. Ferus. Pſal. 91. For the myſtery of theſe Cherubims, they in their vvings covering the Mercy-ſeat, ſet forth the protection of God both over Chriſt in his humbled eſtate, and all the faithfull his members, and that by his Angels, who pitch their tents about them, and carry them in their hands, ſo Ferus, who alſo ſaith, that the Cherubims ſignifying fulneſſe of knovvledge, figured out the holy Scriptures in the tvvo Teſtaments, as tvvo witneſſes of Chriſt diſcovering the hidden knovvledge of him, and defending him in his humbled eſtate as it vvere with wings ſpread over him, from all the cavils of Jevvs and Infidels, to be the Son of God, and the true Meſſiah. They are of gold, to ſhew that the word of God is more precious then gold, and they are of beaten vvork, to ſhew that the Scriptures were made betvveen beatings and preſſings by perſecutions, and they looked one to another, to ſhevv, that theſe tvvo Teſtaments do in nothing differ one from another, both alike ſetting forth Chriſt and his glory; the Old ſaying, Thou haſt crowned him with glory and honour; and the New, We have ſeen his glory as the glory of the onely begotten of the Father, for which cauſe they are called glorious Cherubims, Heb. 9. And Pſal. 8. John 1.

Rabanus

Rabanus addeth, that they are placed at the two ends of the mercy-ſeat, to ſhew, that the Scriptures fill the times before the incarnation of Chriſt, and ſince with divine knowledge. And to ſhew, that the Cherubims typifie the holy Scriptures, wherein God ſpeaketh, it is ſaid, That the voice of their wings was heard into the outer Court, as the voice of the Lord ſpeaking. Or elſe, ſaith the ſame Author, by this placing the Cherubims with extended wings with their faces inward, was ſhewed, that the Angels referre the ſtate of their perpetuall felicity to the grace of Chriſt, &c. Philo by the two Cherubims, ſaith ſome, will have the two Hemiſpheres underſtood, the moving of their wings reſembling the motion of the Heavens; but he ſaith that the twofold power of God is ſet forth operating and created, and Kingly, whereby he governeth all things. Simlerus ſimply thinketh, that the Angels are ſet forth, by whom God governeth all things, wings they have, to ſhew their readineſſe to obey, and look one to another, to ſhew their conſent in obeying, and to the propitiatory, to ſhew that they deſire to look into the myſteries touching Chriſt. Any of theſe wayes we may ſafely and profitably allegorize, and therefore I leave it to the Reader to chuſe, which liketh him beſt. But let none take this as a ground for images in divine worſhip, for theſe were appointed by God, we have no word for our making of images, but altogether againſt it, and theſe were hidden from the eyes of the people, and were placed where onely the High Prieſt came, ſo that there was no danger of idolatry. The Devil, who in many things is Gods ape, hath taught his to imitate Moſes in making a Tripos, or a place hid with curtains, from whence he in ſecret parts of his Temples giveth anſwers to Idolaters, as Steuchus noteth.

Rabanus.

Ezech.1.

Philo.

Simlerus.

1 Per.1.

Steuchus.

After the ark, and mercy-ſeat together with the cherubims followeth the table of Shittim-wood, two cubits long, one broad, and one and an halfe high, and this muſt alſo be overlaid with gold, and it muſt have a crown and a border, and a crown of gold round about, and four rings of gold and ſtaves, as the Ark, and diſhes and ſpoones, bowls, and cover of gold, and hereupon ſhew-bread muſt ſtand before the Lord alwayes. Verſe 23,24 Verſe 25,26 Verſe 27,28 Verſe 29,30

Here is nothing that needeth explanation, but onely touching the veſſels belonging to this Table and the bread. The diſhes or chargers ſo called, *Numb.*7.13. were to ſet the bread upon, and were twelve, according to the number of the cakes of bread that ſtood there continually, the ſpoons in Hebrew כפות, a word coming of כף the hollow of a mans hand, ſo that it may ſignifie any hollow thing, ſpoons, or cups, as ſome render it, and they ſerved to put incenſe in, Numb 7.14. and that incenſe was with the ſhew-bread, ſee *Levit.*24.7. The Rabbins ſay, that they were cups, and there were two of them, and in each of them was put an handfull of incenſe. *Maimony in Miſneh, Chap.*5. The covers were to cover the bread ſtanding in the golden diſhes, and the bowls to cover the cups of incenſe, ſaith one, for this is expreſſed to be the uſe of them, *Numb.*4.7. But the Hebrews inſtead of covers and bowls, have props and pipes. And the firſt of theſe is rendered by Pagninus, middle quils or reeds put between the breads to keep them from moulding, and the other, ſuſtentacula cannarum fixed in the ground, and elevated above the table to ſupport the breads. The props of gold, ſay the Rabbins, were four, two for one row of cakes, and two for another, ſtanding all up from the ground by the ſide of the table, and ſupporting them at each end. For the cakes, they ſay, were ten hand-breadths long, and five broad, and their length lay over the breadth of the table in two rowes, and therefore the table being but ſix hand-breadths broad, they had need of props at their two ends to ſupport them. This then was the uſe of the props. For the other called reeds or middle quils or pipes, they were 28, ſerving to keep the cakes aſunder, being put between them after the forme of an half hollowed reed, there being firſt one cake laid, and upon that three reeds, then another, and three upon it, &c. and upon the fift two, ſo there were 14 for one row, and 14 for another. Talmud Babyl.

Levit.24.5,6, &c.

Maimony.

Ainſworth.

Talmud Babylon. in Menachothe.11. R. Solomon. Septuagint.

Babyl. Rab. Solomon Jarchi ſaith, that the props of gold ſtanding upon the ground were higher then the table, and were forked or notched with one notch above another, that the end of each cake might reſt ſeverally thereupon. The Septuagint for covers have σπονδεῖα, veſſels to pour out with, and the originall word ſignifieth to pour out. But forſomuch as here was no uſe of any ſuch veſſel, and the word hath another ſignification, as hath been ſaid, I rather imbrace that, and the rather, becauſe it cometh from the Hebrews, who ſhould be the beſt Expoſitors of their own ceremonies. When he ſaith then, that theſe ſhould be poured out, whih in our tranſlation is, to cover withall; the meaning is, that they ſhould be made by pouring out the molten gold into frames or moulds. For the bread to be ſet upon this table, it was twelve cakes, two tenth deals to a cake of fine floure, and every Sabbath they muſt be taken away, and new put in their room, and them being ſo removed, the Prieſts onely might eat. For ſhew-bread in Hebrew is, bread of faces, the reaſon of which name commonly rendered is, becauſe they ſtood continually in the preſence of God, before the Ark: But the Rabbins render this reaſon, becauſe they were made four-ſquare, having thus as it were four faces, the length being ten hand-breadths, the breadth five, and the thickneſſe ſeven fingers: ſo Maimony, the Septuagint call it, bread of Propoſition, becauſe it was propoſed or ſet before God. For the quantity of fine floure that went to one two tenth deals, or two tenth parts, for the word is עשרונים, ſignifieth thus much, but it is not named, of what they vvere the tvvo tenth parts, onely becauſe an Homer is ſaid to be the tenth part of an Ephah: it is commonly held, that two tenth parts of an Ephah are meant, that is, two Homers, for the quantity of which, ſee before, Exod. 16. It was twice ſo much as was allowed of the Manna to keep one a day, ſo that the cakes made hereof might well be ſo great, as was ſaid before, and becauſe two Homers went to each, and they had been fed a long time with an Homer a day a man, they might aptly remember hereby that miraculous food in all ages after. The cakes being twelve, ſerved to ſet forth the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, as the twelve ſtones in the Ephod, and to ſhew, that they were alwayes neer to the Lord, and under his protection, and hereby did continually appear, that they referred all their increaſe to Gods bleſſing, and preſented thus ſome part of it in way of thankfulneſſe, and for the ſanctifying of all the bread that they ate unto them.

Levit.24.5,6, 7,&c.

Maimony at. of the daily Sacrifice, Chap.5. Sect.9.

The Myſtery. Ferus.

Myſtically, this golden Table figured out Chriſt in his preaching; for herein he hath prepared a table for us; the bread ſet here before God, the word & Sacraments which feed the ſoul, as bread doth the body. And as that bread ſtood continually before God, ſo the preaching of the Word continually is to be inculcated; and as the bread was changed every Sabbath, ſo for the more delight to the hearer the Word is to be ſet forth by divers wayes and manners. The Frankincenſe upon the bread ſhewed, that after preaching praying muſt be added. And as none but the Prieſts might eat of this bread, ſo for none but Chriſtians, who are to God Prieſts and Kings, the Word and Sacraments are bread to feed the ſoul to eternall life. The diſhes, cups, or ſpoons and the reſt here mentioned typifie chriſtian people, who muſt every one in their place endeavour to illuſtrate the Goſpel of Chriſt, thus Ferus. This table, ſaith Rabanus, typifieth the holy Scripture made of the deeds of the holy Fathers moſt durable in mens mindes, and when they are ſet forth, the ſoul is fed as with bread, and this Scripture hath the due length, when out of it is preached perſeverance in the truth, the breadth, when the amplitude of charity, and the height, when the hope of perpetuall remuneration. Of other particulars, whereby he proſecuteth theſe dimenſions more curiouſly, I ſpare to ſpeak, and likewiſe of the crown, the border and the crown, becauſe I do not think that the purpoſe of the Holy Ghoſt is, that every of theſe ſhould be applied particularly, but becauſe being conſidered together with the table, they made it moſt glorious, and ſo is the Word preached. For the Rabanus.

diſhes,

diſhes, &c. he applieth them to divers ways of preaching, according to the diver ſity of our Auditors, for the ſame doctrine is not to be taught to the rich, that to the poor, to the fooliſh, that to the wiſe, or to the weak, that to the healthful, but every one is to be dealt withall, according to his capacity. Again, he ſaith, the twelve cakes figured out the twelve Apoſtles and all their ſucceſſours in preaching of the Goſpel, who are never wanting, but ſtand alwayes up to preach in all ages; and as the old are removed by death, which is the time of their Sabbath in heaven, ſo others are placed in their room, and there is an excellent conſent amongſt them in preaching the ſame truth, as theſe cakes were laid together in two rowes, &c. Simlerus both approveth of the allegory of preaching the Word, and he ſaith, that theſe cakes were made of the firſt fruits, by which the reſt was ſanctified, and ſo by the ſetting of them continually before the Lord upon his table they were admoniſhed, that they were gueſts as it were at the Lords table, that they might eat their bread with temperance and thankfulneſſe. Hereby alſo, ſaith he, are figured out the joyes of heaven, where we ſhall ſit as it were at a table, of which table that we may be partakers, we muſt eat here of the bread of life, Chriſt Jeſus, who although he be but one, yet becauſe he is the bread of the whole Church repreſented by the twelve Tribes, he is ſet forth by twelve cakes. Gennadius by the table underſtandeth the earth, and by the cakes the fruits thereof which come from the Lord. Theodoret, the whole year in the four ſeaſons thereof yielding fruits. Joſephus likewiſe, the Zodiack or compaſſe of the year. Simlerus.

And thou ſhalt make a candleſtick of pure gold, of beaten work it ſhall be made, his ſhaft, his branches, &c. The ſhaft of this candleſtick was the body of it, the ſix branches, three on the one ſide, and three on the other did riſe from the foot of the candleſtick to the ſame height with the candleſtick, having upon the top of each of them two bowls, that is, two, one oppoſite againſt another, riſing from the Baſis, and other two from a knop of the candleſtick a little higher, and two from a knop higher then the former, thus Simlerus, who alſo ſaith, that theſe bowls upon each branch ſerved to receive that which fell from the lights burning in the candleſtick, and that upon either of them being adorned with a flower and a knop ſtood a light, and for the three degrees of knops, out of which the three pair of branches were made, ſee v 35. After the ſix branches deſcribed, it is ſaid, that four bowls ſhall be made in the candleſtick with their knops and flowers, that is, ſaith Tremelius, the top of the candleſtick ſhall be made with bowles conformable to the tops of the branches. The flowers, ſaith Rab. Menahem were Lilies, and they were 9, the knops 11, and the bowles 22, being together 42, having a myſtery in their number: thus he. The work of all this is ſaid to be beaten, and ſo the Chaldee expoundeth it; and others, it was vvrought with the hammer, and yet Joſephus ſaith, it was caſt in a mould; and Pagninus, made not by parcels, but by one fuſture, the Hebrew word מקשה, ſignifying hard, maketh this difference.

Verſe 31. Simlerus. Verſe 34. Tremelius. R. Menahem. Joſeph. Pagninus.

And thou ſhalt make the ſeven lamps thereof, and they ſhall light the lamps thereof that they may give light over againſt it. The lamps vvere the lights ſet up on each of the ſix branches, and the ſhaft of the candleſtick, vvhich muſt burn continually to give light about the candleſtick, Chap. 27. 20. vvhereas we read it, over againſt it, Tremelius hath it, ex omni parte ejus, the better to expreſſe the meaning. The reaſon of theſe lights alvvayes burning vvas, becauſe there vvas no vvindow to the Tabernacle.

Verſe 37.

And the tongs thereof, and the ſnuff-diſhes, &c. The tongs were to ſnuff the lights, and the ſnuff-diſhes to receive the ſnuffings. And all this muſt be made of a talent of pure gold, vvhich vvas the greateſt of vveights, the common talent vveighing 6000 Drachmas, the Kings talent 9000, and the talent of the Sanctuary 12000, vvhich is 4500 ℔. Ainſworth ſaith, that it vvas 3000 ſhekels of the Sanctuary, and in vveight 120 ℔. For the myſtery by this candleſtick is ſet forth Chriſt eſpecially in his ſending of the Holy Ghoſt to enlighten lighten and to direct his Church in all things. For he is as it were the ſhaft from which the Miniſters of the Goſpel come, as the branches from the ſhaft, bearing the lights; and the lamps are ſeven, to ſet forth the manifold gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; and for the lights ſnuffers are made, to ſhew, that we muſt not ſuffer the light of the truth to be darkened by errour, but endevour preſently to clear it again, and that there is uſe of inſtruments in the Church of God beſides of the glorious branches, that is, of men of meaner gifts, as well as of thoſe that are of the moſt excellent, that none may be diſcouraged. Thus Ferus. Or by the candleſtick, ſaith Ainſworth, underſtand the law, in the light whereof we muſt ſerve God, and the ſundry branches, knops, bowles and flowers ſhew the variety of the things in the Scriptures, and of the delivering of them; ſome plainly, ſome myſtically and darkly. Herein, as in a figure, ſaith Calvin, God ſhewed how he would enlighten his faithfull ſervants by his Word and Spirit, forſomuch as without this light we are night and day alwayes in darkneſſe. A like candleſtick to this is ſpoken of, Zach. 4.2. and the Spirit is ſet forth by the number of ſeven, to ſhew the perfection of the gifts thereof. And he is the ſeven lamps burning before the throne, *Revel.*4.5. The bowles, the branches, knops and flowers ſerved for ornament, the bowles and ſnuffers, &c. for uſe. But beſt of all Simlerus hereby underſtandeth the light of heavenly doctrine alwayes ſhining in the Church by the preaching of the Word. All the branches bearing the lights are the divers miniſters, ſome meaner and ſome more excellently gifted, who come all from one ſhaft, Chriſt. The ornaments ſignifie the ornaments of ſpirituall gifts in theſe miniſters, as the gifts of prophecie, of healing, of tongues, of revelations, &c. the bowles more particularly, which were to contein the liquor, ſhewed that by ſtudy of divine doctrine grace is obteined, and other gifts, the round knobs typified rotundity and perfection of life and doctrine, and the flowers which had grace and delight in them, ſhewed, that the Miniſter ſhould be in grace amongſt his auditours, and be delighted in, that they might willingly hear him. Rabanus applieth all things more particularly, and comming to the number of three, and three branches, and three bowles he ſaith, that three times are hereby ſet forth, in all which God had ſome lights, before the law, under the law, and under the Goſpel, and in each time three ſorts. 1 Of Virgins. 2 Of married men. 3 Of perfect men, &c. coming to the four bowles upon the candleſtick, v,34. he ſaith, they figured out the four Evangeliſts that ſet forth Chriſt, and ſo as bowles do give us a taſte of the new wine Chriſt Jeſus. Touching the ſnuffers, he ſaith, that they being to make the lights burn clearer, do aptly ſet forth the taking away of the carnall ceremonies under the Goſpel, the ſpirituall ſenſe of them being taught. And all muſt be of pure gold, to ſhew, that as Chriſt is pure, ſo the faithfull ſtrive after purity, and ſhall attein to it in the World to come, being without all ſpot of ſin, as he hath alwayes been. And the vveight of all muſt be a talent, to ſhevv the perfection of the glory of Chriſt and his members, as this is the greateſt and moſt perfect vveight of all others; and therefore by a talent of lead on the contrary ſide the greatneſſe of a ſinners miſery is ſet forth, *Zach.*5.7.

Verſe 39. Hen. Bunting. Ainſworth. The Myſtery. Ferus.

John 15.1. Ainſworth. Calvin. Simlerus. Rab. Maurus. Zach.5.7.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſe 1. Moreover thou ſhalt make the Tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linnen, of blue, purple and skarlet, with Cherubims, of cunning work ſhalt thou make them. The ſtructure of the Tabernacle is ſo ſet forth, as that it is hard to conceive rightly of the form thereof, but if vve compare the parts of the deſcription thereof together, as they are here laid dovvn, vve ſhall eaſily finde it out. It vvas an habitation of thirty cubits long, ten cubits high, and ten broad, as vve may gather from the boards vvhich vvere to ſtand erect on each Verſe 15,16 Verſ.17,&c.

ſide,

ſide, 20 on a ſide, each board being a cubit and half broad, and ſix at the Weſt-end, beſides a board at each corner. It had onely two ſides, the one Southward, and the other Northward, and an end towards the Weſt, but towards the Eaſt there was no frame of boards, but it ſtood open for the Sun to ſhine into it, onely there were vailes and a door, as afterwards we ſhall ſee, v. 36, 37. Theſe boards had each of them two tenons, under which were placed two ſockets of ſilver framed ſharpe, as ſome think, to be put into the ground, or rather, as others, being broad next to the ground, that they might ſtand faſt to ſupport the Tabernacle. Theſe boards were very thick, as we muſt needs conceive that they might be ſtrong, Joſephus thinketh, that they were four fingers thick; but others, ſaith Simlerus, a cubit thick; becauſe there were at the Weſt-end eight boards, which make twelve cubits, whereas the breadth of the Tabernacle was but ten, wherefore it is to be held, that two cubits of theſe were uſed at the two corners right againſt the thickneſſe of the ſide, and then juſt ten cubits more will remain, which was the breadth within, but without it was twelve. But if the boards had been ſo thick, they could not have been counted boards, but poſts, and the Tabernacle would have been for the weight moſt cumberſome to be carried. I do therefore rather ſubſcribe to Joſephus, that they were but four fingers thick, and the two angular boards were not ſo broad as the other by half a foot, ſo that this being deducted, and ſo much as went againſt the ſides of the boards in each corner, the breadth of the Tabernacle within will not be much above ten cubits. This then was the ſtanding frame of this building, which whereſoever they came, was pitcht upon the ground upon the ſilver ſockets, and to hold the boards together upward, there were five barres running through one ſide, and five through the other, and five at the Weſt-end being faſtened with rings, and theſe boards and barres being of Shittim-wood were all overlaid with gold, and the rings were of gold amongſt theſe bars; one, viz. the middlemoſt went through the midſt of the boards from end to end, which Ainſworth will not have underſtood, as if holes were made through the thickneſſe of the boards for it to run in, but that it went through rings, as the reſt, but this is plainly ſpoken for diſtinction, four of the bars went in rings, and the fifth in the midſt, boaring through the boards: thus alſo Simlerus, and the thickneſſe of the board, if but of four fingers might well bear it.

This being the frame of the vvhole vvas all over covered vvith curtains firſt of ſilk, or fine twined linen, blue, purple and skarlet with Cherubims of cunning vvork, that is, the pictures of Cherubims wrought on both ſides. For the Hebrews do thus diſtinguiſh the cunning vvorkman from the Imbroiderer ſpoken of, v. 36. the firſt maketh his vvork ſo, that it appeareth on both ſides alike; the ſecond ſo, as that it is ſeen on one ſide onely; ſo Maimony, and vvhen fine tvvined linnen is ſpoken of, he ſaith, the Hebrevv Doctours affirm, ſix double thred is meant. Of theſe there vvere ten, five joyned together, and five together, and fifty loops, and fifty taches of gold vvere ſet on to joyn theſe two together, vvhen they vvere laid upon the Tabernacle, and to part them again for the more convenient taking of them dovvn vvhen occaſion ſerved. Each curtain vvas 28 cubits long, and four cubits broad, ſo that being laid in their length over the breadth of the Tabernacle, they might reach dovvn on both ſides vvithin one cubit of the ground, that is, to covering the breadth, and 9 one ſide, and 9 another: for the breadth of the curtains being together 40 cubits, they might fitly cover the vvhole length being 30 cubits, and the end being ten.

After theſe there was another ſort of curtains made of goats hair, or goats skins, ſaith Simlerus; for the Hebrew word ſignifieth either, but it is generally held to have bin goats hair; theſe curtains were eleven, five joyned together, and ſix together, and the length of each of them was thirty cubits, and the breadth four, and the two parts were coupled together with taches and loops of braſſe. So that this cover being laid over the breadth in the length

Verſe 18.
Verſe 19.

Joſeph.
Simlerus.

Verſe 26, 27
Verſ. 28, &c.

Ainſworth.

Verſe 1, 2, 3
Verſe 4, 5, 6.

Maimony Treatiſe of the Implements of the Sanctuary, Chap. 8. Sect. 13

Verſe 7.
Verſe 8.
Verſe 9, 10
See Exod. 35. 26.
Verſe 11.

thereof reached to the ground on both ſides, viz. a cubit lower, then the Verſe 12. ſilk curtains, which were firſt laid on: and for the breadth, there being had Verſe 13. a curtain more at the Eaſt-end of the Tabernacle then would ſerve to cover it that was folded in, and the other half redundant on the Weſt-end hanged Verſe 14. down there upon the ground, as the Tabernacles train. Beſides theſe two coverings of curtains, there was another of rams skins red, and of badgers skins a fourth, of a violet colour, ſee *Chap.*25.5. of what length and breadth theſe ſhould be, it is not ſaid, but it is to be held, that they were of the ſame dimenſions with the cover before ſpoken of, that the Tabernacle might be all over well defended from the weather, and covered from the ſight of the people. And thus was the ſtate of the Tabernacle for the generall frame, and the curtains and covers. Now right under the taches there was a partition with-Verſe 31,32 in made by four pillars of Shittim-wood overlaid with gold, and upon Verſe 33. each of them a golden hook, and the ſockets which they ſtood upon were of ſilver, and upon theſe hooks was hanged a vail made like unto the firſt cur-
Verſe 34. tains of fine twined linen, &c. and within this vail the Ark with the Teſtimony Verſe 35. was placed, and this was called the Moſt Holy, and in that without, the Table on the North ſide with the Shew-bread, and the Candleſtick with the Lamps, &c. on the South, and this was called the Holy Place. Laſtly, to cloſe up the Verſe 36,37 Eaſt-end of the Tabernacle, five pillars of Shittim-wood overlaid with gold were ſet in braſſe ſockets, and theſe had hooks of gold, and hereupon was hanged a vail like unto the other in all things, but onely that this was embroidered work, whereas the other was cunning work, and this was the door of the Tabernacle. For the myſtery, the Tabernacle, ſaith Ferus, in the firſt Ferus. part called the Holy Place, was the figure of the Church Militant: for as into this it was entered by a vail adorned with divers colours and Cherubims, ſo by faith we enter into the Church adorned with the divers gifts and graces of the Spirit; and the Cherubims, ſaith Ainſworth, ſet forth heavenly affections in the faithfull, and the Angels miniſtery and attendance about them. Here are pillars ſetting forth the pillars of the Church, the Apoſtles, and a manifold covering, ſhewing that the Church is moſt ſafely garded by the Divine Protection againſt the gates of hell. All things ſhone with ſilk and gold within, but it was horrid without being all hairy, to ſhew that the Church is all glorious within by the graces of the Holy Ghoſt, as *Pſal.*45. but ſubject to temptations outwardly. As in the Tabernacle was the table with the Shew-bread, the Incenſe and the Candleſtick, ſo in the Church is divine doctrine, the illumination of the Holy Ghoſt, and prayer. In the ſecond part, or the Moſt Holy, Heaven and the Church triumphant there was figured out; the vail by which this was entered, figured out the ſhutting of Heaven, before Chriſts coming, but becauſe at his death it was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, that by his death Heaven is now ſet open to us. Here is the Ark ſetting forth the humanity of Chriſt, the Mercy-ſeat ſetting forth his interceding for us, and the Cherubims ſetting forth the Society of Angels there: but no Candleſtick, becauſe in Heaven there ſhall be no need of naturall, or artificiall lights, for God ſhall be the light thereof, making it Rabanus. perpetuall day for ever. Rabanus addeth, that the fine twined linen being pure white, ſetteth forth the grace of chaſtity; the blue, the heavenly minde; the purple, patience in ſuffering to the ſhedding of the blood; and the ſcarlet, moſt fiery red love of God and of their neighbour ſhining in the members of the Church. The curtains coupled together being all of one length and breadth, ſhew the union amongſt the faithfull, and the one Spirit from which all their divers graces flow. The length of a curtain being 28 cubits, that is four ſevens, ſhewed, that the ſervants of God by obſerving and beleeving the doctrine of the four holy Evangeliſts, and by long patience perſevering therein come to a Sabbath in Heaven: for that by this number of 28 a Sabbath is figured out appeareth, becauſe all the numbers under ſeven together with it are comprehended in 28, for herein are 1,2,3,4,5,6,7. the breadth

breadth of a curtain 4 cubits ſhewed, that the latitude of charity ſhould be ſet forth in 4 Evangeliſts, and contain 4 principall vertues. The diviſion of theſe curtains into two parts, five in one, and five in another, one covering one part of the Tabernacle, and another the other part, ſet forth the Church under the Law, and the Church under the Goſpel. And their coupling all together to make one tent, the unity of the Catholick Church in all times and ages. The loopes of blue coupling altogether ſhewed, that the hope of eternall happineſſe in Heaven coupleth the hearts of all the elect in one and the ſame holy devotion, becauſe blue is the colour of Heaven, and ſo are made, to figure out the Jubile to come in Heaven, and the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe the Jubile of the Jewes was every fiftieth year, and at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt the Spirit came down, and this was the 50 day. The curtains of goats hair being 11, figured out the 11 Apoſtles, and all faithfull Miniſters, who through their humble devotion ſet forth by hair-cloath, protect the Church of God from many ſtorms of adverſity, and they are thirty cubits long, to ſhew that in the faith of the Holy Trinity they keep the Decalogue, becauſe thirty is three times ten. Five of them joyned together ſhew the Doctors of the Church under the Law, who preached the five books of Moſes, and ſix together the Doctors under the Goſpel, who preach the doctrines and examples of ſix ages of the World. The cover of red rams skins figured out ſuch Doctors of the Church, as protect the Church by patient ſuffering of death for the truth, whereby others are armed with patience alſo, and the blue badgers skins, ſuch as have excelled in chaſtity, a moſt heavenly vertue: thus Rabanus, who alſo proceedeth in allegorizing upon the boards, their height, their breadth, number, ſides, end, ſockets and bars, &c. in all which, becauſe I doubt not, but there were myſteries, for no particular in this holy building was ſo directed in vain; I will briefly run through the beſt of his ſpeculations touching every of theſe. The boards, ſaith he, of which the Tabernacle was made, figured out the Apoſtles, and Preachers of the Goſpel, their ſucceſſours; their height ten cubits, their aſpiring after the perfect keeping of the ten commandments, & the denary of reward, which they ſhall have in the end for their labouring in the Lords vineyard; their breadth a cubit and half, the perfection of good works in them, and a part of the divine knowledge attained to in this world. The two tenons of each board, figured out the humility of the righteous, and their love, whereby they are joyned to the faithfull, as one, both in proſperity and in adverſity, for which cauſe they are two in every board. The ſockets of ſilver in which theſe tenons ſtood, figured out the conſent of the holy Scriptures with thoſe things which the Apoſtles taught, or that the Scriptures in the Old and New Teſtament, both were the ground hereof. The boards on the ſouth-ſide figured out the ancient Church of the Jevvs, and thoſe on the North, the Church of the Gentiles frozen and dead in times paſt through the cold North-vvindes, as it vvere, to all goodneſſe, and the ſame number, height and breadth of both ſides the ſame graces in either Church, faith, hope and charity. The boards at the Weſt-end, to vvhich both the ſides reach, figured out the end of the World, becauſe in the weſt the Sun ſetteth, and the day endeth: unto which ſome ſhall continue in the faith of both ſorts. The ſix boards here, the termination of ſix ages; and the two angular boards, the twofold reward to come of reſt and of glory for ever to the people of both ſorts. The five bars figured out the five books of Moſes ſtrengthening both Churches, becauſe even we that live under the Goſpel and much confirmed by thoſe things ſet forth in the Law, being ſpiritually underſtood. And boards, and bars are covered all with gold, and rings to hold the bars; one of gold, to ſhew the excellency of faithfull miniſters of the Goſpel. The vail, which parted the Tabernacle ſo as that the outer part was 20 cubits, and the inner ten, as Joſephus ſaith, which proportion was alſo held in Solomons Temple, for the whole being 60 cubits long, the ſanctum was fourty, and the Sanctum Sanctorum 20: this vail, ſaith he, figured out Heaven, into which, as the high Prieſt went into the holy of holies once in a year, ſo Chriſt entred once into Heaven by his own blood to make an atonement for us, and the glorious works in this vail, repreſented the glory of the Heavens with the many ornaments thereof, the four pillars upon which the vail hung, the four vertues of Angelicall ſpirits in Heaven, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Temperance and Fortitude. Touching the Ark and Mercy-ſeat placed here, and the table and candleſtick without, he differeth not in ſubſtance from Ferus, but only becauſe the candleſtick was placed on the ſouth-ſide, ſignifying, as was ſaid before, the ancient Church of God, he noteth, that this was done to ſhew, that the Jewes had the light firſt. and the Church of the Gentiles came firſt into the Communion of Chriſt intimated by the table on their ſide, viz. the North. Laſtly, the vail ſhutting up all, being full of glorious works, ſet forth the divers vertues of the Primitive Church, and the five pillars, upon which it hung, the Apoſtles proving the verity of the Goſpel of Chriſt out of the five books of Moſes, for which cauſe their ſockets were of braſſe, becauſe their preaching was grounded upon Moſes and the Prophets, whoſe writings were durable as braſſe. Hitherto the briefe of Rabanus.

Acts 2.

Heb.9.12.

Simlerus.

Others by the Tabernacle underſtanding the Church will have the boards a figure of the faithfull, and the pillars of the Apoſtles. 1 Tim. 3. the two ſockets of each, Chriſt the foundation being of two natures, or the two Teſtaments, the bars of the diſcipline of the Church holding altogether. The vail covering the moſt holy place figured the obſcurity of the old Law, and both the vails ſhewed, that we muſt not come before God but with due reverence. But this vail, as Ainſworth ſheweth better, figured out the humane nature of Chriſt, whereby he entred Heaven, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and the many curious works in it, the manifold graces in the man Chriſt, and his Heavenly affections. And it is to be noted, ſaith he, becauſe this vail vvas more curiouſly vvrought then the other, and the ſockets of theſe pillars vvere ſilver, vvhereas the ſockets of thoſe vvere braſſe, that the nearer to God things are, they are the more coſtly, and the further of, the leſſe And by the help of theſe allegories made by divers, the ſtudious Reader may conceive the better, hovv and vvherein the Tabernacle vvith the appurtenances vvas a figure of better things to come. The Scholaſtical hiſtory maketh the moſt holy place a figure of Heaven, and the holy, a figure of the earth and the Sea, over vvhich the curtains figure out the Starry Heaven, the cover of goats hair, the water above the Heavens, the rams skins red the Empyrean Heaven, and the Badgers skins, the Throne of God; the four colours, the four Elements, &c.

Ainſworth.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſe 1. Exod.20.24.

AND thou ſhalt make an Altar of Shittim-wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad, the height three cubits, &c. When God appointed an Altar firſt to be made, he bade that it ſhould be of earth, and that there ſhould be no ſteps to it, but here an Altar of Shittim-wood muſt be made and overlaid with braſſe, and the height appointed is ſuch, that there muſt needs be ſome ſteps to it: of this diverſity ſee the reaſon, Exod. 20.24. The Scholaſticall hiſtory ſaith, a thing to ſtand upon for him, that miniſtred at the Altar, was ſet, and the miniſtration being ended, it was taken away again. The Altar muſt be made four-ſquare and hollow, and under it muſt be a grate of braſſe of net-work, at the four corners whereof muſt be four rings to bear the Altar with bars put thereinto. The Altar of Shittim-boards then here ſpoken of muſt be conceived not to have been plain upon the top, that the ſacrifice might be laid upon that, but hollow, the boards being ſet up edge-wayes, as the ſides, and the grate being as the hearth, whereupon the fire and ſacrifice was

was laid, and being burnt, the aſhes fell through, and therefore it is ſaid, the grate ſhould be in the midſt of the altar under it, that is, ſaith the Scholaſticall hiſtory, not onely ſpread all under the altar, but compaſſing it vvithout, and made riſing up to the midſt of it round about. Caſſiodorus ſaith, that it had four feet to ſtand upon, and ſo being born up from the ground, the aſhes might fall through upon the ground underneath. Upon the four corners of the altars were four horns to binde the ſacrifices to, and from each of theſe, ſaith Comeſtor, came a chain, which went into the rings of the grate, whereby it was ſupported; but becauſe this is not mentioned, and there was another uſe of the rings, I paſſe it over as uncertain. And to the altar muſt be made veſſels, pans to put the aſhes into, and ſhovels to take up the aſhes with; baſins, which ſerved to hold the blood of the ſacrifices, and fleſh-hooks to take up fleſh out of the pot, for there were pots & cauldrons alſo to ſeeth the fleſh of the ſacrifice in, ſee 1 *Sam.*2. and with the fleſh-hooks they took out the fleſh, *v.*13,14. Laſtly, fire-pans Engliſhed ſometime cenſers, as Levit. 10.1. whereby the fire was taken from the Altar of burnt-offerings, and carried to the altar of incenſe. By this Altar, ſaith Rabanus, the heart is figured out, whereupon we muſt offer our Sacrifices, and this muſt be incorruptible, as Shittim-wood, and as the altar was five cubits long and five broad, ſo we muſt with all our five ſenſes ſerve God, and be lifted up by Faith, Hope and Charity, as it was three cubits high, the foure horns figure the foure principall vertues, or the four parts of the World, into which the Church is ſpread, and all covered with braſſe, our perſeverance in vertue, as braſſe endureth always. If any ſhall doubt, how the wood being ſo neer the fire could always endure? Jerome anſwereth, that the nature of ſome wood, as of amiton, is ſuch, that the more it burneth, the purer it is made, and ſo was it with the wood of which the Altar was made. The divers veſſels ſhew the divers offices of the faithful in the Church of God. The pots for the aſhes figure out ſuch, as look to the paſſions and death of Chriſt, and of his holy ſervants, for death may well be ſet forth by aſhes, ſo as that they are more ſtirred up in grace hereby: the ſhovels or the tongs, as he rendereth it, which ſerved to ſtirre up, and to quicken the fire, figured out the Preachers of the Word; the fleſh-hooks, which ſerved to take out the parts of the fleſh boiled, that ſome might be for the altar, and ſome given to clean perſons to eat, that ſome doctrine may profitably be taught, but ſome is ſo myſticall, as that we cannot underſtand it, and therefore it muſt be left till we come in heaven, and the fire-ſhovels to carry fire from one altar to another, the Preachers endevouring to make the people to grow from one grace and degree of knowledge to another. The grate upon which the ſacrifice was laid being within, figured out the heart, wherein God muſt be worſhipped, upon this the Prieſt layeth wood, when he teacheth the doctrine of the holy Scriptures, and the ſacrifice is burnt, when the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghoſt, and the ſacrifice is laid ſo, as that it may all and every part be conſumed (for the grate was like a net, ſo that the fire might come freely through the holes to every part) when our hearts are in nothing ſhut, but laid open in every thing for the fire of the Spirit to work upon us and to purge us; the four rings are the four Goſpels fixed to the Church, as theſe to the grate; and the bars, Doctours, who hereupon bear up the faithfull, and erect their mindes with hope, and they are two, for the two ſorts, of the Jews and of the Gentiles; and the altar is hollow, that there may be room enough to contein the ſacrifice, ſo our hearts muſt be empty of worldly thoughts, that we may have room ſufficient for the words of the Lord in us.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Rabanus.

This altar, ſaith Ainſworth, figured out Chriſt, and ſo did the ſacrifices; the altar was ſanctified and anointed, and ſanctified the gifts offered thereon *Numb.*7.1. *&c. Exod.*29.37. *Matth.*23.19. ſo Chriſt was anointed, and by him all our prayers offered up in his name are ſanctified, and we are ſanctified, *Heb.*13.10,15. *Joh.*17.19. *Eſa.*19.19. *Gen.*8.20. the four-ſquare form ſhewed ſhewed firmneſſe, as in the new Jeruſalem, *Revel.*21.16. the four horns ſignified the power and glory of Chriſts Prieſthood, gathering the elect together from the four corners of the earth; the brazen altar, which is moſt durable, for to ſet forth durance: the word braſſe is uſed, *Zach.*6.1. *Revel.*1.15. Ezek. 40.3. Job 40.18. Chriſt enduring of paſſions without being overcome hereby: the inſtruments, pots, ſhovels, &c. ſignified the miniſtery of the Word, which is to purge the corruption of the fleſh, and to quicken the fire of the Spirit. The grate alſo, he ſaith, ſignified the heart, becauſe it was invvard, for here the holy fire muſt alwayes burn, and then the aſhes of our corruptions will fall away. So that indeed both Chriſt firſt and chiefly, and then the heart are figured out in theſe things unto us, and the place, ſaith Ferus, where this altar ſtood, being the Court, out of the Tabernacle, ſhewed, that thongh they had ſacrifices then, and baptiſmes, ſet forth by the Laver placed between the tabernacle and the altar, Chap. 30.18. yet they were not perfect, for they were out of the tabernacle, ours now are within; and he addeth, Chriſt is our Prieſt, altar and ſacrifice, for nothing done in the ſervice of God is acceptable to him, but onely which is put upon this altar, that is, done in the faith of Chriſt. Our daily ſacrifices are our bodies mortified, Rom. 12.1. our almes and praiſes, Hebr. 13.15,16. and a broken heart, *Pſal.*50.

Ainſworth.

Ferus.

Verſe 9. Verſe 10,11 Verſ.12,&c. to Verſe 19.

And thou ſhalt make the Court for the tabernacle on the South-ſide, and the hangings of fine twined linnen 100 cubits long, &c. The Court wherein the tabernacle ſtood muſt be 100 cubits long on the South and North-ſide, and 50 cubits broad both at the Weſt-end, and at the Eaſt: each ſide muſt have 20 pillars with their ſockets of braſſe, and the hooks and fillets to hang the hangings upon of ſilver, the Weſt-end 10 pillars, and the Eaſt-end, three pillars on one ſide of the gate, and three on the other, and in the midſt, where the entrance was four; the height of each pillar muſt be five cubits, and for both the ſides and ends there muſt be hangings of fine twined linnen of the ſame depth with the pillars, and more particularly on the Eaſt end 35 cubits of the breadth muſt be covered on the one ſide of the gate with theſe, and 15 on the other ſide, and ſo 20 muſt be for the gate. Some, becauſe the hanging on the Eaſt-end is diſtinguiſht by cubits 15: 15, and 20, gather, that there were ſo many hangings, as cubits, wrought ſo like a net, that a man might ſee through into the Court, but it is not ſaid 15 hangings on a ſide, but hangings of 15 cubits. The tabernacle was placed at the Weſt-end of the Court, ſo as that it with the ſpaces about it took up half the Court, becauſe from it to the Weſt-end was 20 cubits, and it being 30 cubits long, one part of the Court 50 cubits ſquare was thus ſupplied, in the other part they ſlew and fleaed and offered ſacrifices, and the people ſtood about in it. ſo Simlerus. But I read not of any diſtance, but onely that the tabernacle muſt needs be placed Weſtward appeareth, becauſe the altar was to ſtand towards the door thereof, and the coming in with ſacrifices was at the Eaſt-end, the tabernable being before them. Of all theſe hangings, none are appointed to be of blue, skarlet and purple, but onely thoſe about the entrance, of the reſt it is ſaid onely they ſhould be made of fine twined linnen, becauſe they at the entrance were moſt in the eyes of men that came thither to worſhip, that ſeeing the glory hereof they might be moved vvith the more reverence.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

This Court, ſaith Ferus, figured out the ancient Church of the Jews, who were but, as it were, in the Court diſtinguiſht from the Gentiles, but not in the tabernacle, in which we Chriſtians are, and the ſpaciouſneſſe of this Court ſhewed, that they be very many that are of the Church, although in compariſon of the World they are but a few, and the exceeding broad gate, that God excludeth none from his Church that will enter. Simlerus by the Court underſtandeth the whole multitude of the faithfull, by the firſt part of the tabernacle, the Miniſters, and by the holieſt place heaven. Rabanus by the Court underſtandeth ſuch as are firſt admitted into the Church by the firſt part of the Simlerus.

Rabanus.

the tabernacle, the perfect abiding in this world; and by the other, the glorified in heaven: for the 50 cubits breadth at the West-end, and also at the East, he understandeth hereby the Jubilee to come in heaven lookt at in the first entrance into the Church, and in the end enjoyed, and by the glorious colours at the entrance, that the Church is most glorious, and must be so in the eyes of those that enter it by baptisme; and whereas all things about the Court must be of brasse, it sheweth, that in faith and patience we must be constant anh indure, as brasse. Other particulars of his, because they seem to be overmuch streined, I passe over, onely whereas there were in the gateway of the Court four pillars, he saith, these figured out the four Evangelists, the contents whereof were of old read unto those that were to enter the Church by baptisme.

Verse 20. Verse 21.

And thou shalt command the children of Israel, that they bring pure oil-olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamp to burn always. In the tabernacle without the Vail Aaron and his sonnes shall order it from evening to morning, &c. That there should be a candlestick and lamps, hath been before shewed, but of the matter to be supplied for the maintenance of these lights, and of the ordering of them nothing hath been hitherto spoken, wherefore now provision is made herein. Oil is said to be beaten, because pressed out. For the ordering of it: He that dressed the lamps, came with a vessel in his hand of gold like a pitcher, into which he put the old weeks of those lamps that were out, and the oil that remained; and having wiped the lamps, he put in new weeks and new oil, into each of them the measure of oil for one was half a log, that is, a quarter of a pinte, of this measure, see Levit. 14.10. The old vveeks and oil are cast into the place of the ashes, and those lamps which are not out are onely renued. If the middlemost lamp were out, the Priest lighted that always at the fire of the altar; but others, at another lamp next unto them. Now in lighting the lamps the course was this, all were not lighted at one time, but five onely; after the cleansing and lighting of which the Priest set down his golden pitcher said before to be brought by him in his hand to receive the cleansings into, and goeth out and offereth the blood of the daily sacrifice, and then coming in again he lighteth the other two, after which he offereth incense, and then taking up the foresaid pitcher boweth himself with reverence, and departeth: so Maimony, and Talmud Babyl. Lyranus following Josephus, saith, that all the seven lamps burned all night, but three of them onely by day. It shall be a statute for ever throughout their generations. Aaron and his sonnes are hereby appointed as long as the Aaronicall Priesthood stood, to do this office from even to morning continually. For the mystery, by the lamps, the Word of God is to be understood, which is as a light unto our feet, &c by the oil, the Holy Ghost, whereby these lamps are lightened and kept burning: for the Holy Ghost is often set forth by oil, as Psal. 45. Heb. 1.9. Joh 2.20. oil pure and beaten setteth forth the Spirit coming from Christ pressed and beaten with grievous passions, for he promised to send him, Joh. 16. He enlighteneth the holy Scriptures, vvhen as a light is set up in our hearts to understand them, and by the work of the Holy Ghost they are made effectuall in us. The dressing of them by the Priests, the Ministers reading and preaching of the Word unto the people, for the Holy Ghost worketh not but by the ministery of men, and they dresse them from evening to morning, till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts, 2 Pet. 1.19. Thus Simlerus; and this is the best allegory upon this place. Ainsworth by the oil understandeth the graces of Christ, and of his Saints, and by the fire the Spirit enlightening the Church, and by beaten oil, that grace is not atteined to without great labour, & with much labour the word must be prepared and preached to the people, &c. Rabanus vvill have the oil burning in the lamps to set forth the light of our good vvorks, whereby God is glorified, this oil people must bring, but the Priests must light it, to shew, that the people must bring hearts ready to obey, and the Doctours must minister unto them the fire Maimony Treatise of sacrifices Chap. 3. Sect. 12.

Talmud. Babylon. in Joma, Chap. 3. Lyranus.

The Mystery. Simlerus.

Ainsworth.

Rabanus Maurus. Matth 5 16.

fire of the heavenly Word by preaching, whereby they may be enlightened to know, and inflamed to love God. This oil muſt be pure, ſo muſt the heart be; and beaten, ſo the heart muſt be proved and purged from all mixture of corruption. And the light muſt be ſet up all night untill the morning, becauſe in the morning of glorification we ſhall not need the means of light by the Word, as now we do. And this is ſaid to be a ſtatute for ever, not ſo much in regard of the type, but hereby was meant, that hearers bringing oil and teachers to enlighten them by preaching ſhould never be wanting in the Church of God to the end of the World.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verſe 1. Verſe 2. AND thou ſhalt take unto thee Aaron and his ſonnes, that they may miniſter to me in the Prieſts office. And thou ſhalt make holy garments for Aaron, &c. After the Ordinances of the Court and Tabernacle, follow thoſe touching the Prieſts, and firſt of their garments. Inſtead of holy garments, the Septuagint have, holy ſtoale: it is ſaid, that theſe garments ſhould be for beauty and glory; the Septuagint, for honour and glory; hereby the higheſt degree of dignity being ſet forth, honour in the heart being given, and externall glory and ſplendour. Theſe garments, ſay the Rabbins, were like the garments of great men, and when they grew foul, they were put on no more, but new in ſtead thereof, they being laid aſide to make week for the lamps. And the High Prieſts garments waxing old were laid up in ſtore, and the white garment, wherein he ſerved upon the faſting day, mentioned, *Levit.*16.4. he never put on the ſecond time, but it lay alwayes where he put it off, as is appointed, *Levit.*16.23. neither might it be put to any other uſe: ſo Maimony. Theſe garments muſt be made to ſanctifie Aaron to the executing of the Prieſts office, for if he miniſtred before God without them, it was death, *v.*43. hereby he was ſeparated from the people to ſerve God in the Prieſts office, as by a diſtinguiſhing outward ſigne. Theſe garments were ſo holy, that not onely they that ware them were ſanctified, but alſo they, amongſt whom they came, *Ezech.*44.19. The garments were. 1 A breſt-plate. 2 An Ephod. 3 A robe. 4 A broidered coat. 5 A miter. 6 A girdle: and unto theſe are added, a plate of pure gold to be faſtened to the miter, *v.*36. and breeches of linnen, *v.*42. All theſe the High Prieſt did weare. 1 Putting on the linen breeches next his fleſh. 2 A coat of fine linen put over the breeches; this Ainſworth calleth a coat of circled work, ſaying, that it differed from embroidered work, in that this was all of one colour, white, but that of divers colours, and others render it alſo, tunica ocellata, and the word here uſed properly ſignifieth circled or eyed, and ſo it is uſed, *v.*11. for ouches, that is, hollow round things like eyes. So Maimony ſaith, that the coats both of the High Prieſt and of the inferiour Prieſts were of circled work, having many hollow places in the weaving like cups, and therefore our tranſlation having it, a broidered coat, and afterwards, *v.*39. thou ſhalt imbroider the coat, would be corrected for it, a circled coat, and, thou ſhalt work with circles, being put. 3 He put on his girdle imbroidered, wherewith he girt his coat. 4 A robe all of blue with 72 bels of gold, and as many pomegranates of blue, purple and skarlet, *v.*31,33. this was put over the coat and girdle. 5 An Ephod of gold, blue, purple, &c. upon the two ſhoulders whereof were two Berill ſtones, having in them ingraved the names of the 12 Tribes, and to girt on this there was a girdle of the ſame, *v.*6. 6 A breſt-plate a ſpan ſquare of like coſtly work was faſtened upon the Ephod with golden chaines and rings, *v.*15,16,&c. and herein were twelve precious ſtones placed, &c. the Urim and Thummim. 7 A miter of fine linnen, *v.*39 this was 16 cubits long wrapped about his head. 8 A long plate of pure gold two fingers broad, reaching from one ear to the other, whereupon was ingraven, Holineſſe to the Lord.

Maimony Treatiſe of the Implements of the Sanctuary, *Chap.*8.

Ainſworth.

Maimony Treatiſe of the Implements of the Sanctuary, *Chap.*8. *Sect.*16

Maimony ſaith, that there were 36 Bels on the one ſide, and 36 on the other. Of the Implements of the Sanctuary, *Chap.*9. Maimony.

vers. and this was tied with a lace of blue to the miter. For this order of putting them on, ſee Levit. 8 7,8,&c. Some of theſe alſo did the prieſts wear, as 1 The linen breeches, 2 The fine linen coat circled. 3 The imbroidered girdle; and 4 The bonnet of fine linen anſwerable to the High Prieſts miter, verſ. 40,41. of the length of 16. cubits, as the miter, the onely difference was, that the miter was worn flatter upon the head, and the bonnet rounder and higher, a like thing to which they wear in the eaſt-countreys at this day, ſo Maimony. The word Mitſhepheth tranſlated a miter, ſignifieth a thing wrapped about. The High Prieſts of the heathen did wear the like amongſt the Romans, being hence called Flamines, quaſi pile amines, and without theſe it was unlawfull for them to go out of doors, ſo likewiſe amongſt the Arabians their prieſts were clad with linen garments und miters. The miter was an ornament of dignity for Prieſts, and Princes, Ezech. 21.26. when the high prieſt, and the other prieſts were clad with all theſe, they had their feet and hands bare, which they alwayes waſhed when they went to miniſter before the Lord.

Maimony of the Implements of the Sanctuary, Chap. 8. Pompon. Lætus. Plutarchus in Numa. Alexand. ab Alexand. lib. 2.

Once a year, when the High Prieſt went into the moſt holy place to make expiation for the people, he put on none but theſe fine linen garments, breeches, a coat, a linen girdle and a miter, Levit. 16.4. More particularly to ſpeak ſtill of theſe garments, the Ephod is ſo called from compaſſing fitly the body, and being tied thereto, by the Septuagint ἐπωμίδα a ſhoulder piece, it was, as the Rabbins ſay, of the breadth of a mans back from ſhoulder to ſhoulder, and long behinde down to the foot: ſo Maimony, but Joſephus ſaith, it was a cubit long. It was made of gold, blue purple, ſcarlet and white fine linen, one threed of gold being taken and wrought with ſix of blue, and with ſix purple ones, &c. ſo Maimony. The girdle of this Ephod was nothing elſe, ſaith Maimony, but two hands, as it were, going out from it on either ſide, with which it was girded about the heart under the breſt-plate. The two ſtones appointed to be ſet into the ſhoulder-pieces of the Ephod are commonly rendred Onyx ſtones, by Joſephus, Smaragd, by Maimony, Berill. But the word שֹׁהַם ſignifieth the Onyx: theſe ſtones were imboſſed in gold four-ſquare, that is, ſet into hollow places made of gold, called ouches verſ. 11. and the names of the children of Iſrael, were ingraven upon them according to their birth, Reuben on the one, and Simeon on the other on the left ſide, then Levi on the right, and Judah on the left, and ſo the reſt in order, to Joſeph and Benjamin. And theſe names muſt be upon the Prieſts ſhoulders for a memoriall: this memoriall, ſaith Simlerus, ſome refer to Aaron, as if it were meant, that he might remember he ſtood inſtead of all the people, and therefore according to his office might remember to pray for them, but others refer it to God, before whom they were thus remembred in ſupplication, his bleſſing upon them being entreated, and that he would remember his old promiſes made unto them, and this I rather prefer. Beſides this, there was another common Ephod of linen, which Samuel alſo is ſaid to have worn, and David when he danced before the Ark, it was in form like unto this, but it was properly called Ephotar, ſaith the Scholaſtical hiſtory, and was linteum, ſed mirâ arte vermiculatum.

Verſe 6. Exod. 29.5. Maimony. Ioſeph. lib. 3. Antiq. c. 8.

Verſe 9.

Verſe 11.

Verſe 12. Simlerus.

Scholaſt. hiſt.

The word tranſlated breſt-plate is חֹשֶׁן, of uncertain ſignification, but becauſe it was put upon the breaſt we render it a breſtplate, the Septuagint becauſe the oracles were given by Urim and Thummim in this, render it λόγιον, the vulgar Latine, rationale. Caſhah, of which this word may come, ſignifieth ſilence, and Cazah, ſeeing, ſo that it might have the name Coſhaz, becauſe it was a ſilent Oracle, to be ſeen rather, then to be heard. And it was called the breſt-plate of Judgement according to ſome becauſe therein appeared in any difficult caſe, what was to be done, and in doubtfull caſes, as of War, whether they ſhould go out or no and how, ſo Joſephus, according to others becauſe hereby judgements were kept from lighting upon them for their ſins; according to others, becauſe the Prieſt ſhould have a care of anſwering the people rightly, when they came to inquire of God touching any matter. I preſer the firſt, becauſe hereby the High Prieſt judged of the will of God touching any thing, about which he went to inquire for the people, Num. 27. 21. and Saul inquired by Urim, 1 *Sam.*28.

Verſe 15.

Joſeph.

Ainſworth.

Verſe 16. Maimony. Joſeph. The form of the breſt-plate muſt be four-ſquare doubled, that is, ſaith Maimony, being two ſpans long, and a ſpan broad, that when it was doubled, the length and breadth might be alike. Joſephus by a ſpan will have Dodrans, that is, a meaſure twice ſo big, as the hand-breadth underſtood, viz. one twelve fingers broad, and the word זרת is expounded a palm extended with the four fingers to the length of half a cubit; And ſo great it muſt needs be, that it mighr contain ſo many precious ſtones, and the Scholaſtical hiſtory ſaith it was doubled for ſtrength to hold the weight of theſe ſtones. Scholaſt. hiſt. Verſe 17,18 Upon this breaſt-plate twelve precious ſtones were ſet in four rowes: and upon them the names of the twelve tribes were ingraved, and they were ſet in gold. Touching theſe ſtones in particular, moſt of them are mentioned, as the garniſhing of the foundation of the walls of the new Jeruſalem, *Revel.*21.19. as the Sardius, the Topaz, the Smaragd or Emrauld, the Saphir, Jaſper, Amethiſt, Chriſolyte and the Beril, and therefore the Reader may look in my Expoſition there for the properties of theſe, for the Onyx I have ſpoken enough, *Gen.*2.12. ſo that there remaineth no more to be ſpoken of, but the Carbuncle, Lygure, and Achate; but for Carbuncle, Ainſworth. Ainſworth hath a Smaragd: and for a Smaragd or Emrauld in the ſecond rowe he hath a Calcedony, & the word ברקת according to ſome ſignifieth a Carbuncle, according to others, a Chryſolite or a Smaragd. The word נפך as it is rendred an Emrauld, or by the Chaldee a Smaragd, Iſmeragdis, ſo in Targum Hieroſolym. it is rendred Cadcedana, to which Calcedony is near, and therefore this being the name of a precious ſtone, *Revel.*21. he chooſeth rather to expreſſe it hereby. For a Ligure in the third rowe he hath an Hyacinth, and ſo he ſaith ſome copies have it, and this name is alſo uſed, *Revel.*21. And for an Achate in the ſame rowe he hath a Chryſophraſe, ſignifying a golden green, according to the name uſed, *Rev.*21. becauſe the beſt Achate or Agate is green with a golden liſt, ſo that theſe precious ſtones being taken for ſuch are alſo ſhewed, Revel. 21. what they be. Onely for their proper belonging to the ſeverall tribes, I will adde thus much more, that the Sardius ſtone being ruddy was fitly ſet upon Reuben, becauſe that tribe was warlike, the Smaragd upon Levi, becauſe the tribe of Levi was a light unto the reſt in divine things, as this ſtone gliſtered and ſhone like the Sun, having the name from ברק lightening. The Calcedony, which as Pliny ſaith, was one ſort of a Carbuncle, ſhined like a Star ſomewhat of a purple colour, upon which Judah was aptly ſet, becauſe of the Star, that came of that tribe, Chriſt Jeſus. The Hyacinth in Hebrew called לשם was the ſtone for Dan, becauſe Dan had Joſhua 19.47. a City afterwards called Leſhem portended hereby, but the name was then turned into Dan a Chryſolite in Hebrew Tharſhiſh ſignifying the Ocean Sea, *Pſal.*48.8. did bear the name of Aſher, who dwelt near the Sea. Hitherto Ainſworth. And that it may the better be underſtood, how Aſher came to be placed in the Chryſolyte, and Dan in the Calcedony, and likewiſe the reſt upon each ones proper ſtone, it is to be known, that upon the firſt rowe were Reuben, Simeon, Levi, upon the ſecond Judah, Iſſachar, Zabulon, upon the third Dan, Naphtali, Gad, upon the fourth Aſher, Joſeph and Benjamin, ſo Maimony. The breſt-plate thus made and adorned muſt be faſtened upon Aarons breaſt by chains and rings and blue ribbins to the Ephod at his back, and ſo it is ſaid he ſhould bear the names of the children of Iſrael upon his heart unmoveably. Maimony. Verſe 22,23 24, &c. to 29.

Verſe 30. Thou ſhalt alſo put upon the breſt-plate the Urim and the Thummim, and they ſhall be upon Aarons heart, &c. When the making of the Prieſts garments is again ſpoken of, Chap. 39. and all the parts thereof by curious workmen, who made them, this Urim and Thummim are not once mentioned, but *Levit.*8.8.

Moſes

Moſes is ſaid to have put them upon the breſt-plate. They were not therefore things made by any workman, as other parts of the breſt-plate, but it was a myſtery delivered by God to Moſes, and Gods own work taken by Moſes, and put on to the breſt-plate, when Aaron had it on, as Rabbi Menahem well obſerveth hence. Of what form this myſtery was, and where placed on the breſt-plate, and whether they were any words written there, is not revealed, and therefore Expoſitours are ſo much diſtracted in their conjectures hereabout. Some think that the name יהוה was meant with the interpretation thereof, becauſe by the knowledge of God the minde is enlightened, as it were with Urim, ſignifying illuminations, and by the ſame knowledge man is brought to perfect happineſſe, as it were by Thummim, ſignifying perfections. Others, that divers names of God are meant, becauſe the words are plurall, the force whereof was to illuſtrate the precious ſtones ſo, as that hereby was known what the anſwer of the Lord was to ſuch as came to enquire. Thus Simlerus, naming other conjectures alſo. Others think, that as upon a plate of gold put upon the Miter there was written, Holineſſe to the Lord; ſo there was a plate of gold, upon which theſe two words Urim and Thummim were written, which was put into the breſt-plate being made double for this purpoſe, that ſomewhat might be put into it. Others, that they were none other, but the precious ſtones before ſpoken of, ſo Ainſworth ſaith. The Scholaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, There is a tradition, that in the midſt of the breſt-plate there was a fourſquare ſtone of the bigneſſe of two fingers, whereby according to the change of the colour they conceived whether God were angry or propitious. Joſephus ſaith, that the Sardonix towards the right ſhoulder ſhone ſo bright, vvhen the Sacrifice pleaſed God, as that it might be ſeen afar off, and when the people were to go out to war, all the ſtones ſhone ſo bright, that all the people might know, that God would be preſent unto them, if their going out were with his approbation; but this vertue, he ſaith, ceaſed two hundred yeers before his time for the ſins of the people. But we read no more of it after the captivity of Babylon, onely it is mentioned as vvanting, vvhen the ſecond Temple was built, Ezra 2.6. *Nehem.*7.65. and in the Talmud Babyl. it is ſaid, there vvere five things vvanting in the ſecond Temple, vvhich vvere in the firſt, the Ark vvith the Mercy-ſeat, the fire from Heaven the Divine Preſence, that is, the Oracle, the Holy Ghoſt, that is, in the High Prieſt to inſpire him, or in the Prophets, becauſe after Zachariah, there were no more Prophets ſent by the Spirit, neither did the High Prieſt give anſwers, and laſtly, the Vrim and Thummim. Hitherto out of the Talmud. Yet Rab. Moſes Bar Maimon ſaith, they made in the ſecond Temple the Urim and Thummim, but they did not hereby enquire any more, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt was not there. For my part, when I weigh all theſe Expoſitions ſeriouſly, I think that opinion moſt probable, whereby it is held, that theſe two words were given to Moſes ready written, but in what they were written is uncertain: I doubt not but it was ſome precious matter, whereupon, prepared by the Lord, as he ſome time prepared the Tables of the ten Commandments, and this moſt probably was put in the doubling of the breſt-plate above, ſo that the Vrim and the Thummim might appear above. Or elſe there was ſomething given by the Lord to Moſes, wherein there was a repreſentation made of theſe two, light and perfection, and hereby it might be judged in any difficult matter enquired about, what the wil of the Lord was. If the names of God had been graven upon it, it would have been plainly ſpoken of, as in the golden plate upon the Miter was written, Holineſſe to the Lord, and all the precious ſtones upon the breſt-plate cannot be meant, becauſe they were put in by the workmen, but Moſes put on this, *Levit.*8.8. It was therefore doubtleſſe a thing ſhevved by the Lord unto Moſes, of Gods ovvn preparing, and given to him to put upon the breſt-plate, to be a means to judge of the will of God, according to the name a breſt-plate of judgement, but how it might be judged hereby is uncertain. Maimony ſaith, When any man came to enquire,

R. Menahem.

Simlerus.

Ainſworth.

See upon 1 Sam.28.6. Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Joſeph's.

Talmud. Babyl.

R. Moſes.

Exod.3.9.

Maimony Treatiſe of the Inplements of the Sanctuary, *Ch.*10.*Sect.*11.

quire, the Prieſt ſtood with his face before the Ark, and the party enquiring behinde him, who asked, Shall I go, or ſhall I not? &c. and that with a low voice, after the manner of one praying; then the Spirit came upon the Prieſt, and he ſavv in ſo many letters upon the breſt-plate, either Go up, or Go not up, and accordingly made anſwer to the enquirer. But this was not done for any common perſon, but either for the King, or for ſome man on whom depended the affairs of the Common-wealth, neither was any more then one thing asked at once, and if any asked more, he had anſwer but to one onely. What Joſephus relateth hath been already ſet down, and many follow him, and ſome think that by the vertue of theſe two names, and by the enumeration of certain letters the Prieſt was inabled to give anſwer. I think that of Maimony moſt probable, and it agreeth beſt with the name, as hath been already ſhewed.

Talmud Babyl.

After the ceſſation of anſwers by the Urim, the Hebrews ſay, that they had anſwers by an echo, which they call Bath Col, the Daughter of a voice, but when the Oracle of Urim ceaſed, the ſpirit departed from Iſrael, and went up into Heaven, and this echo was inferiour to the anſwer thereby, as that was to prophecie. And it is ſaid, that Aaron in bearing the breſt-plate ſhould bear the memoriall of the children of Iſrael, *verſ.*29. of which memoriall, the Scholaſtical hiſtory ſaith, that it was of three things. 1. That the people ſeeing the names of their anceſtours might be put in minde not to degenerate from their vertues. 2. The High Prieſt alſo ſhould remember to imitate the Patriarchs in their vertues. 3. He ſhould, remembring of whom the children of Iſrael came, be mindfull of them in his prayers and ſacrifices. Of theſe rites there was ſome imitation amongſt the heathen. Amongſt the Egyptians the High Prieſt had an ornament of a Saphir ſtone abont his neck called ἀλήθια, truth, as this was called Urim and Thummim.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

*Ælian.lib.*14.

Verſe 31.

And thou ſhalt make the robe of the Ephod all of blue, and an hole in the top of it, &c. This robe was to be put on under the Ephod, as hath been already ſhewed. For the faſhion of it, it was woven round at the top with an hole for the head to come out, and thence it was divided into parts as into great skirts coming down to the foot, not being joyned any where together but only at the top, after the manner of all other robes, and the threds thereof were twelve times double; ſo Maimony. But Joſephus ſaith, it was woven in one, and not in tvvo pieces, vvithout ſeams on the ſhoulders or ſides. But the other ſeemeth truer, becauſe it vvas not a coat, but a robe.

Maimony Treatiſe of the Implements of the Sanctnary, *Chap.*9.*Sect.*3. *Joſeph. lib.*3. *antiq. c.*9.

Verſe 36 Maimony.

And thou ſhalt make a plate of pure gold, and ingrave upon it, Holineſſe to the Lord. Theſe vvords, ſaith Maimony, vvere ſo ingraven, that they ſtood out above the plate, and vvere not invvard: the vvord tranſlated plate properly ſignifieth a flovver, becauſe it appeared fair and glorious. Yet Comeſtor in his Scholaſtical hiſtory ſaith, that the miter had flovvers on the hinder-part of the head, like Plantain, and on the fore-part one flovver of gold like to the herb, vvhich the Greekes call niſquianum, of the greatneſſe of one finger, and all about certain golden Pomegranates framed vvith their thorny ends. Then ſaith he, upon the forehead hung the golden plate like an half moon vvith the ends upvvard, and hereupon vvas graven aioth adonai: by the name יהוה, vvhich four letters do ſignifie principium vitæ paſſionis iſte, ſhevving of vvhom the High Prieſt vvas a type, viz. of Chriſt, that man of paſſions, by vvhom vve recover life again being formerly loſt by ſin. Thus Comeſtor; but vvhere he had it, vvhen as vve read of nothing in the miter, but of fine linen, I cannot conjecture. And vvhereas, as vvas noted before out of Maimony, that the high Prieſts miter vvas ſomvvhat flat, he ſaith it vvas riſing to the top like a moſt ſharp Pyramis, and he ſaith, there vvas another ſevved upon it all of blue, compaſſed vvith three rankes of golden circles, but I leave this to the author. By vvearing the golden plate, it is ſaid, that Aaron ſhould bear the iniquity of the holy things offered by the people, and they ſhould be accepted cepted, that is, this ſhould be a ſigne unto them of their acceptation by the holineſſe of the Lord imputed unto them.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Verſe 38 Ainſworth.

And thou ſhalt make the girdle of needlework. This, ſaith Joſephus, was four fingers broad, made like a ſnakes skin hollow, and was adorned with flowers red, purple and blue, and the woofe was onely fine linnen, and this being tied about the breſt once or twice hung down to the ankles, but when the Prieſt miniſtred, that the ends might not trouble him, he caſt it upon his left ſhoulder. But the Rabbins ſay, it was about three fingers broad, and 32 cubits long, ſo that it might come often about, and was put next to the coat under the robe. Verſe 39. Joſeph. lib.3.c.8 Antiquit.

After this the common Prieſts garments are appointed, of which enough hath been ſaid before; and it is added, Thou ſhalt anoint them, conſecrate, and ſanctifie them: for conſecrate in Hebrew is, fill their hands, that is, put fleſh and bread in their hands for conſecration, as *Chap.*29.23,24. the Septuagint rendereth it, fill their hands, the Chaldee, Thou ſhalt offer their offerings. Touching the anointing oil, ſee *Chap.*29.7. and 30.23,30. Verſe 40. Verſe 41.

Laſtly, the holy linnen breeches to cover the privities are appointed, and theſe it is ſaid, Aaron and his ſonnes muſt have on, when they miniſter, leſt they die; ſo likewiſe it is ſaid of the robe, *v.*35. and it is to be underſtood of all the implements about the Prieſts or High Prieſt: if the one miniſtred with fewer then the eight before-named, or the other with fewer then four, it was death, even as if a ſtranger ſhould preſume to come and miniſter, becauſe a Prieſt without any of his garments was as no Prieſt, but as a ſtranger, ſo Maimony, adding that if any put on more, as the Prieſt any thing peculiar to the High Prieſt, it was alſo pain of death, Verſe 42,43 Numb.1.51. Maimony Treatiſe of the Implements of the Sanctuary, *chap.*10.

For the myſtery, it is not to be doubted, but that in every of theſe particulars God had reſpect to another end. The Prieſthood was inſtituted to make an atonement betwixt God and man, but thoſe Prieſts being ſinners themſelves could not do it; wherefore by this Prieſthood was figured out the Prieſthood of Chriſt, who is the propitiation for our ſins, 1 The linen breeches figured out his pure generation, his being conceived and born in the womb of the holy Virgin without ſin. 2 The fine linen white coat, his new life and moſt pure converſation amongſt men. 3 The blue robe above this behung with bels and pomegranates, being moſt glorious, his glory, after that he had been baptized by John, for then he began to ring as it were with his bels by open preaching of the Goſpel, and theſe bels were heard not onely in the Tabernacle, but alſo in the Court, that is, to all the ends of the earth, but they were placed beneath, to ſhew, that this ſhould chiefly be done in the laſt age of the world, and the pomegranates ſhewed his excellent fruits. 4 The Ephod upon the ſhoulders bearing the names of the children of Iſrael, figured out his bearing of the ſinnes of his people and ſuffering therefore; the two Onyx ſtones figured two peoples, Jews and Gentiles, for whom he ſuffered; and he beareth them not onely by ſuffering for their ſinnes, but by protecting and defending them, according to that, I have carried you as upon Eagles wings. 5 The breſt-plate, wherein the ſame names were engraved again, ſhewed, that Chriſt doth not onely bear up his people, as it were, with his ſhoulders by his power, but upon his heart by love, and that not all in generall onely, but every one in particular, as the twelve names were ſeverally ingraven, never to be blotted out, and therefore they were not written but ingraven. 6 The girdle figured out Chriſts conſtancy and verity in all his promiſes, becauſe a girdle bindeth up the cloaths cloſe to a man, and maketh him the more agil about his buſineſſe, and to ſhew that verity is ſet forth hereby, it is called, the girdle of verity. 7 The miter figured out his Kingly dignity. 8 The crown of gold, or plate with theſe words in it, Holineſſe to the Lord, the Deity of Chriſt. Theſe garments figured out alſo ſome things in the Miniſters of Chriſt, and the garments of the inferiour Prieſts, who may well be counted types of all Chriſtian people, for they are Kings & Prieſts unto unto God, their garments, I ſay, figure out the vertues that ſhould be in them. And in that all Chriſtians are Prieſts, they ſhould be put in minde hereby to do prieſtly offices, pray, teach and offer, and ſo they may be confirmed that the Lord is their inheritance, as it is ſaid of the Tribe of Levi. Why this Tribe was choſen, I know no reaſon but to gratifie Moſes and Aaron, who were of this Tribe: ſo Ferus, who alſo maketh this inſtitution a ground of ordeining Miniſters vvith ſome Ceremonies at this day, although thoſe Ceremonies, as aboliſhed long ago, pertein nothing to us. Yet becauſe a ſolemn ordeining procureth more authority, putteth the ordeined in minde of his duty, and cauſed a more reverent opinion in the people, they uſed prayer and the impoſition of hands in the primitive Church in their ordinations. Rabanus beginning higher, ſaith, Gods bidding of Moſes to take his brother Aaron and his ſonnes to him, figured out Chriſts agreement with Moſes: of the Goſpel with the lavv, and that they vvho are preferred to the dignity of Prieſts ſhould more then others be taken to Moſes, as his brother, that is, be moſt ſtudious of Gods laws, that they may be able to teach them rightly to the people, and ſo as Aaron, be joyned by a double tie to Moſes. The glorious garments of the Prieſts figured out the vertues that ſhould be in the Miniſters of Gods Word, and the eight belonging to the High Prieſt, whereas the common Prieſt had but four, that he who is of greater dignity in the Church, ſhould ſhine more in the gifts and graces of the Spirit, then Miniſters of an inferiour ſort: the gold and glorious colours ſhewed, that nothing ſhould be vile or baſe in the mouth or work of the Miniſter. The names of the 12 children of Iſrael in the Ephod born by the High Prieſt ſhewed, that he muſt remember the Holy Fathers of the Church in their godly example to follow them alwayes, which when he doth, he ſhineth, as with moſt precious ſtones, and is moſt excellent; and theſe ſtones are ſet in gold, to ſhew, that nothing vile or ſordid in them muſt be lookt at to imitate it; and the Ephod muſt be tied with chaines of gold, to ſhew, that his vertues muſt be ſo held together by the band of charity, that he fall not from this eſtate through any mutability happening outwardly unto him. Unto the Ephod is added the pectorall, to ſhew, that when he hath appeared outwardly excellent amongſt men, he muſt alſo inwardly in heart be ſuch in the ſight of the Judge of the whole world. It is called the breſt-plate of Judgement, to ſhew, that what the Miniſter doth outwardly, or judgeth as touching his neighbours, ſhould all be proved by the rule of inward reaſon to his Maker; and it is double, to ſhew, that the inviſible inward Judge may approve of our actions as well as men that are outward; the hand-breadth of the breſt-plate ſhewed a perpetuall and intentive care of this, becauſe a man in meaſuring by the palm, extendeth his hand to the uttermoſt; the precious ſtones upon the breſt-plate, and ſo ſaid to be upon the heart of the High Prieſt, ſheweth, how the Biſhop ſhould alwayes have a care of the ſouls committed to his charge. For the plate of gold upon the miter, he ſaith, it figured out the confidence of our profeſſion, and the bearing of the croſſe in the forehead; having four corners, as herein were theſe four letters, יהוה. The coat of blue, which is the colour of the heavens, ſhewed, that the life of a Prieſt and his meditations ſhould be altogether heavenly. The bels and the pomegranates he hath upon his coat, that is, alwayes of a fragrant ſmelling and fair life through the many graces that are in him, and ſoundeth none other but the ſweet ſound of ſuch doctrine as tendeth hereunto, becauſe a pomegranate is fragrant and fair, and conteineth in it many graines, and a golden bell maketh a ſweet ſound, The miter upon the head ſhewed, that all the ſenſes ſhould be conſecrated unto God, the eyes not to look upon vanity, &c. and a coat of linnen the Prieſt hath when he liveth chaſtely, and a girdle girding it about, but he is not bearing himſelfe upon his chaſtity made more remiſſe to good works, neither doth deſinere by boaſting himſelf hereof. And the linnen breeches he ſaith, ſhewed his abſtinence from marriage, ſpeaking herein according cording to the cuſtome of his Church of Rome, admitting none to the Prieſthood but ſuch, but this is a part of their tyranny, and theſe breeches are unreaſonably drawn to a figure hereof, when as Aaron himſelf and his ſonnes were married men. To that of Ferus, applying all things to Chriſt, I willingly ſubſcribe, and whereas he ſaith nothing of the Vrim and Thummim in the breſt plate; this I hold with Ainſworth was a type of the Spirit in Chriſt without meaſure, becauſe, as hath been already ſhewed, the Spirit was hereby ſet forth, inſpiring the High Prieſt to give anſwers to thoſe that inqnired of him. And in Chriſt was all divine light and perfection, from whoſe fulneſſe we all receive, and the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt cometh thus unto us. For the plate or crown of gold upon his head, whereby it is ſaid, that the High Prieſt ſhould bear the iniquities of the people in their holy things, this ſhewed, that by Chriſts holineſſe we are delivered from all our ſinnes and imperfections in the ſervice of God, and ſo our worſhip is acceptable before him. Now as the High Prieſt had his peculiar garments, ſo the other Prieſts had theirs, which were the ſame, but not ſo many, and hereby were figured out divers graces in Chriſts Miniſters, and alſo in all the faithfull; forſomuch, as now we are by Chriſt all become Kings and Prieſts unto God. The identity of theſe garments ſhewed, that Chriſts righteouſneſſe is our garment put on by by faith, whereby we appear glorious. And the breeches in particular may not unfitly admoniſh us of chaſtity; the linnen coat of purity and unblamableneſſe of life; the girdle ſo various and beautifull in the colours, of having our mindes girt up from worldly things to heavenly, which make men ſhine, as it were, with divers excellent colours, when as from hence they utter divers excellent inſtructions; and the bonnet upon the head, the conſecration of all our ſenſes and faculties unto God The anointing, ſhewed the anointing with the Spirit; the coat with the bels and pomegranates, the ſound of teaching, and the fruit of good workes; and Vrim and Thummim, the light and integrity in the heart.

The Myſtery. Ferus. Deut.32.11. Epheſ.6. Revel.1.6.

Acts 13. 1 Tim. 4. Rabanus.

Ainſworth.

Col. 2. 3.

CHAP. XXIX.

AFter the garments of Aaron and his ſonnes appointed, now followeth their conſecration, and the putting on of their garments. Moſes muſt put them upon them, and preſenting them at the door of the Tabernacle, have a bullock and two rammes ready to be offered up in ſacrifice for them, &c.

Take one young bullock and two rammes. The word tranſlated, bullock is פר, not ſo great as an oxe, nor ſo little as a calf. And unleaven'd bread, and cakes unleavened, tempered with oil and wafers unleavened, all made of wheat-floure. And theſe muſt all be put in one basket, and be brought with Aaron and his ſonnes to the door of the Tabernacle, becauſe they figured out one Chriſt, by whom we are ſanctified; the bullock and rammes brought to be killed there, figured out his death; the unleavened bread and cakes, the freedome of him, the bread of life from all leaven or corruption of our old nature; and the oil, the graces of the Spirit in him.

Verſe 1.

Verſe 2.
Verſe 3.

Then he muſt waſh Aaron and his ſons with water, and put the holy garments upon him, and anoint him, and the holy garment for his ſons upon them; waſhing generally was inſtituted in the Old Teſtament in acknowledgement of our naturall corruption and the filthineſſe of our ſins, which had need to be cleanſed away, that we may be fit to come before the Lord, and therefore when the people were ſanctified to receive the Law, it was by waſhing. Chap. 19. and divers other waſhings were inſtituted, and this cleanſing from ſin is not but by the blood of Chriſt applied by a lively Faith. Now the waſhing here ſpoken of was not only to cleanſe in common,

Verſe 4.
Verſe 5.
Verſe 6.
Verſe 7.
Verſe 8.
Verſe 9.
Similem.

as

as others were hereby counted to be cleanſed, but to ſanctifie & ſeparate them from the reſt of the people to be Prieſts unto God, and to ſhew, that they, who were to intercede for the ſins of others, ſhould be themſelves moſt clean and pure from all ſin, and this waſhing was at a Laver anointed and ſanctified to hold the water, Exod. 40.7,12. Levit. 8.6. *Exod.*30.17, 18. And this waſhing to prepare for ſacrificingwas alſo imitated by the heathen, as by Ulyſſes, Penelope, and Telemachus in Homer, and hereby they thought all ſin to be expiated, as afterwards the ſuperſtitious Jews thought alſo, counting vertue to ſanctifie to be in the outward act done. Of this Ovid ſpeaketh, ſaying, Our Ancients have thought, that they could take away all wickedneſſe and all the cauſe of evil by waſhing. And having ſpoken, how even murtherers were thus expiated amongſt the Greeks, he addeth: Ah too eaſie of belief, who think, that the ſad crimes of murtherers can be taken away by the river-water. After waſhing the garments appointed muſt be put on, whereby what is ſignified, hath been already ſhewed: but in that waſhing goeth before, and then they are put on, hereby is intimated, that the Chriſtian waſhed by baptiſme is endued with grace, that is, moſt precious in the ſight of God. And touching the fore-ſaid garments, firſt the High Prieſt is to be clad, and then the inferiour Prieſts, and the garments of the High Prieſt mentioned here are but ſeven, and thoſe of inferiour Prieſts but three; for the Breeches are not ſpoken of, becauſe, as is moſt probable, not Moſes, but they put them on themſelves. By the ſeven here mentioned ſome underſtand ſeven morall vertues, by the linen coat, purity of life, by the girdle, diſcretion; by the long robe with Pomegranates and bells, edification by good works, by the Ephod, bearing with the infirmities of others, by the breſt-plate, knowledge and ſincerity, by the miter, an intention directed towards God, and by the plate of gold, wherein vvas graven Holineſs to the Lord, the contemplation of God and of his vvorks. For although Chriſt be firſt and chiefly pointed at in this attire, yet becauſe the Apoſtle plainly alludeth to theſe in his breſt-plate of righteouſneſſe, girdle of verity, and helmet of hope, &c. the graces of his faithfull members, vvherevvith they muſt be clad, might vvell be ſignified alſo. The omiſſion of the breeches here, ſaith Beda, ſignified, that the genitall members of the prieſt ſhould not alwayes be reſtreined, but Rupertus, that virginity was not by the precept of the Law, but by the counſell of the Goſpel, Radulphus, that they were umbraculum vitiorum, ſhadows of vices not of vertues, as the other garments were, and therefore they are here omitted. Some, ſay that they are not named, becauſe not for ornament, as the reſt, but to cover their ſhame, and this laſt is moſt ſimple for the letter, and the firſt for the myſtery, to ſay nothing of the reaſons brought by others, becauſe of little force. For the colours in ſome of theſe garments, Jerome by the white in the linen underſtandeth the earth out of which it groweth, by the purple, the Sea, out of which it cometh, by the blue, the Heavens, unto vvhich it is like, and by ſcarlet, the fire, vvhich is red, and ſo hereby vvas intimated that all things vvere under Gods government, before whom the prieſt miniſtred in theſe colours, and for the like reaſon he underſtandeth by the twelve precious ſtones the tvvelve ſignes of the Zodiake. But Comeſtor is herein moſt punctuall, ſaying, the High Prieſt in his attire figured out all the world; his breeches and linen coat girt about with a girdle, the earth with the waters compaſſing it about; the blue robe, the Air; the bels, the Thunder; and the Pomegranates, lightenings; the Ephod, Heaven full of Stars, the tvvo precions ſtones, the Sun and Moon, the twelve, the tvvelve ſignes, the miter, the Empyrean; Heaven and the Crown of gold above all, God.

Ovid.Faſt.2.
Omne neſas omnémq; mali purgamine cauſam credebant noſtri tollere poſſe ſenes.
Ah nimium faciles, qui triſtia crimina cædis Flumineâ tolli poſſe putatis aquâ.
Simlerus.

Gloſſ.Doway.

Epheſ.6.12.

Beda.
Rupert.lib.2.in Levit.c.2.

Radulph.

Hieron.

Verſe 7. Chap.30,22 Pſal.133.2. Auguſt.Hom. 14. in Levit.

And thou ſhalt take the anointing oil, and poure it upon his head, &c. This is thought by ſome to be miſplaced, becauſe when his miter was on he could not pour it upon his head, but they are deceived, becauſe being poured upon his miter ſtanding on his head, it was poured on his head, and his forehead might be anointed, as it followeth, poure it upon his head, head, and anoint him, and the ointment poured upon Aarons head is ſaid to have run down upon his beard and all his attire. And this anointing was peculiar to Aaron, his ſonnes were not anointed, but onely, *verſ.*21. they were ſprinkled, as he, with the anointing oil and blood together. Some boldly take upon them to determine in what form he was anointed, Lyranus following Rab. Solomon ſaith, that the letter Caph was made upon his forehead, Toſtatus, the letter Theta, and Lorinus the letter χ; but theſe are vain imaginations, ſeeing no mention is made of any form. The anointing of Aaron ſingularly figured out the anointing of Chriſt with the oil of gladneſſe above his fellowes, as Rupertus hath it; and Heſychius ſaith, as Chriſt was anointed, ſo are we, although not in the ſame manner, as Aarons ſons had oil put upon them, but not as Aaron, he had it poured on, they ſprinkled, wherefore as he is called Chriſt, ſo are we Chriſtians from anointing, he had the fulneſſe of the Spirit, as an whole horn of oil, and we all receive of his his fulneſſe. And hence came the name Meſſiah, whereby Kings and Prieſts were called for their anointing, *Levit.*4.3. 1 *Sam.*12 3,5. Some will have the ſingular anointing of the High Prieſt to be a figure of the power of the Archbiſhop to conſecrate others, and ſome, that he ſhould excell all others in the fragrancy of his good works. But I reſt in the former for the anointing of Aarons ſons ſpoken of, *Ch.*30. *verſ.*30. and *Ch.*40. verſ 15. it was oil and blood, *verſ.*21. Touching the garments of the inferiour prieſts, although their girdle may ſeem to be the ſame with the High Prieſts, yet ſome think that it differed, becauſe it was of linen, but the High Prieſts was imbroidered with gold, blue ſilk, purple, &c. as the Ephod was. He had indeed a linen girdle alſo, *Levit.*16.4. but beſides this, he had a girdle of the Ephod imbroidered, which the inferiour prieſts had not, *Exod.*28.8. called alſo by another name חשב, whereas the common girdle is called אבנט. They alſo ſay, that the bonnet of the prieſt differed from the miter of the High Prieſt both in matter and form, becauſe that was of linen and round, this of blue ſilk and higher, but this is contrary to Maimony before who knew theſe things better then Toſtatus.

Auguſt. hom. 14. in Levit.

Lyranus.

*Pſal.*45. *Rupertus. Heſych. in Levit.*8.

Tho. Aquinas 1.2. *quæſt.*102. Lorinus.

Toſtatus.

Exod.28.8.

If it be demanded how Moſes could conſecrate a prieſt, ſeeing he was no prieſt? Some anſwer that he was a prieſt, becauſe, Pſal. 99.6. it is ſaid, Moſes and Aaron amongſt his prieſts, but the word Cohanim ſignifieth princes as well as prieſts, and therefore that cannot be hence inferred. Lyranus ſaith, that he is called a prieſt, becauſe till the conſecration of Aaron, he executed the prieſts office, but that is not probable, becauſe Aaron was the firſt-born. Vatablus ſaith, that Moſes and Aaron are ſaid to be amongſt the prieſts, becauſe moſt excellent amongſt thoſe that called upon the Lord, and to this do I aſſent. For that Moſes was not a prieſt, is plain, becauſe he was never appointed to this office and when Moſes and Aaron are ſpoken of together, it is ſaid, Moſes and Aaron the prieſt, not prieſts. Touching his authority to conſecrate, it was by the ſpeciall command of God at an extraordinary time, when there vvere no prieſts to conſecrate others. But afterwards the High Prieſt that ſucceeded, vvas not conſecrated by anointing, but onely by putting on the anointed garments of the High Prieſt, *Num.*20. 26. as Auguſtine thinketh. But it is plain that he was anointed, becauſe *Num.*35.25. he is ſpoken of as anointed, and *Eoxd.*29.29, the garments of Aaron ſhall be his ſons to be anointed therein, wherefore it is to be held, that in the hiſtory of Eliezer his conſecration, it is underſtood, although not mentioned for brevities ſake, unleſſe we ſhall hold, that his putting on of the garments formerly anointed, is called his being anointed, as Simlerus doth. Neither do we read of conſecrations after Moſes by vvhom they vvere made, or touching the form of them to give us any light hereinto. But for conſecrating Biſhops or ordaining of Presbyters under the Nevv Teſtament vve knovv, that Chriſt firſt appointed Apoſtles, then the 72, and the Apoſtles ordained Biſhops and Deacons, teaching other Biſhops in ſucceeding ages to do do the like for ever.

Queſt. Auguſt. quæſt. 23. in Levit.

Lyranus.

Vatablus.

Numb.26.63, 64.

*Auguſt qu.*23. Lyranus.

In the conſecration of Aaron one thing is remarkable, ommitted here, but at the time, vvhen this vvas done, mentioned Levit 8.3. All the Congregation was aſſembled at the door of the Tabernacle, to vvhich Aaron and his ſons vvere brought; vvhy muſt they be all preſent? Heſychius anſvvereth, that this was done to figure out the Church that ſhould be congregated, becauſe all things which God cauſed to be done by Abraham & Moſes were myſticall, and by the door of the Tabernacle he underſtandeth the doctrine of Chriſt, ſometime called doors by the Septuagint, to ſhew that all the doctrines of the Apoſtles were but one and the ſame with Chriſts. But to leave this, the true reaſon was, that being conſecrated in the ſight of the people, they might acknowledge him, and have no reluctting in their mindes afterwards againſt him, but be obedient unto him: So Origen, Lyranus, and Pellicane.

Queſt. *Heſychius in Levit.*8.

Origen. Lyranus. Pellican.

And thou ſhalt cauſe the bullock to be brought, and Aaron and his ſons ſhall put their hands upon the head of the bullock: Then the bullock muſt be killed, and the blood poured out at the bottom of the Altar, & ſome of it being taken put upon the Horns of the Altar with his finger, and all the fat muſt be burnt upon the Altar; but the fleſh, skin and dung without the hoſt. As a bullock is offred now for conſecration of the Prieſts, ſo if a Prieſt ſinned, a bullock muſt be offered for expiation, which was as much as for all the congregation, a goat for a Ruler, and a kid for a common perſon And as now their hands muſt be upon the head of the beaſt, ſo in the caſe of having ſinned, and the ſame courſe was to be followed by others, *Levit.*4. This putting of hands upon the head was a Symbole of the confeſſion of ſins then to be made, for expiating which the bullock was to be offered, and therefore confeſſing is ſpoken of, *Levit.*5.5,6. and over the goat, *Levit.*16.21. This impoſing of hands, ſay the Rabbins, was in the Court-yard, the place were the beaſt was immediately to be killed, and it was of both his hands with all his might upon the very head, nothing being between his hands and it. And the impoſer ſtood with his face to the Weſt, laying his two hands betvveen the tvvo horns, confeſſing and ſaying, I have ſinned, I have committed iniquity, I have treſpaſſed and done this great wickedneſſe, and now do return with repentance before thee, and with this I make atonement. Maimony. And the beaſt whoſe blood was ſhed for atonement, figured out Chriſt, whoſe blood was ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins, &c. The blood taken upon the Prieſts finger, and put upon the horns of the Altar was thus uſed, the Prieſt took the blood in a baſin, and brought it to the Altar, and then with the forefinger of his right hand dipped in it ſtrook it upon one horn, then wiping his finger clean upon the lip of the baſin, he dipped it again and ſtrook the ſecond, and likewiſe the reſt of the four horns, beginning at the South, and then coming to the Eaſt, the North and the Weſt, and where he made an end, there he poured out the blood remaining. Maimony. Under the Altar the blood was put, that by the heat of the fire it might be conſumed. Now the Altar, upon which the blood was thus put, was the brazen Altar in the Court, and herein offerings made afterwards for ſin differed from this, in that the bloud of ſuch Sacrifices was taken and carried into the Tabernacle, and put upon the golden Altars horns, which was for incenſe, if the ſin were of the Prieſt, or of the vvhole congregation, but for a Ruler, or private perſon, it was put onely upon the horns of the brazen Altar, as here, and ſuch were Aaron and his ſons as yet. This putting of bloud upon the horns of the Altar was to ſanctifie it, and to cleanſe it, as appeareth, verſ. 36,37. *Ezech.*43,25,26, &c. that by it the Sacrifices afterwards offered upon it might be ſanctified, *verſ.*37. *Matth.*23.19. The bullock taken was not a calf, nor fully grown, but one of two yeers old, and therefore was not offered to expiate Aarons ſin about the golden calves, as ſome have fondly imagined, for that ſin was not yet committed. And upon the head of it he and his ſons put all their hands, not thus to receive power to offer ſacrifice, according to ſome, for in the caſe of ſinning the ſinner alſo put on his hands, but

Verſe 10,11

Verſe 12.

Verſe 13.

Verſe 14.

Levit.4.

Maimony of the Offerings of Sacrifices, *Chap.*3.

Verſe 12.

Maimony of offering Sacrifices, *Chap.*5. *Sect.*7.

Levit.4.3.7.

Levit.4.25.

Tho. Aquinas.

but that every one of them might be consecrated. In the case of sin committed by the whole congregation, all did not so, but the Elders onely, vvho represented the whole, because so great a multitude could not, and many of them haply vvere not guilty, but as sin committed by the body vvhereof they were members, extended unto every one. Whereas not only a bullock is now offered, but all other sorts of Sacrifices also, this vvas to sanctifie them to the offering of all manner of Sacrifices. Touching the burning of the fat upon the Altar, both of the invvards, the caul, and the kidneys, these were burnt in Sacrifice, say the Hebrews, to make atonement for the sin of man proceeding from the lusts of the liver, the thoughts of the reins, and the fatnesse of the heart. For the most inward part is the heart, & therefore the fat of the inwards may aptly set it forth, and a fat heart is put for a corrupt, sensuall, and hard heart, and full of unbeleefe, in divers places, because fat hindereth the feeling, the burning of this fat therefore might typifie the casting away and consuming of the corruption of the heart in those that offer themselves up unto God, as we are exhorted *Rom.*12.1. the caul is of the liver, *vers.*22. and it is otherwise called the midriff; the Septuagint render it λοβὸν, the lap of the liver, and the kidneys are the reins, the seat of the seed of generation, here and in the liver is the beginning of lusts and inordinate desires, and therefore these are aptly figured out hereby to be consumed also. Moreover, fat is sometime put for the best, as *Gen.*4.4. *Nehem.*8.10, &c. and thus it figured out, how we should give the best of our goods to God, and because all this grew within, that must be offered where the heart lieth, our serving of the Lord with the invvard heart and desire vvas figured out hereby, *Joh.*4.24. And hereby vvas figured out the passion of Christ invvardly, and hovv that there he burnt in suffering the most ardent heat of Gods wrath due to our sins, when he said, My soul is heavie to the death. For the burning of the flesh, skin and dung without the camp, it may be demanded, Why it must be so, considering that the flesh of a sin-offering, the blood whereof was not brought into the Tabernacle, as this was not, was appointed to be meat for the Priests, and onely that the blood whereof was brought into the Tabernacle, must be burnt with fire? To this some answer, that this was to distinguish betwixt the sin-offering of the Priest, and of the common sort, or that they were not yet Priests, and therefore there being no Priests to eat this flesh, it must be burnt. But the first of these reasons is insufficient, and the second is overthrown, *vers.*32. where flesh is spoken of peculiar to the Priests, which they should eat before their consecration fully ended. The true reason then was, because no man must eat of the offering made to expiate his own sins, for to eat thereof is to intimate an ability to bear them, and to satisfie for them. For this is yeelded as the reason, why Aaron and his sons must eat the flesh of the sin-offering of the people, viz. because they must bear their iniquity, that is, in a figure of Christ, who beareth the iniquity of us all. And the burning of the bullock without the camp, plainly figured out Christs suffering upon the Crosse without the gates of Jerusalem, *Heb.*13.

Levit.4.

Verse 13.
R. Menahem.

Psal.119.70.
Deut.32.15.
Esay 6.9.

Verse 14.
Quest.
Levit.6.26,30.
Chap.10.18.
Tostatus.
Willet.

Ainsworth.
Levit10.17.

Heb.13.11,12

Then thou shalt take one of the rammes, and Aaron and his sonnes shall lay their hands upon his head, then thou shalt kill the ramme, and sprinkle the blood thereof upon the altar round about, and thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash his legs and inwards, and then he must be offered whole for a sweet savour to the Lord. This sacrifice agreed with the former in that they must lay their hands upon it, that is, as the Hebrews say, one after another, and, as Simlerus hath it, in acknowledgement of their own guiltinesse of death, as this beast came now to be killed, desiring, that their guilt might be transferred to Christ, figured out hereby, and so be expiated by his death. But it differed, in that the ram must be cut in pieces, and part of it washed, and then the whole must be offered up in sacrifice. But this was done to purge the inwards from the filth, and the feet from dirt, because no filthy or unclean thing must be offered. For sprinkling of the blood upon the altar round about, it was to ſignifie, that the blood of Chriſt ſhould be ſpread all over the vvorld by the preaching of the Goſpel, cleanſing all that believe in him in all places from their ſinnes. For the cutting of the ram in pieces, and then offering all, the inwards and feet being waſhed; this was done, to ſhew, that he that vvill be accepted of God, muſt ſeverally examine all his parts and vvayes. Origen more curiouſly noting, that there vvere four parts made. 1 The head and whole body. 2 The vital parts. 3 The entrailes. 4 The feet; applyeth to four ſorts, one vvaſhing Chriſt his feet, another anointing his head, another lying in his boſome, and another touching but the hem of his garments. The vvaſhing of the entrailes, &c. ſhevved both the cleanneſſe of Chriſt our ſacrifice, and hovv vve ſhould be cleanſed vvithin in our conſcience, and be vvaſhed our feet by dedicating our vvorks and life unto God. Toſtatus thinketh, that the skin being plucked off, the vvhole vvas to be offered, but here is no mention made of any fleaing, and therefore it is more probable, that it vvas burnt in the skin. Whereas it is called a ſvveet ſavour, this vvas not becauſe of the pleaſant ſmel, for it could not but be unpleaſing, except to the hungry, but becauſe, as Theodoret hath it, vvhen all things are done according to Gods lavves, this is as a ſweet ſavour unto him, and becauſe the ſacrifice of Chriſt figured hereby was moſt pleaſing to our mercifull Father, as whereby his elect were redeemed from ſin and death.

Verse 15,16
Verse 17,18.

Simlerus.

Oſiander.

Gloſſ. interlin.

Origen.

Oſiander. Gregor. Inteſtina lavat qui conſcientiam purgat, pedes abluit, qui vitam & opera Deo dicat. Theod. quæſt. 62 in Exod.

Verſe 19. Verſe 20. Verſe 21. And thou ſhalt take the other ram, &c. and thou ſhalt take of his blood, and put it upon the tip of Aarons right ear, and of his ſonnes, and upon the thumbe of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot, and thou ſhalt ſprinkle the blood round about upon the altar, &c. Upon this rams head they muſt put their hands, as upon the former, to ſhew, that as remiſſion of ſins, ſo conſecration and grace to be able to execute their prieſtly office came from Chriſt, for this ram was offered for conſecration, as appeareth, v. 22. Toſtatus yet thinketh, that this ram was not called the ram of conſecration, becauſe Aaron and his ſons were by the offering hereof conſecrated, for then the other ram & bullock ſhould have bin called likewiſe; becauſe they were offered in way of conſecration alſo: but becauſe they were anointed and ſprinkled with the blood thereof, wherein their conſecration ſtood. But forſomuch as by the ſacrificing hereof they were ſanctified, as alſo by putting the blood thereof upon them, and to conſecrate is nothing elſe but to ſanctifie to the Prieſts office, I hold rather, that for all theſe cauſes it was called the ram of conſecration, as by the offering whereof and the anointing with the blood of which on thoſe three parts and ſprinkling, they were initiated to the Prieſts office. But the other beaſts before offered are not ſo called, becauſe the expiation of their ſinnes was rather reſpected therein, that they might be fit to be conſecrated Prieſts. For the blood putting upon the tip of their right ear, that is, the higheſt part, as the Chaldee explaineth it, and upon the tip of the thumb of the right hand, &c. this was to ſhew, that their ears muſt be attent to hear the Word from the mouth of God, which they ſhould teach to the people, as Ezech. 3. 17. Eſa. 50. 5. 1 Cor. 11. 23. the putting of blood upon the ear was alſo uſed in cleanſing the Leper, Levit. 14. 14. And blood was put upon the thumbe of the right hand, to ſhew, that their work and adminiſtration was ſanctified, and upon the great toe, to ſhew, that their going and converſation in this office was ſanctified to pleaſe God through the blood of Chriſt. The blood alſo put upon the head and foot might ſignifie the ſufferings of the members of Chriſt, as of him their head. Thus Ainſworth; this is followed by Simlerus, who yieldeth this as a reaſon, why not the tongue but the ear was touched, becauſe the mediatour-ſhip of the Prieſt with God was rather reſpected then his teaching the people. Now the right ear and thumbe, &c. are touched for their excellency above the left, and of the thumbe above the other fingers, it being more pollent, according to the name, pollex, to ſhew, that we muſt ſerve God with our beſt parts, ſo Toſtatus, but Heſychius, becauſe the Toſtatus.

Chaldee Paraphraſt. Ainſworth.

Toſtatus.

the left ſignifieth evill, and the right good, and we muſt die to evil, but live to good: and by touching the part with the blood, the whole was ſanctified. Calvin. Some adde, that theſe parts were moſt remarkable, and therefore in way of diſgrace were cut off, as in Adonibezeck, and the ears are threatened in the diſobedient Jews, Ezek. 22. 5. but here in way of honour they were anointed. And there is ſomething ſpoken touching our Saviour Chriſt, in his ears, Mine ears haſt thou opened, in his hand, Thou haſt holden me by the right hand, and in his foot, That thy foot may be dipped in blood; wherefore the perfection of him in all theſe was figured out hereby. Willet. This third ſacrifice was a peace-offering, as the two former were, the one a ſin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering, and the laſt a meat-offering. For this, ſee Levit. 3. for the firſt, Leviticus 4. for the ſecond, Levticus 9. and for the laſt, Leviticus 7. 12.

Calvin. Hieron. Judges 1. 6. Pſal. 40. 6. Pſal. 73. 23. Pſal. 68. 23. Willet.

And thou ſhalt take of the blood of the altar, and of the anointing oil, and ſprinkle upon Aaron and his ſonnes, and upon their garments. This was further done, to ſhew the ſanctification of Gods Miniſters by the blood of Chriſt, and by the oil of the grace of the Spirit, unto the work of the miniſtery, Heb. 10. 22. 1 Cor. 15. 10. and 3. 10. Thus alſo Heſychius, who ſaith, that blood and oil were put together, to ſhew, that the blood of Chriſt and the unction of the Spirit have one and the ſame effect for ſanctification. And whereas one ram was taken before, and now another; this, he ſaith, figured out Chriſts double ſacrificing of himſelfe. Firſt, in his laſt Supper. Secondly, upon the Croſſe.

Ainſworth. Heſych. in Levit 8.

Then thou ſhalt take the fat and the rump, and the fat covering the inwards, &c. Verſe 22. Of the myſtery in offering the fat of all theſe parts, enough hath been ſaid already, but onely that the rump is here ſpoken of more then in ſpeaking of the fat of the bullock, which was alſo appointed to be ſacrificed, becauſe the rump of a ſheep in thoſe Countreys exceeded in fatneſſe. Some underſtanding by fat the exceeding grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, will have the rump to figure his conſummation and death. And beſides the rump, the right ſhoulder muſt be ſacrificed alſo, which is appointed to the Prieſt as the breſt, v. 27. and Levit. 7. 32. but here Moſes muſt have the breſt for his part, v. 26. The ſhoulder or arm ſetteth forth action, and the breſt, the ſtudy of the minde, theſe therefore being aſſigned unto the Prieſts, ſhewed, that they ſhould ſerve the Lord with all their ſtrength and heart, and the ſhoulder now burnt figured out the mighty arme of Chriſt, whereby he did ſuch wonders as never man was able to do, but yet he ſubmitted himſelfe to be a ſacrifice with this his powerfull arme for us. Moſes hath not the ſhoulder, but breſt onely for his part; becauſe he was no Prieſt, to whom both belonged, but onely executed the Prieſts office at this time in doing ſacrifice.

Radu'ph. Ainſworth. Radulph. Toſtatus.

And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of unleavened bread, that is before the Lord, and put all in the hands of Aaron, &c. Verſe 23. Verſe 24. This oiled bread was tempered with oil, and both it and all the reſt were unleavened, and are ſaid to be in the basket before the Lord with reference to verſ. 2, where they are appointed to be brought in a basket to the door of the Tabernacle. For putting of them in the hands of Aaron and of his ſonnes, and waving of them: this, ſaith Willet, was done by Moſes, when he had put them in the hands of the prieſts, by putting his hands under, and thus moving them round about from the North to the South, and from the Eaſt to the Weſt, ſaith Simlerus. The vvord tranſlated vvaving is ſometime put for ſifting in a Sieve, Eſa. 30. 28. and is applied unto troubles, Eſa. 10. 32. Chap. 13. 2. Chap. 30. 28. This vvaving was to ſeparate them unto an holy uſe, and ſo the Septuagint tranſlate it, and vvhen the offering of the Levites is ſpoken of, Numbers 8. 11. it is ſaid, verſe 14. Thou ſhalt ſeparate them.

Willet. Simlerus.

And thou ſhalt receive them of their hands, and burn them upon the Altar. Verſe 25. Aaron and his ſons are herein dealt withall as other common perſons, becauſe they vvere were not yet fully made prieſts; the Septuagint addeth here, Thou ſhalt burn them for an whole burnt-offering, but becauſe it was only ſacrifice of parts, it could not be ſo called. But here a queſtion ariſeth, ſeeing the ſhoulder, which was one of the things taken, *verſ.*23. is appointed, as the breaſt to be Aarons part, *verſ.*27. how it could amongſt other parts of this oblation be appointed to be burnt? Radulphus anſwereth, that it was not burnt, but this is an errour, the right anſwer is, that *verſ.*27. a decree is made from henceforward, that as the breaſt, ſo the ſhoulder, ſhould be Aarons part: for that it is not to be underſtood of the ſhoulder of this particular offering, is plain, becauſe that muſt be burnt, and the breaſt of this went to Moſes, and therefore Aaron could not have it at this time. *Verſ.*26. *Thou ſhalt take the breaſt, and wave it for a wave-offering, before the Lord, and it ſhall be thy part.*27. And thou ſhalt ſanctifie the breaſt of the wave-offering and the ſhoulder of the heave-offering, &c. Here are two words uſed touching the ſhoulder, heaving and waving, in Hebrew Terumah, and Tenuphah, becauſe as it was moved to and fro, ſo it was heaved or lifted up, and both this and the breaſt are here appointed to be the prieſts part for ever of all the ſacrifices of the peace-offerings of the children of Iſrael: myſtically by the basket, ſaith Heſychius, is to be underſtood the tongue of Chriſt, becauſe his ſpeech was wreathed, as a basket with parables: but Pellican underſtandeth the Holy Scriptures, out of which as out of a basket the Miniſter muſt give bread and meat fit for edification. But as all other ſacrifices, ſo this doubtleſſe figured out Chriſt ſacrificed for our ſins. He was, as a basket conteining within him the bread of life, and he was this oiled and unleavened bread, becauſe anointed with the Spirit, and one with the Spirit, and without all leaven of malicioufneſſe. The heaving up and the ſhaking to and fro of the bread to all parts, the lifting up of Chriſt to the Croſſe, and his waving or ſifting by many temptations and the vertue of his Paſſion extended into all parts. Touching the breaſt ſhoulder, Gregory ſpeaketh acutely, ſaying, This ſhewed that the prieſt ſhould both with his breaſt think the right, and with the arm of his work draw others up on high in their practice and converſation. And from this Heſychius differeth not much, by the breaſt underſtanding the true Faith. And faith or truth in the heart of the prieſt firſt and chiefly, and Heavenly works, and then in every Chriſtian may moſt aptly be underſtood by the breaſt, and the right arm.

Queſt.

Radulph.

Verſe 26,27

Verſe 28.

The Myſtery. Heſych. in Levit. Pellican.

Gregor. Pectore quæ recta ſunt cogitare & armo operis ad ſublimia invitare.

Verſe 29,30

And the holy garments of Aaron ſhall be his ſons after him to be anointed and to be conſecrated therein, And that ſon, that is Prieſt after him, ſhall put them on ſeven dayes, &c. The word tranſlated to be anointed, is an active, to anoint, but is uſed often paſſively, and therefore the Septuagint render it ſo. As theſe garments were put upon Aaron when he was made High Prieſt, and then the holy oil was poured upon them, ſo ſhould they be put upon his ſon ſucceeding him, and be anointed again. If nothing elſe but the putting on of theſe anointed garments vvas meant, as Simlerus partly hath it, vvhen thoſe vvere vvorn out, he muſt onely have garments but not any anointing oil, that cometh on next to be prieſt, vvhich is abſurd. Moreover, as Aarons conſecration and his ſons at the firſt laſted ſeven dayes, *verſ.*35. in all vvhich time they muſt not go from the door of the Tabernacle, but there keep the charge of the Lord day and night, having their prieſtly garments upon them, ſo the prieſt after him muſt keep the time of ſeven dayes at the door of the Tabernacle, vvhich is here meant, although nothing but his putting on of the garments be here expreſſed. Novv in this time vvas the Sabbath-day, whereupon the Rabbins note, that great is the Sabbath day, for the conſecration of the High Prieſt is not perfected, till this hath paſſed over him. If it demanded here, hovv they could keep ſo long in one place, vvithout removing, ſeeing the neceſſity of nature requireth a going out often in this time to avoid excrements? It is anſwernd by Lyranus, that this is to be underſtood to be excepted, becauſe for this purpoſe they muſt needs go out: for vvhen they went

Levit.8.35.

Rab. Elias.

Queſt.

Lyranus.

went for neceſſity and came forthwith again, this might be well counted an abiding there. But Toſtatus thinketh, that they might have veſſels prepared to receive their excrements, to whom I cannot aſſent, becauſe the purity of that place permitted no ſuch thing to be done there. Toſtatus.

If it be demanded, how they could watch ſo long a time together? It is anſwered, that this was not required, but to keep the charge of the Lord in abiding there ſeven dayes, ſo Toſtatus. Laſtly, if it be demanded, whether their garments were put on again, and anointed every of theſe dayes, becauſe it is ſaid, Seven dayes ſhalt thou conſecrate them? It is anſwered, No; but their conſecration was onely iterated by the Sacrifice made each of theſe dayes, as upon the firſt, & by the meat-offering put in their hands & waved, and other rites uſed, as upon the firſt, although the offering of a bullock onely in particular be named, verſ. 36. Lorinus thinketh that the High Prieſt might put off ſome of his garments, and lay them aſide in this time, and put them on again; but this is a preſumption without ground, ſeeing it is expreſſely ſaid, He ſhall put them on ſeven dayes. Myſtically, ſaith Heſychius, the keeping of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, after Chriſts aſcenſion a few dayes, till they had received the Holy Ghoſt, and not preſuming to preach, till that in this time, and by the receiving of the Holy Ghoſt they were conſecrated, was figured out hereby. For this conſecration was finiſhed in ſeven dayes, and they were conſecrated, when the feaſt of Pentecoſt after ſeven times ſeven dayes, or ſeven weeks was fully ended, wherein I willingly ſubſcribe unto him, holding withall according to others, becauſe ſeven is a number of perfection, that hereby was intimated, that the Miniſter of God ſhould continually attend whileſt life laſteth, at the door of his houſe, being there ready at all times appointed to execute his office, and he muſt firſt have time to learn, and to get knowledge in the Law of God, attending therefore with all diligence at the houſe of God, and living retiredly in ſtudy and meditation, that would be a Prieſt of God, and an Inſtructour of others. That of Lyranus underſtanding it of ſeven things, from which the Prieſt ſhould refrain, is true, but conceitedly brought in here: Length of ſleep, pleaſure of eating, unprofitableneſſe of action, multiplicity of diſtraction, vanity of confabulation, variety of fiction, and vility of affection. Other conceits I paſſe over, but onely as Rupertus, we may fitly apply it alſo to all Chriſtian people, hereby was ſhewed, that they ſhould never night or day depart from the faith of the Church. Queſt. Queſt. Lorinus. Heſych. in Levit. Calvin. Radulphus. Lyranus. Prolixitas dormitionis, voluptas commeſſationis, inutilitas diſtractionum, vanitas confabulationis, varietas affectionis.

And thou ſhalt take the ram of the conſecration, and ſeethe his fleſh in the holy place: And Aaron and his ſons ſhall eat it, and the bread in the basket, &c. Here proviſion is made for the ſuſtenance of Aaron and his ſons in theſe ſeven dayes, they muſt eat of the fleſh of the ram that remained, that is, all but the right ſhoulder and breſt, which were the one burnt in Sacrifice, and the other given to Moſes, and this fleſh muſt be ſodden in the holy place, that is, in the Court, by the door of the Tabernacle, where they abode. For the fire wherewith it was ſodden, it was not fire taken from the Altar, ſaith Toſtatus, but common fire, becauſe as none but holy fire might be uſed upon the Altar, ſo none of that fire was to be put to any common uſe. But this is onely conjecturall, neither was that which was prepared for the Prieſts common, but holy. For bread, they were to eat that in the basket, which remained after the bread taken out for the Sacrifice. And all the things appointed to be eaten by them are ſaid to be thoſe, whereby the atonement was made to conſecrate them, by eating a particular applying by faith of the Sacrifice made for our ſins to ſanctifie us, being ſet forth, *Joh.*6.35,51. But of theſe a ſtranger muſt not eat. Some by ſtrangers underſtand not thoſe that were not of the family of Aaron, but ſuch as ſacrificed not, or the polluted, or profane, becauſe he that brought the Sacrifice being of the common ſort of people might alſo eat of it. But it is more probable, as is commonly held, that the meaning is, that none but Aaron and thoſe of his blood ſhould eat of theſe things, becauſe in appointing who ſhould eat of them, none elſe are ſpoken of, Verſe 31, 32 Verſe 33, 34 Toſtatus. Verſe 33. Ainſworth. Simlerus. Lyranus. Toſtatus. Oleaſter. Foyeca.

Verſe 34. of, and they were things peculiarly offered for them, and therefore properly by them to be received. And what remained either of fleſh or bread muſt be burnt. The ſame was appointed touching the paſſeover, Exod 12. but that was for another reaſon, as I have there ſhewed, this was becauſe being part of things offered in ſacrifice, it muſt be uſed as a ſacrifice, that is, burnt with fire, as the other parts had been, which appeareth in the addition, It ſhall not be eaten, for it is holy: but not upon the altar, ſaith Toſtatus, or with holy fire, becauſe it was no part of the ſacrifice, forſomuch as they had eaten part of it, and being in part turned to humane uſe, the part remaining cannot be ſacrificed. It was burnt therefore, as the fleſh of the bullock in another place, but that was burnt without the camp, this in the Court of the Tabernacle. Some yield this as a reaſon, leſt being kept longer, it ſhould corrupt, which was unſeemly for holy things, or leſt the part kept ſhould be an occaſion of ſuperſtition, as the bread of the Sacrament kept ſince hath been. For that reaſon yielded by ſome, becauſe the next daya new ſacrifice vvas made whereof part ſhould be for their food that day, it is of no force; for the fleſh of the laſt days ſacrifice after which they ſhould not be again ſupplied the day following, and therefore that which remained of it was not burnt for this reaſon.

Toſtatus.

Calvin.
Simlerus.

Lorinus.

For the myſtery, Heſychius ſaith, that this fleſh and bread figured out the fleſh of Chriſt, which is bread indeed, and ſo both fleſh and bread, and whereas no ſtranger might eat of it but onely Aaron and his ſons, it ſhewed, that Chriſt muſt be intreated by the prieſt to make it, or elſe it cannot be the Lords ſacrifice, and it muſt be eaten in the holy place, to ſhew, that Chriſts fleſh muſt be received in the Church, as 1 *Cor.*11. and that which remained muſt be burnt, to ſignifie, that things unedible to us by reaſon of our infirmity muſt be committed to the Spirit as a fire, which is when we believe thoſe things to be poſſible to the vertue of the Spirit which are impoſſible to us. See ſomewhat of the like before, *Chap.*12. For the prieſts eating of it onely, and no ſtranger, it ſhewed, that none but the faithfull have part in Chriſt, who are as prieſts unto God, and that the Euchariſt ſhould not be kept, but the remainder of it conſumed in the fire, as Heſychius ſaith, was practiſed in the Church in his time, contrary to the preſent practice of the Church of Rome, where it is kept in a pyxe to be carried about and worſhipped. Hereby alſo, ſaith Simlerus, was ſhewed, that we muſt ſerve God with all readineſſe, no delay being uſed.

*Heſych. in Levit.*8. Non relinqui ſed igni ſpiritus tradi oportet, ut comedat, quæ nobis ſunt ex infirmitate ineſtibilia.

Simlerus.

Verſe 35,36 Verſe 37. After the order ſet down for the firſt day of conſecration, this courſe is appointed to be continued ſeven dayes, in which time alſo the altar muſt be cleanſed, and ſanctified by anointing, that it might be moſt holy, and ſanctifie vvhatſoever touched it. So that the ſame ſacrifices that conſecrated the prieſts, and the ſame anointing oil conſecrated the altar alſo, not that the altar had any ſin, but it vvas thus ſeparated to an holy uſe. The altar figured out Chriſt; who vvas conſecrated by his ovvn blood, and the anointing of the Spirit, and ſanctifieth all that touch him by faith, and the ſame blood of his and Spirit conſecrateth us all to be prieſts unto God. The vvord tranſlated, to cleanſe the altar, is to make it ſinleſſe, and thus houſes are ſaid to be cleanſed, *Levit.*14.49,52. and all things about us, *Numb.*31.20. and Gods houſe, Ezech 45.18. becauſe all things are made unclean by the ſins of men, amongſt vvhom they are, as is expreſſed, *Levit.*16.16. neither can any of the beſt ſervice, vvhich we offer unto God, be acceptable unto him, unleſſe it be cleanſed by the blood of Chriſt from the ſins cleaving thereunto.

Simlerus.

Ainſworth.

Heb.9 21,22. Heb.10 19. Heb.13.14.

Verſe 38,39 Verſe 40. This is that which thou ſhalt offer upon the altar, two lambs of the firſt year, day by day continually, &c. Here is ſhewed to what uſe the altar being conſecrated ſhould be put every day, a lamb muſt be offered thereupon for an whole burnt-offering in the morning, and another in the evening: for, in the evening, in the Hebrew is, between the evenings, but of this phraſe, ſee *Chap.*12.6. This continuall ſacrifice, ſay the Hebrews, was offered in the morning to expiate the ſins of the night, and in the evening to expiate the ſins of the day before before. And with each lambe a tenth deal of floure, that is, the tenth part of an Ephah, which is an Homer, as hath been already ſhewed, *Chap.*16. a fit quantity to remember their feeding in the wilderneſſe of each man with an Homer, ſee *Chap.*25.30.

R. Menahem.

And this floure muſt be mingled with the fourth part of an hin of oil beaten, and the fourth part of an hin of wine, an hin was twelve logs or halfe pintes, of which, ſee *Levit.*14.10. ſo that a fourth part was a pinte and half, and this laſt is called a drink-offering. For the manner of offering it, the Rabbins ſay, it was this, although ſalt be not ſpoken of, yet becauſe all ſacrifices muſt be made with ſalt, *Levit.*2.13. this meat-offering of floure and oil was made ſo alſo, but whereas in other meat-offerings there was incenſe, Levit 2.1. and an handfull onely of the floure was burnt; this was all burnt; and for the drink-offering, the wine was offered upon the altar, not being put upon the fire, but the prieſt lifting his hand on high poured it at the bottome of the altar: ſo Maimony. For the myſtery, by the lamb continually offered morning and evening, Chriſt the Lamb of God was ſet forth, the ſacrifice of whom is effectuall to deliver from ſin alwayes every day, but we muſt through his name come every day morning and evening before the Lord with our ſupplications for this end and purpoſe. By the oil and floure and wine added, we are admoniſhed to bring a gratefull ſavour of faith and repentance before the Lord together with our prayers. Toſtatus in ſetting down the order, how theſe two lambs were offered, ſaith, that the Prieſt roſe and put on his prieſtly garments before the Sun to offer the morning-ſacrifice, and having finiſhed that, about the Sun-ſetting he offered the evening ſacrifice, which was the whole night in burning. And Comeſtor ſaith, that the prieſt when he offered his morning-ſacrifice, put out four of the ſeven lamps, and at the evening-ſacrifice lighted them all again, and then the fatteſt lambe of the two was offered, for which cauſe the evening-ſacrifice is ſpoken of, as more acceptable to God; becauſe Chriſt ſuffered in the evening. And Lorinus addeth, our works ought to be better in the evening of our age. Origen and after him Rabanus ſay, that the whole life of a juſt man is a continuall ſacrificing, and his reading of the law and Prophets, his morning-ſacrifice, his reading of the Evangeliſts, his evening-ſacrifice, becauſe they ſet forth things done in the evening of the world. Or, as Rabanus alſo hath it, the morning figureth out the beginning of our converſation; and the evening, the end; in all which time we muſt offer innocency of work and heart to the Lord by the fire of charity and of the Holy Ghoſt. The floure and oil added, and the wine ſhewed, that our ſacrificing muſt be joyned with knowledge of the law, and the grace of the Evangelicall doctrine tempered together, and hereby hilarity, that muſt be in the ſervice of God was figured out, becauſe oil maketh a cheerfull countenance, and wine maketh glad the heart. The Papiſts inferring hence of the Maſſe, as a continuall ſacrifice, is a confounding of times that muſt be diſtinguiſhed; for this continuall ſacrifice was but a figure of which the verity being come, there is now none uſe any more, they do therefore vainly charge us with the putting down of the continuall ſacrifice, as Antiochus did, becauſe we put down the Maſſe. for they rather are guilty of this, becauſe the onely continuall ſacrifice now is that of Chriſt, which they fruſtrate to themſelves by their new deviſed ſacrifice of the Maſſe, as was done by circumciſion, *Gal.*5.1.

In concluding this about the continuall ſacrifice, he ſaith, I will meet thee there, of which phraſe ſee before, *Chap.*25.22. And the tabernacle ſhall be ſanctified by my glory, &c. There was no vertue in theſe Ceremonies to ſanctifie the tabernacle, altar and prieſts; therefore the Lord promiſeth to ſanctifie them all by his glory, that is, by his glory which ſhould appear there. Some by his glory underſtand Chriſt, in whom alone all things are ſanctified, but I reſt in the firſt.

And I will dwell in the midſt of the children of Iſrael, &c. Of this ſee before, *Chap.*25.8.

Verſe 40.

Maimony.
The Myſtery.
Simlerus.

Toſtatus.

Scholaſt. hiſt.

Lorinus.

Origen.
Rabanus.

Verſe 42.
Verſe 43,44
Ainſworth.
Simlerus.

Verſe 46.

CHAP. XXX.

Verſe 1,2. AND thou ſhalt make an Altar to burn incenſe upon of Shittim-wood, a cubit ſhal be the length, and a cubit the breadth, and two cubits the height, &c. From hence to the end of the tenth verſe the Altar for incenſe is appointed. The word altar Mitzbeach is taken from killing, and ſo properly ſignifieth an Altar to offer ſlain beaſts upon, wherefore unto this is added here Miktar, ſignifying a perfuming Altar. This differed from the Altar, *Ch.*27. 1 Becauſe it was neither ſo long, broad, nor high. 2 It was covered with gold, that with braſſe. 3 This had a Crown of gold round about it, that none but a grate of net-work, which this had not. 4 This ſtood in the Tabernacle neer the vail of the moſt Holy place, that in the Court without. 5 Sweet ſpices only were to be burnt for a perfume upon this, but no Holocauſt, meat-offering or drink-offering, as upon that. 6 The blood of the ſin-offering was to be put upon the horns of it once in a year for an atonement, which was upon the tenth day of the ſeventh moneth, and then the blood taken was of a bullock and of a goat, and it was put upon the horns of the Altar round about, and the prieſt was to ſprinkle the blood with his finger upon the Altar ſeven times, and all this to make an attonement, and to cleanſe and hallow it from the uncleanneſſe of the people, he having before done the like in the moſt Holy place upon and before the Mercy-ſeat, *Levit.*16.14,15. yet in ſome things they agreed, for this was made of Shittim-wood, as that, and four-ſquare, as that, and had rings and bars to carry it by, as that, and horns of the ſame wood likewiſe, but onely that all here were overlaid with gold, there with braſſe, ſo that for the ſignification of thoſe things the Reader may look back to that Altar, *Chap.*27.1. For the gold covering it this Altar is ſometime called an Altar of gold, or golden Altar, as Num. 4.11. and the other the brazen Altar, Exod. 38.30. and for the wood within, a wooden Altar, *Ezech.*41.22. but there it is ſaid to be three cubits high, to ſhew the amplitude of Gods grace under the Goſpel more then under the Law. For the top thereof and the ſides, in Hebrew are roofe and walls, becauſe of the ſimilitude unto an houſe, the Septuagint render it hearth and walls, for the crown ſee the like before about the Ark, *Cha.*25.11. and about the table, *verſ.*24. ſo that there were three Crownes about the holy things, the Crown of the Ark, which the Hebrevves called the Crown of the Law, the Crown of the Table, which they called the Crown of the Kingdom, and the Crown of this Altar, which they called the Crown of the Prieſthood. The incenſe appointed here to be burned is particularly ſet forth, *verſ.*34. and it muſt be burned every morning and evening, when Aaron lighted or dreſſed the Lamps. Simlerus noteth, that not onely the High Prieſt, but other prieſts alſo uſed to burn this incenſe, becauſe Zachariah did it in his courſe Luke 1. See my Expoſition there. The manner of the incenſe burning was this, 1 One went and gathered the aſhes from off the Altar into a golden veſſel. 2 Another brought a veſſell full of incenſe. 3 Another brought a cenſer with fire, and put coals on the Altar, and he, whoſe office it was, took the incenſe and ſtrewed it upon the coals, the other three having firſt bowed themſelves, and being gone out. The incenſe burned daily was 100 denaries, that is, a pound, half in the morning, and half in the evening, and when the prieſt had done burning the incenſe, he bowed himſelf and went out: ſo Maimony. Whereas ſtrange incenſe is forbidden to be offered upon this Altar, thereby is meant any other ſweet ſpices beſides the compoſition appointed, *verſ.*34. Maimony explaineth it thus, if they put honey amongſt it, it was all unlawfull, *Levit.*2.11. or if there wanted any once ſpice appointed, or if he burnt any other ſpices, or the ſame compounded and brought by any private perſon, any of theſe wayes it was made ſtrange incenſe. Comeſtor ſaith, it is doubted, whether the Altar of incenſe were within the moſt holy Verſe 6.

Verſe 7.
Verſe 8,9.
Verſe 10.
Levit.16.29.
Levit.16.18, 19.
Verſe 1,2.
Verſe 3,4,5.
Verſe 3.
Rab. Elias.
Simlerus.
Maimony, of the daily Service.
Scholaſt. hiſtor.

place or without, becauſe Paul to the Hebrewes ſpeaketh of it, as being within. But he erred herein, ſeeing even by Paul it is ſpoken of as being without the vail, and here it is manifeſtly placed ſo. Moreover, touching the Crown round about this Altar, he addeth out of Joſephus, that there were Crownes about each corner hanging over after the manner of a lip. Heb.9.4.

For the myſtery, it is not to be doubted, but as the other, ſo this Altar alſo figured out Chriſt, by whom we offer ſacrifices, and incenſe of prayer to the making of a ſweet ſavour before the Lord. More particularly the ſacrifices ſet forth mortification, and incenſe prayer, both which are ſanctified and made acceptable by the Altar Chriſt alone. And whereas incenſe was offered at the ſame time with the dayly ſacrifice, and then the lamps alſo were lighted, this ſignified, that mortification to ſin, the light of teaching out of Gods Holy Word, and prayer, ſhould go together, and that continually, we muſt alwayes, pray alwayes uſe this light, and be mortifying our members upon earth, and ſacrificing our ſelves, *Rom.*12.1. No ſtrange incenſe muſt be offered, to ſhew, that our prayers muſt be made unto God onely, and in faith, and for ſuch things, as whereby he may be glorified, for then incenſe compounded according to Gods preſcribing is offered, otherwiſe not, and ſo it becometh loathſome and abominable to the Lord, *Eſa.*1.1,12. inſtead of ſmelling ſweetly. The ſprinkling of this altar with blood and doing blood upon the horns ſhewed, that no prayers made by us are acceptable unto God, but through the blood of Chriſt. This altar being of gold, the other without of braſſe figured out his glorified eſtate, after that he was within the Tabernacle of Heaven, as the other his humbled Eſtate, and here is a Crown to ſet forth his Kingly Dignity, and four horns to ſet forth his power in the four parts of the World. Simlerus, the atonement making for this altar once in a year ſhewed, that corruption cleaveth to our very devotion, which needeth purging by Chriſt blood. The Myſtery. Pſal.141.2. Rev.1.8.3. Simlerus.

And the Lord ſpake to Moſes ſaying, When thou takeſt the ſum of the children of Iſrael, they ſhall give every man a ranſom for his ſoul, when thou numbereſt them that there be no plague amongſt them, and the ranſom is half a ſhekel of the Sanctuary, and a ſhekel twenty Gerahs, and this is to be given by every one, that is twenty years old and upward, rich and poor alike, and this money muſt be for the ſervice of the Tabernacle, to make an attonement for them. Having appointed a ſervice requiring charge, now he ſheweth, how it ſhould be raiſed. They muſt be numbered from 20 years old and upward, and every one pay half a ſhekel. This ſaying was an acknowledgement, that they were the Lords tributaries, that they received their lives, liberty and countrey from him, and if they ſhould not pay to him this tribute therefore, their lives ſhould be indangered by his plagues ſent amongſt them. And this was the cauſe, ſay the Hebrewes, that when David numbered the people, the plague was ſent amongſt them, becauſe this ranſom was not paid, this is probable, but not certain. Simlerus ſaith, that this numbering was but from twenty years old to fifty, as they were numbered to go forth to the Wars, but becauſe there is no ſuch limitation here, and there is as much reaſon, that men of fifty and upward ſhould pay this, as well as thoſe that were under, although they were not able to go to War, I paſſe it over as a private opinion, unleſſe the ſame number found, *Chap.*38.26. and *Num.*6.1,46. ſhall ſeem to make for it. The Hebrewes, that ſet forth every circumſtance in this numbering, have nothing tending to this limitation, but onely that Females paid not this ranſom, nor ſtrangers, nor bond-men, nor children, yet if any of them would give, it might be received of all, but onely of infidels. And for the times of numbering, and ſo of paying, although nothing be ſet down here, when and how often they ſhould be numbered, yet the Hebrewes ſay, this was to be done once every year, the 25 day of the moneth Adar, that is, February, Proclamation being firſt made the firſt day of that moneth, that every one ſhould be ready againſt that time, and then ſome ſat in the Temple to re- Verſe 11,12 Verſe 13,14 Verſe 15,16 2 Sam.24. Simlerus. Maimony Treatiſe of ſhekels, *Chap.*1.

ceive it. If the Temple lay waſte, it was not to be paid, but otherwiſe all the children of Iſrael paid both dwelling within the Land and without, that which was gathered of them in other provinces, vvas ſent to the Temple and laid up in a chamber there in coffers. And ſo ſtrictly was it required of every one, that the pooreſt that had not vvherewithall, muſt pay it, although he begged for it, or ſold his clothes off his back for it. And ſo generall was this charge, that all paid it, who were Iſraelites, Prieſts, Levites, and ſervants that vvere free, and Proſelytes, and with this money the daily Sacrifices vvere provided, offerings for the Congregation, ſalt, wood, and incenſe, Shevv-bread, the red covv, &c. vvhereas it may be ſaid, This ſeemeth not to have been a yeerly thing, but onely vvhen the Tabernacle vvas built, becauſe afterwards the people charged themſelves with a yeerly tribute of the third part of a ſhekel, 2 *Chron.*24.5,6. *Nehem.*10.31. Aben Ezra anſwereth, that this was added over and above, for the neceſſity of thoſe times.

*Aben Ezra in Nehem.*10.

R. Menahem.

And for the poor mans paying as much as the rich, Rab. Menahem ſaith, that this was ſo appointed, that all might be equall in the offerings made for the Congregation, that were bought herewith. For the paying of it yeerly, I hold with the Hebrews, becauſe there was a yeerly charge to be maintained hereby; but I do not think that the Prieſts and Levites paid, becauſe they were not numbered amongſt the children of Iſrael; and I ſee no reaſon, if the beggar muſt pay it, but that the ſervant ſhould pay it alſo in the time of his bondage. For the time of the yeer, Simlerus ſaith, it is held to have been paid upon the day of Expiations, which was the tenth day of the ſeventh moneth, anſwering to our September, and this is moſt probable, and not that of February 25. becauſe this ranſom was paid for Expiation, *verſ.*15. The money to be paid, half a ſhekel of the Sanctuary was twice ſo much as hath been before ſhewed, as half a common ſhekel, twenty gerahs, that is, twenty pence, a gerah being the weight of ſixteen barley-corns; wherefore every one was to pay ten pence, which amounted at the firſt numbering to an bundred talents, and 1775 ſhekels. But why muſt not the rich give more, nor the pooreſt leſſe? Anſw. Not onely, as was noted out of the Rabbin before, becauſe every one had equall intereſt in thoſe Sacrifices, but becauſe the rich and the poor beleeving have an equall intereſt in Chriſt, by whom indeed we are ranſomed from our ſins, for both ſorts are alike before God, with whom there is no reſpect of perſons. And that we ought in this Ordinance to look to Chriſt, appeareth, becauſe it was about ranſoming or redeeming of the ſoul, which is not done, but by his blood. This tribute was paid afterwards to Ceſar, being called Didrachma, he challenging it to himſelf, when he had conquered the Jews, but they often reſiſted that Decree, and took up arms to defend the rights of their Sanctuary, and according to this it was, that they asked our Lord, whether they ſhould pay tribute to Ceſar or not, *Matth.*22. and that he being demanded, ſent Peter to take and pay it.

Simlerus.
Levit.16.29.

Exod.38.26.

Queſt.

Verſe 17,18

And the Lord ſpake to Moſes, ſaying, Thou ſhalt alſo make a Laver of braſſe, and his foot of braſſe to waſh withall; &c. From hence to the end of *verſ.*21. a Laver is appointed to be made, and placed between the Tabernacle and the Altar, moſt probably weſtward, becauſe the Sea of braſſe made afterwards by Solomon was ſo placed, and at this the Prieſts muſt waſh hands and feet, when they entered the Tabernacle, or ſacrificed upon the Altar, upon pain of death. Of what form this Laver was, it is not ſaid, but onely that it had a foot to ſtand upon, the Hebrews ſay, that there were twelve ſpouts or cocks from which the water ran, that twelve Prieſts might waſh at once, and it is likely, that there was a conveyance under theſe to convey the water away, ſo Simlerus, who alſo addeth, that hands and feet were waſhed, to ſet forth the purity of our actions, whereof hands and feet be the inſtruments. It was a cuſtom of old to waſh theſe parts before meat, in thoſe hot countreys, and therefore when the Prieſt came as it were to the Lords Table, he muſt waſh

1 Kings 7.

Simlerus.

theſe

theſe for decencie. But herein an higher thing was doubtleſſe aimed at, viz. vvaſhing by repentance, as *Eſa.*1.16. vvithout vvhich no man can appear acceptably before the Lord to worſhip him.

For the matter of this Laver, it was made of the brazen looking-glaſſes of the women, that aſſembled at the door of the Tabernacle, and in alluſion to this, a ſea of glaſſe is ſpoken of, *Revel.*4.6. and *Chap.*15.2. But how could it be made of looking-glaſſes? Comeſtor ſaith, that it was made of the back-parts, vvhich vvere of braſſe, and that the glaſſe vvas ſet upon the top of the Laver round about, that the Prieſts might therein ſee, if there were any ſpot about them, to do it avvay. The devout vvomen that came thither to pray, gave their brazen looking-glaſſes, vvhereby they dreſſed their bodies, to make the inſtrument vvhereby the ſoul through faith might be ſanctified, ſaith Ainſworth. Touching this Laver and waſhing at it, the Rabbins ſay, that it vvas to be filled vvith vvater every morning, for if vvater had ſtood in it all night, it vvas unlavvfull to vvaſh therevvith, or if it vvere foul water, or ſuch as had changed the colour. Waſhing at this Laver they call ſanctifying, and they ſay, if any man vvaſhed elſevvhere, and not at this veſſell, he was not ſanctified, except he vvaſhed in ſome other veſſell of the Sanctuary, and not in a profane one, and he might not waſh in this, but in the vvater running from it. For the times, they ſay, the Prieſt ſanctifieth every morning, and ſo goeth all day without ſanctifying any more, unleſſe he goeth out of the Sanctuary, ſleep, or make water, or cover his feet, or remove his minde to other buſineſſe; for in any of theſe caſes he muſt waſh again. And he muſt ſanctifie ſtanding, not ſitting, putting his right hand upon his right foot, and his left hand upon his left, bowing, becauſe it is ſaid, Deut. 18.5. to ſtand to miniſter. This waſhing ſhewed, how we muſt waſh our hands in innocencie, & ſo compaſſe about Gods Altar in prayer, and that we ſhould be ſprinkled in our hearts from an evil conſcience, and waſhed in our bodies with pure water, & ſo draw neer with a true heart, in aſſurance of faith, which is when we are by faith waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and ſo made Prieſts unto God. And hereby, ſaith Simlerus, we are warned not to handle divine things with unwaſhen hands, after a profane manner, which is, when the Scriptures are expounded according to a mans own ſenſe, and by exerciſing therein the glory of God is not ſought, or the ſalvation of the ſoul, or any goeth about to expound the Scriptures, having not fit inſtruments therefore.

Exod.38.8.

Queſt. Scholaſt miſt.

Ainſworth.

Maimony Treatiſe of entrance into the Sanctuary, chap.5. Talmud. Babyl.

Pſa'.26.6.

Heb.10.22.

Reve'.1.5,6.

Simlerus.

And the Lord ſpake to Moſes, ſaying, Take unto thee principall ſpices, pure myrrhe five hundred ſhekels, of ſweet cynamon half ſo much, and likewiſe of ſweet calamus, and of caſſia five hundred ſhekels, and of oil-olive an hin, and thou ſhalt make of it an anointing oil, &c. That Aaron was to be anointed with oil, and his ſons, and he with blood and oil, hath been already ſhewed, *Chap.*29.7,21. But the making of this anointing oil was not ſet down till now. For the ingredients, myrrhe is the gum of the myrrhe-tree, and for pure myrrhe, in Hebrew, is myrrhe of freedom, that which floweth from the tree naturally and freely being meant, which for ſvveetneſſe excelleth, as Pliny ſaith, ſo Ainſworth. But Simlerus ſaith, that ſome by mar, here tranſlated myrrhe, underſtand muſk, and he ſaith, that it is called myrrhe of freedom, becauſe it freely yeeldeth a moſt ſvveet ſmell all about, without beating or burning. By myrrhe the graces of the Spirit are ſet forth, *Cant.*1.13. 3.6. 4.14. Pſal 45.9. Cynamon is well known to be a ſweet bark of a tree thus called, being uſed for ſweet odours, and is likewiſe put for the ſame graces, *Cant.*4.14. Prov. 7.17. whereas it is ſaid, half ſo much of this, viz. two hundred and fifty, the Hebrevvs ſay, that hereby is to be underſtood one vveighing of it, becauſe there were two weighings, two hundred and fifty being weighed at a time: But this ſeemeth to be contrary to the Text. Calamus was a kinde of ſweet reed grovving in far countreys, as appeareth, *Jer.*6.20. *Eſa.*43.24. Caſſia or Coſtus was another ſvveet cane, in Hebrew Kiddah, mentioned again onely, *Ezech.*27.19. the weight of all theſe muſt be the greateſt, according to the weights Verſe 21,23 Chap.24.25 Ainſworth.

Plin.lib.12. cap.15. Simlerus.

Maimony.

Maimony Treatiſe of the Implements of the Sanctuary, Chap. 1.

weights of the Sanctuary, and thus five hundred ſhekels were about ten pound vveight. An hin of oil was ſix pintes, as hath been already ſhewed, Chap. 29. 40. For the manner of making this ointment, it vvas thus. Every of theſe four ſpices vvas pounded ſeverally, then mixed all together, and ſteeped in water pure and ſweet, till all the ſtrength of them was gone into the water, then the water was mixed with the oil, and boiled together till the water vvas all conſumed, and oil onely remained.

Verſe 26,27 Verſe 28,30

With this oil was anointed the ark, the tabernacle, and all the holy veſſels, and the Prieſts. This typified the pouring out of the Spirit upon Chriſt, his Church, and all ſorts of his Miniſters, making them to caſt a ſweet ſavour in every place through the graces thereof.

Verſe 31,32 Verſe 33.

And for this ointment, a charge is given that no man preſume to make the like, or lay any of it upon a ſtranger, or upon the fleſh of man upon pain of being cut off. Where by the fleſh of man, we muſt underſtand onely of another beſides Aaron and his ſonnes, and therefore the word ſtranger may ſerve for the explication thereof. If it be demanded, whether Kings were not anointed with this, and why the Lord is ſo carefull to forbid a common uſe of it, when as men do not uſe to anoint themſelves or others, but onely in theſe caſes? It is anſwered, that the King was alſo anointed with it, and therefore by ſtranger is to be underſtood one that is neither Prieſt nor King: ſo Maimony and others; and he doth more particularly affirm, that David and the Kings of his houſe onely were anointed herewith; yet not all but ſome of them, as need required, to appeaſe tumults amongſt the people, and to ſettle the right King in the Kingdome. Thus Solomon was anointed againſt Adonijah, and Joaſh againſt Athaliah, 2 King. 11. and Johahaz againſt Jehoiakim, 2 King. 23. 30. As for Jehu, he ſaith, that he was anointed with oil of Balſame. But whoſo ſhall look into the Text, ſhall finde no difference between the oil wherewith Jehu was anointed, and Saul and David; neither can it be gathered that David and his were anointed with this oil, and the charge is expreſly againſt it, for it muſt come upon the fleſh of none but of the prieſts.

Queſt.

Maimony.

Calvin.

Touching the uſe of oil to anoint, it was frequent in thoſe dayes; and therefore to move all men to conſider of ſome divine myſtery in this oil, which might by no means be prophaned by the common uſing thereof, this was prohibited to all men. And what was this myſtery, but Chriſt full of the Spirit figured in the High Prieſt, and the faithfull indued with his grace figured out by the Tabernacle, and all the Veſſels of it anointed herewith?

Verſe 34,35 Verſe 36,37 Verſe 38.

And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Take to thee ſweet ſpices, Stacte, Onycha, and Galbanum, with pure frankincenſe, of each a like weight. And thou ſhalt make it a perfume, &c. As there were four ingredients to make the holy oil, ſo there were four to make the holy perfume, vvhich ſome think to be the ſame, as Simlerius ſaith, although called by other names. But this is improbable. Stacte ſo called in Greek, in Hebrevv, Nataph, ſignifying dropping, is a Balſame that iſſueth out of the Roſin-tree, ſaith Maimony, and in the Jeruſ. Targum it is called Ketaph, ſignifying Roſin, but Nataph is the gumme or fatneſſe that cometh from the myrrh-tree, being very ſvveet and precious, as Dioſcorides ſaith, Onycha in Greek and Hebrevv both ſignifieth a nail, it is ſo called from the forme; Maimony ſaith, it is a nail or ſhell vvhich men uſe to put in perfumes; Dioſcorides, that it is the cover of a ſhel-fiſh like the purple, and is found in the ſpikenards lakes of India, and doth give a ſweet odour, for that the ſhel-fiſhes there do feed upon ſpikenard; of theſe ſome are white, which are the beſt, and ſome blackiſh, both burnt for ſweet odour. Galbanum in Hebrew, Chelbenah, in Greek, Calbance, hath the name from fatneſſe. it is the gum or liquor of a plant growing in Syria, like fennel, of a ſtrong ſavour. The Hebrews ſay, it is the gum of trees growing in Greece, being like black hony, and of a ſtrong ſmell, being burned, it driveth away ſerpents with the ſmell thereof. Sweet ſpices with pure frankincenſe, theſe ſweet ſpices ſome referre to the three before ſpoken of, the Septuagint, to Galbanum, as if the mean-

Maimony.

Dioſcorides lib. 1. cap 62.

Dioſcorides lib. 2 cap. 7.

Maimony of the Implements of the Sanctuary, Chap. 1.

Aruch verb.

meaning were, ſuch Galbanum, as is of a ſweet ſmell, and not of a ſtrong, as the common Galbanum is, ſome to the ſpices be fore-mentioned, verſ. 23. and to the leaves of ſpikenard, which for their excellency in ſweetneſſe are thus called. The Hebrews ſay, that other ſweet ſpices of all ſorts beſides the four nominated are meant, being ſeven in number, for God appointed Moſes in the Mount to take eleven ſorts, of theſe four, of each ſort 70 pound-weight, then of Myrrh, Caſſia, Spikenard and Saffron, of each 16 pound, of Coſtus 12 pound, of Cynamon 9 pound, and of Caſſia lignea 3 pound, altogether 368 pound; a pound for every day in the year, as hath been ſhewed, *v.*3. and whereas the dayes of a year being but 365, there were 3 pounds to ſpare, this was beaten and prepared in the even of the Reconciliation-day. Thus Maimony, but ſweet ſpices have reference plainly to all before-named, and if any other were added, it was a preſumption in the ſuperſtitious Jews. Whereas Galbanum was of a ſtrong ſav our, it could not be meant, that ſweet Galbanum ſhould be taken, ſeeing there is none ſuch: neither doth this hinder, but that theſe altogether might have this Epithite added, ſweet ſpices; becauſe moſt of them were ſweet, and the ſtrength of the one being mixed with the ſweetneſſe of the other, haply yielded none offence, but the perfume was the more pleaſing. For, tempered together, v,35. in Hebrew is מְמֻלָּח, of מלח, Melac, ſalt: it is commonly expounded, tempered or mixed, but it may more properly be read, as Ainſworth rendereth it, ſalted, becauſe no offering was to be made without ſalt, Levit. 2.13. whereupon the Rabbins teach, that nothing was offered without ſalt, except the wine of the drink-offerings, the blood and the wood, and to an oblation of incenſe they put the fourth part of a cab of ſalt, that is, the quantity of ſix eggs. Touching the puniſhment of him that ſhould preſume to make the like perfume to this; the Rabbins ſay, that if any man made it, although not ſo much, and although he ſmelt not to it, he ſhould be cut off, if he did it preſumptuouſly; but if ignorantly, he muſt bring a ſacrifice according to the law for ſins of ignorance, and the ſame is taught by them touching the holy ointment.

Maimony of the Implements of the Sanctuary, *Chap.*2.

Verſe 35. Ainſworth.

Maimony of things forbidden to be offered, *Chap.*5.

Verſe 38. Maimony. Treatiſe of the Implements, *Ch.*2.

For the myſtery of this perfume, it figured out prayer, according to the *Pſal.*141.2. as was noted before, v,3,4,5. vvhere this myſtery is alſo further ſet forth. Onely that vvhich hath not been yet touched, is further to be conſidered, viz. that Galbanum, of a ſtrong ſmell, driving avvay ſerpents, vvas put amongſt the ſvveet ſpices, to ſhevv, that by faithful prayer the Devil is put to flight. Simlerus applieth it alſo to the grievouſneſſe of the Croſſe, and to hypocrites, vvhereof there be ſome alvvayes in the Church, by reaſon of vvhom there is ſomevvhat ſmelling ſtrong in the prayers thereof. Again, the ſalt, *v.*35. ſignified vviſdome and grace, vvherevvith if all our ſpeeches muſt be ſeaſoned, then our prayers much more. Again, the beating of all theſe ſvveet odours ſmall, *v.*36. ſignified afflictions, vvith vvhich vvhen vve are beaten, the prayers that come from us are moſt ſvveet, or it ſignified contrition of heart, vvhich is the ſacrifice that God vvill not deſpiſe, and unto theſe Ainſworth addeth, that exactneſſe about the particulars to be prayed for is alſo ſet forth. Laſtly, the puniſhment of him that preſumed to make the like to this perfume, ſhevved the fearfull caſe of thoſe that ſhall abuſe prayer, and prophane it, by uſing it commonly, or for faſhion, or for a pretext onely, ſome vvorldly end being aimed at, as it vvas abuſed by the Phariſees, vvho under the colour of long prayers devoured vvidovvs houſes.

The Myſtery.

Simlerus.

Col.4.6.

Pſal.51. Ainſworth.

Matth.23.

CHAP. XXXI.

AND the Lord ſaid to Moſes, I have called by name, Bezaleel, the ſon of Uri, the ſon of Hur, &c. v.6. And I have given with him Aholiab, the ſon of Ahiſamach, &c. Although God had ſhevved Moſes a pattern, and inſtructed him touching all things that vvere novv to be made for the ſervice of God, yet

Verſe 1,2,6, &c.

yet it was impoſſible for work-men onely by his relation to conceive how perfectly in every reſpect to make them, and therefore God ſaith here, that he had given Wiſdom and underſtanding to ſome, whereby they knew, how to do it, Again, if we conſider that the children of Iſrael had hitherto been uſed onely to hard labour and not to curious Arts, we muſt needs acknowledge, that it was neceſſary, that they ſhould be extraordinarily gifted from God to build that Ark and Tabernacle, as the Apoſtles being illiterate men were afterwards endued with the gift of tongues for the building of the ſpirituall Tabernacle or Church of Chriſt. Bezaleel the maſter-workman appointed was of the tribe of Judah, and the ſeventh from Judah, See 1 Chr. 2. 5. 9, 18. Hur was his grand-father, to whom together with Aaron the Government of the people in the abſence of Moſes was committed, and his great grand-father Caleb, who was ſo famous. Whereby it appeareth that Bezaleel was a chief man in his tribe, and of the chief tribe, The Hebrews ſay, that Hur his Grand-father had to wife Miriam, the ſiſter of Moſes and Aaron: yet he is appointed to work in building the Tabernacle, and the veſſels thereof. It is then no baſe, but an honourable work to labour in the work of the Miniſtery, whereby the Church of God is edified, and doth well become ſuch, as are of Noble birth.

Note.

Verſe 3. I have filled him with the Spirit of God in Wiſdom and underſtanding and knowledge in all manner of workmanſhip. By the Spirit underſtand the gifts of the Spirit; for from the Spirit of God cometh even the knowledge and underſtanding to make Artificiall works, and hence we may gather, that all Arts, wherein we may admire the invention, which are for the uſe and benefit of man, come from Gods Spirit, who is therefore to be lookt at herein, that he may have the praiſe, when comfort cometh to us hereby. For what is it, ſaith Simlerus, that maketh a notable Artiſt? 1 Art. 2 Nature. 3 Exerciſe. But all theſe come from God, the invention of any Art is the gift of his Spirit; Nature is a force put into man by God, and to be indnſtrious to practiſe is the gift of God. By Gods calling of Bezaleel by Nature is meant nothing elſe, hut that he had made him excellent for theſe works, lifting him up by the gifts given unto him above the common ſort; God hereby declared, that he had made him a chief man, upon whom others ſhould attend, and be inſtructed by him and directed. To ſet forth which, the Chaldee rendereth the next words, to deviſe cunning works, to inſtruct artificers, as it is ſaid, Chap. 35. 34. And it is added, to work in gold, &c. So that there were in Bezaleel three things, a calling, gifts, and a working, and theſe three are required in every builder of Gods houſe. Bezaleel ſignifieth in the ſhadow of God. Aholiab, that is joyned with him, was of a more obſcure tribe and parentage, for he was of Dan, that came of Bilhah an hand-maid. Aholiab ſignifieth the Tabernacle of the father; in the Greek he is called Eliab. As to be a workman in Gods Tabernacle is an honour to the noble, ſo the obſcure are indifferently imployed by the Lord therein, that his calling to this office in all might be referred not to mans worthineſſe, but to his Grace.

Simlerus.

Calvin.

Chald. Verſe 4.

Verſe 6.

Note.

Queſt. Simlerus.

Calvin.

And on the hearts of all that are wiſe-hearted I have put Wiſdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee. If they were wiſe-hearted already, it may be demanded, how it can be ſaid, I will put Wiſdom? Simlerus anſwereth, that either it is meant, that the Wiſdom, which they had, was given them by God for this end, or elſe that their Wiſdom ſhould be increaſed to be able to do theſe works. And this laſt is beſt, ſo Calvin more fully ſaith, ſuch, as are apteſt and have the moſt dexterity, I have increaſed by the gift of my Spirit in their Wiſdom and knowledge, that they may do all theſe curious works: whereas in reckoning up the works, that they ſhould do, not onely the Tabernacle and Ark and their veſſels, &c. are named but alſo Aarons garments and the holy oil and perfume, to which the Art of imbroidering, and of the Taylor and Apothecary is neceſſary, but Wiſdom and knowledge to do theſe is not mentioned, verſ. 4. 5. it is underſtood here, as we may ſee by the the particular mentioning of these also, Chap. 35.35. Bezaleel and Aholiab then were the chief, but because two men could not do such great works without more help, divers others are appointed to work under them.

Verſe 10, 11

By clothes of service, spoken of vers. 10. besides Aarons garments, vails, and coverings of the holy vessels are meant, Num. 4.5,9,11, &c. for such there were to cover them, when they removed.

And the Lord said to Moses, Speak to the children of Israel saying, Verily my Sabbaths shall ye keep, it is a sign between me and you, &c. for verily, in the Hebrew is אך, which may also be rendred, notwithstanding, that is, although the work of the Tabernacle be to be done with haste, yet ye shall rest and not do any of that holy work upon the Sabbath, because it is a labour of the hands. Simlerus standeth rather for this reason, the Sabbath was to be kept by assembling to the Sanctuary, and therefore order being taken for the making of the Sanctuary, the due keeping of the Sabbath had need to be enjoyned over again, because if then it were not frequented, it should with so great cost and Art be made in vain. And therefore, Levit. 19.26. the Sabbath and the Sanctuary are named together, as if the one were sanctified by resorting to the other to sacrifice and pray, &c. This, howsoever it be true, that upon the Sabbaths the Tabernacle was to be frequented, doth not yet seem to be the main reason of iterating this precept touching the Sabbath here, but rather the other before rendred, because not meeting at the Tabernacle, but resting from work is mentioned, as the cause of this injunction, ver. 14 15. The Law of the Sabbath is often set down, Gen. 2. Exod. 16. Exod. 20. Exod. 23.12. Ex. 35.2,3. whereby it seemeth that the Lord specially standeth upon keeping of this day. See Nehe. 9.14. Eze. 20.12,16,20,21. Esa. 58.13. The Rabbins say, that the precept of the Sabbath, and that against idolatry are each of them as weighty, as all the rest of the Law: wherefore whoso transgresseth any other Law, is a wicked Israelite indeed, but the prophaner of the Sabbath an idolater and infidell in all his affairs, for which cause the keeper of the Sabbath is blessed, Esa. 56.2. The reasons of keeping the Sabbath here used are two. 1 That it may be a sign between me and you, and that I am the Lord that sanctifieth you. Is was a signe, as circumcision, that the Lord was their God, and that they were his people, separated from, and sanctified above all other peoples of the world, amongst whom the Sabbaths were not kept. And therefore the same is repeated again.

Between me and the children of Israel it shall be a signe for ever. The Caldee hath it, between my Word and the sons of Israel; whereupon the Rabbins gather, that other nations are not bound to keep the Sabbath, but the Israelites onely, yet an Israelite may not speak to an heathen to do any work for him upon the Sabbath-day, yea he may not speak to him the day before to do it upon that day. But forasmuch as the Law of the Sabbath was made immediately after the Creation, all nations were doubtlesse bound hereby, but because it was amongst them neglected, the keeping of it might well be a distinguishing signe to distinguish the Israelites from other peoples, and it is said to be a signe for ever as circumcision, Gen. 17.13. The second reason is, because God having made the World in six dayes rested the seventh, so that for a remembrance of the Creation, and to uphold the faith thereof the seventh was appointed to be kept, as a Sabbath. The punishment of him that brake the Sabbath was cutting off, or being put to death, iterated again and again, to shew the certainty of it, that is, say the Rabbins, if there were any witnesses thereof, he is to be stoned to death by men, if not Gods hand shall finde him out to destroy him, unlesse she breaketh the Sabbath out or ignorance, and then he must bring an offering, as is appointed in that case. Touching the sanctifying of the Sabbath-day, the Rabbins say, that these words of blessing and sanctifying it are to be used at the beginning thereof, Blessed be God, who hath given his Sabbaths for a remembrance of the Creation, a beginning of holy convocations, a remembrance of his

The Septuagint supply this, as if it were in the text in this Chapter. Verse 5. Chap. 26.1.

Verse 12,13

Verse 14.

Simlerus.

Maimony of the Sabbath, ch. 30

Verse 15. Reason 1.

Verse 17.

Maimony of the Sabbath, ch. 6. G. n 2.

Reason 2.

Verse 14,15 Numb. 15.27. Maimony of the Sabbath, chap. 29.

peoples coming out of Egypt, and who of his love hath choſen and ſanctified his Church above all peoples: at the ending theſe words, Bleſſed be God, who hath ſeparated between the holy and profane, between light and darkneſſe, betvveen Iſrael and other people. Whereas it is ſaid, God reſted and was refreſhed, this is ſpoken according to man, not that he needed refreſhing.

Verſe 18. And he gave unto Moſes, When he had made an end of communing with him, two tables of teſtimony, tables of ſtone written with the finger of God. This vvas at the end of fourty dayes, *Chap.*24.18. vvherefore much inquiry is made by ſome, vvhat Moſes did vvith the Lord in the mount all that time? For the ten Commandments, and all the other Lavvs and Ordinances might have been delivered in far leſſe time. The Hebrevvs ſay, that he delivered the Cabala to Moſes in this time conſiſting of letters and ſyllables, vvherein they pretend many myſteries, but this is onely a phantaſie of theirs. Simlerus ſaith, It is moſt probable, that he was taught the true ſenſe of theſe Laws, and the myſteries touching Chriſt and his Church lying hid in the ceremonies, & that he was held thus long, that he might the more thorowly meditate hereupon, & come down with the more authority amongſt the people, ſeeing his being kept there fourty dayes and fourty nights without food argued, that he was with God all that time, who onely can do all things, and received theſe Laws from him. It ſeemeth to me, when I conſider that God made Moſes to wait ſix dayes before he ſaid any thing to him, *Chap.*24.16. that this long time was taken to ſet forth the ſtate of the Majeſty giving theſe Laws the more. For mighty Princes are not alwayes to be talked withall, but at their own times, now a little and then a little; ſo it is probable, that God ſpake of one thing one day to Moſes, and of another thing another, making him to attend between the delivering of one thing and another, ſometimes two or three dayes or more, that he might the more conſider the weightineſſe of theſe Ordinances, and accordingly preſſe them to the people. The Tables of ſtone, wherein the ten Commandments were written, ſhewed their durability, as of old laws were graven in tables of braſſe, for the ſame end. The writing of the Law, ſaith Ainſworth, is ſpoken of three times. 1 In tables of ſtone prepared by God. 2 In tables of ſtone prepared by Moſes. 3 In the fleſhy tables of the heart under the Nevv Teſtament, *Ezech.*11.19. 2 *Cor.*3.3. By the firſt, the vvriting of the Lavv of God in the heart of all men is ſet forth, for men even in the ſtate of corruption doing by nature the things of the Lavv, ſhevv the Lavv written in their hearts. By the ſecond, the vvriting of the Lavv in the hearts of the Jevvs, prepared and poliſhed by Moſes. And by the third, the vvriting of the Law in the hearts of the faithfull by the Spirit of Chriſt, *Ezech.*36.26. *Heb.*8.10. Betvvixt vvhich tvvo laſt there vvas this difference, the Jevvs heart poliſhed by Moſes continued ſtony ſtill, and unchanged; they boaſted of the Lavv, and of their skill therein, but did contrary to it: but Chriſt by his Spirit changeth the hearts of the faithfull, ſo that they vvalk in his Lavvs. And of this difference betvveen Moſes and Chriſt, their Rabbins ſpake upon Cant. 1.1. Let him kiſſe me, &c. For hereupon they ſay, that vvhen the people prayed, that Moſes and not God might ſpeak unto them, leſt they ſhould die, they ſaid, Oh that God would ſhevv himſelf again, and kiſſe us vvith the kiſſes of his mouth, that his Doctrine might be faſtened in our hearts; but Moſes anſvvered, This cannot be done now, but it ſhall be done in the dayes of Chriſt, *Jer.*31.33. Simlerus ſaith, that hereby was ſignified, that we of our ſelves are ſtony and ſtupid to the underſtanding and doing of the things of the Lavv, and that we may live according to it, it muſt be written in us by the finger of God. I think that tables of ſtone firſt given, may moſt aptly ſet forth man in his creation; for God made him righteous, but Gods work being broken in his fall, this righteouſneſſe being corrupted, after a long time the Lavv is written in Tables prepared by Moſes, ſo that there was ſomething to convince of ſin, and to make man more inexcuſable, but no power

Queſt.

Hebræi.

Simlerus.

Job 19.24.

Ainſworth.

Rom 2.14.

Rom.2.17.

Midraſh Cant. 1.1.
Simlerus.

Eccl.7.20.

povver given to live according to this Lavv, wherefore Chriſt cometh by his Spirit, and writeth them in the heart. There vvere tvvo Tables, becauſe two ſorts of precepts written therein. 1 Touching our duty to God. 2 To our neighbour. And becauſe tvvo things muſt be in our hearts. 1 Underſtanding and faith to beleeve. 2 Grace to do the good, and to leave the evil undone. By the finger of God, vvherevvith theſe Laws were written, underſtand the Spirit of God, *Matth.*12.28. Laſtly, they are called Tables of the Teſtimony, becauſe they do teſtifie unto us, what the will of God is. For the number of the Commandments in each of theſe Tables, I have ſhewed the divers diſtinctions made by divers in my Catechiſme.

CHAP. XXXII.

AND when the people ſaw that Moſes delayed to come down from the mount, they gathered themſelves together againſt Aaron, ſaying, Up, make us gods, &c. Verſe 1.

The word tranſlated delayed, ſignifieth confounded, whereupon ſome have gathered, that through the abſence of Moſes all things grew to a confuſion, as in an Anarchy; but the word is plainly put for delayed, becauſe ſtaying over long maketh thoſe that expect his coming aſhamed, as it is ſaid of King Eglons men, *Judg.*3.25. They ſtayed till they were aſhamed. And for delaying the word is uſed, *Judg.*5.28. Their coming upon Aaron, ſay the Hebrevvs, was in a tumultuating manner, offering violence unto him, if he yeelded not, and in this tumult killing Hur, becauſe he reſiſted, and that he was in danger of miſchief from them, appeareth verſ. 22. They expected that Moſes ſhould ſet up ſome viſible ſigne of Gods preſence amongſt them, vvhich whileſt they wanted, and Moſes alſo, they were ſo groſſe, that they thought that they were deſtitute of the Divine Preſence, and therefore would have a viſible god ſet up, which might go before them in the way. Make us gods, The device of ſome here, that by Elohim, gods, they meant another Captain in the room of Moſes, is not worth the naming, for the ſequel ſheweth, that they meant ſome Idol. Now although the word be plurall, gods, yet one onely is meant, for thus the true God is called, who is but one, and ſo the people calling for a viſible god uſe the ſame word Elohim, for accordingly one golden Calf was made, *v.*4 & this is called Elohim, that brought them out of Egypt. Wherefore the obſervation of ſome Ancients here, that novv the Hebrevvs fell to the worſhipping of more gods, is groundleſſe. For they ſet up to themſelves but one, and that, as their Rabbins ſay, not that it might be a god unto them, but teach them and lead them in the way as another Moſes. They thought haply, ſaith Ferus, that Moſes was dead, and that God was angry with them, becauſe in all this time they heard nothing from him, wherefore to pacifie him, they would have ſome viſible ſigne erected, and Sacrifices done to him, that he might turn and lead them in the way again, as he had formerly done. So that of this their groſſe idolatry there vvere four cauſes. 1 The abſence of Moſes. 2 Their curioſity, they reſted not in that which Moſes had ſaid, but would have recourſe to their ovvn inventions. 3 The timidity of Aaron notwithſtanding them. 4 A falſe opinion, that whatſoever they did with a good intent could not but pleaſe God. And from theſe four come all evils in the Church. 1 Through the abſence and negligence of the Paſtour. 2 The curioſity of the people, who deſire ſtill to hear pleaſing things, and not profitable. 3 The Paſtours humouring of the people herein. 4 Following our own inventions, and not cleaving to the vvord of God in all things, becauſe we think that we ſhall be born out for our good meaning. This one ſin was manifold. 1 An expreſſe breach of the firſt Commandment. 2 A fœdifragy or breaking of the Covenant of obedience made and confirmed with the Lord. 3 The contempt of Moſes, who had ſaved them from the hands of the Egyptians, and been authour of Rab. *Menahem in Exod.*32.

Ferus.

Note.

ſo many benefits unto them. Hitherto Ferus. The tradition of the Hebrews before-going, that Hur reſiſting the peoples motion was ſlain by them, is by Comeſtor related thus. The Hebrews to excuſe themſelves, ſay, that by Elohim, not gods, but Captains or Governours are meant, which they required inſtead of Moſes now ſuppoſed to be loſt, and being withſtood by Aaron and Hur, they ſpat in his face, till that with their ſpittle they had ſtrangled him. It was ſtrange, that the people ſhould fal thus fouly, even whilſt the pillar of fire was before their eyes, and the mountain burning: but there is no wickedneſſe ſo great, but men will ruſh into it, if they be not ſtayed by the grace of God, for which we ſhould therefore alwayes pray. This revolt of the Jews from Moſes, ſaith Ferus, figured out their falling off from Chriſt afterwards: but I rather think that it figured out the apoſtaſie under the man of ſin, ſpoken of, 2 *Theſſ.*2. becauſe the Jews never followed Chriſt, neither fell they ſince Chriſts time to Idolatry, as the Antichriſtian ſect of Rome hath done.

Scholaſt.hiſtor.

Note.

Verſe 2,3. Scholaſt.hiſt.

And Aaron ſaid unto them, Break off the golden ear-rings, which are in the ears of your wives, &c, When Aaron, ſaith Comeſtor, ſaw that there was no withſtanding of the people inraged, he required theſe ear-rings, as thinking, that through their covetouſneſſe they would not part with them being ſo precious, but they preſently bring them to him, and then he caſt them into the fire, but by the art of the Devil a Calves head was there made of them, Synecdochically called a golden calf, according to ſome, applying the words of Aaron following, *v.*24. to the approving hereof. But he ſaith, that they would moſt probably have ſuch an Idol, as whereunto they had been uſed in Egypt, where they worſhipped an oxe, and this is to be preferred, becauſe *v.*4. it is ſaid, That he faſhioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf. Some think that Aaron made a calf, as ſuppoſing that they would not be ſo groſſe as to worſhip it as Gods image: ſome, that an oxe was a chief ſacrifice to God for ſin, and therefore they would have one made of gold, thinking, becauſe this was moſt precious, it would be moſt acceptable to him. The Aſtronomicall reaſon yielded by ſome, that the Hebrews were under the Signe Taurus, and therefore would have ſuch an Idol made, is too conceited. Their ear-rings of gold, ſaith Ainſworth, ſet forth the golden ſentences of Holy Scripture, *Prov.*1.8,9. which are abuſed to the making of a golden calf, as it were, when they are wreſted unto hereſie. But I think rather, that becauſe they were of the ſpoiles brought out of Egypt, they ſet forth humane wit and learning borrowed from the Heathen, and by ſome profeſſing themſelves to be Chriſtians uſed to approve and to ſet up ſuperſtition and idolatry. The word tranſlated, graving tool, is uſed for a pen, *Eſa.*8.1. and if it be ſo underſtood here, he drew the form of the calf with a pen firſt, and then made a mould accordingly, into which he put the gold being molten, or elſe, having caſt it in a mould, he poliſht it after the manner of Image-makers at this day. For the abuſing of ear-rings thus, ſee alſo, Ezek. 16.11,12,17. theſe be thy gods, here it is ſpoken plurally, when as it was but one image, but *Nehem.*9.18. they ſaid, This is thy God. The meaning was, that this image did repreſent God who brought them out of Egypt, as is expreſly taught, *Rom.*1.23. Their meaning was not then to ſet up any other God, but an image of the true God, before it to do worſhip; and Jeroboam afterwards in making his calves, ſpake likewiſe, both having one intent; ſo Rab. Menahem; wherefore the idolatry now committed was none other then that of the Roman Church at this day: for how good ſoever their meaning be, as they ſay, to remember God the better; yet becauſe, as Ferus ſpake before, they go from the directiō of Gods holy Word, they ſhal not be born out hereby but anſwer for groſſe idolatry, as well as theſe Hebrews. Touching Aaron, ſome think him excuſable, becauſe oppreſſed by violence, but he ought rather to have expoſed himſelf to the danger of eath, and to put it out of doubt that he ſinned greatly. Moſes ſaith, God would have ſlain him, but that he prayed

Verſe 4.

Ainſworth.

The Myſtery.

1 Kings 12.28. R. *Menahem. in Exod.*32.

Note.

Deut.9.20.

prayed for him. And Aaron was permitted to fall thus fouly. 1 That he might be the more humbled, notwithſtanding his dignity of High Prieſt. 2 That the inſufficiency of that prieſthood to make a perfect attonement for ſinners, might appear, becauſe the Prieſt himſelf ſinned ſo groſſely. 3 That every one of what grace ſoever might walk in humility and fear: ſo Ferus. Touching the people, they did like whoremongers, as their ſin was ſpirituall whoredome, being very free to diſpend their moſt precious things upon their whore.

Then Aaron built an altar before it, and made proclamation, ſaying, To morrow is a feaſt to the Lord. Of a feaſt intended to the Lord at their firſt coming out of Egypt, ſee Exod. 10.9. this is now proclaimed, and this Idol is uſed but for a remembrance of the Lord, as Jehu afterwards being zealous for God, yet worſhipped Jeroboams golden calves, 2 King. 10.16,20. And herein Aaron ſinned the ſecond time, for that he did not onely make the Idol, but alſo inſtituted a forme of worſhipping it; yet ſome excuſe him, as doing this to delay the time in building an altar, and then in deferring till to morrow, as hoping that Moſes would come before that time, and ſtay theſe proceedings. But although he had this in his minde, it doth not excuſe him, à toto, ſed à tanto, as Ferus ſpeaketh. Here we may ſee alſo that there was none intent to ſet up another God but the Lord onely, to the honour of whom they pretended to make this image, and to keep a feaſt unto it, and therefore the excuſe made by the Papiſts touching their images and the worſhipping before them, that they do it to remember God the better, is moſt vain, and how greatly God is diſpleaſed hereat, the ſequel of this Idolatry doth declare. Ferus. Note.

And they roſe early in the morning the next day, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and the people ſate down to eat and drink, and roſe up to play. The diligence of Idolaters about their Idols is very great, they riſe early, and the Idolatrous Papiſts riſe in the night to ſay their ſuperſtitious prayers, and will not go about any buſineſſe in the morning till they have heard a Maſſe. Wherefore let us be aſhamed of our negligence in coming to the Holy Aſſemblies, and in offering up our private prayers to the Lord. For their eating and drinking and riſing up to play; they kept a Feaſt unto the Lord, as was before proclaimed, eating and drinking at which is here meant, and then they danced and ſung about the Idol, v. 18,19. Playing is ſometime ſpoken of, when men riſe up and kill one another, as between Joabs young men and Abners; ſometime when whoredome is committed, as Potiphars wife ſaid of Joſeph, Thy Hebrew ſervant came in to mock me, in Hebrew, to play with me, and ſometime when they ſing and dance, as in this place. Howſoever it may be conceived alſo, that having falne into ſo foul a ſin of Idolatry, which is ſpirituall whoredome, that they were given over to corporall whoredome alſo. For amongſt the idolatrous Heathen Romans, when they kept feaſts unto their gods, much obſcenity was expreſſed by the words and dancings of mimicall perſons, and naked whores were brought forth on to the Theatre, in Floralibus, as Tertullian ſaith. Here was verified that of the Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking of Idols, They that make them are like unto them: for ſo inſenſible do theſe Idolaters ſeem to be, never thinking to what it is that they ſacrifice to, even a ſtock or a ſtone; and ſome reliques of this Idolatry, ſaith Ferus, are even amongſt us at this day, ſpeaking of the Roman Catholikes. Verſe 6. Note. Gen. 39.17. Tertull. Ferus.

And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Go down; for the people whom thou broughteſt out of the land of Egypt have corrupted themſelves, &c. Whileſt the people are playing below, God giveth ſentence againſt them in the mount, which might make them weep and wail, and ſo he dealeth with all wicked ones. Every word here intimateth an utter diſlike taken of them for this ſin. 1 He calleth not them, his people as in times paſt, but the people brought by Moſes out of Egypt, as if he had now rejected them. 2 He ſaith, They have corrupted, not through ſimplicity been ſeduced, but wilfully corrupted. 3 They have gone out of the way, that is, being ſhewed and ſet by me into the way; when I gave them Verſe 7. Note. Verſe 8.

them my Commandements, they have dared to go out of it. 4 Quickly, in ſix moneths, for no more time was yet paſt ſince their miraculous deliverance out of Egypt, and now the charge againſt Idolatry was but newly given with great terrour, and the ſignes of the majeſty of God in the cloud, and the burning upon the top of the mount ſtill appeared before their eyes. 5 He de-

Verſe 8. clareth in particular their ſin, They had made a calfe, and ſacrificed unto it. That which they had done was all manifeſt before God, although he ſeemed to be

Verſe 9. abſent. 6 Hereupon he inferreth, that they were of a ſtiffe neck, by a Metaphor taken from an Heifer, that will by no means take the yoke upon his neck, *Hoſ.*4.16. *Jerem.*5.5. 27.8. *Eſa.*48.4. *Exod.*33.3,5. *Deut.*9 6. 7 Becauſe they were incorrigibly wicked, he ſaith, Let me alone, that my wrath may wax

Verſe 10. hot againſt them, and I may conſume them, and I will make of thee a great Nation. For, let me alone, the Chaldee hath, Leave off thy prayer before me, do not intreat me for them, or by thy prayer ſeek to hinder me. Hereby, ſaith Ferus, God

Ferus. ſhewed that his wrath might be pacified by prayer, and this animated Moſes to pray at this time. Prayer and humiliation and faith hold God, as it were,

Note. by reaſon of his gracious promiſes, that he cannot do any thing in wrath. Hereby Moſes ſtood in the gap, *Pſal.*106.23 and Abraham prevailed far. Gen. 18 9. and for one to make up the hedge and to ſtand in the gap likewiſe it is inquired, *Ezech.*22.30. Here is no mutability in God, although he ſpeaketh of deſtroying them, and doth it not; yea it is ſaid, *v.*14. That he repented him of the evill that he ſaid he would bring upon the people. If Moſes had let him alone, he would have deſtroyed them, but if he prayed, he would not; ſo then, as in other threatenings, a condition was in this underſtood, and thus God is juſtified in his ſaying, although he ſpared them. And whereas he is ſaid to have repented him, this is ſpoken after the manner of men, becauſe when we refrein from doing that which we intended, it is becauſe we repent of ſuch intention.

Verſe 11. Then Moſes prayed before the Lord, ſaying, Why doth thy wrath wax ſo hot againſt thy people, &c? It was a great tentation to hear God ſpeaking of the utter deſtruction of the Iſraelites, when as ſuch gracious promiſes of multiplying and planting them in the land of Canaan had paſſed at ſundry times, but by faith he overcometh this, and by faithfull prayer intreateth that it might not be ſo done. The words in the Hebrew are, Moſes earneſtly beſought the face of the Lord his God: by face, anger is meant, *Gen.*32.20. *Levit.*20.6. *Pſal.*21.10. wherefore it is, as if it had been ſaid, He made ſupplication againſt his anger being kindled. If it ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that God having called them the people which Moſes brought out of Egypt, he ſhould be ſo bold as to alter the words and ſay, Thy people whom thou haſt brought, &c. it is to be underſtood, that he ſaid not thus by way of contradiction, but from hence he ſought to move the Lord to clemency towards them, and in humility he refuſed to take ſo great honour upon himſelf, as to be their deliverer.

Verſe 12. Why ſhall the Egyptians ſay, For miſchief did he bring them out to ſlay them in the mountains, &c? The Septuagint inſtead of miſchief, haue, for malicioufneſſe, and whereas it is added, Repent of the evill, be mercifull to the evill of thy people. It is an argument from the obloquie that God ſhould expoſe himſelfe to, if he now deſtroyed them, all the fame, vvhich he had gotten every where by their mighty deliverance, and all his glory would be ſtained hereby, and for this is Moſes more ſolicitous then for his ovvn glory in being made a great Nation.

Verſe 13. Remember Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael thy ſervants to whom thou ſweareſt by thy ſelfe, &c. The Chaldee, To whom thou ſwareſt by thy Word. Herein Moſes hath reference to *Gen.*22. vvhereupon Abrahams offering of Iſaac, God ſvvare unto him, and the chief thing, touching vvich, vvas that in his ſeed all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, that is, that the Meſſiah ſhould come of him, and therefore for his ſake he deſireth, that the people, of vvhom he preſſed is his promiſe to multiply them, and to give them the land of Canaan for inheritance, vvhich ſhould be fruſtrated, if they were now deſtroyed. The Rabbins ſay, The Lord according to the requeſt of Moſes remembred the inclination of Iſaac, when he was bound by his father in mount Moriah, and turned from his wrath, and cauſed his divine preſence to dwell in the midſt of them, as before. *Targum in Cant.*1. If any ſhall ground hereupon the merits of the Saints of God, they do plainly wreſt the Text: for he prayeth him not to remember their merits, but his own gracious promiſe and Covenant confirmed by Oath.

Calvin. Simlerus. ſhould come, might be ſpared: ſo Calvin and Simlerus. But the motive expreſſed

*Targum in Cant.*1.

And God repented him of the evill, &c. The vulgar Latine following the Septuagint, hath it, Placatus eſt Deus, reſpecting rather the ſenſe then the words, for Gods repenting is nothing elſe but his being pacified, and ceaſing to be angry, ſee before, *v.*10.

Verſe 14.

Then Moſes turned himſelfe and came down from the mount, and the two tables of the teſtimony were in his hands, tables written on both ſides, &c Touching the writing of the law in two Tables of ſtone, ſee before, *Chap.*31.18. But forſomuch as it is here added, They were written on both ſides, it was not done without a further myſtery, it being hereby intimated that the Law muſt both be in our hearts inwardly, and in our lives and actions outwardly. And Ainſworth addeth rightly, that the twofold ſenſe of the Law is alſo hereby intimated, the literall as it were without, and the myſticall within. And Simlerus addeth, that as there was no void place on the Tables left, but all was filled up with writing, ſo it was hereby ſignified, that nothing may be added to the Lawes of God, becauſe to write more there was no room left. That of the Rabbins is vain, ſaying, that the Tables were graven onely on one ſide, but God according to his almighty povver made the vvriting ſo tranſparent that it might be read on both ſides: for it is expreſſely ſaid, that they were written on both ſides: of this vvriting on both ſides, ſee more, Ezechiel 2.10. Revelations 5.1. This maketh not a little for the commendation of vvriting and reading books vvritten for inſtruction in divine things. For God himſelf vve ſee here is the Authour of vvriting, and it is moſt probable, that from this vvriting men learned firſt to vvrite, ſaith Ferus. For Cadmus, vvho firſt taught the Greeks to vvrite, vvas not before but long after this, viz. in the dayes of Othniel, that judged Iſrael; and Nicoſtrata that taught the Latines firſt to vvrite vvas in the dayes of Lair that judged Iſrael. And hereby indeed as by a divine invention man commeth neer unto God in all manner of knovvledge, vvherefore let us accordingly eſteem of it.

Verſe 15.

Ferus.
Simlerus.
Ainſworth.
Rabini.
Ferus.

But Joſuah hearing the voice of the people, when they ſhouted, he ſaid unto Moſes, There is a noiſe of warre in the camp, &c. The vvord tranſlated, ſhouted, ſignifieth thunder or vociferation, a loud ſound or noiſe inarticulate. Ainſworth rendereth it, Of them that ſing or anſwer in ſinging, becauſe novv they vvere dancing and ſinging before their Idol, as *v.*19. Of Joſuah being vvith Moſes, vvhen he vvent up to talk vvith God, vve read, *Chap.*24.13. but vvhere he vvaited all that time, hovv he vvas imployed and fed is uncertain. For Moſes alone ſeemeth to have been vvith God, vvhen the tables vvere given him, becauſe it is ſaid, God bade Moſes come up, and *Chap.*24. *v.*18. he onely is ſpoken of, as being in the cloud, but of this ſee before, *Chap.*24.12,13. It is not ſaid, that he faſted all theſe 40 dayes, as Moſes, and therefore it is moſt probable, that he ſuſteined himſelf with Manna, which he might gather there, and for his imployment it might be in heavenly meditations and prayer. Touching his preſent ſpeech, he knowing nothing of the peoples apoſtaſie, as Moſes did by Revelation from the Lord, wondered what the noiſe which he now heard, ſhould be, and therefore ſpeaketh of it accordingly.

Verſe 17.

Simlerus.

But Moſes ſaid, It is not the voice of them that ſhout for victory, nor of them that cry for being overcome, but the voice of ſinging, &c. The Chaldee hath it, It is not the voice of ſtrong men which overcome in the war, nor of weak men which are diſcomfited. Simlerus readeth it, Non eſt vox reſpondens fortitudini, aut vox reſpon-

Verſe 18.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

aens

dens debilitati, a voice anſwering to ſtrength or to weakneſſe, and this is moſt agreeable to the Originall Hebrew, but the meaning according to any Expoſition is all one: but the voice of ſinging, in Hebrew the voice of anſwering, that is, in ſong, the Septuagint of ſinging through wine, the Chaldee the voice of playing.

Verſe 19. And when he came nigh the tents, he ſaw the calfe and the dances, and his anger waxed hot, and he caſt the Tables out of his hands, &c. It may ſeem ſtrange, that Moſes ſhould grow to that impatience to throw the tables given him by God out of his hand, and that he was not held with more reverence towards the Author. The Hebrews, to excuſe the fact, ſay that he ſaw the letters written in them toflee out, when he came neer to the idol, and therefore deeming them now to be of no further uſe, he caſt them away. But this ſeemeth to be a fiction, becauſe ſuch a miracle ſhould doubtleſſe have been recorded. That of Simlerus, and Ainſworth, and others is better, that Moſes purpoſely by the motion of the Spirit caſt theſe tables to the ground, and brake them in the ſight of the people. For being tables of the teſtimony to teſtifie the Covenant betwixt God and his people, when he ſaw, that by their idolatry they had broken this Covenant on their part, he breaketh theſe tables, to ſhew, that God would break his Covenant with them, and reject them from being his people, whereas by ſending unto them theſe tables of the teſtimony he was about to eſtabliſh it for ever. And he breaketh them in their ſight for the greater terrour unto them: for that he did it voluntarily appeareth, Deut 9. 17. Wherefore that conceit of ſome, that Moſes being aſtoniſhed, his ſtrength failed him, and ſo through weakneſſe he let fall the two tables, falleth to the ground. And this caſting down and breaking of the tables was not without a myſtery, either figuring out the diſanulling of the old Covenant, that there might be a new by Chriſt, according to Rabanus, or elſe the breaking of the Law written in mans nature, that it might be written again in the heart by the Spirit of Chriſt, ſo to be laid up in the Ark, and to be kept inviolate for ever, according to Simlerus. Moreover he ſaith, that the giving of theſe tables upon the top of the mount figured out, that we muſt mortifie the old man, and aſcend on high, if we will underſtand the Law of God, and the breaking of them below, the fruſtrating of all good meanes unto us, if by our abuſes we ſhew our ſelves unworthy of them.

Rabbini.

Simlerus.

The Myſtery.

Rabanus Maurus.

Simlerus.

Verſe 20. Then he took the calfe, and burnt it in the fire, and beat it to powder, and ſtrewed it upon the water, and made the children of Iſrail to drink it. Here is a pattern of right zeal againſt idolatry in a Magiſtrate, he ſo beateth it down, as that he layeth not himſelf open to the imputation of covetouſneſſe. There are no ſuch Magiſtrates now, ſaith Ferus, for as there be many golden calves in the Church at this day, ſo there be ſome, that expreſſe ſome Zeal in beating them down, but they make the gold and ſilver thereof their idols by covetouſly turning it to their own uſe, whereas Moſes turned it to none advantage, and Saul being ſent to deſtroy Amalek, is bidden to deſtroy, nd not to take any of the goods of thoſe idolaters, as being accurſed. And in like manner all goods belonging to idols are to be accounted accurſed, and not to be poſſeſſed by any, but quite ſpoiled. For his cauſing the people to drink the water mixed with the powder of this calfe, it was done, ſay the Hebrews, to finde out, who were guilty of this idolatry, becauſe ſuch having once drunk of it had lips hanging out gilded with gold. But there may other reaſons be yielded, as 1 That they might be taught hereby to contemn the idol, which went through their bodies, and was caſt out into the jakes. 2 That this being hard of digeſtion might put them in minde, how hard it was to be delivered from this ſin. 3 For the injury of the fact, and for a laſting memory of the thing: hitherto Ferus. It was certainly done in contempt of the idol, and in indignation againſt them, as if he had added, Ye have impiouſly ſerved this idol, now therefore take it into you, and periſh together with it, who, ye ſee, is not able to help it ſelf being ſtamped to powder, neither ſhall it

Ferus.

1 Sam. 15.

Hebræi.

Idols are often call'd by Ezech. Gillulim in contempt, that is, ſtercoralia.

it be able to help or ſave you from deſtruction, although it be within you, as by and by ſhall be ſeen. For he cauſed the moſt guilty of them forthwith to be ſlain to 3000, verſ. 28. And herein I cannot lightly reject that of the Hebrews touching their being detected by this drink, as an adultereſſe by the water of jealouſie, becauſe after this water drunk, the Levites are ſet to ſlay the idolatrous company, known as it is moſt probable by ſome outward mark now ſet miraculouſly upon them.

Myſtically, ſaith Ainſworth, it is hereby ſet forth, how we may be ſaved from our ſins, viz. by judging our ſelves, which is, as it were, a drinking and ſubmitting to receive duſt in way of puniſhmement into our own bowels, if it be mixed with the waters of the Goſpel, that is, Chriſt received by faith, who is ſaid to be the Rock, that followed them, 1 Cor. 10. and out of that Rock came theſe waters here drunk by the children of Iſrael. Deut. 9. 21. Exod 17. 6. Rabanus will have the devill and all the body of Gentiliſme figured out by this golden calfe, and by the grinding thereof to powder, the beating down and deſtroying of idolatry by Chriſt, ſuch as ſerved idols, that is, the Gentiles being converted and baptized in water being figured out in the ſtrewing of this duſt upon the water to be drunk by the people, becauſe the Preachers of the Goſpel do as it were drink and eat of the heathen, when they convert and baptize them, as it was ſaid in a like myſtery to Peter, Up, Peter, kill and eat: when this is done, by the ſword of the Spirit, the fire of zeal and the water of baptiſme, they are burned as it were, and cut in pieces, and drink in water, according to the type here ſet forth.

The Myſtery. Ainſworth.

Rabanus Maurus. Auguſt. contra Fauſt. Manic. lib. 22. c. 93.

And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, What did this people to thee, that thou haſt brought ſo great a ſin upon them? He that permitted the ſin here is taxed, as the Author of it, and in that he ſaith, what did this people to thee? he intimateth, that to be the author of ſin unto any, is to do them the greateſt hurt, that may be, when they do him the greateſt miſchief, to urge him hereunto. If the ruler then ſuffereth ſin, for ſuch was Aaron in the abſence of Moſes, he is judged to bring that ſin upon the people.

Acts 19.

Verſe 21.

Then Aaron ſaid, Let not my lords anger wax hot, thou knoweſt the people, that they are ſet on miſchief, &c. Aaron being reproved excuſeth himſelf firſt by laying all the fault upon the people, and then by ſpeaking ſo, as if his idol had come out of the gold being moulten accidently, when as he poliſhed and wrought it. But all this extenuated not, but aggravated his fault, an humble confeſſing thereof being the only way to finde favour: wherefore the Lord would have puniſhed him with death, as others, had not Moſes entreated for him, Deut. 9. 20. To excuſe and to lay the fault of our ſinning upon others is to tread in the ſteps of our firſt parents; yet it was commendable in Aaron, that being the elder brother, he humbled himſelf before Moſes reproving him, ſaying, Let not my Lords anger wax hot, contrary to which moſt men do, when they are reproved, vilifying and railing upon their reprovers, although they be moſt worthy of blame, and ſo their reproof be juſt.

Verſe 22.

Note.

And when Moſes ſaw that the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked to their ſhame among ſt their enemies, &c. Of Aarons making the people naked, divers reaſons are rendered by divers. Ferus ſaith, that ſome refer this to their golden ear-rings, of which they were now ſpoiled, or to the grace and favour of God, of which they were now ſtripped, or to the contempt and ignominy of the Heathen, to which they were expoſed. Some again expound naked by void of all excuſe, for Aaron had ſhewed, that all the fault was in them, wherefore leaving Aaron he turneth to the taking of revenge upon the people. Some by void of all ſhame, when Moſes ſaw that the people were not aſhamed of that which they had done, but defended it and moved ſedition againſt him, he draweth the ſword againſt them. Moreover, ſome, ſaith Simlerus, expound naked of unarmed, for leſt ſedition

Verſe 25.

Ferus.

Simlerus.

ſhould be moved by them in the abſence of Moſes, Aaron had taken their weapons from them; yea ſome ſay, that there was a contention amongſt them, ſome ſtanding againſt this idolatry, and ſome for it, ſo as that Aaron to prevent miſchief took away their weapons, and this opportunity was by Moſes taken to execute this judgement upon them. Rab. David Chimhi, by naked, underſtandeth detected in their malice, which expoſed them to the deriſion of their enemies, in that they forſook God, who had wrought ſo many miracles for them, and ſerved an Idol which could do them no good, and that with the loſſe of their golden ornaments. The Septuagint read it not naked, but diſperſed, the Chaldee unprofitable, being defiled with a moſt evil name in their generations, Complut. Codex, ocioſus; Steuchus, exinanitus, & exutus; and the Hebrew word פרוע, ſignifieth as naked, ſo without labour, and idle. Amongſt all theſe, by nakedneſſe cannot be meant naked of golden ear-rings, becauſe this their nakedneſſe was the thing that ſet Moſes his zeal awork to ſlay ſo many of them, which he would not have done for that, neither may that be admitted of Aarons diſarming them, for their nakedneſſe ſeen made Moſes ſo hot againſt them, and was not a thing whereupon he took advantage. I do rather therefore hold that it is meant, when he heard what Aaron had diſcovered touching their perverſneſſe, and coming to them he found them without all ſhame or remorſe for the wickedneſſe which they had done, bearing themſelves haply upon Aaron, who had made them that Calf, and carrying themſelves tumultuouſly towards Moſes their Ruler to their diſgrace before their enemies, being novv alſo without the grace and favour of God to protect them, whereby they lay open to become a laughing-ſtock to their enemies, if he ſhould now leave them to periſh in the wilderneſſe. He thought by cutting off thoſe that were the chief in this apoſtaſie, to pacifie Gods anger againſt them, and therefore he calleth the Levites to him, and ſendeth thorow the Hoſt to do the execution, and there were ſlain three thouſand men that day. Aaron humbling himſelf is pardoned, but theſe being obſtinate and ſtiff in their ſin are deſtroyed. If it be demanded, why Moſes calling to him ſuch as were for the Lord, the Levites onely came to him to do this execution? I anſvver, moſt probably, becauſe all the other Tribes were more guilty, and the Levites haply had not yeelded to this idolatry, but being inforced as Aaron. Some of the other Tribes doubtleſſe were for the Lord alſo, but being onely a few, and moſt deep in that ſin, they durſt not come forth in this quarrell, but lay hid amongſt others. And it is to be thought further, that God by his ſingular providence put on the Levites to conſecrate them by this fact unto the Prieſthood, to which he had choſen them, the Magiſtrate Moſes, and the Tribe of Prieſts muſt joyn together to beat down all falſe and idolatrous worſhip, and onely vvhen they do ſo, they are conſecrated to their office, otherwiſe they are polluted by the ſin committed. If it be further demanded, hovv ſo fevv could do execution upon ſo many, none reſiſting? I anſvver with Calvin, that God who ſet them avvork, contained the multitude that they durſt not reſiſt. If it be moreover demanded, vvhether they ſlue all that they met withall promiſcuouſly? I anſvver with Simlerus, No doubtleſſe, but either the marked men, as was before ſaid from the Hebrew tradition, or thoſe that vvere noted for moſt obſtinate, & ſought to ſtir up others running hither and thither about the Hoſt, to move them to ſedition againſt Moſes for deſtroying their Idol. Laſtly, if it be demanded whether Moſes were not too cruell in his thus doing? I anſvver, he was a moſt meek man, and full of love to the people, as appeareth, becauſe he ſo earneſtly intreated for them, and therefore the execution by him appointed to be done upon ſo many, was not out of cruelty, but out of juſtice againſt ſin, which he ought not to let go unpuniſhed. There were two things notable here in Moſes, ſaith Ferus, mercy in that he ſo piouſly prayed for the people, and ſeverity againſt ſin, both which ought to be in every Magiſtrate, for mercy without ſeverity is puſillanimity, and

R. David Chimhi.

Verſe 26, 27
Verſe 28.

Note.
Queſt.

Note.

Queſt.
Calvin.
Queſt.
Simlerus.

Queſt.

Ferus.

and ſeverity without mercie is cruelty. And to ſhew that Moſes did well herein, although he may ſeem to have been too cruell, the Lords name is uſed, Thus ſaith the Lord, Gird every man his ſword to his thigh, &c. Touching the Levites that did the execution, it is to be thought, as Aaron, ſo they were drawn againſt their wills to this idolatry, and therefore were the fitteſt to puniſh others, but becauſe they by yeelding had polluted themſelves, he uſeth theſe words unto them, Conſecrate your hand to the Lord to day, every one upon his ſon and brother, &c. If it be demanded, how they could be ſaid to ſlay every one his brother, &c. ſeeing the Levites came all to Moſes? The anſwer is, that they came not all to him, but ſome even of them in all likelihood joyned themſelves with the idolatrous of other Tribes, & were deſtroyed with them. So Simlerus, who alſo ſaith, that this might be ſpoken to ſhew with what zeal they ſhould be carried, not having any carnall reſpect to any, though moſt neer unto them, if there were any ſuch amongſt the chief offenders. But I prefer the former, becauſe it is ſaid, Slay and conſecrate your hands upon your ſons and brethren, and Deut. 33. 9. this fact againſt their brethren is commemorated to their praiſe. Whereas another Expoſition is brought by Simlerus upon theſe words, Conſecrate your hand upon your children and brethren, that is, that they being all of one ſociety with you, may by this zealous fact of yours be conſecrated, although all have not their hands in this execution; for ſome were young and ſo unfit for it, and ſome probably about Moſes for his guard, it is plainly againſt the meaning of this place, becauſe he had bidden them before to ſlay them, and now expreſſeth the ſame thing by conſecrating their hand upon them. The word tranſlated Conſecrate your hand, is in Hebrew, Fill your hand, a ſpeech borrowed from ſacrifice bringing in their hand in time of their conſecration, as Chap. 29. 24. ſhewing that to execute juſtice is as a moſt acceptable ſacrifice to the Lord. The Chaldee rendereth it, Ye have offered your offerings this day. Their father Levi had ſtained his hand in ſlaying with the ſword unjuſtly, Gen. 34. wherefore by ſlaying in juſtice Idolaters at Gods command, they again conſecrate their hand; and as he loſt the bleſſing, they regain it, according to the words added, that he may give you a bleſſing this day.

Verſe 29. Queſt.

Simlerus.

Ainſworth.

1 Sam. 15. 18.

And on the morrow Moſes ſaid to the people, Ye have ſinned a great ſin, I will go up, &c. Such as ſurvived, becauſe they were ſpared, might haply think that their ſin was nothing, and ſo paſſe it over without repentance; wherefore to humble them by true penitencie, he telleth them, that their ſin was great, and that whileſt he was praying the Lord in the mount to pardon it, they might in contrition and ſorrow alſo pray for the ſame: he ſpeaketh of it as a thing for which he feared he ſhould hardly obtain pardon, Peradventure I ſhall make an atonement for your ſin. A like ſpeech is, Amos 5. 15. Joſ. 14. 12. 1 Sam. 14. 6. He ſaid not thus to make them doubt, but to put them in hope that this might be obtained, but with great difficulty.

Verſe 30.

And Moſes ſaid, Ah, this people have ſinned a great ſin, and made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their ſin; and if not, I pray thee blot me out of the book which thou haſt written. This praying of Moſes was of long continuance, as his being in the mount formerly fourty dayes and fourty nights, the prayer is eclipticall, If thou wilt forgive; and it may be ſupplied thus, thou ſhalt binde me thy ſervant yet more unto thee in yeelding to ſo great a requeſt at my ſuit: the Septuagint ſupply it thus, If thou wilt forgive them, forgive them. We may ſee how extraordinarily odious idolatry is, that it being once committed, remiſſion therefore is moſt hardly obtained. For his deſiring, if not, that he might be blotted out of the book of life, ſee my Expoſitions, Rom. 9. Text 20. where upon a like occaſion I have cleared this already. Simlerus ſaith, that theſe words, If thou wilt forgive, may be read thus, O utinam remitteres or interrogatively by ſome, Wilt thou not forgive? as being the words of one ſtriving with God by prayer. Ann here for furthe reſolution about his ſaying, Blot me out of the book which thou haſt written, I have thought

Verſe 31, 32

Simlerus.

Ferus. good to inſert the moſt ſound Expoſition of Ferus. Moſes ſpeaketh thus, not as deſiring to be blotted out, but to expreſſe his earneſtneſſe, as if one ſhould ſay to his friend, do this or kill me, not that he would be killed, but becauſe he cannot endure to have a nay, knowing that his friend will not kill him, for ſo Moſes knew that he was ſo dear to the Lord, that he would not blot him out, but rather then do ſo, forgive their ſin. Again it is, as if he had ſaid, I am a ſinner alſo, and if thou wilt deal with all ſinners according to their deſerts, thou muſt blot me out of thy book alſo, which thou wilt not do for thy great mercy, wherefore out of the ſame mercy forgive them. Laſtly, hereby he ſheweth his moſt intent love towards the people; in that he was ready not onely to loſe his life, but his ſoul for them. Herein Moſes was a type of the Mediatour Chriſt, who was made under the curſe to deliver us from the curſe, and laid down his life for his ſheep.

Gal.3.13. John 10.

Verſe 33. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Him that ſinneth againſt me, will I blot out of my book. The like to this David prayeth for againſt ſome, Let them be wiped out of the book of the living, that is, malicious ſinners, and it is promiſed, that he, which overcometh, ſhall not have his name wiped out of the book of life. This is not thus ſpoken to intimate any alteration in Gods decree, which is unalterable, as Ferus noteth, but becauſe ſome that profeſſe the knowledge of God, and ſo ſeem to be written in Gods book, in their deeds deny him, and of ſuch he ſaith, I will blot them ſinning againſt me out of my book, making it appear, that they were never there written, when I ſhall ſend them as reprobates to hell. And he noteth further, but this is ſtreined, that by ſinning againſt him, he meaneth only ſuch as ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt by finall impenitency. Indeed he meaneth ſuch as ſin, and go on impenitently in ſin to the end, but this is not all which belongeth to the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt. The impenitent ſinner ſhall be blotted out, but not he that riſeth again by repentance, for if ſo, none could be ſaved. Thus then theſe words may be underſtood of ſuch, as in their own opinion are in the book of life, but indeed are not, and this is according to Saint Auguſtine, who ſaith, that they are ſpoken of, as to be blotted out, who were never written, but only according to their own hope; they ſhall be blotted out then, is as much as they ſhall know, that they were never written there. For if a man ſhall ſay, What I have written, I have written, then God much more will not write in and blot out, but his decrees ſhall alwayes ſtand unalterable, 2 *Tim.*2. Simlerus ſaith, that ſome underſtand this of the generall catalogue of all the members of the Church, and not of predeſtination, but if it be underſtood of predeſtination, yet it followeth not, that any, appointed hereby to life ſhall be damned for their ſins, becauſe it is only ſaid, thoſe that ſin againſt me, that is, being finally impenitent, I will blot out, but ſo the elect ſin not. I reſt rather in the firſt, it is, as if he had ſaid, I will not damn the righteous for the ſinfull, but the ſoul that ſinneth only ſhall die, as *Ezech.*18.

Ferus.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 69.

Simlerus.

Verſe 34. Therefore now go, lead the people to the place, of which I have ſpoken unto thee, behold, mine angel ſhall go before thee, nevertheleſſe in the day when I viſit, I will viſit their ſin upon them. The Lord at the earneſt ſuit of Moſes remitteth the ſevere puniſhment of deſtroying them all at once, yet he ſaith that he will puniſh them both by withdrawing his gracious preſence, and leaving them to be led by Moſes, onely they ſhould have an Angel to go before them, and by viſiting their ſin with plagues, which is alſo done, *verſ.*35. How he withdrew his preſence, ſee *Chap.*33.7. the Tabernacle was removed far from the camp, and ſo they had not the ſignes of his preſence amongſt them, as in times paſt. But what meaneth he by ſaying, mine Angel ſhall go before thee, when as an Angel repreſenting the Lord had hitherto gone before them, and *Chap.*23.20. it is promiſed, as a favour, I ſend an Angel before thee to keep thee in the way, &c. in the very ſame words which are hereafter uſed, *Chap.*33.2. How is the ſame thing ſpoken of as a favour to them obeying there, there, and as a punishment to them that have disobeyed here? Again, of that Angel he saith, *Chap.*23.21. *Beware of him, and provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions, but now, Chap.*33.3. I will not go up in the midst of thee, for thou art a stiff-necked people, lest I consume thee in the way Doth God appoint an Angel to go before them, that is, so severe against offenders, and yet deny to go himself with them, lest by his severity against sin they should be consumed? It is answered, that the Angel there spoken of is Christ, the Son of God, called his Angel, because sent by the Father, but this Angel is a creature. So that the same word being used, it is yet to be understood in a divers sense, to have the Son of God with them was a great favour, but to have him removed from their super-intendency, and an inferiour angel substituted was a punishment, yet he as the most glorious God would be more severe against them, if they sinned, then a created Angel, see my Expos. *Ch.*23.20. The Hebrews, saith Comestor, hold, that God had hitherto been their guide, but now it is threatened that they should have none other, but a particular Angel to be over them, viz. Michael, as all other heathen Countreys have their Angels. Rab. Menahem saith, The Angel of the Covenant, went hitherto before them, of whom he spake in the time of favourable acceptance, My presence shall go before thee, but now the blessed God threatened to take away his presence, and to lead them by another Angel. Thus it was threatened, but *Chap.*33.*v.*14. God promiseth his presence again with him; so that, as Ferus noteth, this was threatened onely to make Moses the more importunate, as Christ would not at the first grant the request of the Canaanitish woman, that her faith might be the more illustrated before all men, she persisting still to importune him by faithfull prayer. In the day when I visit, that is, punish, although a deferring of their punishment was obteined by Moses, and a lessening of it, yet he could not prevail so, but punished they must be, which figured out, as Ainsworth hath it, the inability of the law to justifie and to deliver from sin, in that Moses, by whom it was given, could prevail no further. The sin was remitted, saith Ferus, yet punishment must be born, which sheweth, that the guilt may be done away before God, and the punishment of sin still remain to be suffered in this world: so *Numb.*14.20. speaking of their murmuring, the Lord saith, I have pardoned their sin, yet none of them shall enter, &c. and David was pardoned, yet he is threatened with great punishments: for which cause to those that are absolved from their sins, penance is enjoyned in the Church by fasting, prayer, almes, &c. For if we judge our selves, saith Saint Paul, we shall not be judged; as the Ninevites, *Jon.*3. and Ahab, 1 *King.*21. thus he, with whom we may agree thus far, in holding, that even to those to whom God remitteth sin, he still reteineth temporall punishments to deter the more from sinning, but not as satisfactory for the punishments which they owe, because they cannot be satisfied for, but by the passions of Christ onely. This visiting, he also saith, is referred by some to the day of judgement; by some, to the plague spoken of in the next verse, but by the Hebrews, to the desolation brought upon their Countrey by the Romans, continuing to this day; for, that they may not be forced to confesse their cruelty against Christ to have been the cause hereof, and their infidelity, they say, that they suffer all this for the golden calfe, according to this threatening. Simlerus reckoneth up other things, to which others refer it; some, to their wandering in the wilderness 40 years, and perishing there; some, to the Babylonish captivity; and some, to the first day of the year. Calvin saith, that hereby is meant, they were so perverse, that they would soon give new occasion of punishment, & then they should be punisht for altogether, as a father having forgiven a fault to his childe, yet if he committeth another, will reckon that up also, and punish him the more. To me it seemeth plain, that the punishment meant is that which is spoken of, *v.*35. And the Lord plagued the people for the calf, &c. Some understand these words, as if it had been said, in way of conclusion, so God punished them, that Simlerus.

Queſt.

Hebræi.

R. Menahem.

Ferus.
Matth.15.22.

Ainsworth.

Ferus.

Numb.14.20.
2 Sam.12.

1 Cor.11.

Note.

Simlerus.

Calvin.

Verse 35.
Calvin, Simlerus.

Ainſworth.

that is by cauſing 3000 of them to be ſlain, as hath been already declared. But, as Ferus hath it, others hold, that they were ſmitten with a new plague, therein ſo many more died as made up the number of 30000, 23000. Ainſworth ſaith, that the plague meant here was ſpirituall, recorded, *Act.*7.42. they were given over for this idolatry to more idolatries, as the Heathen for their idolatries to a reprobate ſenſe, *Rom.*1.24. But the word giving up is not here uſed, but ſmiting, which cannot ſo well be drawn to that ſenſe, and a particular time of viſiting ſeemeth to be noted, *v.*34. How they plaguing was, and of how many is not ſaid here, and therefore I leave that, onely reſolving that it was ſome great puniſhment after this.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Verſe 1. AND the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Go up to the Land, of which I ſware to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, &c. Of Gods ſwearing to give this Land to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, ſee *Chap.*6.8. Moſes was before ſpoken to to the ſame effect, *Chap.*32.34. but becauſe it was grievous to him to go with the people without Gods preſence, it is likely that he ſtood as amazed at the hearing of this, wherefore the Lord ſpeaketh here again, Go up, &c.

Verſe 2. And I will ſend my Angel before thee, and caſt out the Canaanites, Amorites, &c. Of theſe peoples, ſee the ſame ſaid before, *Chap.*23.23.

Verſe 3. To a land flowing with milk and honey. Of this deſcription, ſee *Chap.*3.8. Of the amplitude and the benefits of this Countrey, ſaith Ferus, God ſpeaketh, to ſhew, what great good things they had deprived themſelves of by their ſin, that they might be affected with the more ſorrow therefore, as if he had ſaid, I had thought to bring you into this pleaſant Countrey, but now I will not, nor take any further care over you, go whither ye will. But he ſpeaketh not to this effect, for he promiſeth an Angel to lead them, and to expell their enemies, remembring his oath, whereby he had bound himſelfe to do thus. It is therefore, as if he had ſaid, For my oaths ſake to your godly Progenitours I will give you that pleaſant Countrey, of which ye are altogether unworthy; but my preſence, of which ye might hitherto glory above all the people in the world, I will now withdraw for your ſin, and onely ſend my Miniſter, my Angel before you to give you the poſſeſſion of it. I will not go up with thee, for thou art a people of a ſtiffe neck, leſt I conſume thee by the way. What, was the Angel of God, ſaith Auguſtine, more mercifull then God, that he ſpeaketh thus? Certainly, therein lieth hid ſome great myſtery: for God is preſent every where, ſo that if they had been led by an Angel, God could not but be preſent alſo, but this is ſo ſpoken, becauſe Gods being preſent to the ſtiff-necked is to deſtroy them. God went not with them, when the cloud, the ſigne of Gods preſence, and a cover to them was taken away with the Tabernacle farre from the camp, *v.*9. So the Rabbins, The ſons of Iſrael made them a golden calf, and therefore the glorious cloud that over-ſhadowed them was taken away, and they remained uncovered. And this was a great puniſhment, if the benefits of this cloud before ſpoken of be conſidered. But for a more full reſolution of this place, if God ſhould ſtill go with them with ſignes and wonders, they ſinning againſt him, notwithſtanding their ſin would be the greater, and ſo the judgement muſt needs be the greater; Simlerus.

Ferus.

Auguſt. quæſt. 150. in Exod.

Rabbini.

Verſe 4. And when the people heard theſe evill tidings, they mourned, and no man did put on his ornaments, &c. Here the Lord calleth them to humiliation and repentance for their ſin: for his bidding Moſes tell the children of Iſrael that they were a ſtiff-necked people, &c. and to put off their ornaments, as here followeth, v 5,6. was the cauſe why they did thus. The Septuagint, for, they mourned, have, they mourned in mourning weeds, by their outward habit ſhewing their inward ſorrow. Say to the children of Iſrael; before he called them them, The people whom thou broughteſt out of Egypt, Chap. 32. 7, 34. Chap. 33. 1. but nowhe beginneth to change the phraſe calling them by the beloved name, whence Rab. Menahem obſerveth, that here he intimateth mercy to them repenting. R. Menahem

Verſe 5,6.

Verſe 5.

I will come up and conſume thee in a moment ; therefore put off thine ornaments rom thee that I may know what to do to thee : that is, If thou repent not ; the Septuagint, Look that I bring not another plague upon you and conſume you. The Lord had ſaid, that he would not go up with them, leſt he deſtroyed them in the way, v. 3. how then doth he ſay here ? I will come up, &c ? Anſw. This is ſpoken Hypothetically, if I ſhould go up with thee I ſhould ſuddenly con ſume thee, unleſſe thou didſt ſhew thy ſelfe penitent. Simlerus will have it ſpoken per Hypotypoſin, as taking the perſon of an angry man upon him, who being not fully pacified, when he inclineth to forgive, yet to expreſſe his indignation, uſeth threatening ſpeeches ſtill. Ferus expoundeth it two wayes. 1 I will not alwayes bear with thee, but if thou goeſt on with a ſtiffe-neck, Iwill one day come and utterly deſtroy thee, as I did Pharaoh, although I do not now conſume thee. 2 Prophetically, for thus God did come againſt them and deſtroyed them, or cut them off from being his people ſince the time of the Goſpel, but I reſt in the firſt, which is the ſame with the firſt of Ferus, Put off your ornaments : the Septuagint read it, Your garments of glory : the Chaldee, The ornaments of your armour : That I may know what to do to thee; the Septuagint, I will ſhew, what I will do to thee; becauſe the Lord knew wel enough without this what he would do to them. Ferus expoundeth it thus, That I may ſee that ye are truly penitent, and forgive you this ſin, not that he could not ſee that without this outward humiliation : but firſt, becauſe he requireth not onely the tree, repentance, which is properly of the heart, but alſo the fruit, outward humiliation, confeſſion and prayer. 2 Becauſe others are ſcandaiized by ſin, to whom ſatisfaction muſt be given by outward humiliation, eſpecially to the younger and ſimpler, that they may be the more deterred from ſinning. Put off your ornaments, is as much, as if he had ſaid, Be humbled, and as by your ſorrowing ye have made ſhew of repentance, ſo let it hereby appear that ye are very penitent. How they mourned is not here ſet down, but Judg. 2. upon a like occaſion it is ſaid, That they lift up their voice and wept ; and ſo it is probable, they did here confeſſing with tears their ſin together, and craving pardon. The Hebrews, ſaith Simlerus, by their ornaments underſtand golden crownes, with which they were miraculouſly adorned, when the law was given, but this is an imagination without ground, They had ornaments of ſilver and gold of the ſpoil of the Egyptians ; and theſe in this time of mourning, as was meet, they put off and haply put on ſack-cloth, as we read, that others in penitency did afterwards. Queſt. Simlerus. Ferus. Ferus. Simlerus.

Verſe 6.

And they ſtrip't themſelves by the mount Horeb. In Hebrew it is, from the mount Horeb, that is, as Ainſworth ſaith, far off, as unworthy to come neer for their ſin ; as the Publican ſtood afar off, Luke 18. when he prayed. Here they had been moſt dignified in hearing and ſeeing, and here they loſt all their dignity again, this putting off of their ornaments noting their being ſtript of their fame : ſo Ferus. Ainſworth. Ferus.

Verſe 7.

And Moſes took the tabernacle and pitched it out of the camp afar off, and called it the tabernacle of the Congregation, &c. The tabernacle before deſcribed was not yet made, and therefore this is to be underſtood to have been another leſſer tabernacle, which the children of Iſrael had before this, ſee Chap. 16. 24. The Septuagint render it, his tent, as if this were ſpoken of the tent of Moſes, but erroneouſly, for he dwelled ſtill amongſt them, and went out thither onely at ſome times, neither doth the name of the tabernacle of the Congregation agree to the tent of Moſes. Cajetan differing from all Expoſitours, ſaith, that theſe words to ... are to be read in the future tenſe, being the words of the Lord to Moſes, directing him what to do when the tabernacle ſhould Cajetan.

ſhould be made. And Moſes ſhall take the tabernacle, &c. Becauſe the Verbs are in the future tenſe, and he thinketh, that all things ſpoken before of the tabernacle are here revoked, and that Aaron was put hereby from the prieſthood, and Joſuah ſubſtituted; but all this was propounded onely by way of commination, to ſhew, vvhat they had deſerved by their ſin. But, as Simlerus well noteth, although the vvords be in the future tenſe, yet becauſe Vau is prefixed, they are to be rendered by the preterperfect tenſe, as is uſed in other places. And theſe words, and Moſes took the tabernacle, &c. do ſhew that it cannot be underſtood as a future, Moſes ſhall take, becauſe then it would have been ſaid, and the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Thou ſhalt take; to omit other reaſons which may be noted in a thing ſo manifeſt. Calvin uſeth divers reaſons againſt thoſe that by this Tabernacle would have the tent of Moſes underſtood, as 1 That he went thither onely in the day-time, but lodged with the camp in the night. 2 It is called κατ' ἐξοχὴν the Tabernacle. 3 God by ſhewing his glory there ſhewed, that it was his houſe. 4 It was too ſacred a name for any mans tent. 5 They worſhipped towards this place. 6 The ſcope of Moſes was not to ſeparate himſelf, but to ſhew that God was ſeparated from them for their ſins. Whereas it is ſaid, that Moſes took the Tabernacle and pitched it to him, for in Hebrevv לו, to him, is added, ſeeming to take for this opinion, that it was his own tent, it is anſvvered, that the particle לו aboundeth here, as in many other places, and that it vvas not pitched there for his private uſe, but for a publike, appeareth, becauſe if any man would ſeek the Lord, he was to reſort thither, as here followeth. This removing of the Tabernacle vvas to ſhevv the removing of Gods preſence from amongſt them for their ſin, that they might be the more humbled. And it is called the Tabernacle of the Congregation, becauſe they reſorted thither to be taught the Laws of God, and to pray. The Chaldee therefore hath it, The tabernacle of the houſe of doctrine, and the Septuagint, the tabernacle of the teſtimony: But Exod. 29. 4. the Tabernacle appointed novv to be made, was alſo called the tabernacle of the congregration: neither is it likely, but that they had a place to reſort unto before for theſe holy ends, and when the Tabernacle made at Gods appointment was finiſhed, it bare the ſame name. Every one that ſought the Lord went out to the Tabernacle; the Chaldee, That ſought doctrine or information from the Lord. To ſeek the Lord, ſaith Simlerus, is either by prayer, or in difficult caſes to be reſolved, Exod. 18. and it may alſo be referred to thoſe that ſacrificed.

Simlerus. Calvin. Simlerus.

Verſe 8. And when Moſes went out to the tabernacle, all the people ſtood up in the door of their tents, and looked after him. This was done for reverence to Moſes, ſaith Simlerus, whom they had before contemned, and that they might worſhip towards the Tabernacle, and look thither with their eyes, from which they were kept now far off for their ſin, to be the more humbled therefore. It was done, ſaith Ainſworth, that they might ſee and obſerve with reverence, what grace was done to Moſes, being about the buſineſſe of reconciling God unto them, and what ſignes were ſhewed hereof. Ferus mentioneth all theſe, as fruits of their penitencie. 1 They thus by riſing up to Moſes reverenced him, whom before they had contemned. 2 They dare not follow him, but ſtand afar off, as judging themſelves unworthy. 3 They look after Moſes, as far as they can ſee him, to ſhew their great deſire to recover Gods grace. 4 Whileſt God talked with Moſes, they worſhipped in their tent doors.

Ainſworth. Ferus.

Verſe 9. And as Moſes entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar deſcended, &c. By this miraculous fact the Lord confirmed the authority of Moſes, and did ſomewhat for the comfort of the people being now penitent, in that he ſhewed hereby, that he was not quite gone from them, as they by their ſin had deſerved. And a cloud likewiſe overſhadowed Chriſt, after whom we muſt look, and ſtand ready at our doors, as it were to do whatſoever he calleth us to.

Matth. 17.

Verſe 11. And the Lord ſpake to Moſes face to face, as a man talketh to his neighbour.

The

The like phraſe is uſed before, *Deut.*5.4. but onely that there is this difference, here פנים-אל-פנים, there פנים-בפנים-פנים, being the words uſed, as the Hebrews obſerve. And Gods ſpeaking thus to Moſes is afterwards mentioned as a ſingular priviledge, which the Lord vouchſafed unto him, *Numb.*12.8. where he ſaith, that he ſpake to him mouth to mouth, and not as to other Prophets by viſions and dreams, explaining what is meant by face to face, viz. apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches, ſo likewiſe Deut. 34.10. the Chaldee rendereth it, word to word; firſt, the Lord ſpeaking, and then Moſes, then the Lord replying again, and Moſes anſwering, &c. And he returned again into the camp, but his ſervant Joſuah went not out of the tabernacle. Joſuah is here called a young man, and yet if his yeers be computed, we ſhall finde that he was above fourty yeers old at this time, for he was an hundred and ten yeers old when he died, of which fourty were ſpent in the wilderneſſe after this under Moſes, and it is ſaid, that they had reſt under him, the Canaanites being ſubdued, and their land poſſeſſed by the children of Iſrael in his time, and that the Reubenites and Gadites had holpen them in their wars, ſince their beginning under him to enter that land, many dayes. The time of his government is held by ſome to have been twenty and ſix yeers, by Simlerus twenty and ſeven, which if it were ſo, he was fourty and three or fourty and four at this time, but if leſſe, he was older, as Ainſworth ſaith, above fifty. Yet he is called a young man, ſaith he, becauſe he was a ſervant, this being the common appellation of ſervants, *Gen.*14.24. or becauſe he was without guile, according to others. Or, as Calvin hath it, to expreſſe the ſingular grace of God towards him, in that many elder men being let paſſe, he was appointed to keep the Tabernacle. Or he might be called the young man in compariſon of aged Moſes. For Joſuah his ſtaying in the Tabernacle, it was doubtleſſe to keep it, Aaron with his family being for the time in diſpleaſure rejected for his golden Calf, althongh he was again ſet over it afterwards, but now ſuſpended from his office, that he might together with the people be the more humbled for his ſin.

Joſ.24.29.

Joſ.22.3.

Simlerus.
Ainſworth.

Calvin.

And Moſes ſaid unto the Lord, See thou ſayeſt unto me, Bring up this people, and thou haſt not let me know whom thou wilt ſend with me, &c. God had before promiſed to ſend an Angel with him, and yet he ſaith here, Thou haſt not ſhewed me whom thou wilt ſend, &c. Why doth he ſay thus? Anſw. Some ſay, he meaneth ſome viſible ſigne, as if he had ſaid, thou haſt not ſhevved vvhat thou vvilt ſend with me, that is, vvhat viſible ſigne, becauſe in Gods diſpleaſure the cloud with the Tabernacle vvas novv removed from the camp. Some, that he deſireth that grace again to be reſtored, that God himſelf vvould go vvith them. He doubted not, but an Angel of God vvas of povver ſufficient to bring them thither, and to expell the Canaanites before them; but to enjoy that countrey, this vvas onely a temporall bleſſing, vvherevvith he was not ſatisfied, unleſſe God vvould vouchſafe to be reconciled unto them, and be pleaſed to be their God amongſt them peculiarly, as in times paſt. And from this doth not that much differ, which others make mention of, viz. that in this ſpeech he had reſpect to the Meſſiah, in vvhom they might partake of ſpirituall and eternall bleſſings, and then the meaning is, thou haſt not ſhewed me the Meſſiah, vvhom thou haſt promiſed to ſend, and in vvhom alone perfect bleſſedneſſe is to be had, I am not ſatisfied vvith temporals, unleſſe I may enjoy this ſpirituall favour alſo. And the words here followving, Thou haſt ſaid, I know thee by name, &c. do ſhevv vvhereupon Moſes vvaxed thus bold vvith the Lord, becauſe he had of his grace received him to ſuch familiarity vvith himſelf. I ſubſcribe to that of Calvin, becauſe this ſtill grieved Moſes, although they ſhould poſſeſſe the land of Canaan, that the Lord ſhould ſtill remain unreconciled, becauſe the happineſſe of a people conſiſteth not in this, that they have a fat countrey, but that they are a peculiar choſen people of the Lord. It is then, as if he had ſaid, Thou haſt not ſatisfied me by ſhevving me that thou vvilt ſend an Angel before me,

Verſe 12.

Queſt.
Ainſworth.

Calvin.

Ferus.
Simlerus.

thou haſt not ſhewed me whom thou wilt ſend to my content, or that I can reſt in this, for I muſt needs entreat thy gracious preſence again with us, which to be the meaning appeareth further *verſ.*15,16. Some, ſaith Simlerus, will have this ſpoken by Moſes out of infirmity, as if he had ſaid, the Canaanites are many and mighty, and ſo hard to be expelled by a company of men unexperienced in warlike affairs, and therefore I do not yet ſee, how or by what means this ſhall be effected, but far be it from us, as he ſaith, to lay a fault upon ſo holy a ſervant of God, when God layeth none.

Simlerus.

Verſe 13. Now therefore, if I have found favour in thine eyes, ſhew me, I pray thee, thy way, that I may know thee, and that I may finde grace in thy ſight, and conſider that this is thy people, The vulgar Latin, ſhew me thy face, and ſome ſaith Ferus, render it, ſhew me thy hand; the Chaldee, ſhew me the way of thy goodneſſe; the Septua. ſhew thy ſelf unto me, let me manifeſtly ſee thee, that I may finde grace before thee, and that I may know that this nation is thy people: wherein the ſenſe is rather reſpected, then the words, which are in Hebrew, ſhew me thy way, &c. but by that, which followeth verſ. 18. ſhew me thy glory, this ſeemeth to be the meaning. Calvin by, thy way, underſtandeth, that direction, wherewith God had hitherto ſhewed, that he went before them, as if he had ſaid, let me ſee thee again making a way and leading the way before me. And to this the anſwer of the Lord doth moſt aptly agree, my preſence ſhall go before thee, &c. verſ. 14. Ferus, according to a former opinion rejected, underſtandeth it, as if he had ſaid, ſhew me, by what way or means thou wilt plant us in the Land of Canaan, for I cannot ſee, how this may be done. Or elſe following the vulgar Latin, ſhew me thy face, he ſaith that Jeſus Chriſt is the face of God, becauſe as a man is not known, but by his face, ſo God is not known, but by Chriſt, he deſireth then, ſaith he, that Chriſt might come and go with them. Ainſworth by way underſtandeth Gods own work and Adminiſtration, as Job 40. 19. Pſal. 77. 22. Rabanus, as Auguſtine following the Septuagint ſhew me thy ſelf manifeſtly. But in my judgement, Calvin hath reſolved it beſt of all, If I have found favour in thy ſight, as appeareth, becauſe thou haſt ſaid; I know thee by name; I know thee by name, ſaith Rabanus, is as much as, I know thy name above the names of others, which is not ſpoken, becauſe God knoweth not perfectly any mans name, but hereby he meaneth, that Moſes pleaſed him beſt of any other, as when he ſaith to any, I know you not, he meaneth, I am diſpleaſed with you. That I may know thee, that I may finde grace in thy ſight, that is, that I may know, that thou doſt ſo ſingularly favour me, when thou ſhalt again at my requeſt turn and lead us in the way, and be hereby aſſured, that I have found grace in thy ſight. Laſtly, he addeth another weighty Argument, this nation is thy people, thou haſt bound thy ſelf by Covenant unto them, and therefore let this move thee not thus to leave them, but to turn again and to go with them. Such motives are uſed by the ſervants of God in prayer, not that he is thereby moved, but they are more acertained, and in their faith confirmed.

Calvin. Ferus. Rabanus. Note.

Verſe 14. And he ſaid, My preſence ſhall go with thee, and I will give thee reſt. By ſaying, my preſence, the Lord meaneth himſelf, that he, as Moſes requeſted, would lead them in the way; the Septuagint, my ſelf will go before thee, ſo by earneſt and importunate prayer Moſes obtained his deſire at length, and we are not to doubt, but faithfull prayer ſhall finally prevail, although the effect of it doth not yet appear, ſee Luke 18. For, my preſence, the Chaldee hath my Majeſty, that is, as Ainſworth expounded it, a viſible ſigne of my glorious preſence ſhall go before thee. Eſa 63 9. we read of the Angel of Gods preſence, which ſaved his people, and of this Angel Rab. Menahem expoundeth this, ſaying, it is, as if he had ſaid, the Angel of my preſence, the Redeemer, Eſa. 63. the Angel of the Covenant, in whom ye delight, Mal. 3. 1. and he is called the preſence or face of God, becauſe he is the face of wrath, to conſume his enemies. And this is all one with the former Expoſition, becauſe the Redeemer, the Son of God is one with the Father, and ſo when he goeth before them, God himſelf goeth before fore them, and I will give thee reſt, that is, all enemies being deſtroyed before thee, as is further expounded, Deut. 25.19. and *Chap.*12.10. and thus theſe words, I have given thee reſt, 2 *Sam.*7.11. are expounded, 1 Chro. 17.10. ſee this fulfilled, *Joſ.*22.4. Simlerus unto this addeth, or giving reſt to Moſes is meant, that he ſeeing God again to do miraculouſly for them might be at reſt and tranquil in his minde: but this intimateth a doubting at this time in Moſes through the weakneſſe of faith, which hath been before rejected, for he wreſtled by a moſt ſtrong faith all this time of his importuning the Lord Simlerus.

Note. Ainſworth. Rab. Menahem in Exod. 33.

And Moſes ſaid, If thy preſence go not with me, carry us not up hence. 16 For wherein ſhall it be known, that I and thy people have found grace in thy ſight, &c? This ſaith Simlerus, is underſtood by ſome, as if Moſes being ſatisfied with the Lords anſwer had ſaid, And this is that, which I deſired: for now we have a certain ſigne, that we have found grace in thy ſight, if thou goeſt with us: But by others it is underſtood, as if Moſes deſired ſomewhat more, then the Lord had promiſed. For although he ſaid, that his preſence ſhould go with him, yet he ſpake nothing of the manner how, and therefore Moſes deſireth, that he would go ſo with him, as that it might be known to all men, that he was preſent with him. I hold with Calvin, that Moſes in theſe words did ſet forth his reſting in the Lords promiſe, which was, that his preſence ſhould ſo go before him, as that by the ſignes hereof it ſhould be as manifeſtly ſeen, as a face in a looking glaſſe. So ſhall we be ſeparated from all the people upon earth. This is added to ſhew the thing, that Moſes principally deſired, viz. that the ſin committed being paſſed over they might anew be taken into the Covenant of grace, and be notified by his ſingular favours towards them to be his peculiar people, Elect and choſen of his grace above all others in the world, wherein onely indeed true joy may be had, as in perfect happineſſe. How the people are urged by this conſideration afterwards to fear God, ſee *Deut.*4.7. Verſe 15. Calvin.

And he ſaid, I beſeech thee ſhew me thy glory. Moſes, ſaith Ferus, aſcended to this by four degrees. 1 He prayed for the pardon of the ſin. 2 That God would guide them in the way. 3 That he would ſend the Meſſiah. 4 That he might ſee his glory, that is, according to ſome, becauſe the ſin of the people came from this, that they did never yet ſee God, for this was the cauſe of their unbelief and idolatry, that God would ſhevv himſelf in ſome viſible ſhape to be ſeen and felt, and not in vvord only, becauſe othervviſe, vvhatſoever he ſaid unto them, they vvould not beleeve, becauſe they ſavv nothing. Some underſtand this his deſiring to ſee Gods Glory, as ſpoken of ſignes, which he would have the Lord to ſhew, that all might acknowledge, beleeve and worſhip God, this requeſt being the ſame with that, Hallowed be thy name. Laſtly, ſome underſtand it, as a deſire to ſee the Divine Eſſence, out of a confidence, that he had in reſpect of his familiarity with the Lord. Hitherto Ferus, And Simlerus having mentioned the firſt of theſe, oppoſeth it, becauſe they were not without the ſight of the Divine Majeſty upon the mount, and then again he confirmeth it, ſaying, Although they ſaw a ſigne of Gods preſence, yet they ſaw no ſhape, without which the rude people would not be ſatisfied But it is not thought by ſome, ſaith he, that Moſes deſired to ſee the Lord with his eyes, but ſuch knowledge of God as whereby he might know him as he is, not out of curiouſity, but partly for comfort now that he did bear the burthen of ſo obſtinate a people, for in the ſight and knowledge of God ſtandeth perfect happineſſe: and partly, that he might be the better inſtructed to undergo this weighty office. For of the miſery, that is in being a ruler over a rebellious people, that ſpeech of Demoſthenes may be a witneſſe, who ſaid, that he had rather go right to death, than to aſcend to the higheſt honours in the Common-wealth, & of Æſchines, who ſaid, that he was glad he was delivered from ſuch a mad Dog, ſpeaking of the people, when he eſcaped being Governour over them. And that the knowVerſe 18. Ferus. Simlerus. Demoſthenes. Æſchines.

ledge of God is chiefly and first necessary in a Governour, the Indians of old held, for, as Aristoxenus saith, it was a Tenet amongst them that humane things cannot be known unlesse divine be first known. The Rabbins, explaining this request of Moses, say, that he desired to know the essence of God as a man is known, whose face is seen, and whose form is ingraven in ones heart, so as that man is distinguished in his knowledge from other men, so Moses desired that the essence of God might be distinctly known in his heart from the essence of other things, so that he might know the truth of his essence, as it is: But God answered him, that man compounded of soul and body hath none ability to comprehend the truth of this thing concerning his Creatour. Maimony. And unto this do I subscribe, Moses having much comfort by the Lords yielding at his request to go before him with his presence, thought, if he might see and know God, as he is, that this would be much more comfortable unto him; and because he found the Lord for the great favour which he bare unto him, facile in the first, he waxeth bold to desire the other. Of miraculous signes it could not be meant, because they had such signes already, and herein was Gods presence manifested, neither did he desire to see God in some shape for the peoples satisfaction, but for his own comfort, as appeareth by the sequel, God shewed him onely in private some glimmering of his glory, and if the people should have seen any shape, they would have been ready to set up an idol accordingly, as is intimated, Deut. 4.15. It was the face of God then which he desired to behold, in alluding to which David saith, I will behold thy face in righteousnesse, when I shall awake after thy likenesse I shall be satisfied. Calvin taxeth Moses here, as going beyond his bounds out of curiosity, because the Lord rejecteth his desire as unlawful, which should be a warning to us not to pry further into the things of God, but according to that which he hath pleased to reveal. But the Lord in his answer doth not directly tax, but informe Moses, yielding upon this his request to shew him more then ever he did to any mortall man; and therefore I dare not lay any blame upon him for this his desire. Lastly, some, saith Simlerus, think that Moses here desired to see Christ, the glory of the Father, who he believed should come in an aspectable shape; for he is often set forth by this name, as *Esa.*60. *Heb.*1. Joh 1. Luk. 2. 2 *Cor.*3. and that the Ancients did much desire to see him, appeareth by Abraham rejoycing to see his day, and by Simeon, who when he saw him, speaketh of it, as a thing greatly desired before by him. But this seemeth not to be the meaning, because thus Gods glory might be seen, but so as Moses desired to see it, No man, saith God, shall see me and live. But it may seem strange that Moses having talked with God face to face should yet desire to see his face; hereby it appeareth that he saw him not, and so when any are said to have seen God, as before, *Chap.*24.10. it is not to be understood of the sight of his essence, but of some glorious apparition, whereby God was pleased to manifest himselfe unto them, see my Exposition, Chap. 24.10.

*Maimony in Misneh, in Jesudei Hatorah, Chap.*1. *Sect.*10.

Psal.17.15. Calvin.

Simlerus.

Verse 19.

He answered, I will make all my good to before thy face, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee, for I will be mercifull to whom I will be mercifull. For, good, the Chaldee hath, glory, and the Septuagint, I will passe before thee with my glory. But being rendered, good, as in Hebrew the sense will be best, I will make thee see all my rich treasures which I have to bestow upon mine elect. For so Rab. Menahem saith, that God shewed Moses all his rich treasures, and when he asked, whose that rich treasure was, the Lord answered, To him that worketh I will give wages, and whoso hath no workes, to him I will give freely; For I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy. Or by good, we may understand with Simlerus, goodnesse or majesty, which should passe before him, but he was not able to behold it: for that by good, the majesty and glory of God is here meant, appeareth, *v.*22. Ferus by good, understandeth the good workes of God, and the good which the Lord did to Moses, resolving the words thus: Do not look so high as to desire to see into my

R. Menahem.

Simlerus.

my eſſence, but behold my workes, and look upon the good which I have done and will do to thee, and hereby learn what I am, and how neer I am to thoſe that love me. For by his works which are all very good, God may be known, *Rom.*1. Act. 4. But the ſeqnel ſheweth, that it is not thus meant, becauſe it was ſomething that ſhould then paſſe before Moſes, ſetting forth the excellency of the Lord. By good therefore, as hath been alre dy ſaid, underſtand majeſty and glory, which to behold it is moſt pleaſant and delightfull, as Calvin explaineth it, and Tremelius likewiſe expoundeth it by glory, as *v.*22. I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee S. Auguſtine having applied the former words myſtically to Chriſt, I will make all my good t go before thee; becauſe the Lord had before promiſed to go with him, but here he ſaith, before thee, as if Chriſts paſſing before all the faithfull to heaven to prepare manſions for them were here alluded to, expoundeth theſe words of the name of the Lord called upon in all Nations in the ſight of the Jews, ſaying, I will call in the name of the Lord before thy face: that is, in thy ſight who art a type of the Jews, as if he had ſaid, the Jews diſperſed, and beholding it, I will cauſe the Gentiles in all places to call Chriſt the Lord, and it is to be noted, ſaith he, that it is not ſpoken paſſively, I will be called, but actively, I will call, to ntimate, that by his grace this was effected which is further expreſſed in the next words, I will be mercifull to whom I will be mercifull, not for their merits, but through my grace and mercy, they ſhall be brought to this, that they ſhall believe and call Chriſt the Lord. Whereas the ſame thing is doubled, I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and mercifull to whom I will be merciful: I kuow not, ſaith he, what this ſhould mean, unleſſe this doubling be for further confirmation, as the dream of Pharaoh was doubled, or to intimate two ſorts of people to whom the Lord would freely ſhew mercy, the Gentile and the Jew; the two words in Greek are rendered by ἐλεήσω and οἰκτειρήσω. To this effect Auguſtine in more words, and Rabanus verbatim after him, as his manner for the moſt part is. Rab. Menahem, I will proclaim my great name before thee which thou canſt not ſee. Calvin, who expoundeth the paſſing of all his good before him, of a momentany and ſhort ſight that he ſhould have thereof, interpreteth this of proclaiming his name before him thus, I will declare to thy ear by a clear and loud voice that which is profitable to he known concerning me, it being hereby declared, that the true knowledge of God is rather perceived by the eares then by the eyes, a viſion being in it ſelf but as a dead body, and doctrine ſounded in the ears as a ſoul enlivening it, and working faith, as the Logicians ſay of a Syllogiſme, that it is as a body, and the reaſon in it as a ſoul So that the firſt thing promiſed that he ſhould ſee, was a great benefit; but that which he ſhould hear vvas far greater, And like to this is that of Ferus, I vvill name in thy hearing the epithites and names whereby thou maiſt ſufficiently underſtand vvhat is good, profitable and neceſſary to ſalvation, I vvill declare unto thee by my vvord, vvho and vvhat manner of one I am, vvherefore if thou vvouldeſt ſee me, thou ſhalt not need to look about thee here and there, but onely to attend to my vvord and thou ſhalt ſee me. And he ſaith, that ſome read it paſſively, I will be called by the name of the Lord expounding it, I vvill ſhew ſuch ſignes that the Gentiles ſeeing them ſhall before thee acknowledge and call me the Lord, but this, as it is worthy, is rejected by him. Simlerus followeth that of Calvin and Ferus, which indeed is the beſt, the other of Auguſtine be ng farre fetcht. I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious. Here, ſaith Ferus God maketh himſelf known, and ſeen to Moſes, as if he had ſaid, Would'ſt thou ſee my glory? Behold, this is my glory, that I am mercifull, yea mercy it ſelf ſaving whom I pleaſe onely out of my mercy, not for their merits, for by deſert all ſhould be damned, and God is debtor to none. Thus Paul applieth this ſaying, Rom 9. which though it be abuſed by the wicked, yet it is moſt comfortable to the godly to think that our ſalvation flovveth onely from Gods mercy and not from our ſelves; becauſe if the atteining ſalvation vvere left in Ferus.

Calvin.

Auguſt. quaſt. 153. in Exod.

Rab. Menahem. Calvin.

Ferus.

Note.

in the hand of our free vvill, vve could have no hope of it, seeing vve can do no good of our selves, vvhich saying of his is to be noted against them that stand so much for the liberty of vvill in these times. Neither, saith he, hath he left it uncertain upon vvhom he vvill have mercy, for this, saith Christ, is the will of the Father, that whoso believeth on me should have life. This doctrine, although it be most true, yet forsomuch as the name of the Lord is afterwards proclaimed before Moses, Chap. 34. the words must not be taken as thus cohering with the former, but rather as a reason, why the Lord after this foul sin committed vvould vouchsafe a more clear knowledge of his majesty to Moses then to the holy Patriarchs that lived long before? nothing moved him hereunto but his mercy; and this was hereby the more magnified, because although Moses alone did see and hear this, yet it was for the good and salvation of all the people who had been so rebellious: thus Calvin. And Ainsworth saith, because, v. 16. he had asked this for all the people, and God would restrein it according to his own will, he addeth these words; or it may be understood as having reference to all the favours hitherto shewed to Moses to whom the Lord had been singularly gracious, and now promised to be more gracious in communicating unto him a more clear knowledge of himself. If any shall demand, why this one man was thus graced above all others? here is the reason; not his merit but Gods will to shew him this admirable mercy was the onely cause thereof: for the doubling of the word, I rest in that of Augustine before.

Quia enim homo nihil boni ex seipso potest, nulla spes adipiscendæ salutis reliqua esset, si consecutio salutis in manu liberi arbitrii nostri reposita esset.

Calvin.

Ainsworth.

Verse 20. And he said, Thou canst not see my face; for no man shall see me and live. Man living here, say the Rabbins, is a sinner, and so unworthy to see God: this is therefore reserved to the life to come after death; which Ferus utther explaining, saith, To see God is perfect blessednesse, which is not the portion of this life, but onely of that which is to come. Neither, saith he, can we see him for his glory by reason of the weaknesse of our sight, which cannot behold one of his glorious creatures, the Sun in the brightnesse thereof. And by reason of this weaknesse and sin we cannot bear God with his glory approaching, forsomuch as fear is then ready to exanimate us, as Deut. 5. 24. Judg. 13. 22. Esa. 6. 5. Dan. 10. 8. Revel. 1. 17. Wherefore, Rom. 3. 23. it is said, All have sinned, and are deprived of the glory of God. The onely sight that we can have of God here is in his Word and Works; but to see him, that is, his essence, is reserved for the life to come.

Verse 21. And the Lord said, Here is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon the rock, and whilest I passe by, I will put thee in a clift of the rock, and cover thee with mine hand whilest I passe, then will I take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my backparts. All this is spoken after the manner of men, who hold their hands before their eyes to look upon the Sun shining, and cannot see the full brightnesse thereof, which is as it were the fore-part, but onely some of that brightnesse which their weak sight can endure, which is as it were the back-part. Yet the Hebrews have a tradition, saith Comestor, that he saw the back-part of a man, and in the hinder-part of his head certain ligatures: and Rab. Menahem saith, that God now appeared like Sheliack tsibbur, the Minister of the Sanctuary clad with a robe. And Maimony saith, Moses saw him on the Sea like a mighty Warrior, and here like a Minister of the Congregation. But God is a Spirit, and hath no parts of a body as man hath; and therefore he understandeth better by his hand some cloud interposed betwixt Moses and the Divine Glory passing by; and by the back-parts, some part of this glory seen afar off, whereby, as by the back we may know one to be a man, but not what man in particular, so he knew that the majesty of the Highest passed there, but the full sight or knowledge of his essence he could not attain to. In the clift of the rock Moses was put for fear, when this glory should passe by, as the like phrase is used, Esay 2. 21. and touching the hand covering him, a cloud is called by this name Cappajim, hands, Job 36. 32. and Elijah his servant saw a cloud rising like an hand. For hand, the Chaldee hath word, and again again ſpeaking of the taking it away, I will take away the word of my glory. Maimony ſaith, God made known to Moſes that which no man knew before him nor ſhall know after him, for he apprehended in his knowledge the truth of the eſſence diſtinctly from the eſſence of other things, as a man, whoſe back-parts are ſeen, and his whole body and raiment is diſtinctly known from the bodies of other men. But, as hath been already ſhewed, in denying to let him ſee his face, the perfect knowledge of his eſſence was denied unto him in this life; and therefore, although Moſes had more knowledge imparted unto him then any other, yet he came ſhort of this till death. My face ſhall not be ſeen. Seeing is not onely ſpoken of the bodily eye, but alſo of the heart, Eccleſ. 1. 16. My heart hath ſeen; he meaneth then, that man ſhall not onely not ſee his eſſence with his bodily eye, not perfectly comprehend it in this life with the eye of his underſtanding. Thus Rab. Menahem; becauſe it is not ſaid here, My face ſhall no man ſee, but my face ſhall not be ſeen, noteth, that it is, as if he had ſaid, There is no power in any creature to comprehend it. By the rock here myſtically Chriſt is generally underſtood: He that will ſee the Lord, ſaith Ferus, muſt place himſelf in the wounds of Chriſt, as in the clift of a rock by faith, as the Church is ſaid to be, Cant. 2. 14. For no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he, to whom the Son will reveal him. When the Lord appeared to Elijah, a mighty winde renting the rocks; this ſignified, ſaith Simlerus, the confounding of all falſe Chriſts. Yet ſome, he ſaith, by the rock here underſtand the ſenſe of the minde, as touching divine things; and ſome, a minde free from perturbation through worldly things. The clift of the rock, wherein Moſes was placed; he alſo ſaith, figured out the ſoul placed in the body, and ſeeing onely, as it were, afarre off through a crany the divine majeſty, as when a man is in a priſon, out of which onely he can ſee the Sun-beams a little, but not the Sun in the brightneſſe thereof. Or elſe by the rock underſtanding Chriſt, as before, the placing of Moſes in a clift thereof ſhewed, that Moſes lieth hid in Chriſt, that is, the law appeareth not to juſtifie, as not being able, but Chriſt onely through faith in his name, we with our Moſes, that is, our morall good deeds muſt ſeek to be covered with his righteouſneſſe, and ſo onely we ſhall be ſafe. Gods covering him with his hand ſhewed, that we muſt not over-curiouſly pry into the things of God. And by his back-parts the titles and effects of God are meant, ſaith Ferus, his word and works, whereby we know in part, what God is. Or hereby Chriſt may be meant, as if he had ſaid, in backer or after-times thou ſhalt ſee me in my Son transfigured upon the mount. Or thus, thou, that is, the Jews whom thou repreſenteſt ſhall ſee me, that is, believe in Chriſt after his death and aſcenſion, and ſending of the Holy Ghoſt, but not in his paſſage, whileſt he lived and converſed amongſt them: or elſe their eyes being covered with a vail hitherto, they ſhall be converted and believe about the latter end of the world. Some, ſaith Simlerus, by back-parts underſtand the Rites and Ceremonies of the Law, before which becauſe Chriſt was, they were as it were his back-parts, and hereby he might ſee Chriſt, that is, God to come and ſuffer in the fleſh. If we ſtretch the myſtery to all theſe wayes, we ſhall not erre, becauſe one and the ſame thing may myſtically point at many.

Scholast. histor.

1 Kings 18. 44.

Maimony in Miſnah, in Jeſuiddarash, Chap 1. ſect. 10.

R. Menahem.

The Myſtery. Matth. 16. Ferus. John 1.

Simlerus.

Matth. 17.

CHAP. XXXIV.

AND the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Hew thee two tables like the former, and I will write in them the words which were in the former tables, &c. The Lord being reconciled, ſaith Simlerus, to the people through the mediation of Moſes, taketh order for the renuing of the tables of the Teſtimony in token thereof, as they had been formerly broken in token of the Covenant broken, whereupon God with his Tabernacle departed from amongſt them, but now the tables being renued, as being perfectly reconciled, he returned with his Tabernacle, Verſe 1.

Simlerus.

bernacle, and all ſignes of grace, placing it in the midſt of them again, as will afterwards appear. The breaches made by ſin, as Ferus noteth hereupon, are repaired by repentance, and forſomuch as there was no ſprinkling with blood again to renue the Covenant, as was at the firſt making thereof, it ſheweth, that Baptiſme is not to be iterated after falling into ſin, but onely by repentance we muſt riſe up again. In that Moſes muſt prepare theſe tables, whereas God prepared the former, but God will write the ſame words in them, it figured out the repairing of the image of God in man by Chriſt, when as by ſin it had been broken and defaced: or that the Miniſter of God is by his teaching and exhorting and admoniſhing to form mens hearts, but God only by the finger of his Spirit, can and doth write his Lawes therein. And moreover the diſanulling of the old Covenant, and the bringing in of a new was hereby ſet forth, and that this new one ſhould laſt alwayes, becauſe the firſt tables were broken, and ſo continued not, but the other were kept alwayes unbroken. Laſtly, the falling away of the Jewes ſo much inſtructed by the Lord, and the converſion of the Gentiles by the holy Apoſtles, never to fall away again was figured out by theſe things: hitherto Ferus.

Ferus.
Note.

Verſe 2.

And be ready in the morning, &c. In appointing him to be ready in the morning, he ſheweth that he loveth diligence in his ſervice, and for the warning here following, that none ſhould be with him in the mount, verſ. 2,3. or about it, either man or beaſt, this was according to the order in the firſt giving of the Law, Chap. 19. and therefore the reaſon may be ſeen there, and unto that, which is there ſaid, we may adde, God would hereby purchaſe the more authority to Moſes. If it be ſaid, yet if ſome others had been admitted to ſee the writing renued, it would have been more certain; I anſwer, they vvere ſufficiently aſſured, that it vvas Gods act, becauſe they heard the ſame vvords before they ſavv ſignes of Gods preſence, Moſes carried onely the tables, but none inſtrument to vvrite vvithall, up to the mount; and laſtly at his return he ſavv his face ſhine, an evidence, that he had ſtayed with the Lord before the glorious face of his Majeſty, whileſt the words of the Law were again written by him. As the Lord commanded, ſo Moſes prepared the tables of ſtone, and was ready waiting for the Lord in the morning upon the mount.

Object.
Sol.

Verſe 4.

Verſe 5.
Verſe 6.

And the Lord deſcended in a Cloud, and ſtood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord, and the Lord paſſed before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God, gracious and mercifull, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſſe and truth, &c. This deſcending was by a manifeſtation of his glorious preſence, ſaith the Chaldee, which glory of God by and by ſaid to paſſe by Moſes the Hebrews call Shecinah, brightneſſe, affirming it to be one with God, and ſaying, there is no coming before the bleſſed and moſt high King, but by Shecinah; and again in the time of favourable acceptation, it was well with them by Shecinah: who ſeeth not here, that the old Rabbins had ſome knowledge, and taught ſomething touching the Son of God to come in the fleſh, who is ſaid to be the ingraven image and brightneſſe of the Father, and in whom alone we are directed to come to the Father in all our prayers? And proclaimed the name of the Lord. The Targum Hieroſolym. doth plainly pervert this, rendring it, and Moſes prayed and ſaid, referring the Lords proclaiming to Moſes his praying, when as it is both expreſly ſaid, that he proclaimed, and the Lords proclaiming his name before Moſes was promiſed, Chap. 33. and therefore Rab. Menahem better reſolving theſe words ſaith, Shecinah proclaimed theſe properties: yet the vulgar Latin rendereth it, as ſpoken of Moſes, and Ferus followeth this or the other, and ſo doth Simlerus. But Calvin beſt, whereas it is twice ſaid, proclaimed, referreth the firſt to Moſes, becauſe the ſame words are elſewhere uſed to ſet forth praying, as Gen. 12.8. and the latter to God. This Cloud deſcending, no doubt, in the ſight of the people, God is ſaid to deſcend, becauſe it was a ſigne of his glorious preſence not to be

Rab. Menahem in Levit. 10.

Heb. 1.
John 14.6.

Ferus.
Simlerus.
Calvin.

be born without a Cloud ſhadowing it. For God being infinite and filling all places neither deſcendeth, nor aſcendeth, but is ſaid ſo to do, becauſe by ſuch ſignes we according to our ſenſe think him to deſcend, unleſſe with Simlerus we ſhall refer this to Chriſt, who now and at ſundry other times appeared to the ancients, when the Lord is ſaid to have appeared. The Lord, the Lord God, here are three titles, two ſetting forth eſſence, and one ſtrength and power, the firſt being doubled, ſaith Calvin, for the greater Emphaſis. Here are three titles, according to ſome, as Simlerus ſaith, to intimate the bleſſed Trinity. Ferus is for the Trinity, and ſpeaking of the words, as they are rendered in the vulgar Latin, Dominator, Domine, Deus, he ſaith, that Deus ſetteth forth the Creatour, Dominator the Governour, and Dominus the Univerſall Governour over all things, but becauſe theſe words ſo diſtingniſht are not in this place, I paſſe this over. After the titles, there be ſeven attributes ſetting forth Gods mercy towards penitent ſinners. 1 Gracious, ſhewing favour to them, though unworthy. 2 Merciſull, pittying them in their miſeries. 3 Long-ſuffering, in bearing with their infirmities. 4 Of much mercy and bounty, in doing them good. 5 Of much truth, in fulfilling his promiſes. 6 Keeping mercy for thouſands, that is, for their poſterity to a 1000 generations. 7 Forgiving all ſorts of ſins, ſetting forth in theſe words, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, wherein bleſſedneſſe ſtandeth: thus Ainſworth. Others by the two firſt vvords underſtand pitifulneſſe, and beneficence, for the Lord is not onely moved vvith pity to the miſerable, as the vvord racum, ſignifieth, but doth alſo actually confer benefits upon them, according to the ſignification of the vvord Canun, freely to beſtovv a benefit, ſo Simlerus, ſaying, that ſome by theſe tvvo vvords vvill have Gods mercy in preſerving men from falling, and in helping them up again, that are falne, ſet forth. And vvhereas three vvords are uſed to ſet forth ſins, in ſpeaking of his taking avvay of ſin, the middle פשע is expounded by him of the ſin of that people about the golden Calf, and becauſe Jeſus Chriſt onely taketh avvay the ſins of the vvorld, he moſt properly is here deſcribed.

Simlerus. Ferus. Ainſworth. Pſa. 32. 1. Simlerus.

And that will by no means clear the guilty, viſiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, &c. Leaſt God ſhould be thought to be all mercy by that vvhich hath been hitherto proclaimed, ſhevving mercy alike to all ſinners, theſe words are added, to ſhew, that although the penitent ſinner is by him pardoned, yet the hard-hearted and impenitent ſhall be deſtroyed, for the further expreſſing of which the Chaldee further addeth, in them that convert not; and becauſe this doth not appear in many wicked perſons here, the Targum Hieroſol. addeth, he will not clear ſinners in the day of the great judgement: the like ſupply is, Numb. 14. 18. made alſo in the ſame Targum, and Nah. 1. 3. How he puniſheth the wickedneſſe of the fathers upon the children ſee upon the ſecond commandment. And all theſe things commemorated are the good of God, which he before promiſed ſhould paſſe before Moſes, for even this juſtice of his in puniſhing the impenitent ſinner is good, and therefore it is ſaid, that the juſt ſhould joy in ſeeing it, as a good thing, Pſa. 58. 11. The words rendered, that wil by no means clear the guilty, are otherwiſe rendered by Calvin thus, not making innocent. by Simlerus thus, not making innocent the innocent, according to the Hebrew נקה לא ינקה. For the word נקה ſignifieth innocent, and the verb coming hereof, to make innocent, but it ſignifieth alſo, to make void or empty or without, נקה one void of fault or without puniſhment, and the meaning is, the wicked yet without puniſhment and ſeeming for this to be happy and well enough liked by the Judge of all, he will not make innocent or void of fault, but ſhew him to be guilty by puniſhing him in due time: ſo Simlerus, who alſo ſaith, that by ſome theſe words are expounded thus, the innocent, that is, ſuch as are moſt without fault, are not without fault, but ſinners before him, and need the righteouſneſſe of another to juſtifie them. By ſome the nocent acquitted by earthly Judges for bribes as innocent, he will not let paſſe ſo, but puniſh them without all partiality.

Verſe 7. Chaldee Paraphraſt. Targum Hieroſol. Calvin. Simlerus.

tiality. By ſome, the innocent ſhall not be altogether innocent, but although they be in mercy delivered from the guilt, yet they ſhall bear puniſhments for their ſins in ſome meaſure, hereby as by chaſtiſements, to be brought into the right way. Laſtly, Calvin differing from all theſe, after that he hath expounded theſe words, as I have done at the firſt, ſaith that נקה is put for cutting off, Jer. 13. and therefore the meaning may be, he will not by cutting off cut off, as if theſe words were added by way of amplification of the former, forgiving iniquities, tranſgreſſions and ſins, and not cutting them off, as they deſerve, for then all fleſh muſt periſh. But the common received Expoſition of the word being held, he will not make innocent the innocent, the ſenſe will be good thus, he will not deal with them as innocent, forgiving their ſins, which think themſelves innocent and juſt, and ſo are not humbled for their ſins with the poor Publican, but dote upon their own righteouſneſſe with the Phariſee, being thus alwayes kept in the ſtate of impenitency and ſin.

Luke 18.

Verſe 8. Verſe 9. And Moſes made haſte and fell upon the earth and worſhipped, and ſaid, If I have found favour in thy ſight, I pray thee, let our Lord go among ſt us, &c. The Lord having thus graciouſly diſcovered himſelfe unto Moſes, that he might not let ſlip this opportunity, he made haſte, laying hold of Gods own Proclamation, to mediate again for the people: Even as when a King cometh to a City, they that have any ſuits unto him, haſten to prefer them, knowing that then ſpecially he will be facil to grant, that his coming thither may be the more joyfull to all men, thus Simlerus, who alſo ſaith, that the Hebrews ſay, that Moſes made this haſte to prevent the Lord, leſt he ſhould unto the third and fourth generation, of which he ſpake, adde the fifth and ſixth; but this is abſurd, that Moſes ſhould offer to interrupt the Lord, and not waite, till he had made an end of ſpeaking. Moſes had asked twice before that God would go with them, yet here he asketh the ſame again, and Chriſt prayed three times let this cup paſſe from me, becauſe we muſt uſe importunity in prayer, ſaith Ferus. And it is to be noted, the more he was graced of God, the more humble he is before him, caſting himſelf down upon the ground, and ſo Gods favours towards us muſt not make us proud, but the more humble. And he groundeth all the parts of his prayer upon the Proclamation: for his praying, that God would go amongſt them is grounded upon this, abundant in goodneſſe and truth, he had by promiſe tied himſelf to their forefathers, his praying him to pardon their iniquities and ſins upon this, forgiving iniquities, &c. and his mentioning of them a ſtiff-necked people had reference to this, not making innocent the innocent, for they being confeſſed to be a ſtiff necked people, ſtood not upon their innocency. Laſtly, and take us for thine inheritance, is grounded upon the ſame forgiving iniquities, for ſeeing the Lord counted them his inheritance before that ſin, it being forgiven, it might well be deſired, that he would take them again for his inheritance. And this reſpect muſt we have in all our prayers to Gods gracious promiſes, and hereby be ſtirred up to faithfull and earneſt prayer. Calvin ſaith, that Moſes being aſtoniſhed at this glorious preſence made haſte, and he noteth, that taking them to be his inheritance did ſo hang together with the pardon of their ſins, as that he could not poſſeſſe them his inheritance without pardoning them, and therefore Moſes ſpeaketh of this as a motive, neither can we become Gods inheritance, wherein our felicity conſiſteth, but our ſins being likewiſe pardoned. For the haſtening of Moſes, I prefer the former reaſon, becauſe aſtoniſhment beateth a man down as dead and ſpeechleſs, as we may ſee in divers examples. For his ſaying, they are a ſtiff-necked people, this, ſaith Simlerus, may be taken as an Argument of the neceſſity of Gods going with them, they being otherwiſe unwieldable, and whereas in craving pardon, he ſaith not their ſins, but our ſins, he ſpeaketh thus in acknowledgement of his own ſinfulneſſe alſo.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Note.

Calvin.

Simlerus.

Verſe 10. And he ſaid, Behold, I make a covenant before all the people, I will do marvels vails, &c. Here the Lord yeeldeth fully to the petition of Moses, viz. to binde himself by covenant unto the people again to be amongst them, and to manifest his presence by strange miracles, which he would do in expelling the Canaanites, &c. before them, and the condition on their part to be kept was to observe his laws, and to make no league, or to tolerate the idolatries of those people, &c. *vers.*11,12, &c. to *vers.*17. The same Covenant was made and confirmed before, *Chap.*23.23, &c. and *Chap.*24. but being broken by their sin, it was needfull now to be renewed again, and after fourty yeers, the generation of the mutinous being worn out, it was renewed the second time, *Deut.*29. Touching the strange things which he promiseth to do, when the Sun and the Moon were made to stand still in the dayes of Josuah, there is a clause concerning them, Is not this written in the book of Jasher? *Jos.*10.12. by the Chaldee rendered, In the book of the law, as if that were the thing here promised. But besides those, there were many more, as dividing the river Jordan, and fighting from Heaven for them, &c. all which also are without doubt here meant. For the Lords promise of casting out the Amorites, see before, Chap 23.23. And whereas he forbiddeth making a covenant with them, *vers.*12. the same is also there forbidden, *Chap.*23.32. But what is briefly set down there, *vers.*24. Thou shalt utterly overthrow their gods, and quite break down their images, is here further amplified, *vers.*13. Ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves, not onely the idols, their gods must be put down; but also the things and places, wherein and by which they were served, altars and groves, that is, green trees amongst which the Heathen served them, and did their sacrifices, consecrating such places to them for this end, *Deut.*12.2. 2 *King.*16.4. And trees and groves, saith Pliny, were the temples of their gods. And by the Roman laws of the twelve tables it was ordained, that there should be groves in the fields; but contrariwise the Israelites must not plant any grove neer the altar of the Lord, *Deut.*16.21. Here also besides the making of a league with them, all marrying with them is forbidden, because hereby there would be danger of being drawn after their gods, Lest, saith he, their daughters should make thy sons to go a whoring after their gods. Idolatry is called whoredom, saith Simlerus. 1 Because the minde bound to God, as by the band of marriage, is prostituted thus to images, and the faith given is broken. 2 Because as whore-mongers dote upon their whores, so the idolater doteth upon his idol, he thinketh upon, neither mindeth any thing but that, and as the whore-monger is most lavish in spending upon his whore, so the idolater is profuse in his cost about idols. 3 Because through a just judgement of God idolatry is accompanied with whoredom, as appeareth in the practice of those that served Baal-phegor the god of the Moabites; and the temples dedicated to Venus were none other but stews, and what is done in spirituall Babylon in this kinde, that is, in Rome, the world knoweth.

Thou shalt make thee no molten gods, that is, either of silver or gold, as is expressed, *Exod.*20.23. one kinde is expressed of greatest price, but all others of wood or stone are also meant Synecdochically, and I doubt not, but that herein speciall respect was had to the golden Calf lately made, whereby the Lord had been so greatly provoked

For the feast of unleavened bread, appointed, *vers.*18. see before, Chap 22.15. And for the law of the first-born here following, *vers.*19,20. See *Chap.*13.12. for the law of making the seventh day a Sabbath, *Chap.*23.12. and 31.14. onely here, *vers.*2. is further added, in earing time and harvest, and for the feast of weeks, *vers.*22. see *Chap.*23.16. For their appearing before the Lord thrice in the yeer, *vers.*23. see *Chap.*23.17. onely if they should fear invasion by their enemies, the land being left without men to defend it, when they should all go up to these feasts to Jerusalem, it is here added for their security, No man shall desire thy land when thou shalt go up. For the law against leaven in sacrifices, and keeping the fat till the morning, vers. 25. see Chap. 23.18.

Verse 12.
Verse 13.
*Plin. lib.*12.*c.*1.
Verse 16.
Simlerus.
Numb.25.
Verse 17.
Verse 18.
Verse 19.
Verse 20.
Verse 21.
Verse 22.
Verse 24.
Verse 25.

23.18. and for the law of firſt-fruits, &c. *verſ.*26. ſee *Chap.*23.19.

Verſe 27. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Write thou theſe words, for after the tenour of theſe I have made a covenant with thee and with Iſrael. So before, Chap. 24. 4. All that was then writtten being fruſtrated by their ſin, is here after a reconciliation renewed and written over again, and this was the reaſon of repeating theſe ſpeciall laws by them to be obſerved unto God, after the firſt ſetting of them forth and writing them, *Chap.*23. and 24.

Verſe 28. And he was there with the Lord fourty dayes and fourty nights, he did neither eat bread, nor drink water, and he wrote, &c. Touching the ſtay and faſt of Moſes ſo many dayes, ſee before, *Chap.*24.18. as the covenant made before was fruſtrated by their ſin, ſo was his former faſt; and therefore, as the words of the Covenant muſt be vvritten over again, ſo the like faſt muſt be by Moſes kept again, in all vvhich time Moſes being abſent as before, and they in the mean ſeaſon kept in better obedience, gave a proof of their true penitencie, that the Covenant might henceforth hold and not be diſanulled any more. Of this being of Moſes with the Lord mention is made, Deut,9.18. Moſes fell down before the Lord, as at the firſt, fourty dayes and fourty nights becauſe of their ſin, although ſome doubt whether that be not meant of another diſtinct time betvveen theſe two, ſaying, that there were three fourties faſted. But forſomuch as Moſes himſelf maketh mention onely of tvvo, *Deut.*9. it is plain that there vvere no more. If it be demanded, why Moſes faſted thus long now again? Beſides the reaſons formerly yeelded, another reaſon may be, as Ferus hath it, to ſhevv that in Heaven we ſhall have no need either to eat or drink; and another, to purchaſe the more authority to Moſes coming with theſe Lavvs the ſecond time, as being by God miraculouſly preſerved. Some there are that keep two faſts of fourty dayes in the yeer in imitation of Moſes and Chriſt; ſome three, becauſe Elias faſted likewiſe, but this is ſuperſtitious. And he wrote, this is by ſome referred to Moſes, as if he had written the ten Commandments, vvhereupon a great queſtion is moved, hovv he could be ſaid to write them, when as God had ſaid before, that he would write them? To this Ferus anſwereth, God is ſaid to write them, becauſe they were written at his command; and Moſes, becauſe he was the inſtrument to write them. And unto this another queſtion is moved by Auguſtine, what ſhould be the myſtery of this, that the firſt tables, which were broken, were inſcribed by God, but theſe which were to be laid up and to continue, by man? He anſwereth, the former tables ſetting forth the old Teſtament, having nothing in them, but the handy work of God, ſhewed, that man ſhould have no comfort by the Law, there being that preſcribed therein by God, which no man can obſerve, and by the Law it is therefore ſaid, cometh the knowledge of ſin, and ſin is ſaid to be enlived by the Law: but the latter tables figuring out the Goſpel, and therefore given without terrour, the glory of God in great favour being ſhewed, were inſcribed by man, to ſhew that under the Goſpel by the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, the Law ſhould be by man fulfilled, which is done by love, for love, it is ſaid, is the fulfilling of the Law. Thus they. And Rabanus in the number of the Commandments being ten, ſet forth by this figure X findeth a myſtery of the croſſe. Others hold that theſe words, He wrote, are to be referred to God, becauſe he promiſed to write, verſ. 1. and it is expreſſely ſaid, that God wrote them, *Deut.*10.4. whereas God biddeth Moſes, *verſ.*27. to write, it is well expounded by Tremelius in an authenticall book to be kept, as before, *Chap.*34.

Simlerus.

Ferus.

Scholaſt. hiſt.

*Auguſt.qu.*166. in Exod.
Rabanus.
Ferus.

Rom.7.

Simlerus.
Ainſworth.

Tremelius.

Verſe 29. And when Moſes came down from the mount, he wiſt not that his face ſhone whileſt he talked with him. Here the word He, is again to be referred to the Lord, which maketh our former Expoſition the more probable, He wrote, that is, the Lord wrote. For, he wiſt not that his face ſhone; the Chaldee hath it, He knevv not that the brightneſſe of the glory of his face vvas multiplied. The Septuagint, That his face was glorious. The vulgar Latine, was horned, whereupon whereupon Moſes hath been commonly painted with a pair of hornes, but the word uſed is Karan, to ſhine glorioufly, although Keren, an horn alſo cometh hereof. But the circumſtance of their not being able to look upon him, ſheweth, that ſhining glory is meant and not hornes. And Ferus and others, who follow the vulgar Latine, although they read it, hornes, yet they expound it of beams of glory like hornes proceeding from his face; and Ferus ſaith, that this glory appearing in the face of Moſes, ſhewed, that obedience and conformity to the law of God maketh the face to ſhine, that is, the converſation ſplendid outwardly, as it clarifieth the conſcience inwardly; and therefore it is no marvel that they are dark through ignorance within, and through wickedneſſe without, that take no heed to the law. Again, hereby was ſet forth, that the brightneſſe of the law ſetting forth perfect righteouſneſſe, and exacting it, was ſo great, that there are none but muſt needs be terrefied hereby. And the Apoſtle, 2 *Cor.*3. expoundeth this ſhining, as myſtically ſetting forth the glory of the law. Before this the hand of Moſes was made leprous, to ſhew the uncleanneſſe of the works of every one, for none can perfectly keep the law, but now his face ſhineth, to ſhew, that the law hath the glory of knowledge, but covered, as the vail put before it ſignified. When Chriſt was transfigured, he ſhone in glory all over, but Moſes in face onely; becauſe Chriſt received the Spirit without meaſure, and is the fountain of light, but Moſes had onely a borrowed brightneſſe from him: hitherto Ferus. There may be divers reaſons conceived, ſaith Simlerus, of this glory in the face of Moſes: as 1 That it might hereby appear, that Moſes had found grace with the Lord, and had prevailed for a reconciliation. 2 That Moſes and the law brought by him might be the more reverenced, and of the more authority. 3 That it might hereby be conceived, that Moſes was inwardly inlightened in the knowledge of the Will of God, and ſo was fit to teach it unto them. 4 To ſhew, that the Miniſters life and actions ſhould ſhine in holineſſe, *Matth.*5.16. 5 To ſhew, that the juſtice of the law is glorious but in face onely, that is, in appearance; but the true glorious juſtice which is ſuch before God, is by Chriſt alone: and the underſtanding, which is as it were the face of the inner man, is enlightened by the law, but the minde remaineth terrefied as the people now found, which yet by the grace of Chriſt and through faith in him is pacified, and ſo made all illuſtrious. And hereby was further intimated the glorification of the bodies of the Saints, when they ſhall come to be alwayes in Gods preſence, and behold his glory. Whereas Moſes is ſaid not to have known that his face ſhone, this ſhewed that the holy ſervants of God look not proudly upon their own graces, but are humble, as not taking notice thereof in themſelves.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Ferus.

Matth.17.

Simlerus.

And Aaron and all the children of Iſrael ſaw Moſes, that the ſkin of his face ſhone, and they were afraid, &c. This ſhewed, that the Miniſtery of the Law was a Miniſtery of death and condemnation, as the Apoſtle calleth it, 2 *Cor.*3. none are ſo holy, but they may be terrefied at it, both Aaron and the Elders, being hereby accuſed of ſin. And for the preſent, when this was ſo, the people might well be afraid and flee away, when they ſaw Moſes come in ſuch glory, as fearing ſome ſharper puniſhment yet for their ſin.

Verſe 30.

Moſes calleth them back, when they fled away, and firſt inſtructeth Aaron and the Princes, who ſhould be leaders unto others, and then all the people.

Verſe 31,32

And when Moſes had made an end of ſpeaking with them, he put a vail upon his face, &c. That is, after his firſt coming with them, underſtanding the cauſe of their fear, he put on a vail, and thus from time to time afterwards when he came amongſt them he came vailed, but when he returned to commune with the Lord, he put his veil off. All which was done figuratively, his putting on of the veil ſhewing the obſcure ſetting forth of Chriſt and of the things of the Goſpel under the Law, and the veil of unbelief covering the Jews hearts, till that God taketh it away: and his putting off of this veil, when he went

Verſe 33.
Verſe 34,35

went up to the Lord, the taking away of this unbelief from the Jews hearts, when they ſhall be converted, and come home to the Lord, and the vanishing away of all obſcurity in the end, when we ſhal be received into the Lords preſence, for then with open-face, yea now we that are faithfull, behold through a glaſſe the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. but then we ſhall ſee as we are ſeen, and know as we are known 1 Cor. 13. But we are all naturally blinde, and have the eyes of our hearts covered, as with a veil, till that by his Spirit the Lord enlighteneth us, and uncovereth his myſteries unto us. Ferus. Beſides the figures herein ſpoken of by the Apoſtle, Ferus ſaith, that this 1 Shewed the law to be more grievous within, then it appeared outwardly in the carnall types thereof. 2 That none can ſufficiently ſee into the myſticall things of the Scriptures, although moſt learned: for they are in ſome part veiled from us, whileſt we live here. Scholaſt. hiſtor. How often Moſes did thus, ſaith Comeſtor, is uncertain, but the Hebrews, ſaith he, have a tradition, that Moſes returned the third time to obtein aſſurance of pardon, abiding, as before, 40 dayes faſting, and ſo his laſt coming back unto them was upon the ninth day of the ſeventh moneth, and therefore the next day, which was the tenth, was kept, as a day of humiliation by all the people from year to year. The former ancients of Iſrael, ſaith Rab. Menahem, in remembrance of this covered their faces at the reading of the book of the Law, ſaying, that he which heareth from the mouth of the Reader, is as he that heareth from the mouth of Moſes. Rab. Menahem.

CHAP. XXXV.

Verſe 1. IN this Chapter Moſes ſpeaketh unto the people firſt of the Sabbath of the Verſe 2,3. ſeventh day, ſaying, Theſe are the words that the Lord hath commanded. Six dayes ſhall work be done, but on the ſeventh there ſhall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of reſt unto the Lord, whoſoever doth work therein ſhall be put to death, &c. And then of the tabernacle, and the materials to be brought to the making thereof, v. 4, 5, &c. If it be demanded here, why Moſes repeateth this touching the ſeventh day again? Upon the Lords repeating it again, Chap. 34. 21. but omitteth other charges there repeated alſo upon the renuing of the Covenant? It is anſwered, becauſe in the Sabbath, as in another veil, there was a myſtery: for we are bound ſtill to keep all the other nine Precepts of the Law, but not the Sabbath; but myſtically and ſpiritually, viz. reſting from ſin, and the Lord would have us to look upon the reſt thereof, as figuring out the inward reſt and peace, that is by Chriſt to all the faithfull, ſeeing as in fear and terrour for ſin there is no reſt but labour, ſo by faith in Chriſt we being juſtified from our ſins have comfortable reſt and quiet in our hearts, and ſhall have perfect reſt in heaven, which was principally figured out hereby. To this effect Auguſtine, and after him Rabanus: but whereas they ſay that the Sabbath is not now to be kept, they mean the Jewiſh Sabbath onely, not the Lords day. But it may alſo be obſerved, that in all the times of mentioning this law after the firſt giving of it in the Decalogue, there is ſomething more ſtill added to make it up more compleat, Chap. 23. 12. it is added, That thy ſon and daughter and ſervant, &c. may reſt, Chap. 31 14. Whoſoever doth any work therein, that ſoul ſhall be cut off; and v. 17. It is a ſigne between me and the children of Iſrael: Chap. 34. 21 In earing time and harveſt ſhalt thou reſt: and here, v. 3. Ye ſhall kindle no fire throughout all your habitations upon the Sabbath-day: and the penalty is again ſet down, Whoſoever ſhall work therein ſhall be put to death. Queſt. Ambroſ. quæſt. 172. in Exod. Rabanus Maurus. Object. If it be ſaid, theſe additions might have bin made at the firſt, and then theſe often repeatings of the ſame law might have been ſpared; I anſwer, the Lord by iterating the ſame thing often intimated the weightineſſe of this precept, and that he would by no means have it neglected, eſpecially for the figure of the reſt by Chriſt that was herein, Heb. 4. 9, 11. Sol. For the kinde of death to vvhich the Sabbath-breaker ſhould be put, nothing is ſaid here, but becauſe, *Numb.*15.32. vvhen a man had gathered ſticks upon the Sabbath-day, he vvas ſtoned to death; it appeareth, that ſtoning vvas the kinde of death to be ſuffered therefore. Touching this, that no fire muſt be kindled upon this day; this vvas ſpecified to prevent kindling of fires for the works of the Tabernacle, for which cauſe they might haply otherwiſe have thought it allowable, becauſe that was an holy work, but neither might a fire be kindled to make ready meat upon this day, *Exod.*16.23. howſoever upon other Sabbaths they might do that which was needfull about that which every one did eat, *Chap.*12.16. From this prohibition of kindling a fire the Rabbins gather, that a fire was not to be made for him that was to be burnt upon the Sabbath-day, and by the like reaſon, that none execution was to be done thereupon, or cauſes to be heard, or judgement to be given by the Judge upon that day. Of the Sabbath, and the penalty of breaking it, ſee more, *Chap.*31.14.

Maimony of the Sabbath, *Ch.*24 *Sect.*7.

Touching the Tabernacle, Moſes biddeth them to bring an offering for the making thereof, v 4,5,6, &c. to *v.*19. Of all the particulars whereof, ſee before, *Chap.*25.

Verſe 4,5,6. 7, &c.

Warning being given, the people do moſt readily bring their gifts both men and women, Bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, and veſſels of gold, &c. And they that brought, are ſaid to be ſuch, as whoſe hearts moved them to do it willingly; whereby, ſaith Simlerus, is intimated, either that they came all willingly to the offering, or that there was a diſtinction amongſt them, ſuch as were unwilling bringing nothing. But becauſe no fault was found with any, and the gifts offered did ſuper-abound, *Chap.*36.5. it is rather to be held that they all offered moſt willingly. Here was a change following upon their repentance, they had before given ear-rings to the making of an idol, but now they give ear-rings, and rings, and all ſorts of golden jewels for the making of the Sanctuary and adorning thereof, and thus it becometh all true converts to do. And not onely men but women bring to the work of the Sanctuary ſuch things as their ſex take ſingular delight in, ſhewing how the true convert is mortified to worldly vanity, and vivified to works of piety; and that not onely men but alſo women may be helps about the building of the ſpirituall Temple or Houſe of God, which is his Church, *Phil.*4.3. Rom 16.3,6,12.

Verſe 20,21 Verſe 22,23

Simlerus.

Note.

Then Moſes acquainteth them with the Will of God touching the workmen, who ſhould be chief, viz. Bezaleel, and Aholiab, &c. according to that *Chap.*32,1,2, &c.

Verſe 30,31 32,&c.

CHAP. XXXVI.

HEre the cunning Artificers, by God appointed, receive the offerings from before Moſes to make all things about the Sanctuary; and it is noted, to ſhew the willingneſſe of the people, that yet they brought every morning to Moſes more gifts, inſomuch that Moſes reſtreined them by proclamation; becauſe they had already brought enough and too much. For outward things about the worſhip of God we may ſee here in this people, that corrupt man is ready and forward, yea, even ſuch as are refractory and diſobedient to the morall law, as may alſo be noted about feaſts and ſacrifices, *Eſa.*1.12. Micah 6, &c.

Verſe 1,2. Verſe 3,4.

Note.

In the making of the holy things appointed firſt the tabernacle is finiſhed; whereas the Lord gave order firſt for the making of the ark, *Chap.*25. becauſe the ark was to be placed within the tabernacle, and might not ſtand without it at any time.

Verſe 8,9.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXVII.

HEre the ark is alſo made, as was before appointed with all the appurtenances thereof, being again named in particular to commend the care of the workmen, in that God would have all things made by them to be particularly regiſtred, and to commend unto us the more the myſticall conſideration of all theſe things, as being moſt glorious and excellent. For it was not ſo much for the outward beauty of the Sanctuary, that it is by David oft-times ſo much extolled, but for the ſpirituall figured out hereby.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Verſe 8. IN this Chapter is ſet forth the making of the brazen altar and inſtruments and veſſels belonging to it, as was alſo before appointed, Chap. 27 and Chap. 30. 18. Onely v. 8. the laver of braſſe and the foot thereof are ſaid to have been made of the looking-glaſſes of women aſſembling at the door of the Sanctuary; but what is meant hereby hath been already ſhewed, Chap. 30. v. 18.

Verſe 21, 22 Verſe 23, &c. Laſtly, verſ. 21, 22, &c. the ſum of all the gold, ſilver and braſſe brought in, and imployed to make all things is ſet down, & the ſilver is ſaid to have been raiſed of the half ſhekel a man from twenty yeers old and upward, as was before appointed, Chap. 30. 13, 14, &c. the gold was 29 talents and 730 ſhekels, the ſilver 100 talents, and 1775 ſhekels, the braſſe 70 talents, and 2400 ſhekels, the gold and the braſſe were of their voluntary offerings. The ſhekel is ſaid to be the ſhekel of the Sanctuary, that is, double to the common ſhekel, ſee Chap. 30. 13. Simlerus ſaith, that by the ſhekel of the Sanctuary is to be underſtood a juſt ſhekel. For becauſe there was much corruption in weights, it was appointed, Inſt. Nov. 128 de exactione tributorum, that juſt weights and meaſures ſhould be kept in the holy houſe, in ſacra Æde. And ſo it is likely, that weights were kept in the Sanctuary. But this was not all touching the ſhekel of the Sanctuary, but, as is generally conceived, it was twice ſo great as the common, that 10 d, this 20 d. What a talent was, we may gather by comparing the number of half ſhekels, viz. 603550 with the number of 100 talents, and 1775 ſhekels; a talent then was 3000 ſhekels of the Sanctuary, that is, counting the ſhekel at 20 pence. 250 lb. ſome holding, that this ſhekel weighed 320 barley-corns, will have the talent conſiſting of 3000 ſhekels to be 120 lb weight, which is of our money 480 lb. and becauſe gold is much more precious, a talent of gold did farre exceed: for a ſhekel of gold of the Sanctuary was 30 ſhil. then the talent being 3000 ſhekels muſt be 4500 lb. ſo that it was a wonderfull great treaſure which was brought in, that vve may ſee that the forwardneſſe of the people in offering is not commended vvithout cauſe, and that we may learn in being bountifull tovvards the promoting of the vvorſhip of God to imitate them. If it be doubted, hovv money could novv be taken by the poll, ſeeing the numbering of the people vvas, Numb. 1. Simlerus anſwereth rightly, that Moſes numbered the people more then once, now to raiſe the money appointed, and then to the warres, they being yet in both places 603550.

Simlerus. i

CHAP. XXXIX.

HEre is the making of Aarons and his ſonnes garments, of which ſee before Chap. 28. And it may be noted ſingularly here, that ſeven times it is repeated, As the Lord commanded Moſes, to commend the care of the workmen, and the like care to us in all the parts of Gods ſervice, and to intimate the myſtery myſtery moſt ſeriouſly to be conſidered in theſe things. If it be demanded, whether it be now neceſſary for the Miniſter in the worſhip of God in publick to uſe a ſingular garment? Simlerus anſwereth well, that it is not neceſſary, becauſe no vvhere preſcribed or ſpoken of as neceſſary by the Fathers, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, Jerome, &c. But if it be by the Magiſtrate enjoyned, vve muſt obey in uſing it, yea although it be a garment uſed in the time of Popery, becauſe there are many things uſed by them which are not of them, but had an higher beginning. Yet he concludeth, that it vvere better, if the Apoſtolicall ſimplicity vvere uſed in Gods vvorſhip.

Queſt.

Simlerus.

And Moſes ſaw all the work, and behold, they had done it, as the Lord commanded, and Moſes bleſſed them. As Moſes, ſo Chriſt, of vvhom he vvas a type, beholdeth our vvorks and bleſſeth us. And this is that vvhich vve ſhould look at in all things, viz. that the Lord may approve of our doings, not regarding what liking or diſlike others take, as Antimachus, when many went away from him reciting certain verſes, but Plato ſtayed, he ſaid, that Plato alone ſufficed him. Touching Moſes his bleſſing of them, the Rabbins ſay, work is a great thing, for the Shechinah dwelled not amongſt the Iſraelites till they had finiſhed all the work of the tabernacle: for then it is ſaid, that Moſes bleſſed them, that is, he ſaid, The Lord vouchſafe that the divine preſence Shechinah may dwell in the work of your hands, and ſo it came to paſſe, Chap.40.34. The cloud covered the Tent, and the glory of God filled the tabernacle.

Verſe 43.

Note.

Antimachus.

R. Elias in Reſhith Cocmah.

CHAP. XL.

HEre the Lord appointeth the tabernacle, being finiſhed, to be ſet up the firſt day of the firſt moneth of the ſecond year, as appeareth, *v.*17. and this was a new Moon, and therefore all new Moons were ſolemn feaſts unto them, *Numb.*28.11,14. *Pſal.*81.3. A year was now ſpent ſince their comming out of Egypt, wanting 14 dayes, fifty dayes when they came firſt to the mount, and were prepared to hear the Law two fourties, and other odd dayes of Moſes his being with the Lord, and comming and going, and puniſhing the Idolaters, and removing the tabernacle, and giving order for the building thereof, and acquainting them with the lawes and making the tables, in which could not be leſſe then ten dayes ſpent; and if ſo, five moneths and four dayes of the year were paſt before the beginning of the work of the tabernacle, and then in ſeven moneths wanting four dayes the whole building was finiſhed, which argued the great diligence of the workmen, and commendeth the like diligence to us in all good works to Gods glory. Simlerus maketh a queſtion, whether the tabernable were all ſet up upon this day? and anſwereth, that it is moſt probable that it was not done in one but in more dayes, and that the ſetting of it up was ended this day, but becauſe the Lord appointeth this for the onely day, I think rather that this onely was ſpent about it, and it might well be done, there being help enough in a day, ſeeing all things were fitted before. The tabernacle being ſet up for twelve dayes together the Princes brought divers offerings for dedication, *Numb.*7. the day following the Paſſeover was kept, *Numb.*9. The next new Moon of the ſecond moneth the people were numbered, Numb 1. and unclean perſons put out of the camp, *Numb.*5. Upon the 20 day they began to travell again, *Numb.*10.11. ſo that from the beginning of this moneth to the 20 day of the next the lawes of ſacrificing were given by the Lord out of the Holy of Holies unto Moſes, and by him to the people, and all things done in Leviticus and Numbers to *Chap.*10. were done in 48 dayes. The tabernacle with all the appurtenances being ſet up and conſecrated by anointing, the place where it ſtood, is ſaid to be in the midſt of the camp, *Numb.*1.2. ſo that the tabernacle was no more without the camp in diſpleaſure, as *Ch.*33.7.

Verſe 1,2.

Verſe 3,4. &c.

Note.

Simlerus.

*Levit.*1.1.

And the order is obſervable, how they encamped about it, firſt the Levites, and then all the other Tribes, none that were unclean being permitted in the camp, and the nearer any came to the Lord, they muſt be the more ſanctified. And according to this order in Jeruſalem from the gates to the mountain of the Temple were the people placed, from thence the Levites, and in the middeſt the Temple. Maimony. Touching the dedicating and conſecrating of holy things and Temples in theſe dayes, it ſeemeth to have taken the originall from hence, but the anointing being typical and proper to thoſe times is ſuperſtitiouſly reteined by the Papiſts, and left in the reformed Churches after the example of Conſtantine, who called the Biſhops to conſecrate a Church onely by prayer and reading of the holy Scriptures, and preaching, 1 *Tim.*4.5.

Maimony in Beſhabchirab.

Euſebius de vita Conſtantini.

Verſe 34.

Then a Cloud covered the Tabernacle, &c. By this ſigne God came to dwell there, as he had promiſed and Moſes prayed, ſo 2 *Chron.*5.14. where it is ſaid that the Prieſts could not go into the Temple therefore, as Moſes could not here, to ſhew the unworthineſſe of the beſt to come neer to God. It is thought, that till now the cloud and fire appearednot, ſince their comming to mount Sinai, as before, which was the cauſe that they vvould have gods made to go before them, *Eſa.*6.4. ſmoak filleth the Temple, and *Eſa.*4.5. and Revelations 15.8. but ſmoake vvas a ſigne of anger, *Pſal.*18.9. Iſaiah 14.31.

LEVI-

A COMMENTARY upon THE BOOK of Leviticus.

CHAP. I.

AND the Lord called to Moſes, and ſpake to him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, ſaying, ſpeak to the children of Iſrael, if any man bring an offering, &c.] This book is called Leviticus, although in Hebrew it hath the name from the firſt word, as all the reſt of the bookes of Moſes alſo have, becauſe the ſacrifices to be offered in the tabernacle by the Prieſts who were of the tribe of Levi, are here preſcribed. It beginneth with a conjunction copulative, as a continuation of the former, and the Lord called to Moſes, &c. And ſo doth the book of Numbers, becauſe about mount Sinai, before they made any more remove, all theſe things were done. If it be demanded why then this diſtinction of books is made, Heſych. anſwereth to avoid tediouſneſſe to the reader; before it was ſaid, that the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, that Moſes could not enter, Exod. 40.35,36. wherefore to him the Lord calleth now out of the tabernacle, that is, by a voice from the mercy ſeat, upon the Arke, as was before promiſed, Exod.25.22. and is expreſly ſaid, Numb.7.89. For the mercy ſeat was a figure of Chriſt, as hath bin before ſhewed, and therefore hereby it was prefigured, how God ſhould ſpeak unto and teach his people by Chriſt. The voyce whereby God ſpake to Moſes was not ſo great and loud, as is generally held, as when he ſpake from mount Sinai, but more low and ſoft, yet audible to Moſes, and to the prieſts and heads, who could by their hearing it teſtifie, that theſe Lawes of ſacrificing came from God; ſo Toſtatus and others, and the Rabbins note that the laſt letter of ויקרא he called, is written ſmall to intimate a ſmall and ſoft voyce. Here we may note, that

Verſe 1. 2.

Heb.1.1,2, 3.

Toſtatus. Rabbini.

And the order is obſervable, how they encamped about it, firſt the Levites, and then all the other Tribes, none that were unclean being permitted in the camp, and the nearer any came to the Lord, they muſt be the more ſanctified. And according to this order in Jeruſalem from the gates to the mountain of the Temple were the people placed, from thence the Levites, and in the middeſt the Temple. Maimony. Touching the dedicating and conſecrating of holy things and Temples in theſe dayes, it ſeemeth to have taken the originall from hence, but the anointing being typical and proper to thoſe times is ſuperſtitiouſly reteined by the Papiſts, and left in the reformed Churches after the example of Conſtantine, who called the Biſhops to conſecrate a Church onely by prayer and reading of the holy Scriptures, and preaching, 1 Tim. 4. 5.

Maimony in Beſhabchirab.

Euſebius de vita Conſtantini.

Verſe 34.

Then a Cloud covered the Tabernacle, &c. By this ſigne God came to dwell there, as he had promiſed and Moſes prayed, ſo 2 Chron. 5. 14. where it is ſaid that the Prieſts could not go into the Temple therefore, as Moſes could not here, to ſhew the unworthineſſe of the beſt to come neer to God. It is thought, that till now the cloud and fire appeared not, ſince their comming to mount Sinai, as before, which was the cauſe that they vvould have gods made to go before them, Eſa. 6. 4. ſmoak filleth the Temple, and Eſa. 4. 5. and Revelations 15. 8. but ſmoake vvas a ſigne of anger, Pſal. 18. 9. Iſaiah 14. 31.

LEVI-

A COMMENTARY upon THE BOOK of Leviticus.

CHAP. I.

AND the Lord called to Moſes, and ſpake to him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, ſaying, ſpeak to the children of Iſrael, if any man bring an offering, &c.] This book is called Leviticus, although in Hebrew it hath the name from the firſt word, as all the reſt of the bookes of Moſes alſo have, becauſe the ſacrifices to be offered in the tabernacle by the Prieſts who were of the tribe of Levi. are here preſcribed. It beginneth with a conjunction copulative, as a continuation of the former, and the Lord called to Moſes, &c. And ſo doth the book of Numbers, becauſe about mount Sinai, before they made any more remove, all theſe things were done. If it be demanded why then this diſtinction of books is made, Heſych. anſwereth to avoid tediouſneſſe to the reader; before it was ſaid, that the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, that Moſes could not enter, Exod. 40.35,36. wherefore to him the Lord calleth now out of the tabernacle, that is, by a voice from the mercy ſeat, upon the Arke, as was before promiſed, Exod.25.22. and is expreſly ſaid, Numb.7.89. For the mercy ſeat was a figure of Chriſt, as hath bin before ſhewed, and therefore hereby it was prefigured, how God ſhould ſpeak unto and teach his people by Chriſt. The voyce whereby God ſpake to Moſes was not ſo great and loud, as is generally held, as when he ſpake from mount Sinai, but more low and ſoft, yet audible to Moſes, and to the prieſts and heads, who could by their hearing it teſtifie, that theſe Lawes of ſacrificing came from God; ſo Toſtatus and others, and the Rabbins note that the laſt letter of ויקרא he called, is written ſmall to intimate a ſmall and ſoft voyce. Here we may note, that

Verſe 1. 2.

Heb.1.1,2, 3.

Toſtatus. Rabbini.

And the order is obſervable, how they encamped about it, firſt the Levites, and then all the other Tribes, none that were unclean being permitted in the camp, and the nearer any came to the Lord, they muſt be the more ſanctified. And according to this order in Jeruſalem from the gates to the mountain of the Temple were the people placed, from thence the Levites, and in the middeſt the Temple. Maimony. Touching the dedicating and conſecrating of holy things and Temples in theſe dayes, it ſeemeth to have taken the originall from hence, but the anointing being typical and proper to thoſe times is ſuperſtitiouſly reteined by the Papiſts, and left in the reformed Churches after the example of Conſtantine, who called the Biſhops to conſecrate a Church onely by prayer and reading of the holy Scriptures, and preaching, 1 *Tim.*4.5.

Maimony in Beſhabchirab.

Euſebius de vita Conſtantini.

Verſe 34.

Then a Cloud covered the Tabernacle, &c. By this ſigne God came to dwell there, as he had promiſed and Moſes prayed, ſo 2 *Chron.*5.14. where it is ſaid that the Prieſts could not go into the Temple therefore, as Moſes could not here, to ſhew the unworthineſſe of the beſt to come neer to God. It is thought, that till now the cloud and fire appearednot, ſince their comming to mount Sinai, as before, which was the cauſe that they vvould have gods made to go before them, *Eſa.*6.4. ſmoak filleth the Temple, and *Eſa.*4.5. and Revelations 15.8. but ſmoake vvas a ſigne of anger, *Pſal.*18.9. Iſaiah 14.31.

LEVI-

A COMMENTARY upon THE BOOK of Leviticus.

CHAP. I.

AND the Lord called to Moſes, and ſpake to him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, ſaying, ſpeak to the children of Iſrael, if any man bring an offering, &c.] This book is called Leviticus, although in Hebrew it hath the name from the firſt word, as all the reſt of the bookes of Moſes alſo have, becauſe the ſacrifices to be offered in the tabernacle by the Prieſts who were of the tribe of Levi. are here preſcribed. It beginneth with a conjunction copulative, as a continuation of the former, and the Lord called to Moſes, &c. And ſo doth the book of Numbers, becauſe about mount Sinai, before they made any more remove, all theſe things were done. If it be demanded why then this diſtinction of books is made, Heſych. anſwereth to avoid tedioufneſſe to the reader; before it was ſaid, that the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, that Moſes could not enter, Exod. 40.35,36. wherefore to him the Lord calleth now out of the tabernacle, that is, by a voice from the mercy ſeat, upon the Arke, as was before promiſed, Exod.25.22. and is expreſly ſaid, Numb.7.89. For the mercy ſeat was a figure of Chriſt, as hath bin before ſhewed, and therefore hereby it was prefigured, how God ſhould ſpeak unto and teach his people by Chriſt. The voyce whereby God ſpake to Moſes was not ſo great and loud, as is generally held, as when he ſpake from mount Sinai, but more low and ſoft, yet audible to Moſes, and to the prieſts and heads, who could by their hearing it teſtifie, that theſe Lawes of ſacrificing came from God; ſo Toſtatus and others, and the Rabbins note that the laſt letter of ויקרא he called, is written ſmall to intimate a ſmall and ſoft voyce. Here we may note, that that theſe lawes were given in a very divers manner from the morall. 1. In reſpect of the place out of the tabernacle or tent, becauſe the ſervice herein preſcribed was to be done therein, and to vaniſh with that tent again. 2. In reſpect of the perſons, God ſpake here to Moſes, to ſhew that theſe lawes were made onely for the people of Iſrael. 3. In regard of the manner, theſe being given were onely written in a book, and not graven in ſtone. 4. In regard of the time, theſe were not given altogether upon one day, but in divers dayes. But the morall law was given upon mount Sinai, in the hearing of all the people, and to all in one day, and was written in tables of ſtone to ſhew the perpetuitie of it, and that all are bound to obſerve and keep it.

Verſe 1. 2.

Heb.1.1,2, 3.

Toſtatus. Rabbini.

Heſychius in Levit. 1.

Heſychius by the tabernacle will have the Scripture of the new Teſtament ſignified, becauſe all things figured out by thoſe things that were ſpoken out of the tabernacle, are here ſhewed to have been fulfilled; and ſo God ſpake out of the tabernacle is myſtically, God ſpake in the holy Scriptures of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles: For the things here appointed to be brought for ſacrifice, they are of the herd or flock, bullocks, ſheep or goats, and if fowls be brought, they muſt be turtles or yong pigeons, v. 14. of the reaſon of chooſing which five and their ſignification, ſee before, Gen. 15. 9. Some heretikes, not conſidering what was myſtically ſet forth by theſe ſacrifices, have condemned the old Teſtament, as not being of God, who delighteth not in killing and offering beaſts, as the Cerdonians, and ſome as being of the evil god, as the Marcionites, and Lucianus derideth ſacrifices, as little pleaſing to the gods. And to thoſe that look no further, but to the outward act done, they cannot indeed but ſeem childiſh and ridiculous. But the very Jews held the ſacrifices to be of myſtical ſignification, although they ſay, that they knew not what were the myſteries hereof, till the ſpirit from above be powred out upon them, but they ſuppoſed them to ſet forth the offerings which Michael offereth of the ſouls of the juſt.

Sacrificing of beaſts, why.

Cerdoniani.

Marcionitæ Lucian. περ' θυσιων.

Rab. Menahem in Levit. 1.

Queſt.

If it be demanded, forſomuch as amongſt fiſhes ſome were clean, why none of them were appointed to be offered in ſacrifice?

Lyranus.

Lyranus anſwereth, becauſe fiſhes cannot alwayes be had, ſeeing they are hidden in the waters, and becauſe they die of themſelves when they are kept out of the water; And laſtly, becauſe ſo heathens offered fiſh. And this laſt he ſaith was a reaſon why thoſe beaſts were ſingularly choſen to be offered and not any other, becauſe the heathen offered Lions, Camels, Horſes, Aſſes, Wolves, Swine, Dogs, Aſſes to Priapus, Dogs entrails to Hecate, and a Gooſ to Diana, &c. whereas Homer in deſcribing the ſacrifices of the Greeks, ſpeaketh onely of Oxen and Sheep and Goats, they payed gifts, an hecatombe to Phœbus; and again, inquiring the reaſon why Apollo ſent the plague amongſt them, he ſaith, Is it becauſe we have not paid our vowes, but delayed to offer ſacrifice, which that God requireth, viz, a tender lamb, or a kid? It is to be nnderſtood that the heathen learned to make theſe oblations afterwards of the Iſraelites; and therefore Homer alſo ſpeaketh of corn and flowre, and wine and ſalt offered in their ſacrifices, as amongſt the Hebrewes in their ſacrifices. For that the heathen were not addicted to theſe kind of ſacrifices of themſelves, appeareth, becauſe amongſt the Egyptians oxen and ſheep might not be killed, and in ſome other Common-wealths a great penalty was inflicted upon him, that ſhould kill an oxe. To revoke the Hebrewes therefore from ſuperſtition to the creature, (ſeeing in Egypt they worſhipped an oxe, and to falſ Gods, the true God appointed this worſhip appointed to be done to him. And that by bringing their beaſts to God, they might acknowledge all to come from him with David, 1 Chron. 29. 14. and when they offered not wild beaſts or fowles that coſt nothing, but oxen, &c. they might ſerve God with their coſt, as he alſo did. 2 Sam. 24. 29. For the kinds of ſacrifices, Brentius diſtinguiſheth stinguisheth them into sancta sanctorum, so called by the Hebrewes, קדשי-קדשים, becausе they were killed onely on the north side of the altar and were all burnt in sacrifice, as most holy, or the parts remaining eaten onely by the Priests: and sancta vulgaria, קדש-סקלים, so called, becausе killed in any part of the Court, and eaten of by the priests and their families, and other Israelites, so that they were clean. And of the first sort were, 1. The Holocaust or whole burnt sacrifice. 2. The burnt-offering for sinne, of both which chap. 4,5. 3. The sacrifice of consecration called מלואים from filling, becausе the Priests hands were filled herewith, chap.8. and of this sort was the sacrifice of a bullock and goat on the day of consecration, chap. 16. and of the red cow, Numb. 19. 4. The oblation called a meat-offering, Hebr. מנחה consisting of flower, oyle, wine, and salt, that was in all sacrifices, chap.2. Of the second sort were, 1. The peace-offering, chap. 3. 2. The Paschal Lamb. 3. The first fruits and the tithes. All oblations were called by one common name, קורבן. Corbanus in this place. And hitherto of the Hebrews generall distinction. And they may also be distinguished according to their occasions. For some were offered out of mere devotion, as the holocaust in this chapter, some to obtain a benefit, as the meat-offering, chap. 2. some for thanksgiving, as the peace-offering, chap. 3. and some for sinne, as the burnt-offering for sin, or sacrifice of propitiation, chap. 4 5. And these four figured out not divers Christs, but one, and the divers benefits redounding to us by him, as 1. Reconciliation with God. 2. All graces needfull for us. 3. Pardon of all our sins. 4. The acceptance of our thanksgivings. And hereby were set forth four sacrifices spirituall, still to be offered by every one of the faithfull. 1. Our whole burnt offering of our selves, of which Rom.12. 1. 2. Our meat-offering of almes, of which Heb. 13. 16. for this shall be recompenced with all blessings, Psalm 41. 1. 3. Our peace-offering of praise and thanks, Heb.13.15. 4. Our sin-offering of contrition of heart, Psalm. 51.17. so Junius. Ainsworth distinguishing the fourth into a sin-offering, chap. 4. and a trespasse-offering, chap. 5. 15. maketh five sorts of sacrifices: And Brentius saith, that by this variety of sacrifices shas shewed the insufficiency of those sacrifices to expiate sin, becausе then one sacrifice once onely offered would have sufficed, as is also touched upon.

Homer. Iliad. 1. & 2.

Brentius.

Levit. 6.25. ch.7. 1,2.

Iunius.

Ainsworth.

If his offering be a burnt sacrifice of the herd, let it be a male without blemish, &c. The word trantlated burnt sacrifice, in Hebr. is עולה, ascention, becausе in burning it the smoak ascended, but becausе it was wholly burnt by the Greeks, it is properly called an holocaust or whole burnt-offering, touching a male without blemish: see the like before Exod.12.5. At the doore of the tabernacle, the like to this see Exod. 29. 10, 11. onely touching this doore.

Vers. 3.

Heb.10. 1.

If it be further demanded what door it was, Lyranus answereth, the door of the outward Court, where the Priests viewed the beast brought, to see whether it were fit for sacrifice. But Ainsworth is rather to be preferred herein, affirming, that it was within the court about the place where the altar stood, see for this, chap. 17. 1,2. and compare them with vers.6. For in this court the people might come, and here they ate of other offerings also, which they brought, and here the offerer must lay his hands upon his beast; see Exod.29. 10. with the exposition. His bringing it to this door shewed, that we must come by Christ the door unto God, that we may be accepted by him, and so finally have entrance into his tabernacle in heaven. And not much unlike to this is that of the ordinary glosse, saying, that the tabernacle setting forth heaven, their coming to the door thereof shewed, that they must be of an heavenly conversation: the interlin. gloss, that we must follow the Apostles doctrine set forth hereby; or the bringing of it to the door, figured out Christs passion without the gate of the Question. Lyranus. Ainsworth.

Iohn 10.7. Heb.10.19. Glos. ordin.

Glos. interlin. Origen. Hom. 1. in Levit.

that theſe lawes were given in a very divers manner from the morall. 1. In reſpect of the place out of the tabernacle or tent, becauſe the ſervice herein preſcribed was to be done therein, and to vaniſh with that tent again. 2. In reſpect of the perſons, God ſpake here to Moſes, to ſhew that theſe lawes were made onely for the people of Iſrael. 3. In regard of the manner, theſe being given were onely written in a book, and not graven in ſtone. 4. In regard of the time, theſe were not given altogether upon one day, but in divers dayes. But the morall law was given upon mount Sinai, in the hearing of all the people, and to all in one day, and was written in tables of ſtone to ſhew the perpetuitie of it, and that all are bound to obſerve and keep it.

Heſychius in Levit. 1.

Heſychius by the tabernacle will have the Scripture of the new Teſtament ſignified, becauſe all things figured out by thoſe things that were ſpoken out of the tabernacle, are here ſhewed to have been fulfilled; and ſo God ſpake out of the tabernacle is myſtically, God ſpake in the holy Scriptures of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles: For the things here appointed to be brought for ſacrifice, they are of the herd or flock, bullocks, ſheep or goats, and if fowls be brought, they muſt be turtles or yong pigeons, v. 14. of the reaſon of chooſing which five and their ſignification, ſee before, Gen. 15. 9. Some heretikes, not conſidering what was myſtically ſet forth by theſe ſacrifices, have condemned the old Teſtament, as not being of God, who delighteth not in killing and offering beaſts, as the Cerdonians, and ſome as being of the evil god, as the Marcionites, and Lucianus derideth ſacrifices, as little pleaſing to the gods. And to thoſe that look no further, but to the outward act done, they cannot indeed but ſeem childiſh and ridiculous. But the very Jews held the ſacrifices to be of myſtical ſignification, although they ſay, that they knew not what were the myſteries hereof, till the ſpirit from above be powred out upon them, but they ſuppoſed them to ſet forth the offerings which Michael offereth of the ſouls of the juſt.

Sacrificing of beaſts, why.

Cerdoniani.

Marcionitæ Lucian. περὶ θυσιῶν.

Rab. Menahem in Levit. 1.

Queſt.

If it be demanded, forſomuch as amongſt fiſhes ſome were clean, why none of them were appointed to be offered in ſacrifice?

Lyranus.

Lyranus anſwereth, becauſe fiſhes cannot alwayes be had, ſeeing they are hidden in the waters, and becauſe they die of themſelves when they are kept out of the water; And laſtly, becauſe ſo heathens offered fiſh. And this laſt he ſaith was a reaſon why thoſe beaſts were ſingularly choſen to be offered and not any other, becauſe the heathen offered Lions, Camels, Horſes, Aſſes, Wolves, Swine, Dogs, Aſſes to Priapus, Dogs entrails to Hecate, and a Gooſ to Diana, &c. whereas Homer in deſcribing the ſacrifices of the Greeks, ſpeaketh onely of Oxen and Sheep and Goats, they payed gifts, an hecatombe to Phœbus; and again, inquiring the reaſon why Apollo ſent the plague amongſt them, he ſaith, Is it becauſe we have not paid our vowes, but delayed to offer ſacrifice, which that God requireth, viz, a tender lamb, or a kid? It is to be underſtood that the heathen learned to make theſe oblations afterwards of the Iſraelites; and therefore Homer alſo ſpeaketh of corn and flowre, and wine and ſalt offered in their ſacrifices, as amongſt the Hebrewes in their ſacrifices. For that the heathen were not addicted to theſe kind of ſacrifices of themſelves, appeareth, becauſe amongſt the Egyptians oxen and ſheep might not be killed, and in ſome other Common-wealths a great penalty was inflicted upon him, that ſhould kill an oxe. To revoke the Hebrewes therefore from ſuperſtition to the creature, (ſeeing in Egypt they worſhipped an oxe, and to falſ Gods, the true God appointed this worſhip appointed to be done to him. And that by bringing their beaſts to God, they might acknowledge all to come from him with David, 1 Chron. 29. 14. and when they offered not wild beaſts or fowles that coſt nothing, but oxen, &c. they might ſerve God with their coſt, as he alſo did. 2 Sam. 24. 29. For the kinds of ſacrifices, Brentius diſtinguiſheth stinguisheth them into sancta sanctorum, so called by the Hebrewes, קדש-קדשים, because they were killed onely on the north side of the altar and were all burnt in sacrifice, as most holy, or the parts remaining eaten onely by the Priests: and sancta vulgaria, קדש-סקלים, so called, because killed in any part of the Court, and eaten of by the priests and their families, and other Israelites, so that they were clean. And of the first sort were, 1. The Holocaust or whole burnt sacrifice. 2. The burnt-offering for sinne, of both which chap. 4,5. 3. The sacrifice of consecration called מלואים from filling, because the Priests hands were filled herewith, chap.8. and of this sort was the sacrifice of a bullock and goat on the day of consecration, chap. 16. and of the red cow, Numb. 19. 4. The oblation called a meat-offering, Hebr. מנחה consisting of flower, oyle, wine, and salt, that was in all sacrifices, chap.2. Of the second sort were, 1. The peace-offering, chap. 3. 2. The Paschal Lamb. 3. The first fruits and the tithes. All oblations were called by one common name, קורבן. Corbanus in this place. And hitherto of the Hebrews generall distinction. And they may also be distinguished according to their occasions. For some were offered out of mere devotion, as the holocaust in this chapter, some to obtain a benefit, as the meat-offering, chap. 2. some for thanksgiving, as the peace-offering, chap. 3. and some for sinne, as the burnt-offering for sin, or sacrifice of propitiation, chap. 4 5. And these four figured out not divers Christs, but one, and the divers benefits redounding to us by him, as 1. Reconciliation with God. 2. All graces needfull for us. 3. Pardon of all our sins. 4. The acceptance of our thanksgivings. And hereby were set forth four sacrifices spirituall, still to be offered by every one of the faithfull. 1. Our whole burnt offering of our selves, of which Rom.12. 1. 2. Our meat-offering of almes, of which Heb. 13. 16. for this shall be recompenced with all blessings, Psalm 41. 1. 3. Our peace-offering of praise and thanks, Heb.13.15. 4. Our sin-offering of contrition of heart, Psalm. 51.17. so Junius. Ainsworth distinguishing the fourth into a sin-offering, chap. 4. and a trespasse-offering, chap. 5. 15. maketh five sorts of sacrifices: And Brentius saith, that by this variety of sacrifices shas shewed the insufficiency of those sacrifices to expiate sin, because then one sacrifice once onely offered would have sufficed, as is also touched upon.

Homer. Iliad. 1. & 2.

Brentius.

Levit. 6.25. ch.7. 1,2.

Iunius.

Ainsworth.

If his offering be a burnt sacrifice of the herd, let it be a male without blemish, &c. The word tranlated burnt sacrifice, in Hebr. is עולה, ascention, because in burning it the smoak ascended, but because it was wholly burnt by the Greeks, it is properly called an holocaust or whole burnt-offering, touching a male without blemish: see the like before Exod.12.5. At the doore of the tabernacle, the like to this see Exod. 29. 10, 11. onely touching this doore.

Vers. 3.

Heb. 10. 1.

If it be further demanded what door it was, Lyranus answereth, the door of the outward Court, where the Priests viewed the beast brought, to see whether it were fit for sacrifice. But Ainsworth is rather to be preferred herein, affirming, that it was within the court about the place where the altar stood, see for this, chap. 17. 1,2. and compare them with vers.6. For in this court the people might come, and here they ate of other offerings also, which they brought, and here the offerer must lay his hands upon his beast; see Exod.29. 10. with the exposition. His bringing it to this door shewed, that we must come by Christ the door unto God, that we may be accepted by him, and so finally have entrance into his tabernacle in heaven. And not much unlike to this is that of the ordinary glosse, saying, that the tabernacle setting forth heaven, their coming to the door thereof shewed, that they must be of an heavenly conversation: the interlin. gloss, that we must follow the Apostles doctrine set forth hereby; or the bringing of it to the door, figured out Christs passion without the gate of the city.

Question. Lyranus. Ainsworth.

Iohn 10.7. Heb.10.19. Glos. ordin.

Glos. interlin. Origen. Hom. 1. in Levit.

city. He ſhall offer it of his own voluntary will. The Greek, Cald. and vulgar latine tranſlations have it, for his acceptation, or favourable aceeptation, and the ſame words are thus rendred, chap. 23. 11. being לרצנו, At the doore of the tabernacle he ſhall offer it before the Lord, for his favourable acceptation; that is, that he may favourably accept thereof, being well pleaſed with the offerer in Chriſt, he coming in true faith and repentance whereby Abel is ſaid to offer a more pleaſing ſacrifice then Cain, Heb. 11. 4. and without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Heb. 11. 6.

Ierem. 6. 20. To this it is alluded, Rom. 12. 1. and when ſacrifices brought by the wicked are ſpoken of, they are ſaid not to be to favourable acceptation. And being expounded by acceptation the next verſ. anſwereth fitly to this, it ſhall be accepted to make attonement for him.

Verſ. 4. And he ſhall put his hand upon the head, &c. How this was done, and what words were uſed, ſee Exod. 29. 10. It ſhall be accepted to make attonement for him: for particular ſins there were other particular ſacrifices, chapter 4. but becauſe we have many other ſins, which we cannot particularly number, and which we know not, there is need in all offerings to ſeek to have an attonement made for all our ſins in generall, in which regard theſe words are here uſed. Before I paſſe from hence, I will adde ſomething more about the laying on of hands upon the head of the beaſts, according to divers writers. 1. Hereby the offerer put his ſins upon the beaſt to be born, that is, upon Chriſt, that he might be exonerated of them. 2. He gave over his right in the beaſt, which he ſhewed hereby that he offered willingly unto God. 3. He ſhewed his thankfulneſſe to God, as from whom he acknowledged, that he received all that he had. 4. Myſtically, the hand of diſcipline, and the bridle of continency laid by the offerer upon himſelf in ſubduing his carnall affections was ſet forth by this Act.

Gloſ. ordin. Oſiander. Lyran. Vatablus. Origen. Hom. 1. in Levit.

Verſ. 5. And he ſhall kill the bullock before the Lord, &c.] Maimony ſaith, that the killing of holy things might be done by ſtrangers: that is, ſuch as are not of Aarons ſeed, even of the moſt holy things, whether they be of a particular perſon, or of the whole congregation. Yet by ſtranger no private perſon is to be underſtood, but ſome Levite given to help the ſons of Aaron in their miniſtery, Numb. 8. 19. For when the killing of ſacrifices is afterwards ſpoken of, ſometime the Prieſts are ſaid to have done it, and ſometime the Levites, and the Prieſts to have received the bloud at their hands, but never any other perſon killed it, ſo that theſe words, He ſhall kill the bullock, are thus to be expounded; he, that is, ſome Levite or Prieſt, the Septuagint render it, they ſhall kill; And the Prieſts Aarons ſons ſhall ſprinkle the bloud round about the Altar, of the like ceremony in conſecrating the Prieſts and the ſignification thereof, ſee before Exod. 29. 16. the Hebrew word ſignifieth, powre on with ſprinkling, wherefore the Septuagint render it powre on; For the Prieſt, ſaith the Hebrew canon, muſt endeavour to receive all the bloud, and when he had received it in the bowle, he muſt ſprinkle it with two ſprinklings overthwhartly on the Northeaſt horn and on the Southweſt, that the bloud may be found on the four ſides of the Altar, and if leſſe bloud were received, then would ſuffice for this, the bloud was not ſanctified. Maimony.

Maimony treat. of ſacrifices offering, ch. 4.

2 Chron. 29. 24. 2 Chron. 35. 10, 11. 2 Chron. 30. 17.

Verſ. 6. And he ſhal ſlay the burnt-offering, and cut it into his pieces. For ſlay, we muſt reade flay, or take off the ſkin, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth, for the killing of it was ſpoken of before, verſ. 5. and this was to be done, and the cutting of it into parts by the Levites or Prieſts, 1 Chron. 23. 31. 2 Chron. 29. 34. and this was not done, till the bloud was ſprinkled. Maimony. By this flaying, Origen ſaith, was figured out the vail of the letter ſhould be taken off in expounding the holy Scriptures; But forſomuch as Chriſt was figured out by the ſacrifice, that of Oſiander is better, hereby was ſignified that Chriſt ſhould hang naked upon the croſſe, ſtripped of all humane help, and that of Ainſworth, the myſtery of theſe ſacrifices ſhould be made Maimonie of ſacrif. ch. 5.

Origen.

Oſiander.

Ainſworth.

made bare and laid open under the Goſpel. And if we ſhall ſay, that Chriſt ſtripped off his coat, and garments, when he was crucified, was hereby figured out alſo, the ſenſe will be more full. Some think, that the afflictions of Chriſt and his Church were thus figured out, and by cutting it into parts as they are compared, Micha 3.3. and the piercing of his hands and feet are ſpoken of, Pſal.22. Brentius. For our ſelves, who are Gods ſpiritual ſacrifices, the putting off of the old man by us was figured out hereby; Pellican.

Pellican. Epheſ.14.22.

For the cutting of it into his pieces, this was meant of the parts thereof, the ſhoulders, breaſts, feet, and legs, and head, &c. as Maimony noteth, and not of cutting it into ſmaller pieces, becauſe it is not ſaid, cut it into pieces, but, into his pieces; the Cald. he ſhall divide it by the members thereof. The diviſion, ſaith Maimony, was thus, firſt, the head was cut off; ſecondly, the forefeet; thirdly, the hinderfeet; fourthly, the breaſts; fifthly, the channel bone of the ſhoulder, and the neck; ſixthly, the chine; ſeventhly, the rump. The liver was left hanging to the right ſide, the milt to the left, the heart and lungs on the chine, and the kidnies on the rump. This ſignified, according to ſome, that we muſt examine all our parts, and inward thoughts; according to others, that ſome ſhould be admitted to anoint the head, ſome to lean upon the breaſt, ſome to waſh the feet, and ſome to touch but the hem of the garment of Chriſt, ſee before Exod.29. 16. and of the entrails waſhing, which here followeth, verſ.9. Some will have the dividing of the word of truth aright, 2 Tim.2.15. ſet forth hereby, and the effect of the word preached, viz. dividing aſunder the ſoul and the ſpirit, and the joynts and marrow, Heb.4.12.

Maimony of meat-offerings, ch. 6.

Gloſ. Interlin.

Origen.

Ainſworth.

And the ſons of Aaron ſhall put fire upon the altar and lay the wood in order.] Chap.6.12,13. It is appointed, that the fire ſhall burn continually upon the altar, wood being for this purpoſe laid in order morning and evening. When the firſt ſacrifices were offered, the Lord ſent fire to conſume them, Chap.9.24. and this fire, ſay the Hebrews, was kept alwaies burning, untill the like miracle wrought at the dedication of Solomons Temple, 2 Chron. 7.1. Cazkuni ſaith, the fire, which came out from the Lord in the dayes of Moſes, went not up from the brazen altar, untill he came into the eternal houſe, hereby meaning Solomons Temple, in which God promiſed, that his name ſhould be for ever, 2 Chron. 7.16. and that fire ſent into Solomons Temple went not up from the altar of burnt-offerings, till the time of Manaſſeh, when the temple was deſtroyed, and being built again after the captivity, the like fire was ſent no more, as is ſaid Talmud Babyl. But when God biddeth here, that they ſhould put fire upon the Altar, the Hebrews ſay, that common fire is meant, ſo Maimony and Baal-Hatturim. But this ſeemeth to be againſt that, Chap. 10.1. where for uſing ſtrange fire Nadab and Abihu were deſtroyed with fire; and therefore Lyranus and Junius are for the holy fire, which firſt came from God. For the wood putting in order, it was not any wood brought by any particular perſon, but found at the common charge, as alſo all ſalt uſed in ſacrifices, of the order taken about it, ſee Nehem. 10.34. & 13.31. The Hebrewes ſay, that in the moneth Ab, anſwering to our July, it was prepared and brought in, and it was only of the beſt, and none old or worm-eaten wood; Maimony.

Verſ. 7.

Cazkuni.

Maimony of the daily offer. ch. 2.

And the Prieſts, Aarons ſons ſhall lay the parts, the head and the fat in order upon the wood, &c.] Of this laying of the parts, Maimony ſaith thus, the ſacrifice being divided, all the parts were brought and laid upon the foot-ſtall of the Altar, and ſalted there, and then laid upon the altar, the ſinew, that ſhrank being taken away and caſt upon the aſhes in the midſt of the altar. Then ſtrowed they all the pieces, that they might ſprinkle the Altar with fleſh, as with the bloud, and gathering them up again, they laid them in order again upon the fire, grounding this ſtrowing of the parts, upon upon Deut. 12. 27. The Hebrew word here tranſlated fat, is פדר, ſo rendred alſo by the Caldee and Septuagint: but Brentius rendreth it, the trunk, or body, caput cum trunco, affirming, that although newer Writers render it fat, yet the moſt ancient Hebrews tranſlate it, trunk or body, and חלב, ſignifieth fat, and it is not probable, that the fat is meant hereby, becauſe that was burned in all ſacrifices, whereas this being an holocauſt was all to be burnt, except the skin, and therefore no reaſon to ſpeak particularly of the fat; thus he: and unto this ſhould I have ſubſcribed, but that Chap. 8. 20. this word פדר is uſed again, and the head and the parts are named alſo, ſo that the trunk cannot be there ſignified by it. And Ainſworth noteth, that this word is uſed only here, and verſ. 12. and Chap. 8. 20. being thought to ſignifie the fat caule between the entrailes and the midriffe. Junius and Vatablus render it the inwards, heart, liver, and lights, which go with the head. They ſhall lay the parts, the head and the fat, is to be underſtood, as if he had ſaid, the parts, and the head and the fat, or inwards.

Verſ. 8.

Maimony treatiſe of offer. ch. 6.

Brentius.

Ainſworth.

Verſ. 9. For the waſhing of the inwards, and for theſe words, an offering of a ſweet ſavour to the Lord, ſee Exod. 29. 17, 18.

Verſ. 10. And if his offering be of the flocks, &c.] All things about this other kind of whole burnt-offering, do ſo agree with the former, that the one being expounded, the other is withal made plain alſo. Onely it is here appointed expreſly to be killed on the north ſide of the altar, touching which in Talmud Babyl. it is ſaid, the morning ſacrifice was killed by the northweſt horn of the altar, and the evening ſacrifice by the northeaſt horn, and for the manner, the lamb or ſheep of the firſt year, (for when ſheep are ſpoken of, ſaith Maimony, alwaies ſheep of the firſt year are meant,) was taken and bound upon the ground, his head being placed to the ſouth, and his face to the weſt, and the ſlayer ſtood on the eaſt ſide with his face to the weſt. And in the ſame place were all the ſin-offerings killed, Levit. 6. 25. and the treſpaſſe offerings, Levit. 7. 1, 2. and all moſt holy ſacrifices, but the light holy things were killed in any part of the Court, as was before noted upon verſ. 1, 2. ſo likewiſe Maimony.

Verſ. 11. Talmud Babyl.

Heſychius. For the figure, that was in this, Heſychius ſaith, that the bullock was to be offered directly before the Lord, but the ſheep on the ſide of the Altar, to ſignifie, that they, which perfectly keep the Commandements ſhall directly enter into the Lords preſence; but they that abſtain onely from evil, ſet forth by the ſheep, enter but by the ſide. But this cannot hold, ſeeing as hath been ſhewed, all the moſt holy ſacrifices were killed on the north ſide, and therefore the bullock was killed there alſo, although it be not here ſo expreſſed. That of Oſiander then is better, that hereby were figured out the people under the Old Teſtament from whom the light was further off, then from thoſe under the New, as the light of the Sun is further from the northern, then the ſouthern parts. Or rather that of the gloſſe, that the Gentiles fartheſt from the light were figured out, for whom Chriſt figured in theſe ſacrifices dyed. The Hebrews ſay, that hereby was ſhewed, that judgments ſhould come upon them out of the North, as Jer. 1. 14. wherefore againſt theſe the ſacrifice was killed on the north ſide; Rab. Menahem, and Baal hatturim. Brentius will have this to be done, to teach them to be far from the idolatries of the Gentiles who worſhipped toward the eaſt the Sun riſing in the morning, towards the ſouth at noon, and towards the weſt at night, therefore the Jews muſt kill their ſacrifice in the north. Other figures, to which this is drawn by ſome, I wittingly omit, as over-ſtrained. And hitherto of the place where it was killed, now it is added verſ. 13. the Prieſt ſhall bring and burn it all, whereupon Maimony ſaith, that the wool on the ſheeps head, and the beard of the goat and the hornes and hoofs and ſinewes were meant, with the members to which they cleaved, for they were all together burned.

Oſiander.

Gloſ. Ordin.

R. Menahem on Levit. 1.

Verſ. 13. Maimony of ſacrif. ch. 6.

And

And if his ſacrifice be of fowles, then he ſhall bring turtle doves, or young pigeons, &c. The Hebrews obſerve, that the turtles brought muſt be old, the feathers waxing golden coloured, and the pigeons young, otherwiſe they are unlawful, and although no ſex or blemiſh be ſpoken of touching fowles, yet they ſay, if they have any great blemiſh, that is, want an eye or a foot, they may not be brought; Maimony. For pigeons are, ſons of a dove, Hebr. but Luc. 2. 24. tranſlated young pigeons, and this was a ſacrifice for the poor, who were not able to bring a beaſt Chap. 5. 7. & 12. 8. wherefore the Congregation never offered fowl, ſaith Maimony. Among ſt the fowles theſe two ſorts only are choſen, becauſe they do moſt aptly figure out Chriſt, and his faithful people, upon him the Holy Ghoſt came down in the likeneſſe of a dove; and thine eyes are like turtles eyes, it is ſaid of him Cantic. 1. 14. ſo Iſidor. He was innocent, clean, chaſte, and mourned for the ſins and miſeries of men, according to the conditions of theſe fowles. And the faithful are often compared to them, Matth. 10. 16. Eſay 38. 14. Chap. 59. 11. & 60. 8. Ezech. 7. 16. Hoſ. 11. 11. Pſal. 74. 19. Fowles, ſaith Heſychius, ſet forth the heavenly minded; and the turtle and pigeon, ſpiritual wiſdom and ſimplicity, becauſe the turtle is ſaid to know her time, Jer. 8. Verſ. 14. Pſal. 68. 14. Matth. 3. Iſidor.

And the Prieſt ſhall bring it to the Altar and wring off his head, and burn it on the altar, &c.] The manner of it, ſay the Rabbines, was thus, the Prieſt going up by the footſtal of the altar, fetcht a compaſſe to the ſoutheaſt horn, and there wrung off the head, firſt wringing it about and cutting it with his nail, that it might bleed the better, to ſignifie which the word מרק, tranſlated by the Septuag. cut with the nail, is uſed, being not found in any other place beſide, but Chap. 5 8. having thus done, he took the head from the body there, for if it were not divided it was not lawful: then wrung he out the bloud of the head and of the body by the ſide of the altar, and ſo returning to the ſoutheaſt horn again, he rubbed the head with ſalt, and put it upon the fire, then the feathers being plucked off the body, and the crop and entrails taken out, he divided it but not quite aſunder, nor with a knife, for that was unlawful, but with his hand, and having rubbed it with ſalt, he put that upon the fire alſo. Thus for a burnt-offering, but for a ſin-offering, the head might not be divided from the body, Chap. 5. 8. the reaſon of which ſee there. This ſacrifice of fowles being of little price was ordained for the poor, as hath been partly touched already, and it is ſpoken of as the ſacrifice of a bullock or ſheep, a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to the Lord, for the comfort of the poor, that are not able to bring a greater. Here is no difference of ſex ſpoken of, becauſe in fowls that is hardly known. Verſ. 15. Maimony of acrif. offering, chap. 6. Verſ. 16. Verſ. 17.

For the wringing off the head, Brentius ſaith, that it was by ſtretching it backward, and then the Prieſt with his nail pierced the throat, that the bloud might all run out, and at that breach made the crop was plucked out, and the entrails, the head being not plucked from the body at all, to ſhew, that although Chriſt our head had his bloud ſhed and dyed, yet he was not hereby ſeparated from his body the Church, but reviving again he alwaies continueth inſeparable from his Church, in his wonderful great love and care over her. This, howſoever it be excellent, and may have place afterwards, Levit. 5. 8. yet here it cannot, forſomuch as the head was here divided, as hath been ſhewed, although Pellican and others concur in the contrary opinion with Brentius. Here the head divided and offered firſt then ſhewed the ſuffering of Chriſt our head, who ſhould dye firſt for the Goſpel which he preached, and ſo be offered up, and then the body laid upon the fire, ſhewed the offering up by death for the ſame cauſe, of his body the Church, for all that will live godly muſt ſuffer perſecution. For the feathers plucking off and the crop and entrails plucking out, and caſting eaſtward to the place of the aſhes, this was done becauſe the feathers were The Myſtery.

were not fit to burn, and the inwards were full of filth, whereas our sacrifice Christ set forth hereby was pure and free from all corruption. The mystery herein was to shew, that a sacrifice of rapine cannot please God, in that the feathers were cast away, wherewith they flew to get their food from others, so Lyranus; and by casting the garbage into a place eastward towards the going out of the sanctuary, was shewed, that they should not worship that way to the Sun rising, as the heathen. For the holy of holies was for this cause also placed westward, but the upper end of our Churches is now again placed eastward, to shew, that the Ordinances by Moses are abrogated, so Brentius. But Hesychius by the feathers and garbage understandeth pride lifting up to things over high, and the puffing up by knowledge, both which must be cast away in him, that will be a clean sacrifice to God. For the cleaving of it with the wings, but not dividing it, that it might be most spreading, this shewed, how Christ defendeth his Church under the wings of his protection, and that not a bone of him should be broken, &c. according to the conjectures of divers. The Ordinary glosse will have the casting of the feathers and garbage eastward to be done, to put them in mind of Adams fall, when he was placed eastward.

Lyranus.

Brentius.

Ainsworth.

Glosse Ordin.

CHAP. II.

Vers. 1. AND when any will offer a meat-offering to the Lord, his offering shall be of fine flowr, and he shall pour oyl upon it, &c.] Because when any burnt-offering of beasts was brought, a meat-offering must be brought also, Num. 15. before he cometh to speak of other sacrifices, the Lord here sheweth, what meat-offerings he would have brought. In Hebrew it is called mincah, signifying a gift, coming either of bincah, to bring, or to offer, or of hiniah, to recreate or to pacifie, so Brentius. By this word any gift or present brought to God or man is set forth; as Gen. 4. 3, 4. 1 Sam. 10. 27. but more especially a sacrifice of things without life, as of the fruits of the earth, the chief whereof was Wheat, but we render it by a general name, a meat-offering, because most of it was eaten by the Priests, who had little benefit else of the whole burnt sacrifices.

Brentius.

The meat-offerings here described are of five sorts: 1. Of flowr, vers. 1. 2. Of cakes baked in the oven, vers. 4. 3. Of cakes baked in a pan, vers. 5. 4. Of that which is fryed in a pan, vers. 7. 5. Of whole green corn, vers. 14. Afterwards, Chap. 5. 11. another meat-offering for sinne made by a poor man is described, of fine flowr without oyl or frankincense. 7. The meat-offering of the high priest every day, being flowr baked in a pan with oyl, which was wholly burnt, Chap. 6. 20. 8. The meat-offering of consecration of the Priests, Exod. 29. 23. Levit 8. 26. 9. The meat-offering of jealousie being of barley meal, Numb. 5. 15. Besides these there were other meat-offerings of the congregation; as, 1. a sheaf of their first ripe fruits, Lev. 23. 10, 11, 12. 2. two loaves, vers. 17. 3. twelve cakes of shew-bread, Levit. 24 5. but none of these twelve cakes were burned, but were the Priests portion. 4. the meat-offering with the daily sacrifice of the lamb morning and evening, Exod. 29. 40. That which is rendred here, if any shall offer, in Hebr. is, if a soul shall offer; it being ordinary by soul, to understand man. That of Hesychius, saying, that it is anima, because the Gentile, animalis homo, perceived not the things of God, is over-curious. Vatablus thinketh more particularly, that a private man is meant. Cajetan, a woman. Rickelius, that a man should offer from his heart and soul, &c. What quantity of flowr must be brought, is not expressed here, nor yet of oyl, or frankincense. But the least quantity was the tenth part of an Ephah, Chap. 5. 11. & 6. 20. that is, an Homer, Exod. 16. 36.

Hesychius.

16.36. the greateſt, as many tenth parts as the offerer pleaſed, that offered voluntarily, but in other meat-offerings the quantity is ſet down, one tenth part, neither more nor leſſe, ſaith Maimony, viz. if it were offered for ſin, in jealouſie, for conſecration, or if it were the ſheaf-offering, the high Prieſts continual offering, or the offering of conſecration of the prieſt, and the oyl, he ſaith, was a log or half pint to a tenth part of an ephah, Levit. 14.10. and the frankincenſe, and handful to the whole meat-offering, how great ſoever it was, if of 60 tenth parts, for this was the greateſt quantity brought at any time in one veſſel. For the manner, it was thus, firſt oyl was put in, then the flowr upon it, and oyl again upon that, which being all mingled together, it was put out into a miniſtring veſſel, and then the reſt of the oyl was powred on, and upon all this the frankincenſe. But Solomon Jarchi ſaith, that the frankincenſe was put onely upon one part of it on the one ſide. And as the flowr muſt be of the beſt, ſo muſt the oyl alſo, and not having any ill ſmell. Of all this one handful only is to be taken by the prieſt and offered upon the fire, the remainder going to the prieſts. This was done thus, the Prieſt carried it to the Altar, and brought it to the ſouthweſt horn, then putting the frankincenſe to one ſide, he took out an handful of the foreſaid mixture, and put it in another miniſtring veſſel, and gathering up all the frankincenſe, he put it upon that handful, and then put it out together upon the fire; Maimony.

Maimony treatiſe of ſacrif. ch. 12.

Sol. Jarchi.

Verſ. 2, 3.

Maimony of offer. ſacrif. c. 13.

and the Prieſt ſhall burn the memorial of it,] That is, the handful with the frankincenſe, that God may remember his covenant with his faithful people, and graciouſly accept of the offerer, in regard of which name, memorial, it is ſaid, Pſal. 20.4. He remember all thy meat-offerings, it is a thing moſt holy. Hebr. holineſſe of holineſſes; hereby the Rabbins diſtinguiſh this and ſuch like ſacrifices from others, which they call the light holy, as was before touched, Chap. 1. verſ. 1.

For the myſtery of this ſacrifice, it is not unaptly held to figure out Chriſt, the faithful, and their prayers and devotions. For Chriſt is ſpoken of, as offered inſtead of the mincah, or meat-offerings, Heb. 10.5,8,9. ſpoken of Pſal. 40. ſacrifices and oblations, Hebr. mincah, thou wouldeſt not, but a body haſt thou prepared me; and therefore, he being come, theſe offerings ceaſed, as was propheſied, Dan. 9.27. and he is ſaid to be an oblation of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour. And Chriſt, ſaith Oſiander, was well ſet forth by Wheat making bread, for he is the bread of life; and by oyl for the oyl of gladneſſe, that is, the Spirit, with which he was anointed above his fellowes; and by frankincenſe, for the ſweetneſſe of his prayers and mediation with God for us. Ainſworth ſaith, that the flowr of Wheat did ſet forth Chriſt pure and free from all bran of corruption. Touching the faithful, the Wheat flowr did well ſet forth them alſo, becauſe they ſubject themſelves to the Lord to be macerated and ground with afflictions, and the oyl becauſe of the Spirit, of which they partake, and the frankincenſe for their acceptance before God in Chriſt, as ſweet incenſe, ſo Junius; ſee for this laſt Cantic. 3. 6. Jer. 6.20. Epheſ. 5.2. Rom. 12.1. But Ainſworth will have the Wheat flowr to ſignifie the purity of the faithful in Chriſt. Iſidor by the Wheat flowr underſtandeth the Church gathered of many perſons, as that of many graines.

The Myſtery.

Epheſ. 5. 2.

Oſiander.

Pſal. 45.

Ainſworth.

Junii Analyſ.

Iſidor.

Laſtly, the graces and devotions of the faithful were figured out hereby, knowledge by flowr, ſaith Heſychius; almes deeds by oyl, and frankincenſe by prayers, becauſe as Wheat flowr is the firſt thing here named, with which the offerer muſt come, ſo the firſt, whereby a ſinner cometh to God, is knowledge; and for prayers and almes, it is ſaid to Cornelius of them, as of a ſacrifice, thy prayers and almes are come in remembrance before the Lord. And the virtues of frankincenſe, ſaith he, are ſuch, that they may moſt aptly ſet forth prayer, for the Phyſitians uſe it againſt the inward paſſions of the mind, and to cure the wounds of the eyes, and by the fume

Heſychius.

Act. 10.

thereof the tears of the eyes are reſtrained, ſo by prayer a man is freed from inward troubles, and ſinne the diſeaſe of the eye of the mind is cured.

Iames 5.16. For if any man be ſick, the prayer of the faithfull ſhall heal him, and if he hath committed ſin, it ſhall be forgiven him, thus he.

Ainſworth. But Ainſworth underſtandeth onely prayers and almes-deeds, which are likened unto the mincha, and the incenſe therein, Pſalm. 141. 3. Mal. 1. 10, 11, Heb. 13.16. Phil.4. 18. ſo that grenerally both theſe were figured out here, and particularly knowledge, almſdeeds and prayers; by the parts, fine flowre, oyle, and frankincenſe, whereas the poor mans meat-offering wanted oyle and frankincenſe, chap. 5. 11. is ſhewed, that the chief thing required in every one is inward illumination and faith, yea even in the pooreſt, that have not wherewithall to expreſſe it by good works, and in the dulleſt, that know not how to utter themſelves in prayer.

Heſychius. Whereas an handfull onely of the oyled flowre muſt be offered, but all the frankincenſe, this ſhewed, that the knowledge of God muſt be comprehended by faith, which is the meaſure, or elſe it is not acceptable, for

Heb. 11 6. without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him; and therefore all, which is more then this handfull, that is, in infidelity is unacceptable, and the like may be ſaid of almes, becauſe this handfull was of flowre mingled with

1 Cor. 13. oyl. And again, knowledge is here but in part, and therefore an handfull onely is taken, hereafter there ſhall be a greater meaſure, for we ſhall know as we are known, and that the knowledge of God under the Goſpel is meant by this ſacrifice appeareth, becauſe it is called a ſweet ſmelling ſa-

1 Theſſ 5 17. vour unto God, 2 Cor. 2.14. as this offering here is. All the frankincenſe is offered, to ſhew that we muſt alwayes be praying and giving of thanks,

Gloſ. ordin. ſo Heſychius. According to this laſt the ordinary gloſſe agreeth with Heſychius, ſaying, it was hereby ſignified, that our knowledge and love are here but in part, but pray we muſt alwayes. Brentius by the handfull onely offered underſtandeth Chriſt and his faithfull members remaining ſtill, although they ſuffer: for there is but a little conſumed of theſe ſacrifices, the reſt remaining ſtill to the Prieſts. And this was the myſticall rea-

Heſychius. ſon, but becauſe the Prieſts were to be maintained by the altar, there was for the preſent a reſpect had unto them in reſerving the reſidue, whereas it is ſaid, He ſhall take an handfull, this is by Heſychius referred to the offerer, which is not improbable, becauſe the Prieſt is next ſpoken of, as offering Joſephus. it upon the altar, the offerer then took it out, and the Prieſt receiving from him offered it. Joſephus ſaith, that one dramme was ſufficient to be offered for an handfull. And as this was a memoriall, ſo is Chriſt ſitting at the right hand of God and making interceſſion for us, a memoriall unto the father, that he may be mindfull of us and bleſſe us. Touching the remainder, it muſt be Aarons and his ſonnes, that is, the Prieſts in generall to be eaten by them, their ſons and their daughters, chap. 10. 14. and by their bought ſervants alſo, Levit. 22. 11. Yea although any of their ſonnes had a blemiſh, ſo as that he might not offer ſacrifice, yet he might eat of it, chapter 21. 21. But if any were unclean, he might not eat it, chap. 22. 5, 6. nor any lay perſon or ſtranger, chap. 22 12, 13. But of ſome ſacrifices the males onely might eat, chap. 6. 18. and not all the Prieſts children indifferently.

Heſychius. By this remainder going to Aaron and his ſonnes, as being moſt holy, Heſychius underſtandeth all the treaſures of knowledge hid in Chriſt in heaven, who was figured out by Aaron, which are now hidden from us, but ſhall afterwards be revealed.

Verſ. 4. And if thou bring an oblation of a meat-offering baked in the oven, it ſhall be an unleavened cake, or &c.] There were 3 waies of preparing the meat-offering, when the flowre by the offerer was willed to be made into ſome maſſe for that purpoſe. 1. By baking in the oven. 2. By baking in a pan, Verſ. 5. Hebr. מחבת, which is a pan to fry in, not hollow but plain, being like a pair of tongs broad at the end, wherewith wafers are made. 3. By baking in in a pan, Hebr. מרחשת, that is, a pan hollow, so Brentius, calling the first sartago, and the second craticula or cacabus. But Maimony saith, that the difference between these two was, that the first was flat and smooth, whereupon things stiff and hard were baked, but the second had a lip about it, so that soft things being put in could not run out. And both these were in the court, and the oven to bake in was of mettal, whereby we may gather that the one was a flat plate and the other a fryingpan, as in our translation. Brentius. Maimonie of sacrifice ch. 13.

The manner of making all these sorts of caks, wafers or fried things was thus for cakes, the flowr being the tenth part of an Ephah was mingled with oyl, and tempered with warm water put to, and then being made into ten cakes they were baked, and so broken into pieces and offered: for w fers, they were made of flowre and warm water onely, and after the baking, annointed with oyl again and again, till the oyl being a log or half a pint to the tenth part of an Ephah was all spent. And for this the corn was ground and the flowre sifted out, before it was brought to the sanctuary, but cutting one into two, and then cutting them again into foure, &c.

For the mystery, some referring all to Christ will have his birth figured out by the bakt in the oven, his crosse and passions by the bakt in a fryingpan, and his death and buriall by that fried upon a gridiron, for thus Hesychius distinguishes these. Some referring them to the faithfull expound them of the divers wayes of afflicting themselves by repentance, as Origen, or of the divers wayes of suffering death in the time of persecution, as Pellican. Others refer them to divers sorts of the faithfull, the bakt in the oven to Doctours in the Schools, the bakt on the pan to Preachers in the pulpit, and the bakt in the frying pan to Confessours of the faith. Gloss. Ordin. and some hold onely, that these divers wayes are mentioned, because they were in use, that every man might offer of the one sort or the other, which liked him best. so Junius. I prefer that of Pellican, holding that the divers sorts of sufferings both in Christ and his members were set forth hereby, being cruelly used by persecutors, but made the more gratefull unto God hereby. For the quantity offered of any of these, it was the same that was before said, viz. an handfull of the pieces, and the manner was the same that was in offering the oyled flowre, and the priests had the remainder. The mystery. Hesychius. Origen. Pellican. Glos. ordin. Iunius. Vers. 9. 10.

Here next follow generall rules. 1. Against leaven, no meat-offering shall be made with leaven. Why leaven must not be in the sacrifices was shewed before, Exod. 29. 2. and chap. 12. 8. viz. to figure out Christ free from all corruption, and that we should not have in us the leaven of maliciousnes, and as Calvin hath it, that in teaching the will of God, nothing strange or devised by man should be mingled with it, but the pure word of God, that corrupt doctrine is meant by leaven appeareth, because it is said, take heed of the leaven of the Pharisees. Lastly, all unleavened things put them in mind of their comming out of Egypt, yet this rule is not so generall, but in some sacrifices leaven was used, as in peace-offerings, chapter 7. 13. and in the first fruits offering, chap. 23. 17. and if it be demanded what was the reason hereof? Some answer, that it is not meant that it should he burned contrary to this rule, but to be eaten by the Priests with the flesh: so Origen, Lyranus, Pellican, &c. But the words seem plainly to imply, that part of it was to be burnt, as well as of the unleavened, see chap. 23. 17, 18. And the Hebrew doctours say that it was burned, for the offerer brought 20 tenths of an Ephah, saith Maimony, and of these tenne were made into 10 caks leavened, and 10 into 30 caks unleavened; 10 bakt in the oven, 10 in a pan, 10 in a fryingpan, and then the Priest took four of them, of each for one, &c. Vers. 11. 1 Cor. 5. 8. Calvin. Maimonie of sacrif. ch. 9. Sect. 17.

Quest. But why doth the Lord thus prescribe contrary things in his worship?

Answ. As leaven doth sometime signifie evill, so it doth also good, as Matthew, 13. 33. and therefore to set this forth it is prescribed in some sacrifices, there being still with leavened bread, unleavened offered also, that we might remember, as to avoid and be free from evil, so to be qualified with good, when we come to worship God. The leaven then in a good sense setteth forth the spirit working secretly in the heart in the preaching of the word, and seasoning the whole man, so Borrheus. It may also be taken for an intimation, that we should prepare our selves to Gods worship; so Junius and Ainsworth, or that God accepteth of us in Christ in the service, which we do from our hearts unto him, although mixed with the leaven of infirmities in us, as Ainsworth.

Leavened bread offered sometime. Why.

Borrheus.

Iunius.

Ainsworth.

Origen. Origen will have it meant of humane learning, which should not commonly be mixed with our preaching, but yet of some parts of humane learning, as of grammar, Rhetorick, &c. he saith there is use to be made; but this is strained.

Honey not to be offered.

Calvin. Iunius. The second generall rule is, that no honey should be burnt in sacrifice, that is, because, as Calvin saith, honey boiled is for bread like unto leaven leavening it, so also Junius. Honey is sweet indeed in the taste, but much of it being eaten, it turneth into bitternesse and choller, wherefore as unapt to figure out Christ it must not be offered, for he the more he is fed upon by faith, is the more sweet to the soul, so Osiander. Honey also may set forth carnall concupiscence which is sweet, so Baal-Hatturim: and being thus applied to Christ, the not offering it shewed that there was no evill lust in him. And it is to be noted, that the heathen offered leaven and hony in their sacrifices, Euripides. Rab. Elias will have pride signified hereby, because being boiled it riseth up into froth R. Sol. Jarchi saith, that by honey all sweet fruit is signified, none of which must be offered. Pellican and the ordinary glosse will have pleasure set forth hereby, with which God is not pleased. And it may be noted that honey is contrary to leaven, this being sweet, that sowre, to shew then that no extremity either of grief which is as leaven, nor of delight in worldly things must be in the faithfull, but a moderation in all, both these are forbidden.

Osiander. Baal-Hatturim. Euripid. in Iphigen. R. Elias. R. Sol. Iarch. Pellican. Ainsworth.

Vers. 12. Before the next generall rule, which is that salt shall be in all offerings, v. 13. It is inserted as an exception to the rules before going. For the oblation of the first fruits, ye shall offer them to the Lord, but they shall be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour. Or more agreeably to the Hebrew, ye shall offer them an offering of first fruits to the Lord. it being meant that honey and leaven might be offered amongst the first fruits, notwithstanding the foregoing prohibition: thus it is commonly understood, and Sol. Jarchi touching honey, saith hereupon, the first fruits of honey, as of figs and dates, which are all sweet. For leaven see chap. 23. 17. for honey, 1 Chron. 31. 5. whereas it is added, they shall not be burnt, &c. but chapter 23. 17. burning is spoken of, the Rabbins say, as a sweet savour to the Lord they may not be burnt but as wood; but this is frivolous, for so much as there it is said also for a sweet savour. It is better therefore to hold that they were not commonly as leaven to be burned, but rarely in some particular sacrifice, wherein they shall be appointed. The first fruits of these should be brought as well as of other things, but of none of them offerings upon the altar should be commonly made; onely they should be for the maintenance of the Priests.

Rab. Sol. Iarchi.

Maimony in Issurei Misbeach.

Vers. 13. Now followeth the third rule, every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt, neither shalt thou let the salt of the covenant of thy God be lacking, &c. Here salt is appointed to be in all sacrifices, and it is called salt of the covenant, because the covenant betwixt God and his people is everlasting, for in this sense a covenant of salt is spoken of, Numbers, 18. 19.

2 Chron.

2 Chronicles 13. 5. Salt ſerveth to keepe things from corrupting, and maketh meate ſavoury, and therefore was neceſſary for ſacrifices, that muſt be moſt uncorrupt, and to ſet forth the uncorruptible ſtability of Gods covenant with his people. The Hebrewes ſay that, becauſe ſalt is ſpoken of here three times, they uſed to ſalt their ſacrifices thrice. 1. In the ſalt-chamber the skins. 2. Upon the footſtall of the altar, the pieces. 3. On the toppe of the Altar, the handfull of the meat-offering, and the frankincenſe, and the burnt-offerings of fowles. And becauſe of this charge, they were carefull to ſalt all things well, except the bloud, the wine and the wood. Salt and wood were provided at the common charge. Maimony. Maimony in Iſſurei Misbeach chap. 5.

Of this ordinance of ſalting ſacrifices the Lord ſaith, have ſalt in your ſelves, and peace one with another, and every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, whereby is intimated, that by ſalt grace is to be underſtood, which ſuffereth us not to corrupt by ſinne. And becauſe Matthew 5. 13. it is ſaid, ye are the ſalt of the earth; ſalt alſo ſetteth forth the preacher of the truth. If we will be acceptable ſacrifices to God, as Romans 12. 1. we muſt alwayes have grace in us, and the true doctrine of Gods holy Word, for hereby we are purged and ſeaſoned for him, as meat for us by ſalt; and all ſervice, and worſhip done to God muſt be according to his Word, which is as ſalt ſeaſoning it: ſo Calvin. To ſhew how diſtaſtefull the ſtate of a man is before God, till he is by grace regenerated, the unregenerated are likened to a childe new born and not ſalted, Ezechiel 16. 4. Oſiander will have Chriſt figured out hereby, who ſeaſoneth us all. Lorinus will have our fellowſhip with God ſet forth, and the ſalt of Baptiſme, and the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary. But theſe are phantaſies; that of Brentius may be taken in here, ſalt ſetteth forth faith, by which all our ſervice done to God is made acceptable; and becauſe dead bodies are preſerved hereby from corrupting our incorruptible eſtate to come, and reſurrection was figured out hereby. Marc. 9. 50. Junius. Gloſſe interlin. Pellican. Oſiander. Lorinus.

Verſ. 14.

The laſt ſort of meat-offerings here ſpoken of is of corn beaten out of the full ears of the firſt fruits, the words are greene eares of corne dried by the fire, even corne beaten out of full eares; Calvin and Ainſworth render it ground corne of the full eare. The Hebrew word גרש ſaith Solom. Jarchi ſignifieth breaking or grinding with a mill. And therefore the Cald. rendereth it broken grains: ſo likewiſe Tremelius. But Brentius according to tranſlation hath gratia excuſſa, holding that the grains of corne were offered whole. R. Sol. Iarchi Caldæus. Tremel.

And the Hebrew doctours upon the Law of the meat-offering of firſt fruits, chapter 23. 10. write thus. At the time of the Paſſeover, when barley in that Countrey beganne to be ripe, (for their barley was ripe before their wheat; ſo the Cald. upon Ruth, 1. 22. Ruth came to Bethlehem in the beginning of barley harveſt,) ſaith in the beginning of the Paſſeover, and upon that day the ſonnes of Iſrael began to reape the ſheafe of the wave-offering, which was of barley. And Ruth 2. 22. the barley harveſt is ſet before the wheat harveſt, as in Egypt the barley was eared before the wheat or rie, Exodus 9. 11. the wheat harveſt was long after, at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Exodus 34. 22. At the time of the Paſſeover therefore, when barley waxed ript, the 16. day of the moneth, Niſan or Abib, (for they were both one, the one name being Caldee, and the other Hebrew, as I have ſhewed upon Exodus 12. 2.) Although it were a Sabbath, in the evening the meſſengers of the Synedrion went out, and all the Cities about Jeruſalem came together for the greater ſolemnity: the three men reaped three Seahs, that is, an Ephah, or buſhell of barley, when it was darke, and brought it into the Court yard of the Sanctuary, there threſhing it, and fanning it.

Then

Then they tooke a tenth part, and put it in the fire, as it is written, Leviticus, 2. 14. Greene eares of corne parched by the fire, corne beaten out of the full eare, this is ſpoken of the meat-offering of the ſheaf onely. And after they have parched it, they ſpread it in the Court yard, that the winde might blow upon it, then they ground the three ſeahs, and tooke out of all a tenth part, and that is waved, and the reſidue is redeemed and may bee eaten by any man, and oyle and frankincenſe, as is here preſcribed, being put to, it is waved, and part with the frankincenſe after this burned, and the reſidue of this is eaten by the Prieſts, ſo Maimony, and Talumd Babyl.

Maimony in Tamedin. ch. 7. Talmud Babyl. in Menachoth chap. 10.

Thus the firſt fruits offering of the Congregation is deſcribed, of which Rab. Menahem. and R. Solom. Jarchi ſay, it is here ſpoken briefly, there more largely.

R. Menahem.

R. Sol. Iarchi.

But this is againſt our diſtinction of meat-offerings made before upon verſe 1. and againſt the words and ſcope of this place; for it is ſaid, If thou offer a meat-offering of thy firſt fruites, it being put to the will of the offerer, as all other meat-offerings before mentioned in this Chapter the firſt, whereas one meat-offering of all the Congregation, Chapter 23: 10. muſt neceſſarily be made. It is doubtleſſe then meant of a free will offering of a particular perſon, but by greene eares of corne happily was meant a ſheafe or ſheaves, as is ſaid of the offering of the Congregation as much at the leaſt as might make the tenth part of an Ephah or an whole Ephah, if the officer would, and therefore the word is rendred ſheafe or omer, chap. 23.

There bee three ſorts of firſt fruits, ſaith Lyranus. Firſt, of greene eares of corne, that is of Barley offered the ſecond day of the Paſſe-over. Secondly, of other corne, that is, wheat offered at the Pentecoſt. Thirdly, of all fruites, when all were gathered in at the Feaſt of tabernacles.

Lyranus.

Levit. 23.
Exod. 23. 16.

And Brentius addeth a fourth brought in a basket, Deuteronomy 26. 2. what was brought for firſt fruits in generall, ſee upon Exodus 22. 29. and what is ſignified here by

Brentius.

Brentius will have Chriſt ſignified by theſe firſt fruits intimated in this ſaying, unleſſe a graine of corne being caſt into the ground dieth, it remaineth alone, but if it dieth it bringeth much fruite, for he was the graine offered here, and bringing much fruit unto us all. And hee is ſaid by the Apoſtle to be the firſt fruites of them that ſleepe. Hee was parched, threſhed, and put in the fire, when he ſuffered for us, and the frankincenſe of his cries and prayers in his paſſions were a moſt ſweet ſmelling ſavour to the Father.

Iohn 12. 14.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

IF his oblation be a ſacrifice of peace-offering, if it be of the herd, it ſhall be without blemiſh. After the whole burnt-offerings, chap. 1. and their appurtenances, meat-offerings, chap. 2. here follow other ſacrifices of beaſts, whereof part was offered, and part went to the Prieſt, and part to the offerer, and they are called peace-offerings זבח-שלמים, becauſe they never offered in way of thankſgiving for peace and proſperity, and ſometimes upon vow, comfort and peace and good deſired being obtained of the Lord as may be gathered, chap. 7. 12, 16. or voluntarily. Becauſe the word שלמים here uſed ſignifieth not onely to pacifie, but alſo to render or reſtore to wiſh health, or to perfect and conſummate (becauſe he that rendreth what he oweth, or hath perfected a work undertaken, hath peace) a divers reaſon, ſaith Brentius, is rendred by divers of the name of this ſacrifice. The Greek calleth it the ſacrifice of ſalvation, others the ſacrifice of retribution or thankfulneſſe, and ſome a perfecting ſacrifice. Some of the Hebrews will have it called a peace-offering, becauſe either peace was hereby obtained to the world, or becauſe as in peace here was a quiet diviſion made to each one his part, to God, to the Prieſt and the Offerer, as chap. 7. The Caldee calleth it the ſacrifice of the ſanctified, becauſe although common perſons might eat of it, yet none but the clean might upon pain of death, chap. 7. 20. and this Brentius preferreth, calling it the ſacrifice of the ſaints.

Verſ. 1.

Brentius.

R. Sol. Iarch.

Lyranus.

But the firſt reaſon is without exception, they were gifts vowed or rendred in way of thankfulneſſe, which being done, a man had peace to God ward, ſo likewiſe Lyranus, Junius, Oſiand. Calvin rendreth it ſacrifice of proſperities, as brought in way of thankfulneſſe therefore, which differeth not much from this. And theſe ſacrifices were of theſe which as it hath bin ſhewed before, the Hebrewes called light holy ſacrifices, becauſe they might be eaten of by any clean perſon. As the burnt-offerings, chap. 1. ſet forth Chriſt reconciling us to God, ſaith Ainſworth, and the meat-offerings, chap. 2. Chriſt ſanctifying us, ſo the peace-offering did ſet forth both Chriſt bringing peace with God unto us, and our Praiſe offering unto God therefore.

Calvin.

Ainſworth.

Heſychius diſtinguiſhing the ſacrifices hitherto ſpoken of into two, the burnt-offering with the appurtenance, the mincah, and the peace-offering, becauſe in the firſt all was offered upon the Altar, but in this the fat onely, will have the perfect to be meant by that, who give themſelves wholly to the ſervice of God, but others by this, who with a good heart ſerve God alſo, but in a ſecular and married eſtate.

Heſychius.

But touching the divers things in Chriſt ſet forth by divers ſorts of ſacrifices, I reſt in that which hath bin already ſaid, chap. 1. v. 1. The peace-offerings here deſcribed agreed in many things with the burnt-offering before ſpoken of, and therefore touching that wherein they agree, I will adde nothing here but onely touching their differences. 1. There a male onely muſt be offered, here either male or female. Becauſe as Brentius hath it, Chriſt and his Church conſiſting both of men and women are ſet forth hereby. One kind of ſacrifice before deſcribed might have ſufficed to ſet forth Chriſt and his Church, but becauſe women hearing of the males onely there appointed, as worthy to be offered to God might be diſcouraged: Here another ſacrifice is inſtituted of males or females, Chriſt being moſt properly meant in the firſt, and Chriſt together with his Church in this, it being hereby intimated, that women who are faithful, are mẽbers of the true Church of God as well as men, and ſhall together with them be accepted of into his heavenly kingdome. And he further addeth, that the Egyptians as Herodotus ſaith, never ſacrificed a female bullock, and therefore a reſpect Differ. 1.

Brentius.

1 Pet. 3. 7.

ſpect might herein be had to the drawing of them from their idolatrous ſacrifices.

Ainſworth. Gal. 3.28. Ainſworth will have it hereby underſtood, that in Chriſt there is neither male, or female, but all are one in him, and that not onely Chriſts ſacrificing of himſelf is acceptable to the Father, but ours alſo through him, Heb.13.15. Lyranus ſaith, that becauſe this was not ſo perfect as the former kind of ſacrifice, but part onely of it was offered, it was indifferent, whether it were a male or female which is leſſe perfect. Heſychius ſaith, that hereby was ſignified, that although women attain not to ſuch perfection of wiſdome and underſtanding as men, ſet forth by the excluſion of the female out of the whole burnt-offering, yet they muſt as well as men ſerve God and fear him, if they will be accepted by him. For all theſe reaſons, and for this laſt ſpecially, as I take it, was it thus ordained.

Lyranus.

Heſychius.

Levit.22.23. Without blemiſh. Of this enough before, Exodus, 12. 5. but onely that it may here be further added a redundancy in a beaſt, or a defect, if it wanted tail, or ear or, any member, it was blemiſhed, but the want of ſuch a member did not blemiſh it for any ſacrifice but onely for this kind, wherein the tail of the ſheep muſt be offered, v. 9. And if the beaſt had touched any unclean thing, as Leviticus, 11. it was unclean and unlawfull for ſacrifice.

Differ. 2. Verſ. 3,4,5. Comeſt. Scholaſt. hiſtor. The ſecond difference is, that there all the parts, and all the fat muſt be offered, but here the fat onely of the inwards, the kidneys and the fat upon them, and the caule of the liver muſt be offered; and Comeſtor ſaith, according to ſome, the tongue peradventure, ſaith he, cleaving to ſome of the inwards, but here is no ſuch matter. Of the ſignification of theſe, ſee before, Exod. 29. 13. But hereafter the fat upon the kidneys ſpoken of, it is added, which is vpon the flanks. The Rabbins ſay, this was a diſtinct fat from the former growing upon the roots of the thighs on the fore part, and the Septuagint and Caldee render it upon the thighs; The ſonnes of Aaron ſhall burn it upon the Altar, upon the burnt ſacrifice; that is, as Sol. Jarchi noteth, after the daily burnt ſacrifice, for no offering was to be made before that. It being hereby intimated that in Chriſt figured out by the dayly ſacrifice all our praiſes and prayers are accepted, and not without him. The manner of this ſacrifice offering, ſaith Maimony, was thus; the Prieſt having killed the bullock and ſprinkled the bloud, flayed it, and cut it into his parts, and then taking out the right ſhoulder & the breaſt from the reſt, ch. 7. 30. he put the fat and both theſe into the offerers hands, laying on the kidneys and the caul of the liver laſt, then putting his hands under the hands of the offerer, he waved it on the Eaſt ſide together with one cake of ten that was brought for a meat-offering. Then he took the fat and kidneys, and caul, and ſalted and burned them, and the breaſt, ſhoulder and cake waved for himſelf, the reſt of the parts and cakes going to the offerer, to be eaten by him and his company. If two or more joyned together in offering, one onely waved for all, and if a woman brought a ſacrifice, ſhe waved not, but the Prieſt for her. Yet ſhe waved in the offering of jealouſie, and of a Nazarite. For the manner of waving with the offerers hands, ſee ſomewhat before, Exod.29.24. why all the fat within the beaſt muſt alwaies be offered upon the Altar, Exod. 29.13. and of the ſhoulder and breaſt, Exod. 29.27. But as the Prieſts had their part, ſaith Brentius, ſo the lay man offering had his part in this ſacrifice alſo, of which any man might eat that was clean, to ſhew that although the laity had no part in other ſacrifices, but the Prieſts onely, yet all the godly and faithfull amongſt them had part in God, and in the grace of Chriſt, as well as the Prieſts.

Maimony of forbidden meats, chap. 7. Sol. Iarchi.

Maimony of ſacrif. chap 9.

Levit.7. 15.

Numb. 5. Numb. 6.

Differ. 3. Verſ. 9. A third difference is betwixt the peace-offering of a bullock and of a lamb, beſides the fat and kidneys, the rump of the lamb muſt be burnt alſo: ſee the like, Exod.29.22.

A

A fourth difference is, here it is said, it is the food of the offering made by fire, but touching the other, it is an offering made by fire, verse, 5. But by this phrase is nothing else meant, but that God accounted this thus burnt upon the Altar, as his food or bread as the word signifieth, and so it is called, Numb. 28. 2. Ezech. 44. 7. Levit. 21. 6. 8. 17. Levit. 21. 22. because it was offered to God being set upon his altar as upon his table. The vulgar Latine rendreth it foode of the fire, Vatablus bibarium sacrificium. Differ. 4. Vers. 11.

A fifth difference is there were fowles offered, but here not, onely of the herd or of the flock must the offering be, the reason was, because the offering was to be divided, and birds were too small for this purpose, Genesis, 15. 10. Differ. 5. Lyranus.

Lastly, it is added, All the fat is the Lords, it is a perpetuall statute throughout your generations, ye shall eat neither fat nor bloud. Bloud was forbidden before, Gen 9 4. but here fat also, that is, such fat as groweth in the inward parts before spoken of, not that which is joyned to the flesh, neither was it meant of the fat of all the beasts without exception, but onely of these kinds of clean beasts, which were for sacrifice of other clean beasts they might eat the fat, as well as the flesh; so Maimony, adding further that the fat of the rump of the heart, and within the kidneys might be eaten, and touching bloud, it is the bloud of beasts and fowls onely, which is forbidden, Levit. 7. 26. not of fishes or locusts, but who maketh any use of such bloud, besides the Text proveth it not. This forbidding of bloud and fat to be eaten by man, viz. such as was offered in sacrifice and called the Lords bread or meat, did mystically figure out, that we have no communion with the Lord in the work of our redemption or sanctification, but that they are onely from him, as Eph. 1. 7. 1 Cor. 1. 30. Ephes. 5. 26. Heb. 10 10. so Ainsworth, because eating and drinking signifieth communion, 1 Cor. 10. 16, 17. 1 Cor. 11. 24. They were also forbidden these, saith Lyranus, because the heathen did drink the bloud and eat the fat of their sacrifices, as is partly touched, Deut. 32. 38. by their bloud drinking professing that they had their life and the fat eating, their sustentation from God. Vers. 16. 17. Maimonie of forbidden meats, ch. 7. Ainsworth. Lyran.

If it be demanded, what they did with the fat of these clean beasts killed for their private use, if they might not eat it? Quest.

Saint Augustine answereth, that it is not meant of all beasts in generall, whether they were sacrificed or not, but onely of those, that were brought for sacrifices, of the flesh of some of them the Priests and the offerers might eat, but it was altogether unlawfull to eat of any of the fat before spoken of, but if they were not sacrifices, but killed for their private use, they might eat of this fat. And this is cited and followed by Willet. But Tostatus, Junius, Tremellius and others hold, that this fat of any oxe, sheep or goat was altogether unlawfull to be eaten, and the text may seem to be plain for it, Levit. 7. 23, 25. And here having pronounced all the fat of the sacrifices to be the Lords, this is added as another injunction, not to eat bloud or fat in all their habitations, that is not onely, when they came to Jerusalem to sacrifice, and to feast there before the Lord, but when at any time in their private houses they killed of these beasts for food, as no bloud of any living thing, so no fat of these kinds might be eaten. They must therefore imploy it to other uses, as the fat of a beast torn or dying alone, chap. 7. 24. the fat of that which dieth alone, or is torn in the field is spoken of as to be used otherwise, but not in case that the beast were killed to be eaten at home, for nothing is said of this, and vers. 25. it is said, Whosoever eateth of the fat of the beast, of which men offer, &c. shall be cut off.] I doe rather incline to that of Augustine also, because these last words seem to be an explication of all that was said against the eating of fat before, giving us to understand, that it was meant of the fat of the beast offered in sacrifice, Augustine.

and not of any other, for although fat eating and bloud eating are here joyned together as alike forbidden, yet if we compare Levit. 7. 25. and v. 27. together, we ſhall find that the prohibition of fat is not of ſo large extent, as that of bloud. For of bloud it is ſaid, Whoſoever eateth any manner of bloud ſhall be cut off, but of fat, who ſo eateth of the fat of the beaſt, of which men offer. Brentius maketh the ſame allegory with that of Ainſworth, but another way, By the fat, ſaith he, and the bloud Chriſt was ſpecially ſet forth, becauſe it is by his bloud that our ſinnes are expiated, and he is the ſweeteſt and the beſt of all things, as the fat is the beſt of the beaſt, God ſmelleth the ſavour of him offered, and is well pleaſed with us ſinners. Theſe therefore muſt not be eaten, to ſhew that juſtification and ſalvation brought to us by Chriſt alone, muſt not in any part be imputed to mans works or merits. For thus even by thoſe that keep faſts, and eat no fleſh or fat then, the bloud and the fat yet is eaten, for which God threatneth to cut off their ſouls. For what is it to eat of theſe, but to apply the virtues of Chriſt figured out hereby unto our ſelves?

Brentius.

Levit.7.25.27.

Heſychius.

Heſychius by fat underſtandeth deſire, and by bloud, life, ſaying, that we are under theſe myſtically commanded to give our moſt earneſt deſires, and our very lives unto God, and not to carnall things, which are pleaſing to us, becauſe this were to eat the fat, &c.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 2.

IF a ſoul ſhall ſinne through ignorance againſt any of the commandements of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done, and ſhall do againſt any of them. As in the ſacrifices hitherto preſcribed was figured out, how holily and godlily we ſhould live, ſo becauſe we are all ſubject to ſinne, when we doe our beſt endeavours, Eccl. 7. 20. James, 3. 2. here are ſacrifices appointed for the expiation of the imperfections and falls of Gods faithfull people. According to which Saint John ſaith, Theſe things I write unto you that you ſinne not, but if any man ſinneth, we have an advocate with the Father, &c.] But what ſinnes are they which might be expiated by ſacrifice? Not all, but onely ſins of ignorance, hebr. שגגה of erring or going aſtray through forgetfullneſſe, ignorance, or by being deceived. For wilfull and witting or preſumptuous ſinning there, is no ſacrifice, whereupon it is that the Apoſtle ſaith, If we ſinne willingly, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinne, but a fearfull looking for judgement. And of preſumptuous ſinning, as oppoſite hereunto it is ſpoken, Num. 15. 27.30. cutting off being appointed for ſuch, and no ſacrifice. Wherefore David prayeth ſpecially to be kept from thus ſinning, Pſalm. 19. 13. The ſins, for which the Prieſts offered ſacrifice, are called by the Apoſtle ignorances and errours, thus expounding the meaning of this place, when a man ſinneth not knowing it to be a ſinne, or not being ſo throughly informed, or through want of conſideration of the odiouſneſſe of the evill. If any man ſinneth not thus, but wilfully and wittingly, he ſinneth with an high hand, and his caſe is moſt dangerous.

1 Iohn 2. 1.

Heb. 10.26.

Heb.5.2. 9.7.

Note.

By the Commandements here are meant the precepts or charges forbidding. Thus the word command, is uſed, Deut. 4.23. Take heed leſt ye make the likeneſſe of any thing, which the Lord hath commanded thee, Deut.17.3. here negative or forbidding commands are meant, and of theſe the Rabbins have numbred 365. as many as there are dayes in the year, and of affirmative commandment, two hundred fourty eight, as many as there be bones of a mans body. And when a negative commandment is broken onely, and not for omitting the good commanded, they brought particular ſacrifices. And if the commandment broken were negative, but not touching deeds, but words or opinions, the Rabbins ſay that no ſacrifice was to be brought for for this, as if a man being deceived had conceived or ſpoken any thing unworthily of God, or blaſphemouſly, becauſe it is ſaid, concerning things which ought not to be done. And if it were affirmative, although the leaving undone were capitall, and to be numbred amongſt the greateſt ſinnes, as neglecting to circumciſe or to keep the Paſſeover, there was no ſacrifice to be brought therefore.

Maimony in Shegagoth, & chap. 1.

Queſt. If it be demanded, how then were omiſſions of good, and ſinfull thoughts and ſpeaches expiated? It may eaſily be conceived, even as ſins that never came particularly to be known by the continuall ſacrifice made for all, and upon the day of expiation, chap. 16. and ſuch ſinnes of ſome particulars by their whole burnt-offerings and peace-offerings brought voluntarily; but of another conſtitution for ſins of omiſſion, ſee Numb. 15. 22.

Brentius. The Hebrews, ſaith Brentius, becauſe two divers words are uſed to expreſs ſinne, for which ſacrifice was to be brought as חטאם here, and אשם ch. 5. 2. teach that accordingly divers ſacrifices were appointed, ſome for the one ſort of ſinnes and ſome for the other, ſome for omiſſions of good, and ſome for commiſſions of evill. But he thinketh rather, that the firſt ſort of ſins meant were ſuch as were committed about ſacrifices, &c. without reference to neighbours, as if a man being unclean had eaten of any ſacrifice, &c. and the other, chap. 5. ſuch as were committed againſt a neighbour, for which beſides ſacrificing, reſtitution muſt be made: or if in things pertaining to the Lord, reſtitution muſt be made to him, chap. 5. 14. But the firſt ſort of ſins ſpoken of in this chapter ſeemeth to extend further, viz. to all ſorts of ſins againſt the Lord, wherein no reſtitution is required, and the other ſort of ſuch ſins, as for which there muſt be reſtitution, being moſt rightly therefore rendred in our tranſlation treſpaſſes, chap. 5. And if we look to the ſixth chapter, we ſhall ſee, that not onely treſpaſſes done ignorantly, or through overſight, but willingly, had their ſacrifice expiatorie alſo.

Lyranus. Hence it is, that Lyranus diſtinguiſheth the ſins, for which ſacrifices are here appointed thus. 1. Sins committed through ignorance in this chapter. 2. Sins committed through negligence, chapter 5. 3. Sins committed maliciouſly, chapter 6. but this laſt is onely in matter of treſpaſſe betwixt man and man, and not of wilfull and malicious ſinning againſt God, Iunius. for which as Junius hath it, upon Heb. 10. 26. there was no ſacrifice, but this is not alwaies when a man knoweth a thing to be evill and yet doth it, becauſe paſſions do ſometimes overcome him that knoweth, and he is hereby carried to evil, as the paſſion of anger to ſtriking and bloodſhed, and railing, curſing, ſwearing, &c. and the paſſion of luſt to fleſhly uncleanneſſe, &c. but that is willing ſinning, for which there is no ſacrifice, when as neither the underſtanding is darkned by ignorance, nor the will overpowred by paſſion, and yet ſin is committed as it were in deſpight of God and of his Lawes. Of the difference between theſe ſins and thoſe, chap. 5. ſee chap. 5. v. 1.

Verſ. 3. If the Prieſt that is anointed ſinneth, &c.] That is, the high prieſt, ſo the Septuagint, and Cald. render it, and it muſt needs be meant of him, becauſe he onely was anointed in times following, Levit. 21. 10. and therefore is thus deſcribed, Levit. 16. 32. Exod. 29. 29. And it was not any ſinne committed by him before his anointing, for that was but as the ſinne of a private perſon, but after his anointing. And unto this ſacrificing of the high prieſt for his ſinne it is alluded, Heb. 5. 3: Heb. 7. 27. according to the ſinne of the people; the Hebr. לאשמת-העם to the guiltineſſe of the people, or to the making of the people guilty by his teaching or example, ſo Junius. And Maimony ſaith, if he onely do that which is evil, but teacheth not ill, he is not bound to bring this ſacrifice: for it is in the caſe of teaching erroneouſly and doing accordingly, whereby the people are corrupted, that he is bound to bring it; and the like he ſaith touching the Judges, it is for an errour in teaching to the corrupting of the people onely, for which they Lyranus. Junius.

Maimony in in Shegagoth, chap. 15.

Iunius.

Maimony of Ignorance, chap. 1.

muſt bring their ſacrifices. And this reading and ſenſe is according to the Septuagint and the vulgar Latine; yet Vatablus expoundeth it of ſinning like one of the people, and Lyranus to the corrupting of them by his evill example, ſo likewiſe Calvin, and it is certainly beſt underſtood of both doctrine and life, or of either.

Vatablus. Lyranus. Calvin.

Note. Let him bring for his ſinne a young bullock without blemiſh. His offering muſt be as great as that of the whole congregation to ſhew the greatneſſe of the Prieſts ſin above the ſin of any other, whether ruler or private perſon, becauſe the congregation is corrupted hereby. If it be demanded, who offered for the high prieſt? Calvin ſaith, that he offered for himſelf, becauſe the law of the high prieſthood was inviolable, and God would not that another ſhould offer for him, becauſe there be no more mediatours but one, wherefore God contrary to the ordinary courſe accepted of him being a ſinner to offer for himſelf. Thus alſo Lorinus, but Toſtatus holdeth that another Prieſt offered for him, but the former is confirmed, Levit. 16. 6. & Heb. 5.3. he is ſaid to offer for his own ſins, and then for the ſins of the people.

Calvin. Lorinus. Toſtatus.

Verſ. 4. And he ſhall bring the bullock to the doore of the Tabernacle, &c.] In this ſacrifice ſome things agree with the former, as the bringing of it to the doore, the laying on of hands, &c. touching which therefore that ſhall ſuffice, which hath bin already ſaid.

Differ. 1. Verſ. 6, 7. But in ſome things it differed. 1. In that the bloud muſt part be ſprinkled towards the vail of the Sanctuary, verſ. 6. part be carried and put upon the horns of the altar of incenſe within, and part be powred at the bottom of the altar, whereas in thoſe ſacrifices the bloud was ſprinkled onely round about the altar of burnt-offerings.

Differ. 2. Verſ. 8. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. 2. Here the fat and kidneyes onely are burnt upon the altar, but the fleſh, skinne, and dung thereof is burnt with the head, feet and inwards in a clean place of the aſhes without the camp. All which was not without a great myſtery.

The myſtery. The ſprinkling of part of the bloud 7. times ſignified the perfect cleanſing away of ſin by Chriſts bloud, becauſe ſeven is a number of perfection, ſpoken of therefore divers times; upon the attonement day there was ſprinkling with bloud 7 times, Levit. 16. 14. the Leper was ſprinkled 7 times, and was 7 dayes in cleanſing, Levit. 14 7, 9. oyl was 7 times ſprinkled upon the altar to conſecrate it, Levit. 8.11. Moreover, 7 times ſprinkling, that is, many times to purge from ſin ſheweth, that ſinne hath need of much purging, and the ſtain thereof is ſo great, that the ſoul cannot eaſily be cleanſed therefrom, ſee Pſalm 51. 3. And from hence the heathen uſed the ſame number, as holy, as appeareth by the ſaying of Apuleius. To purifie my ſelf I waſh me in the Sea, dipping my head in the waves 7 times, for the divine Pythagoras hath taught, that this number is moſt fit eſpecially in religion. And the ſprinkling of the bloud towards the vail ſignified the opening of heaven unto us by virtue of Chriſts bloud upon theſe times of ſprinkling, and beſtowing the bloud, part in one place and part in another, the Jews ſtood ſo ſtrictly becauſe of this expreſſe precept, that they held the ſacrifice polluted and of no force for expiation, if in any thing they erred herefrom. Pellican obſerveth, that anſwerably to theſe 7 times ſprinkling Chriſts bloud was ſhed 7 times. 1. In his circumciſion. 2. In his bloudy ſweat. 3. and 4. In his twice whipping. 5. In his crowning with thorns. 6. When upon the croſſe he was pierced with nails. 7. When the ſpear was thruſt into his ſide. The Interlin. gloſſe, but not ſo rightly, will have the ſevenfold gifts of the Spirit ſet forth hereby: ſo likewiſe Heſychius finding theſe 7 gifts of the Spirit in Chriſt, Eſay 11.1. Touching the bloud carried within the vail and put upon the horns of the altar there, this was to ſhew that, whereby we become acceptable to God, and are purged from ſin, and have entrance into heaven, is now in heaven, viz. Chriſt.

Ainſworth. Iunius ſanguis Chriſti eſt perfectiſ. pretium pro peccatis.

L. Apuleius. De Aſino aureo, lib. 11. Heb. 10.19, 20

Pellican.

Gloſſ. interlin.

Christ in his humane nature. Touching the carrying of this bloud to the altar within the Tabernacle, and putting it upon the horns thereof, Maimony saith, that the bloud of the bullock offered in sacrifice was sprinkled 7 times upon the vail between the holy place and the most holy, and after that 4 times upon the horns of the altar, which were foure, that is, of the golden altar, and this was thus done; the Priest standing between the candlestick and the altar, put the bloud on the horns on the outside beginning at the Northeast horn, and proceeding to the Northwest, then to the southwest, and lastly, to the Southeast. According to this type Christs hands and feet being together four were made bloudy, when in his passion they were pierced with nails; so Pellican, and the cleansing of our prayers from the infirmities accompanying them, by this bloud was figured hereby, that they might as incense which was offered upon this altar, have a sweet savor before God; so Osiander, Ainsworth, &c. Hesychius referreth these four to four Cardinall virtues. Touching the bloud powred at the bottom of the brasen altar of burnt-offerings, this saith Maimony, was on the West side which was next the door, at the coming out again from the tabernacle, and there were two holes in the ground, by which it was conveyed away. But as it hath bin before shewed, it was powred there to be consumed by the fire. Hereby the unthankfulnesse of wicked men, that tread underfoot the bloud of Christ, saith Osiander, was figured out. But I think rather, that the abundance of bloud running from the body of Christ upon the Crosse to the ground below was set forth hereby. Hesychius will have the contrition and teares of repentance shed at the preaching of the Gospel set forth hereby.

Maimony of offering sacrif. ch. 5.

Pellican.

Osiander.

Exod. 29. 12.

Touching the skin and whole body burning in the place of the ashes; see the like before, Exod. 29. 14. And the skin, saith Maimony, was not flayed off, but cleaving to the flesh was together divided into parts, as the whole burnt-offering, Levit. 1. and so laid upon the wood and burned. The place of ashes did notably set forth Christs suffering at the place of dead mens skuls, who are ashes, Joh. 19. 17. The Rabbins say, that this burning was without the Camp now, but afterwards when the temple was built without the walls of the City, to remove away the unclean spirit, so Rab. Menahem, but Baal Hatturim, in an open place to shew, that no man should be ashamed to confesse his sin, seeing the high priest so openly brought and burnt an oblation for his sin. Rab. Menahem also noteth, that this offering being made, it is not said as in the next for the Congregation, and for the Ruler, &c. It shall be forgiven them; vers. 20. v. 26. because it is not forgiven him, till he hath also made supplication unto God, for he is the Angel of the Lord of Hosts, Mal. 2. 7. and ought to be innocent and pure in all things. But according to this type Christ suffered without the City, to teach us to go out of this world by our faith and expectation of an other Countrey, viz. heaven, Heb. 13. 11. 14. and further to teach that our sinnes through his death are quite removed and put away from us. And moreover, how horrible sinne is. And in the place of ashes, to shew that sin was now extinct, as consumed to ashes. Of the place of the ashes, see Chapter, 6. 10.

Vers. 11. 12.

R. Menahem.

Baal-Haturim.

Iunii analys.

Tostatus.

Glosse interlin

If the whole congregation sinne through ignorance, and it be hid from the eyes of the assembly, &c.] Here almost all things agree with the former, but first it may be demanded here what is meant by the sin of the congregation? The Rabbins say, that any tribe is to be understood by the assembly or the congregation, according to that 2 Chron. 20. 5. where Jehoshaphat is said to stand in the assembly of Judah, and in the case of having sinned, bullocks were to be brought according to the number of the tribes for the whole congregation. But that onely say they, was counted the sin of the whole congregation, whereof the most tribes were guilty, that is 7 or more, although but some in each of these tribes, or the greatest number, although though they were but of one or two tribes, as if the whole congregation were 600000. and of theſe 300000. and one ſinned. And in deſcribing this ſin for which they were to bring their ſacrifice, they ſay, if the great Synedrion through ignorance taught erroneouſly and the people hereupon erred, in this caſe the judges onely were bound to bring a ſacrifice, but not the people: but if they taught any errour preſumptuouſly, and the people hereupon erred ſimply, in this caſe the people muſt bring their ſacrifice, or if any of the judges ſpake of any thing evil, as lawfull to be done, but teach not the people ſo, and they hearing offend thereupon, they muſt alſo bring their ſacrifice, Numb. 15: 24. Moſes ſpeaking again of the people ſinning through ignorance appointeth both a bullock and a kid of the goats to be offered, but that ſay the Rabbins, is in caſe that the ſinne committed be about idolatry, for then both a bullock and a goat was to be brought, but for any other tranſgreſſion a bullock onely. But this ſatisfieth not, ſeeing the not keeping of all the commandment is there ſpoken of. Cajetan ſaith, that the ſacrifice preſcribed, Numb. 15. was in caſe of ſinning againſt ſome poſitive law of God, but herein the caſe of ſinning againſt ſome divine naturall law, becauſe there it is ſaid, have not done according to all the commandments given by Moſes ſince the day of your coming out of Egypt: but here their ſinning onely againſt ſome commandement of the Lord is ſpoken of. Some again will have that Numb. 15. meant of the ſin of any particular aſſembly belonging to any one Synagogue, but this is of the whole congregation. Toſtatus ſaith, that Numb. 15. is to be underſtood of errours, about firſt fruits, and other ceremoniall Laws, becauſe the firſt fruits were ſpoken of immediately before, and the lawes of burnt-offerings, meat-offerings and drink-offerings before that: wherefore if in any of theſe they erred, they muſt bring a bullock and a kid; for other errours in morrall, or judiciall matters a bullock onely. Lorinus ſaith, that it is a ſupply of that, which was wanting here, Levit. 4. as the law of whole burnt-offerings and peace-offerings is ſupplied by teaching the addition of a meat-offering and drink-offering to each of them, Numb. 15. 4. Calvin ſaith, that there is no difference between that, Numb. 15. and this, but that here one bullock being offered for a burnt-offering, and another for a ſin-offering, there a liberty is given in the want of a ſecond bullock, in ſtead thereof to bring a goat for a ſin offering. Of all theſe wayes of reconciling theſe two places, I like that beſt, whereby it is ſaid, the errours about firſt fruits and other ceremonies are meant, Numb. 15. 24. for which ſome ſatisfaction was made by the bullock of the burnt-offering, and then an expiation by the goat of the ſin-offering, which was a law formerly wanting, and therefore is here ſupplied, as divers other ſupplements about other ſacrifices are likewiſe made from the beginning of that chapter. Calvins conjecture is moſt improbable, becauſe not two, but one bullock was ſpoken of before, and it is not to be thought, that there was at any time ſuch a want of bullocks, as that the whole congregation could not find two. And Lorinus is as farre wide, becauſe the goat is not appointed for a ſupply to the bullock, but for the onely ſin-offering, the bullock being for a burnt-offering of a ſweet ſavour. And what divine naturall Law, of which Cajetan ſpeaketh, there ſhould beſides the poſitive Lawes, I cannot tell, ſeeing all things in the law of nature were now poſitively ſet down. And laſtly, as here, ſo Num. 15. all the congregation is ſpoken of, and therefore ſome particular aſſembly in one place cannot be meant. The goats indeed might in ſuch a caſe in reaſon be preſcribed inſtead of a bullock, but not a bullock and goat both when as a greater company brought onely a bullock! Touching this of the whole congregation there are 3 differences from that, which was before ſaid of the Prieſt.

Vers. 13.

Quest.

Maimony in Shegagoth, c. 14.

Maimony, c. 12.

Cajetan.

Toſtatus.

Lorinus.

Calvin.

Differ. 1. Gloſ. ordin.

1. Here it is ſaid, when the ſinne committed is known, but there not to ſhew, ſaith Interlin gloſſe, that the Prieſts ſin cannot but for the moſt part be be committed willingly. But how can it then be ſaid to be done ignorantly? I do rather think therefore, that the reaſon of this difference is, becauſe the ignorant multitude are apt to paſſe over their ſins without taking notice of them, untill they be made known unto them, but the Prieſt can hardly goe on, when he hath ſinned, but he muſt needs take notice of it.

2. The elders muſt here lay their hands upon the head of the beaſt for all, there the Prieſt for himſelf, becauſe ſo many hands could not impoſed. Differ. 2.

3. Which was before touched, here it is ſaid, the Prieſt ſhall make an attonement for him, but there not, becauſe as Willet ſaith, the Prieſt could not be a mediatour for himſelf. And he alſo addeth, as a myſticall ſignification, that the congregation erring through ignorance figured out the Jewes through ignorance ſinning ſo greatly againſt Chriſt, Act. 3.17. and therefore invited to repent, forgiveneſſe being promiſed them, v. 19. as in this place upon their ſacrificing, and the elders putting their hands upon the head of the beaſt figured out the elders and governours, by whoſe means Chriſt was crucified thus alſo Heſychius. Differ. 3. VVillet. The Myſtery.

When a ruler hath ſinned and done any thing through ignorance, &c.] The word here tranſlated ruler, is a common name both to the King and to inferiour Magiſtrats, Exod. 18.22. Numb. 16.2. Exod. 16.22. Ezech. 34.24. Yet the Rabbins ſay, the King, that is under none but God, is meant, and if there be more Kings, and one of them doth not ſerve another, each one muſt bring this offering. An hee goat brought by the ruler did moſt aptly agree unto him, he being the chief of the people, and the hee goat was the chief of the flock. The differences betwixt this and the former ſacrifices are. 1. That no ſprinkling of the bloud 7 times towards the vail is here ſpoken of. 2. No carrying of the bloud to be put upon the horns of the Altar within the tabernacle, that is the golden altar of incenſe, but onely the Prieſt with his finger muſt take and put of the bloud upon the horns of the Altar of burnt-offerings, which was without at the door of the tabernacle. The manner of doing this ſaith Maimony was thus. The Prieſt taking the bloud in a baſon went up by the footſtall of the altar turning to his right hand, then putting the forefinger of his right hand into the bloud he ſtriked it firſt upon the ſoutheaſt horn from the middle of the altar to the top, and ſo going round upon the north-eaſt, then upon the north-weſt, and laſtly, upon the ſouth-weſt, powring out the bloud remaining at the bottom of the altar neareſt to that. But when he had put bloud upon the firſt horn, he wiped his finger upon the ſide of the baſon, and then dipped again for the ſecond, and ſo for the reſt, becauſe all the bloud upon his finger muſt be wiped off, before he dipped again for another horn. 3, It is not here ſaid, that the fleſh with all the parts of this ſacrifice ſhould be carried and burnt without the hoaſt, as of the other, nor what ſhould be done with it, but chapter, 6. v. 26. it is appointed to be meat for the Prieſts, and v. 30. there is a generall rule, nothing muſt be eaten of the ſacrifice made for ſin, the bloud whereof was brought into the tabernacle; from whence we may gather a reaſon, why this might be eaten, viz. becauſe none of the bloud of this was brought in, but all ſpent without. Verſ. 22. Maimonie of ignorances ch. 15. Lyranus. Verſ. 25. Maimonie of ſacrif. offering, ch. 5. ſect. 7.

If any of the common people ſinne through ignorance.] As a leſſer ſacrifice, and with fewer rites was offered for a Prince, then for the high Prieſt or the whole congregation, arguing that his ſinne was leſſer, ſo a ſacrifice ſomewhat leſſer yet was appointed for one of the common people, viz. a female kid or lamb, arguing, that his ſin was not ſo great, as that of the Ruler. For (one of the common people,) in Hebr. is one of the people of the land, or of the earth, according to Origen, who noteth hereupon, that an earthly minded man is meant. But Aben Ezra better of any, ſaving the high Prieſt, or Ruler, whether Iſraelite, common Prieſt, or Levite. And this ſacrifice, ſaith Maimony, is to be underſtood, to be for one ſin onely, if more ſins were by Verſ. 27. Verſ. 28. 32. Origen. Aben Ezra.

Maimony, of ignorance, c.4.

by one committed, or the ſin committed comprehended two or three ſins in it then ſo many ſuch ſacrifices muſt be brought, for every ſin one. For the rites of this, they are the ſame with the former for a Ruler, the bloud was put upon the horns of the braſen altar, and not ſpinkled 7 times, and the fleſh.&c. went to the Prieſts, why the Prieſt had no part in the ſacrifice for the high Prieſt, orof the congregation as he had in this. Theodoret yieldeth this reaſon, becauſe they muſt reap no commoditie of their own or of the ſins of the congregation.

Theod.qu. 3. in Levit.

Verſ. 35.

Theſe words, according to the offerings made by fire, are in Hebr. upon the fires, Septuagint upon the burnt-offerings as chap. 3.5. where the meaning of this may be ſeen, the difference being no more but this, there it is upon the burnt-offerings of the Lord, here upon the firts of the Lord, in which the dayly burnt-offering were burned, and therefore well rendred by one, the fire-offerings.

Ainſworth.

Note.

Here we may ſee, that even the high Prieſt is ſubject to errour and ſo is the whole Church contrary to the popiſh opinion, and that great mens ſinnes, although they be paſſed over amongſt men and the poorer ſort are puniſhed for theirs, yet before God they are no whit leſſe, but greater, becauſe a greater ſacrifice muſt be offered therefore.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 1.

Ainſworth.

IF a ſoul ſinne and hear the voyce of ſwearing and is a witneſſe, &c.] In this chapter as hath been before noted, are ſacrifices appointed for leſſer faults about legall rites neglected, as in chap.4. far greater againſt any of Gods moſt weighty Commandments. For to expiate any ſinne done ignorantly, which was before ſpoken of, no leſſe ſacrifice might be brought by any then a female kid or lamb, but for one of theſe offences if the partie were poore, he might bring in ſtead thereof two yong pigeons, or a little flowr, verſ.7.11. For all ſins that deſerve cutting off, except theſe three, blaſphemy, the neglect of circumciſion and of the Paſſeover, the ſacrifice appointed for a ſin-offering in thoſe that do thus ignorantly or forgetfully, chap.4. muſt be brought, but if an unclean perſon eateth of an holy thing, or cometh into the ſanctuary, which alſo diſcern cutting off, he may bring the offering appointed here, v.7.11. Yet Auguſtine and Lyranus, and Gloſſ.ordin. ſay, that it is to be underſtood, in any caſe of ſinning ignorantly, the poor man might come with his pigeons, or flowr, becauſe chap.1.14. theſe are preſcribed and if not, the poore ſhould in ſome caſes be left without means of remiſſion. If a ſoul ſinne, that is, any one, whether man or woman, for the woman offending muſt bring a ſacrifice, as well as the man; but the Rabbins ſay, if ſhe be a married woman, her huſband bringeth it by her hand, and not the leaſt, unleſſe he be poor, but ſuch as he is bound to bring. The voice of ſwearing, or as the word אלה ſignifieth, of adjuration or curſing, that is, if any be adjured by a curſe to ſpeak the truth in giving witneſſe touching any matter, as if a man that hath loſt any thing adjureth another, who he thinketh can teſtifie of it and he denieth that he can teſtifie when he knoweth it, he ſinneth the ſinne here ſpoken of, yea the Rabbins ſay, that if a man amongſt many being together not challenging any one in particular ſhall onely ſay in generall, I adjure you all that ſtand here, if any can witneſſe for me, that they ſtand forth and bear witneſſe if there be any witneſſes preſent, but deny or ſay nothing, they are guiltie. Maimony, He ſhall bear his iniquitie, that is, the puniſhment due to it which is to be cut off, as it is expounded, Levit. 19. 8. and 20. 17. unleſſe he repent, and bring this ſacrifice, thus Ainſworth. But others hold, that the ſins here meant are either ſins committed by any other man contrary to that, which all nations are bound unto, as Act. 15.

Maimonie of ignorance chap 1.

Examples of adjuring. 1 Sam. 14.24. Matth. 26.63. 1 Theſ. 5.27. Maimony of oaths, chap.9.

Heſychius.

the

the eating of bloud and things ſtrangled is forbidden to all, becauſe having ſaid before, If any of the people of the land ſinneth, chap. 4.27. here the phraſe is varied, if a ſoul ſinne or elſe ſins, whereof a man becommeth guiltie by means of others, whereas chap. 4. the caſe of a mans own ſinning in any matter is handled. Touching the firſt of theſe, it is overthrown by the firſt words, chap. 4. 2. if a ſoul ſhall ſinne. The other is followed by Calvin alſo, and is manifeſt, if we conſider the particular ſins here mentioned: for they are ſins drawing the guilt from others. And if, as Ainſworth hath it, other ſmaller ſins were meant, there ſhould not have been appointed the ſame, but leſſer ſacrifices therefore, and that ſinning onely about legall rites is not here handled is plain, becauſe the firſt ſin here mentioned is not of that, but of another kind. Calvin.

Brentius ſaith, that the Lord, having ſpoken of ſins of ignorance in generall, here cometh to name ſome particulars, by which we might gather, that others like to theſe were meant alſo. But this is too generall. Willet following Toſtatus diſtinguiſheth theſe ſins from the former thus, there ſins of ignorance are ſpoken of, here ſins of paſſion, but how this can be in in thoſe of touching an unclean thing, I cannot ſee. I reſt then in that of Heſychius and Calvin. And it is to be underſtood, that the caſes here put do firſt and properly concern the cõmon ſort of people, but in like manner it is to be conceived, if the high Prieſt or Prince ſinned thus, he was to bring his offering, as was before appointed. But Maimony contrariwiſe, in theſe caſes the King, the high Prieſt and the Judge were all alike, and brought onely ſuch offerings as the common ſort of people did. For the Scripture puts no difference, ſaving in the ſin-offerings appointed for their ignorances, chapter, 4. treatiſe of ignorances, chapter 10. Touching the particular ſin here ſpoken of, ſome hold that it is meant, if any hear a blaſphemy uttered, and ſinneth by not diſcloſing it, or if he heareth curſing of his neighbour, for ſuch ſins ought to be diſcloſed. So Junius and Pellican and Willet. But this is rejected by Calvin, alſo that of ſome, who, as he ſaith, expound it of perjury being heard, becauſe it is ſaid, whether he hath ſeen or known of it, whereas if he had meant hearing the voice of perjury, he would onely have added, If he hath heard it: and yet Brentius followeth this of perjury alſo; if a man knoweth that another hath ſtolne away any of his neighbours goods, of which he ſeeketh to purge himſelf by oath, or in any like caſe, if he holdeth his peace now and diſcloſeth not his knowledge, he ſinneth. And withall he mentioneth this, as the expoſition of ſome, if he knoweth any man guilty of any thing to which an execration belongeth, according to that, Deut. 27. 15. &c. but this he paſſeth over, affirming his firſt to be the moſt ſimple meaning; ſo likewiſe Heſychius, and Auguſtin expounding theſe words according to this ſenſe thus, whether he hath ſeen or known of it, that is, whether he hath ſeen him do the thing, wherein he is perjured, or known of it by relation of the party himſelf, or by any other means. And whereas a queſtion will then ariſe, whether a man be bound to diſcloſe the perjury of another, if he that is perujrd, ſhal thus be brought in danger of his life? he anſwereth, yes, but becauſe it is not ſaid to whom he ſhould diſcloſe it, he is not bound to tell it to the indangering of him, for this were againſt charity, but to the Prieſt who may benefit him by praying for him and not hurt him. Lyranus following the ſame ſence, ſaith, it is to be uuderſtood, that he muſt diſcloſe it to the Judge requiring him, not otherwiſe: Origen ſeemeth to hold, that he is bound to diſcloſe it, that the offender may receive condign puniſhment, for he ſaith, the Goſpel was herein milder then the Law, becauſe in this we are commanded, if a brother ſinneth, to tell him firſt privately of his faults, but by the Law forthwith

Brentius.

Willet.
Toſtatus.

Junius.
Caietan.

Iunius.
Pellican.

Brentius.

Heſychius.
Auguſt. qu. 1. in Levit.

Quia non expreſſit, cui hoc indicandum ſit, utrum illi, cui iuratur, an ſacerdoti, vel cuipiam, qui non ſolum cum perſequi non poteſt irrogando ſupplicium, ſed potius orare pro illo poteſt, videtur mihi, quod ſe homo ſolvat a peccati vinculo, qui indicet talibus, qui magis prodeſſe poſſunt, quam obeſſe, ſive ad corrigendum ſive ad Deum pro eo placandum, ſi & ipſe confeſſionis adhibeat medicinam.

Origen.
Matth. 18.17.

to diſcloſe him. But Origen was forgetful thus ſaying, becauſe even in the Law we are commanded to tell a neighbour of his fault alſo, but for the diſcloſing of the faults of others, ſee my Expoſition Matth. 18. 17. The Cald. maketh for the foregoing Expoſition of the Rabbins, and hear the voice of the judge adjuring, we may indifferently take it any of theſe waies : for whether a man be adjured, and concealeth his knowledge for fear or favour, or hearing perjury doth not reveal it, he ſinneth. The exception taken by Calvin againſt perjury is of no force, if Auguſt. Expoſition of the words be conſidered, and of as little force is that of Willet, ſaying, he that cometh as a witneſſe to ſwear, heareth not an oath, for he heareth the adjuration. And whereas he objecteth, that a Law, as is here ſaid, but taketh an oath, againſt falſe ſwearing is made, Chap.6.1. I anſwer, that is in another caſe, when he hath done wrong, and juſtifieth it by oath, which is a malicious ſinning, but not to ſpeak being adjured in another mans matter, or not to ſpeak all the truth, may be out of fear or favour to the party, whoſe matter is in hand, and ſo not out of malice but weakneſſe, evil affections overſwaying. Touching the laſt words here, he ſhall bear his iniquity. As Ainſworth, ſo Oſiander, Lyranus, Vatablus, and Pellican, &c ſay that the puniſhment of his ſin is meant; and Origen and Junius will have the ſin of him meant, whom he concealeth, he ſhal be guilty and bear the puniſhment of his ſin. But Pagninus better, he ſhall bear iniquitatem ſuam, the meaning being nothing elſe, but as by varying the phraſe is expreſſed in the next caſe, verſ. 2. he ſhall be guilty, ſo Calvin, that is, by means of the ſin of another being by him born withal, as if he had otherwiſe actually ſinned himſelf, and therefore muſt bring a ſacrifice for expiation, becauſe the other mans ſin by his not oppoſing it becometh his, which is to be noted, that we may not reſt ſecurely in regard of other mens ſins, when we ſhould oppoſe them, but ſeek to beat them down, that we may not bring them upon our ſelves, and become guilty before God by them, who have guilt enough by our own.

Levit.19.17.

Cald.

Lyranus. Oſiander. Vatablus. Origen. Junius. Calvin.

Note.

Verſ.2. If a ſoul touch an unclean thing whether it be a carkaſe of an unclean beaſt, &c.] Becauſe this followeth immediately after that of not revealing, verſ. 1. no mention being yet made of a ſacrifice to be brought. Saint Auguſtine moveth a queſtion, whether no ſacrifice were to be brought for one of the ſins here named, but for all together? and anſwereth, as he might eaſily, that the meaning is, for any one of theſe ſins a ſacrifice was to be brought, for ſo it is expreſſed, verſ. 5. But it may ſeem ſtrange, that for ſuch uncleanneſſe, as came by the touch of an unclean thing, which laſted not, but till the evening, and then a man waſhing his cloathes was cleanſed, Levit.11.24.31. or by ſprinkling water upon them, Numb. 19. 16, 17. yet for this uncleanneſſe he muſt bring a ſacrifice and confeſſe. The Rabbins therefore anſwer, that this is to be underſtood of a perſon becoming ignorantly unclean by theſe means, which eateth of the holy things in the ſanctuary : for ſuch an one eating hereof is threatned, that he ſhall be cut off, Lev.7.20,21. Numb.19.20. that is, if he doth it preſumptuouſly, if ignorantly, he muſt bring this offering. Toſtatus addeth that for neglecting to waſh his cloathes at the time appointed, &c. he was guilty and ought to bring this ſacrifice, which may have place here alſo, and the ſame is followed by Calvin, ſaying, that for ſo groſſe a neglect of Gods Law a greater puniſhment is here inflicted. The Hebrew Canons in explaining this ſin of an unclean perſons eating of the holy things, put this difference between it and other ſins of ignorance, ſpoken of Chapter 4. 27. viz. that for it no offering was to be brought, unleſſe the party offending knew himſelf to be unclean, both before his eating and after, but forgat his uncleanneſſe at the time of his eating : but for any other ſin of ignorance he muſt bring an offering, although he never knew of it, till afterwards, becauſe Chapter 4.27. it is ſaid, be guilty, or his ſin be made Auguſt.qu. 2. in Levit.

Queſt.

Maimony of ignorance, Ch. 10.

Toſtatus.

Maimony of ignorances Ch.11. Sect. 1.

made known unto him, which he hath ſinned; but here verſe 3. it is ſaid, it be hidden from him, and he knoweth of it, and is guilty, that is, hidden from him at the time, through forgetfulneſſe, but otherwiſe known unto him. But the Cald. expounding theſe words, ſaith thus, if it be hid from him, and he touch any holy thing and afterwards it be revealed unto him and he knoweth it, he is guilty. ſo likewiſe, in our tranſlation, when he knoweth of it, he ſhall be guilty, and this is the moſt probable, and therefore I leave the diſtinction in the Hebrew Canons to the Authors thereof. Cald. Jonathan.

Alſo, if he touch the uncleanneſſe of man, whatſoever uncleanneſſe it be, &c.] What the unclenneſſes of men be, ſee Chapters 12, 13, 14, 15. Origen, and after him Heſychius, going from the literal ſenſe ſay, that the uncleanneſſe of man is ſin onely, he is dead, that is, dead in ſin, and torn of wilde beaſts, that is, by the devil inticed to ſin, he toucheth the dead carkaſſe of a man that followeth him in ſinning, becauſe nothing outward defileth a man, but as from the living body of Chriſt virtue went out to heal the woman of her bloody iſſue, ſo from a man dead in ſin goeth out a polluting force, defiling him that followeth ſuch. And Origen argueth from the dead body of the Prophet, touched by a dead man, who was thereupon revived again, becauſe if uncleanneſſe by touching a dead body according to the litteral ſenſe were meant, that man was defiled by touching that body of the Prophet, which is abſurd. But this argument of Origen is eaſily anſwered, that touch was ſanctified and cleanſed by the miracle, that was wrought, the caſe was extraordinary and therefore came not within the compaſſe of the ordinary Law. And as for that ſaying, things without defile not a man, it is to be underſtood of moral, and not of legal uncleanneſſe, which under the goſpel ceaſed, for which cauſe meats before unclean are ſaid now to be ſanctified, according to the literal ſenſe then by touching unclean things, a man was under the Law made unclean, and a ſinner, becauſe he tranſgreſſed againſt a commandment of God, although ſimply the object touched could not make him unclean, thus alſo Junius. But why did the Lord then forbid this? Anſw. for a myſtical ſignification, as all other legal rites were appointed, viz. to teach the uncleanneſſe of ſin of wicked men, which who ſo committeth, and with whomſoever companieth, he contracteth pollution ſpirituall hereby, according to that, a man cannot touch pitch, but he ſhall be defiled, and the companion of fools ſhall be afflicted: for a wicked man is dead in ſin, Eph. 2. 2. and becauſe waſhing and ſacrificing is preſcribed to purge ſuch uncleanneſſe, we muſt underſtand, that onely by the blood of Chriſt we are purged from any the leaſt pollution. Pellican ſaith, that God would hereby teach purity both of ſoul and body, it being unwholeſome for the body to touch ſtinking carrion, and ſo to go to his meat without waſhing. Again by this Law, he ſaith, God provided for the good of men, that the clean might not be annoyed by the unclean. And laſtly, becauſe even carrion being turned into dung fatteneth the ground, and ſo bringeth forth things ſweet and wholeſome, hereby was ſhewed, that from the ſins of men, God finally hath glory. And Brentius addeth, that becauſe a dead carkaſe is is not unclean of it ſelf, but yet being touched it maketh a man unclean, ſeeing we are all, ſince the fall of Adam, ſinful and wicked, and polluting whatſoever we touch, the Lord would by theſe uncleanneſſes ſhew, that as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, to the impure all things are impure. Verſ. 3. Origen. Heſychius. Morticinium hominis tangit qui ſequitur mortuum in peccatis. Mark. 7. 21. Act. 10. Junius. Qu. Prov. 13. 20. Pellican. Brentius. Tit. 1. 15.

If a ſoul ſwear pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatſoever it be that a man pronounceth with an oath, &c.] The Rabbins ſay, that there are four kindes of oaths. 1. A raſh oath in common talk. 2. An oath in teſtifying. 3. An oath touching a neighbours goods delivered to keep, Chap. 6. 1. 4. An oath of pronouncing, as in this place. But what is meant by pronouncing to do good, or to do evil, for there is reaſon, when a man bindeth himſelf to do good, if he doth it not, Verſ. 4. Maimony of oaths, Ch. 1. Qu.

that he ſhould be a judged a ſinner, and be injoyned to bring an offering but if he ſweareth to do evil, and doth it not, as he ought not, howſoever he hath ſworn, how ſhall this be counted a ſin in him? Maimony reſolveth this thus. If a man ſweareth to do evil to his neighbour, or to transgreſſe againſt any commandment of God, this is not a ſwearing to do evil, becauſe it is unlawful to do theſe things, but if a man ſweareth to do that, which he may afterwards perceive will be to his own hinderance, as Pſal. 15. and ſo evil to him, this onely is the ſwearing to do evil here meant, and by neglecting ſuch an oath, a man becometh guilty. Other oathes to do evil are raſh and vain oathes, and ſuch, as take them, are to be beaten and not ſuffered to do accordingly, and he is to be beaten likewiſe, that ſweareth to do any thing beyond his power, as to faſt ſeven dayes together, &c. And by this oath of pronouncing, he ſaith, is meant not onely an oath touching any thing to be done, or not to be done hereafter, but alſo already done or not done, if a man ſhall pronounce contrary to the truth. But ſome underſtand it of doing evil to a neighbour, or of commiting any ſin. as David ſware to kill Nabal, and Herods oath was the like. Here they ſay was a double ſin, 1. To ſwear to do evil, which is raſh ſwearing. 2. To do well in not keeping ſuch an oath, which yet is a ſin, becauſe the oath is neglected or forgotten. But againſt this Calvin argueth rightly, that God exacteth not conſtancy, but onely in lawful oaths, and the caſe of neglecting to keep an oath is here handled, and not of raſh or light ſwearing. Some of the Ancients by evil here underſtand the evil of puniſhment to be inflicted upon a mans own body for ſin, in chaſtiſing it by faſtings, &c if he ſweareth to do this, and doth it not, he ſinneth. But ſo faſting and praying, and humiliation for ſin ſhould be evil, which God forbid; wherefore I ſubſcribe to the firſt of Maimony. For the order followed, here, after pollutions by others, verſ. 1, 2, 3. followeth a being polluted by a mans own fact, which muſt be purged alike by ſacrifice. And this, as I take it, is added here, becauſe being a greater ſin, then any of the former, it might have been doubted, if it had not been ſpecified, whether ſome greater ſacrifice muſt not be brought therefore, ſeeing the caſe of ſinning about ſwearing is touched verſ 1.

Maimony of oathes Ch. 5.

Heſychius. Toſtatus. Iunius. Calvin. Origen. Gregor. Lyranus.

Verſ. 5.6. When he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe ſins, he ſhall confeſſe, and bring his treſpaſſe-offering, &c.] In one of theſe things, that is, in one of the caſes mentioned verſ. 1, 1, 3, 4. touching this confeſſion, the Rabbins ſay, attonement is not made for their ſin, that bring the offerings, until that by word of mouth they have confeſſed, and repent. And he that hath done his neighbour damage in his goods, although he payeth him all, yet there is none attonement, until he confeſſe and turn away from doing the like again for ever. The vulgar Latin leaveth out this clauſe, when he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe, whereupon ſome have held, that for theſe ſins no particular form of ſacrificing is appointed, but that it was left to the diſcretion of the Prieſt, as Lyranus; but it is plain, that the ſacrifice here appointed is for any of the forenamed ſins, according to Auguſtine. Touching the offering to be brought, a female kid, or lamb, enough hath been ſaid. Chap. 4. 28. and in caſe, that he which hath offended, be not able to bring this, then he muſt bring a pair of turtle doves or two young pigeons, of which ſee Chap. 1. 14. They that ſin, ſaith Heſychius, being of divers ſorts, that none might be excluded from remiſſion, divers courſes for the expiation of their ſins, as they are able, are preſcribed, whereby are figured out the divers waies of obtaining remiſſion now, for when a man either by reaſon of his great age, or of his bodily infirmity, cannot ſo much afflict himſelf by faſting and prayer, wearing haire-cloth and the like, he muſt by ſequeſtring himſelf from worldly things, and by ſetting his mind wholly upon heavenly, offer this ſacrifice of turtles, or young pigeons, ſetting forth heavenly contemplations. This ſacrifice of a Lamb or of fowls is called Gnoleh-vajored, Maimony of Repentance. Ch 1.

Lyranus.

Verſ. 7. Heſychius.

a

a ſacrifice aſcending or deſcending; Talmud Babyl. becauſe it was greater, if he that brought it were rich, or leſſer, if he were poor, and the Rabbins obſerve, that beſides in theſe four caſes, in two more this Gnoleb-Vajored was offered. 1. By the leper at his cleanſing, Levit. 14. 21. 2. By the woman after child-birth, Levit. 12. 8. One for a ſin offering and another for a burnt offering] This was to figure out Chriſt, who is our ſin-offering, and our ſerving God in newneſſe of life, which is our burnt offering, Rom. 12. 1. And he bare our ſins upon his body, ſaith Peter, that we being delivered from ſin, might ſerve God in righteouſneſſe. And Heſychius following this ſenſe ſaith, none can be an holocauſt, or whole burnt offering to God, unleſſe he be firſt freed from ſin by Chriſt his ſin-offering.

Talmud. babyl. in Cerethoth, c. 2. Maimony of ignorance, c. 1.

Ainſworth. 1 Pet. 2. 24.

Heſychius

He ſhall offer that firſt, which is for the ſin-offering, and wring off his head from his neck, but not divide it aſunder, and he ſhall ſprinkle the blood upon the ſide of the Altar, &c.] The two pigeons brought were not uſed both alike. but this for the ſin-offering had onely the blood wrung out at the Altar, but the body was not burned, but the other was, Chap. 1. 14. where ſee alſo the manner of this ſacrifice. By theſe two Gregory will have two acts of Repentance ſet forth, the one for ſins committed, the other for duties neglected, but the Gloſſe, the Repentance of the heart, and confeſſion of the mouth. And for the powring of the blood at the bottom of the Altar, Origen will have it a figure of the Jewes believing in the blood of Chriſt at the end of the world. Ainſworth by the blood ſprinkled upon the ſide of the Altar underſtandeth the drops of blood running from Chriſts body in the garden, and by that powred at the bottom of the Altar, the reſt of his blood ſhed upon the croſſe. The Rabbins yield this for a literal reaſon, why the pigeons brought muſt be two, viz. becauſe in that, which was for a ſin-offering, the Altar, upon which the blood onely was ſprinkled, had no meat, or food, as it is called, Levit. 3. 11. therefore there muſt be a ſecond for a burnt-offering, that the one might be meat for the Prieſt, and the other for the Altar.

Verſ. 8.

Gregor. Gloſ. Ordin.

Origen. Ainſworth.

Cazkuni in Levit. 5.

But if he be not able to bring two turtle doves or young pigeons, then the ſinner ſhall bring for his offering the tenth part of an Ephah of fine flowre, and he ſhall put no oyl upon it nor frankincenſe, &c.] Here the Lord provideth for the comfort of thoſe ſinners that were pooreſt of all, that none might deſpaire, but all acknowledge forgiveneſſe of ſins to flow onely from his grace in Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe he ſtandeth not upon the worth of the thing brought, as if hereby any were ranſomed from ſin, for a little flowre being brought by the very pooreſt, it is ſaid, as when a greater offering was brought, it ſhall be forgiven him. But what is meant by this, that no oyl or frankincenſe ſhould be in this, as in other meat-offerings, becauſe this was an offering for ſin? Heſychius making this pooreſt perſon a figure of him, that is inconſtant in his Repentance, & ſoone, that hath waſted all his riches of Repentance, as was the manner of the Jews, to whom this Law was given, ſometimes Repenting and promiſing new obedience, and eſtſoons again relapſing to their old ſinful courſes, will have the want of oyl here, a figure of his uncertainty, whether he ſhal obtain mercy and compaſſion, and the want of frankincenſe, of his uncertainty, whether his prayer ſhall have a ſweet ſmell before the Lord, or no, becauſe after his former humiliations and repentings he hath ſo often rebelled again, and this he proveth from Joel 2. 14. Who knoweth whether he will return and repent, &c. Thus Heſychius, and the Popiſh hereupon, as Brentius noteth, will have it hereby underſtood, that a man muſt be alwaies doubtful, and that none can have aſſurance of their acceptance before God during this life, that in Eccleſiaſtes being alſo brought for the ſame purpoſe, no man knoweth, whether he be worthy of love or hatred. But he anſwereth, that this is meant, by outward things, which fall out alike to all, for hereby no man can know whether he be loved of God or hated: but the promiſes of God in Jeſus Chriſt are

Verſ. 11.

Qu.

Heſychius.

Brentius.

are not like unto theſe, he that hath faith rightly to apply them, may be aſſured of the love of God, and to teach doubting now is to overthrow the whole goſpel of Chriſt Jeſus, and all the gracious promiſes thereof, as uncertain and not to be believed. And he ſaith, that neither oyl nor frankincenſe were permitted to be in the ſin-offering, to ſhew, not that the ſacrifice was not wel-pleaſing to God, but that the ſin for which was moſt abominable unto him. And Vatablus addeth, that the great ſorrow and grief, that ſhould be for ſin, is hereby expreſſed. But Ainſworth beſt, there muſt be no oyl, to ſhew the want of grace, that was in the ſinner, for it is through want of grace that a man ſinneth, neither muſt there be frankincenſe to ſhew that the remembrance of ſin is not acceptable before God, and therfore in the jealouſie-offering when a commemoration is made of ſin, it muſt not be neither. In other meat-offerings, to ſhew, that the things, for which they were offered, were well pleaſing unto God, there muſt be both oyl and frankincenſe, Levit.2. For the quantity of flowre to brought, the tenth part of an Ephah, ſee Exod.16. For the manner of this offering, which followeth verſ.12,13. ſee Chap.2.2.

Vatablus.
Ainſworth.

Numb.5.15.

Verſ. 15. If a ſoul commit a treſpaſſe through ignorance in t'e holy things of the Lord, he ſhall bring a Ram, &c.] This Law added here is ſingularly about any fraud uſed, or any errour committed touching holy rites. As if a man did make profit, or had uſe of any holy things of the Lord, whether they were things offered upon the altar or ſanctified for the reparation, or maintenance of the ſanctuary, if the profit made were but to the value of a mite it was a treſpaſſe, and this offering muſt be brought, Maimony. And he further ſaith, that theſe treſpaſſes about holy things were accounted to be committed from the time of their ſanctifying, till the ſprinkling of their blood, their burning to aſhes aſhes upon the Altar and thi carrying out of their aſhes to to the place appointed. And if a man dedicated any thing for the reparation of the ſanctuary, as ſtone and timber, &c. or to be offered upon the altar, he might treſpaſſe therein. And therefore a due conſideration muſt be had of this Law, and if the treſpaſs be but about ſtone and timber, or aſhes, it muſt not be eſtimated according to the ſmallneſſe of the thing, wherein, but by the name of the Lord, which it beareth, and which ſanctifieth it. And becauſe Levit. 19. 37. it is ſaid, ye ſhall keep all my ſtatutes and all my judgements to do them, he ſaith by judgements are meant the commandments, the reaſon whereof is known unto us, and by ſtatutes the ordinances of ſacrificings, the reaſon whereof we know not, yet our wiſe men have taught, that for the ſervice of the ſacrifices the world doth continue, and hereby righteous men are made worthy of life in the world to come, wherefore ſtatutes are ſet firſt, as alſo Levit. 18. 3. ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes and my judgements, which if a man doth he ſhall live in them. In which teaching they did darkly ſet forth juſtification not by works of the Law, but by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt typified in the ſacrifices. And it is to be noted touching this Ordinance, that no treſpaſſe about the holy things commited preſumptuouſly was thus to be expiated; for ſuch were to be cut off, or otherwiſe puniſhed by the magiſtrate, but onely the treſpaſſe done in ignorance. Hitherto Maimony; but becauſe in ſpeaking of other treſpaſſes onely four caſes are mentioned in the beginning of the Chapter, it may be demanded, what ſacrifice was to be brought, if a man treſpaſſed, not ſo, but otherwiſe, as the caſes of treſpaſſing muſt needs be many more?

Maimony in Megillah, c.1.

The ſmalleſt treſpaſs againſt God great.

Qu.

Auguſt.

To this Auguſtine anſwereth, that all other caſes, beſides thoſe ſpecified afterwards, come under the ſinne of ignorance, againſt which it is provided, chap.4. the ſacrifice there appointed muſt be brought therefore, if it be the ſin of the Prieſt, Prince, or of one of the common ſort, greater or leſſer, whereas here without difference, but onely in reſpect of abilitie, the ſacrifice of every degree is alike. Touching the holy things of the Lord, about which which the trespasse here spoken of is, we have seen what the Rabbins say, and not much unlike is that of Augustine, saying, it is explained in the next words, what is meant hereby, viz. in these. Augusti. quæst. 10. in Levit.

He shall make amends for the harm which he hath done, and adde the fifth part more and give it to the Priest; for by these words it is plain, that a trespasse about the payment of first fruits or tithes, which were for maintenance of the Priests, is meant, or about any sacrifice vowed unto the Lord, wherein the Priest had a part. Vers. 16.

Lyranus saith also, there were three sorts of things. 1. Holy vessels and instruments. 2. Holy ointment and perfume. 3. Tithes and offerings, of which last, it must needs be meant, and not of the two former. Lyranus.

Here are 3 words as Willet noteth, used in this chapter. 1. חטאת sin, as in the four first verses, wherein no restitution is required. 2. אשם, a trespasse as in this place, wherein restitution is required. 3. מעל signifiing a sin of ignorance sometime, and sometime a voluntary deceit and fraud as chap. 6.2. Junius deriveth it from מעל a clock, because it is an offence committed unawares, quasi obducto pallio. Willet. Iun. analys.

In that a ram must be offered for any trespasse about the holy things, which is more then for another trespasse against a neighbour, Origen noteth well how great the sin of sacriledge is. For the words added, By thy estimation with shekels of silver, the vulgar Latine, which may be bought with two shekels, and R. Levi layeth a ground for this saying, where shekels are spoken of, but no number named, two are to be understood, and these must be shekels of the sanctuary, whereof one is twice so much, as the common shekel, that is 20d. see Exod 30. 13. But Levit. 27. 14. it seemeth, that no certain number of shekels is meant, but as the Priest shall value it. This name did singularly figure out Christ as the ramme caught by the horns in a bush, and sacrificed instead of Isaac, who is like a ramme in that he butteth against sin as it were with his horns. Origen is altogether for the mysticall sense, because it is absurd to understand this, saith he according to the letter, seeing some were so poor, that they were not able to bring a ramme of this price, and therefore he will have nothing else meant hereby, but that the offender must bring an holy and tried faith, for this is the ram without blemish. But if the case be considered, that it is about tithes and sacrifices, it cannot be supposed, but that he which had these to pay, was able to adde a fifth part, and bring a ramme also, if he had negligently deteined any of them. Let us then so look to the mysticall sense, as not to neglect the literall. To shew that Christ was figured out by this ramme, he is said, Esa. 53. to have offered his soul a sacrifice for אשם, trespasses, according to the word here used. Note. Origen. Rab. Levi. Borrhens. Origen.

He shall make amends for the harme which he hath done, and adde the fifth part and give it to the Priest. See the like Law to this, chapter, 22. 14. and chap. 27. 13, 14. Numb. 5. 8. the principall, about which the trespasse was committed, saith Maimony, and the ramme for sacrifice must be brought together, or else the attonement is hindred, but not although the fifth part be not brought then also, but remaineth as a debt to be paid afterwards. To this fifth part Brentius thinketh, that respect was had by the Philistines in offering five golden emrods, and five golden mice, and whereas Zaccheus restored four-fold, and not according to this law, he saith, he went herein by the law of things stolne, Exod. 22. whereas Origen here by the fifth part understandeth five parts of the thing deteined, as if it were injoyned to restore that which was deteined, and as much more, and a fifth part above all this, he was certainly deceived, and so in applying this mystically to the five senses. A fifth part must be put to make amends to the Priest for his losse by his deteining it hitherto from him. And the Priest shall make an attonement for him. All things being done by the trespasser, as is here prescribed, his sin was not yet hereby remitted, but the Priest, Christ Jesus onely cleanseth from all sin. Vers. 16. Maimony in Megnilah. chap. 1. 1 Sam. 6. Brentius. Origen. Pellican.

And

And if a ſoul ſinne and commit any of theſe things againſt the commandement of the Lord, &c. How doth this law agree with the former, ſeeing a ramme onely is here appointed to be brought, but no reſtitution to be made, or fifth part to be added? Junius anſwereth, that this is to be underſtood of offences about holy things, whereby no dammage cometh, and therefore no reſtitution was needfull. But Brentius, and Ainſworth, of offences about the holy things, whereof the party offending is ſtill uncertain, whereas the treſpaſſes before ſpoken of were known to a mans ſelf in the end, and to the like effect Oſiander. But this is againſt reaſon, becauſe if a diſtinction of treſpaſſes about holy things be not admitted, the former Law is imperfect, ſeeing in ſome there is no dammage requiring reſtitution, wherefore that of Junius is beſt. And yet the Rabbins are for the other, when a man hath treſpaſſed ignorantly and never knoweth certainly of it, but is doubtful, calling it therefore אשם תלוי a doubtfull treſpaſſe-offering, whereas they call a ſacrifice brought for a ſin certainly known אשם ודאי a manifeſt treſpaſſe-offering, and of theſe they number five. 1. Lying with a bond-maid, chap. 19. 20. 2. Things taken by violence, chap. 6. 2. 6. 3. Sacrilegious tranſgreſſion, chap. 5. 15. 4. For leproſie, chap. 14. 12 5. The uncleanneſſe of a Nazarite, Numb. 6. 12.

Iunii annot.

Brentius. Ainſworth.

Oſiander.

Maimony, of ignorance, c. 8.

Verſ. 18. Vatablus.

VVith thy eſtimation:] that is, which the Prieſt ſhall think worth the bringing for ſuch a treſpaſſe, for a ramme little or nothing worth muſt never bee brought. For the rites about this ſacrifice, nothing is ſpoken hereof, becauſe they were the ſame with the former, ſee chap. 7. 7.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter one onely caſe more is put, in which a ramme muſt alſo be offered, and reſtitution made, verſ. 1. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. and then he proceedeth more fully to ſet down rules and rites to be uſed about all the preceding oblations ſpoken of from the beginning of this book hitherto; from verſ 8. of this chapter to the end of chap. 7. The caſe added here is,

Verſ. 1, 2. If one lieth unto his neighbour in that which was committed to him to keep, or in fellowſhip, or in a thing taken by violence, &c. and ſweareth falſly, &c. he ſhall reſtore, &c. This caſe cometh in here together with the treſpaſſes about the holy things of the Lord, and accordingly a ramme muſt be offered, and reſtitution made, and a fifth part added, ſaith Heſychius, becauſe of the perjury, whereby it is treſpaſſed againſt the Lord, as is here ſaid, when by a falſ oath any thing is detained from a neighbour, not onely man, but God is injuried. For fellowſhip, in Hebr. it is, In putting of the hand, a phraſe, ſaith Ainſworth, here onely uſed, but by the Cald. it is rendred in the communion of the hand, and by the Septuagint, in communion or fellowſhip; that is in partnerſhip.

Heſychius.

Sol. Iarchi. Ar. Montanus. Vatablus.

Solom. Jarchy expoundeth it of putting money into the hand to occupy, or lending money. Touching a thing loſt, the finder is bound to reſtore it, Deut. 22. 2. and therefore if he doth not, but forſweareth it, he muſt be thus muſcted. It is a ſin falſly to deny any thing, Levit. 19. 11. but the oath added doth aggravate it more, God being now injuried, as well as man. The Rabbins ſay, that in the caſe of having detained any ſuch thing, or any part of the labourers wages, when the offender cometh before the Judge if he confeſſeth it, he payeth onely the principall, if upon oath he denieth it, a fifth part more alſo, as in this place is appointed If a mans father hath treſpaſſed thus, and the thing in queſtion be in his ſons hand after his death, and he upon oath denieth it, he is ſubject to the ſame law, but if it be not, he is onely bound to reſtore according to the worth of the thing, becauſe he took it not away. But if his father confeſſed it before his death, after that he had denied it upon oath, the ſonne muſt pay the fifth Maimonie of robbery and loſt things. chap. 7.

part,

part, the ſonne having it by him confeſſeth it, he payeth it not, neither in any of both theſe caſes is hee bound to bring this offering, Maimony.

Verſ. 5.

He ſhall reſtore it in the principall, Hebr. the head, that is, according to Solom. Jarchi, the thing it ſelf, and becauſe head is ſometime put for begining or firſt, Caskuni noteth, that the meaning is, he ſhould firſt put out of his hand the thing detained, that his ſacrifice may be favourably accepted. The fifth part to be added more, he ſaith, is one part more counted with the four parts of the principall, and ſo is indeed as much as one fourth part, and if that be denied upon oath, a fifth part of that muſt be added more, and ſo as often as the fifth part is denied, till it becometh as ſmall as a mite. And touching the party, to whom reſtitution is to be made, if the man wronged be dead, it muſt be to his heirs, a fifth part being added, and if he hath none heirs, to the Prieſts for the Lord. And if a ſon hath robbed his father that is dead, reſtitution muſt be made to his brethren.

Caskuni.

Maimony of robbery, ch. 2. Numb. 5.7, 8.

In the day of his treſpaſ-offering.] This is the time of making reſtitution, when he bringeth his oblation, and not when he firſt confeſſeth his treſpaſs, ſo likewiſe it is directed, Matth. 5.23. Now it is to be noted, that this reſtitution was not to be made upon conviction, as by the vulgar latine tranſlation is intimated, ſi convicta fuerit, for if a man had ſtoln from another and were convicted of it, he was to reſtore double or four fold, Exod. 22. 49. wherefore the caſe here put is to be underſtood of treſpaſſes, for which men being pricked in conſcience do voluntarily confeſſe them, and ſo there will be no contradiction betwixt this Law, injoyning to bring a fifth part more, onely, and that requiring double or fourfold reſtitution, for that was in the courſe of civill juſtice, there being no ſacrifice brought, this upon a proceeding in the Court of Conſcience onely before a divine Judge, the Prieſt.

Lyranus.

Moreover, in the treſpaſſe here ſpoken of, there muſt needs be ſome negligence or errour, as alſo Numb. 5.6. where the ſame caſe is again handled; for a thing committed to a mans truſt might be forgotten and ſo denied, and a thing might be violently taken away, he that took it, ſuppoſing at that time that he had moſt right unto it, and therefore there was no reaſon, that the mulct ſhould be ſo great, as for a treſpaſſe in ſtealing, &c. wilfully committed. And to this effect Junius Touching things kept from the right owners, although the ſin is not remitted, unleſſe the thing ſtoln or deteined be reſtored, as Saint Auguſtine ſpeaketh, yet this muſt both be received with a qualification in reſpect of thoſe that have not wherewithall to make reſtitution, according to that which the ſame father addeth, ſaying, another mans goods when they can be reſtored, but are not, it is not truely repented by him that hath ſinned herein, but repentance is feigned; and alſo the forgiveneſſe muſt not be placed in the reſtitution, but in true faith apprehending forgiveneſſe of ſins by the bloud of Chriſt, and moving in penitency to reſtitution.

Iunii annot.
Aug Epiſt. 54.
Non remittit peccatum, niſi reſtituatur ablatum.
Si res aliena, propter quam peccatum eſt, cum reddi poſſit non redditur, non agitur pœnitentia, ſed fingitur.

The thing committed to keep is myſtically, ſaith Origen, every mans ſoul, and the ſociety here ſpoken of is our fellowſhip with God, the ſoul muſt be kept and reſtored, as it was at the firſt given, and in our fellowſhip with God, wee muſt not offend by having fellowſhip with the unfruitfull workes of darkeneſſe, and if wee have done, we muſt repent, and ſo reſtore the thing detained. And by the fifth part, Heſychius will have the tongue, the organ of the fifth ſenſe underſtood, but theſe things are ſtreined.

Origen.

Heſychius.

This is the law of the burnt-offering, it is the burnt-offering, becauſe of the burning of the fire all night, the Prieſt ſhall put on his linnen garment, &c.] Junius here beginneth the chapter, becauſe it is here entred upon a new argument, which although it may be accounted fit in this reſpect, yet becauſe another diſtinction hath bin alwayes uſed amongſt Chriſtians, it is unfit, as tending to confound the reader in the quotations of places. Amongst the Hebrews here beginneth the 25. section of the Law. The burnt-offering here spoken of, which had the name from burning, in Hebrew called עולה ascending, because the fume of it ascended, and so it was wasted in the fire, is first and chiefly to be understood to be the continuall morning and evening sacrifice, the fat of the sacrifices, the bloud whereof was sprinkled in the day; Maimony saith was burnt in the night, till the ascending of the pillar in the morning. The beast must be killed and the bloud sprinkled in the day, or else it was unlawfull, but the pieces might lie burning all night, yet this was not purposely deferred, that it might be burning so long, for our wise men have taught that they should not be burning but till midnight, that they might make all the hast hereabout that they could.

Verſ. 8,9, 10.

Exod. 29. 38.

Maimony of offering sacrif. ch. 4.

Quest. Lyranus. If it be demanded, whether it burned not all the day but in the night onely. because the day is not spoken of? Lyranus answereth, that the morning sacrifice burnt all the day, and the evening sacrifice all the night, and that of the day is not expressed for brevities sake but understood, the day morning sacrifice was the first offered every morning, and the evening sacrifice the last every evening, neither was it lawfull to offer any other after it, except that of the Passeover, and none might be offered before that of the morning, and other sacrifices brought were laid upon that; whereas the charge here given to Aaron and his sons somemake a question, whether this sacrifice were to be provided at their charge? but that it was not, but at the common charge was shewed before, Exod. 29. 38.

That which is here delivered is for a supply of that, which was before wanntng, chap. 1. where the burning of the holocaust is spoken of, but order is not taken for the continuall burning of the fire never to goe out, wherefore this is here injoyned, and mote plainly, vers. 12, 13. of the reason, why the fire should alwayes be burning. somewhat hath bin said before, chap. 1. 8. and Exod. 29. 38. Fire setteth forth afflictions, which are alwayes the portion of Christ and of his Church, or the perpetuall residence of Christ, who is the true light in his Church, or else true doctrine, the light of which it is the ministers duty alwaies to preserve in the Church, or the fire of charity, which should alwaies burn upon the altar of the heart. In a corrupt imitation hereof the Romans appointed the vestall Virgins to keep the fire burning alwayes in their temple. Hesychius applieth this fire to the fire of the holy Ghost, which we must never extinguish. 1 Thess. 5. Quench not the spirit, and specially in the night must this fire be burning in us, then more wicked others are, we being the more studious of righteousnes.

Brentius. Borrheus. Osiander. Gregory.

Vers. 10. Touching the ashes made of this fire, it is here ordained also what should be done with them, the Priest putting on his linnen garment and his linnen breeches must gather them up and put them beside the altar, then putting these off, and putting on other garments he must carry them out of the camp to a clean place.

Vers. 11. Cazkuni. Touching the Priests linnen garment, Cazkuni saith, that it was the coat, the miter and the girdle spoken of as one, because one was never put on without the other, and all these were linnen. This gathering up of the ashes saith Maimony, was the first service of the Priest every day, and it was done about break of day, at festivall times, the third part of the night upon the reconciliation day at midnight, the Priest that took them up first washing himself and then putting on these garments. For the side of the altar, where the ashes were to be laid first, it was the east-side, which was furthest from the Sanctuary, Levit. 1. 16.

Maimonis of the dayly sacrifice. ch. 2.

And the reason, why he must put these garments off again, and put ou other garments to carry the ashes out, was because those holy garments might not be used, but in the sanctuary, as may be gathered, Exod. 28. and is expresly taught, Ezech. 44. 19. yet Maimony saith, that even the garments,

Maimony in Tamedin.

ments, in which he went out with the aſhes, were holy garments, but leſſer then the other put off, but herein I do not ſubſcribe unto him, but hold rather with Toſtatus and others, that they were common garments, becauſe no mention is made any where of other holy garments made for the Prieſts. For the place where the aſhes muſt be laid, he alſo ſaith, that it muſt be where the winde did not blow ſtrongly to ſcatter them, neither might ſtrangers gather them up, or any man make uſe or profit of them. Of the place it is ſaid here, that it muſt be a clean place, not where any dung, or filth was laid, and this was for reverence towards them being holy relicks of the ſacrifices. Contrariwiſe the ſtones and duſt of a leprous houſe muſt be poured out in an unclean place, Chapter 14. verſ.40.

For the myſtery of carrying theſe aſhes out of the Camp, ſee Chap.4. 12. but Borrheus will have the raiſing of our dead bodies turned into aſhes, ſet forth hereby, and the Ordin. Gloſſe, the conſummation and perfection of our good works preſented by Chriſt our High Prieſt unto God after death. Heſychius will have by the Prieſt taking away the aſhes every good Chriſtian figured out, for he muſt put upon him the coat of juſtice, and the breeches of chaſtity, & becauſe the removing of the aſhes was, that other aſhes might be made and come in their place, he will have hereby a daily proceeding in vertue ſet forth, and that we muſt not content our ſelves with that, which we have already done well. And for the garments put off and others put on, he ſaith, that they were not divers, the one linnen, and the other wollen, but of the ſame kinde, linnen, to ſhew, that juſtice, and other vertues are to be put on, not onely at one time, but time after time, and ſo the aſhes ſetting forth our good deeds are carryed out of the Camp, that is, ſent before out of this into another world, which is a moſt clean and pure place, being there alwaies had in remembrance before God, who will reward us accordingly.

Borrheus. Gloſ. ordin. Heſychius.

That of Origen, applying this change of garments to the Apoſtles ſpeaking to the perfect in one kinde, and to the people in another, may alſo haply have uſe here, if by the perfect we underſtand a more learned audience, and by the people a ſimple. Or the putting off of theſe garments and putting on other may, as Willet hath it, figure out two ſorts of garments, the myſtical under the Law now to be left off, and the true garment Chriſt Jeſus, to be put on.

Origen. Willet.

And this is the Law of the meat-offering, &c.] This Law is before ſet down, Chap.2. but onely that it not there ſhewed, what order ſhall be obſerved by Aaron and his ſons in eating that, which was their part thereof, wherefore the ſame is here again repeated, that rules for the eating of it might be added. Verſ.14.

And here again the firſt againſt eating it with leaven hath a ground there. verſ.11. no meat-offering ſhall be made with leaven: here it is accordingly injoyned, it ſhall be eaten in the holy place with unleavened bread, in the Court of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, the place alſo where it muſt be eaten, being aſſigned; why leaven eating is forbidden, ſee before, Chap.2.11. Rules about the Prieſts of the meat-offering. Verſ.16. Rule 1.

The ſecond rule is, all the males among the children of Aaron ſhall eat of it, it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever, &c.] Theſe ſacrifices are called moſt holy, as alſo the ſin-offerings and treſpaſſe-offerings, and therefore they muſt be eaten by the males onely and in the holy place, but for ſome other offerings, there is more liberty given, ſee this diſtinction before Chapter 1. Rule 2.

The third rule is, every one that toucheth them, ſhall be holy] The Sept. Whoſoever toucheth them ſhall be ſanctified, and this, ſaith Cazkuni, is the meaning, he ſhall purifie himſelf, before he touch them, or any veſſel or thing Rule 3. Verſ. 18.

thing to be uſed about them, ſhall firſt be ſanctified, ſee the like v. 27. and Exod. 29. 37.

Origen. The males onely ſaith Origen, muſt eat of theſe ſacrifices, not the females, to intimate, that none, who are inconſtant, and weak, and divers in their opinions in matter of faith, like women, can feed upon the holy food of the word of God, or, as Heſychius hath it, can argue or diſcourſe touching God, and the deep points of Theology, and as theſe ſacrifices muſt be eaten onely in the holy place, ſo exerciſes of Theology muſt be kept onely in the Church, unleſſe as Nymphas Coloſ. 4. a man maketh his houſe a Church by being ſequeſtred from worldly affairs to divine.

Iunii annot. Touching this, whoſoever toucheth them ſhall be holy] Junius ſaith, that this is meant of things and not of perſons, whatſoever toucheth them, as is alſo further explained, verſ. 27. ſo likewiſe Genevenſis. But I rather ſubſcribe to the former expoſition of Cazkuni, becauſe this is in the nature of a reaſon, why Aarons ſons only ſhould eat theſe, and in the holy, viz. becauſe the Lords will is, that none but the ſanctified ſhould touch them, and the Law, verſ. 27. is a divers Law from this. Heſychius. Heſychius aſcribing the ſanctifying to the touching, ſaith that myſtically hereby is meant, if any do but touch the deep things of God, in diſputing thereabout, this ſufficeth to ſanctifie them, as to touch the fire, to be warmed, but as he that goeth too near is burned, ſo he that preſumeth to diſpute too highly of God thinking to become more glorious falleth into blaſphemy, whilſt he is not alſo to pry into the depth of divine things.

Verſ. 20. Qu. 1. This is the offering of Aaron and his ſons, which they ſhall offer in the day, when he is anointed, &c.] Here it is firſt to be inquired, whether this meat-offering of the Prieſt were to be offered day after day perpetually, as the continual burnt-offering, becauſe it is ſaid, perpetual, half of it in the morning, and halfe in the evening, or whether once onely at the time of his anointing, becauſe it is ſaid, in the day of his annointing? Cazkuni. Cazkuni ſaith, that the High Prieſt was here injoyned to offer this offering dayly from the time of his conſecration, as long as he lived, and ſo likewiſe the High Prieſt, that ſucceeded him from age to age, and whereas it is ſaid, in the day of his anointing, he rendreth it, from the day, &c. and Exod. 2. 23. the ſame word is uſed for after. Maimony of ſacrif. offer. ch. 12. Sect. 1. Maimony alſo reckoning up the divers ſorts of meat-offerings ſaith, the High Prieſt brought his mincah from day to day perpetually, and the other Prieſts but once, viz. at the time of their conſecration onely, as Levit. 8. 26. thus alſo Cajetan. Lyran. Junius. Vatablus. But Lyranus, Junius, Vatablus, and ſome others hold, that it was onely once to be offered by him, viz. the eight day of his conſecration, when in ſeven dayes it was finiſhed, ſo that he was now made fit to offer, as Chapter 8. and it is called perpetual, becauſe whoſever was High Prieſt, at his firſt initiation into this office muſt perpetually bring this offering. Willet ſeeketh to ſtrengthen this by divers reaſons, 1. Becauſe it is ſaid, in the day, not from the day, 2. Becauſe there was another continual ſacrifice with a meat-offering appointed to be offered dayly, Exod. 29. ſo that one brought by the Prieſt alſo would have been ſuperfluous, &c.

But for the firſt of theſe reaſons, it hath been already taken away, and for the other, it is of no force, ſeeing there were ſacrifices for particular perſons ſome or other daily brought, beſides the daily burnt-offering, and yet not ſuperfluous. And indeed it ſtandeth with reaſon, that the High-Prieſt being made equal to the Congregation in his ſin-offering, Chap. 4. ſhould in ſome ſort hold a proportion therewith in a daily meat-offering for himſelf, as one was daily offered for it morning and evening.

Secondly, another queſtion here ariſeth, how it is ſaid, Aaron and his ſons ſhall offer this offering, becauſe it was the offering of the High Prieſt onely?

onely? But it is answered, that he offered, and they ministred unto him offering, which also implyeth a daily offering, because if it had been but once onely, his sons should not have needed to help about it, the offering being so small, the tenth part of an Ephah, or bushel, and that divided into two. Or by saying, Aaron and his sons shall offer it, he meaneth not, that together they shall offer this sacrifice, but Aaron now, and when another being his son should come to be High Priest after him, and another after him, every one should successively offer this sacrifice, as is further made plain, Vers. 22. Lyranus.

In a pan it shall be made with oyland when it is baken, thou shalt bring it in, & offer the baken pieces, &c.] The word translated pan, signifieth a flat pan, or plate, as was shewed Levit. 2. 5. The manner was thus; the High Priest brought with him a tenth deal of fine flowre, and sanctified it, then dividing it into two parts he made of each part 6. cakes, mingled the flower with 3. logs of oyl, taking for this half the oyl, and the other half to fry them withal, the cakes being baken he divided each of them into two, and so offered the one half in the morning, and the other in the evening, doubling and breaking every half over again, and putting frankincense upon it, and the cakes thus broken were the baken pieces here spoken of, that must be offered upon the Altar. Vers. 21. Maimony of sacrif. ch. 13.

The High Priest with these his fryed cakes, did most aptly set forth Christ, who was daily fryed with afflictions for our sins. Pellican Expoundeth it of his fire of charity, when he hanged upon the crosse; and Gregory, of the zeal of ministers. But it is best referred to Christ crying in the heat of his Passions, so also Hesychius, who by the Ephah containing three measures understandeth the blessed Trinity, and by the part brought to be offered, Christ his humane nature, suffering partly in the morning, when he was in the hall of Caiaphas, and partly in the evening, when he hung upon the Crosse, from the sixth to the ninth hour, and by the parts, into which these cakes were broken, he understandeth the Passions of Christ, coming on by parts. Ainsworth. Pellican. Gregor. Hesychius.

The conclusion of this Law is, it shall be wholly burnt, for every meat-offering for the Priest shall be wholly burnt, it shall not be eaten.] Of the reason why the Priests offering must be all burnt, but much of the offerings of the people was to be eaten, I have spoke before, viz. because although he figuratively bare the sins of the people, yet there was none to bear his sins, neither could he bear his own, Ch. 4. Vers. 23.

This is the Law of the sin-offering, in the place where the burnt-offering is killed, shall it be killed before the Lord, the Priest that effereth it for sin shall eat it, &c.] Here because in treating of the sin-offering it was not said before where it should be killed, he appointeth now the place, viz. where the burnt-offering was killed, that is, on the north side of the Altar, Chapter 1. 11. but this, say the Hebrews was not full north in the horn thereof, by which it was killed, but north-west, and so did most aptly figure out Christs Passion on mount Calvary lying on the north-west side from Jerusalem. Vers. 25, 26.

Touching the Priests eating of this sacrifice, this was, that he might bear the sin of the offerer, Chap. 10. 17. that so he that brought it for his sin might be set free, the burthen thereof being laid upon another, viz. the Priest, a figure of Christ, who bare the iniquity of us all. But verse 30. there is a general rule against the eating of any sacrifice, the blood whereof was brought within the Tabernacle, such as were the sacrifices of the Priest, and of the congregation, Ch. 4. Esa 53. Vers. 30.

Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy, and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash it in the holy place, but the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden, shall be broken, &c.] Having said verse 25. of the sin-offering, that it is most holy, for which cause the Priests onely Vers. 27, 28.

onely muſt eat it, and that in the holy place, now he appointeth, that if any thing be ſprinkled with the blood thereof, it ſhould be waſhed, or ſcoured, or rinſed, or broken, if it were of earth, that is, any drop of blood of this ſacrifice being ſprinkled accidentally upon any thing, to ſhew, ſaith Ainſworth, that they, who have any part in the blood of Chriſt, ſhould be ſanctified to poſſeſſe their veſſels in holineſſe. And yet he ſaith, theſe Ordinances ſhaddowed out the contagion of ſin, from all ſtain or ſpot of which we muſt carefully waſh and cleanſe our ſelves by true faith, and repentance. It ſeemeth to me, that the waſhing away of the pollution of ſinne is ſet forth hereby. becauſe that, which toucheth the the fleſh of this ſacrifice, is holy, and by the like reaſon, that which is ſprinkled with the blood thereof; and if holy, then not polluted, and ſo the waſhing and ſcouring it not appointed to get off any pollution, but rather the holineſſe of this fleſh or bloud, that holy veſſels of whatſoever, or holy garments ſuch as all they wear, which were thus ſprinkled, might not afterwards having holineſſe upon them be uſed to a prophane or common uſe; and becauſe an earthen veſſell could not endure ſuch ſcouring, neither was it worth the pains, it muſt be broken to prevent further uſe of it.

Ainſworth.

The Rabbins put a difference between ſprinkling of bloud and putting it into, or upon any thing, for in this caſe waſhing is not required, becauſe it is ſaid, When the bloud is ſprinkled, for they go upon the letter of this clauſe. And they make a diſtinction hetwixt things apt to receive uncleanneſſe or not, ſaying, that the one ſort muſt be waſhed, but not the other. They alſo ſay, that ſcouring of the brazen veſſell here ſpoken of is with hot water, and the rinſing with cold, and for waſhing of a garment ſprinkled with bloud, that onely the bloudy place muſt be waſhed, and that ſo clean, that none appearance of bloud may remain upon it.

Maimonie of ſacrifice offering, chap. 8.

For the myſtery, Heſychius ſaith agreeably to that which I ſpake before, ſprinkling with bloud is with the Baptiſme of repentance, wherewith he that is ſprinkled is ſanctified, the garment ſprinkled is the fleſh for the fleſh is the garment of the inner man, this he ſaith, muſt be waſhed in the holy place, not becauſe it is polluted by ſprinkling, for no ſuch thing is here ſaid, but this very ſprinkling is called waſhing in the holy place, that is, the Church. For he that is ſprinkled with the Baptiſmes of pagans is not waſhed with the Spirit, becauſe he is not waſhed in the Church, where onely the ſpirit of ſanctification is recevied. It is meant then, that he who is ſprinkled with repentance ſhould be baptized in Chriſts Church, and ſo be perfectly ſanctified. And touching the veſſels earthen and braſen, he ſaih, whereas the one, wherein any of the fleſh was ſodden muſt be broken; hereby was ſhewed, that they who are but as earthen baſe veſſels in Gods houſe: (for of divers ſuch veſſels it is ſpoken, 2 Tim. 2.) ſhall be deſtroyed, that is, ſuch as becauſe they have bin ſprinkled in Baptiſme, think that they ſhall be ſaved, although they live in ſin ſhall periſh. But they that are as braſen veſſels, that is, ſtrongly ſet to flie ſin, when they fall into any pollution of ſin, ſhall be cleanſed again by the tears of repentance, and ſo come to their former eſtate. To this effect in many more words Heſychius: The ordinary gloſſe by the garments ſprinkled underſtand carnall men, by the earthen veſſels, the weak who muſt be broken with the terrour of judgements, by the braſen the ſtrong, that fall not into ſin, who are to be ſcoured with the heat of the ſpirit. But this I think is altogether beſides the purpoſe, and that of Heſychius beſt, or elſe we may myſtically apply it thus: Chriſt is the ſin-offering. and who ſo toucheth him or is ſprinkled with his bloud by faith is ſanctified, and yet if he be as an earthen veſſell, baſe and wicked in his life and worldly, he ſhall notwithſtanding his faith in Chriſt periſh; but if as a garment, that is, ſuch as through infirmity is defiled, but cleanſeth himſelf eftſoons by repentance, or as a braſen veſſell ſtrong by grace to ſcoure and rinſe off ſin by the tears of repentance, waſhing in

Heſychius.

Gloſſ. ordin.

Baptiſme

Baptiſme belongeth unto them, and they have the benefit thereof.

No ſin-offering whereof the bloud is brought into the Sanctuary ſhall be eaten, &c.] This is put for an exception to the law of eating the ſin-offerings, all others ſhould be eaten but not theſe, and ſuch were the ſin-offerings of the Prieſt and of the whole congregation, chap. 4. where alſo the myſtery of this hath bin touched upon. Theſe ſacrifices did moſt properly figure out Chriſt, whoſe bloud was brought into the Sanctuary of Heaven, when after his paſſions he roſe again and aſcended up thither, and this prohibiting of the Prieſts to eat of them figured out, that they which ſtill cleave to the Araonicall Prieſthood, and to the old rites thereof have no part in Chriſt, as is intimated, Heb. 13. 10. We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat, that ſerve the tabernacle. Which is plainly an alluſion to this ordinance. Touching the burning of the fleſh of theſe ſacrifices here ſpoken of, this was without the camp it appearing more manifeſtly hereby, that this was done to figure out Chriſt, who ſuffered without the gates of the city, Heb. 13. 12.

Verſ. 30

Heb. 9. 11. 24.

Levit. 4.

CHAP. VII.

HAving done with ſetting down rules about the ſin-offering, here he giveth rules about the treſpaſſe-offering, of which chap. 5. This is moſt holy, muſt be killed in the ſame place, and the bloud ſprinkled about the altar, and as much of it is allowed to the Prieſts, and the eating of this is reſtrained to the males as the ſin-offering. For theſe words, this is the law of the treſpaſſe-offering, the Septuagint have it, This is the Law of the rams offering of repentance. And accordingly both Heſychius and Brentius, and others underſtand it of the offering; for that treſpaſſe which hath relation to the Lord, chap. 5. 15. 17. chap. 6. 4. viz. the ramme; and Heſychius noteth more particularly, becauſe in ſetting down rules for the ſin-offering, chap. 6. nothing is ſaid touching the manner, but here it is ſaid, The bloud ſhall be ſprinkled about the altar, and the fat, the rump, the fat concerning the inwards, the two kidneyes, and the fat upon them, &c. the Prieſt ſhall burn upon the altar; that it is a greater offence that is done againſt the Lord, then another ordinary ſin, and with more ado expiated, and ſo he expoundeth myſtically all theſe parts offered. But I cannot ſee, why this treſpaſſe offering ſhould more ſpecially be held that of the ramme, ſeeing that all other treſpaſſe-offerings ſhall be let go without their canons as doubtleſſe they are not, but this is a rule for them all, if they be of beaſts that have ſuch parts as are here ſpoken of, but if not, or of birds, recourſe muſt be had to the law touching them, chap. 5. 7. And whereas the things to be burnt upon the altar are here particularly named, but not in ſpeaking of the ſin-offering chap. 6. It was paſſed over there as being unneceſſary to be repeated, ſeeing. chap. 5. all the fat of the ſin-offering is appointed to be offered, as in the peace-offerings, in ſpeaking of which all theſe particulars are alſo named, chap. 3. where the myſteries of theſe things are ſet forth, but touching the treſpaſſe-offering, chapter 5. no particular order had bin yet taken, and therefore it was neceſſary to inſert it here.

Verſ. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

Heſychius.

The Prieſt ſhall have the skinne of every mans burnt-offering,] Touching the skins of burnt-offerings, Maimony ſaith, thoſe here ſpoken of are to be underſtood of the skins of the moſt holy things, for the skins of the light holy things were not the Prieſts, but the owners, nor the skins of the beaſts, whoſe fleſh was not offered in ſacrifice, nor the skins of the moſt holy things, to which any pollution happened before they were flayed. Such skins as they had, the men of cuſtody which ſerved in their courſes divided amongſt them from Sabbath day evening to Sabbath day evening. If any offering were brought for the maintenance of the Sanctuary, and if any goods goods were sanctified having males amongst them, the Priests had not their skins, but they were sold for the reparation of the Sanctuary. But the skins being allotted to the Priest, Hesychius understandeth bothwo rldly goods and patience, because Job 2.4. It is said, Skinne for skinne, meaning riches, which as a skin did then compasse Job about, and patience incompassing him, when he had lost all: for men ought to give of their worldly goods to the intelligible Priest, and for his sake patiently bear any sufferings, that is, for Christs cause.

Verſ. 8.

Maimony trear. of ſacrifice, ch. 5 ſect. 19. 20. Of the moſt holy and the lighter holy things, ſee before, chap. 1. verſ. 2.

Hesychius.

Brentius.

Brentius saith, that a speciall provision was here made that the Priest should have the skin, both to shew that he taketh care for the payment of all even least duties to his Priests, and also that his providence to such mean things, is much more extended to the bodies of men, his servants which are of far more worth before him, then the skins of sheep and oxen.

Ainsworth.

Ainsworth will have the skins here, and for the covering of the tabernacle, and those skins put upon Jacobs hands to signifie Christs righteousnesse wherewith we are covered by faith; but these skins are the Priests, that is, Christs, not ours. I prefer that of Brentius, God will see that his ministers shall not be abridged of their least due.

Vers.9. Vers.10. And all the meat-offering baked in the oven, and fried in the pan, &c. 10. And every meat-offering mingled with oyle and dry shall the sonnes of Aaron have one as much as another. Touching the divers wayes of preparing the meat-offerings enough hath bin said already: but here because it is spoken of some mingled with oyl, and some dry, the question is, what be the dry meat-offerings?

Iunii Annot.

Glos. Ordin.

Junius answereth, that they were of flowre without any liquid thing, as oyl, or wine, or incense, such as the meat-offering for sinne described, chap. 5.11. so likewise Genenensis. The ordinary glosse saith, that by the meat-offering with oyl, the offering of the rich is understood, by the dry, the offering of the poore, but this is not so full, whereas it is said of the meat-offering baked, &c. vers. 9. that it shall be the Priests, that offereth it, this clause saith Maimony, is added to shew, that if any Priest by reason of any uncleannesse is unmeet to serve at the time of offering, he must have no part in that offering, although he purified himself in the evening; and for the matter of parting, it was for those that served the same day, one of them had as much as another. A childe of the Priests had no part, nor a woman, although they might eat of some of the same sacrifices, but any of the sons of Aaron although he were blemished, had his part, chap.21.22, And amongst those that parted, the high-Priest was not counted, but took what he pleased thereof, so Maimony. But it seemeth rather, that there was a distinction of the meat-offerings, those for sin being the Priests only, that offered them, as v.7. but the rest being divided, so Pellican, Vatablus and Cajetan. Rab. Solom. and Lyranus determin it otherwise thus, each Priest had his day to offer in, and then the sacrifices of that day belonged to him onely, and his family. Touching the distinguishing of the Priests into courses. each one attending in his course, see 1 Chron.24. But for one upon his day, week or moneth, then to take all seemeth to be against this law of equall division, because sometimes more sacrifices might be made, and sometimes fewer. It is to be held therefore rather, that an Arithmeticall division was made from time to time according to the number of their families.

Maimonie treat. of sacrifice, chap.10. sect.14.

Pellican. Vatablus Caietan. R. Solom. Lyranus.

Brentius.

Mystically by the Priests thus sharing in the sacrifices, the faithfull who are Priests unto God, are set forth, each one having part alike in Christ, for his salvation, and none being suffered for want to perish.

Vers. 11. 12, 13. And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, if it be for a thanksgiving, he shall offer unleavened cakes, &c. vers. 13. besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering unleavened bread, &c. Having set forth the sacrifices of peace-offerings, chap.3. now because something more was to be supplied touching ing them, he speaketh of them again, distinguishing them into two sorts 1. For thanksgiving called תודה. 2. For a vow, v.16. called נדר or נדבה of a vow or voluntarie. For the first, the things supplied here, are. 1. That a meat-offering should alwayes be added to a peace-offering, and that of unleavened cakes, of which see chap. 2. 2. Besides the leavened cakes, unleavened bread must also be brought, for the reason hereof see before, chap. 2. 11. 3. All the flesh of the peace-offerings must be eaten the same day, and none of it left till the morning; and the same rule saith Sol. Jarchi, was to be followed in eating the cakes and bread. For the reason why it must be eaten the same day, the like is appointed for the paschall lamb, Exod. 12.10. hereby was intimated, thar we must not delay, but make hast to feed upon Christ by faith, to keep Gods commandments, and to give him praise for his benefits, Psalm 119.60. Psalm. 95.7,8. Heb. 3.12,13, 15. so Ainsworth. And Theodoret addeth, this hast was made, that they might be forced to give part to the poore.

ing

Vers. 15. Sol. Jarchi For burning the remainder, see Exod. 12. and Exod. 29. 34. Ainsworth. Theodor.

But what is meant by saying, of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for an heave-offering to the Lord, and it shall be the priests? To this Lyranus answereth, that one of every kind before mentioned is meant, which the priest had, and the offerers the rest, so likewise Cajetan and Ainsworth. But Origen and Vatablus are for one only out of all. But forsomuch, as the breads brought were of divers kinds, it is more probable, that one of each kind must be offered, or else to what purpose were they brought of divers kinds, if three were kept back and only one presented before the Lord, and so it would be doubtful of which kind one must be taken? Besides the words will bear this construction, one out of the whole oblation, that is, one of the cakes, wafers, fryed cakes and loaves, of each sort one, or else it is not one out of the whole oblation.

Vers. 14. Lyranus.

Origen. Vatablus.

But if his sacrifice be a vow, or voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day and the morrow, but the remainder of the flesh the third day shall be burnt with fire.] Because a disjunction is here made, vow or voluntary offering, it is collected by some, that there were two sorts of peace-offerings, besides the offering for thanksgiving, which was a third. That of thanksgiving was for some benefit received, the votive for the performance of a vow, and the voluntary merely out of devotion, for that these two last were different kinds, appeareth both by the divers appellations, and by the disjunctive particle, or; Thus also the Heb. Can. There is this difference betwixt a vow and a voluntary offering, that which is vowed, must be performed, although it be lost or stoln, for the vower is bound still, till he hath brought another like unto it; but if voluntarily he hath promised an offering, and it be lost or stoln, he is not bound to mak it good. Again, a man is said then to have vowed, when he hath said, Loe, upon me be a burnt-offering, or a meat-offering; or the price of this beast be upon me for a burnt-offering or meat-offering: but he that saith, the price of his beast, or this beast be a burnt-offering, &c. maketh a voluntary offering. But they say, that he who voweth, or voluntarily promiseth, is not bound, unlesse his mouth & heart accord; as if he intendeth to say, upon me be a burnt-offering and saith a peace-offering, this is nothing. Both for vows and volũtaries it is not necessary, that a man pronounce ought with his mouth, for if he hath fully determined it in his heart, although he saith nothing, he is indebted. To vow also an offering for sin or trespas is nothing, because he is bound to bring this. Lyranus and Borrheus, that an offering of thanksgiving is for a benefit obtained; but for a benefit desired, a voluntary offering, or a vow, thus making these two all one. Cajetan differing from all, saith, that these two last indeed are two kinds, but the offering of thanksgiving is to be referred to one of them. But the divers order set down for the eating of the flesh of these sacrifices in two dayes, whereas the other must be all eaten the same day, sheweth, that it was a divers kind of sacrifice from these. I rest in the treble disjunction before spoken of.

Vers. 16,17.

Iunius.

Maimony of sacrif. ch. 14: sect. 1, 5.

Lyranus. Borrheus. Cajetan.

Qu. But why might the fleſh of theſe ſacrifices be eaten the ſame day, or the next day, and if any remained, till the third day, be burnt with fire, but Lyranus. that of thankſgiving muſt all be eaten the ſame day? Lyranus anſwereth, becauſe a man is more bound to ſerve and praiſe God for a benefit received, then for one hoped for, and therefore he muſt not ſo long in ſpending the ſacrifice brought for praiſe, but eat and impart it all, to ſuch as need, the ſame day.

Brentius. Brentius taking theſe dayes for feſtival times, wherein men eat and drink together more liberally, ſaith, that they were injoyned to ſpend no more time, but one day or two at the moſt in his ſervice, leaſt if they had been unlimitted, their holy feaſting ſhould by continuing more dayes have been turned into licentiouſneſſe and exceſſe. But this is onely a reaſon in general for a day or two, but not of the difference betwixt the time of the one feaſt, and of the other.

Heſychius. Heſychius holding, as was ſaid before, that Cajetan doth, that the voluntary ſacrifice, was of the ſame kinde with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving, laboureth to prove, that there is no difference about the time of ſpending the one and the other, becauſe to day and to morrow ſignifie both alike, the ſhort time of this life, wherein we muſt feed, that is, work what may avail for our ſalvation, for when the third day cometh, there will be no time of working, but of deſtruction by fire to ſuch as have not wrought. And upon this he inſiſteth with many more words, and allegations, but in vain, becauſe it is abſurd to go about to prove a thing limitted to a day, and for which there is liberty two dayes, all one. If I may give my conjecture, I think, that this diſtinction of time is made, becauſe men did more often receive benefits from the Lord, for which they were to bring the ſacrifice of praiſe, but more ſeldom tyed themſelves by vow or promiſe, to bring a ſacrifice, and therefore, leaſt too many dayes ſhould be ſpent in in the year about a duty ſo obvious, there was but one day only allowed for that, and two for this.

The myſtery. For the myſtery, I aſſent unto Heſychius, Brentius, and others that Chriſts Reſurrection upon the third day, was here pointed at, becauſe he ſaid, I walk to day, and to morrow, and the third day I ſhall be perfected, and the end of the world, that ſhal be by fire, after the ſhort time of this world, for what remained to the third day muſt be burnt with fire, becauſe the time of this world is but two dayes as it were, one from the creation to Chriſt, the other from Chriſts incarnation to the conſummation. All muſt be conſumed in a day or two, that is, they ſhould continue to offer carnal ſacrifices under the old Teſtament, but Chriſt the Redeemer being come, there muſt be none more offered, if there be, God will judge it, when he ſhall come in flaming fire. And we muſt feed our ſouls with Chriſt the bread of life and his holy word a day or two, that is, whilſt we have time in this life, for if it be neglected, there will be no ſpiritual food to be gotten hereafter, as the fooliſh Virgins having neglected to get oyl into their lamps, could not after the Bride-grooms coming, get any to light them into the marriage-chamber, but were for ever ſhut out. There may alſo a civil reaſon be rendred, why the fleſh muſt be all eaten in a day or two at the moſt, becauſe in thoſe hot parts it would not well be kept any longer at ſome times from putrifying, ſo Philo Judeus.

Philo.

Verſ. 18. And if any of the fleſh of his ſacrifice of peace-offering be eaten on the third day, it ſhall not be accepted, neither ſhall it be imputed to him, that offereth it, &c.] Here are two penalties upon him that burneth not the remainder Vatablus. of this fleſh upon the third day, to prevent the eating of it. It ſhall not be accepted, or imputed, but if it were an offering upon a vow, he is bound to offer again, if voluntary, it is but loſt labour. 2. It ſhall be an abomination, Heb. Pigul, which word is uſed onely here, and Levit. 19.7.

Eſa.

Esa.65.5.Ezec.4.14. and not in any other place,Aquila rendreth it ἀποβλητον a thing to be rejected, which word is also used, 1 Tim.4.4. And because he hath committed abomination, he shall bear his iniquity, that is, whosoever eateth of it, the offerer shall bear this, although he himself eat not upon the third day, because through his negligence it was not burnt, as is commanded, to prevent the eating thereof. What it is for a man to bear his iniquity, is further expressed, Levit.19.8 viz. to be cut off, so in Talmud Babyl. If one hath but a purpose then to eat thereof, but as much as anOlive,he shall be cut off,and Maimony saith the like of eating so much as an Olive thereof groundging upon Levit.19.8. But touching the purpose of eating at that time he setteth forth most fond things,saying the purpose of eating, polluteth onely, if it be either in the killing, receiving of the blood, carrying it to the Altar, or in the time of sprinkling it upon the Altar, but not, if such a purpose be in the time of flaying, cutting it in pieces, &c. and he expoundeth the purpose, not of the Offerer but of the Priest. Moreover he addeth, that the purpose of offering it by a wrong name also polluteth it, as by the name of a burnt-offering, when it is a peace-offering, or the purpose to burn or eat it out of the holy place. Yea he proceedeth further, and plainly contradicteth the Lord, saying, that the offering being made in due manner, and the blood duly sprinkled, it is accepted, although some of the flesh remaineth upon the third day, because Levit.17.11. it is said, the blood upon the Altar maketh attonement for the soul. But the Lord saith expressely here, it shall not be accepted, if ought of it be eaten upon the third day.

Caietan.

Talmud. Babyl. Maimonie

And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing, shall not be eaten, it shall be burnt with fire, and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat of it.] Here besides the uncleanness before spoken of,which is by keeping it till the third day,there is another uncleanesse also set forth, by touching any unclean thing, and and a third in the eater, if he had any uncleanesse upon him, vers. 20. or had touched any uncleaneſse, vers. 21. for in either of these cases to eat of the holy sacrifices was a cutting off, but any man that was clean might eat of them. This shewed that to the pure all things are pure, but to the impure and the unholy,the purest service of God is turned to abomination, as Prov.15.8.

Vers. 19.

As holy flesh is made unclean,saith Origen, by touching a thing unclean and might not be eaten of the unclean, or of such as touched any unclean thing, so hereby was set forth, both that divine doctrine is corrupted with Heresie, and that he is unfit for instruction, that is unholy, or a companion of the unclean, that is, of the wicked.

Origen. Hom.5. in Levit.

This saith Maimony, was a general rule for all holy flesh becoming unclean by any means, it was to be burned, if the uncleanesse hapned to it in the sanctuary, it was forthwith to be burnt there, if without the sanctuary, it was to be burnt without, but the remainder of these light holy things the owners burnt in their own houses, but this is to be understood of houses in Jerusalem, where onely holy flesh was to be eaten: for if a man had carryed any morsel thereof out of this city through forgetfulnesse, he must return again to burn it there, and the like course was followed touching the meat-offerings. There were divers other things also,that were burned, and what holy things becoming unclean were not burned, were buried as that which dyed alone, and the untimely birth.&c.

Maimony in Pesulei hamukdeshin, ch.19.

Deut.21.4.14. Exod.13.13. Numb.6.9.

Touching the flesh, of which it is said, all that were clean, should eat, this is to be understood of the flesh no way polluted, and Solomon. Jarchi noteth, that this is added, lest it should be thought because of those words, Deut.12.27. Thou shalt eat the flesh, that the owner onely might eat thereof, for any that were not unclean might eate together with him also, whereas an unclean person eating of it is threatned with cutting off; Maimony saith, if he hath washed himself, although the Sun be not down, before he eateth, he ſhall not be cut off but beaten, becauſe all his uncleanneſs was not upon him. For a man unclean that eateth, he ſaith alſo it is to be underſtood, if he eateth preſumptuouſly, he is to be cut off, but if ignorantly, he muſt bring his offering appointed chap.5. what the uncleanneſſes of men be, the touching whereof maketh unclean, ſee chap. 13. and 15. and 23.v. 3,4. For the cutting off here ſpoken of, ſome think that it was not a cutting off by death inflicted, but by ſeparating him from the congregation, as Vatablus going upon the words here uſed, He ſhall be cut off from his people. But others better, of cutting off by death, and if men knew not of it, by Gods judgement, but Burgenſis is onely for cutting off by God, and rooting out, Junius for cutting off from the people of God in another world. But this is too hard a cenſure, and that of ſeperating him onely too eaſie for a fault committed preſumptuouſly.

Sol. Iarchi.

Maimonie.

Vatablus. Lyranus. Burgenſis. Iunii Annot.

The myſtery. Heſychius.

Heſychius will have the unclean eating of holy fleſh myſtically to ſet forth hypocrites, for even their virtuous works are abominable before God forſomuch as they do them out of an impure mind to get praiſe of men, and they ſhall be deſtroyed, therefore they are in ſheeps cloathing, but inwardly are ravening wolves. And as for touching any uncleanneſſe, he ſaith, the uncleanneſſe that defileth, ſet forth hereby is the ſinfull cogitation of the mind; for from within out of the heart come evill thoughts, and theſe defile a man, and becauſe a man with ſuch thoughts is like unto a beaſt, he, in whom theſe thoughts are, is an unclean beaſt, the uncleanneſſe whereof is here ſpoken of, he that hath to do with ſuch, and chiefly with wizzards, and witches, whoſe ſtudies are all ſinfull, when he doth any thing pertaining to ſalvation, it ſhall be counted ſin in him, and he ſhall be cut off from ſalvation therefore.

Mark 7.21.

Verſ.24. Ye ſhall eat no manner of fat, of oxe, ſheep, or goat, &c.] From hence to v.27. is a law againſt eating fat or bloud. The ſame law was ſet down before, chap.3.17. but becauſe moſt briefly there, it is here repeated again, and ſome explication is added, but of this enough hath bin ſaid already upon chap.3.17.

Verſ.29.30 He that offereth a peace-offering, ſhall bring his offering to the Lord, with his own hands ſhall he bring the offerings made by fire, the fat with the breaſt, and the breaſt ſhall be waved, &c.] The Lord having appointed the offerer to bring his offering, chap.3.3,4,5. but not particularly determined the parts, which he was to bring with his own hands, he now repeateth that again, and expreſſeth fully both what he ſhould offer with his own hands and how, and what parts of his offering ſhould go to the Prieſt, v.31.32,33,34. For the manner of doing theſe things, ſee before, chap. 3.3,3.4,5. Touching the wave breaſt, and the Heave ſhoulder here appointed to be Aarons and his ſons, ſee Exod.29.26,27. the heaving or lifting up of the ſhoulder towards heaven ſhewed both that all the good things which we injoy come from God in heaven, and that we ſhould in all things tend thitherward. And the waving of the breaſt to and fro, ſaith Pellican, figured out the preaching of the Goſpell over all the parts of the world. And this is ſaid to be a Statute for ever, whereby theſe parts are given to the Prieſts, meaning till the coming of the Meſſiah, when all ſacrificing ſhould ceaſe, as being ordained to typifie him out.

Verſ.35. Calvin. Lyranus. Origen. Heſychius. This is the portion of the annointing of Aaron, and of the annointing of his ſons, &c.] That is, of Aaron and his ſons, becauſe they are the annointed Prieſts of God. Lyranus expoundeth it, this is their obiation in the day of their annointing, but this is contrary to v.36. Origen and Heſych. will have nothing elſe meant, but myſtically that the Prieſts ought to be indued with wiſdome ſet forth by the breaſt, and virtue ſet forth by the ſhoulder. But how then are theſe commanded to be given them by the children of Iſrael, verſ. v. 36.2.

Verſ.37. This is the law of the burnt-offering, meat-offering, &c. Here is the epilogue or or concluſion about ſacrifices of all ſorts, and the ſacrifice of conſecration is numbred amongſt the reſt, although not before mentioned in this book, becauſe it was appointed alſo in the ſame place, Exod. 20. and is by and by to be put in practice, ch.8.

Whereas it is ſaid, that the Lord commanded to offer their oblations in the wilderneſſe of Sinai. this is not to be underſtood, as if all theſe ſacrifices were to be made there, for if they offered not many ſacrifices after this in the wilderneſſe any more, but it is meant that in the wilderneſſe of Sinai the charge was given them touching all theſe ſacrifices.

Verſ. 38.

Amos 5. 25.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter Aaron and his ſons are conſecrated, and the tabernacle and the altar, as was appointed, Exod,29.and 30.where all things both touching their garments, ch. 28. and the ceremonies of their conſecration are largely expounded, ſo that the reader having recourſe thither may be ſufficiently informed touching all; whereas verſ.27. Moſes is ſaid to have put the offering upon the hands of Aaron and his ſons; Comeſtor ſaith, that hereby they had power given them to take the offerings of the people partly to be ſacrificed to the Lord, and partly for their own uſe. Cajetan thinketh, that the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons was at the time of conſecrating the tabernacle,Exod. 40. becauſe all this being there appointed, it is ſaid,verſ.16. that Moſes did all things according to the commandment of the Lord, and the time is preciſely ſet down to be the firſt day of the firſt moneth,v.1. But Oſiander, and after him Willet are for the contrary, becauſe it is ſet down here, and therefore it is moſt probable,that it was not done till now; and becauſe it was neceſſary, that they ſhould firſt be inſtructed in all ſacrifices, before they were conſecrated to the office of ſacrificing, and inſtructions touching moſt ſacrifices they had none till that in ch.1.2,3,4,5.&c. they were delivered unto them. But the firſt of theſe arguments is weak,for even after the ſetting down of things touching burnt offerings, meat-offerings, and peace-offerings, ch.1.2, 3. the ſame are undertaken again, ch.6.7. that they might be more fully ſet down, and the defects that were before might be ſupplied. And therefore to deſcribe the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons more fully which was before,but briefly mentioned might well acording to the courſe of this book be again undertaken in this chapter. And for the other argument, if they had inſtructions in theſe 7 dayes of the conſecration, touching ſacrifices long after to be offered in the land of Canaan it was time enough: yet when I conſider, that the ſetting up of the tabernacle, and of all the appurtenances thereof is deſcribed as done, Exod. 40.17.&c. I think that between that and this conſecrating, all hitherto ſet down in this book was ſpoken the ſame day, and the tabernacle and altar, and Aaron and his ſons were annointed, and all things alſo in this chap.8. ſet down, becauſe after 6 dayes more, during which time the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons laſted, it is ſaid,ch. 9. Upon the eighth day Aaron was appointed to make other oblations,as being now perfected. And hitherto of this eighth chapter, that I may not after the manner of many other Expoſitours make this book ſwell with repeating the ſame things again, which is a thing, that in all my writings I ſtill labour to decline.

Scholaſt. hiſtoria.

Caietan.

Oſiander.

Willet.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Verſ. 1,2. AND on the eighth day Moſes called Aaron and his ſonnes, and the Elders of Iſrael. And he ſaid unto Aaron, take thee a young calf for a ſin-offering, &c. The 7 dayes of their conſecration were now ended, and ſo they were fully ſanctified to the Prieſts office, wherefore they are now appointed to begin to offer. This number of 7 was alſo much reſpected for other things, children were not circumciſed till 7 dayes were paſt, viz. upon the eighth, the young of beaſts might not be offered in ſacrifice till the eighth day, Levit. 22.27. and perſons that were unclean by leproſies and iſſues after healing, were not clean again, till 7 dayes ended, Levit. 14.8,9, 10. ch.15.13,14. Numb.6.9, 10. in all which as Ainſworth well noteth, Chriſt riſing upon the eighth day was figured out, in whom we are ſanctified, and made fit now as Prieſts upon this day ſpecially to offer the ſacrifices of our devotions to the Lord. And of the Prieſts ſanctifying in 7 dayes, and offering upon the eighth day, it is alſo ſpoken long after, Ezech.43.36,27.

Ainſworth.

Queſt. But upon the comparing of this place with that Numb. 7. 10. where the Princes are ſaid to have offered 12 dayes, each one upon his day a ſacrifice, and this is ſaid to have begun in the day, that the altar was annointed, a great queſtion ariſeth how this could be that Aarons and his ſons conſecration ſhould be in 7 of theſe dayes, and ſo many ſacrifices more offered alſo ſeeing till the Prieſts conſecration finiſhed, they could not offer, nor aſſiſt Moſes in offering, and the task was too great for him alone to offer ſo many ſacrifices both for Princes and Prieſts, and to perform all other ceremonies in ſo ſhort a time. But this is eaſily anſwered, although the Princes brought their offerings upon the firſt day, yet it is not ſaid that they were offered then, but to each Prince is by the Lord appointed a day, verſ. 11. which it is moſt probable began not till after the conſecration of the Prieſts ended, and the ſacrifices offered which are here ſpoken of, that ſo miniſters enough being ready for this ſervice, they might be able to perform it, which otherwiſe could not have bin done. But Vatablus and Toſtatus will have the Prieſts and the Princes ſacrifices to have bin offered upon the ſame dayes. Rab. Salom. and Lyranus hold, that the Prieſts were conſecrated 7 dayes before the ſetting up of the tabernacle ſpoken of, Exod.40. and the annointing of the altar, Numb.7. and then upon the firſt day of the firſt moneth began the offerings of the dedication. But this is againſt the expreſſe words of the Text, Exod. 40 God commanded Moſes to annoint Aaron and his ſons, &c. The ſame day, that he commanded the ſetting up of the tabernacle, whereas they ſay, that there were two times of erecting the tabernacle, one before that ſpoken of Exod. 40. which was day after day for 7 dayes, during which time it was again taken down every night, and another more ſtable, after which it was not taken down, till they removed the camp. It is merely imaginary, neither doth it agree, becauſe Aaron and his ſons during the 7 dayes of their conſecration were not to depart from the tabernacle day or night, Exod. 29: and therefore the tabernacle was not taken down every night.

Vatablus Toſtatus. R. Salom. Lyranus.

During this time, Junius and Oleaſter hold, that by the eighth day here, is not meant the eighth day of the moneth, but the eighth from the beginning of their conſecration, which was ſome part of the firſt moneth of the ſecond yeare, and that the Princes offering was not begun, till the ſecond day of the ſecond moneth, becauſe, Numbers 1. 1. Upon the firſt of that moneth the numbers of the people were taken, and the Levites were numbred, and their offices appointed unto them, and after this were thoſe oblations for the dedicating of the tabernacle made. But againſt this lieth an exception which cannot be anſwered, viz. that the Princes offered the ſame day that the altar was annointed. For if it be ſaid, as it is by ſome

Junius. Oleaſter.

some that the annointing of the altar by Aaron is meant after that he was consecrated, it is not onely besides, but against the Text, Numb. 7. 10. wherefore I see not how any other way this doubt may be cleared, but as I said at the first, following Willet therein; unlesse we shall say, that by the day of annointing the altar is meant the day of making an end to consecrate it and the tabernacle and the Priests, for looke what was done the first of the 7 dayes of their consecration, the same was done upon every of the other six, also Levit.8.34. The last of these dayes then most probably the Princes brought their offerings for the dedicating of the tabernacle now fully consecrated, and then the day following which was the eighth day, when Aaron had offered a sin-offering for himself and for the peoples the oblation brought by them began to be offered. As for the placing of the relation of that dedicatory offering after things done the first of the second moneth, it is certain that Moses was nothing carefull to place all things in due order, and therefore some things done before that, Numb.1. 2,3, &c. might be placed after; and for this of the dedication of the tabernacle in speciall, to intimate that it was set down out of order, and belonged to another place, he denotes the day, Numb.7. 10. The day when the altar was annointed. Willet Touching the sacrifices, with which Aaron being now fully consecrated was commanded to begin. For calfe in Hebrew, it is a youngling the son of the herd, that is, a young bull of the first year, as Exod.29. and by the ramme is meant one of the second year. This calf is said in Targum Jonathan and other Hebrews, to have bin offered for his sin about the go'den calf; whereas some except against this, that Exodus 29. a calf is appointed to be offered in his consecration before that sin, which was not committed, till Exod.32. there is a difference in the appellation, for there it is called a bullock. Targum Ionathan. Willet.

But whether it were offered for that sin in particular, or for his sins in generall, it was doutlesse done to shew, that Aaron now consecrated was still a sinner, and had need to offer first for his own sins, and then for the sins of the people, and that there is no acceptation of any man before God but in Christ, the all-sufficient sacrifice for our sins. Whereas Tostatus hereupon inferreth, that God would have Aaron doubtfull alwayes of the remission of his sins, and likewise all men living here, howsoever they have bin sanctified: so also Lorinus. But here is no ground for this doctrine, but onely that he which is in the state of grace, and hath attained the greatest assurance, hath still need to offer up his prayers for pardon, and the confession of his sins dayly, this being a dutie inseparably annexed unto grace, and assurance both for further confirmation, and because the best whilest they live here, are still alwayes subject to fall into sinne. And for doubting we are no where exhorted to it, but to be confident and assured through Christ. He that heareth my words, saith Christ, and believeth in me hath passed from death to life. Whereupon Saint Augustine; I have heard the words of the Lord, I have believed and passed from death to life, I come not to judgement, not by my presuming, but by his promising. Heb. 7. Tostatus. Lorinus. John 5. 23.

August. de verb. Apost. Serm 16. Ego audivi verba Domini, credidi & transivi de morte ad vitam, ad judicium non venio, non præsumptione mea, sed promissione ipsius.

And to the children of Israel thou shalt say, take ye a kid of the goats, and a calf and a lamb, &c. Vers 3.

In preparing to offer these sacrifices, the Scholast. history saith, that Moses caused the terrene fire to be removed, and so both Aarons and the peoples sacrifices were all laid on without fire, to be consumed with fire expected to be sent down from heaven, vers.24. whereas vers.10. 14. &c. it is said, Aaron burnt them upon the altar, before this miraculous sending down of fire, the meaning is nothing else but that he laid them to be burnt; so Genenens. and Vatablus, and therefore the Septuagint translate the word Scholast. histor. Genenens. Vatablus. Brentius.

Toſtatus. Caietan. word burnt in every of theſe place ἐνέδηκεν, Toſtatus will have it ſpoken by anticipation; Cajetan ſaith that he burnt them leiſurely, till the fire came from God and conſumed them all at once. Radulphus: Radulphus, that when the fire burning before began to burn more vehemently it was perceived, that fire came out from the Lord, but theſe are detractions from the miracle. Some Hebrews ſay that the fire ſpoken of v. 24. came down likewiſe before at the time of the Prieſts conſecration, and then again, but this is incredible, becauſe but one onely ſpoken of.

Qu. If it be demanded why not onely a ſin-offering and burnt-offering muſt be made for the people, but alſo peace-offerings which were not offered for the Prieſts?

Serranus. One Serranus anſwereth, that peace-offerings being for thankeſgiving for good increaſe of things, that were for ſuſtenance, it properly belonged to the people to offer theſe. But the better reaſon, as I take it, is, becauſe the Lord did not propound here to have all the offerings appointed to be offered by the Prieſts and by the people, offered at this time, but for an initiation as it were, to this holy buſineſſe, one of each kind for either of them the ſin-offering, burnt-offering, peace-offering and meat-offering, which were all the kinds before deſcribed, ſeeing the ſin and treſpaſſe-offering were in a manner all one. Now becauſe of the peace-offerings, ſpecially in the meat-offerings did riſe the Prieſts living in regard of the parts of them which they had when they were brought by the people, it was fitteſt to ſhew by practice the Prieſts right herein, that not the Prieſt, but they ſhould bring theſe: for it is not to be thought, but that a Prieſt as well as a laick might bring peace-offerings for thankſgiving for the fruits of the earth, wherein they had their ſhare. The reaſon why God would have all theſe kinds of offerings made at this time, is generally held to be, that the practice of the things in this book commanded in the worſhip of God might not be wholly put off till their coming into the land of Canaan, but now at the leaſt be once performed before, that the ordinance might not then ſeem to have bin in vain. For after this they offered no more, till they came into that bleſſed land, Amos 5.25. and this is mentioned again, Acts 2.43. Upon which place yet I have ſhewed that moſt probably ſome offerings were made, but they were few, and not ſo duly, as afterwards partly through their corruption in ſerving other gods, and partly for the want of wood and other things requiſite to maintain continuall ſacrificing, and partly becauſe of their uncertain removes.

Queſt. But why is a goats kid, and a calf, and a lamb, appointed ſingularly to be brought for the people?

Schol. hiſtor. The ſcholaſt. hiſtory ſaith, that a calf or a bullock was for the congregation, a kid for a ruler, and a lamb for a private perſon, as was appointed before, chap. 4. and chap. 5. and a bullock and a ramme for a peace-offering, chap. 3. It is moſt probable, that a beginning being now made of ſacrificing according to the lawes before going for the people, the Lord appointed all theſe particulars, that one of every ſort before mentioned might now be offered together, that in no part the law might be left undone; whereas the offerings made by the Princes, Numb. 7. are each of them far greater, the reaſon may be becauſe their offerings were voluntary, in which caſe they might offer what they pleaſed, but theſe are injoyned, and therefore no greater burthen then needs is impoſed; ſo Toſtatus.

Toſtatus.

Verſ. 4. For to day the Lord will appear unto you.] This is ſpoken of here to Aaron, and v. 6. to the people. 1. To ſhew the neceſſitie of bringing theſe ſacrifices, that they might be ſanctified againſt this time. 2. That they might with the more alacritie bring them, being aſſured of a ſign of Gods gracious acceptance. 3. That all might reſt aſſured, when the fire ſhould come out to conſume their ſacrifices, that it came not by chance, but was ſent of God.

And

And all the congregation drew near and ſtood before the Lord.] Before Moſes is ſaid to have ſpoken to the Elders, verſ. 1. but now they having told all the people, becauſe the buſines in hand concerned them all, they all draw near, that is, ſome to the door of the tabernacle and the reſt preſſing as near as they could, for they were ſo many, that the Court could not contain them all. Joſephus ſaith, that they came and brought many offerings of the ſame kind, but this is improbable, becauſe one only of each kind was now appointed. Verſ. 5. Ioſeph. antiq. lib. 3. cap. 11.

This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, &c.] For thing, Hebr. is דבר word, whereupon Heſychius will have the myſtery in the Lords ſupper alluded to, which is in words; and Lorinus the ſecond perſon of the Trinitie, who is called the Word, John 1. but the phraſe is ordinary, word for thing, as Exod. 18. 22. &c. Verſ. 6. Heſychius.

And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, goe to the altar, and offer thy ſinne-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an attonement for thy ſelf, &c.] By the altar here is to be underſtood the altar of burnt-offerings, as alſo in all other places, where the altar is ſpoken of without any diſtinction, here he muſt firſt make attonement for his ſins, before he entred into the holy place where the altar of incenſe was. Verſ. 7.

But why doth Moſes bid him go to the altar, when as he was now perfectly conſecrated to the Prieſthood, and therefore might go of himſelf? Qu.

To get him the more authority, when as by Moſes, Gods ſpokſman he was thus initiated to his office. Whereas he is bidden to make attonement, the vulgar Latine hath it, Pray for thy ſelf and for the people; whereupon Heſychius inferreth, that Chriſt likewiſe who was figured out by Aaron, when he bare our ſins, prayed for himſelf. But the word in Hebrew is Chapper, of Caphar to annoint, linire, from whence cometh lenire to appeaſe, and therefore the Septuagint render it ἐξιλάσα to propitiate for thy ſelf, the Septuagint περὶ τοῦ οἴκου σου for thy houſe, and in ſaying for thy houſe, he meaneth doubtleſſe for himſelf and his ſons, for theis ſacrifice was for the Prieſts, that God being reconciled unto them, they might be fit to offer for the people, and to make attonement for them. For he, to whom God is not propitious in reſpect of his own ſins, cannot acceptably mediate for others. Whereas touching his own ſacrifice it is ſaid, Make an attonement for thy ſelf and for the people, and then it is added, and offer the offering of the people, and make an attonement for them. Toſtatus underſtandeth, that Aaron in making his own offering prayed as for himſelf, ſo for the people, but Junius better, being thus prepared for it, make an attonement for the people, which how it was done, theſe words do ſhew, Offer the offering for the people, and make an attonement for them. Anſw. Heſychius. Toſtatus. Junii annot.

Here and in the words following to v. 22. is ſhewed how Aaron offered theſe ſacrifices according to the rules preſcribed, Levit. 4. where the myſticall meaning of every thing hath bin ſhewed; onely Levit. 4. 7. it being appointed, that ſome of the bloud of the Prieſts ſacrifice for ſin, ſhould be carried and put upon the horns of the altar of incenſe, it may ſeem ſtrange that no ſuch thing is done here: but Toſtatus reſolveth it, that no particular ſin being now offered for, but his ſinnes in generall, there needed not ſo many ceremonies at this time. But this ſeemeth to be no reaſon, it is better then which Ainſworth and others have, that till he had prepared a way by his firſt-offering, he had no acceſſe into the holy place, where the altar of incenſe ſtood, whereas he is often ſaid to have burned the things offered, it is to be underſtood, that it is not meant that he burnt them, but laid them ready for the fire, that God would ſend to burn them, as hath bin ſhewed, v. 3. Verſ. 8. Toſtatus. Ainſworth.

And Aaron lifteth up his hand towards the people, and bleſſed them, &c.] By hand here both his hands are to be underſtood, and therefore the Septuagint render it hands. Rabbi Menahem ſaith, that it is ſaid hand, in the Verſ. 22. Rab. Menahem.

ſingular number, becauſe the right hand, the lifting up whereof is ſpecially pointed at here, is meant, as being lifted up higher then the left. How Aaron uſed to bleſſe the people, is ſhewed, Numb.6.24. The lifting up of hands was a geſture fit then to be uſed, but the bleſſing lay in the words which hee uſed. Hands muſt bee lifted up in bleſſing, and in praying, 1 Tim. 2.8. Pſalm 28. 2. and praiſing God, Pſalm 134. 2. and 141. 2. and in ſwearing, Gen.14. 22. becauſe he is in heaven who onely can effectually bleſſe, whoſe benediction is a benefaction, and from whom our help commeth, which we ſeek in prayer, and by whom we deſire to have our oathes teſtified unto. The Prieſt was appointed to bleſſe the people, Deut.10.8. 2 Chron. 39.27. and herein he was a notable figure of Chriſt, in whom all the nations of the earth are bleſſed, and of whom it is ſaid, God ſent him to bleſſe us, Act. 3.26.

Epheſ. 1.3.

Brentius. The bleſſings which we have by Chriſt, are by Brentius ſpecially reckoned up to be five. 1. The pardon of all our ſinnes. 2. The grace of adoption. 3. The gift of the Spirit. 4. The acceptation of our obedience, though imperfect. 5. The turning of all things to our good: Then Aaron came down from the altar; this is ſpoken becauſe he ſtood upon the footſtall of the altar when he offered, which was higher then the reſt of the ground, ſo Targum Jonathan.

Verſ.23. And Moſes and Aaron went into the tabernacle, and came out and bleſſed the people, &c.] This going in of Aaron was to offer incenſe, as is appointed, Exod,30.7, 8. and Moſes went in with him to direct him this firſt time, ſo Sol. Jarchi, who alſo addeth, that Aaron having made an end of all the offerings, ſeeing that the glory of the Lord yet appeared not, he was grieved, and went into the tabernacle with Moſes to pray, and Moſes having there prayed, they came out again, and then the glory of the Lord appeared.

Sol. Iarchi.

The former of theſe that Moſes went in with Aaron to teach him, how to offer incenſe, and if there were any other thing for him to be inſtructed in touching the Prieſts office, as moſt probable is held alſo by Junius, Lyranus and Borrheus. But for Aarons or Moſes his grieving, that fire was not yet ſent as arguing a miſtruſt, is not to be held, but that they might go in to pray for the appearing of Gods glory, is not to be denied. This going in after ſacrificing did moſt aptly figure out Chriſt his going into heaven after the offering of himſelf to death for us, and becauſe when they came out again, they bleſſed the people as Heſychius hath it, that bleſſings are ſent from heaven upon the people by the Prieſts bleſſing of them.

Lyranus. Iunius. Borrheus.

Heſychius.

Queſt. But why do Moſes and Aaron now bleſſe the people again, ſeeing Aaron had bleſſed them before?

Anſw. Some think that it was not a ſecond bleſſing of them, but the ſame approved and confirmed by Moſes. But it was plainly a ſecond bleſſing of them for their diſmiſſion. Aaron bleſſed the people firſt, that at the enterance of his office of high Prieſt, he might not be defective in any duty that belonged unto it, and now again Moſes and he bleſſed the people together, when they were come out of the tabernacle, as coming with a doubled bleſſing, to ſhew that there was a bleſſing to come by Chriſt, who came out of the heavenly tabernacle, that is far greater, then that of Aaron. And unto this bleſſing, when they came out, it is alluded, Pſalm 118. 26. We bleſſe you out of the houſe of the Lord, and the glory of the Lord appeared to all the people; that is, ſome ſign of the Lords glorious preſence was ſeen, and then the fire came out there-from, as in the next verſe; ſo Junius and Heſychius, more particularly there was ſome ſuch appearing of the glory of the Lord, as Ezechiel ſaw over the cherubims, or as in the time of Solomon, a cloud, and then fire ſent out; yet ſome will have the appearing of Gods glory to be none other, but by the coming of the fire upon the ſacrifices. But they are ſpoken of as two diſtinct things, and therefore it is rather rather to be held that a cloud or some such sign first appeared, and then the miraculous fire.

Radulphus.

Iunius. Heſychius. Ezech. 1.29. 2 Chron.7. Vatablus. Oſiander.

And there came a fire out from the Lord and consumed the sacrifices, &c.] This fire Pellican thinketh to have come from heaven, but it is not said so, but from the Lord, viz. who now appeared in the tabernacle, and therefore it is better to hold, that it came out of the Tabernacle from the cloud, the sign of Gods presence; so Junius, from the ark of the testimony. August. That of Josephus, whom Radulphus followeth herein is against the Text, that it came from the altar, and sacrifices, and if it had bin so, the miracle had not bin so apparant, because fire had bin put upon the altar in offering the sacrifices before. Hereby the Lord shewed both his acceptance of the sacrifices offered, and of the offerers, and confirmed his appointing of Aaron for his Priest, and his son after him. How this fire thus miraculoully kindled was preserved and kept continually burning, see before chapter. 1. 7. and the ordinance, that it should be kept alwayes burning, chapter 6. 12.

Vers. 24. Pellican.

Junius.

August qu. 30. in Exod.

There may be five causes noted of sending miraculous fire upon sacrifices. 1. To confirm the ordination of the legall Priesthood, that it was of God, as in this place. 2. When there was a confusion in matter of Religion, that the true might be confirmed as in the dayes of Elias, 1 King 18. and of Gedeon, Judg. 6.20. 3. For approbation of the temple built by Solomon, 2 Chron. 7. 1. 4. To give assurance of Gods reconciliation with his people after a great judgement, as in the dayes of David, 2 Sam. 24. 5. To assure a true heavenly apparition, that the marvellous thing promised might be believed, as in the dayes of Manoah, Judg. 13. 19. For although in Manoahs sacrifice this be not expressed, yet it is held to have bin so by Josephus, Calvin, Genenens. &c. And it is held also that Abels sacrifice, Gen. 4. was consumed with fire from heaven.

Five causes of Gods sending fire miraculously.

Josephus. Calvin. Genenens.

How the devil imitated God herein, when he was not restrained, we may reade in Solinus, who saith, If the god were present and approved the sacrificing, the green wood had a fire kindled in it, and it was burned by the god to whom it was sacrificed, no man putting fire to it. So Solinus of a place near the hill Vulcanus. But these were onely sacrilegious imitations amongst the heathen of the religious relations of sacrifices amongst the Hebrewes, as Augustine speaketh, lib. 32 contr. Faust. c. 17. of this holy fire, which came from the Lord, the Hebrewes relate 5 admirable properties. 1. That it went not out, although fewell were wanting, as when the camp removed from place to place, and at other times Josephus saith, it was preserved by the Priest laying on but two sticks onely every morning. 2. The raine falling upon it could not quench it, nor any water, to prove which is produced, that 2 Machab. 1. where it is said that this fire being hid in a pit in the time of the captivity, there was at their return found thick water, which being taken and sprinkled upon their sacrifices, the fire kindled. 3. being wrapped up in a purple cloath, when the camp removed, it burned it not. 4. It took away the strong smell of the sacrifices being burnt herewith. 5. It was kept continually upon the altar and went not out, till the Babylonish captivity; yea Lyranus and Tostatus are for the continuance of it, vntill the passion of Christ.

Solinus lib: 11. Si adest deus & sacrum probatur, sacramenta, licet viridia ignem sponte concipiunt, & nemine inflammante a litato numine fit incendium.

Religiosa sacrificiorum prædicamenta Hebræis sacrilega initiamenta Pagauis fuere.

Five miraculous properties of the holy fire.

Lorinus.

Tostatus. Mansit iste ignis inextinctus usque ad mortem Christi.

Touching the first of these, if it would have burnt alwayes, or at any time without fewell, what needed that ordinance, Levit. 4. 12. of putting wood upon it every morning? Yet at times of removing when this could not be done, God was able to keep it unextinguished, and there were some naturall means by raking it up in the embers, and all the time of their being in the wilderness, the same power could preserve it with a very little wood.

For the second, that rain falling upon it could not extinguish it, is probable, because it was in the court of the tabernacle in the open aire.

For the third, there was no need ſo to carry this fire, but rather in ſome veſſell fit for the purpoſe which indeed might be wrapped over with a purple cloth and the cloth not burnt, yet that relation, 2 Machab. 1. and ſo of the continuance of this fire afterwards ſeemeth to be fabulous, becauſe none of the Hebrews write of this, but contrariwiſe that theſe five things were wanting after their return out of Babylon, the pot of Manna, Aarons rod, the ark, the tables of ſtone, and the holy fire, ſee before, chap. 1. 7.

For the fourth, happily it was ſo, and for the fifth, it is probable, becauſe the Lord appointed that it ſhould be continually burning, chap. 6. 12. If it be demanded, how this can be juſtified to have been ſo in the wilderneſſe, where for many years together they offered no ſacrifices, I have ſaid ſomewhat to this already upon verſ. 3. of the myſtery of this fire, ſee before, ch. 12. By Pelargus it is applied to the ſpirit alwayes preſent to the Church, of which Chriſt ſaith, I came to ſend fire upon the earth, ſo Radulphus.

Pelargus.

CHAP. X.

Verſ. 1. A*Nd Nadab and Abihu took either of them his cenſer, and put incenſe thereon, and offered ſtrange fire before the Lord which he commanded them not.*]

Queſt. If it be demanded, at what time this was done? It is moſt probable, that it was done upon the ſame eighth day, in which the ſacrifices before ſpoken of, chap. 9. were offered, becauſe v. 19. it is ſaid, This day have they offered their ſin-offerings, and burnt-offerings.

Caietan. Some think that it was not now, but at another time, but without all ground. When the ſacrifices before ſpoken of were ended, it is likely at the time of the evening ſacrifice, theſe two ſonnes of Aaron being the eldeſt, went in to offer incenſe upon the golden altar, but took not fire from the altar as they ſhould have done, but other fire; it may be from the fire uſed to boyl meat there.

Queſt. If it be demanded, how they can be thought to have ſinned ſo greatly herein, ſeeing no command was yet given, what fire ſhould be uſed?

Anſw. I anſwer, it is enough, that they did thus not being commanded, as is here noted. Aaron their father ſtill waited, till that by Moſes he was commanded to go to the altar, and he went not into the tabernacle but with Moſes directing him ſo to do Wherefore it was a great ſinne in theſe his ſons, that they preſum'd to go in unbidden, and took what fire they thought good not waiting for direction. For that herein lay their ſin as well as in taking common fire, appeareth, becauſe, chap. 16. 1, 2. Aaron is appointed upon this occaſion, how to come into the moſt holy place that he might not die, and is taught whence to take his fire for incenſe, verſ. 12. namely, from the altar of burnt-offerings.

Chap. 9. 8. Verſ. 23.

Note. Note, that it is a moſt dangerous thing, as to ſinne againſt an expreſſe commandment of the Lord, ſo to offer any ſervice unto him without his direction.

Verſ. 2. And there went out a fire from the Lord, which devoured them, and they died before the Lord. Theſe two were the eldeſt and the moſt honorable of the ſons of Aaron, as we may ſee, Exod. 24. 1. in that they onely with their father and 70. Elders are appointed to come up to the Lord, yet having ſinned, they are not ſpared from death, to ſhew that there is no reſpect of perſons with God, but every one ſhall be puniſhed, thoſe that are neareſt to the Lord, as well as they that are further off, if they ſinne againſt him. They ſinned by fire, and by fire periſhed, as a fire came from the Lord before in mercy, ſo now a fire is ſent in judgement, and hereupon it is ſaid; Our God is a conſuming fire, ſo fire was ſent upon Corah and his rebellious company, Numb. 16. But when theſe two are ſaid to have bin devoured hereby, nothing thing elſe is meant, but that it ſlew them. In Targum Jonathan, it burnt their ſouls, but their bodies were not burnt; for verſ. 5. they are ſaid to be carried in their coats out of the camp. They died before the Lord, that is, in the tabernacle where God dwelt; the like is ſaid of Uzzah being ſmitten with death when he ſtayed the ark with his hand hee died before God, 1 Chron. 13. 10. before the arke, 2 Sam. 6. 7. and it is noted they died childleſſe, Numb. 3. 4. 1 Chron. 24. 2.

Note.

Deut. 1. 24. Heb. 12. 29.

Targum Ionathan.

If the queſtion be, becauſe the Rabbin ſaith, this fire devoured their ſouls, whether they periſhed for this their ſin everlaſtingly?

Qu.

It is anſwered by many, that it is moſt probable God had mercy upon their ſouls, both becauſe their bodies remained unconſumed, which may be taken as done in favour, as to the Prophet ſlain by a Lion, but his body not torn, and becauſe Moſes appointed them for honour to be carried out in their Prieſts garments, as Toſtatus thinketh, and it is moſt agreeable with charity ſo to think of them. And the ſame is the opinion of Philo, becauſe they are ſaid to have died before the Lord, and the Lord ſaith, I will be ſanctified in them, howſoever theſe are too weak grounds to prove it.

Anſw.
Lyranus.
Toſtatus.
Rickelius.
&c.
1 King. 13.
Philo.

Touching their ſinne, ſome Rabbins go too farre, ſaying that they were drunken when they did this, and ſo ſnatched up fire after the manner of drunken men, not regarding from whence; and therefore it was afterwards ordained, that the Prieſt when he miniſtred, ſhould drink neither wine nor ſtrong drink, but this is moſt unlikely, becauſe they were ſo full of imployment all that day, that they had no time to ſit drinking unto drunkenneſſe.

R. Salom.
Rab. Moſes.
Rab. Simeon.

If it be demanded, whether the Lord was not too ſevere in laying ſo great a puniſhment upon ſo ſmall an offence?

Queſt.

It is anſwered, 1. The offence was againſt God, and woe is to him, that doth the work of the Lord negligently; ſee alſo 1 Sam. 2. 23. 2. It was about ſacrifices, which were figurative of ſpirituall things, ſo that to erre never ſo little herein was greatly againſt Gods honour, as is ſaid, 1 Sam. 2. 30. 3. It was in the beginning of lawes making about ſacrifices, and at the firſt it is neceſſary, that tranſgreſſours ſhould be moſt ſeverely puniſhed for terrour to thoſe of future times. And as in the beginning of the legall ſervice Nadab and Abihu were ſmitten, ſo in the beginning of the Evangelicall Ananias and Saphira, that all might afterwards be more afraid to offend.

Anſw.
Willet
Ier. 48. 10.
Toſtatus.
Acts 5.

Touching the myſtery in the ſtrange fire offered by Nadab and Abihu, for which they were thus puniſhed, Moſt hold, that ſtrange and corrupt doctrine, or corruption in the ſervice of God is ſet forth hereby, which is moſt dangerous to the author thereof, and therefore it is by all means to be taken heed of.

The Myſtery.
Theod. qu. 9.
Procopius.
Heſychius.
Calvin.

Ambroſe expoundeth this ſtrange fire of luſt and covetouſneſſe: Rupertus applieth it to the Jews, going upon the ſignification of the words, Nadab wilfull, and Abihu, my father, for they pretending, that Abraham is their father are wilfull in their adhering to the ceremonies of the Law, thus bringing in ſtrange worſhip. Some by their being ſuddenly ſmitten with death in the beginning of their Prieſthood underſtand the abrogation of that Prieſthood, that one everlaſting might be brought in by Chriſt. We may well hold that both corrupt doctrine and worſhip is ſet forth hereby, and the mortalitie, as I may ſo ſpeak of the ceremoniall law.

Ambroſe.
Epiſt. 3.
Rupert. lib. 4.
in Levit. cap. 7.
Radulphus.
Ainſworth.

Then Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, this is that which the Lord hath ſaid, I will be ſanctified in all that come near unto me before all the people, &c.] Here a great queſtion is made, in what place it is ſaid thus? Heſychius and Lyranus ſay, Exod. 19. 22. Let the Prieſts, which come to the Lord, be ſanctified. Auguſtine ſaith, it is ſpoken of, as ſaid before, but was not ſaid till now, as God is ſaid to have known Moſes by name, Exod. 32. 12. which was not ſpoken before.

Verſ. 3.

Heſychius.
Lyranus.
Auguſt. qu. 31.
in Levit.

Some

Some say it hath reference to Exod. 29. I will ſanctifie Aaron and his ſons, and Junius to Levit. 8. 35. Some think that it was ſpoken, but not written, as many other things, John 20. 30. But I prefer that of Auguſtine, this is that which the Lord hath upon this occaſion ſaid unto me, or as Calvin hath it, may be gathered in generall from the many precepts given before of going according to the rules preſcribed in the Prieſts executing of their office: For the meaning of the words. I will be ſanctified, is as much as if he had ſaid, I will be known to be a juſt and holy God, by executing judgements upon ſuch as preſume to ſwerve from mine Ordinances in any thing, as is explained, Ezech. 28. 22. and Ezech. 38. 16. 23. So Jerom. in Ezech. 28. expoundeth it, and Auguſtine, Sanctificatio Dei pœna peccantium. But as in judging thoſe that ſinne, the Lord is ſanctified and glorified, ſo in being gratious to thoſe that obey him, Ezech. 20 41. and we are ſaid to ſanctifie the Lord when we ſerve him in holineſſe, 1 Pet. 3. 15.

Junius. Lorinus. Caietan. Oleaſter. Calvin. Hieron. Auguſt.

And Aaron held his peace, that is, acknowledging it to be a juſt judgement of God upon his ſons, ſuppreſſed the paſſions, into which he would have bin otherwiſe like to break out of his natural affection towards them, and ſpake no rebellious word. And Oleaſter noteth that Joſhuah in ſpeking to the Sunne, ſtand ſtill in Gibeon, uſed the ſame word דם that is here uſed, ſo that he held his peace, is he ſtayed from further vexing himſelf, or ſtirring of his paternall affections.

Oleaſter.

Verſ. 4. And Moſes called Miſhael and Elzaphan, the ſonnes of Uzziel, the uncle of Aaron, and ſaid, come near and carry your brethren from before the Sanctuary; Of Uzziel the brother of Amram Aarons father, ſee Exod. 6. 18. 20. 22. His ſons the Levites are appointed to carry theſe dead men out, and not at any Prieſts their brethren, becauſe ſuch as were chief ought not to defile themſelves for the dead, Levit. 21. 4. and the high Prieſt might not go in to any dead body, verſ. 11. and therefore Aaron their father could not bury them. Touching the name of brethren given unto theſe, it was according to the Hebrew phraſe, whereby coſens were called brethren.

Verſ. 5. So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the Camp.] This was ſo done, becauſe they uſed to bury out of the camp, as afterwards out of their cities, Luc. 7. 12. And this they did partly, that contagion might be prevented, partly to avoid legall pollution, and partly that the buriall might not be prophaned by trampling upon it, and the heathen followed the ſame cuſtome, but that amongſt the Romans to avoid contagion they burned them, and it was not lawfull for the Flamen to go to a place where a grave was, or to touch a dead body, or to wear a dead mans ſhoes, or to hear funerall muſick, for fear of being defiled; whereas we bury now in the Church or Church-yard.

Toſtatus. Aul. Gellii. 10. cap. 15.

Toſtatus. Toſtatus thinketh that this is done, that by ſeeing the graves of the dead, men might be put in mind to pray for them, but it is rather to be put in mind of our own mortality, and of the reſurrection to come, when we ſee Chriſtians dead bodies laid up with ſuch care and ſolemnitie, as being things of price; for to pray for the dead is to no purpoſe, ſee before, Gen. 49. 29. whereas they are ſaid to have been carried out in their coats; Lyranus, Hugo and Toſtatus hold that they were alſo buried in them, and in all the reſt of their Prieſtly garments, and thereupon that a cuſtome hath been rightly taken up to bury Prieſts in their prieſtly garments. But neither is it ſaid, that they were thus buried, and if ſo, yet it is no grounding of a cuſtome hereupon, ſeeing other Prieſts were not buried likewiſe, for then the high Prieſt ſhould chiefly have been thus honoured, but that he was not is evident, both becauſe his garments were appointed to his eldeſt ſon after him, Exod. 29. 29. and accordingly Eleazar, when he was ready to die, put them on, Numb. 20. wherefore it is no benefit, but a groundleſſe ſuperſtition thus to bury, and if Nadab and Abihu being ſmitten in their garments were thus taken and buried, becauſe they were thought now unfit unfit for uſe in the ſanctuary, they doe blinde-foulded acknowledge, as it were, in this ſuperſtitious cuſtom that they are ſucceſſours of theſe men, who provoke God by their ſtrange and corrupt doctrine, as they by ſtrange fire. And Tollet himſelf confeſſeth, that the Jewes uſed not to bury men propriis veſtibus, in their proper garments, as the manner in Italy is now adayes. Tollet. in Ioh. 20.

Lyranus. Hugo. Toſtatus.

Verſ. 6.

And Moſes ſaid to Aaron and his ſonnes, uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes, leſt ye die, and wrath come upon all the people, &c.] The word פרע tranſlated uncover ſignifieth either to uncover or make bare, or to let the hair be free to grow, and to neglect cutting of it. According to the firſt the Septuagint render it, ye ſhall not put off the miters from your heads; and according to the ſecond the Caldee, ye ſhall not let your locks grow. Lyranus and Rickelius follow the firſt, as if the meaning were, that they ſhould not thus expreſſe their ſorrow and mourn for their dead, by neglecting to pole their heads, as men in ſorrow have uſed to do, as Joſeph and Mephiboſheth. Others contrariwiſe, that it is meant they ſhould not uncover their heads by ſhaving them. And according to this all the people are forbidden to make bald their heads for the dead, Deut. 14. 1. and that this was a cuſtome amongſt the heathen. Lyranus. Rickelius. 2 Sam. 19. Gen. 41. Burgenſis. Toſtatus.

Herodotus teſtifieth ſaying, the Egyptians at the funeralls of their friends let the hair of their heads grow long, but ſhaved their beards, but other Nations ſhaved their heads. Heſychius followeth the Septuagint, ye ſhall not put off the miters from your heads; and Junius and Calvin, Ne nudate capita, make not bare your heads. Now although in ſorrowing men uſed then to ſhave their heads or beards, as ſo men are ſaid to come in ſorrow to Jeruſalem with their beards ſhaven. Jer. 41. 5. yet not ſhaving and making bald is here forbidden, but making bare by uncovering, which was a ſign of one mourning, as wee may ſee in the Leper, Levit. 13. 45. and therefore it is expreſly forbidden to the high Prieſt, Levit. 21. 10. and when ſhaving the head, which is alſo forbidden to the Prieſts, Levit. 21. 5. is ſpoken of, other words are uſed, Ye ſhall not make baldneſſe upon your heads, nor ſhave the corners of your beards. So likewiſe, Ezech. 44. 20. The Prieſts ſhall not ſhave their heads, nor ſuffer their locks to grow long, but they ſhall onely poll them. Herodot. in Euterpe. Heſychius Junius. Calvin.

For uncovering the head alſo by putting off the miter is Auguſtine, ſaying, hereby is intimated, that mourners do contrary to the cuſtome of ornament, becauſe when others are covered, they go uncovered. But now it is a cuſtome to cover in mourning, and ſo David of old in mourning went with his head covered, when he was forced to flie from Abſalom, and this may be ſuppoſed to have been a covering of head and face, as mourners go now adayes. Of ſhaving of heads, becauſe not meant here, I will ſpeak no more, till I come to chapter 21. 5. And this is an argument, that uncovering by ſhaving is not here meant, becauſe there that is forbidden to all the Prieſts, but uncovering to Aaron onely verſ. 10. and here to him and his ſons. Auguſt. qu. 31. in Levit. Faciunt lugentes contra ornatus conſuetudinem, &c. 2 Sam. 15. 30.

But what is this, that is further injoyned, Nor rend your cloaths: that this was another expreſſion of ſorrow for the dead, ſee Levit. 13. 45. Levit. 21. 10. Gen. 37. 34. Maimony obſerveth here, becauſe the Prieſts were forbidden to rend their clothes, that others in mourning for the dead ought to rend them, and this muſt be done ſtanding, as 2 Sam. 13. 31. the King is ſaid to have riſen up, and rent his garments, and not behind, or on the ſides, but before and above, not beneath, and the upper garment onely, and but an hand breadth. And this rending, is not onely for the dead either Prince, father of the Synedrion, congregation or dear friend, but alſo when God is blaſphemed, Eſa. 36. 22. or the book of the Law burned, Jer. 36. 23. or the citie of Jeruſalem or Sanctuary deſtroyed, Jer. 51. 5. For the reaſon why they might not mourning for the dead rend their garments, Queſt. Of rending their cloths. 2 Sam. 1. 11. Maimony of mourning, ch. 8.

Lyranus. Toſtatus. ments ſome thinke becauſe the Heathen uſed ſo to doe, others becauſe rending of garments proceedeth from a furious and turbulent motion of the minde, which doth not become Prieſts. But theſe are invented reaſons, the true reaſon is laid down in the Text, verſ. 7. For the anointing oyl of the Lord is upon you, which oyl did ſet forth the ſpirit of joy and gladneſſe, unto which mourning, as contrary to it is ſtreightly forbidden, and all ſigns thereof. And for this cauſe the high Prieſt might never uncover his head, or rend his garments for any being dead, Levit. 21. 10 becauſe the anointing oyl was upon him. Other Prieſts indeed might mourn for ſome dead being very near unto them, Levit. 21. 1,2. but even amongſt others he that was a chief man, as Eleazar and Ithamar, of whom it is here ſpoken, were, might not mourn, verſ. 4. it being called a defiling of themſelves ſo to do, of the chief amongſt the Prieſts, ſee 1 Chron. 24. who and how many they were in Davids time. The inferiour ſort then might mourn for a brother, &c. but not the chief.

Calvin. This time the Prieſts conſecration being newly ended, and ſacrifices having been offered for ſin, was a time of joy, and of ſetting up religion in a magnificall manner, as Calvin ſpeaketh, and therefore not to bee overcaſt with the Prieſts mourning. Moreover, the forbidding of them to mourn as others now that they ſerved in the tabernacle, and departed not thence, was, leſt that holy ſervice would be interrupted, mourning being counted a legall polluting, as was ſaid before, and a Prieſt polluted being in ſuch a caſe that he cannot ſerve, till he be again cleanſed.

Laſtly, this ſeemeth to have bin done in a figure of the future ſtate of the ſaints in heaven, to ſhew that there ſhall never be any mourning, but continuall joy to all thoſe that dwell in the heavenly tabernacle. For the reaſons before alledged, if they had bin forbidden to rend their garments, becauſe the heathen did ſo in their mourning, the reſt of the people ſhould have bin forbidden alſo to do thus, which they were not: and that rending garments in mourning did not ſtand with the dignitie of a Prieſt is confuted, becauſe moſt excellent men have done thus, as Joſhuah, Jephtah, Job and Eliſhah. It followeth, Leſt ye die, and leſt wrath came upon all the people.

Toſtatus. It may ſeem ſtrange, that the Prieſts erring, wrath ſhould come upon all the people, but this, as Toſtatus hath it, is ſpoken becauſe of the near relation betwixt the Prieſt and the people, his ſinne becoming theirs by their conſenting to it, or not reſiſting it, and theirs becoming his, if committed by his negligence. 2. Becauſe if the Prieſts had now given way to paſſion and mourned, they muſt have intermitted their dutie in ſacrificing, which was the way to turn Gods wrath from the people, and ſo in their ceaſing to ſacrifice for a time, the people ſhould have lien open to Gods wrath. 3. Becauſe there would have been danger in the abſence of the Prieſts, of the peoples not carrying themſelves ſo religiouſly towards ſacred things, as is intimated, Numbers 1. 53. and conſequently of wrath to come upon them therefore.

How God being provoked by one hath puniſhed all, ſee Joſ. 7. 2 Sam. 24. and of the Prieſts ſtanding, as a ſhield to keep Gods wrath away, Numbers 16. 46, 48. or the meaning may be, the Prieſts dying by Gods hand, as they ſhould, if upon this occaſion they rent their garments, this would prove a coming of wrath upon them, in that they were taken away, who onely could make attonement for them in reſpect of their ſinnes, which they were prone dayly to commit.

Queſt. But why is death threatned to the Prieſts if they ſhould do thus?

Anſw. Not onely for the reaſon before rendered, but becauſe in their reſraining, God would have them give approbation to the juſtice of his proceedings againſt their brethren, doing in Gods quarrell, as the Tribe of Levi, of which they were, which ſaid of brethren and children, I know you not, that is, in the quarrell about the golden calves. But let your brethren,

Deut. 33. 9. Exod. 32. the the whole houſe of Iſrael bewail the burning, which the Lord hath kindled. The people, who were not reſtrained for the like reaſon, that Aaron and his ſons were, might bewail this lamentable accident, yea they are appointed ſo to do, that Gods judgement through a generall mourning might make the deeper impreſſion in them, and ſo being the longer remembred ſtrike terrour into all to make them walk in reverence and fear. Calvin.

And ye ſhall not goe out from the door of the Tabernacle, leſt ye die.] This is ſpoken, not to debar them from coming out of the Sanctuary; for the 7 dayes in which they were reſtrained, viz. the 7 dayes of their conſecration were ended before, and this was the eighth, although Auguſtine expoundeth it as ſpoken of in thoſe dayes, but this meaning is, that they ſhould not intermit their Prieſtly office by going out to mourn, and ſo to pollute and to make themſelves unfit for this ſervice; ſo Calvin. Heſychius, who is onely for a myſticall ſenſe here, ſaith, it is meant, they ſhould not go out of the door of knowledge by teaching ſtrange doctrine, as before he applied the uncovering of their heads by putting off their miters to the falling from the true doctrine, touching the divinitie and humanity of Chriſt. But I let theſe things paſſe, as far fetcht. Verſ. 7. Auguſt. in Levit. qu. 31. Calvin. Heſychius.

And the Lord ſpake to Aaron ſaying, doe not drink wine nor ſtrong drink, thou nor thy ſonnes, when ye enter into the Tabernacle, &c.] Baal Hatturim, and other Rabbins hold, that Aarons ſonnes who periſhed by fire, had been drunken when they went in to offer incenſe, and therefore this law is here given; ſo likewiſe Lyranus and Cajetan, but this hath bin before rejected. It is more likely that God took occaſion upon that raſh action of theirs to make this Ordinance againſt drinking that, which hereafter might trouble the ſenſes, and make other Prieſts for want of due diſcretion, to run headily into the like offence, and that this is the end of this law is further intimated. Verſ. 8, 9. Baal Hatturim. Lyranus. Caietan. Lorinus.

That ye may put difference between that which is unclean and clean, and teach the children of Iſrael, &c.] For this a man, whoſe brain is filled with the fume of wine cannot doe, wherefore the Rabbins have a Canon, wherein they ſay, as a man may not enter into the Tabernacle for drunkenneſſe, ſo neither the Prieſt nor other Iſraelite may teach when he is drunken; yea, if he hath but eaten Dates to the troubling of his ſenſes a little, grounding upon this verſ. 11. Maimony. This prohibition of drinking wine was not of all times, but when they entered into the Tabernacle, becauſe now ſpecially it ſtood them in hand to be ſober. Verſ. 10, 11. Maimony in Baath hamic-daſh, chap. 1.

The Hebrew Canons are here contrary to the Text, for therein it is ſaid, that they might not now drink above the fourth part of a log or half pint, and that muſt be mere wine and not mixed, and fourty daies old at the leaſt, and it muſt be drunk at once, but theſe were devices of the Rabbins, for all wine drinking is now abſolutely forbidden, as is further taught alſo, Ezechiel 44. 21. The entring of the Tabernacle here they underſtand of that ſpace in the Court betwixt the Aitar and the Tabernacle, according to which Ezechiel 44. 21. hath it When ye enter into the inner court. Origen and Heſychius, When ye come to the Altar, for it was as neceſſary, that they ſhould be ſober when they came to ſerve about the ſacrifices, as about the offering of incenſe, &c. The word Sicra, here uſed ſignifieth not onely ſtrong drink, but any kind of inebrieating liquour. Maimony in Baath hamic-daſh, chap. 21. Origen. Heſychius.

And hereby, as all hold, the Lord would teach ſobriety to all his Miniſters, and to flie drunkenneſſe, and a delight in wine and ſtrong drink, as 1 Tim. 3. Then the Prieſt might drink none at all during the time of their ſervice when their courſes came, of which ſee 1 Chron. 24. for they were under the pedagogy of the law, but now drink a little wine, ſaith Saint Paul to Timothy, for thy ſtomacks ſake, &c. We may drink wine, of what calling ſoever we be, but exceſſe ought to be ſhunned, chiefly by Miniſters, as making them unapt to teach the truth, Eſa. 28. 7. Prov. 31. 5. and ſcandalizing them amongſt the people. Note.

Vers. 11. And that ye may teach the children of Israel all the Statutes, &c. Hereby it appeareth that the Priests did not onely teach in a dumb manner by figures, in the acting of which the legall service lay, but by a lively voyce with discretion and judgement, and this God imposed upon them as a dutie. And according to this it is said, The Priests lips shall preserve knowledge, &c. and Priests, that applied not themselves to teach, are inveighed against, as dumb dogs by the Prophet. And if any in the ministery having a charge of soules satisfie themselves with reading onely, or saying Masse with the Popish, they are under the same censure. For the Priests teaching, see also Deut. 33. 18.

Mal. 2. 7.

Note.

Quest. Now whereas at the beginning of this Passage it is said, the Lord spake unto Aaron, a question is made, why he spake now immediately to Aaron and not by Moses, as at other times?

Vatablus. Rickelius. Hesychius. Some answer, that it is to be understood, by the ministery of Moses. Some, that it was because this was sublimius mandatum, a charge of an higher nature, but neither rightly; for if the ministery of Moses had bin used herein, it would doubtlesse have been expressed as at other times, and if things of an higher nature were spoken to Aaron rather then to Moses, it must follow, that Aaron was in greater favour then Moses, which all know to be false. Here was a fault committed by Aarons sons, touching which Moses having spoken, now the Lord for further confirmation of his words, and that Aaron and his other sons might be more wary for time to come, speaketh immediately to Aaron, as afterwards when Aaron and Miriam were too blame; he spake to them both: Other reasons are rendered by some, as that God did thus to comfort him in his grief, as Cajetan, or to demonstrate him to be a Prophet, as Tostatus, or that this directly concerned the Priests, and therefore God gave the charge to Aaron the chief Priest, being now entered upon his office, as Willet. But I rest in that which I have already said, God spake, as in an extraordinary case, two of his sons being slain, to imprint the charge tending to prevent the like mischief hereafter more deeply in their minds.

Numb. 12. 6.

Caietan. Tostatus. Lorinus. Willet

Vers. 12, 13. Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the Lord, &c.] The History of this lamentable accident of the destruction of Nadab and Abihu being ended, together with the law against drinking wine upon that occasion, Moses now returneth to prosecute the matter before said to be in hand, chap 9. 17. for there an handfull of the meat-offering of the people was burnt, and touching the remainder nothing had been said hitherto. Wherefore of that it is here spoken Aaron and his sonnes are appointed to eat it in the holy place, that is, in the Court of the Lords house without leaven. For this see a Law before, Levit. 6. 16. but this being the first sacrifice offered for the people, Moses directeth Aaron and his sons to put that in execution now which was before enacted; so likewise they are bidden, vers. 14, 15. to eat the wave breast and the heave shoulder, as being their part appointed before, Exod. 29. 27. in which places the meaning and the mysteries of these things have been already set forth. Onely touching this shoulder and breast, something more is set down here, which was before wanting, viz. that Aarons whole family might eat hereof, both sonnes and daughters, whereas the males onely might eat of the meat-offering, and these might be eaten any where in Jerusalem in a clean place, the other in the Court of the Tabernacle onely, as Brentius hath well noted. Of this repetition of the same things Pelargus addeth another reason, because through the judgement and trouble hereby that hapned, it might be put out of their minds: and Willet another for their comfort, lest they should think God so displeased with them now, as that they might not eat of his sacrifices.

Calvin. Lorinus.

Vers. 14, 15.

Levit. 22. 11, 12.

Brentius. Pelargus. VVillet.

Vers. 16. And Moses sought diligently the goat of the sinne-offering, and behold it was burnt, &c.] This goat was that sinne-offering for the people spoken of chapter 9. 15. of which it is there said, He slew it, and offered it for sinne, as the first, that is, as the bullock, vers. 10. for himself, burning the flesh and skin without the Camp, vers. 11. but this he ought not to have done, seeing the flesh of all sin-offerings for the people was to be eaten by Aaron and his sons in the holy place, and so they were to bear the sins of the people, Levit. 6. 26. wherefore it being now done otherwise, Moses was angry, and told Eleazar and Ithamar Aarons sons that survived what they should have done, that they might beware of the like erring hereafter.

chapter

The cause that moved Moses to look so diligently to these things at this time was the judgement already executed for an errour committed by Aarons other two sons, fear danger towards them that remained for going from the directions of the Lord. And for this cause, I take it, he was angry not with Aaron, but with his sons, by whose ministry most probably the goat had been so contrary to Gods Ordinance burned. Solomon Jarchi saith, that for reverence to Aaron he turned his face from him to his sons, when he was angry. Sol. Iarchi.

Tostatus, he had respect to his great grief, for his two sonnes already lost, and therefore would not adde affliction to the afflicted. But the first is followed by Saint Augustine, and is most probable, the ministery and attendance upon that sacrifice belonged to Aarons sons, and therefore the errour was chiefly theirs. Touching the goat here said to be sought for, it was so plainly spoken of chapter 9. 15. that I cannot but wonder at Rabbi Solomons conceit, that there were three goats offered at this time, one for Naasson, the first of the 12. Princes, another becaus it was the first day of the moneth and a third at the consecration of the Priests, one of which is here meant, neither do I lesse wonder at that of Tostatus, who although he misliketh this, yet he is as far wide in holding Gamaliels goat, who was the eighth of the Princes that offered. And whereas it is said to have been burnt, chapter 9. 15. seemeth to be so plain, that this was done as Aarons own sin-offering had been done by, vers. 10, 11, that I cannot but think that of Tostatus again about this as strange, viz. that through the negligence of the Priests it was consumed by the fire where they sod and dressed flesh for themselves, for flesh cannot be burnt up by seething: and as strange is that of Augustine, that Aaron burnt it by divine inspiration, and of Cajetan, that seeing his sonnes destroyed by fire, he cast it into the fire, and of Procopius, that it was burnt with the same fire, wherewith Nadab and Abihu perished. Tostatus. Augustine. Cajetan. Procopius.

Calvin and others passe over this burning of the goat, as if it had been all laid upon the altar, because Aaron and his sonnes, as Brentius hath it, being now in heavinesse had no joy to feast with it. But it was certainly done through forgetfulnesse in Aarons sonnes, who though they had heard from Moses how every thing was to be ordered, yet coming to put it in practice, they did like forgetfull schollers burn this, as they had done their own sin-offering. Calvin. Brentius.

Behold the bloud of it was not brought within the holy place, ye should indeed have eaten it, &c.] It was a rule given in generall, Levit. 6. 30. No flesh may be eaten, the bloud whereof hath been brought into the Tabernacle, &c. But of other sin-offerings the Priests must eat the flesh, verse 26. and such was this goat, as we may see, Chapter 9. and therefore Moses taxeth the contrary being done at this time, as a fault from this rule. Vers. 18.

And Aaron said to Moses, behold they have this day offered their sinne-offering and burnt-offering, and such things have befalne me. If I had eaten the sinne-offering, to day should it have been accepted, &c.] They, that is, the sonnes of Israel have offered, so Targum Jonathan, the peace-offering and meat-offering which were also offered, are not mentioned, but understood. Vers. 19. Targum Jonathan.

The things, which he said had befalne him were both the death of his Junius.

ſons, and to be charged now in his other two ſons for not eating the ſin-offering, but burning it, ſo Junius, and thus he ſaith he did in effect acknowledge himſelf guilty of the ſame negligence and perturbation of mind, becauſe he ſpeaketh in the plurall numher, as not meaning that one accident onely of Gods judgement upon his ſons. But the Targum Jeroſolym, great ſorrow hath befalne me this day, for that my two ſons are dead, and I mourn for them, and Toſtatus likewiſe confuting Lyranus, that expounded it of the errour about the goat committed. And although he meant the death of his ſonnes onely, he might well ſpeak in the plurall number ſuch things, becauſe that one judgement filled him with many ſorrows. And the words following ſpoken in way of juſtifying this fact at this time, If I had eaten, ſhould it have been accepted, ſeem to make for this Expoſition He pleadeth the ſorrowfull caſe, in which he was, that would have made it unpleaſing before the Lord, if they had eaten. The Law requireth them that eat before the Lord to rejoyce, and when they brought their ſanctified things, they were to ſay, I have not eaten of it in my mourning, and a like paſſage there is, Hoſ. 9. 4. where the eating of ſinners is compared to the bread of mourners, as Ainſworth amplifieth it.

Targ. Hieroſolym. Toſtatus.

Deut. 12. 7. Deut. 26. 14. Ainſworth.

And hereupon Canons are made amongſt the Hebrews, that an inferiour Prieſt being in his ſervice about the Sanctuary, and hearing of the death of a friend, whom he ought to mourn for, ſhould forthwith ceaſe from his ſervice, becauſe he is now a mourner and his ſervice, if he ſhould perſiſt therein, would be polluted; but the high Prieſt upon the like occaſion ſerveth ſtill, and his ſervice is not prophaned, Levit. 21. 12. but the bread or holy things of the Sanctuary he might not eate, according to the ſaying of Aaron. Maimony. But here is little ground for theſe rules, if we underſtand the ſpeech of Aaron moſt rightly, which I take it, is thus. They, that is, my ſonnes have offered their ſinne-offering, and burnt-offering, (for becauſe he mentioneth theſe two onely, which were offered for the Prieſts, and not the meat-offering, and peace-offering, which were amongſt the ſacrifices for the people, it is more probable, that their ſacrifices were hereby meant, and not the peoples.)

Maimony of entring into the ſanctuary, chap. 2.

They have offered, which is the ſpeciall means of comming to be favourably accepted, and yet I have found by lamentable experience, that I have not beene accepted although herein wee have gone according to the Ordinance of the Lord, for in token of his anger hee hath ſlaine my two ſonnes for the errour, wherein he took them, if then in the greater dutie I have not been accepted, if I ſhould have eaten the goats fleſh as the Lord appointed, which is the leſſe, ſhould I now in this time of his wrath have been accepted before him? No, it is not probable; and therefore although his Law hath been by overſight tranſgreſſed in burning the goat, I hope he will pardon it to mee and my ſonnes, ſeeing they, with whom God is angry are unfit, till he is again pacified towards them to meditae for a reconciliation in reſpect of the ſinnes of others, which is the end of the Prieſts eating the ſin-offering of the people, as is expreſt, verſe 17.

And as for the mourning inwardly, which is a barre to eating of the ſacrifices, this was not yet ordained, but afterwards, as the places alledged ſhew, and therefore Aaron could not mean, that this mourning hindered him now from eating, and if this had beene the cauſe, and there had been a Law already for it, Moſes would not certainely have beene angrie with his ſonnes, or expoſtulated about it, ſeeing if they could not eate, becauſe polluted by ſorrow, the ſinne-offering not being for the eating of any others, muſt needs have beene burnt, becauſe that which was not eaten the ſame day muſt according to Gods Ordinance bee burnt.

And to the ſeconding of that, which I have ſaid, tendeth that of Am-Ambroſe, Aaron ate not now, becauſe hee did pœnitentiam agere, and of Cajetan hee did wiſely not to eate being under ſo great wrath of God. Ambroſe. Caietan.

And if ſo, that queſtion made by ſome, why God puniſhed the two eldeſt ſonnes of Aaron ſo ſeverely, but not the two younger being in as great an offence for going contrary to Gods Ordinance, falleth to the ground, becauſe although they faulted alſo, yet as things fell out, there was ſome good reaſon of their fact. Queſt.

But admitting that their ſinne were alike, yet God will glorifie his mercy in ſparing ſome, as his juſtice in puniſhing others; and it is not to be doubted, but that he had reſpect unto his own election of Aaron and his ſonnes to bee his Prieſts, not to extinguiſh quite the Prieſthood again ſo ſoon by taking them away for their fault alſo. Anſw.

If it bee demanded, why Moſes challenging the ſonnes of Aaron, hee anſwereth, and not they? Queſt.

It may bee ſaid, that Aaron found, that the thing reproved touched him chiefly, becauſe hee was the chiefe Prieſt, and his ſonnes in that, which they had done did but miniſter unto him, and therefore they for reverence of their father being preſent forbearing to anſwere, hee anſwereth, both for himſelf and them, ſo Lyranus.

And when Moſes heard it he was content.] That is, ſeeing, that there was ſome neceſſitie at this time of refraining from eating, hee ſtood no more upon the exact rule of the Law, againſt which it had beene burnt, becauſe ceremoniall Lawes upon ſome neceſſary occaſions have beene broken, and ſinne hath notwithſtanding not beene imputed, as in the caſe of Davids eating of the ſhew-bread, and giving to thoſe that were with him, and of Hezechiahs admitting ſome to the Paſſeover, which were not cleanſed according to the Law, but healed by the Lord. Borrheus thinketh, that hee bare with Aaron now in miſery out of humane commiſeration. Verſ. 20. Brentius, Ainſworth. Matth. 12. 3, 4. 2 Chron. 30. 18. Borentius.

And Calvin, becauſe hee found the fault to bee leſſe, then hee ſuppoſed. I cannot think with Lorinus, that hee deferred, becauſe of his preſent griefe to admoniſh him further of this ſinne, till afterwards, for it is ſaid, It was good in his eyes, Hebrew, that is, hee was ſatisfied, ſeeing by reaſon of the caſe, wherein the Prieſts now were, it could not have beene otherwiſe, although it cannot bee denied, but that they had faulted by overſight in burning the goat, as their own ſin-offering. Calvin.

CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

Vers. 2,3. Ainsworth.

These are the beasts which yee shall eate among all the beasts, that are on the earth. Whatsoever parteth the hoofe, and is cloven footed, and cheweth the cudd, &c.] In giving these Lawes, Ainsworth noteth, that God speaketh to Moses and Aaron, the Magistrate and the Priest, because both must teach, and see to the practice of them. And of this wee have examples, 2 Chronicles 29. 5. chapter, 30. 18. touching the Magistrate, and Ezechiel, 44. 23. touching the Priest, and Numbers. 9. 6. touching both joyntly. But this reason holdeth not alwayes, for God sometimes speaketh to them both together, as chapter 13. When no reason can bee rendered thereof, and sometime to Moses alone in things, that must come under the judgement of the Priest, as Chapter 14. And whereas they are bidden to speake these things to the Children of Israel, it may rightly be noted, that the Gentiles were not bound hereby, but onely the Israelites, so Solom. Jarchi.

Sol. Jarchi.

These are the beasts: The word translated beasts in the first place here is חיות living things, in the second בהמות beasts or cattell. But as in our English translation, so in the Septuagint, they are rendered both alike beasts. But the first word indeed setteth forth all living things, whether beasts, fishes, fowles or creeping things in generall, the next the four-footed beasts of the earth onely.

Parteth the hoofe, and is cloven footed. This word cloven footed is added for further expression, to shew that the foot parted both above and beneath, and not above onely is meant. For some beasts have partitions in their feet above, but beneath they are joyned together by a skinne, as the feete of Dogges, Hares and Conies, these although they be divided, yet because they are not cloven quite through, are not the beasts to bee eaten of, as is further expressed, v. 26.

The beasts, that are cloven footed and chew the cudd, are reckoned up to be ten onely, Deuteronomy 14. 4, 5. These were the onely clean beasts and none else in the world, yea, as the Rabbins note, if any unclean beast by ingendering with a cleane brought forth the young cloven footed, and chewing the cud, this young was notwithstanding uncleane, because it came of the unclean, and was not of the beasts kinde here described. Maimony.

Maimony of forbidden meats, chap. 1.

Vers. 4.

Nevertheless, these shall yee not eate of them, that chew the cud, or divide the hoofe, as the Cammel which cheweth the cud, and divideth not the hoofe, he shall be uncleane to you, &c. The distinction between beasts cleane and uncleane is not now first made, but long before, as wee may see, Genesis 7. 2. Where I have shewed that most probably Adam was at the first instructed herein by God, and he taught the same to his sonnes after him, and they to their children from generation to generation: but now it being a time of expressing all things by writing, this Law is also expressely set down. So that to eate of the clean onely, and to shun eating of the uncleane was a thing required at the first of all peoples, but now this difference being neglected generally in the world, the Lord, having chosen the Israelites peculiarly to be his people, injoyneth it unto them, leaving the rest in that confusion, to which they had degenerated.

Quest.

If it be demanded, how any living thing came to be unclean, seeing God made all things at the first very good?

Answ. Borrheus. Calvin.

It is answered by some, that this distinction came in after the fall of man, they were all at the first very good, but now some onely as wholesome for nourishment are allowed, as cleane to bee eaten, others not so wholesome are forbidden as uncleane. Yet even these are not uncleane in in their nature, but in their uſe: that is, men doe naturally abominate to eate of them, although by cuſtome ſome Nations have made it familiar to them to eate hereof, as Brentius ſaith. But what abomination it is to nature, to eate of a coney, or an hare, &c. I cannot ſee, and the fleſh of ſome things forbidden is alſo wholſome and good for nouriſhment. Wherefore I rather aſſent to Heſychius, that ſome living things were appointed to be avoyded as uncleane onely in a myſtery or figure, and yet in the particularizing of them, I hold that ſome reſpect was had to this, that thoſe which were leaſt wholſome or nutritive were forbidden: from whence we may inferre with Brentius, that even our bodies and preſent life are a care unto God, and therefore our ſoules much more.

Brentius.

Heſychius.

If it be demanded, what the myſtery or figure was? I anſwer, as the things, about which theſe Lawes were made, are divers, ſo the myſteries were divers, of which yet before I ſpeake, the Reader ſhall underſtand, that ſome inſiſt onely upon naturall reaſons of allowing or forbidding them.

Qu.

As that the beaſts, which chew the cud and divide the hoofe, are neither too moiſt, as thoſe that have no hoofes at all, nor too dry as thoſe which have hoofes, but not divided, and they that chew the cud, are of a temperate conſtitution, and therefore fitteſt for meate. Some yielde this reaſon, the ſolid hoofe and undivided is a ſigne of ferity, and ſuch as have the hoofe divided but chew not the cud, doe eate filthy things, as the ſwine. But theſe, and whatſoever naturall reaſons elſe can be brought, doe come ſhort of the true reaſons of theſe prohibitions: for the heavenly Phyſitian ſeeketh medicines for his ſicke not by the juice of hearbs, but by the myſteries of his Word, ſaith Origen. It is not likely that God herein tooke care ſo much for the body, but for the ſoule. By beaſts then myſtically are to be underſtood peoples, as was in a viſion ſhewed to Peter, Acts 10. 12. the cleane figured out the Jewes, and the uncleane the Gentiles, betwixt whom God by theſe conſtitutions made a diſtinction, as is expreſſed, Levit. 20. 25, 26. and by beaſts men are alſo ſet forth in divers other places, as Eſa. 11. 6, 7, 8. Ezech. 34. 31. Zeph. 3. 3. Matth. 7. 15. Now theſe beaſts in ſpeciall, which are here deſcribed, are allowed as clean, and the other forbidden as unclean, partly becauſe they are of a better and more temperate conſtitution, then thoſe, to ſhew that the Iſraelites the Church of God are more excellent in Gods account by his grace, then other heathen people, to which effect almoſt Junius ſpeaketh, and partly becauſe divers heathens had ſome of the beaſts here mentioned for unclean in greateſt account and ſacrificed them to their gods, as Swine, Lions, Aſſes, &c. As Aquinas ſaith, and on the contrary ſide the Egyptians held it abomination to kill or ſacrifice Sheepe and Oxen; therefore to ſhew how much they abhorred from the evill manners of theſe, God would have his people to kill and eate, and ſacrifice Sheepe and Oxen, and eſchew the other as abomination, and to ſhew by their abominating of ſuch meates, that God did likewiſe abominate the heathen, as unclean; ſo Brentius.

Lyranus:

Origen. Medicus noſter cœleſtis ægris ſuis non herbarum ſuccis, ſed verborum ſacramentis medicamenta conquirit.

Iunii analyſ. A ſwine was a ſpeciall ſacrifice for thoſe that were mad. Plautus. Th. Aquinas. The ſwine was ſacrificed to Ceres, ſaith Varro, l. 2. de re ruſt. c. 3

And laſtly, the beaſts appointed to be eaten as cleane did ſet forth virtues to be enſued, and the unclean vices to be abhorred by all the people of the Lord, and becauſe when God would have Peter afterwards to goe amongſt the Gentiles to preach, he ſhewed this by bidding him kill and eate, we may rightly gather, that the Lord would hereby have his to underſtand, that they ſhould have no communion with vicious and wicked men: And Brentius addeth yet another reaſon, that we might take notice of our naturall uncleanneſſe, ſeeking to be purged, becauſe if men were not uncleane nothing ſhould bee unclean to them. And theſe Lawes were alſo made to exerciſe obedience. More particularly then by the beaſts chewing the cud, and parting the hoofe are to be underſtood men meditameditating upon the Word of God, and exerciſing themſelves therein, Pſalme, 1. for the word is the food of the ſoul, Amos 8.11. and muſt being tried be kept. 1 Theſ. 5.21. Mal. 4.4. 1 Corinth. 11.2. and men diſcerning rightly the will of God by his Word, diſtinguiſhing aright betwixt the Law and the Goſpel, and walking with a right foot therein, Galat. 2.14. ſo Ainſworth, and before him Calvin, and the ancient fathers Tertullian, they divide the hoofe, who make the journeyes of their life by the ſure footing of innocency; and Auguſtine, the divided hoofe belongeth to manners, and chewing the cud to wiſedome. The divided hoofe, ſaith Irenæus, doth ſet forth the Father and the Sonne, to whom wee muſt goe by faith, lib. 5. cap. 8. Righteouſneſſe, ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus, is biſida, or of a divided hoofe, becauſe it ſanctifieth both here, and in the world to come. The divided hoofe, ſaith Thomas Aquinas, ſetteth forth either the Father and the Sonne, the two Teſtaments, or the two Natures of Chriſt. But Origen will have the diſcerning betwixt this life, and that which is to come, underſtood by dividing, and the calling of things backe to a ſpirituall ſenſe, by the chewing of the cud. Heſychius and Rupertus contrary to all others, will having eructing by good workes underſtood by chewing the cud, and dividing between the letter and the ſpirit by the divided hooſe.

Ainſworth.
Calvin.
Tertullian. lib. de cib. Iudaic. c. 3. qui firmo gradu innocentiæ vitæ itinera conficiunt.
Irenæus.
Clem. Alex.
Th. Aquin. 2. qu. 102. 2.
Origen. Hom 7. in Lev.
Heſychius
Rupert.

I thinke it beſt to hold to that of meditation meant by chewing the cud, and to this of diſtinguiſhing rightly betwixt the letter and the ſpirit, the Law and the Goſpel by parting the hoofe, unto which may be added to diſtinguiſh betwixt the good and the evil, to imbrace the one and eſchew the other, as in effect was firſt ſaid.

Note.

So then here is intimated, that if we would not be unclean beaſts, but clean, we muſt both meditate upon the Word dayly, and in our actions put a difference betwixt the good and the evil, not walking indifferently in either of them, and betwixt the literall and ſpirituall ſenſe of the word, leſt cleaving to the letter of the Law onely we erre with the veiled Jewes, and other Hereticks. If we either meditate upon the word onely but walke not accordingly, or diſtinguiſh onely between good and evil, but exerciſe not our ſelves in the word, we are judged as unclean, as if we neither meditated nor diſtinguiſhed at all: becauſe in our exacteſt walking there are errours from which we are not ſanctified, but by the Word, John 17.17.

Verſ. 4.

The Camel becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoofe, ſhall be unclean to you.] The Camel is a beaſt with a long neck, having a bunch on his back, upon which a burthen might be laid and carried, he hath his name from גמל to recompenſe, becauſe he recompenſeth abundantly with his labour his keeper for his meat.

Ariſtot. lib. 3. de part. animal.

He cheweth the cud, ſaith Ariſtotle for the defect of teeth above, as horned beaſts doe, and the matter that ſhould goe to thoſe teeth is ſpent in ſtrengthning the palat of his mouth. He divideth not the hoofe, that is, not clean through, but a skinne and ſome fleſh cloſing all the fiſſures together underneath. The Camel is noted by Ariſtotle to be the largeſt of all beaſts, that are cloven footed, for which cauſe hee is ſpoken of as moſt oppoſite to a little gnat in that Proverbe, They ſtrain at a gnat, and ſwallow a Camel.

Ariſt. hiſt. anim. lib. 9. c. 50.

For their properties, they are 1. Obedient to their keepers, for Abrahams ſervant is ſaid to have made his Camels to kneel down, Geneſis 24. 2. They are very ſwift upon the way, eſpecially the Dromades, that come of them. Ariſtotle ſaith, they exceed in ſwiftneſſe the Niſſan horſes through the greatneſſe of their ſtride. 3. The Camel is a great enemy to an horſe, ſo that with his ſight and ſtrong ſmell he terrifieth the horſe, and maketh him to flee. 4. The Camel hath a bunch on his back ſignifying the ſwelling of pride, whereupon it is ſaid, as a Camel cannot go through the eye of a needle, &c. 5. The Camel abhorreth inceſtuous copulation with the damme.

eye

Chap. 47.

Ariſtotle ſaith, that one having covered the damme of a certain Camel with a cloth, and ſo deceived him, when the cloth being taken away, he perceived that he had covered his damme, he ran to his keeper that had done it, and bit him that he died. 6. The Camel can go without drink 4 daies, but when he drinketh, he loveth to drink troubled and thick water. 7. The female having brought forth doth not again couple with the male in an whole yeare. 8. The Camel liveth to 100. years, of all which the ſaid Ariſtotle ſpeaketh. Now whereas Camels fleſh is forbidden to be eaten, and the fleſh of ſome other beaſts as unclean, the Rabbins except, if Jewiſh ſouldiers come into an enemies Countrey, and can get none other meat to eat, they may in the caſe of neceſſitie eat Camels or ſwines fleſh, &c. That men of other Countreyes did eat Camels fleſh appeareth, becauſe it is a common meat amongſt the Arabians, at this day, and of old according to Diodorus. And before a Perſian King for oſtentation was ſet an whole Camel roſted by his Cooke; ſo. Athenæus and Heliogabalus is ſaid to have eaten cocks combs, and Camels heels being cut from them alive. And the Turks feed their gally-ſlaves with Camels fleſh at this day. But Galen ſaith, that it is unwholſome meat.

Maimony treatiſe of Kings, chap. 8. 2 King. 6.25. Diodorus, lib. 3. c. 5. Athenæi, lib. 4. Galen. lib. de aliment. facul.

The myſtery of the Camels fleſh forbidden to be eaten may be firſt to ſhew, that a man ſhould not remember a wrong done to him to be revenged for it, becauſe the Camel is noted to remember injuries a long time. 2. That a man ſhould flee pride like the bunch on the Camels back hindering him from entring into Heaven. 3. That a man ſhould not reade the Scripture, as the Jewes doe, without diſtinguiſhing between the ſpirituall and literall ſenſe, as the Camel cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoofe. And what other ill properties of the Camel have bin ſet down before may be likewiſe applied, and the good to condemn much more thoſe that come ſhort of that goodneſſe, if an unclean doth ſo, how much ſhould we be aſhamed to be worſe then it for abſtinence, chaſtitie, &c.

Baſil. Hexam. Hom. 8. Ambroſ. lib. 8. in Luc. Heſychius. Hieron. in Zachar.

The conie alſo becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoofe, ſhall be unclean to you. Verſ. 5.

The word tranſlated coney, is שפן to hide in holes, whereupon Prov. 30.26. it is ſaid, The conies make their houſes in the rocks, Pſalm. 104.18. The rocks are a ſhelter for the conies. After the Camel the greateſt of cloven footed beaſts, the conie, the leaſt is named, ſaith Cirillus Alexandrinus to include all others of the like ſort between theſe. The Septuagint render this word χοιρογρύλλιος and ſome hereupon tranſlate it chærogrill, or Hedghog, and Heſychius, Hiſtrix, Echinus. Jnnius, Mus montanus, which he ſaith, is a beaſt not greater then an Hedghog, partly like a Mouſe, and partly like a Beare, being called in Paleſtine for this ἀρκτομύς and of them there are great abundance in thoſe parts, and they keep in the cavernes of rocks and holes of the earth, all which hee hath from Hieronym. and he inclineth the rather to this, becauſe a coney is of the kind of an hare next mentioned, and therefore it is not probable, that it ſhould be mentioned, but underſtood under that. But this is no reaſon, ſeeing a Coney differeth much from an Hare, for that it liveth in holes of the earth, as an Hare doth not, and amongſt the fowles afterwards, things, that are as like as the Coney and the Hare are mentioned ſeverally, as the Eagle, Oſſifrage and Oſprey, the great Owle and the little Owle; and laſtly, the Coney agreeth to this deſcription, as a Mouſe or Hedgehog doe not, for it cheweth the cud, but theſe not, and whether the mountain Mouſe doth ſo or not I cannot tell, and therefore I rather underſtand a Coney to be meant here.

Cyril. Alex.

Heſychius. Iunius annot.

The properties of a Coney are. 1. That it skippeth and leapeth, being for this called by the Caldee Taphſa, a skipper. 2. It is dangerous for undermining of walls. Pliny writeth, that Majorica an Iſland, was ruinated by the burrowing of Conies, and a town in Spain, as one in Theſſaly was by Moles. 3. The Conie is very timerous, and ready to run away at the leaſt noiſe. 4. So ſoon as ſhe hath kindled, ſhe goeth to buck again, to ſay nothing of the propertie here expreſſed, that ſhe divideth not the hoofe, but cheweth the cud which ſhe hath in common with the Camel and Hare. In forbidding the Conie to be eaten, then levitie and vanitie in our gate is forbidden, as ſet forth by the skipping and leaping thereof, and treacherous undermining and circumventing of our neighbour, ſet forth by the Conies burrowing; and to be fearfull and unbelieving, and libidinous and unſatiable in fleſhly luſts.

Plin. lib. 8. c. 29

Verſ. 6. Touching the Hare, verſ. 6. upon the ſame reaſon forbidden; ſome have held, that it was forbidden the Jewes, becauſe in colour like the Aſſe, whom they did venerate, and for the ſwiftneſſe in running counted a divine creature, as Plutarch; or becauſe all are females amongſt them, and there is no diſtinction of ſexe, as Geſner and Munſter, becauſe the word ארנבת ſignifying the Hare is feminine. But all men know, that there are both males and females, and howſoever the Egyptians had the Hare in ſuch venerable account, yet the Jews were directed in all things to be oppoſite unto them.

Plutarch. lib. 4 Sympoſ. qu. 3. Geſner. Munſter.

The properties of the Hare are the ſame with the Conie, ſaving that the Hare burroweth not, as the Conie doth, and moreover the Hare, as ſhe hath very long ears, ſo ſhe excelleth in hearing, for which cauſe the Egyptians in their Hieroglyphicks expreſſed the ſenſe of hearing by an Hare. Again, the Hare hath the name from ארב to lie in waite, becauſe all men lie in wait for her, and purſue her.

And laſtly, the Hare in ſleeping ſhutteth not the eyes, and is very dull ſighted, to ſay nothing of her ſwiftneſſe of foote, and up hill more then down hill, becauſe her hinder legges are longer then her fore legges In that the Hare having theſe properties was forbidden to be eaten, it was to intimate that we ſhould not be light of hearing ſlanderous reports and tales againſt our neighbours, or ready with our feet to run to doe evill, or to put on headily in unknown wayes without due advice and deliberation, or ſuch as for our ill deſerts men doe lie in waite for, as willing to deſtroy us; or laſtly, dim ſighted in ſpirituall things.

Verſ. 7. And the Swine, although he divideth the hoofe, yet becauſe he cheweth not the cud, ſhall be unclean to you.] The word חזיר a Swine ſignifieth to return or wallow, wherefore it hath the name in Hebrew from wallowing in the mire, in Greeke χοῖρος of χέρας filthineſſe, and in Latine Porcus, quaſi Spurcus filthy.

Tacitus. Plutarch. de hiſt. 8. 22.

Tacitus hath deviſed this for a reaſon, why the Jewes ate no ſwines fleſh, viz. becauſe it breedeth the leproſie. Plutarch, becauſe Adonis, whom Bacchus loved, who was worſhipped of the Jewes, was ſlain by a Boare; and becauſe the Swine by rooting in the ſoft ground in Egypt ſerved in ſtead of a plow. But theſe are farre fetcht, and experience teacheth, that ſwines fleſh eating breedeth no leproſie.

The true reaſon is ſet down in the Text, the ſwine parteth the hoofe, but cheweth not the cud, wherefore God would hereby teach us not to make a ſhew of good workes being without all ſoundneſſe of knowledge and grace within, as Hypocrites doe. Moreover, reſpect was doubtleſſe had alſo to the properties of the ſwine, which are firſt feeding upon filthy things, and wallowing in the mire, and making more account hereof, then of Pearles, for theſe the ſwine trampleth under his feet. 2. The ſwine diggeth in the ground, and turneth it up with the ſnout. 3. Hee eateth huskes and ſhells without ſubſtance in them. 4. The legion of Devils entered into an herd of ſwine. 5. The ſwine being waſhed returneth to wallowing in the mire. 6. The ſwine never looketh upward, but alwayes to the ground, wherefore being caſt upon the backe, the ſtrange unwonted unwonted ſight of Heaven above being ſeen, cauſeth him to ſtay his clamour; ſo Plutarch. 7. The ſwine in all his life time is good for nothing, but is nouriſhed up onely againſt the day of ſlaughter. 8. Having loſt any one of his eyes he dieth forthwith; ſo Ariſtotle. 9. The ſwine onely of all thoſe beaſts, that bring forth many at once bringeth them forth perfect, and not blinde. 10. The ſwine is more prone to luſt then other beaſts, for they couple at eight moneths old, and the males are ſo eager in the purſuit of their luſt, that they will fight moſt eagerly one with another. 11. The ſwine is given onely to his belly and feeding, and is moſt dull and indocile, wherefore the life and ſoule, ſaith Cleanthes, is given to a ſwine onely as ſalt to keepe the fleſh from putrifying. Wherefore Gods debarring of his people ſwines fleſh, was alſo to ſhew, that we ſhould not delight in the filthineſſe of ſinne, or have familiaritie with filthy wicked perſons; ſo Lactantius applieth it, and Clemens Alexandrinus, but the Pearles of divine inſtructions we ſhould contrariwiſe have in ſingular account. 2. That we ſhould not roote up the Vine of God, which is his Church, as wilde Boares doe, but rather plant and ſettle it. 3. That wee ſhould not feede upon vanities here, but containing earthly things feede in our mindes upon ſpirituall by muſing thereon. 4. That we muſt not bee ſo given to the belly, leſt the Devill, who deſireth to enter into ſuch, poſſeſſe us and carry us into perdition. 5. That being once waſhed by repentance wee ſhould never relapſe, living in thoſe ſinnes againe which wee have left. 6. That wee ſhould be heavenly minded. 7. That wee ſhould be full of good deeds, and not live altogether to our ſelves, leſt wee be ſlain in the end, as being ordained thereunto. 8. That the ſoule dieth for want of knowledge, which is the eye thereof. 9. That the impure wicked have more proſperity oft times here, then the Godly. 10. That wee ſhould not ſuffer luſts to reigne in our mortall bodies, but mortifie them. 11. That wee ſhould be eaſie to be taught and inſtructed in thoſe things that be good, ſetting our minds upon them.

Luc. 15. Matth. 8. 32.

Plutarch. 4. Sympoſ. c. 5. Ariſtot. hiſtor. animal. lib. 6. c. 18.

Cleanthes anima ſui data eſt proſale, ne carnes putreſcant.

Lactant. lib. 4. c. 17. Clem. Alex 3. pædag. c. 11. Pſal. 80. 14.

Phil. 3. 19.

For refraining from ſwines fleſh, eſpecially the Jewes have beene moſt noted, and their faith hath beene exerciſed by Tyrants preſſing them hereunto, or killing them. And of the Jewes, the Arabians and Indians, learned to abſtaine from ſwines fleſh, and the Phœnicians, and Scythians would not ſuffer any ſwine at all to bee kept in their Countreyes; and in Crete they would eate no ſwines fleſh, becauſe a Sow giving ſucke to Jupiter being a childe, her gruntling drowned his crying ſo, that it could not bee heard; and therefore in Myſia, wherein there was a Temple of Jupiter, it was counted a moſt hainous thing to kill, or to eate of a ſwine.

Herodian. lib. 4.

Of their fleſh ſhall yee not eate, and their carkaſſe ſhall yee not touch.] Here have but foure ſorts yet been named; the Camel, Conie, Hare and Swine, but by theſe all other like beaſts are to bee underſtood, according to the generall rule, verſe 4. of the touching of the carkaſſe of an uncleane beaſt it was ſpoken before, Chapter, 5. 2, 3. It is not meant either there or here, that theſe beaſts might not be touched being alive, but dead, in which caſe onely they are carkaſſes, becauſe the Cammel and Aſſe, &c. being for ſervice muſt be touched: And by the carkaſſe of one of theſe is not onely meant of them dying alone, but alſo if they were killed; yet of clean beaſts the carkaſſe was not unclean if they were killed, but onely in caſe that they died alone.

Verſ. 7.

Rab. Solomon reſtraineth this prohibition of touching the carkaſſe to a Prieſt onely alledging, Leviticus, 21. 1. but theſe Lawes are plainely given to all the people, and in the place alledged nothing is ſpoken of the carkaſſe of a beaſt, but of a man, called נפש this hee is forbidden to touch; of the myſtery of this Law againſt touching a carkaſſe, ſee before, ch. 5. 2.

R. Solomon

Verſ. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Theſe ſhall yee eate of all that are in the waters, whatſoever hath finnes and ſcales, &c.] The finnes of fiſhes are thoſe, whereby they guide their way, being as wings unto them; and the ſcales thoſe that grow all over the body and cover it, the Rabbines note, that whatſoever hath finnes, hath ſcales alſo, and if a fiſh hath but one finne and one ſcale onely, it is lawfull, becauſe the Hebrew word here is ſingular, finne and ſcale. Maimony, but one is both here, and often put for many, neither was there ever any fiſh ſeene with one onely.

Maimony of forbidden meats, chap. 1. ſect. 24.

The word tranſlated finnes, Senappir, is onely found here, and Deuteronomy, 14. 9, 10. it is rendered by the Septuagint, πτερύγια wings, becauſe there is the ſame uſe of finnes unto fiſhes, that there is of wings unto Birds, the finnes on each ſide ſerve them to move withall right forward, and that on the taile to turne any way, as the Fowles taile ſerveth for an help to her herein; and to ſome finnes ſerve in ſtead of feete to goe upon, when they are out of the water, as Pliny writeth; and from the Fiſhes taile, whereby he turneth his body, hee thinketh that the invention of the rudder in veſſels upon the water was taken. The word, Haſkeſeth a ſcale, is rendred in Greek λεπις, whence commeth λεπρὸς a Leper, becauſe there is ſome ſimilitude to the eye outwardly betwixt the ſcurfe of Leproſie, and ſcales.

Plin. lib. 7. cap. 57.

Theſe two finnes and ſcales are generall markes of cleane fiſhes, and they that want them are uncleane, and all things elſe that live and move in the waters, that is, wormes, horſeleaches, and the wilde beaſts of the the Sea, as Sea dogges, frogges, &c. as Maimony explaineth it. All theſe uncleane things muſt be had in abomination, therefore it was not lawfull, ſaith Cazkuni, to make merchandize of them. Here are none named, as amongſt the unclean beaſts, becauſe the Hebrewes had no particular names for them, ſeeing they were not, as other living creatures, brought before Adam to be named.

Maimony.

Caskuni.

Isnius.

If it ſhould ſeem that they had names, becauſe the Whale is called Leviathan, it is anſwered, this name is not proper, but appellative from Lavah, ſignifying to joyne together, becauſe his ſcales are ſo joyned together, that they cannot be parted as the Lord ſpeaketh of him; as the Elephant is there called Behemoth a Beaſt, becauſe the greateſt of Beaſts.

That reaſon of paſſing over fiſhes without naming any of them, which is brought by Heſychius, viz. that by fiſhes the believing Gentiles are ſet forth, who deſire not to have their names written in earth, is of little force, for why then are the cleane beaſts ſerving to figure out the faithfull alſo here named? Wherefore I reſt in the former, onely we may adde, that becauſe no ſacrifice was to be made of Fiſhes, and God was moſt carefull to diſtinguiſh betwixt the cleane and uncleane in thoſe creatures, that were for ſacrifice, he paſſeth over Fiſhes more lightly not ſtanding to name any particulars.

Heſychius

Note.

And herein we may obſerve again the oppoſition, that God would have betwixt his people and the Heathen. The Egyptians and thoſe of the Iſle Pharos and the Bactrians ſacrificed Eeles, but chiefly the Syrians and Phœnicians prized Fiſh for ſacrifices, and Dagon the Philiſtines idoll had the name from a Fiſh, being alſo like a Fiſh from the navell downward, and like a man from thence upward, therefore the Iſraelites muſt not ſacrifice any Fiſh.

The Myſtery.

Touching finnes and ſcales, the Lord in allowing Fiſhes to bee eaten, as cleane, which had theſe, but forbidding others, that wanted them, would myſtically teach, that wee muſt have the finnes of Faith like wings carrying us above the mudd of incredulitie into the Lords ner, and not to bee altogether carnall, like thoſe Fiſhes that want ſcales; ſo Origen and Theodoret likewiſe, theſe Fiſhes ſet forth ſuch as are indued with the Origen.

Theodoret.

finnes

finnes of Faith, and are every where compaſſed about with the ornaments of virtue, as with ſcales, ſo as the carnall are not. And the carrying of the finnes of Faith into Gods net is by Gregory otherwiſe ſet forth; ſaying, hereby is figured skipping and aſcending by heavenly Contemplations.

Qui primis fidei præditi virtutis ornamentis quaſi quamvis undique ambiuntur. Greg. Hom. 32. in Evang.

Iſidore by thoſe without ſcales will have the Leves, elubrici, & effœminati ſet forth, but it is better to reſt in the more generall of Origen before, and that of ſome others, by Faith we muſt direct our going as by finnes in all things, and bee clad all over with the ſcales of good works.

Iſidor.

Heſychius is farre wide in applying the ſcales to the ſcales of ignorance, which fall from their eyes, that meditate in the Scriptures. And hitherto of the myſtery of theſe things; now of refraining from Fiſhes, that have neither finnes nor ſcales, a naturall reaſon alſo may be yielded, becauſe they are more moiſt, and through living in the mud and want of motion not ſo wholeſome.

Heſychius.

Toſtatus

Rabbi Moſes Gerundenſ. by Fiſh with ſcales, that may be rubbed off, are meant, becauſe the Whale hath great ſcales, but yet is not uſed for meat, which note I thinke is not to be rejected: For the properties of Fiſhes, ſee before, Gen. 1.

R. Moſes. Gerund.

And theſe are they, which yee ſhall have in abomination among the fowles, the Eagle, the Oſſifrage and the Oſprey, &c.] In ſpeaking of Fowles the Lord ſetteth downe no markes to know the cleane and uncleane by, as of beaſts and fiſhes, but enumerateth the particulars uncleane. Yet Toſtatus giveth two markes, if they have a liver or ſpurre, they are clean, and Oleaſter three markes of the uncleane, their rapacitie, their talents, their great gullet, and indeede all the Fowles almoſt here forbidden are very ravenous, and therefore Lyranus holdeth, that they are forbidden to taxe the vice of capacitie:

Verſ. 13.

Toſtatus. Oleaſter. Lyranus.

But Toſtatus contendeth, that their evill conſtitution being exceeding hot and dry is the cauſe, why they are pronounced uncleane and not to be eaten. This I grant may be a naturall reaſon, but not all, ſeeing all things here ſpoken of are myſticall and figurative: under the prohibition of theſe Fowles, then which be of evill qualitie, the vices of men are forbidden, as Heſychius ſaith.

Toſtatus. Heſychius.

1. The Eagle in Hebrew נשר is derived by ſome from נוא to breake, and שור to ſee, becauſe he breaketh and teareth in pieces his prey, and is moſt ſharp ſighted. In Greeke he is called ἀετὸς from ἐτὸς, a yeare becauſe of his annoſa vita, his long life, in latine, aquila, from aquilo the North, becauſe of his violence like the North-winde. The Eagle is a fit Embleme of a Tyrant, and therefore, Deuteronomy, 28. 49. The Nation threatned to be brought againſt Iſrael ſinning is compared to an Eagle, Job 39. 30. She is a bloud ſucker, and is amongſt the ſlain, and unto Eagles perſecutors are compared, Lamentations, 4. 19. Jer. 4. 13. chap. 48 40. Hoſ. 8. 1. Hab. 1. 8, Wherefore the Lord in forbidding the Eagle forbiddeth myſtically all violence and wrong, all crueltie and bloud thirſtineſſe.

The Eagle.

2. The Eagle flieth aloft, Job. 39. 27. and buildeth her neaſt on high, ſetting forth hereby thoſe, that are lifted up by pride, as Jer. 44 16. Though thou make thy neſt as high as the Eagle, ſaith the Lord of proud Edom, I will bring thee down, we muſt not then ſoare aloft by pride and ambition, as the Eagle.

3. The Eagle preyeth upon dead carcaſſes, and picketh out the eyes firſt, to which it is alluded, Proverbs, 30. 17. and herein he doth aptly ſet forth Heretickes putting out the eye of right knowledge in thoſe that they prey upon being dead in ſinne; divers other obſervable things there bee in the Eagle, but I have ſpoken of them, Geneſis 1. in my Sermons, mons, and they ſerve to ſet forth good, and therefore it were improper to bring them in here, as ſome doe, where the Eagle is propounded as uncleane, and to be had in abomination, and therefore ſuch properties onely are here to be looked at, as doe denote vices not virtue.

The Oſſifrage. Next to the Eagle is the Oſſifrage, by the Septuagint rendered Griphin, in Hebrew פֶּרֶס from breaking, becauſe it breaketh the bones of the Fowles that it preyeth upon; an Oſſifrage is a bone breaker, it is ſomewhat greater then an Eagle, but otherwiſe like it, being mentioned onely here, and Deut. 14. 12.

Lyranus. Iſidor. A Griphin, as a Griphin is deſcribed, this cannot be, that is a Fowle foure footed winged like an Eagle, and of that great ſtrength, that he is able to take up horſe and man with his talons, and keepeth about the Northerly mountains to defend the gold there. For no man yet ever ſaw ſuch a Fowle, according to Origen, no man hath heard and can remember, that ever any Griphins fleſh came into mans hands. That which is then written of the Griphin is no better then that of Pegaſus, the winged horſe of Heaven, unleſſe by γρυψ a Griphin, an Oſſifrage be meant, ſo called alſo from γρυτος crooked, becauſe of the crooked talons, and beake.

Origen.

Ariſt. lib. 9. c. 24 This Fowle is not ſo quick ſighted as the Eagle, but very dimme, and herein he differeth from him. Under the Oſſifrage then is forbidden ignorance, and want of ſight into divine things, according to that Eph. 5. 17. Be not unwiſe, but underſtand what the will of the Lord is, And becauſe this Fowle teareth off the fleſh, and breaketh the bones of the prey being taken with great violence, griping and oppreſſing of the poore is hereby forbidden; for the Prophet deſcribing oppreſſours, ſaith likewiſe of them, M. cha. 4. 2. They plucke off their skinnes and fleſh from their bones, and chop them in pieces as for the pot. Yet there is one good propertie in this Fowle, ſhee nouriſheth up both her own birds and thoſe of the Eagle alſo, which are caſt out, charitie is not acceptable at an oppreſſors hands, unleſſe he turn and make reſtitution, as Luk. 19. 1.

The Oſprey Touching the Oſprey, this is rendered by Willet, the Sea Eagle, and by the Septuagint indeed it is rendered by this word ἁλιαέτος the Sea Eagle, and therefore he will have the Oſprey to bee nothing elſe but the Oſſifrage ſet forth alſo by this other word, bone-breaker, or preyer upon bones. But the Hebrew word is עזניה from ſtrength in ſight, ſaith Junius, being able to behold the ſunne in the full brightneſſe, and if any of her young ones cannot doe the like, ſhe killeth them, but nouriſheth up the reſt, but ſome will have this name given to this Fowle from ſtrength in flying.

Iunius.

The name Oſprey is doubtleſſe the moſt fit proper name, and the name Sea Eagle, a name further deſcribing her to be a kinde of Eagle, but ſeeking the prey upon the waters, as the other doth upon the land, being of as great force to breake bones as the Oſſifrage, and it hath a great necke and broad taile, and eſpieth through the ſtrength of her ſight fiſhes in the Sea, or in Lakes, and falleth violently upon the waters and taketh them.

Ainſworth.

Ariſt. hiſt. anim. lib. 9. cap. 24. And as Ariſtotle writeth, if the prey taken be too heavie for her to carry, ſhe falleth downe againe with it into the deepe; a fit type of a covetous man falling into noyſome and fooliſh luſts, that drowne the ſoul in perdition. Every kinde of Eagle, becauſe the Eagle was ſpecially eſteemed of amongſt the Heathen, as a bringer of good lucke, when they went to warres, muſt bee had in abomination amongſt the Iſraelites.

1 Tim. 6. 9.

Verſ. 14. Iunius. VVillet. And the Vultur, and the Kite after his kinde.] Junius and Tremell. reade Kite firſt, and ſo doth the Vulgar Latine; and Willet conſidering the name ראה ſignifying to flie, holdeth that a Kite is rather meant hereby, hereby, becauſe the Kite flieth in a ſingular manner even gliding as it were in the aire, whence it is alſo called a Glede, and the Vultur is heavy and ſlow in flying, and therefore it is not likely, that it ſhould be ſet forth by ſuch a name

Moreover, אי֫ה the ſecond word here uſed is alſo had Job 28. 7. and is commonly tranſlated Vulture, as by the Septuagint γυπὸς, and Montanus, &c. For of γυπὸς cometh a Geyre, or Vulture, and holes in the earth are called γυπιαὶ, becauſe ſo much frequented by them. The word אי֫ה ſignifieth an Iſland, and therefore ſerveth moſt fitly to expreſſe a Vulture, that keepeth in ſolitary places, ſuch as many Iſlands are. And the Latine word Milvus a Kite, is thought by ſome to come à Molliter volando, becauſe ſhe flieth ſo gently. And in our new tranſlation, Deuteronomy 14. 13. ריה֫ not ראה֫ is rendered a Vultur, and yet ראה֫ which is neareſt this word is alſo there uſed, for ר for the likeneſſe to ד may eaſily be turned into it, as Ainſworth noteth. But ſ by ראה֫ we underſtand a Vultur here, as derived from flying, ראה֫ which cometh from ſeeing will much more agree unto him, becauſe he ſeeth very farre off, and ſo maketh towards his prey.

If by the firſt here we underſtand the Kite, the forbidding of his fleſh ſerved to note out that qualitie of gliding ſtilly in the Aire without any noiſe till he ſpieth his prey, but then he falleth ſuddenly down upon it; to have the Kite in abomination is myſtically then to abhorre from the ſlie and ſubtile practices of the devill and wicked men to make a prey of others: for they alſo are noted to crouch and bow themſelves, till men fall into their nets. 2. The Kite is noted not to prey upon wilde birds, that flie about, but upon Domeſticke, that are alwayes picking and ſcraping for a graine upon the ground, like the Devill, who prayeth upon thoſe that are intent through the carnalitie of their mindes to the graine of profit or pleaſure, that we may take heed of being ſuch. 3. The Kite is ſo hungry, that hee is bold oft times to come even to childrens hands, and to ſnatch their victuals from them; wherein he ſetteth forth ſturdy thieves and robbers, from whoſe courſes we muſt abhorre. 4. The Kite although he be fierce, and will fly at any thing at the firſt, yet he afterwards groweth ſo cowardly and ſlothfull, that hee will not, neither dare ſet upon the leaſt, as a Gnat or the like, ſhewing, as Saint Geminian hath it, that they, who begin in the Spirit, but end in the fleſh are abominable before God. 5. The Kite eateth carrion, and not corne, to ſet forth worldly minded men, that care not for the ſeede of the Word. 6. The Kite taketh from the Raven that which he hath gotten, to ſhew, as Auguſtine hath it, that hee ſhall bee in his wealth a prey unto others greater who preyeth upon others leſſer to inrich himſelfe. 7. Preachers, that dare not ſpeake againſt the ſinnes of Princes and great men oppreſſours, but dare boldly ſpeake againſt ſimple and meane perſons, are by Berchorius compared to the Kite, which maketh havocke of young pullery, but dareth not to ſet upon ſtronger fowles.

The Kite.

Pſalm. 10. 10.

Gal. 3. 3.

Auguſt. prædo es minoris ut ſis præda majoris.

Berchor. lib. 7. moral. cap. 48.

Touching the Vultur, ſhee is noted to envie her young ones waxing fatte, and to beate them with her wings to macerate them, this Fowle therefore is forbidden, to ſhew that Parents ſhould abhorre from this ill qualitie to bear a ſpleen againſt their children for their thrift in grace, as Saul did againſt Jonathan, and the Jewes againſt their children imbracing the Chriſtian religion; for Parents ſaith the Lord, ſhall be againſt their children, &c.

The Vultur. Plinius.

2. The Vultur is of that quick ſmelling, that ſhe can ſmell carrion from one ſide of the Sea to another to flie to it, to denote thoſe, that by the carrion of ſuperſtition are carried to Rome and other parts beyond the Seas.

3. Although

3. Although the Vulturs fleſh be not fit for meat, yet of the fat thereof an ointment is made, which healeth ſicke and diſeaſed cattell: ſo although it be evill to company with the wicked, yet they are uſed oftimes as a rod by God for the chaſticement and ſoules health of his people.

Baſil. Hom. 11. de invidia. 4. The Vultur preyeth not upon things alive but dead, ſo ſaith Baſil, the envious man, if hee ſeeth any thing good in another, hee medleth not with that to ſpeake thereof to his commendation, but if hee ſeeth any thing evill, that hee carpeth at, from which vile quality wee muſt bee farre. Of other properties of the vultur, ſee Geneſis 1. in my Sermons.

Verſ. 15. The Raven. Every Raven after his kinde.] The word in Hebrew, is עֹרֵב ſignifying mixture, and hereby is ſet forth the evening for the mixture of light and darkeneſſe therein, the Raven is thus called, becauſe ſome of the kinde are of a mixed colour, white and blacke. For becauſe not one kinde onely is meant, but more, as the Crow, the Cuddow and the Pie, it is ſaid, after his kinde. In Greeke it is called κόραξ from the noiſe that it maketh, and in Engliſh Raven, from ravening.

Ambroſe. The Raven alſo feedeth upon carrion, and therefore is an uncleane bird, and as ſome thinke, becauſe the Raven was offered in ſacrifice by the Heathen. The Raven is noted to bee unkinde to the young, neglecting to give them foode, whereupon they are conſtrained to run up and downe crying, to which it is alluded, Pſalme 147. 9. Hee giveth foode to the young Ravens when they cry, and therefore the young being growne up ſometimes, ſet upon the old, and beate them being unable to reſiſt.

Aelianus. Aelian. lib. 3. De Animal. cap. 43. In forbidding the Raven then, unnaturalneſſe in Parents towards their children is forbidden, and undutifulneſſe and rebellion in children againſt their Parents. 2. Touching the Raven, it is ſingularly noted, that being ſent out of the Arke, it returned no more; whereupon Heſychius. Heſychius, it hath no naturall affection to the place where it had beene kept, like Judas towards Chriſt. 3.

Hugo. The Raven crieth cras, to morrow, to ſhew that we muſt not deferre our repentance till to morrow; ſo Hugo. 5. The Raven and Foxe Ariſtot. lib 9. hiſt. cap. 1. are in a league together, but at enmity with the Hauke; ſo are the oppreſſour and deceiver. 5. The Raven picketh out the eyes of a dead carkaſſe firſt and chiefly. Prov. 30. 17. and keepeth in ſolitary places, and flyeth about in the darke, wherefore we muſt not love darkneſſe, nor blindfold mens eyes, to prey upon them, by deceiving them. Who ſo doth thus, is like the devil, a moſt fit embleme of whom is the Raven, and here

Pliny. Genebrard. Chron. it is moſt remarkable, which Pliny relateth, a ſolemne funerall was once celebrated of a Raven in Rome, which Genebrard noteth to have bin done one year before the paſſion of Chriſt Jeſus, to ſignifie the death and overthrow as it were of the devil, which ſhould be ſoon after amongſt the Gentiles, his kingdome ſtanding in idolatry being beaten down.

Verſ. 16. The Owle, the night hauke, the Cuckow, and the Hauk, &c.] For Owle here the Septuagint read the Oſtrich, in latine ſtruthiocamelus, becauſe it hath long legs like a Camel; ſo likewiſe the vulgar latine, and Vatablus, and Cazkuni. But ſome expound it the Owle, as Junius, Ainſworth, and Willet. But Calvin, and almoſt all others the Oſtrich. In Hebrew, it is בַּת הַיַּעֲנָה אֶת Eth bath hajaanah, from בַּת the daughter, and עָנָה to anſwer, ſo that the word being engliſhed is the daughter of the anſwerer, or crier in the way of anſwering; for which reaſon howſoever, it may ſeem rather to agree to the Owle, becauſe the Owles cry and anſwer one to another, yet becauſe if the Oſtrich bee not underſtood by this word, that Fowle is altogether paſſed over, which no man doubteth of but that it was unclean, I rather hold with them, that render it the Oſtrich. And the word עָנָה indeed hath more ſignifications, viz. to afflict, &c.

and

And so we may expound it, the daughter of the afflicter, by which name an Ostrich may well be set forth, because of her cruelty to her young. Whereas it may seem to make against this Exposition, that the Ostrich is set forth by another name בַּת־יַעֲנָה, Job 39.13. which is from running, because the Ostrich runneth swiftly, for she hath long legs and an heavie body, so that although she hath wings, yet she cannot fly, but onely helpeth herself with her wings in her running, so as that no horse can run so swiftly as she, whereupon she is said to scorn the horse and his rider. This maketh no more against expounding this word Ostrich, then the diversity of names following for Owls, against expounding it Owl. By בֵּיצִים, I understand with Maimony the eggs of the Ostrich, which some say are pleasant meat, and this in particular is spoken of, because found in the sands, where the Ostrich layeth them, and is a tempting meat for the pleasantnesse, yet under the egge the Ostrich also is forbidden, which is edible; for if they be old, saith Cazkuni, they are as hard as a stick and cannot be eaten, but being young they are good meat, and were so used by the Arabians, being hence called στρουθοφαγοι, Ostrich-eaters, and Leo Africanus saith, that Heliogabalus had at one supper both the flesh of Ostriches and of Camels. The Chaldee for the pleasantnesse of this meat rendereth it Bathnaametha, the daughter of pleasantnesse. Under the Ostrich here forbidden, saith Hesychius, is forbidden to those, that are in Gods warfare the intangling of themselves in things of the world, as the Ostrich, which though she hath wings, yet keepeth upon the ground altogether; or better, according to Gregory, to be an hypocrite, that is, to make a shew of wings with the Ostrich to flie aloft by heavenly meditations and profession, but indeed to be worldly minded, as the Ostrich keepeth upon the ground. 2 Here is forbidden laying up treasures upon earth, as the Ostrich layeth her egges in the sands and leaveth them, for even so must we leave all our earthly treasures, and they be ever in the midst of many hazards, as those egges of the treading of beasts. 3 Womens refusing to nurse their children, as the Ostrich having laid her egges leaveth them in the sands, where through the heat of the Sun they are hatched, but many of them through divers casualties miscarry, and so children being thus neglected by their mothers. The night-hawk, this in Hebrew is Tachmas, a snatcher. Jonathan rendereth it Catpitha, the Harpy. The Septuagint, the Night-owl, so also Vatablus, Montanus; Junius, the Swallow; Pagninus, the Hawk; but the Owl both little and great is spoken of by and by, and the Hawk also, and the Swallow is not ravenous. Therefore the Harpy is rather to be understood, which is a fowl of a yellow colour, seeing as well and better by night then by day. In forbidding this then the seeing into the things of the Law is taxed, saith Hesychius, where the sight of the Evangelical light is wanting, as in the Jew. 2 This fowl pursueth and smiteth birds of the own kinde, and preyeth upon them, it was therefore forbidden to tax mens preying upon their brethren by oppression. 3 This fowl preyeth upon the sparrow being chased by the hawk and fleeing him for succour, perfidie then towards those that repose a trust in us, is herein forbidden.

The cuckow, the Hebrew word שָׁחַף, signifieth a consumption, whence the cuckow hath his name, because he is subject to this wasting disease, so Pagninus, reading it therefore Pthitica. Yet the Septuagint render it λαρον, the Sea-mew, which is followed by Hesychius. Montanus calling it larus, or fulica, and fonseca, which is the moor-hen; Junius, æsalo, the merlin. But the name rather evinceth it to be the cuckow, in which bird it is remarkable, that she alwayes vainly singeth the same song cuckow, till she weareth away: in forbidding the cuckow then, vain talk is forbidden, wherein the time is spent unprofitably. 2 The cuckow is like an hawk, but hath no talons as the hawk hath, to shew that we must not personate the godly being without such practice. 3 The cuckow in the end of the summer faltereth more in his singing, and is lesse cheerfull, in which is forbidden a falling in adversity

Job 39.16.

Job 39.18.

Cazkuni.

Leo African. descrip. Africæ.

Hesychius

Greg. Moral. lib 31. c. 6. Qui alas sanctitatis extendunt nullatenùs à terra sublevati. Job 39.18.

The Harpy.

Hesychius.

The Cuckow. Levit. 26.16.

Ephes. 4. Collos. 4.6.

from that which we were in our prosperity in respect of diligence in Gods service, and much more in the cuckovvs hiding himself all vvinter. 4 The cuckovv layeth her egges in other birds nests, in vvhich is forbidden adulteries: and she eateth up the egges found there: so by adulterous broods the legitimate children are deprived oft-times of their inheritance.

The Hawk.

Aristot. hist. l. 9. c. 36.

The hawk after his kinde. This fowl in Hebrevv is called נץ, from swift flying, and it is said, after his kinde, because there are many sorts of hawks, even ten, according to Aristotle; his flesh, saith Tostatus, is too hot & dry, and therefore evil meat for nourishment; but the young are good meat, as Aristotle saith, and sweet in the eating, but by saying, after his kinde, they are cut off from eating all hawks flesh. All hawks are enemies to the dove, therefore under this prohibition of the hawk, preying upon the innocent is forbidden. And again, as the dove is noted, if the kinde of hawk be such as killeth upon the ground, to flie aloft; but if of the kinde that killeth in flying, to sit still upon the ground to avoid it; so in Christian wisdom we should avoid the assaults of our enemies, by wisely observing their conditions. 2 The hawk is most swift in flying, and very diligent to get his prey, whereby the enemies of Gods people are set forth in their swift coming against them. His wheels, saith the Prophet, are like the whirlwinde. 3 The hawk is noted by Aristotle, not to eat the hearts of those birds which he taketh, but being manned and tamed, he eateth them: this setteth forth those, that not being enclined to such cruelty of themselves, yet by custom and being drawn on by others, grow most bloudy and cruell, that we may beware of being thus wrought unto evil. For other properties, as cruelty to her young, and beating them out of the nest before they can well flie, and going away in winter, but coming in summer, I have spoken of the like before in describing other fowls.

Esay 5. 27.

Verse 17.

The Owl.

Ainsworth. willet. Aristotle. Pliny.

And the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl. The first fowl here in Hebrew is כוס הכוס of כסה, to hide, and is commonly rendered Bubo, the great owl, and not the little; in Greek βύας of βοάζω, to make a noise; for it is an owl of the greatnesse of an eagle, according to Aristotle, and hideth it self in solitary places, being seldom seen, as Pliny writeth, and maketh a lamentable noise. Unto this owl the Psalmist hath reference, when Psal. 102. 7. he complaineth, I am like an owl in the desert. If this fowl be seen in the day, he is counted an ominous bird, so Pliny; and Josephus observeth it to have been so to Agrippa. This owl, although as great as the eagle, and armed with talons, yet wanteth courage; therefore in forbidding it, the Lord forbiddeth want of courage in Governours, in punishing and withstanding the evil.

Plin. l. 10. c. 12. Joseph. lib. 18. antiq. c. 1.

2 This owl is a night-bird, doing what he doth in the night, therefore under it works of the night, drunkennesse, fornication, and the like are forbidden.

Hesychius.

The Cormorant.

The cormorant. In Hebrew שלך, casting, from casting it self down into the water, in Latine it is called Mergus, à mergendo, from drenching it self in the water. It diveth in and stayeth there, saith Aristotle, till a man may go over an acre of ground. This fowl swalloweth up whole fishes in great numbers, and therefore under it is forbidden devouring other men by oppressions and extortions, and unsatiable desire in having, because he devouring fish after fish is never satisfied, like the Devil in devouring souls. 2 The cormorant, as Isidore noteth, is fat in winter when he resteth, but lean in summer, because that is the time of their labour, which he applieth to worldly rich men, who when the summer of the next world cometh, shall lose all the fat of their worldly wealth being left poor and miserable. Touching the last fowl in this verse, it is ינשוף of נשף, the twilight, and therefore most probably the owl commonly known, that flieth in the evening late, it is spoken of again, Esa. 34. 11. as a solitary bird. Ainsworth rendereth it little owl or bat. Hesychius and many others, Ibis, or the stork; but both the stork and bat follow, vers. 19. Of the properties hereof somewhat hath been said in speaking of the great owl, but here I will adde some more. 1 The little birds flie Isidor. lib. 12. Etymol. c. 7.

The little Owl.

about

about an Owle wondering at her, if ſhe cometh abroad in the day, therefore under the Owle we are taught, what monſters and ſtrange creatures wicked men are, that we joyn not with them, but ſeek to put them to ſhame, that they may be amended: yet we muſt not ſo ſet againſt them, as to be indangered in reſpect of other ſins our ſelves, as the ſilly Birds flying about the Owle are ſeazed upon and killed by the Hawke. Secondly, the Owle is an enemy to the Dove and eateth up her eggs; hereby then hurting of the innocent and being at emnity with them is forbidden. Thirdly, the Owle eateth up the Crowes eggs in the night, and the Crow the Owles eggs in the day, being then ſtronger then it: whereby the enmity amongſt the wicked themſelves is ſet forth, they being led not by the Spirit of love, but of ſtrife and debate. Fourthly, the Owle taketh the opportunity of the dark to ſeek her prey, which is of mice eſpecially and ſuch like vermin: ſo wicked men covertly circumvent others, but that which they get by it is but as vermin, baſe and vile.

Toſtatus.

Ariſtot. hiſt. lib. 9. c. 1.

The Swan, the Pelican, and the Gier-Eagle. The firſt word here in Hebrew is תִּנְשֶׁמֶת of נָשַׁם breath, and therefore by Jerom and others it is rendered Swan, becauſe the Swan in putting forth his breath hiſſeth. Junius out of Rab. Solomon rendereth it Monedulam, the Daw; The Septuagint, Montanus and Ainſworth, the Red-ſhanke, Solomon Jarchi ſaith it is a bird like a mouſe that flieth in the night, and it is called תִּנְשֶׁמֶת, becauſe it is about the eyes like that creeping thing which lacketh eyes, called a Mole, for thus the Mole is alſo called, verſ. 30. It is moſt probable, that a Swan is meant both for the reaſon already rendered from the word, and becauſe greater fowls, ſuch as a Swan, are here enumerated together, and the Daw belongeth to the kindes of the Raven before ſpoken of, and the Bat followeth, verſ. 19. and to the Red-ſhanke the name doth not ſo agree. As for the ſame word uſed, verſ. 30. to ſet forth a Mole, Willet ſaith, ſome render it a Dormouſe, which liveth by breathing, as it were in a continuall ſleep, although coming to verſ. 30. he followeth that reading, wherein it is a Mole. But taking it for the Mole, it is in this like unto the Swan, that as it diveth into the water, holding the head there a long time ſhewing in him a long breath, ſo the Mole alwayes hideth it ſelf in the earth, being herein admirable, that the breath is not yet ſtopped up, but that it can live and breath in ſuch pent places, where the air is ſtopt out. For the properties of the Swan, he is fair and white without, but his fleſh is black and unwholeſome for meat, in being forbidden then, hypocriſie is forbidden, which is fair without, but foul within. 2 The Swan and other long-necked fowls draw their nouriſhment from below out of the water, wherein we are warned, not to dive with our mindes downward, but to be lifted upward, by being Heavenly in our Meditations. 3 The Swan is cruell, and one will kill and devour another, therefore we are forbidden to do the like herein.

Verſe 18.

Solom Jarchi.

Willet.

The Swan.

Ariſtot. l. 9. c. 1.

The Pelican, in Hebrew קָאָת, hath his name from vomiting, as the word that ſignifieth, becauſe he caſteth up the ſhel-fiſh, which he hath eaten, in Greek he is called πελεκὰν of πελεκάω, to pierce, or to perforate, becauſe he pierceth his breaſt with his bill, ſo fetching out blood to cure his young ones, when they have been bitten with Serpents. It is ſpoken of as dwelling in the wilderneſſe and in deſolate places, Pſ. 102. Eſa. 34. 11 Zeph. 2. 14. yet Toſtatus maketh two ſorts of Pelicans, one of the wilderneſſe, and another of the water, which flock together, as thoſe of the deſert do not: The vulgar Latin rendereth it Onocrtalus, which is a fowl, according to Pliny, much like a Swan, but that it hath a greater gullet, ſo that ſometime an whole childe hath been found in it, yet Pſal. 102. 7. the vulgar Latin readeth the ſame word Pelican. Touching the properties of the Pelican. 1 He keepeth alone in deſerts, Pſal. 102. 6. whereby, ſaith Auguſtine, are underſtood thoſe that never beleeved, as in ſaying, like an Owl in vaſt places, he applieth it to thoſe, that have beleeved, but faln away again, and that,

The Pelican.

Toſtatus.

Auguſt.

like a Sparrow upon the house-top, to those that beleeve, but are unfruitfull, we must not then be like the Pelican through unbelief keeping aloofe from the Church. 2 The Pelican swalloweth shel-fish, and afterwards being heat in his crop and made to gape he casteth them up again, and then pecketh out the meat, herein then is forbidden flattery to draw a man to unfold himself, and then to take advantage against him, for this is very treachery, and to be abhorred. The Gier-Eagle, in Hebrew רחם signifying to love, is by the Septuagint rendered, the Swan, by the vulgar Latin, Porphyrion, a Red-shanke, by Junius Merope, a Wood-pecker. And to this last doth this name best agree, because, as Aristotle hath it, the love of this bird is such to the Dam, that they nourish it being old, and before also: so likevvise saith Pliny. For the properties of this bird, it hath goodly feathers, being herein like the Porphyrion, vvhich, as Aristotle saith, hath his upper feathers pale, his lovv feathers blue, and his hinder feathers red, but it breedeth in holes of the ground; herein then is forbidden, vvhen a man hath excellent spirituall gifts, to be earthly minded, vvhich marreth all. 2 The Wood-pecker although she be kinde to her kinde, yet devoureth Bees, so that under it is forbidden the devouring of others, by oppressions and vvrongs to enrich our families, and to raise them up.

Aristot. lib. 9. hist. c. 10.

The Wood-pecker.

Aristot. lib. 9. hist. c. 13. Plin. l. 10. c. 32.

Verse 19. The Stork, the Heron after her kinde, the Lapwing and the Bat: the Stork Hebrew חסידה of kindnesse is so called, because the young nourish the old in their age, and they are kinde one unto another. The Stork is much like a Crane, but her vvings are partly black, she buildeth on high firre-trees, Psal. 104. 17. and on the tops of houses and chimneys, and keepeth much about vvaters, feeding on fishes, snakes, frogs and the like, for which cause in Thessaly, as Pliny reporteth, men might not kill them upon pain of death, she hath her name also in Greek ἐρώδιον from ἐρως love, and in English Stork seemeth to come from storgè natural affection, Ciconia in Latin, from סכן, to be profitable. The Septuagint render it, the Faulcon, but there is no reason for that. For the Storkes properties, such as be good have been touched before in my Sermon upon Gen. 1. neither have they place here; The vice pointed at in the Storke is onely the admitting of unclean thoughts into our mindes, and thus feeding as it were upon them, as she doth upon snakes and other poisonous things, except we shall adde somewhat touching the long neck of this fowl, and her diving herewith into the water, but of this before in the Swan. The Heron, Hebrew אנפה signifying anger, because as Cazkuni noteth, and Solomon Jarchi, it is a furious fowl and soon angry. The Septuagint render it χαράδριον, and Vatablus a Crane, Vatablus a Jay, but all erroneously. The Heron then is hot and furious, and moreover noted to be hotly carried in the lusts thereof, & therefore herein we are forbidden unadvised anger and fury, as Mat. 9. 22. and to follow fleshly lusts. 2 The Heron hath many enemies; the Eagle, that seazeth upon him in the day, the Fox, that taketh him in the night, and the Hawke, that eateth up his Eggs, to all which he is therefore an enemy, hereby then is shewed, that the angry and passionate man shall have many enemies, and is by his fury carried to be enemy to many. 3 There is one kinde of Heron for the idlenesse called ὄκνος, slothfull, saith Aristotle, wherefore herein idlenesse and slothfulnesse is forbidden, 2 Thes. 3. 10. and there is another kinde called Pella, which doth very hardly lay her eggs, the blood even startling out of her eyes, and therefore for the divers kindes of Herons it is said, the Heron after her kinde, the Lapwing, Hebrew דוכיפת, so called from the double Comb, it is a filthy bird, delighting in dung, and maketh her neast of mans dung, and therefore herein luxury and worldlinesse of minde are forbidden, as scraping continually in filthy dunghils: for as she flieth about alwayes with a crying and carefull note, so the worldly minded have their mindes alwayes distracted and grieved with worldly cares, and as Isidore further noteth, that Sorcerers abuse this birds heart in their inchantments as counting Pliny.

The Heron.

Arist. hist. lib. 8. c. 3.

The Lapwing.

Heron.

Isidor. l. 12. c. 7.

counting it apt therefore, ſo the worldly minded are moſt ſubject to the devill to be drawn, as his inſtruments, to any wickedneſſe. The Bat, this bird is well known to keep in the dark, and therefore we are herein forbidden to be children of darkneſſe, which is when we love and live in riot and intemperance, or fleſhly luſts, &c. Again, the Bat is like a beaſt, having a mouth, teeth and members of generation, bringing forth her young alive, and giving ſuck, as a beaſt, but it flieth like a Bird, and yet herein differeth from a Bird, that the wings conſiſt not of feathers, but of a skin, and it goeth alſo upon them: we are here forbidden then to mingle earth and Heaven together, divine Meditations in our prayers and hearing and terrene thoughts, we muſt then be all as birds flying aloft, and not in part as the beaſts creeping upon the ground. If it ſhall be thought, that there was no need to forbid the eating of the Bat, becauſe no man would eat of it, Strabo ſaith, that the people of Borſippa, a City in Babylon did uſe to eat thereof, and as baſe a creature, as it is, it was by the Heathen dedicated to Proſerpina, the infernall goddeſſe, and at this day is adored by the Mexico-Indians, ſaith Gyraldus. And thus we have ſeen the fowls forbidden, and their qualities, being twenty, all of them either ravenous, or filthy in their life and food, or ugly in their aſpect. The Rabbins give this generall rule to thoſe, that know not all the particulars, all ſuch as tread upon their meat, and ſo eat it, are unclean, as being of a Ravenous kinde, and becauſe, after their kinde, is four times named, they account the whole number of the fowls forbidden to be 24.

The Bat.

Strabo lib. 16.

Gyrald. hiſt. Ind. lib. 3.

Maimony of forbidden meats.

All fowls that creep, going upon all four, ſhall be an abomination to you. Hereby the Rabbins underſtand flies, bees, hornets, ants, and the like, as Jonathan explaineth it, for theſe are unwholeſom to be eaten, and of evil nouriſhment, ſo Toſtatus. Yet here are excepted, as allowed to be eaten, ſuch as have legs and do leap, as the locuſt, the bald locuſt, the beetle, and the graſhopper. In ſaying, which have legs, he uſeth theſe words Hebr. אשר לו כרעים, which have no legs, and thus Junius therefore rendereth them, expounding it, which have no right legs, as other creatures have, but inverted. But the word לו is ſometime put for לו, ſignifying to him, as 2 Sam. 23. 18. 2 Chron. 11. 20. And if it be thus taken, it is, which hath legs, and ſo it is rendered by the Septuagint and Chaldee. But if it be read, which have no legs, the ſenſe will be good, becauſe then it is either meant, which have no legs, as other things have, becauſe they are turned backward, or which have no legs in their generation; for Pliny writeth of the locuſt, that he hath no legs at the firſt, but they grow afterwards; but doubtleſſe the common reading is beſt, becauſe of that which followeth, to leap withall. Ainſworth embraceth both readings, as being from Moſes, the one in the text, and the other in the margine, and ſo doth Oleaſter; but it is not to be thought, that the word in the margine was put there at the firſt by Moſes, but afterwards by others for explication of that in the text, and not for a divers reading. Touching the particulars, which have legs to leap, the firſt is the locuſt, Hebr. ארבה, ſo called from their number, and it is rendered by the Septuagint ϛρουθὸς, as ſome think, from ϛραχὺς, becauſe it is ſhorter, and of a leſſer kinde. The ſecond is הסלעם, ſo called from סלע, a rock, becauſe it is a locuſt bred in rocks, ſo Cazkuni, and agreeably hereunto Ariſtotle writeth, that there is a certain locuſt bred in rocky places; the third is החרגל, rendered by the Sept. ὁρμαχὺς, a fighter with ſerpents, and ſuch a kind of locuſts alſo Ariſtotle writeth, ſaying, Many have ſeen the locuſt fighting with the ſerpent. And Pliny ſaith, there be locuſts, that kill ſerpents. Cazkuni expoundeth this word a ſtriver with the feet to leap withall. Junius rendereth it Cantharum, a Beetle. The fourth is החגב, which may be thought to come of גבה to lift up, becauſe the graſhopper hereby ſignified lifteth up it ſelf. The Sept. render it, ἀκρὶς, becauſe it eateth of the tops of growing things, as the word ſignifieth and all theſe are called locuſts, a locis uſtis, from burnt places, becauſe they conſume green things, as if they were burnt. So that all theſe four are divers ſorts

Verſe 20.

Targum Jonathan.

Toſtatus.

Verſe 21, 22

Junius.

Plin. lib. 11. c. 29.

Ainſworth.

Oleaſter.

Cazkuni.

Ariſt. lib. 5. c. 17. Lib. 9. c. 8.

Plin. l. 11. c. 29.

Lyranus. Toſtatus.

ſorts of locuſts, as the Hebrews alſo teach; wherefore Lyranus, whom Toſtatus followeth, is wide in ſaying, that the three firſt are all one, being called, ארבה by the firſt name, when it wanteth wings at the firſt breeding, by the ſecond, when it beginneth to have wings; and by the third, when they are grown to perfection: for againſt this alſo maketh that in ſpeaking of each of them, he addeth, after his kinde, ſo that they are not one but ſeverall kindes. And becauſe, after his kinde, is repeated four times, the Hebrews hold, that there be four more forbidden, which are not named; and theſe they call, 1 Zipporeth Cramim. 2 Jotbana Jeruſhalemith. 3 Guartſubia. 4 Razbanith. The locuſts of all ſorts are but of little nouriſhment, as Galen writeth, obſerving, that the birds called Seleucidæ in Aſia voided them again whole, intimating, that they had but little nouriſhment from them. And Cardanus ſaith, that the eating of locuſts maketh men leane, ſhort-lived, ſwart-coloured, and full of lice; and Pliny, that they which eat them live not above 40 years; yet Pliny ſaith in the ſame place, that the Ethiopians did ſome of them uſe to eat them ſalted and dried in ſmoke, and in the Eaſtern Countreys it is known, that they are ſtill uſed for meat, and particularly the diet of John the Baptiſt was locuſts and wilde honey. It was indeed a poor kinde of food, and therefore argued great abſtinence in that holy man, and it was good ſometimes to eat of them to ſubdue the unruly fleſh.

Talmud Babyl. in Cholin. c. 3.

Galen. lib. 5. de loc. affect.

Cardan. lib 9. de ſubtil. Scalig. Exer. 91 Plin. l. 6. c 30.

Matth. 3. 4.

The Myſtery.

For the myſtery of the flying things without legs, and of theſe legged skippers, the one ſort is forbidden, as was ſaid before of the Bat, to ſhew, that we ſhould flee mixing earthly cogitations with heavenly exerciſes, abuſing the Evangelicall doctrine ſet forth in the four Evangeliſts, pointed at in the four feet upon which they are ſaid to go, v. 23. unto worldly ends. But the other is allovved, to ſhevv, that as they are ever skipping up and flying from the earth, ſo vve even vvhen vve live amongſt vvicked men, ſhould skip avvay as it vvere, and keep our ſelves from being defiled by them, as Chriſt Jeſus, although he ate and drank vvith Publicans and ſinners, yet he vvas vvithout all ſin. And therefore he is ſaid, Cant. 2. to have come skipping upon the mountaines, as Heſychius hath it, vvho alſo maketh the locuſts called fighters vvith ſerpents a figure of the fight that vve ſhould make alvvayes againſt the old ſerpent the Devil. There is alſo another thing in Locuſts, they are alvvayes changing their places, skipping and flying from one to another, to ſhew, that we ſhould not make account of abiding here any long time, being but as pilgrimes and ſtrangers in this world. For other properties of the locuſts vvhich be evil, here is no place to ſpeak of them, but rather upon Nahum 3. and Revel. 9, &c. where vvicked and miſerable people are ſet forth by them. That of the Hebrews here is moſt vain, that the Jevvs vvere appointed to eat locuſts in remembrance of the locuſts ſent againſt Egypt, for by the like reaſon frogs and flies ſhould alſo have been appointed, becauſe they were ſent in like manner.

Heſychius.

Verſe 24.

For theſe ye ſhall be unclean, whoſo toucheth the carcaſe of them ſhall be unclean till the even. Of this uncleanneſſe, ſee before, v. 8. till the evening, at what time the day ended, according to the account then, and a new day began. Hereby was figured out, that theſe legall uncleanneſſes ſhould then have an end, when a new day of the Goſpel under Chriſt ſhould begin, and that in him all pollution of ſin ſhould be done away to all his faithfull people. Heſychius applieth it to repentance, which when it is, uncleanneſſe is done away.

Brentius. Ainſworth.

Heſychius.

Verſe 25.

And whoſo beareth ought of them ſhall waſh his cloathes, and be unclean till the even. Touching is defined by the Rabbins to be with his fleſh in any part, or with his naile or tooth being joyned to his body, and bearing it, although a ſtone be between his ſhoulder and it, when he carrieth it, and it be laid upon him, he touching it not, or if he doth but draw it with a threed or the like: Maimony. In that he which beareth the unclean thing here is appointed to waſh wash his cloaths, as he that toucheth it onely is not, it is generally noted, that the bearer was more polluted then the toucher, and that not onely the cloaths which he did weare were polluted, but also all others being touched by him in this time. The cloaths to be washed, were all the cloaths then upon him, and this washing, as Exod. 19. figured out repentance, whereby we are cleansed from the pollution of sin. Sol. Jarchi.

Maimony of pollution by the dead, Ch. 1.

The same law is made about touching or bearing the carcase of any unclean beast, which is described by not parting the hoof, and not chewing the cud, it being further inserted, *Whatsoever goeth upon his pawes amongst all manner of beasts, &c. v.*27. The word translated pawes, is כפין his hands, whereupon Vatablus understandeth it of the ape which hath pawes like a mans hands, but Solomon Jarchi and others better referreth it also to beares, lions, dogs and cats, there being no other word setting forth their pawes, and they indeed have some similitude with hands. Hesychius for the mystery of this propoundeth imbracing of the Gospel for lucres sake, as pointed at to be abominable here, because such go as it were upon all four, but it is with their hands, they receive not the Gospel set forth by the four Evangelists, but that they may have a feeling of gain with their hands. Verse 26,27 Vatablus. Sol. Iarchi. Hesychius.

These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep on the earth, the Weasel, the Mouse, and the Tortois after his kinde. These words, that creep on the earth, are added, saith Cazkuni, because there are some creeping things in the waters. The weasel in Hebrew חלד is so called from his hasty running from place to place, mustela, of mus and σίλλω, to snatch up, because it snatcheth up mice, and destroyeth them. The weasel, as Hesychius noteth, is very crafty and theevish, and therefore under it theft and subtlety to steal is forbidden. The mouse in Hebrew עכבר, a troubler or corrupter, is so called, because, as all know, the mouse marreth things by gnawing, and is a very troublesome vermin: for eating this, as of Swines flesh, destruction is threatened, *Esa.*66.17. The mouse where he aboundeth eateth up corne in the houses, and undermineth and spoileth it in the fields, for thus the Philistines were plagued with them, 1 *Sam.*6.5. But traps are set for them, and cats and other things are kept and used to destroy them, yet to the belly are they so addicted, that for it they run into all these hazzards: under it then is forbidden to be a belly-god, and so addicted to the things thereof, as not to passe for any danger in ensuing them: thus Hesychius. And because the mouse is idle, and onely intendeth filching and stealing, idlenesse, whereby we may become burthensome to others, is forbidden. The Tortois, Hebrew, הצב is so called, because צב signifieth a covered coach, as *Numb.*7.3. and the Tortois like unto it carrieth his shell upon him covering him. The Septuagint render it, the land-crocodile; Oleaster, the toad, and Pagninus, the frog: but the first is best, as most agreeable to the Word. In forbidding the Tortois, which carrieth his house on his back, which is, as Aristotle saith, as hard as a stone, confidence in worldly things is forbidden, which when the worldling hath, he thinketh himself safe against all dangers, Cursed is he that maketh to himself an arm of flesh. Verse 29. Cazkuni. The Weasel. The Mouse. Hesychius. A Tortois.

And the Ferret, and the Camelion, the Lizzard, the Snail and the Mole. The Ferret in Hebrew, אנקה, hath the name from squeeking and crying. The Septuagint render it, μυγαλη, a mouse and weasel; because it is partly like the one, and partly like the other. Junius rendereth it, Attillabus, the Wood-seer; Rab. Solomon, the Badger; Oleaster, the Hedge-hog; Genevens. a Rat. The Ferret, saith Hesychius, as it is like the mouse and weasel, so it hath qualities like them both; it is crafty, as the weasel, and is for filling the belly with the mouse, so that under it is forbidden craft and subtlety by deceit to get gain to spend it upon the belly. Again, the ferret crieth out and squeeketh loud, if it be taken from the prey, or the prey from it, so that herein is forbidden extream grief, and querulous complaining for worldly losses. Verse 30. The Ferret. Junius. R. Solomon, &c. Hesychius.

The Camelion, in Hebrew כח strength, as Ainsworth, or of the green colour,

The Camelion.

Junius.

lour, as Willet, but by the Septuagint rendered, χαμαλέων, a lion creeping upon the ground; becauſe, as the lion hunteth after the beaſts and preyeth upon them, ſo doth this little beaſt upon the flies. Junius rendereth it, the Lizzard, but that followeth next. The Camelion is obſerved to change his colour into all but white and red, he hath a thin and ſhining body, and therefore receiveth the colour of any thing that he is near unto: herein then temporizing is forbidden. And becauſe he liveth upon the air, vain-glory, and affecting the aerean praiſe of men. And becauſe, although he ſoon changeth his colour, yet he is moſt ſlow in going, repreſenting ſhewes to the eye, but ſlow of pace, here is forbidden making ſhewes without performances.

The Lizzard.

Ariſtot. hiſt. lib. 8. c. 7.

Heſychius.

The Lizzard, Hebrew אנקה, ſome will have to be, Stellio, which is ſpotted on the back, as with ſtars; but both are meant, as two kindes of the ſame, for they alike lie hid all winter for the four cold moneths, eating nothing; and alike in the Spring and fall, put off their old skins: ſo Ariſtotle; and they both lay eggs, and live in filthy places, but the Stellio is moſt venomous. In forbidding the Lizzard which keepeth in graves, ſaith Heſychius, preying upon dead mens goods, is forbidden by ſuppoſititious Teſtaments deceit in Executors, &c. Again, the Stellio is a fair creature to ſee to, by reaſon of his ſtarres, but yet is very venomous: herein then is forbidden a fair ſhew by flattery, when poiſonous treachery is in the heart.

The Snail.

The Snail, Hebrew חומט, ſo called from חמם, to hide or cover; becauſe it is hid in the ſhell by the tranſpoſing of one letter. Yet the Septuagint render it, a Lizzard, and Junius a Camelion. The Snail dieth if the ſhell be broken, therefore herein is forbidden to cleave ſo to the world, as the worldling doth, as that if he loſeth his worldly goods, his heart dieth, his hope is altogether in this life.

The Mole.

Heſychius.

The Mole is ſet forth by the ſame name with the Swan, as was ſaid before, verſ. 18. where alſo I have ſhewed the reaſon of the name. Targum Jonathan rendereth it, Salamander, and Junius, the Dormouſe; and indeed the Hebrews confeſſe that they cannot certainly tell, what many of theſe creeping things, beaſts and birds are. The Mole is blinde, and is wholly buſied in digging under the the ground, and, as ſome think, eateth the earth, and liveth upon it, as the Camelion doth of the air, the Salamander of fire, and the Herring of water, according to this Diſtich.

Terra cibat Talpam, flammæ paſcunt Salamandram, Unda ſit Halecibus cibus, aër Cameleonti.

Heſychius.

In forbidding the mole, then it is forbidden to be earthly minded and blinde towards heavenly things, and Heſychius noteth, that the mole is bred of the earth, and they ſhew their breeding that are ſo earthly. But ſome write of the mole, that he beginneth to ſee a little before his death; a right Embleme of the ſtate of worldlings, ſeeing and trembling at the judgement now ready to ceaſe upon them at the laſt day, which they never had any perceivance or thinking of before.

Verſe 31.

Maimony in Aboth hattumoth. Toſtatus.

Theſe ſhall be unclean to you among creeping things, all that touch them being dead ſhall be unclean. The Rabbins, becauſe bearing of theſe is not ſpoken of but touching onely, hold, that bearing of them defiled not, and that the touching of them being alive, defiled not, but dead. But the laſt of theſe is falſe, ſaith Toſtatus, becauſe, Levit. 22.5 the touching of a creeping thing defileth. And becauſe for the touch of them onely cloaths muſt be waſhed, as it followeth, v. 32,33. as was not enjoyned touching the unclean things before-named, but onely in caſe of carrying them, it may well be gathered, if touching of theſe did more defile then bearing of them, yet much more, and therefore it is moſt probable, that this is not ſpoken of here, but left to be underſtood from the former decree. In this laſt I will not contradict, but I marvell that Toſtatus ſhould oppoſe the Rabbin in the former, ſeeing it is For uncleanneſſes contracted by touching, ſee Levit. 5.1. What was to be offered.

ſo

so plainly expressed in the text, being dead, and therefore that Levit. 22. 5. is to be expounded by this.

Verse 32.

And upon whatsoever any of them being dead doth fall, it shall be unclean, &c. By any of them, The Rabbins understand any of their flesh or bones, hoofs or sinews joyned unto their flesh, for if they be severed, they defile not being touched, as the bones, hoofs and horns of other unclean beasts being separated after their death do not. In that the falling hereof upon any thing defileth: Hesychius noteth involuntary sins to be figured out hereby, as the voluntary by touching before spoken of, so that any sin defileth, whether voluntarily committed, or against our wills. The particulars said to be defiled, vers. 32, 33. are reckoned five vessels, of wood, raiment, skins, sacks, and earthen vessels, and whatsoever vessell else a man useth to work withall, or in it, that is any tool or vessell for his service. The Rabbins number besides these five onely two more, the one, vessels made of metals, Numb. 31. 21, 22. and the other of horns, or bones, or hoofs of beasts, Numb. 31. 20. all the work of goats, for hereby they say, that they have learned by tradition that the bones and horns, &c. of goats are to be understood, & consequently of other beasts, and vessels made thereof. And by v[illegible]s made of wood they understand also such as are made of barks, shels, or [illegible]-rushes, reed or wicker, because these grow out of the earth like wood. S[illegible] Maimony, and if we adde glasses also, and vessels made of stone, brick, and morter, which come out of the earth, I think none are omitted according to this generall rule, Whatsoever vessell it be, wherein any work is done. But in distinguishing between such of these, as are defiled or not defiled, they are over-curious. Things made for the use of man onely, as ladders, are not, say they, defiled; but those that are for the service of men and vessels to sit upon are. Again, they which serve onely for instruments to hold other things for the use of man, if they contain them but for a time, as the candlestick, they are not defiled, but if continually, as the scabberd, or sheath, they are, but these and others like unto them which they have, are curiosities, and distinctions without a ground, yea contrary to the ground laid here, for all vessels without exception are by dead creeping things defiled. But that rule of theirs is good, that although vessels be defiled by unclean things, yet nothing living is defiled hereby, but onely man, neither doth any living thing defile, but man onely, when he is unclean by any means. Now of the first sort of vessels here spoken of, it is appointed, that if any of them be made unclean thus, it must be put in the water, that is, according to the Hebrew Canons, dipt all over in the water, & so must a man being unclean, and nothing must be between it and the water, for if there be any pitch or clay, &c. cleaving on, it is unclean still, and it shall be unclean till the even, for being washed it must stay the time, viz. till the even, before it be perfectly cleansed. Of uncleannesses the Hebrews make these degrees. 1 The highest before washing. 2 The second from thence, till the even. 3 The third, if before the even he toucheth any holy offering, for that is hereby made unclean. 4 The fourth if he touch holy meats or drinks, for they are thus defiled, but not common meats or drinks. Lyranus thinketh, that onely the water of the red cow was now to be sprinkled upon it to cleanse it; and Tostatus, that it was both dipped and sprinkled, but the one cometh short of the truth, and the other exceedeth it, for no sprinkling is here spoken of, and Numb. 19. that holy water is appointed to be sprinkled onely in case of uncleanesse, that lasted seven dayes, as none of the uncleannesses here named did, but till even onely of the same day.

Hesych. Hier.

Maimony in Sepher, Chap. 1. Sect. 2.

Maimony in Aliaibhattaroth, Chap. 10.

Lyranus. Tostatus.

Verse 33.

Touching earthen vessels, If any of them falleth into the midst thereof, for Hebr. it is אֲשֶׁר־תּוֹכוֹ, All that is in the midst thereof shall be unclean, and it shall be broken. So earthen vessels were appointed to be broken before, Chap 6. 28. Here the Rabbins distinguish between this kinde of vessell, and others of stone made out of the earth also, calling this a vessell of pot-bakers earth, and yet they say, that a vessell of glasse cannot be cleansed, but by breaking also.

But it is to be noted, that an unclean thing touching it on the outſide doth not make it unclean; but being in it, if it be but an unclean air that cometh into it, it is unclean, as may be gathered, Numb. 19. 15. becauſe in a tent where a man dieth, all things in the tent are made unclean, but a veſſell that is covered. Hereupon they obſerve that the air polluteth the veſſell, and breaking cleanſeth it, and if a man will break a veſſell of wood, &c. it is cleanſed alſo, although it be not ſo appointed. But when we note that an earthen veſſell is not polluted, but by ſomething falling into it, and not touching it without, it is meant onely in the caſe here put, in other caſes, as of a man that hath an iſſue touching it, it is unclean, Levit. 15. 12.

Maimony in celim. c. 12.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

For the myſtery of theſe things Heſychius ſpeaketh excellently. By the veſſell or cloth, wherein any work is done, is ſet forth a faithfull perſon, who is exerciſed in the works of vertue, by the dead vermin falling upon it, ſin, that bringeth death, which ſuch attract not to themſelves, but through infirmity fall into, ſuch muſt be put into the water of repentance, as is the dayly practice of the faithfull, and ſo they ſhall be clean again, but the earthly and ſenſuall, like unto the earthen veſſels, entertaining ſin into their middle part within, that is the heart, muſt be given over to Satan, as 2 Cor. 5. for their contrition in the fleſh, that their ſpirit may be ſaved. Or rather ſuch ſhall be utterly deſtroyed at the laſt day. Ainſworth referreth it to the utter aboliſhing of ſin in us in death, when we are broken thereby, for we are as earthen veſſels, 2 Cor. 4. 7. and their breaking ſetteth forth mans death, Jer. 19. 11. and Chap. 48. 38. but I prefer the former, becauſe of the diſtinction made amongſt men, as here amongſt veſſels

Ainſworth.

Verſe 34 Queſt.

Of all meat that may be eaten, that on which ſuch water cometh, ſhall be unclean. Here becauſe ſuch water is not expreſſed in the text, but onely מים water, a queſtion ariſeth, vvhether this be to be underſtood of all water, or of water contained in the veſſell made unclean by the falling of any dead vermin into it? But it is eaſily anſwered, that only the water conteined in theſe unclean veſſels is meant, or in any place, into which they chance to fall, except in pits and ponds, where there is plenty of water, as is excepted, v. 36. for it is immediately added, likewiſe all drink, that may be drunk in every veſſell ſhall be unclean, which it vvere abſurd to expound of any other veſſels, but onely of ſuch as vvere polluted by theſe dead things, and therefore as abſurd is it to expound this touching water of all water. Moreover, ponds and wells of vvater are expreſly ſaid to be clean, and therefore could not pollute any thing. Thus alſo Auguſtine, The water is meant, which came out of veſſels made unclean by unclean dead things, and Toſtatus and Junius, &c. yet the Rabbins expound it of all waters, for nothing that is mans meat, ſaith Solomon Jarchi, is unclean, till water cometh upon it, but after water is come upon it, it receiveth uncleanneſſe for ever. And Maimony inlarging it, ſaith, It is not made unclean, till it receiveth one of the ſeven liquors, water, dew, wine, oil, milk, blood or honey. Neither do they vvreſt this Law onely herein, but in divers other of their canons, as 1 That no liquor coming from fruits can be made unclean at all contrary to verſ. 32. and to this verſe, nor any meat, upon which water hath not been put, becauſe, till water be upon it, it is not apt to receive uncleanneſſe, for any thing in an unclean veſſell vvithont exception is unclean. 2 Such things, as are uſed for ſauce vvith meat are not by any vvater made unclean, againſt this text, vvherein no meat is excepted. 3 The meat here meant is holy fleſh, and not any other. 4 The Prieſts only vvere tied by this Lavv, and not the people, contrary to Levit. 5. 2. 5 The touching of their carcaſes is not defiling to the people, but at the time of ſolemn feaſts onely, for the Lavv tieth to all times. So that vve may ſee, they began betimes to corrupt the Lavves of God by their traditions through a deſire of more liberty, then they gave them. But in their Expoſitions hereupon this may be received, that things living and hearbs growing are not to be counted amongſt thoſe that are made unclean, becauſe they

Verſe 36.

Auguſt. De vaſe quod factum eſt immundum de morticinis immundis. Sol. Jarchi. Maimony in Tumath. oc. in Chap. 1.

they cannot yet be properly ſaid to be meat, and this alſo, that liquors and meats corrupted are not made unclean by ſuch means, becauſe they vvere vile and unfit for meat before. Myſtically by the meat and drink made unclean here ſpoken of by the uncleanneſſe of the veſſell, becoming ſuch by a dead thing falling into it, ſaith Heſychius, vve are to underſtand vertuous actions, in vvhich to be converſant it is meat and drink to the faithfull, but they are made unclean by pride, vain-glory, or other ſiniſter affections falling upon them, vvhen they are done, or in the doing, although they vvere not hereby ſet avvork at the firſt to do them, as hypocrites are. The Myſtery. Heſychius.

And every thing, whereupon any part of their carcaſe falleth ſhall be unclean, whether ovens or ranges, &c. Ovens vvere for the baking of bread, and the ranges for pots, for fleſh to be baked or boiled in, the vvord כִּירַיִם is rendered by Solomon Jarchi and Cazkuni, pots, or by others bake-pans, and Jarchi ſaith, that both the Ovens and pots vvere moveable inſtruments made of potters earth, the Septuagint render it χυτρόποδες, pots vvith feet. And meat or bread vvas made unclean by dead vermin, ſo vvere the things, vvherein they vvere baked and prepared, and theſe being of the ſame ſubſtance vvith other earthen veſſels muſt, as they, in this caſe be broken dovvn. Verſe 35. Solomon Jarchi.

Nevertheleſſe a pit, or fountain, wherein there is plenty of water ſhall be clean, but that which toucheth their carcaſe, ſhall be unclean. Here is an exception made of ſuch things as ſhall not be counted unclean by the falling of dead vermin into them, a ciſtern or any veſſell holding water ſhall be polluted, and the water in it together, but not a pit or Fountain, but only ſo much of the water therein, as toucheth the carcaſe: under pit and Fountain ponds alſo and all other places of water upon the earth, wherein there was much, are to be underſtood. The Lord would not have theſe counted unclean. 1 Becauſe all other things muſt be cleanſed with theſe waters. 2 Becauſe there was neceſſary uſe of them every day, although waters in veſſels might be emptied out, and they might again be ſupplied from fountains, &c. yet they could neither be ſo eaſily emptied, nor ſupplied. 3 Becauſe the corruption coming from a carcaſe in a place of much water is diſperſed and vaniſheth, yet the carcaſe muſt be taken out, and ſome water about it caſt out, that the Fountain might be clean. Heſychius inquiring into the reaſon, why veſſels with water ſhould be unclean and pots and Ovens, but not the collection of waters, reſolveth that myſtically hereby is ſet forth, that particular Doctours in the Church, who are as veſſels of water, which they afford unto the people, and as Ovens and pots to bake and to prepare the ſpirituall food, if they fall into any groſſe ſin, are corrupted ſo hereby, as that they ſhall be deſtroyed, according to that, Rom. 2. 22. but yet the Doctrine taught generally in the Church of God ſet forth by the collection of waters is not the worſe to be eſteemed of, but only that which toucheth the carcaſe, that is, the Doctrine of an evil life in any, for after their works thou muſt not do, Mat. 23. 1. Verſe 36. Willet. Heſychius. The Myſtery.

If it falleth upon any ſowing ſeed, it ſhall be clean, but if water be upon the ſeed, &c. it ſhall be unclean. Solomon Jarchy by ſeed underſtandeth that, which is rooted in the ground, and Maimony expoundeth the water coming upon ſeed, of water voluntarily put on by the owner, it being thus prepared for food, and if it be wetted againſt his will, or through neceſſity, as to hide it in water from theeves, it is not unclean. But theſe are Rabbinicall inventions, the true reaſon is, ſeed that is dry is not ſo apt to take pollution, as ſeed being wetted whether voluntarily or by rain falling upon it, and it is not meant of corn for meat, but to be ſown, as is plain in the text, and not ſown already and rooted, as Solomon Jarchi. But herein, ſaith Heſychius was a myſtery, it ſhewed, that ſin fallen into after wetting by Baptiſme polluteth him that was cleanſed, but not him who is indeed towards Baptiſme, but not yet ſufficiently inſtructed, his ignorance yet in ſome ſort excuſeth him, but after that one is better inſtructed and Baptized to fall into foule ſin, is Verſe 37, 38 Maimony. Heſychius. The Myſtery.

more heinous, and to be made unclean again after the partaking of ſo great a grace of being cleanſed in Baptiſme.

Verſe 39. If any beaſt, whereof ye may eat, dieth, he that toucheth his carcaſe ſhall be unclean till the even. Here as the carcaſe of an unclean beaſt, ſo of the clean, when it dieth alone, is determined by polluting, but as Solomon Jarchi noteth upon both, onely the carcaſe maketh unclean, not the bones, horns or hoofes. And the like is to be held of a beaſt torn or killed for killing of man or woman, *Exod.*22.31.

Solom Jarchi.

Verſe 40. He that eateth of it, ſhall waſh his cloathes, &c. Unto the firſt here are added two wayes more of becoming unclean by dead carcaſes- 1 By eating thereof. 2 By bearing them, and theſe were ſomewhat greater then the firſt, becauſe ſuch muſt waſh their cloathes, as the other was not commanded to do. And by eating here muſt be underſtood eating ignorantly or through neceſſity, for otherwiſe not onely legall uncleanneſſe was contracted, which was without ſin, againſt the ſoul, but uncleanneſſe through tranſgreſſing of Gods command to the deſtruction of the ſoul, as being a preſumptuous ſinning. If a clean beaſt be killed, it is every whit clean, but the unclean being killed or dying alone is alike unclean and of the clean beaſt dying alone the fat is clean and may be uſed, but not eaten, *Levit.*7.24.

*Maimony Semore Levit.*17.15.

Verſe 41,42 Every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, ſhall not be eaten, it ſhall be an abomination. From henceforth to *verſ.*46. is a Law againſt eating all creeping things, ſo that not onely the eight forbidden, *verſ.*29. but all others alſo muſt be abhorred, thoſe defile by eating or touching, theſe by eating onely, and theſe are deſcribed to be ſuch as go upon the belly, as Serpents, *Gen.*3.14.or upon all four, as the Scorpion, Neut or Toade, or which hath many feet, as the Nadal, ſo Solomon Jarchi, and this laſt we call, Centipoda, in Engliſh the Cancer.

Solom Jarchi.

Verſe 43. Ye ſhall not make your ſelves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth. In the former verſes it was ſaid, that creepeth upon the earth, but here earth is left out, wherefore all creeping things alſo in the waters are meant: ſo Maimony, and to this agreeth the enumeration made, *v.*46.

Maimony.

Verſe 44. For I am the Lord your God, you ſhall therefore ſanctifie your ſelves that ye may be holy, for I am holy, &c. Here is the end ſet down, why all theſe lawes muſt be kept, that they might be preſerved holy and undefiled in all things, as the people of an holy God: and it is here added, That ye defile not your ſelves with any manner of creeping thing. For, your ſelves, Hebrew is, your ſouls; but ſoul is put ſometime for the body, as *Numb.*9.7,10. and ſometime for the whole man, as *Chap.*5.1. and ſo here their bodies are meant, for they properly were defiled by theſe things, but if willingly they tranſgreſſed herein, their ſouls alſo were defiled by ſin, or if being defiled, they neglected waſhing. But the thorow ſanctification of Gods people in ſoul, ſpirit and body was herein reſpected; it being his will, that from corporall uncleanneſſes thoſe of the ſoul by touching ſin bearing about, or feeding upon ſin, ſhould be lookt at and avoided, of which theſe things were but ſhadowes for a time, and now the time of teaching by ſhadowes and figures being paſt, there is no further uſe of theſe lawes for the ordering of the outward man, but of the inward onely. And into this did ſome of the Rabbins ſee, and write of it, as Rab. Menahem, who ſaith, that theſe things are figures of heavenly things; by unclean beaſts, heathen people are meant; and by forbidding to eat or to touch them, making marriages with ſuch is forbidden, and the waſhing from theſe uncleanneſſes with water, ſetteth forth Gods waſhing of us with the water above, which is the water of mercy. And Maimony upon theſe words; thus the keeping of the body clean bringeth one to the cleanneſſe of the ſoul, and the cleanneſſe of the ſoul to be like unto God, as it is ſaid, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

Rab. Menahem in Levit 11.

Maimony.

Verſe 46. This is the law of every creeping thing that moveth in the waters or creepeth. Here beſides creeping, moving is ſpoken of; becauſe, as the Rabbins obſerve, creeping creeping things are bred by generation of male and female; but beſides theſe there are wormes and maggots, &c. comming of corruption, which are the moving things alſo to be abhorred. But here they are over-nice in diſtinguiſhing between wormes in fruit, they being eaten in the fruit defile not, but being ſeparated, and yet if they were bred in the fruit before the gathering, they defile, but not if they were bred after, &c. but who taught them theſe things? Moreover, they adde, that the milk and the egges of unclean beaſts, fowles or fiſhes may not be eaten, yet honey of Bees or hornets is lawfull, and a womans milke, although her fleſh may not be eaten.

Maimony of forbidden meats, Chap 2.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 2.

IF a woman hath conceived ſeed and born a man-childe, ſhe ſhall be unclean ſeven dayes, &c. The Lord having hitherto determined outward uncleanneſſes by the means of things without, here beginneth to ſet down lawes touching uncleanneſſes comming from within, and as in the Creation, beaſts, fowls, and creeping things were firſt made, and then man; ſo firſt the uncleanneſſe of beaſts, &c. is ſet forth, and then the uncleanneſſe of men and women, as Solomon Jarchi noteth, If a woman hath conceived ſeed, Hebrew, ſeeded ſeed: Aben-Ezra, Yielded ſeed unto conception, becauſe there is a concurſe of the womans ſeed unto conception, as well as of the mans, and Rab. Menahem obſerveth hence, that if the woman yieldeth ſeed firſt, a male is brought forth; if the man, a female; but no ſuch thing can be gathered hence, becauſe of her ſeeding here ſpoken of a female may come as well as a male, v. 5. Touching the childe brought forth, the Hebrews hold, that if 40 dayes after the conception be once paſt, although it be brought forth before the time and dead, this law holdeth, but not for any miſcarrying before the 40 dayes expired. According to the dayes of her ſeparation for her infirmity ſhe ſhall be unclean. Of this ſeparation ſee Chap. 15. 19, 20. it was for ſeven dayes, and in that time every thing that ſhe touched was unclean, as it is meant it ſhould be now, yea the Hebrew Canons ſay, although no blood appeared, as in the time of her menſtruous diſeaſe.

Solomon Jarchi.

Aben Ezra.

R. Menahem.

Maimony in Iſſurei biath.

Verſe 3.
Verſe 4.

After theſe ſeven dayes, viz. upon the eighth, the childe muſt be circumciſed, And ſhe ſhall then continue in the blood of her purifying 33 dayes, ſhall touch no hallowed things, &c. Of circumciſing the fleſh of the fore-skin upon the eighth day enough hath been ſaid, Gen. 17. 11. But for the reaſon of the womans continuing in her uncleanneſſe now 33 dayes more, and if ſhe had a Female, 14 and 66. it is hard to determine, what that may be. Some yield a naturall reaſon, becauſe the male is fourty dayes a forming in the womb, or as Auguſtine hath it 45. Six dayes it is like milk, in nine 'tis turn'd to blood, twelve more do make it fleſh, eighteen bring faſhion good. But this reaſon cannot ſtand, becauſe here onely 40 dayes are ſpoken of, and diſtinguiſht by 7 and 33; theſe are 45: and for the female, which they ſay, is twice as long in forming, there is the like reaſon againſt that alſo, becauſe then the time ſhould not be 80 but 90 daies. Toſtatus will have it to be meerly Ceremoniall without any reaſon. But Heſychius and others better, after the bringing forth of a male, ſhe muſt continue 40 dayes in purifying, to figure out our great humiliation for our ſins, in which we come into the world, and which we daily multiply and increaſe. For the womans uncleanneſſe at this time did doubtleſſe ſet forth originall ſin and pollution, wherein every one is born, as Rom. 5. 12. which maketh us unworthy of God, but by Chriſt, who faſted 40 dayes for us, and was ſeparated in the deſert, pointed at herein, we are cleanſed, but on our parts great humiliation & penitency is required, like that of the Ninevites 40 dayes, and of Moſes 40 dayes faſting, and Elias likewiſe. And Rab. Menahem hereupon ſaith, there is a myſtery in this matter, reſpect Auguſt. Sex in lacte dies ter ſunt in ſanguine terni, Bini carnem, ter ſeni membra figurant.

Toſtatus.
Heſychius.

Rab. Menahem.

respect being had unto the serpents deceiving of the woman, Gen. 3. and circumcising of the childe was appointed for the like signification, and the offering by the woman to be brought. Whereas the time upon bringing forth of a female is doubled, this was upon a naturall reason; because more pollutions accompany this birth then the other, and be longer in purging; and if she had both male and female together, the Hebrews say, that she must be purifying 80 dayes. And we may adde further out of Hesychius the time was doubled for a female, because of her double sin, at the first in eating, and then tempting: or that the female is twice as long in forming in the wombe as the male, with which times a proportion is here held in both, to shew, that we cannot enter into the heavenly Sanctuary, till we be regenerate as the woman could not come into the Sanctuary here till so much time expired, as in the forming of the childe in her wombe. Or lastly, it may be said, the males circumcising was a cause of cutting off the time for time. Now for the distinction of these dayes into 7 and 33, and 14 and 66, it is to be understood, that during the first times nominated she was unclean, so as that her husband might not company with her, and all things that she touched were polluted by her, as in the time of her menstruous disease spoken of, Chap. 15. 20. and if her husband did in that time company with her to lie with her, he was guilty of cutting off, but after 7 dayes expired by her that brought forth a male-childe, and 14 by her that brought forth a female, she was clean to all civill actions; onely, as it is here said, she might not, during this time, touch any of the hallowed things of the Lord: so Maimony. In these dayes last mentioned then, she was in her purifying, and not in her uncleanesse, as before. Calvin thinketh that longer time was set to her that had a female then for a male, because the male was circumcised the eighth day. but the best reason of this hath been already given out of Junius and others.

Junius. Pelican. Oleaster.

Maimony in Issurei biah c. 4.

Calvin.

Verse 6. And when the dayes of her purifying are fulfilled for a sonne or for a daughter, she shall bring a lambe, &c. This, the Rabbins observe, must be done not upon the 40 or 80 day, but the day after; and if any deferred longer, they were not counted clean to come into the Sanctuary, till this were done. But why must sacrifices be brought now to be offered for her selfe, or for her childe for the purging of her bodily uncleanesse, or for her sins? Some, because it is said, For a sonne or a daughter, answer, that this oblation was brought for the childe, as Augustine, Rupertus, Hugo, &c. Some, for both the mother and the childe, because in the Syriack Interpretation it is said When the dayes of their purifying were accomplished, Luc. 2. Some, for the man and the woman, whose the childe was upon the same ground, as Theophilact; some, for them and their childe also, as Euthymia. But the words, For a son or daughter, imply nothing else, but that the purifying of the mother was by reason of the uncleanesse upon her by bringing forth her childe, as will be plain to any that shall look into the Text; and therefore to shew for whom this offering was made, v. 7. it is added. And the Priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood. As for the childe, the circumcising was a purifying to it, and the offering, if it were the first-born, five shekels. And for the other opinions there is no ground at all in the Text, Luk. 2. because it is not there said, for whom that offering was made; wherefore it was doubtlesse for the mother onely. Again, some hold, that this offering was brought for her sins in generall, as Tostatus, Junius and Cajetan: some, for her sin in the Matrimoniall act, as Lyranus: some, for her impatience in her travel, as some Rabbins: and some, for her legall uncleanesse by childe-bearing, as Oleaster, Burgensis, &c. I, as Willet, subscribe to Junius, the offering was brought, as to cleanse from the effect, that issue and impurity hereby, so from sin, the cause thereof, and the thing signified by it, because in all oblations a respect was to be had to originall corruption, the fountain of all uncleanesse. And thus God would have the woman, by whom sin entered, specially confirmed touching being received to grace by Christ, when there Verse 7. And the Priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood.

Augustin. qu. 40. in Levit. Rupertus. Hugo. Salmeron. Rickelius. Theophilact. Euthym. in Luc. 2.

Tostatus. Junius. Cajetan. Lyranus.

Oleaster.

Note.

there was thus atonement made for her by the blood of Chriſt, ſet forth by the blood of the lambe. Now beſides the offering brought by a woman in this caſe, there were three more, in which offerings muſt alſo be brought, if a woman had an iſſue, or if a man had an iſſue, and if any were a leper, and theſe were the uncleanneſſes from within, touching uncleanneſſes from without, and the offerings to be brought therefore, ſee Chap. 5.2,3,&c.

Levit. 15. Levit. 14.

Touching the lamb for a burnt-offering here appointed, and a young pigeon for a ſin-offering or a Turtle Dove, and how they were offered, ſee before, Chap. 1. and Chap. 5,6.

Verſe 8.

And if ſhe be not able to bring a lambe, then ſhe ſhall bring two turtle Doves, or two young Pigeons, &c. Thus it is alſo provided before in other caſes, Chap. 5.7. For the practice of this we have the example of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, Luc. 2.24. whereby his poverty appeared: ſo Beda, Haimo, Origen, Lyranus, and all the Ancients. Yet Toſtatus and ſome others labour to confute this, ſaying, that ſhe could not be ſo poor, conſidering the preſents of gold, &c. offered to the childe by the wiſe men, Matth 2. and if ſhe had been ſo poor, ſhe could not have paid the Redemption-money for her firſt-born, being five ſhekels. To this I will not ſay with Bonaventure, that the holy babe turned away his face, and refuſed thoſe gifts; or with Maldonatus, that they were ſpent upon the poor or upon the Sanctuary; but rather with Calvin, that it was no great quantity, but a little for honours ſake, which the wiſe men brought, ſo that having five ſhekels to pay for the childes redemption, and other charges both there and in their travell down into Egypt, that muſt neceſſarily be defrayed, they were not ſo enriched hereby, as to bring the offering of the rich, ſeeing the Lord did not require that a poor body, who had but a little, ſhould lay out all upon his offerings. Whereas the Virgin Mary at the time of her offering did more then is here appointed, viz. preſented the childe, as being her firſt born Luk. 2.22,23. It is to be underſtood, although it be not here expreſſed that the firſt-born ought to be redeemed, being a moneth old, Numb. 18 16 and therefore not being done at the end of a moneth, it was done now at the end of 40 dayes, and this was uſually permitted ſo to be for the eaſe of the woman, that ſhe might not be forced to ſend before about it, and then come after herſelfe at another time to make her offering, but theſe times being ſo neer the one to the other, both might be done together, it being alſo moſt neceſſary for the mother to come with the childe, which ſhe could not do till the time of her purification ended, becauſe till then ſhe might not enter into the Sanctuary, v. 4.

Beda.
Origen.
Haimo.
Toſtatus.

Calvin.

Thus it was under the Moſaicall law, for their uncleanneſſe after childebearing women were debarred from entering into the Sanctuary, but now they are not debarred a moneth after for any uncleanneſſe: for, as Gregory ſaith, if the woman ſhould come into the Church the ſame hour that ſhe bringeth forth, ſhe is not preſſed with any burthen of ſin, becauſe the ſuperfluity of nature now upon her is only a puniſhment for ſin, and cannot be counted a ſin, and if the woman having the bloody iſſue might come to Chriſt and touch his garment, why may not one in her flowers come to his Church? Wherefore, it is for other reaſons, that this order is appointed in Chriſtian Churches, and not grounding upon this law of Ceremonies, which is aboliſhed in Chriſt, although the Chriſtians in Ethiopia ſeem to ground it upon this law, for they ſay, Pro ancilla tua quæſumus, quæ ſervavit conſtitutionem tuam, nor is it appointed in imitation of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, as in the Church of Rome, for ſhe was then bound by that law. But firſt, for the ſafety of the woman, who might otherwiſe be endangered by coming abroad too ſoon. Secondly, becauſe modeſty requireth, that ſhe ſhould not immediately accompany with her husband againe after her deliverance. Thirdly, becauſe piety requireth, that before her returning to her old courſe of bedding with her husband, ſhe ſhould thankfully acknowledge the benefit already received in the Congregation.

Gregor. Decre. 5 cap. 1. Si mulier eâdem horâ, quâ genuerit, intrat Eccleſiam, nullo pondere peccati gravatur.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1, 2.

AND the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron, ſaying, When a man ſhall have in the skin of his fleſh a riſing, ſcab, or bright ſpot, and it be like the plague of leproſie, he ſhall be brought to Aaron, &c. The plague of leproſie, ſaith Lucretius, is bred in the midſt of Egypt, and no where elſe, ſo that it ſeemeth to have taken the beginning there by reaſon of the corruption of the aire through muddy vapours coming from the river Nilus. And from hence it is likely, that the Hebrewes brought this diſeaſe with them. Appion, Manethon and ſome others report, that they were a leprous and loathſome people caſt out by the Egyptians, and ſo Moſes became a captain unto them leading them into the land of Canaan. But this appeareth to be moſt falſe, becauſe it is a common diſeaſe in Egypt, and as Joſephus ſaith, if it had been ſo, Moſes would never have made ſuch a law to the ignominy of the leprous. The leproſie, ſaith Bodin, and Methodins, is ſo common alſo in Mauritania, and among the Abiſſens, and in other hot countreys, that they converſe with others, and are not ſeparated. The Phyſicians ſay, that the leproſie is a canker of the whole body, as they call the canker in any member the leproſie thereof, it eateth as a canker to the very bones and the marrow, and maketh him that hath it moſt loathſome. In Hebrew it is called צרעת, as Willet thinketh, from רע evill, and עצה, to ſhut up, but Ainſworth rendereth it a fretting ſoreneſſe or infectious ſcabbedneſſe; to the firſt, the word Segirath in Chaldee, ſignifying ſhutting up, giveth ſome light, and to the other Grab, the Syriack word ſignifying ſcabbedneſſe. The Septuagint render it, λέπρα ἀπὸ τῆς λεπίδων, from ſcales, becauſe it is like white ſcales upon the body, and λεύκη becauſe of the ruggedneſſe and ſpots like thoſe of the Elephant, white and black. In ſpeaking of the leproſie. 1 That upon man or woman is handled. 2 Upon garments in this Chapter. 3 In an houſe, Chap. 14. 34. Of the leproſies upon man there are three ſorts ſet forth in this verſe. 1 שאת, a ſwelling or riſing. 2 ספחת, a ſcab. 3 בהרת, a bright ſpot, the laſt of which the Rabbins reckon firſt, deſcribing it to be ſuch a bright whiteneſſe appearing in the skin, as that there is nothing brighter, even as the ſnow; then the firſt, likening it unto the white wool of a lambe being but a day old. Laſtly, the ſecond, likening it to the plaiſter of a wall upon an houſe growing from the bright whiteneſſe. And unto theſe they adde a fourth, which is like unto the filme of an egge: ſo Maimony; and this ſcab he therefore diſtinguiſheth into two, becauſe ſometime there is ſuch a ſcab next unto the bright ſpot, and ſometime next unto the ſwelling or riſing, as an adjunct thereof. Like the plague of leproſie, it is thus ſpoken of, becauſe not yet judged of. Here becauſe it is ſaid, in the skin of his fleſh, the Rabbins teach, that the places within the ear, the eye, the noſtril or the mouth, the wrinkles of the neck, belly and breſt, beneath the arm-holes alſo, and ſoles of the feet, the nailes, head and beard being hairy, are not defiled with the bright ſpot, becauſe they are not in the open skin, but herein they are over-curious and forgetfull, becauſe, verſe 29. the leproſie upon the head or beard is ſpoken of. They note alſo, that if the whiteneſſe be not at leaſt as much as that of the filme of an egge, it is no leproſie, but a ſpeckled ſpot or Morphew.

Lucretius.

Joſeph. lib. 1. contra Appion. Bodin. Method. lect. 5.

Willet. Ainſworth.

Maimony Treatiſe of leproſie, Chap. 1. Sect. 2.

The uncleanneſſe of the leproſie is the third ſet forth in this book, the firſt was by touching unclean things, the ſecond in a woman having brought forth, and the third the leproſie upon man or woman. The uncleanneſſe of the body by the leproſie of divers ſorts figured out the uncleanneſſe of the ſoul by divers ſorts of ſins, for which God plagued men; for Miriam was thus plagued for ſin, and Gehazi, and King Uzziah, Numb. 12. 2 King 5. 2 King 15. So all Expoſitours generally, but Brentius ſtandeth for corrupt doctrine to be ſet forth hereby, becauſe that is likened to the Canker, 2 Tim. 2.

The Myſtery.

Brentius.

which

which is a kinde of leproſie, and this may be admitted alſo, as being a foul ſin in whomſoever. He alſo ſaith, that there was a reaſon, according to the letter, why theſe laws touching the leproſie are ſo copiouſly and exactly ſet down, viz. both to meet with cavillers that the Lord knew would ariſe to obſcure the glory of his miraculous geſts in bringing the Iſraelites out of Egypt, as Apion, &c. For if all this people had been now leprous, there ſhould never have been ſuch laws made about ſeparating ſuch, and alſo to intimate his care of the health and welfare of their bodies, that in the time of ſickneſſes and infections we may call upon him, and health and ſanity being reſtored, we may render him the praiſe. To judge of the leproſie the Prieſt is appointed, and afterwards to offer for the leper being cleanſed, to ſhew that Chriſt our true Prieſt ſhould take care for the cleanſing of our ſouls from all our ſins, and the expiating of them for ever. The reaſons why the Prieſt muſt be Judge herein, and not Moſes the Magiſtrate, or the Phyſician, were 1 Becauſe the Prieſt properly was to judge, who might be admitted into the Sanctuary, or be kept out. 2 Becauſe the rites and ceremonies for the cleanſing of lepers were to be performed by the Prieſt. 3 Becauſe he had the power of ſhutting up, or opening the door to the party in queſtion, ſo Toſtatus. Laſtly, the Prieſt muſt judge, in a myſtery to ſhew that the judgement of ſin ſet forth by the leproſie belongeth to the Prieſt, and becauſe Aaron and his ſons, who were the chief, onely are appointed to judge of it, that mens ſins are to be brought to the judgement of the chief, who have the power of excommunicating, that as the leprous for fear of infecting others were put out of the camp, ſo they, leſt others being led by their example, ſhould grow bold to live in the ſame foul ſins, might by excommunication be caſt out of the Congregation. The Papals hence infer the neceſſity of confeſſing all ſins once a yeer to the Prieſt, and his power to binde or looſe, to retain or to forgive them, and the infallibility of the Popes judgement, becauſe as the Prieſt judged, ſo it ſhould be, and if ſo, then his judgement muſt needs be alwayes ſound and right.

Toſtatus.

Againſt auricular Confeſſion of ſins.

But, as Calvin well noteth, we may rather gather hence, that ſecret ſins are not to be ſhewed to the Prieſt, but onely he is to judge of, and to cenſure thoſe that break openly out, as the Prieſt judged onely of the leproſie appearing in the skin. And what have I to do with men, ſaith Auguſtine, that they ſhould hear my confeſſions, as though they could heal my diſeaſes? Again, for judging, and binding, or looſing, the Prieſt might in his judgement have erred, if he had not gone by the directions ſet him down in every thing, and he was but Gods inſtrument going according to theſe, to ſhut up or to ſet at liberty. Foul ſins indeed, whereby men have broken out, are to be confeſſed openly, as the people were with John the Baptiſt confeſſing their ſins, and ſecret ſins troubling the conſcience privately to ſome faithfull Miniſter of Gods word, but not otherwiſe. And when foul ſins break out in any, they muſt be brought forth that they be conſidered of and cenſured, leſt others hereby be corrupted alſo, neither muſt any partiality be uſed. For, as Ambroſe hath, It is an unprofitable pity in a Phyſician, if becauſe of the pain in burning or inciſion he ſuffereth all the body to languiſh, wherefore the Prieſt muſt, as a good Phyſician cut off the wound, that it creep not further upon the whole body of the Church, and not cheriſh it, leſt whileſt he refraineth from excluding one, he make many worthy to be excluded. It is an obſervation of the Hebrews, that although it be ſaid, The Prieſt ſhall make him unclean, or make him clean, for ſo the Hebrew words here by & by following rendered, ſhall pronounce him unclean, or ſhall pronounce him clean, do ſignifie: yet the power in the Prieſt was not ſo to do, but onely to pronounce this or that, and if he pronounced any unclean that was clean, or clean that was unclean, he did nothing, becauſe it is ſaid, He is unclean, and the Prieſt ſhall make him unclean, &c. which maketh againſt that arrogated power, to binde and looſe in the Romiſh Church.

Calvin.

Aug. in Pſal. 51. Quid mihi cum hominibus ut audiant confeſſiones meas quaſi ipſi ſanatum ſint languores meos. Luke 3.

Ambroſ. Bene ergo ſacerdos, ne valetudo latius ſerpat in toto corpore Eccleſiæ, quaſi bonus medicus debet abſcindere, non ſovere, ne dum unum excludendum non putat, plures faciat dignos quos excludat. Maimony of Leproſie, Ch. 9.

Note.

This ſending of the leprous to the Prieſt, and not to the Phyſician, ſhewed that in time of ſickneſſe, God ſhould be firſt ſought unto by the acknowledgement and bewailing of ſin the cauſe thereof, and his Prieſt that he may pray for the ſick.

James 5.16.

Verſe 3.

And the Prieſt ſhall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh, and when the hair of the flesh is turned white, and the plague is deeper then the skin, &c. Here the Lord beginneth to ſhew by what ſignes the Prieſt may know, whether it be the plague of leproſie. But here the Rabbins put in, A Prieſt may not look upon this plague to judge of it, untill he hath been taught by the maſters, and knoweth perfectly all theſe things, and the ſignes and names thereof.

Otherwiſe he ſhall not go upon his own judgement, but ſome wiſe man ſeeing and telling him, the perſon is unclean or clean, or to be ſhut up, he ſhall pronounce accordingly, and then it ſhall be ſo, but not otherwiſe, and thus the Prieſt may judge, although he be a fool, and underſtandeth nothing of himſelf, ſo Maimony.

Maimony of Leproſie, Ch. 9. Sect. 1.

Touching the hair in the ſore, they ſay alſo that they muſt be two hairs at the leaſt, and white at the root, and made ſuch by the ſore, for if they were white before through old age, their whiteneſſe was no ſigne. And whiteneſſe in theſe hairs, ſaith Cazkuni, was a ſigne of the leproſie, becauſe they ſhewed a decay of naturall ſtrength in the fleſh through the force of this evil, as white hairs commonly argue a decay of nature in the aged: deeper then the skin this plague is ſaid to be, becauſe the nature of it is to fret and eat into the fleſh and to conſume it, for which cauſe Naaman being cured hereof, his fleſh is ſaid to have come again, as the fleſh of a young childe, ſee alſo Numb. 12.12.

Cazkuni.

2 Kings 5.

For the myſtery, Heſychius ſaith, that the leproſie in one part ſignified ſin againſt any one Commandment, for although a man faileth but in one point of the Law, he is guilty of all, and is ſo defiled, that he ſhall be ſhut out of the heavenly Sanctuary. The hairs, which are made ſignes, ſet forth the cogitations of the minde, for as hair adorneth the head, ſo good cogitations adorn the minde, and as the Prieſt judged by the hairs in the midſt of the leproſie, ſo God will judge men by the cogitations of their hearts, and if they be weak unto good, as hairs turned white argue weakneſſe, and be lower and baſer then the hearts of other Chriſtians, ſet forth by the ſore appearing lower then the skin, they are unclean and ſhall be judged ſo, and excluded. Not that God expecteth, that all ſhould be as excellent one as another, but as thoſe of their quality and condition, and by the thoughts of the heart God will judge, becauſe he ſeeth not as man ſeeth, but looketh to the heart.

Heſychius. The Myſtery. Jemes 2.10.

1 Sam 16.

Agreeable to this is that of Ainſworth, The hairs turned white ſignified the decay of ſpirituall ſtrength and grace in the ſoul by the power of ſin reigning therein, Hoſ. 7.9. Ezech. 16.30. Rom. 7.5,9,13. and the ſore lower then the skin did ſet forth the fretting nature of ſin, eating into and conſuming the ſoul, as it is ſaid of hereſie, 2 Tim. 2.17. All ſuch are unclean and filthy before God.

Ainſworth.

Verſe 4.

But if the white ſpot be bright in the skin, and be not deeper, and the hair be not turned, the Prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven dayes, &c. In Hebrew it is, he ſhall ſhut up the plague ſeven dayes, by plague the man infected with the plague being meant, ſo uncircumciſion is put for the uncircumciſed, Rom. 2.26. wickedneſſe for the wicked, Prov. 13.6, &c. Here God ſheweth both, that he would have good deliberation uſed in cenſuring of a ſinner, and that nothing be judged before the time, when God will reveal all ſins, becauſe, as ſome mens ſins go before, ſo in ſome they follow after. So Ainſworth: and alſo that a man may be by a naturall paſſion carried away to ſin, and yet his heart remain unaltered in the ſpirituall thoughts, and in the height thereof, for that it may ſtill be ſet upon things above. In this caſe much diſcretion muſt be be uſed, he muſt indeed be ſhut up for ſeven dayes, that is, be caſt out for his greater humiliation a certain time, but afterwards being found penitent, he muſt with much commiſeration be reſtored to the Church again, as Saint Paul dealt with the inceſtuous perſon, 1 *Cor.*5. and 2 *Cor.*2.6.7. and this is intimated.

1 Cor. 4 5. 1 Tim 5.24. Ainſworth.

If it be dark in appearance, and ſpread no further, it is a ſcab, he ſhall therefore waſh his clothes and be clean. Verſe 6. But if any man being cenſured for his ſin is reſtored again, and falleth into ſin afterwards, becoming the more remiſſe for this gentle correction, he ſhall be reviewed and condemned then as unclean, *verſ.*7.8. thus Heſychius, who hereupon exhorteth delinquents patiently to bear the cenſures of the Church, becauſe it will end in the greater conſolation, after a little time of ſuffering; but let ſuch as have ſaine, and have been thus dealt withall, not wax from thenceforth ſecure, for if ſo, he ſhall come to a ſecond cenſuring, and then his ſtate will be moſt dangerous. Heſychius. And as for the time of ſeven dayes, he ſaith, by ſeven this life's time is ſet forth, after which judging of all men ſhall be, the clean being pronounced clean, and the unclean unclean, and ſo caſt out: but the naturall reaſon of ſeven dayes here ſet for the time of judging is, becauſe, as Phyſicians obſerve, the ſeventh day is the criticall day for all diſeaſes to judge τελειως, πιστως σαφως, προδηλως, ἀκινδυνως. And that this touching the leproſie muſt needs have a myſticall ſenſe he ſheweth, becauſe when a man is in miſery, as the leprous perſon is, it were injuſtice to debar him from the comfort of the Sanctuary, if none other reſpect were had herein but to the bodily malady, ſeeing this was but a puniſhment laid upon him, which he could by no means avoid. And again, it is againſt ſenſe, which followeth, *verſ.*12,13. that he, who is all over leprous, ſhould be pronounced clean, but contrariwiſe he that is leprous in ſome part of his body, wherefore there muſt needs be a myſtery herein.

Hitherto two ſignes of the leproſie have been given, *verſ.*5,6,7,8. there is a third, viz. the ſpreading of the ſore after ſeven dayes, for if the party having been ſhut up ſeven dayes, it looketh ſomewhat dark and ſpreadeth not, he muſt be ſhut up ſeven dayes more, and then if it ſpreadeth not, he is to be pronounced clean, but if it ſpreadeth, unclean, it is the leproſie. Verſe 5,6,7. Verſe 8. The Prieſt, that muſt look upon it, ſaith Maimony, at the end of ſeven dayes, muſt be the ſame, that look't upon it and ſhut him up at the firſt, and not another, although he be ſick or dead, becauſe another cannot tell, whether it be increaſed. Again, if the ſeventh day falleth out upon a feſtivall, or the Sabbath, he muſt not look upon it then, but the day following. Laſtly, the perſon ſhut up muſt do nothing to his ſore place by cutting or ſearing to alter the appearance of it, which laſt ſtandeth with good reaſon, but the two former are additions of the Rabbins, for if that Prieſt be dead, then another muſt needs judge, although he tarry ſeven dayes more, after his firſt inſpection. Maimony Treatiſe of leproſie, *Chap.*10. Maimony alſo expoundeth this, If the plague be ſomewhat dark, in compariſon of the whiteneſſes before deſcribed, *verſ.*2. For the ſpreading of the ſore, he ſaith alſo, that if it be a freckled ſpot that ſpreadeth, it is no leproſie, as *verſ.*39. and that the ſpreading of the ſore after the firſt ſeven dayes did not make him unclean, but after the ſecond onely: whereas he that is pronounced clean, muſt yet waſh his cloathes; Ainſworth noteth, that even the righteous have their ſins, and therefore have need daily to waſh them by repentance, *Prov.*20.9. 1 *Joh.*1.8,9. Ainſworth. Here another caſe is put, if the hair be turned white, and there be quick raw fleſh, without the delay of ſhutting up ſeven dayes, he ſhall immediately be pronounced unclean, it is an old leproſie, but if the leproſie be ſpread all over his body, he ſhall be pronounced clean. but onely in caſe that raw fleſh appeareth. By quick fleſh here the Rabbins underſtand ſound fleſh in the middeſt of the ſore, ſuch as the fleſh is, when a man is recovered, Hebrew luveline ſſe of living fleſh, מחיר בשרחי, and by the Septuagint it is rendered, ſound fleſh Verſe 9,10. Verſe 11. Verſe 12. Verſe 13. Verſe 14. Verſe 15.

Solom. Jarchi. both here and verſ. 15. Livelineſſe, ſaith Solomon Jarchi, is ſaniment, or ſoundneſſe. Others read it raw fleſh, the skin being eaten off with the leproſie, as Valleſius de ſacra Philoſoph cap. 9. But there muſt be as much of this, ſay they, as a lentile, or elſe he ſhall not be pronounced unclean, and in the midſt of a bright ſore, if it be as little as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, and ſo in divers places, yet he is not unclean. This quick fleſh in any caſe is a ſigne of the leproſie, if in him, that hath been pronounced clean, it breaketh out again and again an 100 times, becauſe it is a ſigne, that the diſeaſe prevaileth, when it is thus in any man. And becauſe it is ſaid, the Prieſt ſhall view him well all over, the Rabbins ſay, that he muſt have both his eyes, and perfect ſight, that judgeth, and muſt look upon the diſeaſed neither in the morning nor evening, nor in a dark houſe, but when and where the light is cleareſt. This paſſage about the uncleanneſſe by reaſon of ſound fleſh, and about cleanneſſe in the caſe of being ſore all over, is moſt ſtrange. But, as Ainſworth well noteth, hereby was ſhewed, that they onely who acknowledge no whole part to be in them, but that they are all over moſt ſinfull and undeſerving in their beſt actions, are juſtified by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed unto them, and contrariwiſe ſuch as think ſome ſanity to be in themſelves, relying in any part upon that which they do for juſtification and ſalvation, are rejected, as unclean, 1 Joh. 1.9. 1 Cor. 11.31. Pſ. 38.4,8 Gal. 5.4. Gal. 2.16, &c Heſychius referreth the ſhining brightneſſe of the leproſie to manifeſt and notorious ſins, which are alwayes a ſigne of an unclean and filthy perſon, and the lively fleſh to the Leviticall ordinances under the Goſpel: for now he, that goeth from them all whether they concern times or meats, or other rights to a better Law of the Goſpel in the preſence of Chriſt our High Prieſt, is clean, but he that goeth from them ſo, as that he obſerveth them ſtil in part as having ſome lively fleſh, is pronounced unclean: ſo Gal. 5.1 Gal. 4. &c. I prefer the former.

Maimony of Leproſie, Ch. 3.

Ainſworth.

Luke 18.14, Heſychius.

Verſe 16,17 But if he that had ſome ſound fleſh hath that changed afterwards into white like the reſt of his body, he ſhall then be pronounced clean, a man repenting him of his errour, in relying in any part upon his own righteouſneſſe, and now acknowledging the ſpreading of ſinfulneſſe all over, even his beſt actions ſhall be reputed clean. Some refuſe this and all other myſticall applications here, ſaying that the ſore breaking out in ſome part onely, and having raw fleſh in it, this argued leſſe ſtrength of nature to expell the diſeaſe, but when it came out all over, more ſtrength of nature to expell it, the leproſie being herein like unto a River, being deepeſt where it is narroweſt, and fleeteſt where it is broadeſt. But although I imbrace this, as ſome naturall reaſon, yet becauſe God being the Phyſician of the ſoul principally in all his conſtitutions had reſpect unto the ſoul, I cannot but receive the other alſo, ſerving ſo aptly to illuſtrate a true and neceſſary Tenet in Divinity.

Willet.

Valleſius.

Verſe 18,19 Verſe 20. The fleſh alſo, in which there was a bile in the skin thereof, and was healed, but in the place thereof there is a white riſing or a bright ſpot, white and ſomewhat reddiſh, &c. From hence to verſ. 4. is ſet forth another caſe, in which the judgement muſt be made by the haires turned white, and the ſores being lower then the skin, as was ſaid before, and if theſe ſignes were not, he muſt be ſhut up ſeven dayes, and if then the ſore ſpreaded further, he was unclean, if not, clean, it was nothing but a burning bile. The colour ſomewhat reddiſh, the Rabbins diſtinguiſh into four ſorts, as was ſaid, that they diſtinguiſhed the white before, likening the firſt to the redneſſe of a little milk, having in it two drops of blood: the ſecond, to milk of the ſame quantity with four drops of blood: the third, to milk with eight: the fourth with 16 drops.

Maimony of Leproſie, Ch. 1. The Myſtery.

For the myſtery, a bile ſetteth forth ſin, as Pſal. 38.4. he then that by true penitency is healed of his ſin, if he falleth into a ſinfull courſe again, the haires being turned into white, that is, his heart being corrupted in the thoughts and ſtudies thereof, and the ſore is, as white, ſo ſomewhat reddiſh, that is, he is thus corrupted both againſt the law and againſt the Goſpel, not unaptly ſet forth by red, becauſe Chriſt came all red with blood, as out of Heſychius.

Bozra,

Bozra, as the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh, his caſe is now worſe by far then it was before, he hath the plague of leproſie, or if after a certain time this being doubtfull for the preſent, he waxeth worſe and worſe in the courſe of his life, ſet forth in the ſpreading of the ſore after ſeven dayes ſhutting up, he is likewiſe foul and unclean, but if there be ſome ſhew of evill, but no ſignes of relapſing, it is but an infirmity, ſuch as all, even the beſt are ſubject to, a burning bile, but he is clean. Of the firſt ſort was Pilate, waſhing his hands, as if his bile had been healed, but by and by delivering Chriſt to be crucified, whereby it ſpread as a filthy leproſie, and his caſe became much worſe. Of the ſecond David repenting of his adultery and murther, and Paul of his perſecuting and blaſpheming: to this effect almoſt Heſychius.

From hence to v. 29. another caſe is put of an hot burning with a white ſpot in it, in judging of which it muſt be proceeded, as in the former, but onely that live fleſh is here mentioned as a ſigne, wherein it differeth from that. This hot burning the Rabbins define to be with an hot iron, fiery coale or the like; and by live fleſh here, ſaith Ainſworth, ſound fleſh and healed after the burning muſt needs be meant, or the healed ſcarre, and ſo the Septuagint render it, an healed place; and if it be ſo underſtood, the deſcription hereof is altogether as that of the former, v. 18. Hereby, ſaith Heſychius, was ſet forth the fire of evill zeal to hinder from good through envy, and to further evill, for a burning coming upon the ſoul hereby, if by penitency it be healed, may break out again, that is, the ſinner in this kinde may relapſe again, but then it is a filthy leproſie, he is moſt unclean.

If a man or woman have a plague upon the head or beard, &c. In this caſe beſides the lowneſſe of the hair being yellow and thin, is made a ſigne of uncleanneſſe, and v. 31. if it be no lower, and there be no black hair in it, he muſt be ſhut up 7 dayes, as in a doubtfull caſe, and if the ſcall be not ſpread by that time, nor yellow hair appeareth, he muſt be ſhaven, and then ſhut up other ſeven dayes, and then if it be not ſpread, &c. he muſt be pronounced clean; but if it be ſpread, although no yellow haires appear, he is unclean, but the ſcall ſtanding ſtill at a ſtay, and black haires growing, he is ſound and clean. The plague of leproſie in the head or beard is called by a divers name from all the reſt, נתק, from breaking or plucking up, becauſe as the Rabbins ſay, the haires in this plague fall off from the head or beard by the roots, as if it were plucked up. Whereas the head or beard of man or woman is ſpoken of, a queſtion is moved by ſome, why womens beards ſhould be ſpoken of, ſeeing they have none? But it is eaſily anſwered; In Hebrew it is, A man or woman, if there be in him בו the plague of leproſie in head or beard: and yet Hippocrates maketh mention of two women that had beards, Phathuſa and Namiſia. And Herodotus telleth a tale of the Prieſt of Pallas, being a woman that had a beard, but theſe were rare and preternaturall. Touching the yellow haires in the ſcall here made a ſigne of leproſie, they muſt be, ſay the Rabbins, two at the leaſt yellow as gold, and ſmall and ſhort; for if they be long, although they be thus yellow, they are no ſigne thereof. Black haires are ſpoken of, it being ſaid, that if they be wanting, he ſhall be ſhaven, and then ſhut up 7 dayes, becauſe black haires, as they argue ſtrength of nature, ſo they are a ſigne of ſoundneſſe, as v. 37. wherefore if they had appeared at the firſt, he ſhould not have been ſhut up. But the Rabbins in ſpeaking of theſe black haires, ſay alſo that they muſt be two at the leaſt, and long enough to bow again to the roots: for if there be one yellow and one black, he is not freed, but if by ſuch black hairs he be once freed, although they fall off afterwards, he is clean ſtill, unleſſe yellow hairs come in their ſtead. For the ſhaving, it was thus, all the hairs about the ſcall were ſhaved off, except two on each ſide, whereby it might be ſeen whether it ſpreaded or not: ſo Maimony.

By the plague in the head Heſychius underſtandeth errour touching the Deity, in which caſe it muſt be conſidered with what minde a man uttereth ſuch

Verſe 24, 25
Verſe 26.

Maimony.
Ainſworth.

Heſychius.
The Myſtery.

Verſe 29, 30
Verſe 31, 32
Verſe 33, 34
Verſe 35, 36
Verſe 37.

Maimony.

Hippocrat. de morb. popular.
Herodotus li. 1.
Maimony, of Leproſie, Ch. 8.

Heſychius.

ſuch errour, whether being ſimply miſled by others, or out of his own evill heart ſet forth by the lowneſſe of the ſcall, and the thin yellow haires or ſubtile haires; becauſe, as theſe argue a corruption in a great degree in the humours, ſo ſuch errours coming from himſelfe argue great corruption in the heart; and if ſo, he is unclean: but if this be uncertain, becauſe there be no black hairs denoting ſoundneſſe, that is, it doth not appear whether his heart be corrupted or no, he muſt be ſhaven, that is, the words wherein he ſpake muſt be cut off; others, according to the truth, being propounded unto him, and he is to be cenſured for a time, and then if no ſignes of ſuch a corrupt heart appear, but of a penitent heart ſet forth by the black hairs, he ſhall be ſet free, he is no heretick, but a member of the true Church again. But if after being ſo dealt withall, as hath been ſaid before, the ſcall ſhall ſpread, that is, he perſiſteth in this errour without humiliation, no inquiry ſhall need any further to be made, whether he hath yellow haires, that is, with what minde he ſpake ſo, for it is apparent by this that he is impure and filthy.

Verſe 38, 39

If a man or woman have bright ſpots, if they be darkiſh white, it is a freckled ſpot that groweth in the skin, he is clean. Although ſuch ſpots come from corruption of the humours, and are oftentimes fore-runners of the leproſie, yet the Lord would not have thoſe that had ſuch onely to be counted unclean, ſhewing hereby, that out of his great grace he paſſeth over many imperfections in his, and layeth them not to their charge, as malignant ſinnes. Or with Heſychius, we may apply this to the ignorance of ſome Ceremoniall lawes in the common people of the Jews, which notwithſtanding they were clean, if they eſchewed the groſſe ſinnes forbidden in the Morall Law.

Ainſworth.

Heſychius.

Verſe 40, 41
Verſe 42, 43
Verſe 44.

Here it is ſhewed, that a man ſhall not be counted unclean meerly for the want of hair which is faine off from his head, but bald onely, yet if in his bald head a white reddiſh ſore ariſeth, he is unclean, and hath the plague of leproſie. Here, becauſe it is ſaid, v. 43. As the leproſie appeareth in the skin of the fleſh, the Rabbins note, that the proceedings in judging hereof muſt be according to all the rules before-going, if there be a white brightneſſe, or if it be lower, or if it be a burning boil, or if there be quick fleſh, or a ſpreading, as v. 19, 20, &c. and they ſay accordingly it is to be underſtood, that ſuch ſhould upon the like reaſons be ſhut up 7 dayes, and 7 dayes. Touching baldneſſe, ſome are born ſo, as a people called Myconii, ſo Pliny; ſome become ſuch by ſickneſſe, or other infirmities; and ſome by old age, or by ſores growing upon their heads, which cauſe their hair to go off. Now becauſe the hair is given for an ornament, and a cover to the head, it is a diſgrace to be bald, wherefore Julius Cæſar being bald, did alwayes weare a lawrell Crown to hide it, and Otho an hat, and Domitian being bald forbade that any ſhould be derided or mocked for his baldneſſe. Hair, ſaith Ambroſe, is reverend in old men, venerable in Prieſts, terrible in Warriours, comely in young men, and trim in women. Yet Syneſius defended baldneſſe, becauſe he himſelfe was bald, ſaying, that it was a preſervative from many diſeaſes. But although baldneſſe was ſome blemiſh, a man was not to be counted unclean therefore, except a ſore white and reddiſh did ariſe therein, whereby was ſet forth, ſaith Heſychius, that although a man be ſimple, yet being of an innocentt life, he ſhall not be rejected for this, but onely if he committeth any foul ſin, becauſe none are ſo ſimple but that they know ſuch evils are not to be done, becauſe the hairs do ſet forth the cogitations of the minde, and the want of them, want of wiſe thoughts and underſtanding. Willet applieth it to ſuch as renounce the world and the cares thereof, but are afterwards tainted with pride in their ſo doing. I think rather, as in ſpeaking of the freckled ſpot was ſaid, ſo here onely it is generally ſignified, that little imperfections make not a man unclean, ſo as that he may therefore be judged unregenerate, but if amongſt them there be any great enormity breaking out; this ſheweth a wicked man indeed, Plin. l. 11. c. 37.

Suetonius.
Ambroſ.
Cæſaries in ſenibus reverenda, in ſacerdot. veneranda, in bellatoribus terribilis, decora in adoleſcentibus, compta in mulieribus.
Heſychius.

Willet.

And

And the leper, in whom the plague is, ſhall have his cloaths rent, and his head bare, and put a covering upon his upper lip, and cry, Unclean, unclean. He ſhall dwell alone without the campe, &c. The renting of his cloaths is a ſigne of mourning, for he ought, ſaith Cazkuni, to mourn for his evill deeds, for which this plague was ſent upon him. And for his head being bare, how it is to be underſtood, ſee before, Chap. 10.6. where both theſe are ſpoken of. The Rabbins here diſtinguiſh and ſay, A leprous woman rendeth not her cloaths, nor maketh her head free, nor covereth her upper lip, but onely ſitteth without the City, and makes it known to others that ſhe is unclean. For the covering of the upper lip, this was a ſigne alſo of ſorrow and ſhame, as it is ſpoken of, Ezek. 24.17. Micah 3.7. and therefore the Chaldee rendereth it, cover as a mourner. His upper lip or mouth according to the Septuagint was covered, ſaith Maimony, to ſhew, that he ſhould now ſalute no man; and as ſome adde well, to keep in his breath, that others might not be infected with it. His crying, Unclean, was to give warning to all men to avoid him, that they might not be polluted by him. For as the Rabbins note, of all unclean things he was the moſt unclean and defiling; for if a man did but come and ſtand under the ſame tree with him, he was unclean hereby: ſo Maimony. Jonathan rendereth it, Avoid, avoid, be not ye made unclean. For their dwelling alone without the campe, the reaſon hereof is given, Numb. 5.3. that the campe might not be defiled, in the midſt whereof the Lord dwelled, afterwards they were likewiſe put out of Cities: Calvin. If it be demanded, whether a man being married were in this caſe to be excluded from his wife? It is anſwered, that the marriage is not hereby diſſolved, quoad vinculum, according to that generall rule; two being married together, & afterwards an infirmity happening to one of them, whatſoever it be, the marriage cannot therefore be diſſolved, becauſe nothing but fornication is a ſufficient reaſon of divorcement. And ſome go further, ſaying, Wives are not to be diſmiſſed for the leproſie, but they deſiring it, the debt of marriage ought to be rendered to them, becauſe none ought to be diſmiſſed, but for fornication. Yet this is well interpreted of duties which may be done without the danger of infection. Such a diſeaſe ſo polluting and infecting is a ſufficient cauſe of ſeparating from bed and board, although not à vinculo aut ſubſidio, giving help and comfort to the infected.

For the myſtery, this appointing of the leprous to mourne, and to live alone, ſhewed, how ſorrowfull and contrite we ſhould be for our foul and filthy ſins, never ceaſing our contrition, untill that we be healed of them, which is not till we have utterly abandoned them, and therefore we muſt cry for grace, that we may thus do. And we muſt be ſo farre from drawing others to the ſame wickedneſſe, and polluting them, as that we muſt rather give them warning that they fall not into ſuch ſins. And that ſinners may be the more humbled, they muſt be caſt out of the Church by excommunication, none being ſpared, of what condition ſoever, as Azarias the King, being a leper, was made to dwell apart, and Myriam was ſhut out of the campe, although the ſiſter of Moſes. This alſo ſhewed, that wicked perſons ſhall be ſhut out of heaven, as Rab. Elias noteth ſaying, When a man conſidereth theſe things, he will be abaſhed and aſhamed of his iniquities, for every iniquity is a plague and blemiſh in his ſoul, and as the body for the plague of leproſie muſt be removed far out of the campe of Iſrael, ſo the pollution of the ſoul removeth it far from the holineſſe which is on high. And if a man turneth by repentance, he ſhall be cleanſed, and by receiving chaſtiſements, otherwiſe, he ſhall in the World to come be farre removed from all the camp that is on high. In this verſe and hence forward to the end of the chapter, the caſe of any garment having the plague of leproſie upon it is handled, whether it be linnen or woollen, whether it be in the warpe or in the wooſe, or if it be in any garment of skins. But here by woollen garments the Rabbins underſtand ſuch only, as are made of ſheeps wooll and nothing elſe, Verſe 45.

Verſe 46.

Cazkuni.

Maimony of Leproſie, Ch. 10

Queſt. Whether a man married muſt live alone. Nicolaus 1.2. 32 quæſt. 7 c. 25 Decret. Alex. 3. Uxores propter lepram non ſunt dimittendæ, ſed illis petentibus debitum debet reddi, &c. Lorinus.

The Myſtery.

2 Kings 15.5. Numb. 12.14. R. Elias in Sepher 1. ſaith Cachuzah.

Verſe 47.

elſe, and by the linen ſuch as are made of flax only, ſo that if a garment be made of wooll and camels hair together, or of flax and hemp together, and the moſt part be camels hair, or hemp, it is not made unclean, or if the warp or woof be in the one camels hair, or in the other hemp, but otherwiſe if it be moſt linen, or woollen, it is unclean. And they adde, that the woof and warp are diſtinctly named, becauſe if the plague be in the one onely and not in the other, that other is not unclean, and moreover that all this is to be underſtood of cloathes not died, for if they be died, they are not unclean, but onely being white; ſo Maimony & Talmud Babyl. And for skins, they ſay onely skins of ſuch things as the earth bringeth forth are meant, and not any skins of thoſe in the waters. But all theſe are curioſities and additions of their own put to the Law of God: woollen and linen garments are named, becauſe they were moſt uſuall, but all others are doubtleſſe comprehended under theſe and skins, of which hair cometh. The ſignes of the leproſie in garments are colours greeniſh or reddiſh and ſpreading, or after ſeven dayes and waſhing, the colour continuing, as it was, although it ſpread not. And in caſe that it be judged the leproſie, it muſt be burnt, otherwiſe fourteen dayes being paſt, and it being waſhed the ſecond time, it was clean. Here the Rabbins expound the greeniſh and reddiſh colours of very green and very red like crimſon. And of an unclean garment they ſay, it defileth ſo, that if but ſo much as an Olive be in any houſe, both it and all things therein are defiled with the greateſt defilement, even as by the dead. The infection ſpoken of here in garments, and afterwards, Chap. 14.34. in houſes was peculiar to this people, for in other countreys leproſies are not obſerved thus to infect; wherefore this was a plague, whereby God did ſpecially chaſtiſe his people for their ſins, upon which obſervation Calvin toucheth. For the myſtery, hereby was ſhewed, that all things about us are made unclean and defiled to us by ſin, according to that ſaying, To the pure all things are pure, but to the impure their very conſcience is defiled. And becauſe the body is as the garment of the ſoul, that not onely the ſoul, but the body alſo is defiled by ſin, for which cauſe we read of garments ſpotted with the fleſh, which muſt be hated, & of ſome that have kept their garments, and not defiled them. But by waſhing in the blood of the Lamb ſet forth by waſhing here, we come to have our robes made all white again. And as for the burning of garments infected, this figured out the end of thoſe bodies, which are polluted with ſin, they ſhall burn in the unquenchable fire of Hell. Heſychius more particularly by the garments of woollen will have thoſe vertues underſtood, in which more heat of grace is ſhewed, as chaſtity, and the abdication of worldly riches; and by the linen, ſuch vertues as wherein there is leſſe heat of grace, as conjugall chaſtity and liberality to the poor; by thoſe of skin, the vertues attained to by ſufferings, which mortifie; by the warp, good motions from above; and by the woof, our good intentions and endeavours concurring herewith. If being endued with any of theſe vertues, there be pride taken therein ſet forth by the greeniſh colour, or vain glory ſet forth by the reddiſh, theſe vertues are in us corrupted, and burning in Hell fire ſhall be our end; but if it be not ſo apparently, yet ſome ſhew hereof continueth, and after admonition there is no reformation, the caſe is naught, and the ſoul muſt come to the ſame fearfull end: but if otherwiſe, there muſt yet be repentance and humiliation for the cauſe of ſuſpition given ſet forth by waſhing, and theſe vertues ſhall be clean and undefiled.

There remaineth now in this chapter onely one phraſe, verſ. 55. bare within, or without, by which if it be demanded what is meant? It is anſwered, the ſame words are here uſed, which were uſed in ſpeaking of a mans baldneſſe, verſ 42. בקרחתו בגבחתו in the baldneſſe before or behind, and hereby is meant bareneſſe on the inſide or outſide being cauſed by the fretting of the leproſie. The Chaldee rendereth it, on the old, or new part thereof, ſo likewiſe Maimony, the Septuagint in the warp or the woof thereof.

CHAP.

Maimony of leproſie, Ch. 13. Talmud Babyl. in Negagnim.

Verſe 49,50
Verſe 51,55

Maimony.

Calvin.
The Myſtery.

Jud. Epiſt. 23.
Revel. 3. 4.
Revel. 7. 14.

Heſychius.

Verſe 58.
Queſt.

CHAP. XIIII.

IN this chapter it is ſhewed, what ſacrifices muſt be offered by the leper being cleanſed, but no means of curing this malady are preſcribed in the Law, which ſhewed the inſufficiency of the Law to juſtifie from ſin, and that Chriſt alone doth this, who cleanſed the lepers at his coming, *Mat.*11.5.

If any leper were cleanſed, he muſt be brought to the Prieſt, and the Prieſt muſt go out of the camp, and look, and behold if the plague of leproſie be cleanſed. This, ſay the Hebrews was done thus: the leper was brought to the utmoſt part of the camp, and afterwards when they dwelt in cities, to the gates of Jeruſalem, and thither the Prieſt went to look upon him, no medicine was uſed to heal him, ſaith Rab. Menahem, neither was it lawfull, becauſe the leproſie came by the finger of God, onely the Prieſt made an atonement for the leper by mercy, whereby alone iniquity is done away, as the filthineſſe of the fleſh by water. Verſe 1,2,3. R. Menahem.

Then the Prieſt ſhall command to take for him, that is to be cleanſed, two birds alive and clean, and cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſop, &c. Peter Comeſtor ſaith, that the leper brought the birds, ſcarlet, cedar and hyſop with him, and an earthen pot with running water in it, as *verſ.*5. the Septuagint, They ſhall take, that is, he or any of his friends for him. The two birds were any, except the unclean, *Levit.*11. but the Hebrews ſay, that they muſt be free, not tame, as is alſo here intimated, becauſe one muſt be let to flie away. The cedar-wood, they ſay, was a ſtick of cedar a cubit long and ſquare, of the thickneſſe of a beds foot. The ſcarlet was ſcarlet-wooll, *Heb.*9.19. and of this, they ſay, there muſt be a ſhekel weight. The hyſop muſt be garden-hyſop, and not any other, and as long as an hand is broad. The earthen veſſell muſt be new, and the running water in it muſt be out of a ſpring that ceaſeth not running, and ſuch as is clean and hath not been before uſed, in quantity a quarter of a log, that is, an egge and half; becauſe, as Cazkuni noteth, the bloud of a bird alone is not enough to dip the cedar, ſcarlet and hyſop, without this addition of water. One of the living birds brought was killed by the leper recovered, or by another for him at the Prieſts command, and the bloud mixed with the water for the dipping of the living bird, and the other things therein. Then the ground was digged, and the bird killed buried; and into the bloud and water the living bird, and ſcarlet, and cedar, and hyſop were dipped, and the leper to be cleanſed ſprinkled ſeven times, which dipping was thus; the ſcarlet, cedar, and hyſop were bound up together length-wiſe, and about them the living bird with the tips of the wings, and the tail, and ſo they were all together dipped. Thus Maimony. The ſeven times ſprinkling ſignified his perfect purging from his uncleanneſſe, becauſe ſeven ever ſince the creation, from which God reſted upon the ſeventh day, hath been counted in rememberance thereof a number of perfection. Touching the cedar-wood, the ſcarlet, and hyſop, Maimony ſaith, they might be kept to cleanſe other lepers withall, and the live bird, if it were taken again, might be uſed for another leper again, and ſo likewiſe for a third, fourth, &c. but the dead bird might not be put to any uſe after this. Whereas *verſ.*7. it is ſaid, He ſhall let the living bird looſe in the open field, Hebr. in the face of the field, Maimony ſaith; that he muſt not let her flie to the ſea, having his face turned thither, or to the citie, or to the wilderneſſe, but onely to the field. And Cazkuni noteth, that this was done to expreſſe the liberty which the leper now had to return to his fellows, as the bird having been held in the hands of men was now ſet at liberty to flie away amongſt other birds, becauſe the leper had hitherto in like manner been held in place by himſelf from the ſociety of other men. And hitherto the Rabbins. But touching the two birds, ſome render them ſparrows; in Hebrew brew it is Tſippor, ſignifying generally any ſmall bird, and ſo Junius rendereth it, the Septuagint and Vatablus: and ſo the word is uſed, Gen. 15.12. yet ſometime it is alſo put for a ſparrow, as Pſal. 102.10. But ſparrows flie not but to houſes, and ſo do doves, and therefore it is moſt likely that ſome other ſmall birds, and not theſe were meant. Touching the myſtery of all theſe things; there was, I grant, a morall end of them, that the leper having had ſo foul a diſeaſe might not at his own pleaſure return into the camp when he was clean, but a ſolemn order of declaring him to be cleanſed, having been thus firſt obſerved for the ſatisfaction of all men, and to the Prieſt he muſt be brought, and with theſe ceremonies appointed by him declared to be clean, that he might thus be put in minde to whom to refer his healing, viz. to God, whoſe Prieſt came out to cleanſe him, and to him give all the praiſe. But theſe are onely generall conſiderations, the taking of two live birds, cedar, ſcarlet and hyſop, and the earthen veſſell with living water, &c. did more particularly doubtleſſe figure out Chriſt Jeſus, by whom alone we are cleanſed from all filthineſſe of ſin. The two birds, whereof one was killed, but the other let go free, as the two goats afterwards, Levit. 16.7,10. did ſet forth the two natures of Chriſt, in the one of which onely he ſuffered death, but the other went free, as 1 Pet. 3.18. the cedar, ſcarlet, and hyſop are the ſame which were uſed about the purifying water, Numb. 19. the cedar-ſtick was that unto which the reſt were bound, that a man holding it in his hand might ſprinkle therewith; the cedar is the talleſt of all trees, ſome of them growing to an hundred and thirty foot in height, according to Pliny, and it is incorruptible wood, and there is pitch which cometh out of it, whereby dead bodies are kept from corrupting, but the living are corrupted, and it is good to heal leproſies, and other foul diſeaſes. And the cedar is ſpoken of, as ſignifying Chriſt, the higheſt and chiefeſt of all, and the Authour of incorruption and immortality, Ezech. 1.22,23. Again, as the cedar is talleſt, ſo the hyſop is loweſt, but it hath alſo vertue to heal wounds, wherefore hereby Chriſts humility was ſet forth, by which we are healed, Eſa. 53. the ſcarlet ſhewed the fervencie of his charity; the bloud and water, that Chriſt ſhould not come by bloud onely, but by water and bloud; and the earthen veſſell, that the Miniſters who preach Chriſt and his paſſions, are earthen veſſels, yet having this rich treaſure in them, 2 Cor. 4.7. the ſeven times ſprinkling, our perfect purging from all uncleanneſſe of ſin through his bloud, and thus are all theſe things briefly applied by the Apoſtle, Hebr. 9. 19,20, &c. And laſtly, the water is called living water, to ſet forth the grace of the Spirit of Chriſt compared to living water, Joh. 4.10. chap. 7.38. Heſychius beginning the figure a little higher ſaith, that the Prieſts going out of the camp to view the leper, figured out Chriſts going out of the city to ſuffer; the two ſparrows, his two natures, both clean; the cedar-wood, his croſſe; the ſcarlet, his paſſion; the hyſop ſmelling ſweet, the comforts of his Spirit; the water in the earthen pot, the water of baptiſme upon us, that are as potters veſſels; the dipping of all herein, the concourſe of all things about Chriſt in baptiſme, ſeeing it is a repreſentation of his paſſions. Some will have the ſcarlet being red to ſignifie the perfect cure of the leproſie, which was white; and the ſweet ſmelling hyſop, the doing away of the ill ſmell thereof; but theſe are onely morall reaſons.

Verſe 4 Scholaſt. hiſtor. Maimony of Leproſie, *Ch.*11 Cazkuni. Verſe 6,7 Maimony. Cazkuni. Lyranus. Montanus. Vatab. Calvin.

The Myſtery.

Calvin.

Plin. hiſt. l. 24. c. 89.

Dioſcorides lib. 1. c. 89.

1 John 5 6.

1 John 1.6.

Heſychius.

Verſe 8. The leper being thus cleanſed, muſt further ſhave off all his hair, and waſh his clothes, and come into the camp, but not into his tent for ſeven dayes, and Verſe 9, 10. upon the ſeventh day he muſt ſhave his head, beard and eye brows, and waſh his clothes and fleſh, and upon the eighth day bring two he-lambs, &c. God would not have the man who had had the leproſie, to come to the Tabernacle, but by degrees in proceſſe of time to move to the more reverence of his Sanctuary. The hair which he muſt ſhave off, was all, as the Rabbins explain it, all over his body, yea upon his ſecret parts. And the like was appointed to be done to the Levites at their conſecration, Numb 8.7. and of this this ſhaving, Rab. Menahem ſaith, it was needfull to beat down the power of uncleanneſſe, which abounded in the leper. And it is ſaid, that he ſhould thus ſhave himſelfe, and waſh, That he might be clean, not that he was perfectly cleanſed ſo ſoon as he had done thus, but that having done thus, and proceeding to other Rites that follow, he might in the end be perfectly clean. But immediately upon this ſhaving, ſaith Maimony, he was clean to come into the campe, and did not by lying or ſitting pollute his bed or ſeat any more. In that it is ſaid, after this ſhaving and waſhing he ſhall not come into his tent in ſeven dayes, it is alſo gathered, that yet he might not lie again with his wife. The ſecond ſhaving and waſhing upon the ſeventh day argued his uncleanneſſe ſtill all thoſe dayes, and if he touched any man or veſſel in this time, they were defiled, as his cloaths after his firſt waſhing, becauſe whatſoever defileth cloaths, defileth men aud veſſels alſo: Maimony, Treat. of leproſie, Chap. 11. This waſhing of cloaths, ſaith Rab. Menahem, was to ſhew, that the ſpirit of uncleanneſſe ſhould be put away from him. For the myſtery of all theſe things, ſhaving the hair did ſet forth the weakening of the ſtrength of ſin in thoſe that are cleanſed herefrom, becauſe hair ſheweth ſtrength of heat, and humours abounding in the body; and therefore Sampſons hair being cut off, it ſhewed the decay of his ſtrength, and when the Lord threateneth to weaken the people, he ſpeaketh by this phraſe, I will ſhave with a raſor, *Eſa.*7.20. waſhing the firſt time figured baptiſme, and waſhing the ſecond time upon the ſeventh day, repentance, whereby we muſt again and again, waſh and make us clean continually to our lives end, and ſhaving the ſecond time of the haires that grew in the ſeven dayes figured out our proceeding to ſubdue and bring under the power of ſin, and, as Maimony noteth, ſhaving muſt be of every hair, not two being left upon all the body; and if two be left, the ſhaving is as nothing; ſo no ſin muſt be ſuffered to remain in the ſtrength in us, it muſt not reign in our mortall bodies. But whereas he ſaith, The Prieſt onely muſt both kill the bird, ſprinkle the blood, and ſhave him, but other acts about his cleanſing might be done by others; this is beſides the Text, for here it is left undetermined, who ſhould do it. Touching his coming firſt into the campe, and afterwards to the tabernacle, this ſhewed how we ſhould be going on continually towards the Kingdome of heaven, for grace is not perfected at the firſt, but muſt increaſe and grow in us by degrees to the end. In which laſt, and in that of waſhing twice Heſychius agreeth. But by cloaths to be waſhed he underſtandeth vertues in us to be cleanſed; by the haires to be ſhaved off, evil and carnall cogitations to be put away, whether touching the higheſt things ſet forth by the haires of the head and eye-browes, or touching the things of manlike diſcretion; by the beard, not one old thought muſt be ſuffered to remain, and as a man ſhaved all over is as it were a new man, ſo muſt we be to be accounted clean.

Rab. Menahem.

Maimony.

Rab. Menahem.

The Myſtery.

Rom. 6.12.

Heſychius.

Touching the lambes to be brought upon the eighth day, they muſt be two males, one for a treſpaſſe-offering, and another for a burnt-offering, and one female for a ſin-offering. For all theſe offerings muſt now be made as we may ſee, *v.*12. and *v.*19. and for the two former, males muſt be brought, *Levit.*1. and Chap 6.6. and *verſ.*12. of this Chapter, for the ſin-offering of a private perſon, a female, Levit 4.28. For their age, and being without blemiſh, and preſenting at the door of the tabernacle, and the manner of killing and offering, ſee before, *Levit.*1, &c. and for the quantity of the meat-offering here alſo appointed to be brought, and of the oil, *Levit.*2. a log of oil is halfe a pinte. For the Ceremonies that are ſingular. The Prieſt ſhall take of the blood of the treſpaſſe-offering, and put thereof upon the tip of his right ear, upon the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot. And he ſhall take of the log of oil, and poure it into his left hand, and with his right ſprinkle it with his finger ſeven times before the Lord. Then ſhall he put of the oil upon the tip of his right ear, the thumb, &c. and poure the reſidue thereof upon his head. The like Ceremony

Verſe 10.
Verſe 11.
Verſe 12.
Verſe 13.

Verſe 14.

Verſe 15.
Verſe 16.
Verſe 17.
Verſe 18.

remony of putting blood upon the right ear, thumb and toe was prescribed before in the consecration of the Priests, *Exod.*29.20. whilest this was done, the party to be cleansed stood not in the Court, into which other Israelites came that were clean, for none unclean, till they had received their atonement, might come in thither, but stand without in the womens Court which was next to it, and he that was now to be cleansed standing therefore in that Court at the gate, put in his head, that the Priest might put the blood upon it, and then his hand and his foot. And Maimony saith, If he had not a right ear, thumb and toe, he could never be cleansed; and for the oil, the residue whereof is to be poured upon his head, he saith, It was that remaining in his hand, and so it is expressed, *v.*17. for that which remained more of the log, the Priests had amongst them. For the mystery of the blood putting upon these parts, see before, *Exod.*29.20. and as the blood setteth forth the blood of Christ, sanctifying the hearing, the actions, and the wayes, so the oil setteth forth the Holy Ghost guiding us in all these parts for Gods glory and the good of our souls. A trespasse-offering, and then a sin-offering, *v.*19. must be offered first, to shew, that we must be purged from all our sins both great and small, before we can become an holocaust, or whole burnt-offering to God, as we are exhorted, *Rom.*12.1. and afterwards it is said, to shew this the burnt-offering must be offered. And for the sin and trespasse-offering were taken both a male and a female lamb, to shew, that by Christ we are saved from our sins both men and women. And a meat-offering also must be offered, *v.*20. because this alwayes accompanied the burnt-offering, *Chap.*2. But the Rabbins note, that with none other sin-offering or trespasse-offering a meat-offering was brought, saving in this case of a leper cleansed. The eighth day, when all this vvas done, figured out the resurrection of Christ upon the eighth day to glory, being the ground also of our rising again, and entering into the Tabernacle of the most High, as the leper being cleansed upon this day came to the materiall Tabernacle: so also Hesychius.

*Maimony in Mechosrei Capporab, c.*4.
The Mystery.
Verse 19.
Hesychius.
Verse 20.

Verse 21,22 But if he be poor, he shall take one lambe for a trespasse-offering, and one tenth deal of fine flourc, and a log of oil, and two turtle Doves, or two young Pigeons, &c.

Quest.
Tostatus.
Pelican.

For the pigeons see the like Proviso before, *Chap.*5.7. But why must he needs bring one lambe? Tostatus answereth, because the blood of the fowles would not have been sufficient to put upon all those parts: Pelican, because the lambe figured out Christ, without whose bloodshed there is no remission of sinnes. The first is most probable, because a pigeon or turtle, as well as a lamb, did figure Christ out; but I cannot rest in either, seeing a very little blood would serve to put upon the tip of the ear and thumb, &c. Rather according to the greatnesse of the deliverance, a greater sacrifice then ordinary must be brought, even by the poor in this case, for he must offer all manner of sacrifices, the trespasse-offering, sin-offering, and burnt-offering, and meat-offering, and therefore for one he must needs bring a lambe. For the Rites to be performed about the poor mans offerings, they were the same with the rich, and are set forth, *v.*22, &c. to *v.*33. The birds brought, whereof one was killed before without the came, *v.*5. and the Cedar, Wood, Scarlet and Hyssop, &c. cannot be said to have been done by way of sacrificing, because there was no fit place, nor fire, but those were certain rights to cleanse the leper so far, that he might be fit to come to the Tabernacle with these sacrifices.

Verse 33. In this verse, and hence-forward the Lord setteth down lawes touching houses infected with the leprosie. When it beginneth to be suspected, the house must be emptied, and then the Priest must come to view it, and if in the wals hollow strakes appear greenish and reddish lower then the wall, it must be shut up for 7 dayes, and then being viewed again, if they be spread, the stones wherein they are must be taken away, and new stones be supplied, and the wals must be scraped within and without, and new plaistering put on, and if thus being used it breaketh out again, it must be pulled down, and carried

Verse 36,37
Verse 38,39
Verse 40,41
Verse 42,43
Verse 44,45

ried away to an unclean place, &c. But if the plague ſpreadeth not, the houſe ſhall be pronounced clean, and certain rites muſt be done for the cleanſing thereof, as was before appointed, verſe 5. in the caſe of a man being cleanſed. Verſe 46, 47 Verſe 48, 49 Verſe 50, 51 Verſe 52, 53

Now in the beginning of theſe Ordinances, whereas it is ſaid, If I put the plague of leproſie into an houſe of your poſſeſſion, v. 34. the Rabbins obſerve, that the leproſie in garments and houſes was not elſewhere in the world, but was ſent miraculouſly amongſt them, as a puniſhment for an evill tongue: ſo Maimony; becauſe Miriam was thus puniſht for this diſeaſe, Numb. 12. and it was for an evill tongue againſt Gods miniſters, 2 Chron. 36. 16. But it is ſtrange that he noteth further, that houſes in Jeruſalem were never thus infected, for that was not divided amongſt the Tribes of Iſrael, nor yet the houſes of ſtrangers dwelling in the land. And whereas, v. 35. it is ſaid, he ſhall come and tell the Prieſt, ſaying, There is as it were a plague in my houſe, they ſay, that he muſt ſpeak thus, and not ſay, There is a plague, becauſe although he be a wiſe man, till the Prieſt hath judged it, neither he nor any man elſe may preſume to call it ſo. And whereas three inſpections of the Prieſt are appointed for an houſe, one 7 dayes after his firſt ſhutting it up, v. 39. another to put new ſtones and morter on, where the old ſtones and plaiſter were taken away, v. 41. and a third to ſee whether the plague did yet break out again after all this, v. 44. Maimony alſo ſaith, that the firſt of theſe times was upon the 7 day; the ſecond upon the 13; and the third upon the 19 day, ſo that there was one time more of viewiug houſes then men, before they were pulled down, but two times of inſpection onely after the ſhutting up can be gathered from the Text. Touching the ſtones, of which it is ſaid, that they ſhould be pulled out, he alſo noteth, that brickes and marble are not meant, becauſe they were not capable of infection. And for the uncleanneſſe of an houſe infected, that it is one of the moſt unclean things, if it be touched being pulled down, it polluteth: if any of it, yea, but ſo much as an olive be brought into any other houſe, it is made unclean hereby. Touching the ſtones carried away from a leprous houſe, and others brought in their ſtead, they muſt be, ſaith he alſo, no more but juſt ſo many. Cazkuni enquiring the reaſon, why houſes were ſmitten with this plague, ſaith, that it was for the idolatry of the Canaanites that had dwelt in them, and committed idolatry there, that they might be known and pulled dovvn. But this is improbable, becauſe for this reaſon all their houſes muſt have been ſmitten, for they dvvelt in houſes which they built not, but the Canaanites. It vvas rather for their ovvn foul idolatries and apoſtaſies from the true religion, and other foul ſinnes, as may be gathered from ſome examples before pointed at, Chap. 13. Maimony. Cazkuni.

Whereas v. 46, and 47. it is ſaid, If any man cometh into this houſe, he ſhall be unclean untill the even, but if he lieth in it, he ſhall waſh his cloaths, and be unclean till the even; the Hebrews note, that he is much more defiled that lieth in a leprous houſe, then he that onely cometh into it. And that by the houſe into vvhich, is meant in the time of the being ſhut up: for then it defileth onely ſuch as enter in, but after the Prieſts pronouncing of it unclean, all that touch it on the outſide alſo. Verſe 46, 47

For the myſtery. By the houſes in the land of their poſſeſſion are to be underſtood Chriſtian families, vvhich are Churches, and ſo the houſes of God: he that dvvelleth in the houſe ſuſpected is the maſter of ſuch an houſe: and the plague of leproſie, corrupt doctrine entertained in that houſe; if therefore he ſuſpecteth any ſuch thing, he muſt make it knovvn to the Prieſt, and he ſhall firſt ſeparate all others, from thence that have formerly uſed to make their Conventicles there, if he ſhall ſee that pride and vain-glory have born ſway ſet forth by the greeniſh and reddiſh colour, and afterwards he ſhall pull out the ſtones and parget, bringing in new inſtead thereof, that is, he ſhall aſſay by excommunication and caſting out of the Church, which is meant The Myſtery. Hoſpinian.

meant by the City to reforme that family, and if ſo he cannot prevail, it ſhall finally at the day of Judgement be deſtroyed, and caſt out from the new Jeruſalem, and if any come into this houſe, that is, be tainted with this corrupt doctrine, he ſhall be unclean; but if he lieth there, that is, be ſetled in it, he ſhall be much more polluted. To this effect Heſychius in many more words, purſuing every circumſtance, but this I think is not done without much wreſting, and therefore I omit it, as not ſo allowable.

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 2. WHen any man hath a running iſſue out of his fleſh, becauſe of his iſſue he is unclean, &c. Here beginneth the law of iſſues, it being determined both, that the man having an iſſue was unclean, and how many wayes other men or things were defiled by him. And this is the fourth ſort of uncleanneſſe, and becauſe it is ſaid, Speak to the children of Iſrael, ſaying; the Rabbins note, that the Iſraelites onely, and not the Heathen were made unclean by iſſues, but onely they and their ſervants, male or female. For, when any man, Hebrew it is, man, man, איש איש, that is, a young man or an old. By the running iſſue here is to be underſtood the flux of ſeed, called γονόῤῥοια, which is, when involuntarily in the night in time of ſleep ſeed cometh forth, as Maimony ſaith, without any deſire or pleaſure through infirmity of the concavities, or ſpermaticall parts; wherein it is gathered, we call it the running of the reins.

Targum Jonathan. Maimony.

Verſe 3. Whether his fleſh run with his iſſue, or be ſtopped from his iſſue, it is his uncleanneſſe. Upon theſe words Solomon Jarchi gathereth two ſorts of uncleanneſſe. 1 When the ſeed runneth thin continually. 2 When becauſe it is thick, it runneth but at certain times, ſtopping and running again. And Maimony for this kinde ſetteth down theſe rules, if it runneth once, he is like him that hath an accident of uncleanneſſe, as Deut. 23. 10, 11. if twice, he muſt count ſeven dayes, and go to the water; if thrice, he hath the iſſue compleat, and muſt bring the offering here preſcribed, verſ. 14. By the words, an iſſue running out of his fleſh, not any but this of the flux of ſeed out of his ſecret parts are meant, becauſe fleſh is ſpoken of in this ſenſe, Gen. 17. Thou ſhalt circumciſe the foreskin of thy fleſh: ſo the Rabbins, and generally all Expoſitours: whereas v. 17. the flux of mans ſeed is expreſly ſpoken of, Brentius ſaith well, that this is one kinde of iſſue, being a diſeaſe, that another upon dreaming, the ſeed being put forth with pleaſure. Touching a man having the γονόῤῥοια, his uncleanneſſe is ſo great, as that he defileth. 1 His bed. 2 His ſeat. 3 The man or woman touching his bed, ſeat, or body. 4 Them that he ſpitteth upon. 5 His ſaddle, and ſuch as touch or bear that. 6 Such as he toucheth, he not having firſt rinſed his hands in water. 7 Veſſels, and if they be earthen, which he toucheth, they muſt be broken, if wooden, or of any other matter, they muſt be rinſed in water. Touching the bed or ſeat, Maimony ſaith, it is to be underſtood, that it is not defiled, but when moſt part of his body hath been upon it, yet if he ſtandeth upon two beds together with one foot upon one, and the other foot upon the other, they are both defiled: but theſe are curioſities, and divers from the text, for here it is, the bed whereupon he lieth, and the ſeat whereupon he ſitteth, ſo that not ſtanding with his foot, but lying or ſitting defileth one or more beds or ſeats together. For thoſe that touch him, or theſe; whereas it is ſaid, they ſhall waſh their cloathes and fleſh, he noteth, that no part of the body muſt be left unwaſhed, no not one finger or lock of hair upon the head. And whereas his ſpittle is ſpoken of, as polluting, he addeth his urine, and the ſnivell coming out of his noſe alſo: and thus Talmud. Babyl. And for any thing, that he ſitteth upon, if it be a piece of timber, or a boat, &c. he that ſitteth upon the ſame with him, they ſay, although their clothes touch not, is polluted, and Solom. Jarchi. Maimony in Mecciſei Capporah c 8. Brentius. Verſe 4,5. Verſe 6,7. Verſe 8,9. Verſe 10. Verſe 11. Verſe 12. Maimony. Talmud Babyl. in Zabim. c 5.

and he that beareth his ſeat, although there be ſomewhat between, is defiled: whereas it is ſaid, not having rinſed his hands, the Rabbins alſo expound this of all the body, as if the part were put for the whole: but if it had been ſo meant, it had been as eaſie to have ſaid, himſelf, or his fleſh, and it was not required, that he who had this diſeaſe, ſhould waſh himſelf all over every day: but civility required, that he ſhould waſh his hands, which was a thing uſuall amongſt all peoples, eſpecially before meat: ſo Athenæus writeth of the Greekes, and Lampridius of the Romans. Again, they adde to the Law of God in making urine, &c. a defiler as well as ſpittle, for ſpitting in ſpeciall is ſpoken of as a defiling and diſgracing, Num. 12. 14. and they ſpat upon Chriſts face, and Dionyſius the Tyrant did ſpit upon Ariſtippus in diſdain. Saint Auguſtine noteth, that ſpitting before others is onely of fools, children, mad men, Epileptickes, Dæmoniacks, or other diſeaſed perſons: wherefore Conſtantine the Emperour is noted never to have been ſeen to ſpit in publick, and Hierom would not have his Schollers to ſpit in the Auditory, and the Perſians held it uncomely to ſpit or purge the noſe before others. But theſe things upon the by, becauſe the pollution by ſpitting is here ſpoken of. To come now to the reaſon of theſe Lawes, they were made for outward purity and cleanneſſe amongſt the people of God, whom he would teach the invvard of the ſoul by the outvvard of the body. And as the uncleanneſſe of the leproſie before ſpoken of came by ſin, ſo did this of an iſſue, as we may gather from 2 Sam. 3. 29. and therefore it alſo aptly figured out ſin, and the uncleanneſſe thereof.

Athen. lib.
Lampid. in Heliogab.

Auguſt. Serm. 1. in Pſal. 11.

Ammon. lib. 21.
Hieron. Epiſt. 22

Heſychius ſaith, As there were divers ſorts of ſins, ſo they were diverſly figured out to the people of Iſrael, who for their rudeneſſe and ignorance were taught all things by figures, wherefore the Lord having done with that of leproſies, cometh now to another of iſſues. Whereas in ſpeaking of the man that hath an iſſue, it is ſaid with a gemination in Hebrew, the man, man, he both underſtandeth this of the great care, which the Lord had, that this Law ſhould be obſerved, and alſo that the Preacher of Gods word, as being a ſingular man amongſt others is ſpecially pointed at, as being the man here figured out, he hath an iſſue, when the ſeed of ſpirituall generation is let flow forth by him againſt the nature thereof, not to beget men unto God, but to corrupt them. As if he be addicted to any ſin of adultery, drunkenneſſe, or ambition, to preach in the favour of theſe ſins, or to let them paſſe unreproved. Here is a double uncleanneſſe, one of the firſt body, from whom this ſeed cometh, and the other of the ſecond corrupted hereby, as he that hath an iſſue, is both determined himſelf to be unclean, and the ſeed coming from him. Touching the things defiled by him, his bed, ſeat, ſaddle, or veſſels, theſe do aptly ſet forth his Auditours, that are ſo taken with his corrupt teaching, as that they make themſelves as a bed, &c. for him to reſt upon by their ready imbracing his Doctrine and him: as the good Preacher Paul ſaith, that his Spirit was refreſhed, when he heard of the Corinthians ready obedience at the coming of Titus amongſt them, ſo that his ſpirit had reſt in them. And the followers of corrupt teachers make themſelves as veſſels to receive the impure liquor of their corrupt teaching, they touch the fleſh of ſuch, who offer themſelves to be their Diſciples, and they are touched, or ſpitted upon, that are drawn in by them. But it is ſaid, verſ. 11. not having rinſed his hands in water, to ſhew, that after repentance he might be heard without danger. The waſhing of the cloathes of theſe, that were by this meanes defiled, ſhewed, how they ſhould repent them of theſe errours throughly, and till ſuch time as they had fully finiſhed their penitency, ſet forth by the evening, till which it is ſaid they ſhould be unclean, they were not fully cleanſed. To this effect Heſychius. Neither do others much differ from him herein, and the doctrine of Idolaters is compared to the iſſue of horſes, and aſſes, Ezech. 23. 20. and Ch. 36. 17. Lament. 1. 7, 19 but pure doctrine is as incorruptible ſeed, 1 Pet. 2. 23, 25. James 1. 18. 1 Cor 4. 15.

The Myſtery.

Heſychius.

2 Cor. 7. 13.

And

And as Christ by spitting opened the eyes of the blinde, and the eares of the deaf, and loosened the tongues of the dumb, Mark 8.23. Ch. 7.33. Joh. 9.6. the power of that which came out of his mouth being set forth hereby, to sanctifie the eyes and eares of the soul, and the tongue to Gods glory, so false and corrupt teachers by corrupt doctrine, as by filthy spittle coming out of their mouthes defile mens souls, that are seduced by them, as is also shewed, 2 Pet. 2. 1,2. &c. 1 Tem 4.1,2. Titus 1.1,9,10,11. Of earthen vessels appointed to be broken, and others to be washed enough hath been said upon Ch. 11.33.

Verse 13,14 Verse 15. For the cleansing of him, that hath been healed of this disease, he must number 7 dayes after his healing, and upon the seventh wash his flesh and cloathes in running water, and upon the eighth bring for an offering two turtles, or two young pigeons, &c.

Maimony in Metamei Mishcab. If after seven dayes and washing, saith Maimony, any issue appeareth again, all his labour is lost, and he must after that begin to number seven clean dayes again. And the water must not be pond-water, but living or spring-water, other things made unclean by him might be washed in pond-water, and a woman having had an issue, but not a man. And till this washing a man was not clean, how long soever he had been free from his disease. Of this kinde of offering it hath been spoken before, Levit. 5. and Chap. 14. But in other cases before put, such offerings were not to be made, but for the poor, here of poor or rich no more was required, as neither for the cleansing of the woman, v. 29. lesse deliverances had lesse offerings, and greater, greater offerings, for the leprosie was a greater evil then an issue, and a womans deliverance from the danger of childe-birth was greater, then from an issue of blood, and therefore more must be brought in way of thankfulnesse to God in one case, and lesse in another. Here is no mention made of putting out of the campe him that had an issue, as him that had a leprosie, but Numb. 5.2. such also, and they that were defiled by the dead, are appointed to be put out.

Note.

The Mystery. For the mystery here; the ceasing of the issue signified the ceasing from the sin, wherein a man had formerly lived, it is not sufficient to refrein from the sin, wherein one hath formerly lived, but he must wash by true repentance and faith in the living water of Christs blood, or else he can never be clean therefrom, and to Christ did his counting seven dayes, and coming to offer upon the eighth point, because he rose the day after the seventh. Again, a lesse offering is appointed to be brought now, and in the case of uncleanesse contracted by touching, &c. no offering at all, but onely washing, to shew, that the greater a mans sins have been, if he be once truly penitent therefore, the greater are his expressions of penitency for them. Hesychius according to his Allegory before begun, restreineth it to Doctors in the Church, if any of them ceaseth from his corrupt teaching, he must have the sevenfold graces of the Spirit, Esa. 11. set forth hy the 7 dayes to be counted, and not onely cease from teaching corruptly, but teach sound doctrine set forth by the living water, in which he must wash, because such doctrine bringeth life to the hearers, and then he must take to him innocency, set forth by a pigeon. Thus therefore in speciall, and, as was said before, in generall also it may be applied, teachers and all people sinning being herein directed, what to do to be delivered.

Hesychius.

Verse 16. If a mans seed of copulation goeth out from him, he shall wash, &c. and every garment and skin whereon it is, &c. This going out of seed is not the issue hitherto spoken of, but upon dreaming in the night at some times, as Deut. 23.10. may be gathered, and such must go out of the campe till the evening: so Brentius and Ainsworth, and in Hebrew it is, שכבת זרע, the lying or the bed of seed, as the words are placed, but it may well be rendered, The seed of the bed. Junius is for the same pollution by seed, spoken of, vers. 18. so likewise Lyranus. Hesychius, for copulation for pleasure, not for procreation of children. Tostatus, for both the flux of seed by copulation, and nocturnall polpollutions alſo. Willet is againſt that of nocturnall pollutions, becauſe Deut. 23.10. for that a man muſt go out of the campe, but for this no ſuch thing is preſcribed. But this is a weak reaſon, ſeeing he that hath the iſſue, is not here appointed to go out, but *Numb.*5.2. and yet no man will ſay but the ſame iſſue is meant in both places. The Lord ſtill left ſomewhat formerly delivered to be afterwards ſupplied, and therefore it is paſſed over in ſilence here that it might be ſet down afterwards. And whoſo ſhall mark well the ſetting down of the Law touching a mans lying with a woman, *v.*18. cannot but acknowledge it to be a diſtinct thing from this. But Cyril Alex. and Procopius are wider here in expounding this of an intermitting iſſue, and the former of a continuall, for both thoſe were plainly ſpoken of, verſ. 2,3. whereas a garment or skin having ſeed upon it is ſaid to be defiled, theſe two onely, ſaith Heſychius, are put for inſtance, it heing meant, that other things alſo were defiled, and accordingly the Rabbins ſay, the ſeed of man is a principall defiling thing, defiling men and veſſels by touching, and earthen veſſels by the air.

Brentius. Ainsworth. Junius. Lyranus. Hesychius. Tostatus.

willet.

Cyril. Alexand. li.15. deador at.

Heſychius. Maimony in Abath Hatumoth.

For the next Law, *verſ.*18. The woman alſo with whom the man ſhall lie with ſeed of copulation, they ſhall both bathe themſelves in water, and be unclean till the even. Some will not have this underſtood of the act between the huſband and the wife, but if a woman did lie in bed with a man that had this nocturnall pollution, ſhe was hereby defiled alſo, thus Brentius, who addeth, that of the ſeed which cometh from man in the night, the Jevvs have ſtrange fabulous things, as that hereof come Devils of the air and nocturnall Spectra, which they call Lilith. Theodoret, Vatablus and ſome others expound it of a woman, with whom one lieth after this nocturnall pollution; but it is certain that there was a legall uncleanneſſe, as Heſychius noteth, in the act of copulation between man and vvife, yet not that there vvas ſin; but hereby a commemoration vvas made of Adams uncleanneſſe coming by ſin, and diffuſing it ſelf over all his poſterity, that vve might ever be humbled for it. For, for this cauſe vvarning vvas given, vvhen the Lord came dovvn upon mount Sinai to give the Lavv, that men ſhould not come at their vvives, and the High Prieſt told David being about to give him and his company of the ſhevv-bread, that if the young men had not come at their vvives, they might eat thereof. And the Hebrevv Canon ſaith, The man and the woman that do the act of generation, are both unclean by the ſentence of the Law, as he, vvhoſe uncleanneſſe is ſpoken of, *Deut.*23.10. And from hence it is likely that the Heathen ſpake ſometimes, as intimating the ſame doctrine to have been received amongſt them, as Heſiod, an act with his dear vvife hath been by him done in bed, let him therefore take heed, that being thus polluted, he ſacrifice not to Veſta. And Tibullus ſaith, Diſcedat ab aris, cui tulit heſternâ gaudia nocte Venus. Lyranus erreth fouly here, ſaying, that there is not onely corporall, but alſo ſpirituall uncleanneſſe in this act, and therefore he is worthily confuted by Hugo and Toſtatus, becauſe there be uncleanneſſes vvithout ſin, for vvhich yet there muſt be vvaſhing, yea in acts of charity, as in burying the dead. And the Jevvs, vvho at this day flee ſuch uncleanneſſes, as have ſin accompanying them, as eating any prohibited meat, yet do not make account of other uncleanneſſes, ſuch as this and the like, becauſe they vvere onely legall uncleanneſſes, debarring from entering into the Sanctuary for the time, vvhileſt they lived in Canaan. For the myſtery, Heſychius referreth this to the teaching of the Ceremoniall Laws under the Goſpel, for this is good ſeed, but coming out in theſe times, miſapplied and polluting. It is better onely in generall to underſtand hereby the uncleanneſſe of us all by generation, through ſin transfuſed to us from Adam, to ſhevv vvhich the mother alſo after bringing forth is unclean many dayes, that we may flee to the laver of regeneration in the bloud of Chriſt.

Verſe 18.

Brentius

Theodoret. Vatablus.

Heſychius. To ſhew what an impure ſeed came from Adam.

Exod.19 15. 1 Sam.21.4. Maimony.

Heſiod. Latin. tranſlat. Res fait in thalamo thara cum conjuge. Vide Tum tibi polluto cave ne peragantur honores. Lyranus.

After the iſſues and uncleanneſſes of men, here follovv the iſſues of vvomen to *verſ.*25. viz. by their monethly flowers, and the like is determi-

Heſychius.

Levit.12.

Verſe 19.
Verſe 20,21
Verſe 22,23

ned touching the uncleanneſſe hereby, that is, touching the uncleanneſſe of a man by his iſſue, all that ſhe lieth upon, ſitteth upon, or toucheth, is unclean, and they that touch theſe, and if any man lieth with her in this time, he ſhall be unclean ſeven dayes, and the bed whereon he lieth ſhall be unclean. The womans iſſue is ſaid to be bloud, not any other thing, and by her fleſh are to be underſtood her ſecret parts, as vvas ſaid before of the mans fleſh. The time of the vvomans ſeparation for this was ſeven dayes, and in all that time ſhe polluted by her ſpittle, and urine alſo, as the man, ſaith Maimony, although this be not particularly expreſſed, and if any bloud came from her after theſe dayes expired, it was an iſſue ſpoken of, *verſ.*25. For a mans lying with a vvoman in the time of her monethly flowers, it is provided, *Levit.*18.19. that her husband ſhould not, and *Levit.*20.18. if he or any man did, both the man and the woman thus offending ſhould be cut off. But becauſe there the opening of her fountain is ſpoken of, which the Rabbins expound of the place out of which a childe hath come, they gather, that this lavv extendeth not to a virgin, ſhe hath no flovvers of ſeparation, nor iſſue, but the bloud which cometh from her is clean; but herein I dare not aſſent unto them, becauſe it is ſpoken indefinitely of any woman. The bloud, of which theſe flowers do conſiſt, is the womans ſeed, and therefore when ſhe beginneth to be apt to conceive ſeed, they begin and come once in a moneth, and if ſhe be with childe, during that time, they ceaſe. For her ſeparation in this time, Joſephus ſaith, that the city was ſhut up againſt lepers, ſuch as had iſſues and menſtruous vvomen, hereby intimating that they were put out; but Toſtatus contrarivviſe ſaith, that they were not ſo put apart, but in ſome part of the tent, or houſe vvhere ſhe dvvelt, becauſe the trouble would otherwiſe have been over-great, and there would have been danger to women, in ſo removing them in the time of their diſeaſe. This ſeparating of women in the time of their flowers was alſo practiſed by ſome Heathens led by the light of nature, as by the Zabians amongſt the Indians, for they cauſed them to dwell apart, and then purged the houſes, vvherein, by fire. And Orpheus gave a charge, that women in that caſe ſhould not come to the ſacred rites of Bacchus. For a mans lying with a woman in this caſe, here it is ſaid, that he ſhall be unclean ſeven dayes, but *Lev.*20.18. they ſhal both be cut off. This, according to Junius and others, is to be underſtood, if he did it ignorantly, it being not known in the time of their coming together, but then flowers happening to break out: for if he knew it, and lay with her, this was preſumptuous, and they muſt both die for it. For that expoſition of Cajetan, that here is meant onely lying by her in the bed, there with her, it falleth becauſe the ſame words are uſed in both places. Lying with a menſtruous woman is ſo foul and abominable a thing, as not onely the Moſaicall Law, but the Law of Nature forbiddeth it, and it is now a great ſin in whomſoever, as is intimated, Ezech 18.6. where it is reckoned up amongſt groſſe ſins againſt the Morall Law. And Ariſtotle noteth, that when a woman hath her flowers, ſhe is unapt to conceive ſeed, and therefore the coming together of man and woman being for procreation, it is againſt nature at that time. And Jerom noteth, that children thus begotten prove lepers, or otherwiſe diſeaſed, having ſmall withered, or enormous members. And according to this the Hebrews, ſaith Comeſtor, have noted that if a childe be begotten at this time, if in the firſt day of the womans ſeparation, it will be a leper within ten yeers, if in the ſecond day, within twenty yeers, &c. Wherefore decrees have been made by Chriſtians againſt this enormity; Clemens citeth a conſtitution of the Apoſtles againſt it; and Burchardus citeth a decree of penance enjoyned in this caſe, of faſting with bread and water ten dayes. And in the Alchoran of the Turks it is cenſured. Auguſtine grounding upon *Ezech.*18.6. ſaith alſo, that it is not onely a figuring, but a morall precept. And as the fitteſt time is choſen to commit ſeed to the ground, and unſeaſonable times avoided by the husbandman, that he may have a good crop of corn; ſo and much more for

Verſe 24.

Maimony.

Maimony in Iſſurei Biah.

Joſeph. lib. 2 de belli Jud. c. 6.

Toſtatus.

Lorinus in Levit.

Junius.

Cajetan.

Ariſtot. lib. 1. de gen. anim. c. 12. Hieron. in Ezech. 18.

Scholaſt. hiſtor.

Clem. 6. Conſtit. c. 28.

Auguſt.

for ſowing the ſeed of generation of man the apteſt times ſhould be taken, and ſowing at ſuch times as will endanger the off-ſpring, are by all means to be avoided.

For the myſtery; idolatry is compared to the pollution of a woman in the time of her ſeparation, *Ezek.*36.17,18. To have communion with Idolaters any way then, is to touch a woman thus polluted; to aſſent to their teaching, is to ſit in her ſeat, or upon her bed, and actually to offer to Idols to lie with her, which polluteth much more. Her pollution ſaid to be ſeven dayes, ſetteth forth the prevailing of idolatry all the time of the law, when the Sabbath of the ſeventh day from the Creation was obſerved. To this effect almoſt Heſychius. The Myſtery. Heſychius.

If a woman hath an iſſue many dayes out of the time of her ſeparation, ſhe ſhall be all theſe dayes, as in the dayes of her ſeparation, unclean. By this iſſue of blood a diſeaſe extraordinary to the weakening of the body is to be underſtood; by the many dayes here ſpoken of, Maimony underſtandeth three dayes: for if when the ſeven dayes of her flowers be expired, ſhe ſeeth blood ſtill one day or two dayes, this is a leſſer uncleanneſſe, neither ſhall ſhe be bound therefore to number 7. dayes, but one onely, nor to bring a ſacrifice, becauſe it is ſaid, If ſhe hath an iſſue many dayes, which muſt be underſtood of three at the leaſt. In all other things the uncleanneſſe of ſuch is ſaid to be, as that of the menſtruous woman, and her cleanſing, when ſhe was healed, muſt be as that of a man that had an iſſue, ſhe muſt waſh and bring the like offering, and to theſe waſhings upon all uncleanneſſes it is alluded, *Zach.*13.1. A woman in this caſe came and touched the hem of Chriſts garment, but yet he was not polluted hereby, but made her whole and clean, when ſhe had before laboured of this diſeaſe 12 years, whereby was ſhewed, that by theſe impurities ſinnes were ſet forth, for the cure and cleanſing of which we ſhould flee to Chriſt, and by faith touch him, or at leaſt the hem of his garment. Verſe 25. Maimony in Hiſurei Biah. c.16. Verſe 26,27 Verſe 28,29 Verſe 30. Mark 5.26.

Here is the concluſion of theſe lawes about iſſues, they that had them muſt be ſeparated during the time, and afterwards come forth in this order, and not otherwiſe, eſpecially for the tabernacles ſake, unto which if any man came in his uncleanneſſe, or woman, they defiled it, and ſhould be in danger of being ſmitten with death therefore. So that theſe ſeparations were appointed eſpecially with reſpect to the tabernacle, where God dwelt, that none preſume to come before God in any part of his worſhip in their ſins, and not having truly repented thereof. Verſe 31.

CHAP. XVI.

HEre Aaron is warned not to come at all times within the vail into the moſt holy place, but onely once in a year, having firſt waſhed himſelf, and put on his prieſtly garments, and then he muſt bring in incenſe to burn there, and blood to ſprinkle before the mercy-ſeat, and this muſt be upon the tenth day of the ſeventh moneth, a day of atonement appointed to be ſolemnly kept with humiliation by all the people. After ſacrifices appointed for the cleanſing of particular uncleanneſſes of particular perſons, ſaith Brentius, in the Chapters before-going, here ſacrifices and rites are appointed for the expiation of all other ſinnes any way eſcaping the High Prieſt, and his Tribe, or the whole Congregation, whereof ſuch particular notice could not be taken by them, and to expiate the uncleanneſſe contracted from the ſins of the Prieſts and people by the Sanctuary, Tabernacle, or Altar, as is expreſſed, *v.*33. Brentius.

And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes after the death of the two ſonnes of Aaron, &c. Of their death for offering with ſtrange fire, ſee before, *Chap.*10. Whereas ſome think, becauſe of this clauſe, that theſe things are put in here out of Verſe 2.

order, and ſhould have come next after that tenth Chapter. I cannot ſee any ſuch force for it in the reaſon that may be drawn herefrom. For it is not ſaid, that God ſpake thus at that time, but after their death, not naming how long after, ſo that the lawes placed before touching uncleanneſſes of divers ſorts might well be delivered before this; and ſo moſt aptly from leſſer uncleanneſſes legall of particular perſons, it might be proceeded to greater of all manner of ſins, and generall of the whole Congregation. Moſes is here ſpoken to, to direct Aaron; and from this, ſaith Maimony, the order hath been for the Elders of the Synedrion to read before the High Prieſt, and to teach him the ſervice of this day, that he come not at all times into the holy place, &c. The holy place here named is ſo deſcribed, as that it muſt needs be underſtood to be the moſt holy, or Holy of Holies, and thus it is ſet forth, Heb. 9. 6, 7, &c. being there called the ſecond tabernacle and holies: for it was that place where the mercy ſeat ſtood, of which ſee, Exod 25 For I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-ſeat, that is, ſaith Rab. Menahem, in a cloud of glory, Exod 25. 22. Between the Cherubims upon the mercy-ſeat, ſaith the Lord to Moſes, I will appear and commune with thee. To ſuch an appearing hath this reference here, for God uſed to appear by a Cloud, as when the Tabernacle was firſt ſet up, Exod. 40. 34. but onely it is not likely that the cloud now filled the moſt holy place, for then Aaron could not have entered, but onely it appeared above the mercy-ſeat, to ſhew, that God was preſent, that Aaron might be moved with the more reverence. In limiting Aaron, Moſes was not likewiſe limited, for he might come thither at all times to commune with the Lord there, Exod 25. 22.

Maimony in Jom hakippurim.

Rab. Menahem.

Tuſtaph.

Verſe 3.

Thus ſhall Aaron come into the holy place with a young bullock for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering. Verſe 4. And he ſhall put on the holy linnen coat, and ſhall have the linnen breeches upon his fleſh, &c. Although Aaron came thus attired, yet he might not enter into the moſt holy place, but once in the year onely, as is expreſſed, v 34. Whereas he is appointed here to take a bullock and a ram for himſelf and his houſe, and two goats, and a ram for the Congregation, Numb. 29. 7, 8, 9, &c. there are moreover appointed to be offered upon this day one bullock, one ram, and ſeven lambes, and a kid of the goats, beſides the continuall burnt-offering of two lambes, one in the morning, and another in the evening, with the meat-offering belonging to it, and the meat-offerings belonging to all the reſt, ſo that the beaſts offered now were 16, but Maimony ſummeth them up 15, ſaying, One of the goats was done without, and eaten at even, and he obſerveth further, that the High Prieſt alone offered all theſe, and burnt the daily incenſe, and trimmed the lamps upon this day. Touching a bullock and ram brought for the Prieſts, the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, ſee before, Chap. 8. For the linnen garments now to be worne by him, the coat, the girdle, breeches, and linnen miter, ſomething hath been ſpoken of them before upon Exod 28. where we read of divers other more glorious garments alſo made for the High Prieſt, but when he entered into the moſt holy place, he had none of them upon him, but theſe linnen garments onely. The other garments were by the Hebrews called golden, theſe the High Prieſts white garments, and they were made of ſix double twiſted threed of flax onely. So that they were diſtinct garments from all before deſcribed, Exod. 28. being made purpoſely for this time. Wherefore there were eight uſed by him ordinarily, and four upon this atonement-day eſpecially. Now the order of putting them on and doing the Sacrifices and ſervice of this day was thus: When the evening of this day was come, the High Prieſt went not to bed that night, but watched, leſt any pollution ſpoken of, Deut. 23. 10. ſhould happen unto him, and at midnight they went about the taking away of the aſhes from the altar, and ordered the wood till about break of day, and then they began to kill the daily ſacrifice, then they hanged a fine linnen cloth between the Prieſt and the people, which done, he put off his common cloaths, and having Maimony of the five implements of the Sanctuary, ving waſhed himſelf, put on the holy garments deſcribed, Exod. 28. being eight in number, and killed the daily ſacrifice, and ſprinkled the blood on the altar, then he went into the holy place, and trimmed the lamps, and offered incenſe, and returning, burnt the daily ſacrifice, with the meat-offering and drink-offering thereof: this done, he offered the bullock and the 7 lambs for that day, and this being done, he put off his golden garments, and put on theſe linnen, having firſt waſhed his hands and his feet, after which he proceeded in them to offer firſt his own bullock, &c. as *v.*6,7,8, &c ſo Maimony, and Talmud Babyl. ſo that every time that he changed his garments he waſhed, which Solomon Jarchi noteth to have been done five times.

Maimony in Jom-hakippurim, Chap. 1. Talmud Babyl. in Joma.

And Aaron ſhall offer his bullock for a ſin-offering, &c. Although the laying on of his hands upon the head of the bullock is not here ſpoken of, yet Levit. 4. the ſin-offering of the prieſt is appointed to be made with this Ceremony, and likewiſe the ſin-offerings of others, and therefore the Rabbins note, that it is here to be underſtood, and that he did not now onely lay on his hands, but alſo confeſſe and pray, O God! I have ſinned, done iniquity, and treſpaſſed before thee, I and my houſe, I beſeech thee (O Lord) make atonement now for my ſins, iniquities and treſpaſſes, which I have committed before thee, I and my houſe, as it is written in the law of Moſes thy ſervant, Levit. 16.30, &c. ſo Maimony, and the Talmud.

Verſe 6.

Maimony in Jom-hakippu. Talmud. Joma.

And he ſhall take the two goats, and preſent them before the Lord at the door of the tabernacle. When he had preſented his own ſin-offering, the bullock; he went to the North-ſide of the altar, having another prieſt called Sagan on his right hand; this was the ſecond to the High Prieſt, and on his left hand one called, Roſh Beth Ab, the chief of the houſe of the father, and there the goats were preſented, their faces being ſet to the Weſt, and their back-parts to the Eaſt. And theſe two goats were alike to ſee to, and of equall price, and both taken at one time.

Verſe 7.

And Aaron ſhall caſt lots upon the goats, one for the Lord, and another for the ſcape-goat. Theſe lots, ſaith Maimony, were made of wood both alike, and in the ſecond Temple, of gold, and the goats being placed one on the left hand, and the other on the right of the High Prieſt, they having written upon the one of them, for יהוה, and upon the other, for the ſcape-goat, were put into an wooden veſſel, called Kalphi, and the High Prieſt having ſhaken them to and fro put in both his hands into the Kalphi, and took out one with one hand, and the other with the other hand, then the Sagan at his right hand bade him lift up his hand, which he did, and laid the lot in that hand upon the goats head on his right hand, and the Roſh Beth Ab at his left hand bade him lift up that hand which he did, and laid the lot therein upon the goat on his left hand. And to this it is alluded, *v.*9.

Verſe 8.

Maimony in Jom-hakippur.

And Aaron ſhall bring the goat upon which the Lords lot fall, Hebrew. aſcended, & offer him for a ſin offering. The lot is ſaid to have aſcended in reference to the veſſell, out of which it was taken up. Then the High Prieſt bound a long piece of Scarlet, called a tongue upon the head of the ſcape-goat, and ſet him in his place to be ſent away, and the goat for the Lord, where he ſhould be killed for a ſacrifice. This being done, he returned to his own Bullock again, and killed him, & then as Maimony hath it, made a ſecond confeſſion & prayer, as before.

Verſe 9.

The Bullock being killed, before any other ſervice done, he took a cenſer of burning coals from the altar with ſweet incenſe his hands full, beaten ſmall, and went within the vail into the moſt holy place, there cauſing a cloud of ſmoak to aſcend above the Mercy-ſeat The Cenſer, ſaith Maimony, now uſed, was of gold; the Cenſers uſed at other times, of ſilver; and becauſe the coals taken from the Altar, are ſaid to have been before the Lord, Solomon Jarchi noteth, that they were taken from the ſide of the Altar Weſtward, which was next to the Sanctuary. The beating of this incenſe was done the evening before this day; it ſeemeth, Exod. 30.36. that it was a ſingular ſweet perfume prepared and kept for this purpoſe, from time to time; the veil, within which

Verſe 11.

Verſe 12.

Solom. Jarchi.

it it was brought, was the ſecoud veil before the moſt holy place, as Heb. 9. And herein they were ſo careful, that when the Sadduces ſtood for the burning of this incenſe without the veil in the Temple, that the fume might paſſe from thence to the moſt holy place; the Synedrion to prevent this innovation, ſent meſſengers to ſwear the High Prieſt in the evening of the atonement-day, ſaying, We adjure thee by him, that hath cauſed his name to dwell in this houſe, that thou change not any thing of all that we ſay unto thee. For the cloud of the incenſe, the Saduces alſo taught, that this was the cloud, wherein God promiſed to appear, v. 2. but the contrary hath been already taught. For the manner of doing this ſervice, Maimony alſo ſaith, the high Prieſt carried the Cenſer with fire in his right hand, and the incenſe in a cup in his left hand, and went within the veil, till he came to the ark, and there he ſet the Cenſer between the two bars: but in the ſecond Temple, in which the Ark was wanting, he ſet it upon a ſtone placed there, and put an handful of incenſe into it, ſtaying after this, till the houſe was full of the fume, and then he went out by little and little backward, till he came without the vail, and there having made a ſhort prayer, he returned, that the people might not for his long ſtay think him to be dead, and be ſtricken with fear. This darkening of the room with the fume of the incenſe, was, as Cazkuni hath it, that he might not behold the majeſty of God, becauſe no man can ſee God and live.

Maymony in Jom hakippurim.

Cazkuni.

Exod, 33.20.

Verſe 14. After this he took of the blood of the bullock, which had been hitherto left with one to ſtir it, and bringing it within the vail he ſprinkled it with his finger once upon the mercy-ſeat Eaſtward, and then ſeven times more towards it beneath. For thus Maimony ſaith, that their wiſe men taught them to underſtand theſe words, ſo that it was ſprinkled eight times in all in the holy place, and the blood of the goat likewiſe eight times, v. 15. then in the tabernacle he ſprinkled towards the vail of either of theſe bloods eight times, for it is ſaid, He ſhould do ſo to the tabernacle, v. 16. and then he mixed both the bloods together, and ſprinkled four times upon the four hornes of the altar, v. 18. and laſtly, ſeven times upon the altar, v. 19. ſo that all the times of ſprinkling with both theſe bloods were 43, after all which he poured the blood remaining at the Weſtern bottome of the brazen altar without.

Maimony in Jombakippurim, Ch. 3.

Verſe 15. Here is ſet down in what order the goat was killed, and his blood taken, viz. after the ſprinkling of the bullocks blood in the moſt holy place, and before any other ſprinklings thereof, ſo that this blood muſt now reſt a time in ſome place, whileſt the goat was killed, and his blood was brought within the vail, and this Maimony ſaith was a baſe of gold in the Temple, upon which the High Prieſt having ſet it down, went out of the Temple, and killed the goat, and then brought in his blood and ſprinkled it.

Verſe 16. And ſo he ſhall make an atonement for the holy place, becauſe of the uncleanneſſe of the children of Iſrael in all their tranſgreſſions, and ſo ſhall he do for the Tabernacle, &c. Here is the reaſon of all theſe ſprinklings with blood ſet down; ſo that ſin in the defilement thereof extendeth to the worſhip and ſervice of God, making it unclean, and to Heaven it ſelf ſet forth by the moſt holy place, this is made unacceſſible to us all both Prieſts and people by our ſins and imperfections, which accompany us in our devotions, and even theſe ſhall hinder us from coming thither, unleſſe God, who dwelleth there, be pacified towards us by the blood of Chriſt, and for all our ſervice, it is unclean, and onely thus purged.

Note.

Verſe 17. Here it is provided, that no man either of the people or Prieſts be with the High Prieſt, when he made this atonement, becauſe we have no Mediatour to make an atonement for our ſins, but Chriſt alone, figured out by the High Prieſt, 1 Pet. 2.24. Heb. 1.3.

Verſe 18. And he ſhall go out to the Altar, that is before the Lord, &c. This Altar was the Altar of incenſe in that part next unto the moſt holy place, for upon the horns of it the blood of the bullock and goat muſt be put, and after putting on by ſtriking with the finger upon each horn, it was ſprinkled upon this Altar ſeven times, to make an atonement for it, and thus at the firſt making hereof it was ſaid it ſhould be done, Exod. 30. 10. ſo that by the prieſts coming out we are to underſtand his coming out of the moſt holy place into that, where this Altar ſtood. This Altar of incenſe was of gold, and the prieſt, ſaith Maimony, coming to ſprinkle it removed the aſhes firſt, and then ſprinkled it upon the gold appearing. And this is ſaid alſo to have bin done to hallow it from the uncleannes of the children of Iſrael, which muſt be underſtood of uncleanneſs in their prayers ſet forth by incenſe, that uſed to be offered upon this Altar. Verſe 19.

Altar

After all this the High Prieſt muſt bring the live goat, & put his hands upon his head, & confeſs over him the ſins of the people, and ſo put them upon the goat, and after this deliver him to a fit man to carry him into the wilderneſs, that ſo he might carry away all their ſins to a place not inhabited. This ſcape or live goat as was ſaid upon verſ. 9. was ſet in a place to be ſent away when the Lords goat was brought to the Altar and killed. Now he goeth to this goat again, and bringeth him, and laying his hands upon his head confeſſeth over him the ſins of the people, ſaying, O Lord, thy people, the houſe of Iſrael have ſinned, done iniquity, and treſpaſſed before thee. O Lord, make atonement now for the ſins, iniquities, and treſpaſſes, which thy people, the houſe of Iſrael have ſinned, unrighteouſly done, and treſpaſſed before thee, as it is written in the Law of Moſes thy ſervant, that in this day he ſhall make atonement for you: ſo Maimony, and in this prayer ſins, iniquities, and treſpaſſes are named, according to the words here uſed, ſins of all ſorts being ſet forth hereby, in Greek they are rendered ἀνομίας, ἀδικίας, ἁμαρτίας, ſins committed, ſaith Toſtatus, either by malice, ignorance, or paſſion, but they are ſet forth all by one generall word by the Apoſtle, ignorances, Heb. 9. 7. Verſe 20. Verſe 21. Verſe 22. Maimony. Toſtatus.

The ſcape-goat is called עזאזל, from עז a goat, and אזל gone away; by the Septuagint ἀποπομπαῖον, ſent away. The Chaldee and Junius keep the Hebrew name untranſlated Gnazazeel, holding it to be ſo named from the place, to which it ſhould be ſent in the wilderneſſe, becauſe it is ſaid v. 10. לעזאזל to Gnazazel: ſo Rab. Solomon Jarchi, ſaying, that this was a ſtrong mountain and hard: and 1 Sam. 20. 19. we do read of the ſtone Azel. But in our tranſlation it is, he ſhall be ſent for a ſcape-gate. I am not of their minde who think, that ſome proper place by this name is here meant, becauſe when afterwards they were in the land of Canaan far from hence, it would have been an over hard task to ſend a goat every year ſo far off, and thus Calvin reaſoneth here againſt. And yet by the laſt לעזאזל I rather think a ſtony hill in the wilderneſſe in general is rather meant, then for a ſcape-goat, as it is tranſlated, and ſo it may be rendered, into an hard ſtony deſert, unfit for the habitation of men, as is here further deſcribed, but fit for goats, who feed upon moſt ſteep and hard mountains. For the hands laying on upon the head of this goat, it was neither for benediction, as Heſychius would have it, nor for imprecation, as Richelius, but onely, as is here ſaid, to put the ſins of the people upon the goat to be carried away into the wilderneſſe, in a figure of removing our ſins far away from us by Chriſt. Th. Aquinas and ſome others think, that their ſins were written in certain ſchedules of paper, and ſo put upon the goats horns and carried away. But this is a meere imagination, and it was a generall confeſſing of them onely, whereby they were as it were put upon the goats head, and not by any particular enumeration of them in writing, becauſe there were many ſins unknown, which were thus expiated according to that canon of the Hebrewes: The ſcape-goat made atonement for all tranſgreſſions of the Law both lighter and heavier, done preſumptuouſly or ignorantly, known or unknown. Tarius. Calvin. Heſychius. Richelius. Tho. Aquinas. Maimony Treatiſe of Repentance, Chap. 1.

And he ſhall ſend him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderneſſe. A fit man, ſaith Solomon Jarchi, was one prepared the day before, in after-ages one of the Prieſts was appointed for this, and the place, to which the goat was led by him, was twelve miles from Jeruſalem, and in the way ten boothes were ſet up, one a mile, that is, ſeven furlongs and an half, as they counted a Sabbath-a Sabbath-dayes journey from another, and in each booth there was a man or two prepared, that ſome might alwayes accompany him from one booth to another, and give him ſome food, if he were ready to faint for want; for otherwiſe, it being a moſt ſolemn faſt-day, he might not eat any thing, and they ſay, that never any needed, or would accept of any. And he that accompanied him, muſt go but to the next booth, becauſe it was a Sabbath, and when he that carried the goat came at the tenth booth, which vvas the laſt, one accompanied him thence a mile onely, and ſtood there looking after him, vvho vvas yet to go a mile further to a rock, there to let the goat go, and ſo ſoon as he perceived it, he vvaved with a white cloth to the next, and he to the third, &c. and ſo it was immediately known in the City, that the goat was diſmiſſed there. So the Talmud and Maimony.

Talmud. in Ioma. Maimony upon it. Oleaſter. Pagninus. Hugo. Scholaſt. hiſtor.

By a fit man here Oleaſter underſtandeth a man in yeers; Pagninus, one uſed to go that way; Hugo, one brought up purpoſely from his childe-hood for this ſervice; and ſome Hebrews, ſaith Comeſtor, that children were taken out of the Tribe for the time deputed, their ſpleen being firſt medicinally taken from them, with whom when the High Prieſt had gone without the camp, he returned. But I reſt in the firſt, but whereas the Jews Talmud ſaith, that the goat being brought to the rock, was there thrown down and died; either it was not ſo uſed, or elſe the man carrying it went beyond his commiſſion, which was only to carry it to a rockie place in the wildernes to run at liberty, as one of the birds before ſpoken of in the caſe of the leper was let flie, Ch. 14. and the very words, verſ. 22. are, he ſhall let go the goat in the wilderneſſe. Whereas the place of diſmiſſing it is further deſcribed to be a land not inhabited, Hebr. it is a land גזרה, of ſeparation or cutting off, the Septuagint render it inacceſſible, and it is noted, that this word is not elſewhere uſed in this ſenſe, but Eſa. 53.8. where it is ſaid of Chriſt, he was cut out of the land of the living. Job 22.28. and Dan. 4.17. it is uſed for a decree, which may alſo intimate ſome place determined, to which this goat ſhould be ſent. Verſ. 23. Then Aaron ſhall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and put off his linen garments, and leave them there, and waſh, &c. This putting off of the linen garments, ſaith Maimony, was done in this order. So ſoon as the High Prieſt had returned from ſending the ſcape-goat away, he came again to the bullock and goat before killed, and took out their fat, that it might be burnt upon the Altar, putting it in a veſſell, then he cut the fleſh in great pieces, which yet were left cleaving together, and ſo delivereth them to others to be carried forth to be burned, and whileſt they were burning, he came into the womens court to read the Law, then the Miniſter gave the book to the chief man of the congregation, he to the Sagan or ſecond, and the Sagan to the High Prieſt, and he received it ſtanding, and read ſtanding. Levit. 16. 23,27. and all the people ſtood before him, and before and after his reading he bleſſed God. After this he put off his white garments, waſhed himſelf, and put on the golden garments, and offered his ovvn and the peoples burnt-offering, and the fat of the ſin-offering. And here are all the waſhings and changings of garments ſpoken of in the Text: but Maimony ſaith, again after this he put off the golden garments, and waſhed and put on the linen, and went again into the moſt holy place to fetch from thence the cenſer and the cup, wherein the incenſe was carried, and then putting them off, he waſhed and put on the golden garments, and offered the continuall evening Sacrifice, and incenſe, and trimmed the lamps, then putting them off again he waſhed, and put on his common garments and went home, all the people accompanying him, and then he made them a feaſt for joy, that he was come ſafely out of the Sanctuary. And all theſe waſhings were, ſaith he, in a veſſell of gold, and in the Sanctuary, except the firſt which was without, but at other times he waſhed, as the other Prieſts, at a laver of braſſe. Laſtly, the linen garments left in the Sanctuary were never ſerved in any more, nor put to any uſe, as was before touched upon Exod. 28. The conceit of Gregory here,

Verſe 22.

Ainſworth.

Verſe 23,24

Maimony in Iom hakippurim. Chap. 3.

Verſe 25.

here, that the High Priſt had on the breſt-plate, vvhen he vvent into the moſt holy place, and never but then, and of Toſtatus, that he put the vvhite garments upon his common garments, vvhen he changed him, and the golden garments upon them all, is not vvorth the naming, becauſe it is plain, that vvhen he put on the one, he firſt put off the other, and into the moſt holy place he came onely vvith plain linnen garments, ſetting forth humiliation, vvith vvhich vve muſt come before God, vvhen vve come to have our ſins expiated, as vvas the end of this dayes ſervice. And he vvaſhed himſelfe, ſaith Maimony, this day five times, and his hands and feet ten times, certainly he did it very often, and why ſo? but to ſhevv, vvhat a deal of vvaſhing there muſt be by the tears of repentance in him, that v vould be throughly cleanſed from all his ſins.

Gregor. hom 17 in Matth. Toſtatus.

Note.

Note.

And he that let go the ſcape-goat ſhall waſh his cloaths, and bathe his fleſh in water, &c. The like thing is enioyned him that burnt the ſin-offering without the campe, *v.*28. This waſhing was for the uncleanneſſe of ſin put upon the ſcape-goat, and upon the ſin-offering, that all ſin might be the more abhorred, becauſe he that had to do with the goat, which was a clean beaſt, yet by reaſon of the ſins put upon it was made unclean.

Verſe 26.

The ſending away of the bullock and goat for the ſin-offering without the campe to be burnt is appointed here, but of this ſee enough before, *Chap.*4.11,12. and of the mans waſhing his fleſh and cloaths, that burned it there.

Verſe 27.

And this ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto you, that in the ſeventh moneth, the tenth day ye afflict your ſouls, and do no work, whether it be one of your own Countrey or a ſtranger, &c. Hitherto hath been ſhewed by what ſacrifices and rites the High Prieſt ſhould cleanſe them from all their ſins, but the time of the year hath not been yet particularly ſet down, wherefore the tenth day of the ſeventh moneth is here appointed for this ſervice, which was one day only every year, and this is further called, a Sabbath of reſt, *v.*31. wherein they muſt afflict their ſouls. Of this day it is ſpoken again, *Levit.*23.27. and *Numb.*29.7,11. and upon this day the Jubile was proclaimed, *Levit.*25.8. But why was this day ſpecially appointed? Some Hebrews ſay, that Moſes came down from mount Sinai upon this very day, after that he had been there with the Lord the ſecond time 40 dayes and 40 nights, entreating that their ſin about the golden calves might be pardoned. Toſtatus miſliketh this, but whoſo ſhall compute the times, ſhall finde, that Moſes his coming down was about the 10 day of the ſeventh moneth. For the third moneth the people are ſaid to have come to the wilderneſſe of Sinai, where ſome time was ſpent in preparing to receive the law. After the law of the ten Commandments given by a lively voice, many lawes more were given to Moſes for the people, *Exod.*20.24, 25, &c. and *Chap.*21. and *Chap.*22. and *Chap.*23. in giving which, if a proportion were held in time with the lawes given after, *Chap.*25,26,27,28,29, 30,31. we may well account neer 20 dayes, then adde 40, *Exod.*24.18. of his firſt being in the mount, and 30 haply which he ſtayed to chaſtiſe and to bring the people to repentance before his going up again, *Chap.*34. and laſtly, the 40 dayes of his ſecond being there, and we ſhall thus come juſt upon this time. And there was great reaſon, ſo heinous a ſin being committed by all ſorts both Prieſts and people, that this time ſhould perpetually be ſet apart to bewail both it and all other their ſins yearly, that they might not be utterly deſtroyed for them, as they were in danger to have been, if Moſes had not ſtood in the gap and turned away the Lords wrath from them. There is another conceit of the Jews touching this day, mentioned by Toſtatus, not worth the naming, viz. that God ſate upon this day to forgive mens ſins, and to ſhew the Fatalia of every one that year. And another of Comeſtor, that they offered for the dead upon this day, which Lorinus amplifieth, ſaying, that it was for the dead, who had been ſlain for their idolatry about the golden calfe. But it is as eaſie for us to contemn ſuch groundleſſe inventions, as for them

Verſe 29.

Queſt.

*Exod.*34.28.

*Exod.*19.

Toſtatus.

Comeſtor in Hiſtor.

them to devise them. This ordinance then was for the expiation of all their sins who did now afflict their soules, and of that most notorious sin about the golden calf in speciall, as is most probable, this time being singularly chosen for this purpose. And it seemeth to me that the seventh moneth was chosen, because of the Sabbath upon the seventh day from the Creation, whereby the number of seven seemeth to have been specially sanctified, and the tenth day, in allusion to the ten Commandments, the sins against all which were now expiated. And this, as Tostatus well noteth, was a fit time for the ease of the people, both because the fruits of the earth were now gathered in, and about this time they were to be at Jerusalem upon occasion of two solemnities more, the feast of blowing trumpets the first day of this moneth, and the feast of tabernacles the 15 day thereof.

Levit. 23. 24, 33

Whereas it is said to be a statute for ever, this is to be understood, as that of circumcision, Gen. 17. and of the passeover, Exod. 12. viz. all the time that this Ceremoniall law should stand, so that it is a reviving of a Ceremony long ago abolished to keep one day in the year, as the Papists do, by many superstitious rites to seek to expiate their sinnes of all the year, and therefore it is noted, that in Italy this is turned into an occasion of all licentiousnesse to commit any manner of sensuall wickednesse, when this time approacheth, because the day is at hand when all their sinnes shall be done away againe by fasting, strewing ashes upon them, and wearing hair-cloath, &c.

Maimony of the rest of the ten h day. Scholast. histor.

Touching their afflicting of their souls commanded upon this day, this, saith Maimony, stood in five things; in abstinence 1 From meat. 2 From drink. 3 From washing. 4 From putting on their shoes. 5 From their wives. For they all fasted 24 houres, except children under nine years of age, and the sick, yet Comestor saith, that children of seven years old fasted. And in fasting and sorrowing chiefly stood their afflicting of themselves, and putting on sackcloath and ashes instead of better apparell, as we may gather from Esa. 58. and David when he mourned went bare-footed, 2 Sam. 15. 30. and when the Lord appeared, and the people were to come about him, Exod. 19. they must not come at their wives; and David, when he mourned for his childe being sick, did neither wash nor anoint himself. But under these outward afflictings of the body were set forth the true repentance that was required to be accepted before the Lord, Esa. 58. 5, 6. Lastly, for the stranger, who is as well to keep this time, as the Jews, he was one dwelling amongst them that imbraced the same Religion; by the Septuagint therefore called a Proselyte, Levit. 23, 29. Whoso did not afflict his soul upon this day, must be cut off.

2 Sam. 12.

Verse 31.

This day is called a Sabbath of rest, for the most strict rest required upon it, and because of their fasting upon this Sabbath, Augustus mistaking it, commanded in imitation of Moses, a fast to be kept upon every Sabbath day; and Justin saith, that Moses wearied the people with the fasts of the Sabbaths: but fasts were not kept upon other Sabbath-dayes, but upon this onely.

Justin. lib. 36.

Verse 32, 33

Here it is ordained for time to come, when Aaron should be dead, that his sonne should likewise being the anointed High Priest, put on the linnen garments, &c. The care of the Jews of old was wonderfull, as Maimony setteth it forth, that all things might be rightly done now, and so an atonement made, being afraid, if any errour were committed, lest the High Priest should be striken with death to the damage of them all, as the two sonnes of Aaron had been, Levit. 10. wherefore the Synedrion seven dayes before this day would not suffer him to come at his wife for fear of being defiled by her disease, and in all this time he was inured to the killing of sacrifices, and burning of incense, and had read unto him often the duty of this day, and was caused to read it himselfe, lest he should forget it, and the evening before he fasted and watched, as was before said, and a second also was appointed, if

Maimony.

by by any accident he ſhould be polluted in the ſervice doing, to go on in his ſtead where he left.

And this ſhall be an everlaſting ſtatute amongſt the children of Iſrael, to make atonement for all their ſins once a year. Hence it is plain, that the High Prieſt went into the moſt holy place but once in a year, which was upon this expiation-day, and this is further confirmed by the Apoſtle, *Heb.*9 7. wherefore that of Origen Hom. 9. and of Auguſtine Quaſt. 133. that the High Prieſt went daily into the moſt holy place to burn incenſe, is a manifeſt errour, and it is to be underſtood, that the Altar of incenſe was not in the moſt holy place, but without the vail of it in another part into which the prieſt came daily; But into the moſt holy it was not lawfull for any to come to do any ſervice therein at any time, except it were about the taking of it down, or ſetting it up, but for the High Prieſt onely; wherefore it is to be rejected, as a palpable one, that the Virgin Mary dwelt in the moſt holy place, as Nicephorus reporteth, and that James the leſſer, the Biſhop of Jeruſalem was ſuffered to come in thither when he would, for his great holineſſe, as Hegeſippus hath it. Touching the ſins here ſaid to be thus expiated, Oleaſter mentioneth, and rejecteth a tenet of the Hebrews, that ſins againſt an affirmative precept were done away at any time by repentance, ſins againſt a negative not till this day, and ſins deſerving cutting off not at all, but there muſt ſtill be an expectation of vengeance from the hand of God therefore. Now for the laſt of theſe, it is true indeed, that there was no ſacrifice to cleanſe from preſumptuous ſinning under the Law, for which cutting off was threatened, yet this was not to ſhew them to be unpardonable, for all ſins ſhall be forgiven to the ſons of men, but the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; but the more to deter men from this kinde of ſinning, and to ſhadow out that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is elſewhere called a willing ſinning after the knowledge of the truth received, for which there is no ſacrifice.

Verſe 34.

Origen. hom. 9. in Levit. Aug. quæſt. 133. in Levit.

Niceph. l. 1. c 7.

Hegeſip. lib. 5. Oleaſter.

Mark 3. 28.

Heb 10.26.

But for all other ſinnes the atonement now made hath been ſo largely ſpoken of, being for ſins, tranſgreſſions and treſpaſſes, as that the diſtinguiſhing of them by affirmative and negative precepts is over-curious and vain; ſins of all ſorts, whereof many were unknown, and for which no ſacrifice had been before offered, by the ſacrifices and rites of this day were all done away; and ſuch as for which particular or generall offerings had been made before, and ſo atonements had been made, the atonement of them all was now perfected.

Verſe 21.

The Myſtery.

The ſacrifices then and rites of this day are chiefly to be looked at, as moſt notably pointing out Chriſt, and the expiation of all our ſinnes by him. By thoſe ſacrifices to ſpeak properly, there was no purging of ſinne, but of outward legall uncleannеſſes: for the blood of buls and goats cannot thus purge, and their iterating often and particularly of theſe ſacrifices once every year, is made an argument hereof, becauſe if they had perfectly purged from ſinne, they ſhould not have needed to have been any more then once onely offered. Chriſt Jeſus then was the bullock and goat, with his blood expiating all ſin to ſuch as truely beleeve in him; and the faithfull then living, by beleeving in his blood to be ſhed, were cleanſed, when they thus ſacrificed, as we now without all other ſacrificing of fleſhly things are cleanſed by beleeving in it already ſhed for us. Chriſt was figured out by the High Prieſt, who alone did all the ſervice of this day, waſhed ſo often, and put on linen garments, and entered into the holy place with incenſe and blood, and thus made atonement for the people, Sanctuary and Altar. For even ſo, he alone made a perfect atonement for our ſins, waſhed himſelf in innocency, being without all ſtain of ſin, and put on the plain linen garments of humility, entered Heaven by his own blood, and is there alwayes offering the incenſe of his interceſſion for us before God the Father: ſee thisfurther illuſtrated, *Rev.*8.3,4.

Heb.10.3.

Verſe 1,2.

Eſay 63.1,2,3.

Heb.9. Rom.8.

And if it be true, which was noted before out of the Rabbins, that the High Prieſt having put off his white garments, never put them on again; this did notably ſhew, that Chriſt having left his humbled eſtate, now that he reigneth in Heavenly glory, ſhall never come in ſuch a manner again, but with great Maieſty and Glory. The holy place, Tabernacle and Altar and Colloſ. 1.20. people reconciled by blood ſhewed, that all things both in Heaven and in earth ſhould be reconciled by the blood of Chriſt.

The High Prieſts offering for himſelf firſt, and then for the people, ſhewed that the High Prieſt that then was, had no vertue in him to ſave, and there-
Heb. 9. fore there muſt neceſſarily come another, not after the order of Aaron, but of Melchiſedeck. And yet for this he was herein a type of Chriſt, in that hereby was ſhewed, that he muſt be without ſin himſelf, that ſhould ſave others from ſin. Touching the ſcape-goat, he alſo was a notable figure of Eſay 53. Chriſt in his bearing the ſins of the people: for even ſo Chriſt did bear the ſins of us all, and carried them away into a place cut off, as the word ſignifieth, or into a land inacceſſible, as the Septuagint render it, becauſe he is ſaid to have been cut off, and whither I go, ſaid he to his diſciples, can ye not come. And in that there were two goats, one killed, the other ſaved alive, his two natures were hereby figured out, or by the ſending of the one away far off, the coming of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, according to ſome, might be ſet forth. And all this was done in our September anſwering to their ſeventh moneth in the latter end of the yeer, to ſhew that in the declining age of the world Chriſt ſhould ſuffer. And at this time every one muſt afflict his ſoul, Eſay 53.8. Matth. 5.4. Acts 2.37. Eſay 58. to ſhew that no benefit redoundeth to any by Chriſt, but to thoſe that by mourning and contrition afflict themſelves inwardly for their ſins, and by true repentance turn therefrom.

Heſychius drawing every particular to an Allegory, beginneth vvith the prohibition of going at all times into the holy place, ſaying, that hereby is forbidden raſhly and lightly to diſpute of the myſteries of the Deity, and to all others but Aaron, that is, thoſe that are of more excellent underſtanding, to diſpute hereof at all. And Aaron, that is, ſuch muſt not go about this, but with a bullock and a ram, that is, vvith Chriſt ſet forth hereby, taking light
John 1.18. from him, who hath revealed the vvill of the Father unto us, and they muſt put on theſe linen garments, the coat of juſtice, the breeches of chaſtity, the mitre of vviſdom, and the girdle of fortitude, and be baptized, ſet forth by vvaſhing: but baptizing muſt be firſt, or elſe theſe vertues are not acceptable to God. Then proceeding to the bullock to be taken by the Prieſt for his houſe, and to the goat for all the people, he ſaith, that by both theſe Chriſt vvas figured out; by the bullock vvhich is a labouring beaſt, as he vvas a Sacrifice for the juſt, ſet forth by the houſe of the Prieſts; and by the goat vvhich hath a ſtinking ſmell, as he vvas a Sacrifice for ſinners; and a ram is alſo offered for a burnt-offering, to ſhevv that as vve, for vvhom Chriſt ſacrificed himſelf, muſt be mortified to ſin, ſet forth in the ſin-offerings: ſo vve
Rom. 12.1. muſt riſe up to newneſſe of life, thus wholly offering up our ſelves unto God, as S. Paul exhorteth. And whereas two goats muſt be taken, and lots caſt, that one may be for the Lord, and another for a ſcape-goat; ſome, ſaith he, wickedly underſtand the ſcape-goat, as offered to the Devil, as if here it were appointed, that God ſhould be ſacrificed to, and the Devil alſo. But this wicked conceit is overthrown, becauſe they are both ſet before the Lord, and the ſcape-goat after the killing of the other, was brought again, and ſet before the Lord, and over him confeſſion of ſins was made, &c. They were both then brought to the Lord, by the one Chriſts humanity, by the other his Deity, that died not, being ſet forth; and therefore prayers were made over him that was ſent away alive, to ſhew that by Chriſt living ſtill after his death, his humanity was ſupported and quickened, and by him our prayers come up acceptably before God the Father. And the two goats had lots caſt upon them, the whole diſpoſition whereof is ſaid to be from the Lord, to Prover. b. 16 ſhew that Chriſt came not by humane election, but by the meer grace of God. Whereas the ſcape-goat is ſent into a land cut off and not inhabited, which may may ſeem not to agree to Chriſt going into heaven; it agreeth very well, becauſe heaven is unacceſſible by men, being in this cut off as it were, becauſe there is no paſſing and repaſſing of men there, as in habitable places of the earth; and a deſert where men come not, may aptly ſet forth the holy ſeat of God, becauſe it is untainted by mens ſins, as places where they dwell are not, and to this David alludeth, *Pſal.*63.1. in deſcribing the land where he ſought God, to be dry and thirſty, as a wilderneſſe.

But both this and many other paſſages, whereof Heſychius is full, are miſapplied by him, yet of theſe his Allegories the judicious Reader may make ſome good uſe, becauſe all things here were certainly done myſtically. And laſtly, whereas *v.*32. it is ſaid, The Prieſt whom he ſhall anoint, ſhall do all this, Chriſt, the anointed Son of the heavenly Father, was certainly pointed at, as being figured out by him, anointed to this office by his Father before his departing out of this World. Pſal.45.

CHAP. XVII.

WHoſoever killeth an oxe or goat out of the campe or in the campe, and bringeth it not to the door of the tabernacle to offer, &c. blood ſhall be imputed to him After proviſion made to keep the Prieſt within the compaſſe of his duty in ſerving about the holy things of the Lord, now follow lawes for all the people, that they might not offend about ſacrifices: For all killing of any beaſts is not here forbidden in their tents for their private uſe, but onely of beaſts for ſacrifice, theſe muſt be killed and offered no where elſe but at the tabernacle, as is explained, *v.*8,9. and is iterated, *Deut.*12.5,6,15,&c. and *Chap.*14.23. and *Chap.*15.19,20. And this law is ſpoken by Moſes to Aaron and his ſons, and to the children of Iſrael, *v.*2. becauſe it concerned all the people, and the prieſts were to look unto it. Whereas it is ſaid, He ſhall be guilty of blood, &c. it is meant, that his ſin ſhall be as great as if he had ſhed unjuſtly the blood of man, and he ſhall die for it as a murtherer; and according to this it is ſpoken, *Eſa.*66.3. ſo alſo Sol. Jarchi, and the Targum Jonathan explain it, if he did but kill it, although he offered it not out of the tabernacle. And thus ſtrict was the Lord herein, becauſe he would by this teach, that no ſervice is acceptable to him that is done out of Chriſt, who is the true tabernacle, but abominable: ſo Calvin, and the ceſſation of this ſervice in time to come, when the temple ſhould be deſtroyed for ever, as Heſychius. It was ſhewed alſo, that no where but in his Church is God acceptably ſerved: ſo Ainſworth, alledging for this, 1 Tim. 3.15. Revel. 21.3. Epheſ. 2.20. Act. 2.47. Whereas Samuel is ſaid to have ſacrificed elſewhere, as at Mizpeh, 1 *Sam.*7.6 in Gilgal, 1 *Sam.*10.8. in Bethlehem, 1 *Sam.*16.2, &c. and Manoah, *Judg.*13. this was by ſpeciall direction from God, and by his diſpenſation, although they were not prieſts: Junius upon 1 *Sam.*16. thinketh that this was onely a feaſt but no ſacrifice properly ſo called, but I reſt in the former reſolution And for the reaſon of this ſentence, he that killeth a beaſt elſewhere and not at the tabernacle ſhall be guilty of blood: Oleaſter ſaith well, Man by ſinning came into the danger of death, but the Lord in mercy accepted of the killing of a beaſt in his ſtead, but if he did it not in the place, and according to the manner by him appointed, death was ſtill his due. Verſe 3. Solom Jarchi. Heb 9.11. Calvin. Heſychius. Ainſworth. Junius. Oleaſter.

That the children of Iſrael may bring the offerings which they offer in the open field unto the Lord to the door of the tabernacle, &c. Before this ordinance they offered their ſacrifices, ſay the Hebrews, upon every high place, and that by the miniſtery of the firſt-born, but when the tabernacle was ſet up, they might not offer in any other place, and not by any other but the prieſts, ſo that here is a reſtreint from the liberty by them formerly uſed, that they might no more offer unto Devils, as they had done then, *v.*7. for to come all to one Verſe 5. Talmud Babyl.

place,

place, and to the ſame prieſts, well inſtructed in the ſervice of the true God was a certain means to prevent ſuch groſſe idolatries. Yet the Heathen, ſaith Maimony, might ſacrifice to God in other places, and the prieſts might teach them how to offer, but no Iſraelite might offer elſewhere for them, but onely at the tabernacle, or aſſiſt them in their offering, becauſe this law is given to the children of Iſrael. But it is to the Iſraelites, and to the ſtrangers ſojourning amongſt them, *v.*8. they that lived in other countreys, might ſacrifice there, as Job did. It is added, And offer them for peace-offerings to the Lord. Why for peace-offerings more then for burnt-offerings, or ſacrifices for ſin? To this ſome anſwer, becauſe peace-offerings were moſt commonly offered, and were brought to teſtifie their piety, and more cheerfully, becauſe the owner had a part therein, and theſe being not of the moſt holy offerings, but leſſe holy, it was to be underſtood, if theſe muſt be brought to the door of the tabernacle, then much more the other moſt holy ſacrifices. Others, by peace-offerings here underſtand all ſacrifices, becauſe they all tend to peace betwixt God and man, being before at difference for ſin. I think that one kinde, which was moſt commonly offered, was named, the reſt being underſtood.

Maimony in Maaſeh bakerbanoth.

Job 1.5.
Job 42 8.

Calvin.

Radulphus.

Verſe 6. Touching the ſprinkling of the blood upon the altar by the Prieſt, &c. *v.*6. ſee before, *Chap.*3.8.

Verſe 7. That they no more offer their ſacrifices to Devils, &c. See the like ſpeech, *Deut.*32.17. By Devils the Idols are meant, to whom they offered, as is explained, 1 *Cor.*10.20. and accordingly Jeroboams idols are called devils, 2 *Chro.*11.15. The word rendered devils, is שעירים, rugged things like goats, becauſe the Devil ſometimes hath appeared thus; the Septuagint render it, vain things. To offering to Devils going a whoring after them is joyned, becauſe the people of God are married as it were unto him; and to offer to other gods is a diſſolving of the marriage-knot, and ſinning againſt the vow of marriage, which is whoredome. We may ſee here, howſoever ſome extenuate the ſin of idolatry, yet it is no better then the worſhipping of the devil; and ſpirituall whoredome, and this is, when any image is worſhipped, as is to be ſeen in Jeroboams calves.

Note.

Verſe 8,9. Here followeth a ratification of this law: If any either Iſraelite or ſtranger ſojourning amongſt them tranſgreſſed herein, he muſt be cut off. Of ſuch ſtrangers, ſee before, *Chap.*16.29. But by offering here Maimony ſaith, is to be underſtood offering upon an altar; for if any man offered upon a ſtone or rock without, he was not guilty, becauſe it is not Corban, unleſſe it be offered upon an altar, he ſhall not therefore, ſaith he, die for this.

Maimony.

Verſe 10,11 Here is a charge againſt eating blood, cutting off being threatened to ſuch Verſe 12,13 as offend herein. Of this law, ſee before, *Levit.*7.26,27. and *Chap.*3.17. but, as there blood of ſacrifices was forbidden to be eaten, ſo here blood of any thing killed for their ordinary food; as alſo, *Gen.*9.4. As in all this a reverend eſteem of the blood of Chriſt figured out by blood was aimed, ſo we may hence gather, that the Ceremoniall law keepeth men that ſtill cleave unto it, from partaking of the blood of Chriſt, becauſe, according to this law it is denied to any to eat blood.

Note.
Ainſworth.

Verſe 13,14 If any man hunteth and catcheth beaſt or fowl, that may be eaten, he ſhall poure out
Maimony. the blood of it, and cover it with duſt: for blood is the life, &c. This, ſay the Rabbins, is to be underſtood onely, as it is ſpoken, the blood of clean beaſts is to be covered, not of the unclean, which might not be eaten. Again, they ſay, that covering in the duſt is a burying, and is to be done for honour of God, who hath commanded it, and with bleſſing God; and therefore it is to be covered not with the foot, which were a contempt, but with the hand or ſome inſtrument, Ezech. 24.7,8. Blood not covered is ſpoken of, as the cauſe of wrath from God. Further they note, that of every beaſt or fowl to be eaten, the blood muſt be let out, and no part of it muſt be eaten, till the life is quite gone, that is, till it hath done trembling, ſomething touching this, ſee 1 Sam. 14.32.

14.32. if any blood remained afterward in the inteſtines, it might be eaten, becauſe it was not the blood, wherein the life ſtood, which onely was forbidden.

Verſe 15.

If any man eateth that, which dieth, or is torn with beaſts, he ſhall waſh his cloathes, and bathe himſelf, &c. Of this Law ſee before, Chap. 11.39.40. and Exod. 22.31. but the Rabbins diſtinguiſh it thus, Here is meant, that which is inclining to die through tearing or hurt otherwiſe, although it be not yet dead, becauſe it is not orderly killed, and the blood let out by man, as is commanded, it may not be eaten. If it be an unclean beaſt or fowl, although it be killed, and the blood be let out, it may not be eaten, nor the untimely birth of a clean beaſt, nor any thing, before it be eight dayes old, Ex. 22.30. Whereas the ſtrangers within their gates are forbidden to eat it, as well as they, but Deut. 14.21. it is allowed to be given to ſtrangers; there by ſtrangers are to be underſtood ſuch as were not of their Religion, here ſuch as were.

Maimony of forbidden meats.

For the myſtery here; Heſychius underſtandeth by the wilde beaſt or fowl taken in hunting, which might be eaten, ſuch as fear God, whether they be ſecular or ſpirituall perſons, but yet are unawares overtaken with ſin, their blood, that is, their ſins are to be buried in the duſt, and not to be blazed abroad to their infamy, or to be reputed as crying ſins, that cry for revenge, as blood ſpilt upon the ground, but not buried. And to this Job alludeth, when he ſaith, O earth, cover not thou my blood. Ainſworth by killing things taken in hunting underſtandeth ſuch killings, as of which it was ſaid to Peter, kill, and eat, viz. by converting; and the blood, that is, the old man in ſuch muſt be buried. For things dying alone or torn, ſee the myſteries of the prohibiting them, Levit. 11.9. and Exod. 22.31.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

Job 16.18.

Acts 10.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſe 3.

After the doings of the land of Egypt ſhall ye not do, nor of the land of Canaan, &c. In forbidding them to do like them of Egypt, or Canaan, he meaneth all heathens: for ſo Maimony ſaith, we may not walk in the ſtatutes of the heathen, nor be like unto them in hair or in apparell, &c. Levit. 19.27. Chap 18.3. and Chap. 20.26. A man muſt not apparell himſelf with apparell peculiar to them, nor let the locks of his head grow like their locks, nor ſhave off the ſides, leaving the hair in the midſt, &c. Why Egypt is ſpecially named, ſee Ezech. 20.7,8. Chap. 23.8. and Canaan, Levit. 20.23. In Egypt they had lived long, and had been already corrupted thereby: for it is noted of Iſis their goddeſſe, that ſhe was married to her brother Oſiris, and hereupon a Law was made in Egypt, that it ſhould be lawfull for brother to marry with ſiſter; and for other degrees here forbidden, the Arabians are ſaid to have married onely with their kinred, the Perſians with their daughters, and the Parthians, mothers with their ſons. And the Canaanites coming of Cham were moſt corrupt by fleſhly corruptions, giving themſelves to all manner of uncleanneſſe, and this by their living amongſt them afterwards the Iſraelites ſhould ſee, and therefore they are here warned againſt the manners of theſe two in ſpeciall, and under theſe all heathens are meant, as Jer. 10.2.

Maimony Treatiſe of Idolatry Chap. 11.

Theſe things are ſaid to have been ſpoken to Moſes, that he might ſpeak them to the children of Iſrael, that diſtinction, to Aaron and his ſons, and the children of Iſrael, Chap 17. being left out, becauſe theſe concerned Prieſts and people all alike, thoſe the Prieſts one way, and the people another. For the words prefixed before theſe Lawes, I am the Lord your God, this is noted to be five times repeated in this chapter, to move them the more to the obedience of theſe Lawes both for the love of his being their God, and for the fear of him being their Lord. As if he had ſaid, I am your God in a peculiar manner, having choſen you for my people above all other nations, and therefore I will in theſe things have you diſtinguiſhed from them, and not

Verſe 1,2.

Willet.

not like unto them, becauſe they are abominations before me. So in ſpecial going after charmers and conſulting with ſuch as have familiar ſpirits, are forbidden, Deut. 18.9,10,11,12. as Heſychius noteth, and I am the Lord your God, is ſpoken again, *verſ.*4 and it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt keep both my judgements and mine ordinances, by this doubling of the ſame, to ſhew, that there are Lawes of two Teſtaments, both which muſt be carefully obſerved to come to life. In commanding them to keep his Ordinances, he meaneth that they ſhould keep his onely, and not follow either their own inventions, which are taxed, *Eccleſ.*7.29. or to do the works of their own hands, as Jerem. 25. 6. or the Statutes of the Kings of Iſrael made without the commandement of the Lord, 2 King. 17 8. for thus our Saviour Chriſt expoundeth this, *Thou ſhalt ſerve him, Deut.*6.13. Him onely ſhalt thou ſerve, Mat 4.10. ſo Ainſworth.

Heſychius.

Verſe 4.

Ainſworth.

Verſe 5.

Toſtatus.

Cajetan.

Queſt.

Ye ſhall therefore keep my Statutes and my judgements, which if a man do, he ſhall live in them. Here by judgements and Statutes are not meant, as ſome expound, Ceremonials and Judicials, but all, yea even the Morall Lawes, for thus the Lawes of the Old Teſtament are all ſpoken of, *Gal.*3.12. Rom. 10.5. But ſeeing live is here propounded to ſuch as keep the Lawes of God, why is this contradicted, *Ezech.*20. 5. I gave them Statutes, that were not good, and judgements whereby they ſhould not live? To this it is anſwered that the reaſon, why they could not by keeping theſe Lawes obtain life, was their own corruption, whereby they brake out into ſin the more, the more they were hereby reſtrained from ſinning, as Rom. 7. and therefore it is ſaid to be impoſſible to the Law, as weak through the fleſh. If any man could perfectly have kept theſe Lawes all his life-time without ſinning, he ſhould have lived hereby, but ſeeing none could, Chriſt came and fulfilled them, and ſuffered for our ſins, that we through him might attain to juſtification, and life by faith in his name. And ſeeing how full of ſin we are by the Law we are thus taught to flee to Chriſt, for which it is ſaid to be a Schoolmaſter to bring us unto him. For the living here ſpoken of, Which if a man do he ſhall live in them, it is not the temporall life and proſperity here, as ſome expound it, but everlaſting life in the world to come, ſo the Chaldee, He ſhall live by them to eternall life: and Rab. Solomon Jarchi, in the world to come, ſo likewiſe Heſychius, and our Saviour Chriſt according to this ſaith, This do and live. This is the promiſe of the Old Teſtament; but in the New it is, Believe and live, Rom 10.5,9.

Rom 8.3.

*Gal.*3.24.

Origen.

Toſtatus.

Oleaſter.

Vatablus.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Selom Jarchi.

Heſychius.

Luk. 10 28.

Verſe 6.

None of you ſhall approach to any, that is near of kin to him to uncover their nakedneſſe. For, none of you, Hebrew is man, man, a phraſe common to ſet forth men of all ſorts. For near of kin, is שאר בשרו, the remainder of his fleſh, ſo called, becauſe our kinred are part as it were of our own fleſh. By aproaching near to uncover nakedneſſe, having carnal copulation or knowledge is meant, according to this Abimelech is ſaid not to have come near Sarah, Gen. 20 4. ſee the like alſo, Ezech 18.6. *Eſa.*8.3. The Rabbins will not onely have carnall copulation hereby forbidden, but alſo coming near to imbrace or kiſſe in luſt, becauſe this tendeth to the bringing on or uncovering the nakedneſſe here forbidden: and likewiſe to make ſignes with hand or foot, as *Prov.*6.13. to ſport with, or to gaze on her beauty: Maimony. And herein they teach divinely, and much like to that of Chriſt, *Mat.*5.28. uncovering nakedneſſe, for uncovering the ſecret parts, is ſpoken of per euphemiſmum, that is, cleanlineſſe of ſpeech, ſaith Junius, for ever ſince the ſin of our firſt parents there is in nature a ſhame to have theſe parts uncovered or ſpoken of, and therefore even in Barbarous conntreys where they go naked, they cover them. All unlawfull copulations here forbidden, ſaith Maimony, are called nakedneſſes or inceſts; and *verſ.*17. theſe words, it is wickedneſſe, the vulgar Latin rendereth, inceſtus eſt, inceſtus, ſaith Toſtatus, quaſi incaſtus in a moſt notorious manner: the Hebrew word is זמה, a wicked action, or abomination, as it is uſed, Ezech 16.43. The reaſon, why inceſtuous marriages are forbidden, ſeemeth to lie in the words of the precept, the remainder of his fleſh. It is unnaturall to be joyned in carnall copulation with a mans own fleſh, although in the beginning it was not ſo for the neceſſity of thoſe times. And therefore even the Heathen led onely by the light of nature abhorred from many of theſe marriages, upon which it is touched, 1 Cor. 5.1. as the Romans and the Tuſcans, amongſt whom they were puniſhed with death.

*Maimony in iſſure biah. cap.*21.

Junius.

Maimony Treatiſe of Wives. Chap. 1.

Plutarc. quæſt. rom. cap. 52.

And ſome beaſts utterly refuſing to couple with their dams, ſhew inceſtuous copulations to be againſt nature, as the camel, which cannot by any means be brought to cover her that brought him forth: and Ariſtotle telleth of one once, that being deceived by his keeper covering her with a cloth did this act, by and by perceiving it, he killed his keeper; and of an horſe upon the like occaſion, that caſt himſelf down headlong from a rock. And Hermion in Euripides ſaith, Every ſuch is a barbarous generation, when the father lieth with the daughter, the ſon with the mother, or the brother with the ſiſter. And the reaſon hereof is, becauſe in nature ever ſince the fall of our firſt parents we hide our nakedneſſe, that is, our ſecret parts, and are greatly aſhamed that they ſhould at any time be uncovered, from whence they are called Pudenda, and in Greek αἰσχημοσύνη, and the nakedneſſe of our neer kinred is, as it were, our own nakedneſſe, and therefore it is a ſhamefull thing to uncover it by carnally coupling with ſuch, whether out of marriage, or in it; yea, in marriage it is much more horrible, becauſe this is a profeſſion, as it were of inceſt, and a cloking of it with the holy ordinance of God. Again, by inceſtuous marriages one end of marriage is fruſtrated, which is the joyning together of the more in love and unity, as both of nation with nation, and family with family, ſeeing where affinity is contracted, there is the more likelihood of drawing on affection, and holding them together in one that before were diſ-joyned, ſeeing the name of father and mother, ſon and daughter, nephew and kinſman naturally ſtirreth up a good affection in the one to the other, and to ſuch as belong unto them: and naturally men do deſire to enlarge their kinred, and therefore muſt not return for propagation to the firſt principles, as by inceſt it is done.

Ariſt. hiſt. animal. lib. 9 c. 47.

Euripid. τοιοῦτον πᾶν τὸ βαρβαρὸν γένος πατέρτε θυγατρὶ, παῖς τε μητρὶ μίγνυται, κοῦτ' ἀδελφῷ.

Gen. 9.21, 25.

Moreover, by inceſtuous marriages is brought in a confuſion, the former neer relations in nature being hereby extinct, and the mother who is to be obeyed and honoured by her ſon being made ſubject unto him, and the brother lord over the ſiſter, betwixt whom and him in nature there is a parity. Laſtly, by reaſon of their converſing together, if ſuch marriages might be, a gap would lie open to much incontinencie, account being made of a future marrying together to ſalve all again, whereas if theſe laws be duly obſerved, it is ſtopt up, and brother may the more ſecurely converſe with ſiſter, and nephew with aunt, &c. becauſe ſuch certainly will not uncover the nakedneſſe of one another. How even by the light of nature ſuch marriages have been moſt anciently eſchewed, we may gather from that ſpeech of Abraham, being asked of Sarah when he came into Egypt, he ſaid, ſhe was his ſiſter, and hereupon Pharaoh took her to him, verily beleeving that if ſo, ſhe could not then be his wife. But of her being his ſiſter ſome way indeed, ſee Gen. 11.29. and of the difference of the caſe then. But all theſe reaſons notwithſtanding, ſome there are, ſaith Calvin, that will have theſe laws to belong onely to the Jews, as other of their Judicials, but he confuteth this well by the preface, verſ. 1,2,3,4,5. made before theſe laws, wherein a charge is given again and again to keep them, and it is promiſed that in ſo doing they ſhould live, which is not uſed to be done, but about morall and perpetuall laws, which ever binde all nations. And the Apoſtle in ſpeaking againſt one kinde of inceſt, intimateth the continuance of the laws againſt all in force for ever. It is true indeed, he ſpeaketh of nothing, but a mans taking his fathers wife, that is, his mother in law, but forſomuch as an aunt is as it were a mother, and an uncle a father, and a ſiſter is as neer as any of theſe, it muſt needs follow, that under that one all inceſtuous marriages forbidden by the laws of God

Gen. 12.

Calvin.

1 Cor. 5.1.

are impugned. And therefore whoſo diſpenſeth with any of theſe laws, as divers Popes of Rome have done, do but ſet themſelves againſt God, and of this their intolerable inſolencie ſhall have judgement, neither can they by all their diſpenſings make that lawfull which is ſinfull, but it ſhall be counted ſo ſtill before the Lord, although it may hereby be coloured over amongſt men. As that marriage of Emmanuel the King of Portugall by the Popes diſpenſation with two ſiſters, and of Katharine Qu. of England with two brethren, Arthur and Henry; and of Ferdinand King of Naples with his aunt; and of one of whom Antoninus writeth, who by the diſpenſation of Martin the fifth married his own ſiſter, with whom he had before committed fornication, and of ſuch as being before inceſtuouſly married in the time of their infidelity, that being converted to the faith were diſpenſed withall by Innocent the third. It is memorable that is related of Claudius the Emperour, that he having married his neece Agrippina, and thereupon made a law, that it ſhould be lawfull for others to do the like, none would ever follow his example yet herein, but onely one bond-man, ſhewing hereby that it was even againſt the law of nature to make ſuch marriages, notwithſtanding the ordinances of men. And hitherto of inceſtuous marriages in generall: now follow the particular degrees forbidden both in conſanguinity and in affinity.

Antonin. p.3. tit.1.c.11.

C. Gandemus tit. de divort.

Verſe 7.

The nakedneſſe of thy father, or the nakedneſſe of thy mother ſhalt thou not uncover, &c. There is ſome difficulty in theſe words: for if we ſhall with Targum Jonathan ſay, the firſt are ſpoken to a daughter, Thou ſhalt not uncover thy fathers nakedneſſe, and the next to a ſon, this is improbable, becauſe the fathers nakedneſſe is no where elſe taken in this ſenſe, but his wife is called his nakedneſſe, *verſ.*8 and *chap.*20.11. and the fathers brothers wife his nakedneſſe, *Chap.*18. *verſ.*14. Yet Junius, Oleaſter, and Cajetan, and Willet follow this: but let them ſhew me any thing ſpoken to a woman in all theſe laws, forbidding her to uncover the nakedneſſe of a man, and I will ſubſcribe unto them, and if they cannot, it is unreaſonable to make this expoſition here, for he uncovereth the nakedneſſe that goeth in unto her, and not ſhe to whom he goeth in, unleſſe we ſhall ſay that this is ſingularly thus enacted with reference to Lots daughters, *Geneſ.*20.31. and therefore nothing is ſaid more againſt the fathers going in to his own daughter in all that followeth. If with Vatablus and Ainſworth we expound it of another wife of the father, and not mother to him that goeth in unto her, *verſ.*8. maketh againſt this, where this is expreſſely forbidden, and therefore it is improbable, that ſuch a tautology ſhould be committed to forbid the ſame ſin twice together. By the nakedneſſe of the father then, either that which was firſt ſaid, or the mother is meant; and if ſo, the ſame thing is double forbidden in this double prohibition, that the ſon may be moved for reverence to his father, whoſe nakedneſſe his mother is, and alſo for reverence to his mother, the more to abhor from this wickedneſſe. And according to this Maimony ſaith, He that doth this is double guilty, once becauſe ſhe is his fathers nakedneſſe, and another time becauſe ſhe is his mother; and the caſe is all one, his father being then alive or dead. What the puniſhments are for tranſgreſſing any of theſe laws, ſee *Chap.*20. *verſ.*11,12, &c. It is cutting off with death, and therefore ſuch ſins are with all care to be avoided. Semiramis a Queen of Babylon, a beaſtly woman, would needs have her own ſon Ninus, contrary to this law, but he being moved with indignation at it ſlew her therefore, although to cover her wickedneſſe ſhe made a law, that others might do the like. Of daughters coupling with their own fathers, there have been many examples amongſt the brutiſh Heathen. Cynaras had Smyrna his own daughter in this kinde; Hæmon, Rhodope; Nyctæus. Nyctemane; Clymenus, Epiraſte, &c.

Targum Jonathan.

Junius.
Cajetan.
Oleaſter.

Vatablus.
Ainſworth.

*Maimony in Iſſurei Biah. Chap.*2.

*Oroſ. lib.*1.*c.*4.

Verſe 8.

The nakedneſſe of thy fathers wife thou ſhalt not uncover, &c. that is, of any other wife which he hath beſides thy mother, as Reuben did, and was therefore diſ-inherited, *Gen.*49.4. and as Abſalom did by his father Davids concubines. Theſeus an heathen man did ſo abhor from this, that he pulled his ſon

2 Sam.16.22.

Hyppolitus

Hippolytus in pieces with horses for suspicion of his incontinency with Phaedra, his wife, when as it was but her accusation onely, because Hyppolitus would not yield to her lust. Caracalla an Emperour is said to have sinned thus with his step-mother, and Antiochus with the wife of Solencus his father, being first sick for the love of her, and his father therefore yielding her unto him. But the Rabbins note well that there be four, with whom a man may not be joyned in any case, the fathers wife, the sonnes wife, the brothers wife, except as Deut. 25. 5. and the fathers brothers wife, and if the husband be alive, he that sinneth with any such is double guilty, and if he be dead, it is unlawfull to marry any such for ever. Maimony.

The nakednesse of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or of thy mother, &c. Here is further added, born at home, or born abroad; that is, saith the Chaldee, and Targum Jonathan begotten by thy father of another woman, or begotten by another man of thy mother: and Maimony yet to make it more plain, in wedlock or out of wedlock by fornication, she is yet thy sister, and it is a nakednesse not to be uncovered by thee. And if the daughter, either of thy father or of thy mother be forbidden thee, saith Augustine, then much more the daughter of them both. And yet amongst the Egyptians whose manners they are forbidden specially to follow, it is noted that Ptolomie Philadelphus married his sister Arsinoe, and likewise Soter and Philopater took to wives their own sister. Herodotus saith also of Cambyses the King of Persia, that loving his younger sister, he asked the Judges, whether there were any law against his marrying of her? they answered, that they knew none, but that it was lawfull for the Kings of Persia to do what they listed. But amongst the Romans they were put to death for such marriages. Verse 9. Chaldee Paraphrast. Targum Jonathan. August. quæst. 59. in Levit. Herodot. l. 3. Plutarch paral. c. 52.

The nakednesse of thy sons daughter or of thy daughters daughter, &c. From hence Maimony gathereth, as Augustine did before, that if the daughters daughter be forbidden, then much more a mans own daughter, although this be not named. And this law, some think, must be understood with an & cætera, as if the meaning were, that all marriages in the line descending should be unlawfull in infinitum, so that if Adam were now alive, he could no where have a wife, because he is a common father to all, and all women are his daughters, and this indeed is a good reason: yet Isidore thinketh, that onely the degrees named are unlawfull and no more, because in going on consanguinity weareth out: so likewise Cajetan and Lorinus. Some dispute whether a man might not marry his daughter or daughters daughter, &c. if there were no more women to be had? and resolve it affirmatively from the example of Lots daughters, but of that see before in their history, and whatsoever they conceived, God never suffered the world, no not when he drovvned it, to be brought to this strait, intimating hereby, that such marriages are of all others most unnaturall and contrary to his lavves. Verse 10. Maimony in Issurei Biah. Scotus. Durandus. Richardus Junius. Isidor. Lopez. Bellarmine. Lorinus.

The nakednesse of thy fathers wives daughter begotten of thy father, &c. It may seem strange, that the Lord not intending here to forbid marrying vvith a fathers wives daughter begotten by another man, should institute his lavv thus, and not thy fathers daughter by another vvife: but this is done, as the Rabbins note, to intimate a double guiltinesse in him that doth thus 1 Because she is his sister: and 2 His fathers vvives daughter, and not his daughter by another vvoman begotten in fornication, vvherein there is but a single guiltinesse. Maimony. If it be demanded hovv this lavv differeth from that, v. 9. Augustine, Lyranus, and Cajetan answver, that it is a repetition or further explanation of that lavv, there being need for the commonnesse of this sin to inculcate the same lavv again. Osiander, that the daughter both of thy father and mother is meant, because this hath not been hitherto spoken of; Junius, that a kinsvvoman or grandchilde by the father is meant here. Verse 11. Maimony in Issurei Biah, c. 2. August. Lyranus. Cajetan. Junii analysi.

But neither of all these rightly; not the last, for the vvord is Modoleth, begotten of the father, so as a grandchilde is not, nor the second, because if so, she should have been called his mother, and there is least probability of the first, firſt, that the Lord uſing ſuch brevity here ſhould repeat the ſame law twice, or explain it a verſe after another coming between. More probably, v.9. a daughter gotten in fornication is meant here in wedlock: thus alſo Lyranus, as by another way reſolveth it, and therefore it is ſaid there, at home or abroad, onely; here, thy fathers wives daughter begotten by him.

Verſe 12. The nakednesſe of thy fathers ſiſter, &c. Here and in the next verſe marrying with the fathers or mothers ſiſter, which is an aunt, is forbidden, and becauſe the Neece is in the ſame degree to her Uncle, that the Nephew is to the Aunt, under this that marriage alſo is forbidden; ſo Calvin and Toſtatus, for the reaſon. Calvin. Toſtatus. She is thy fathers neer kinſwoman, holdeth as well to the Neece marrying the Uncle, as to the Nephew marrying the Aunt; as the Aunt is as it were a mother to her Nephew, ſo the Uncle is as a father to his Neece, ſaith Brentius, wherefore in both caſes marrying is alike to be abhorred as monſtrous and unnaturall. For Amrams marrying his Aunt, Exod. 6. ſee what is to be thought of that there. Brentius.

Verſe 14. The nakednesſe of thy fathers brother, that is, as in the next words is explained, Thou ſhalt not approach unto his wife, for ſhe is called his nakedneſſe, becauſe man and wife are one fleſh, ſo the fathers nakedneſſe was expounded before, v.7. But if the daughters marrying with the father be forbidden, as ſome hold, v.7. by the ſame reaſon the Neeces marrying with her Uncle is forbidden here, and ſo there is not onely a law by conſequence, but an expreſſe law againſt it.

Verſe 15. The nakednesſe of thy ſonnes wife, &c. Upon this law ſome think, that Abſalom having gone in to his father Davids Concubines, he returning, ſhut them up, and would know them no more, becauſe by going in unto them, the ſon had now made them as it were his wives. Lyranus. Hugo. Cajetan.

Verſe 16. The nakednesſe of thy brothers wife, &c. Some underſtand this, as if it were meant during his life, becauſe Deut. 25.5. after his death her brother might marry her, if he died without iſſue to raiſe up ſeed unto him, and therefore they ſay, Herod was reproved by John the Baptiſt for marrying his brothers wife, he being yet alive, & having put her away. But this is an expoſition contrary to the ſenſe of all the like lawes, for they do not onely forbid ſuch marriages, the man being yet alive, but dead, becauſe the conſanguinity or affinity yet dieth not. And one may not take any other mans wife, he being yet alive, ſeeing this were adultery, and for a neer kinſmans wife, although ſhe be divorced, ſhe is a neer kinſwomau, and may not be married. Others therefore take that Deut. 25. to be an exception to this law, as if it had been ſaid, the nakedneſſe of thy brothers wife thou ſhalt not uncover, but onely in caſe that he dieth without iſſue. For thus both Judah before the law gave Tamar his ſon Er his wife, when he was dead, to his ſon Onan, and he being dead, promiſed afterwards to match her to his third ſon Shelah, and after the law Naomi, when her two ſons were dead, ſpake unto Ruth, her daughter in law, and her ſiſter: Have I any more ſons in my wombe that they ſhould be husbands to you? alluding, to that law, Deut. 25.5. and Matth. 22. it is ſaid of ſeven brethren, that each one of them after another took one woman, according to that law, to wife. But againſt this Calvin argueth thus, If this were ſo, God ſhould be contrary to himſelfe, ſometime allowing that which before he condemned as an abomination, and touching Judah, he ſaith, he went according to the cuſtome of thoſe times, but in ſo doing he erred from the right way. Wherefore he expoundeth that, Deut. 25.5. of a kinſman, an uncles or aunts ſon, or ſome other ſo farre remote, as that without inceſt he might marry the relict of his kinſman, as is exemplified in Boaz, no brother, but a kinſman taking Ruth to wife. To this of Calvin I anſwer, that God by making one exception to a generall law is not againſt himſelfe, for in forbidding to marry a brothers wife, his drift is, that he ſhould not do ſuch a thing to his ignominy, intimated in theſe words, It is thy brothers nakedneſſe; for his honour, and to uphold his family ready to fade by his dying without iſſue he forbiddeth it not:

Junius. Pererius. Oſiander. Toſtatus. Oleaſter, &c. Gen. 38. Ruth 1. Calvin.

not: here neceſſity requireth a diſpenſing with lawes in this kinde, as at the firſt brothers and ſiſters were through neceſſity inforced to marry together, becauſe otherwiſe mankinde could not have been increaſed. And although by a brother, a kinſman is ſometimes underſtood, yet the experience of examples commemorated concurring with this law, for a brother properly underſtood ſheweth, that we ought not to flee here to any ſecondary acception of this word brother. And thus the Hebrews alſo underſtand it, of a brother by the fathers ſide, by whom the inheritance cometh, and not by the mother; and therefore it is not any brothers wife, whom that exception concerneth, but the firſt-born or eldeſt; and the next brother, ſeemeth to be meant, who is ſingle, becauſe Deut 25.5. it is ſaid, brethren dwelling together, but if there be no ſuch brother, ſay the Hebrews, then a kinſman, called alſo a brother, is to do this office, as Boaz to Ruth. For the reaſons of that exception, they are by Fonſeca ſummed up four. Firſt, that families in Iſrael might not periſh. Secondly, that the relict might be comforted. Thirdly, that the brother dying might have ſome comfort herein. Fourthly, that the memory of the juſt might not periſh. But the chief reaſon, as I take it, was, that the firſt-born might ſtill alwayes live in his poſterity, to figure out the eternity of Chriſt, the firſt-born amongſt many brethren, ſo that he being now come, that law holdeth no longer, neither may a brother in any caſe take a brothers wife, which is now inceſtuous, whatſoever the caſe is. Fonſeca.

The nakednesse of a woman, and her daughter, or ſons daughter, or her daughters daughter, &c. Upon this law the Rabbins ſay, that when a man hath married a wife, there are ſix women with whom he cometh now to have ſuch affinity; that he may never marry with any of them, three here named, and her mother, mothers mother, and fathers mother neceſſarily underſtood. This is ſuch a ſin, as that ſingularly it is here ſaid to be זמה inceſtus. ,or abomination, as was touched before, and they that ſin thus muſt be burnt, Levit. 20.14. Verſe 17. Maimony in Iſſurei Biah.

Neither ſhalt thou take a wife to her ſiſter, to vex her, &c. By the equity of that law, v. 16. whereby a woman may not marry with her husbands brother, it is unlawfull for her husband to marry with her ſiſter, but here ſpecially, becauſe of Jacobs taking two ſiſters ſometime, which was a cauſe of ſo much vexation and diſquiet betwixt them, he is forbidden to take her during his wives life, to vex her; not that he may marry her after his wifes death: For from that which is written, ſaith Baſil, we may not raſhly gather that which is not written, becauſe it is written, that during her life, thou mayeſt not take her, therefore after her death thou maieſt take her, as a man may not gather from this, Joſeph knew her not till ſhe had brought forth her firſt-born ſon, therefore he knew her after. For if a man may not marry his own ſiſter at any time, he may not at any time marry his wives ſiſter, ſeeing as the ſame reaſon is againſt marrying the wifes mother or daughter, that is, againſt marrying thine own mother or daughter; ſo it is againſt marrying thy wifes ſiſter, that is, againſt marrying thine own ſiſter, for in all theſe the rights of cognation or kindred are the ſame. And Beza likewiſe, there is an Emphaſis in ſaying, during her life, to vex her, in alluſion to Jacob, and not an allowing to marry her after. Yet Calvin by ſiſter underſtanding a kinſwoman, ſaith, that it is here forbidden to marry with a kinſwoman ſo far remote, as that otherwiſe a man may marry her, but onely for vexing his wife whileſt ſhe liveth he muſt flee ſuch marrying, afterwards he may take her to wife. But Junius by ſiſter underſtandeth any other woman, as if here were a law againſt having two wives together, both becauſe the words, Iſhah el Acothah, a wife to her ſiſter, are put, Ezech. 1.9. for one to another, and likewiſe, Gen. 26.31. Exod. 26.3. and becauſe if here be not a law againſt Polygamy there is none in all the Book of God, which yet we are ſure is againſt the firſt inſtitution, for one woman onely was made for one man, to which reſpect is had, Mal. 2.15. And laſtly, becauſe the reaſon here uſed, to vex her, holdeth to any ſe- Verſe 18. Baſil. Epiſt. ad Diodorum. Matth. 1. Beza lib. de repud. Calvin. Junius.

cond

1 Sam. 1.

cond wife as well as to a ſiſter, as we may ſee in the example of Hannah and Peninnah, the two wives of Elkanah; and becauſe if Polygamy be not here forbidden, nothing in effect is ſaid, forſomuch as by the equity of a former law, v. 16. to marry a wives ſiſter is forbidden, and the limitation of the time during her life, ſeemeth to intimate one ſpoken of here with whom a man may marry after his wives death. Upon theſe reaſons I finde that many are ſwayed by Junius, as Ainſworth and Willet, &c. as my ſelfe have alſo been in my Catechiſme. Yet the Hebrews underſtand her next ſiſter in blood, whether by her father or her mother, begotten in marriage or in fornication. And if they had underſtood it otherwiſe, as being againſt Polygamy, they would not certainly have done contrary ſo commonly as they did, yea the holieſt and the moſt famous men amongſt them. But of their Polygamies I have ſaid ſomething in my Catechiſme, Command. 7. And if it be granted, that this is no law againſt Polygamy, yet from other grounds before ſpoken of it appeareth, that it was never lawfull, or if it were, as ſome hold in thoſe dayes, yet it is not novv under the Goſpel, becauſe no further liberty is now given, but for every man to have his ovvn vvife, not vvives; and every vvoman her ovvn husband, not husbands, that being enjoyned here, vvhich vvas long ago pointed at in Gods making but one and one. And therefore the practice of the Turks in taking each man more vvives is abominable, and of thoſe in the Magors Countrey, vvhere they are ſaid to have but one vvife in a family amongſt all the brethren, and if any preſume to do ſo amongſt us, it is vvell enacted, that he ſhall be put to death, as a profeſſed adulterer, and a juſtifier of ſo foul a ſin. And let no man plead the example of Theodoſius here, vvho took unto his vvife Eudoxia another Juſtina upon his vvifes urging him, and thereupon made a lavv, that it ſhould be lavvfull for others to do the like, for even the beſt have had their imperfections, and haply he erred thus for vvant of better information, this point being not ſo throughly conſidered of in theſe dayes.

Maimony.

1 Cor 7. 1.

And hitherto of the degrees of kindred forbidden, if any man ſhall extend them further, making any degree beyond theſe unlawfull, or diſpenſing with any of theſe, that marriages may be made, or ſtand by ſuch diſpenſings, notwithſtanding the expreſſe Word of God to the contrary, he ſhall be judged, as adding to or taking away from the Word of God: wherefore the Councell of Trent hath done very preſumptuouſly in extending decrees againſt marrying with kindred by conſanguinity to the ſeventh degree, and the Popiſh Canons, which make affinity ſpirituall by baptiſme and confirmation between Godfathers and Godmothers together, as Bellarmine ſheweth. Again the ſame Trent-Councell decreeth, that the Church can diſpenſe with ſome of the degrees prohibited, Levit. 18. becauſe they are judicials of Moſes. But they have been already proved to be according to the Law of nature, and confirmed in the New Teſtament, and therefore as morals. But for prohibiting marriages to the ſeven degree are the Ethiopick Churches alſo, and in a Councel at Wormes it was decreed, that no Chriſtian ſhould marry with his kindred as long any rememberance of kindred laſted; but theſe are exceſſes, beyond that which is written, and therefore dangerous.

Leu. 18.

Concil. Trident. Seſſ. 24. c. 3.
Bellar. Trident. Seſſ. 24. c. 3.

Bellar. lib. 1. de matrimon. c. 24.
Danian. Agnes Confeſſ. fid. Judæum ad. 43.
Conc. Worm. c. 32. uſque dum generatio recordatur.

Of marrying more Wives ſucceſſively.

Zona. in Leo.
Hieron. in Jovinian. Epiſt. 11.

Others again there have been, that have taught it unlawfull to marry more wives ſucceſſively, as one being dead to take another, as Tertullian and Novatus, and Nicolas Biſhop of Conſtantinople, who cenſured Leo the Emperour becauſe he had married the fourth wife ſucceſſively. And Jerom inveighed much againſt ſecond marriages, calling them honeſta adulteria. And in diſgrace hereof he telleth of a couple, that married together in Rome, whereof the one, that is, the woman had then had 21 husbands, and the man 20 Wives, and therefore he out-living her and marrying again, a great triumph was made by the young gallants of Rome, becauſe the man had now gotten the victory. Indeed to be ſo carried by the fleſh, as to paſſe on ſuddenly from one marriage to another ſo ſoon as the husband or wife is dead.

dead, if it be but to the taking of the ſecond or third, ſtandeth not with Chriſtian modeſty, and therefore more continency is to be enſued by every one, but for any ſimply to condemn the marrying of another, when the firſt is dead, is to take from the Word of God, Rom. 7. 1. &c. 1 Cor. 7. Touching the marrying of brothers or ſiſters children together, although this be not expreſly forbidden, whereupon it may ſeem not unlawfull; yet many Councels have decreed againſt it, as Concil. Agathenſ. c. 61. Epaunenſ. c. 30. Aurelianenſ. 3. c 10. Antiſiodor c. 31. Arelatenſ. c. 11. Ambroſe to Paternus, diſſwading him from marrying his ſon and neece together ſaith, It is againſt the Law of God. Auguſtine, although he ſaith not ſo, yet he hath theſe words, Who doubteth, but that the marriages of cozen Germans are more honeſtly forbidden in theſe times? Theodoſius made a Law againſt it, which Ambroſe alſo urgeth, and ſaith, Theſe marriages are forbidden in nature. And Willet goeth yet further, affirming that all Churches in Chriſtendom are againſt theſe marriages, for the rules of the Canon Law touching marriages are allowed by the reformed Churches. And Calvin, that ſpeaketh moſt favourably herein, ſaith, that they are inconvenient, becauſe by long uſe and cuſtome they have been interdicted, and a regard muſt be had of giving offence. Reaſons againſt this marrying are 1 As far degrees are forbidden in other caſes, as of marrying with the Uncles wife, and how much further is the Uncles daughter, then the Uncles wife? 2 A mans daughter is his nakedneſſe, as verſ. 10. and the nakedneſſe of thy Uncle thou maiſt not uncover, v. 14. it is there indeed expounded of his wife, but ſhe is one of his nakedneſſes, and by verſ 10. we may gather, that his daughter is another, for the daughter is as the fathers own fleſh. 3 The generall prohibition, verſ. 6. None ſhall come near any of his near kindred, maketh againſt ſuch marriages, ſeeing cozen, Germans are moſt near, being as it were brothers and ſiſters, as in the Hebrew phraſe they are commonly called. Laſtly, for the marrying of the Uncle with the neece, although it hath been ſhewed to be unlawfull, yet the Romaniſts approve it, as Cajetan, Lorinus, &c. and it is commonly practiſed betwixt the Kings of Spain and the houſe of Auſtria, and Othoniels example is urged, who married his brother Calebs daughter. But Caleb was not brother German to Othoniel, but he is called his brother, becauſe they two were brothers children.

The marrying of Coſen germans together. Ambroſ. Epiſt. 66. Auguſt. de Civit. lib. 15. c. 16. Quis dubitat, honeſtiùs hoc tempore prohibita eſſe conſobrinarum connubia. Willet. Confeſ. Saxon. artic. 18. Calvin.

The uncles marrying the neece. Cajetan. Lorinus. Judges 1. 33. Joſhua 14. 6.

Here approaching to a woman in her diſeaſe is forbidden, and adultery with another mans wife: of the firſt of which ſee before, Chap. 12. and 15. and of the other upon the ſeven Commandement. For the puniſhment of both theſe, ſee Chap 20. 10, 18. And by this Law the womans own husband is forbidden at this time to approach unto her. But before I proceed any further, I will ſhew, to what myſtery the Lawes againſt marriages with kinred are drawn by Heſychius. In that the Lord ſaith twice in way of preface to theſe Lawes, I am the Lord thy God, hereby is intimated, that they have a double underſtanding. Wherefore beſides the ſenſe already given, here it is myſtically forbidden to uncover the ſhame of any, that be neer unto us by divulging their ſins, becauſe we muſt rather reſtore them that are faln by the ſpirit of meekneſſe, and to do otherwiſe is with Ham to uncover our fathers nakedneſſe, or to mock at it. And there be ten degrees nominated, to intimate the ten Commandements, all which he breaketh, that ſpeaketh of his ſins that is neer to him to his ſhame, becauſe this is againſt love, and love is the fulfilling of the Law. And in particular the forbidding of marrying a woman and her ſiſter during her life, is myſtically a forbidding of joyning to Judaiſme Chriſtianity; the Law of Ceremonies muſt be dead to all that will imbrace the Chriſtian Religion rightly.

Verſe 19, 20

The Myſtery of the Marriages forbidden. Heſychius. Gal. 6. 1.

Thou ſhalt not let any of thy ſeed to paſſe through the fire to Molech, &c. The word Molech, or Moloch, Amos 5. 26. or Milcom, 1 King. 11. 5, 7. ſeemeth to come of Melech ſignifying a King, and the Septuagint render it ἀρχὼν, a Prince. It was the Idol of the Ammonites, to the worſhipping of which the Iſraelites fell afterwards, notwithſtanding this prohibition, as they are charged charged in the places before named. Some think it was the image of Mercury, the meſſenger of the gods, ſome of Saturne, the higheſt of the Planets; ſome of Jupiter, and ſome of the Sun, which is the king of the Planets, upon which I have touched, Act. 7.43. It was the ſame moſt probably, which is alſo called Baal, ſo often ſpoken of, for to Baal they offered their children, Jer. 19,5.*c.*7.31.*c.*32 35. It was an image with a ſtone in the forehead of it, like a Star, whereupon Amos ſpeaketh of a Star, that they worſhipped. In an Hebrew Comment called Jalcut upon *Jer.*7. it is thus deſcribed: It had the face of a bullock, and the hands of a man opened to receive ſomewhat, and within it was hollow, and under the hollow of it fire was put, till it was made burning hot, then the Prieſt took the ſon offered, and put him into his hands, and that the cry of him burning there might not be heard, they did beat up tabers, and thereupon the place where this idol ſtood, was called Tophet from toph a taber. For whereas all other idols were ſet up in the City, this ſtood without in Tophet in the valley of Benhinnom. And to Molechs Temple there were ſeven chappels, into the firſt of which he came that brought a dove for an offering, into the ſecond he that brought a Lamb, into the third he that brought a ram, into the fourth a calfe, into the fifth a bullock, into the ſixt an ox, and into the ſeventh he that brought his ſon. That whereby they were moved to this, was a ſuperſtitious opinion, that they and all the reſt of their children ſhould proſper the better, if they ſacrificed one thus.

Verſe 21.

Jalcut. R. Solom. ſaith, this image was of braſſe ſtanding without the gates of Jeruſalem in the valley of Hinnom. Jeremy 19.5.

And not onely the Ammonites did thus offer their children to idols, but the Carthaginians ſacrificed the beſt of their ſonnes to Saturn, and the Phœnicians did likevviſe. And amongſt the Africans there vvas an image of braſſe made to Saturn, to vvhom they burnt their children, and Ludovicus Vives, that vvriteth this, ſaith, in his time there was an image in an Iſland nevvly diſcovered, to which they did likewiſe humane ſacrifices, and to this it is alluded, *Mich.*6.7. The Devil that delighteth in bloodſhed, being a murtherer from the beginning, taught them to abuſe that place touching Abrahams being commanded to offer up his ſon Iſaac in ſacrifice, for a ground of this abominable and moſt bloody ſuperſtition. But here not burning, but cauſing their ſeed to paſſe through the fire is ſpoken of, and again, Deut. 18.10. where for ſeed in way of explanation of this are ſons and daughters, but burning of them is alſo ſpoken of, 2 *Chron.*28.3. *Ierem.*7.31. *Ierem.*19.5. *Pſal.*106.37,38. And as ſome are ſaid to have burned their ſons and daughters, ſo ſome to have cauſed them to paſſe through the fire, 2 *King.*11.3. 2 King. 23.10. Whereupon beſides the burning of them in the hands of Molech before ſpoken of, the Rabbins ſpeak of another practice of ſome; yea they deny any ſuch burning to have been to Molech, affirming, that ſuch as burnt their children, burnt them to other idols, and to Molech they onely made them to paſs through the fire, which was thus: The father brought his ſon to the prieſts, and they put him into the fathers hand to lead him through a great fire there kindled by them, and he led him upon his feet through the midſt of the flame from one ſide to the other, which how it could be without burning yet I cannot ſee. Cajetan and others are wide here, who by ſeed underſtand not their children, but the ſeed of generation comming from them, for Moſes himſelfe expoundeth it, Deut. 18.10. If it ſhall ſeem unfit to bring in this touching idolatry here; unleſſe in ſuch a ſenſe it is very fit, ſaith Heſychius, that adultery being impugned before, now the ſpirituall adultery ſhould be ſpoken againſt, which is idolatry, and by ſeed he myſtically underſtandeth our thoughts and actions, which we muſt not give to idolatry by covetouſneſſe. Neither ſhalt thou prophane the name of thy God. As the name of God is ſanctified by ſuffering death rather then going from God to idols, as by Ananias, Azarias, and Miſael, ſo it is ſaid to be prophaned, when for fear of death any go from him after idols; ſo Maimony. But prophaning of the Name of God is put here for any abuſing of the Word or ſervice inſtituted by *Diodo. Sicul. lib.*20. *Euſeb. de præparat. Evang. l.*4 *Vives in Auguſt. Civit. l.*7. *c.*27. Gen.22.

Maimony Treatiſe of Idolatry, *Ch.*6.*S.*3.

Cajetan.

Heſychius.

Maimony. Toſtatus. Tyranus.

by God to the honour of his name, to idolatry, and therefore this clause is properly added here after the idolatry with Molech forbidden, but Hesychius applieth it generally to all the lawes hitherto set down in this Chapter, and indeed by such wickednesses amongst his people Gods Name is blasphemed, but it doth more properly belong to this particular law against idolatry.

Hesychius. Rom.2.24.

Verse 22.

Thou shalt not lie with mankinde as with womankinde. This was the sin of Sodom, *Gen.*19. and excludeth out of the Kingdom of heaven, 1 *Cor.*6.9,10. a sin coming from a reprobate sense, *Rom.*1. and to be punished with stoning to death, *Levit.*20.13. And yet many of the heathen followed it, yea the wisest amongst them, as Socrates, Solon, Zeno, Minos, Radamanthus, and Emperours, Nero, Vespasian, Caligula, Trajan, Vitellius, Julius, and Augustus Cæsar, and Adrian, who made Antinous his Minion a god. Rupertus thinketh that herein lay the evill report of his brethren brought by Joseph to his father. Of this also read, 2 *Machab.*4.10. and this is said by Jude to be a going after other flesh. Emstuosus a Bishop, saith Lorinus, to prevent such unnaturall lusts, made this lavv, If any Clergy man or Monke be found but kissing of young boyes, let him be made bald, and spit upon by all, and openly beaten and bound with iron chains six moneths. Thus he. But some of their holy Fathers of Rome contrarivvise are reported to have been most notorious for this sin, and for tolerating it, as Paul 2. who whilest he was in acting this sin, was killed of the Devil; and Julius 3, who used Innocentius thus, and for a revvard made him a Cardinall, and Sixtus 4 allowed the Cardinals this pleasure for the three hot moneths of the year.

willet. Rupertus. Gen 37. Jud. Epist.v.7. Lorinus. Decalvatus opprobrio pateat, & omnium spectamentis, publicè verberetur, & vinculis arctetur sexeis per 6 menses. Papa Pharisaizans.

Verse 23.

Thou shalt not lie with any beast, &c. This is a most abominable sin, and yet such is the wickednesse of men and women, as that some have offended this way, as Mahomet, who is said, being refused by a Saracen woman, to have lien with an asse; and the Hebrews say the like of Balaam with his asse; Plutarch writeth of a boy begotten by a man of a mare, and of a girle by a man of an asse, and Ælianus telleth the like of a man and a goat. Women also have prostituted themselves to beasts, Ælianus telleth of an ape that got a childe of a woman, and Olaus Magnus of a bare begetting a childe of a woman, of whom a great family came in Denmark, called Ursi, &c. For the punishment, see *Chap.*20.16. and before, *Exod.*22.19.

Bonfin.lib.3. Plutarch paral. *Ælianvar. hist lib.*18 *c.*10.

Verse 24.

Defile not your selves in any of these things, &c. By these things, the Hebrevvs understanding the degrees before prohibited, say, that by tradition they have learned, that 20 degrees more are forbidden by the like reason. 1 The mothers mother, and her mother, &c. vvithout end. 2 The mothers fathers mother. 3 The fathers mother, and her mother vvithout end. 4 His fathers fathers mother. 5 The vvife of the fathers father, &c. vvithout end. 6 The vvife of the mothers father. 7 The vvife of the fathers brother. 8 The vvife of the mothers brother. 9 His sons daughter in lavv, and her daughter vvithout end. 10 His daughters daughter in lavv. 11 The daughter of his sons daughter. 12 The daughter of his sons son. 13 The daughter of his daughters daughter. 14 The daughter of his daughters son. 15 The daughter of his wives son. 16 The daughter of his wives daughters daughter. 17 The mother of his wives fathers mother. 18 The mother of his wives mothers father. 19 The mother of his wives mothers mother. 20 The mother of his wives fathers father. Thus Maimony, neither do others dissent herefrom, but hold, that in the line ascendent and descendent, that is, betwixt children, and fathers, and mothers marriages are unlawfull in infinitum, in the lines collaterall, as is expresly forbidden onely. Or by analogy in such degrees, as are forbidden to some, in the same they are forbidden to others. But by all these things, here not onely marriages prohibited are meant, but also other foul sins beforementioned also in this Chapter. For in all these the Nations are defiled, &c. The Lord here speaketh of the inhabitants of Canaan, as already cast out for defiling themselves in these things for the certainty of it, and hereby warneth his people, that they commit not the like abominations.

*Maimony in Isbath. c.*1.

Verse 25. And the land is defiled, and I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, &c. As the inhabitants, so the land is said to be defiled, because in fleshly uncleannesses filthinesse commeth forth in the land, and in idolatries there is pollution by images set up, as in murthers by blood impiously spilt upon the ground: for these are the three sins chiefly, which are said any where to defile the land. And where such wickednesses are committed, the land is sick as it were of the inhabitants that do them, it reeleth as over-burthened, and as a drunken man over-laden with wine which maketh him reel to and fro; finally, spueth: so such a land spueth out the inhabitants, casteth them out, as being much eased, when it is disburthened of them. And as the Canaanites were loathed and spued out by that land for their sins, so were the Jews afterwards, 2 King. 17. 18. 2 Chron. 36. 21. Whereby we may see how odious sinners are, seeing the very senslesse earth cannot brook them, but spueth them out.

Esay 24. 20.

Note.

Verse 26, 27
Verse 28, 29
Verse 30. Here and forth on to the end of the Chapter the charge of keeping these lawes is inculcated both by the Israelites and strangers amongst them, they being threatened with the like spuing out that transgressed, or cutting off, if they were but some particulars.

CHAP. XIX.

Verse 2. Brentius. YE shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy. The Lord having hitherto delivered sundry lawes both in this Book and in Exod. now repeateth divers of them, adding some further explanation, and both for a conclusion of the foregoing lawes against bodily uncleannesses, addeth these words, Be ye holy, as I am holy, and as a preparative to the lawes to be further inculcated here. As the Lord our God is, so must we be both in body and soul, that we may be acceptable before him, and our holinesse standeth in refreining from the sins by his lawes forbidden, which as filthinesse make us impure, and in doing the good commanded. See the same urged before, Levit. 11. 44. 1 Pet. 1. 14, 15, 16. But such a pitch of holinesse is propounded, as we can by no means attein unto, that we might be humbled for our failings, and flee to Christ for perfect holinesse by faith alone. The Papists, saith Brentius, hereupon speak against marriage in spirituall persons, as if being married they could not be holy, and so fit to minister so neer about the Lord: but they seem herein little to attend to this, that these words are not spoken to the priests, but to the Congregation of the children of Israel, so that by this reason marriage should be unlawfull for all Christian people, which they would be ashamed to hold.

Note.

Verse 3. Maimony of Rebels, Chap. 6 Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my Sabbaths, &c. The Rabbins note, that as we are commanded to honour God, Prov. 3. 9. and to fear God, Deut. 6. 13. and he that blasphemeth God is stoned to death, so we are commanded to honour father and mother, and to fear mother and father, and he that curseth father or mother shall be stoned to death, Exod. 21. 17. to shew, that these things are as much stood upon towards parents, as towards the Lord. But in speaking of honour, the father is named first; of fear, the mother, to shew, that honour and fear are alike to be given unto them both. And to fear, is not to stand or sit in his place, or to oppose her words, or to carp at them, or to call him by his name, but alwayes, whether he be alive or dead, to intitle him Sir, my Lord, or my Father; so Maimony, and certainly all due reverence is here meant, and that not only outward, but inward of the heart. Some say the mother is placed first, because commonly least feared, and some because the childe is first under the mother, and therefore according to that the mother is first named, as under whose government the childe first is. But why is this charge given here? Answ. It cometh most aptly in after the lawes against incest, Chap. 18. because by incest it is most transgressed against the reverence due to parents. But here is together added added another precept, keep my Sabbaths, why is this so? Some say, because parents instructed their children chiefly upon the Sabbaths. Some that the placing of this charge touching Sabbaths here is with reference to that which followeth, containing precepts about the worship of God, because this onely is to be attended upon the Lords Sabbaths. Lastly, some respecting that which followeth also, because divers sins are forbidden, that the Lord in giving a charge of his Sabbaths, and then forbidding these sins, intimated, that the true Sabbath-keeping is to rest from sin, the work of the flesh. By Sabbaths are meant the seventh day, and others, *Exod.*23. and *Levit.*16. for which he speaketh in the plurall number.

Vatablus. Oleaster. Lorinus. Quest.

Quest. Pelican. Calvin.

Hesychius.

Turn not to idols, neither make any molten gods, &c. For idols Hebr. is Elilim, things of nought, as the word is used, Job 13.4. *Jerem.*14.14. *Esa.*2.20. And according to this the Apostle saith, An idol is nothing. Of this see before, *Exod.*20.23. In that it is said, Turn not, the Rabbins note, that it is unlawfull to look attentively upon an image; and they say further, that as idolatry, so to entertain a thought in the heart contrary to any fundamentall point of the Law is here forbidden. And they are aptly forbidden to turn to idols, because they had served them before.

Verse 4.

1 Cor.8.4. Maimony of Idolatry, Ch.2.

If ye offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings to the Lord, ye shall offer it at your own will, &c. The words translated, at your own will, may otherwise be rendered, for your favourable acceptation, as Solomon Jarchi noteth, and Cazchuni following the former, alloweth of this also, and if thus, then the meaning is, offer and eat it so, as that ye may be favourably accepted, if otherwise then the meaning is, offer it willingly as your heart moveth you, and not being drawn on by others for shame, because ye see them do thus, but it cometh grudgingly from you; what peace-offerings are here meant, which must be eaten before the third day, see before, *Levit.*7.18,19. where both the reason of this charge is laid down, and why it must be burnt that remained to the third day. Touching the punishment of him that transgressed herein, he should not be accepted, this act of his should be abominable, and he should bear his iniquity, all this is also added, *Levit.*7.19. But here further it is said, that he should be cut off, which was before wanting, and therefore to set down the punishment, the same Lavv is here again repeated.

Verse 5.

Sol. Iarchi. Cazchuni.

Verse 6.

Verse 7,8.

Lyranus.

And when ye reap your harvest, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, &c. This is onely a generall precept for the good of the poor, but hovv much in each field must be left, and vvhat is to be done if none be left, &c. is not here determined; but the Rabbins speak well hereupon thus, If any be left standing at the end of the field, although it be but one ear, the Law is fulfilled, but it hath been thought fit by them, that the sixtieth part be left at the least, and if the field be little, because this will be too small a matter for many poor to come together for, they would have more left, and so in other fields, as Gods blessing upon the crop hath been the more, and the poor who are to gather it, are the more. Again, they say, that it must not be left in one field for two, but a corner in the end of each field must be left. 3 If divers grains be sowen in one field, then there must be one corne of each grain left, but not for having two threshing-floors in the same field, where onely one kinde of grain groweth. 4 They set three times of the day, in which the poor should come for their corner, either in the morning, at midday, or at the hour of the evening-sacrifice, and the corner is alwayes at the end of the field, that the poor may knovv when and vvhither to come, and if any come at other times, they are not suffered to gather till the hour appointed, that all might partake alike. 5 If any man reapt his corn and left none, he must part out some for the poor in the sheaf, or being ground, in bread, and if fire burnt it before this parting, he must be beaten, because he had transgressed the Lavv. Neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest, that is, the ears of corn which fall avvay in the reaping, as the Septuagint render it. But here the Rabbins limit it thus, if it be but an ear or two

Verse 9.

Maimony in Mattanoth gnanijim, Ch.1.

that fall together, it is gleaning for the poor, and the ovvner may not gather it; but if three ears, it is the owners, and if any ear be left ſtanding, unleſſe it ſtandeth ſo high and ſo near to the ſtanding-corn, as that it may be reaped together, it muſt not be gathered, but if ſo, it may. If the owners corn be ſcattered by the winde amongſt the gleanings, it is eſtimated hovv much was for the gleaning, and the other being taken away again, that is left for the poor. If any left no gleanings, the ſame order was obſerved that was about the corners of the fields. The Vulgar Latine for theſe words, Thou ſhalt not wholly reap the corners, have theſe, Thou ſhalt not ſhear it down to the ground, as if the ſtraw were appointed to be left in part for the poor, but erroneouſly, becauſe it is not the ſtravv, but the corn, vvhich God would hav e left for the poor. Beſides the corners and gleanings ſpoken of here, and *Levit.*23.2. that which is forgotten and left behinde alſo is ſpoken of as belonging to the poor, *Deut.*24.19. and *Deut.*23.24. there is a law for a man to go into a vineyard, or corn-field of his neighbour, and to eat his fill, but not to carry any away. And alike law was made by Juſtinian, that he which vvent into his neighbours vineyard or orchard ſhould be free, but if to ſteal and carry avvay, he ſhould be beaten, and have his garments taken from him. From this lavv it is to be excepted, which is here ſet dovvn touching the gleanings and corners left, which might be carried away. By the equity of this law it appeareth, that the poor ſhould partake with the rich in their harveſt, as they do every where at this day, although not fully according to this judiciall law of the Jews, which tieth not other nations, but onely in the equity thereof. It is an injury then in any to keep out the poor, and not to ſuffer them to glean in their fields, and if the poor abuſe this liberty, where it is granted them, to ſtealing, they are worthy to be well puniſhed for it. The examples of Piſiſtratus and Cimon herein were ſingular, for they had no keepers for their orchards and fields. And Pericles would have all men to have free acceſſe to partake of his fruits: and Anaxagoras left one paſture for other mens cattell to feed upon. O what goodneſſe and charity was here in Heathen men, for the condemning of the churliſh and hard-hearted now!

Vulg. Latin.

Juſtinian. Lex Juſtic. T 4. l 9.

Note.

Theopompus l.21. Plutarch in Pericli.

Verſe 10. Thou ſhalt not glean thy vineyard, nor gather every grape, but leave them for the poor, the ſtranger, &c. For theſe words, Thou ſhalt not glean thy vineyard, Hebr. is לא תעולל: Thou ſhalt not gather the ſingle grapes, for עוללות, are ſingle grapes, *Eſa.*24.13. *Obad. verſ.*5. and not cluſters, which are ſet forth by another word, *Mich.*7.1. and for theſe words, nor gather every grape, Hebr. פרט לא תלקט, Thou ſhalt not gather the grapes that are broken off. The Chaldee rendereth it, Nithra, berries broken off, and the Septuagint, Rogas, of the like ſignification. The Hebrews deſcribe the ſingle grapes thus, they are little cluſters with grapes not joyned one upon another, but diſſevered, ſo that they touch not, being called עולל, by a diminutive, becauſe they are to other cluſters, as a childe is to a man, and all ſingle berries are meant hereby, ſo that if a vineyard beareth none but ſuch, they all belong to the poor. But if a branch with a cluſter hath ſingle grapes on the top, ſo that they are gathered together with the cluſter, they are the owners. And for the grapes broken off, they ſay one or two onely falling off are meant, and if three fall together, the owner may take them, but not if they fall to the ground, although it be half a cluſter, or an whole cluſter, neither may he hold a basket under to receive them, for this were to rob the poor; ſo that it ſeemeth, that their falling may be prevented onely with their hands, and not otherwiſe. But theſe, as that before of three ears of corn falling together, are curioſities of the Rabbins. *Dent.*24.20. beſides theſe laws about corn-fields and vineyards, it is ordained, that the Olive-tree muſt not be beaten twice over, but ſome muſt be left for the poor.

Maimony in Mattamoth, Guan.c 4.

From hence the Hebrewes alſo gather, that not onely of theſe increaſes nominated, but of al other growing things, that grow out of the ground yielding ſuſtenance for mans life, the Lord would have ſome left for the poor, as of Almonds, Almonds, Nuts, Pomegranates and Dates, &c. and onyons and garlick, &c. becauſe they are as harveſt, and are gathered and brought in for proviſion, a corner muſt be left, but not of hearbs, which are not thus uſed. And therefore ſumming up the parts of the poor, they ſay, they muſt have four from the vineyard, the ſingle grapes, the broken off, the corner, and that which was forgotten; three from the field of corn, the gleanings, the corner, and the forgotten; and two from trees, the corner and the forgotten. But becauſe it is ſaid, thou ſhalt leave them, a poor man may not come to take them, till they be left him by the owner: being once left, the poor may come and take them even againſt the owners will. But that which remaineth, when the poor have done gathering, any man may take, for they are not commanded to be left for the beaſts, or birds. The poor they alſo define to be ſuch, as are not worth 200 zuzims, that is, 50 ſhekels of ſilver, and if he hath ſo much, but it is pawned to a creditour, or is his wives dowry, he is poor, and may come. And the ſtranger they define to be a Proſylite, one of the true Religion, yet heathens that are poor, are not withheld from them. And ſo great is their care, that the poor might have them without all fraud, as that if a man had ſanctified his field or vineyard to the Lord, yet the poor muſt have his part, and in every thing, the poors part muſt be left before the firſt fruits, or tithes due to the prieſts and Levites, and before the ſecond tithe of the third year, with which the owner and his might feaſt before the Lord. And of this tithe alſo the poor muſt partake, Deut. 14.28. whereby we may ſee, what a care the Lord hath alwayes had of the poor, that we may be ſtirred up to the more charity towards them. He could without the rich have provided for them if it had ſo pleaſed him, but he ordered it thus for the good of the rich, who may by this means lay up for themſelves a treaſure in heaven. Myſtically ſaith Heſychius by the field we may underſtand the world, and by the vineyard the Jewiſh Church. In bidding that they ſhould leave corners, &c. for the poor and ſtrangers, is meant the leaving of the myſtical things in the Law touching Chriſt to be expounded by Chriſtian doctours, the Jewiſh expounding onely the morall Lawes, for we Chriſtians were ſtrangers and poor. And for the ſingle grapes of the vineyard, they were the Prophets and other holy men amongſt the Jews, which were very rare, even as ſingle grapes, their leaving of them for the ſtranger did ſet forth, that we Chriſtians of the Gentiles ſhould moſt honour them and make beſt account of them, as being ours in their faith and Religion, and not theirs, becauſe they reject and perſecute the faith, for which they ſtood.

Talmud. Babyl. in Peah, c.8.

Num.18.12,24 Deut.12.17. Note.

The Myſtery. Heſychius. Matth.13. Eſay 5. Epheſ.2.12.

Ye ſhall not ſteal, nor deal falſly, nor lie one to another. Stealing was before forbidden in the eighth Commandement, and lying in the ninth Commandement, but now they are repeated again and put together, becauſe they commonly go together. For he that will ſteal, ſaith Heſychius, will lie, to hide it, yea lying goeth with any kinde of ſin, as Ammon to cover his adulterous intention with Tamar told a lie to his father. And our Engliſh word ſtealing ſeemeth aptly to come of the Greek κλέπτω, to hide, both becauſe he that ſtealeth hideth it by ſecrecie and by lying. The Latin fur ſeemeth to come of fero to carry away. Becauſe it is ſaid in the plurall number, ye ſhall not ſteal, Chazchuni noteth, that he who ſeeth one ſtealing, and diſcovereth him not, is alſo guilty of his ſin. Lying, which is here forbidden, ſaith Maimony, is to be underſtood of denying the thing ſtolne, and another mans goods being in his hands, as Levit.6.2. dealing falſly, of violating Covenants, ſwearing falſly, &c. How theft is to be puniſhed by the divine Law, ſee Exod 21.16. *Exod.*22.1. Amongſt men ſome have held robbing commendable, as the Scythians, and ſome have puniſht it with death, as Draco, and ſome appointed the theefe to be ſacrificed to Ceres, as the twelve tables of the Romans, if he fed or cut up corn in the night.

Verſe 11.

Heſychius. Zach.5.3.

Maimony.

*Gell. lib.*21.c. 1

*Plin. lib.*18.*c.*3.

Thou ſhalt not ſwear by my name falſly, nor prophane it, &c. Becauſe ſtealers and liars and deceitfull perſons are ready alſo to ſwear falſly, this is next for-forbidden here. He ſweareth, ſay the Hebrew canons, by the name of God, that ſweareth either by his proper name, or by any of his ſirnames, as if he ſaith, by him, whoſe name is gracious, &c. Again an execrating is a ſwearing, as if he ſaith, Curſed be he of the Lord, or of him, whoſe name is gracious, and to ſay yea yea, or nay nay, mentioning Gods name alſo, is to ſwear, and promiſe any thing with a mention of God. Of ſwearing falſly alſo they ſay, that he, who hath done thus, although he be beaten for it by the Magiſtrate, and bringeth his ſacrifice to the Prieſt, yet his ſin is not done away, becauſe it is ſaid, the Lord will not hold him guiltleſſe, he muſt therefore, notwithſtanding all this, have his puniſhment from God, becauſe howſoever death is not appointed to be inflicted for it, yet it is a prophanation of the holy name of God, which is greater, then all iniquities, and therefore this is more to be taken heed of, then all tranſgreſſions: wherefore children would be taught by their parents and Schoolmaſters to ſpeak the words of truth without ſwearing leſt they fall into a cuſtom of ſwearing commonly like the heathen. For it is a great good thing for a man not to ſwear at all. For, nor prophane, Hebrew is, and prophane, ſo Junius alſo, as if nothing elſe were meant here, but that falſe ſwearing is a prophaning of Gods holy name: but according to the phraſe uſuall amongſt the Hebrewes, and, is put for, nor, this being another branch of the Law, not to prophane the name of God by light and common ſwearing.

Verſe 12.

Maimony Treatiſe of Oaths, Chap. 2.

Maimony of Oaths, Chap. 12

Junius.

Verſe 13.

Thou ſhalt not defraud or rob thy neighbour, the wages of him, that is hired, ſhall not tarry with thee all night. In robbing a mans neighbour by oppreſſion and wrong it is tranſgreſſed, ſaith Maimony, againſt three prohibitions, for in coveting in the heart he tranſgreſſeth one, in importuning and unceſſant deſiring, two, for it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not covet nor deſire, in robbing and taking by rapine, three; and to rob a man, although but of a farthing, is as much as to take his life from him. And he that taketh not away by open violence, but by fraud, is guilty of the ſame ſin of robbing. For paying wages to the man hired, and not ſuffering his hire to reſt with thee all night, Hebrew it is, his work ſhall not reſt with thee, but the wages of his work is hereby meant, as Job 7. 2. Eſa. 49. 4. See the like precept, Deut. 24. 15. and how this ſin ſhall be puniſhed, Mal. 3. 5. Jam. 5. 1. which yet is not to be underſtood, but againſt his will, his neceſſity requiring it preſently, and the want of it, becauſe he wanteth ſuſtenance, making him to cry to God. By the Law of Plato double was to be paid to him that had not his wages paid him in due time. And Parthen. telleth of Alcynoe the wife of Amphylocus, that ſhe was ſo troubled in minde, becauſe ſhe had defrauded Nicandra of her wages, when ſhe had wrought an whole year with her, that ſhe became mad, and caſt her ſelf headlong into the Sea.

Maimony of robbery, Chap. 1 Deut. 5. 21.

Plato lib. 10. de legibus.

Parthen. in Erat c 27.

Verſe 14.

Thou ſhalt not curſe the deaf, nor put a ſtumbling block before the blinde, but fear thy God. A man may not curſe any man, Rom. 12. 14. but curſing the deaf is ſpecially forbidden, becauſe he cannot hear, ſo that although a man cannot hear to be grieved at it, it is a great ſin to curſe him, he that curſed any man therefore amongſt the Hebrews, was beaten, and if he curſed a Judge, he was twice beaten; if the Prince, thrice; if he curſed himſelf alſo, he was beaten, as if he curſed another man. And unto the deaf the blinde are joyned in the Lords care, a ſtumbling-block muſt not be laid before ſuch, he muſt not be made to go out of the way, Deut. 27. 18. It is againſt reaſon, that the deaf ſhould be curſed or checked for their deafneſſe, becauſe they cannot help it, nor other imperfections that come by reaſon hereof, and as much againſt reaſon is it that the blinde ſhould have a ſtumbling-block laid before him, becauſe he cannot ſee to avoid it, wherefore an apparent injury is herein done to him: ſo Heſychius. Moreover, it is afflictionem addere afflictis: ſo Calvin. And as the deaf and blinde in body, ſo they that are thus in ſoul, becauſe they hear not yet to obey, and ſee not to underſtand, and to be converted, muſt not be curſed or ſcandalized, whereby they ſhould be more hindered from

Maimony.

Exod. 22. 28.

Heſychius. Calvin.

from converſion, but prayed for, and furthered towards repentance and ſaving knowledge, as much as we can. Thus alſo Heſychius and Lyranus. And Solomon Jarchi ſaith hereupon, To him that is blinde in a matter do not give ſuch counſell, as is unmeet for him. If to lay a ſtumbling-block before the bodily blinde to make him fall and hurt his body be a ſinne, then much more to ſcandalize the weak and ignorant to the hurt of their ſouls.

Lyranus.
Solom. Iarchi.
Rom. 14. 13.
Rom. 16. 17.
1 Cor. 8. 9.
Reve. 2. 14.

For the clauſe added, Thou ſhalt fear thy God; this is, becauſe there is no power in the deaf or blinde to help themſelves, or to be avenged, yet for the fear of God, who will take their part, they muſt not be injuried.

Verſe 15.

Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſſe in judgement, thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, &c. From the ſins of private perſons ſpoken againſt before, as ſtealing, ſwearing falſly, curſing, &c. the Lord proceedeth here to the ſins of publick perſons, viz. the Judges, as Heſychius well noteth. Their ſin is to judge unjuſtly, either by reſpecting the perſon of the poor, that is, by being unjuſtly partiall, being ſwayed through favour or pitie to the poor by his tears againſt right, for in this ill ſenſe reſpecting perſons in judgement is alwayes taken, as Deut. 16. 19. Prov. 18. 5. Job 13. 10. Pſal. 58. 3. Jam. 2. 1, 9. although in other caſes it is ſometime ſpoken in a good ſenſe, Gen. 19, 21. 2 King. 3. 14. Lam. 4. 16. Or by honouring the perſon of the rich for favour or reward expected: for in giving judgement no mans perſon muſt be lookt at, but onely the cauſe. If a Judge be ſwayed by reſpect to the poor, injuſtice deceiveth, ſaith Calvin, under the colour of vertue. And as for the mighty, Wilt thou yield any thing, ſaith Heſychius, to the perſon of the mighty, then yield to juſtice, becauſe ſo thou yieldeſt to God who is moſt mighty. If the matter be doubtfull, Ambroſe his rule is to incline to the part of the poor. And in the Emperour Trajans time they commmonly gave ſentence with the poor in doubtfull caſes.

Heſychius.

Calvin. Injuſtitia fallit ſub ſpecie virtutis.
Heſychius.
Amb. of. lib. 2. de offic. c. 24.
Panegyr. Trajan.

Verſe 16.

Thou ſhalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer, nor ſtand againſt the blood of thy neighbour, &c. This may concern a Judge, and therefore is aptly placed here, where judging righteouſly is commanded. For if when divers Judges have ſitten upon a cauſe together, and one of them cometh out and ſaith, I am he that doth acquit or condemn, but my fellowes are againſt me, but what can I do, ſeeing they are more then I? he hath tranſgreſſed againſt this, to ſay thus is a tale-bearing, bewraying ſecrets, Prov. 11. 13. Prov. 20. 19. or Councels, alluding to the ſecrets of the Synedrion, or great Councel of the Jews, ſo Maimony. Yet not onely this, but all tale-bearing is here forbidden. Who is a tale-bearer, ſaith Maimony, but he that is laden with words, and goeth from one to another, and ſaith, Thus ſaid ſuch a one, or thus have I heard of ſuch an one, althongh it be true, he marreth the whole work? In Hebrew a tale-bearer is Rakil, rendered by Aquila, διάβολος, a devill, and ſo the backbiter is called, 2 Tim. 3. 3. 1 Tim. 3. 11. and rightly, becauſe the devill hath his name from accuſing, Revel. 12. 9. Rakil properly ſignifieth a Merchant, but a tale-bearer is called thus, becauſe he as a merchant of words goeth up and down and traffiqueth with them, uttering criminations of others. Although the tale-bearer be not beaten, yet it is a great iniquity, and occaſioneth the killing of many ſouls in Iſrael, ſaith Maimony, for which it is added here, Thou ſhalt not ſtand againſt the blood of thy neighbour: and this is confirmed, Ezek. 22. 9. where tale-bearing for the ſhedding of blood is condemned. The tale-bearing tongue is rendered by the Chaldee, a threefold tongue, Prov. 20. 19. Pſal. 101. 5. Pſal. 140. 12. ſo Targum Hieroſolym. alſo, and the reaſon hereof is given by the wiſe men, ſuch a tongue killeth three, the ſpeaker, the receiver, and him that is ſpoken againſt. The tale-bearer ſtirreth up ſtrife, and from ſtrife cometh bloodſhed, ſo that it is no ſmall but an abominable ſin to be a tale bearer, yea a very devill. And therefore to deterre herefrom the Hebrews refer us to Doeg the Edomite a tale-teller againſt Ahimelech the prieſt, to conſider what befell him. For in that example it appeared notoriouſly to be to the ſhedding of blood, which ſhould make all Chriſtians to abhor from being ſuch.

Maimony in Sanedrin, c. 22. Of raiſing falſe reports, ſee Exod. 23. 1.
Aquila.
1 Kings 10. 15.
Ezech. 27. 15.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.
Targum Hieroſol.
Maimony in Degnoth, c. 7.

1 Sam. 22. 9.
Pſal. 52.

ſuch. And thus theſe words, Thou ſhalt not ſtand againſt the blood of thy neighbour, are expounded alſo, they are added, becauſe tale-bearing tendeth to the ſhedding of blood, and eſpecially to tell any thing in the time of judgement againſt a man, for which he may be unjuſtly condemned: againſt backbiters Auguſtine had this poſie written upon his table.

Si quis amat dictis abſentum rodere famam,
Hanc menſam vetitam noverit eſſe ſibi.

Maimony Treatiſe of Murther, ch. 1.

But Maimony applieth this law alſo to the ſtanding for one purſued for his life, for every one is bound to ſtay the purſuer by this law, and if he cannot otherwiſe, he muſt do it by maiming or killing him, that the purſued may be reſcued. Or in caſe that one is in danger by ſuch as lay wait for him, thou muſt reveal it, if by theeves and robbers, or being in the water ready to drown, thou muſt help him what thou canſt, otherwiſe thou tranſgreſſeſt this law, Thou ſhalt not ſtand againſt the blood of thy neighbour.

Verſe 17.

Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, but rebuke him, and not ſuffer ſin upon him. He that hateth his brother is a murtherer, 1 Joh. 3. 15. wherefore after that law againſt blood this againſt hatred followeth well. And becauſe hatred ariſeth from offences, he commandeth not to hate, but to rebuke for them, as Chriſt afterwards did, Matth. 18. 15. Luk. 17. 3. By a brother he meaneth any other man, becauſe none are to be hated, but loved, yea even our enemies.

Matth. 5. 43.

And hating in the heart is ſpoken of, becauſe a man that maketh a good ſhew outwardly, oft-times hateth in heart; His words are ſmoother then oil, as David ſaith, but war is in his heart; or when he ſaith nothing he hateth in heart, as Abſalom did Ammon his brother.

2 Sam. 13. 22.

The Hebrewes expound it thus; When one man ſinneth againſt another, he muſt not hate him inwardly and keep ſilence, as wicked Abſalom did, but he muſt make it known unto him, and ſay, Why haſt thou done thus to me? And for colouring over inward hatred with fair ſpeeches, Cain may be an example, and Joab towards Abner.

Maimony in Degnoth. c. 6. Gen. 4. 2 Sam 3. 27.

The word tranſlated, rebuke, ſignifieth rebuking with conviction by reaſoning, as Job 13. 3. Eſa. 1. 18. in Hebrew it is, Rebuking thou ſhalt rebuke. And a brother ſinning is to be rebuked, as the Hebrews note, whether his ſin be againſt his brother or againſt God. But he muſt, ſay they, ſpeak unto him alone, and with mildeneſſe, letting him know, that he ſpeaketh not to him but for his good, to bring him to the life of the world to come. If he take it well and reforme, it is well; if not, let him rebuke him the ſecond and third time, and ſo continually, till the ſinner reſiſteth him, and ſaith, I will not hear thee. Rebukes muſt alwayes be private, leſt he that is rebuked be put to ſhame: for it is an odious thing counted amongſt the Hebrews to put an Iſraelite openly to ſhame, inſomuch that they ſay, He that maketh his neighbours face aſhamed publickly, ſhall have none inheritance in the world to come, be the man put to ſhame ſmall or great, and he muſt not call him by a name whereof he is aſhamed. But this is in matters betwixt a man and his neighbour, for if in matters of the God of heaven he convert not ſecretly, he muſt be made aſhamed publickly, and his ſin divulged, and he muſt be reproached and ſet at naught, till he returneth to wel-doing. And this may ſerve partly for a Comment upon that, Matth. 18. 15. but that there after a third admonition in caſe of ſinning againſt a brother, it is ſaid, Tell the Church. Touching theſe words, not ſuffer ſin upon him, are rendered by Maimony, Bear not ſin for him, by ſpeaking harſhly to him, and in publique to put him to ſhame, for this hath been already ſhewed to be a great ſin. The Septuagint alſo and the Chaldee render it thus, and Cazkuni alledging for proof of this reading, Pſal 44. where the like words are uſed, For thy ſake we are killed all the day, &c. ſee the like, Levit 22. 9. Numb. 18. 32. and the Hebrew עליו may well be thus rendered, for him. And he that rebuketh not for ſin becometh himſelf guilty thereof, becauſe one ought to endevour the converſion of another, and therefore not doing

Cazkuni.

ſo,

so, he faileth of his duty, and it is sin in him. To this effect also Gregory saith, He that can amend another, and doth not, maketh himself partaker of his sins. And there is another saying, Qui non vetat peccare, cùm possit, jubet. This reading, Bear not sin for him, is also followed by Borrhæus. But Junius and Tostatus follow the former reading. Calvin, Raise not up a crime of him, referring it to the ninth Commandment, because Nasa, the word here used is to lift or take up, and he severeth the first part of the Verse, as belonging to the former law, Thou shalt not stand up against the blood of thy neighbour, nor so much as hate him in thy heart. And indeed, howsoever we joyn this and the words following by this word, but, yet in Hebrew there is no such conjunction. But be it that they are not joyned, yet both being in one verse, argueth, that not to reprove, but to remember silently offences done, is to hate in the heart. And if any man had rather follow Calvins Exposition upon the last words, the sense will be good any way, but because עליו is, for his sake, I prefer the first exposition, Bear not sin for him. Of partaking of other mens sins, it is also spoken, 1 Tim. 5.22. for against raising a crime against him is the law, v. 16. where going about as a tale-bearer is forbidden.

Ezech. 3.18. Chap. 18 32. according to the old translation.
James 5.20.
Gregor. Moral. l. 33.
Qui emendare potest & negligit participem se facit.
Borrhæus.
Junius.
Tostatus.
Calvin.

Thou shalt not avenge, or bear any grudge, &c. but shalt love thy neighbour as thy self. After the forbidding of hatred for offences, revenge is also forbidden, so likewise, Rom. 12.19. and Prov. 20.22. The Hebrewes are very strict in setting down, what revenge is, for they say, if thy neighbour being entreated yesterday by thee to lend thee an axe, denied thee it, but cometh to borrow one of thee to day, if thou denyest him, because he denied thee, this is revenge, and a great evil. And to this agreeth the description of revenge made by the Lord, Jer. 50.15. Take vengeance on her, as she hath done, do to her. and Psal. 74 for this is to requite evil with evil, contrary to that, Rom. 12.21. Overcome evil with goodnesse, and be not overcome of evil, as he is, that taketh revenge by doing the like forbidden immediately before. A man may avoid the company of a brother, that liveth in sin, for this is commanded, saith Hesychius, 2 Thes. 3.6. but he must not hate him, or seek revenge upon him, for his avoiding of him must be to his good, and not to his hurt, he admonishing him as a brother, vers. 15. And this law against revenge is to be understood of private revenges: in Courts of Justice it is not to be doubted, but that revenge may be sought against malefactours, or wrong-doers, yet not ex livore, out of malice, but ex amore justitiæ, out of the love of justice, as Lyranus speaketh. And according to this is the direction of Hugo upon this place. Seek not revenge personally, but for the common good, if thou beest a private person, or a Judge. And it was a notable saying of Cicero, although I could revenge injuries, yet I had rather forget them. Tostatus here objecteth the permission of revenge upon the shedder of blood by chance, if he could take him out of any of the Cities of revenge; and answereth, that this Law is not contradicted by that, for this the is Law in the Court of conscience, shewing simply what is evil, but that in the judiciall Court, wherein something is permitted to be done, although evil for the hardnesse of mens hearts, as in the Law of divorcements: or bear any grudge, Hebrew לא תטר, thou shalt not keep, that is, what he hath done to thee in memory, whereby thou shouldst be stirred up to revenge; the Chaldee, thou shalt not keep enmity, this is against those, that will not be revenged, but they will never forget injuries. The Hebrewes exemplifie it thus, Simeon cometh to borrow of Levi an axe, or prayeth him to hire an house for him, but he denieth, yet sometime after Levi cometh to intreat the like of Simeon; now if he saith, I will do it, but thou refusedst to do the like for me, I will not deal by thee, as thou hast dealt by me, he transgresseth this Law, because he beareth in minde the injury, forsomuch as he is thus in danger at some time or other to be stirred up to revenge. Thrasibulus made a law amongst the Athenians to the same purpose, and called it νόμον ἀμνησίας, the law of forgetting. And this was revived by Aurelianus and Severus amongst the Romans. And Hesychius.

Lyranus.
Tostatus.
Hugo.
Quæras ultionem communiter, non personaliter.
Cicero.
Injurias etiam si ulcisci possem oblivisci mallem.
Num 35 19,26
Tostatus.
Matth 19.

Maimony in Degnoth, c 7.

Plutarch. in vita Aurelian.

the Emperour Aurelianus was admirable for refraining himſelf from revenge when in the evening certain idle fellowes followed him railing home to his houſe, he did nothing elſe to them therefore, but ſent back a ſervant with them with a light to guide them back again. Tull.Orat.pro Q. Ligar. Cicero ſaith of Julius Cæſar, that he uſed not to forget any thing, but injuries. Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf, this, ſay the Hebrewes, is the great univerſall precept in the law, much like to that of Chriſt, Mat.22.37,40. And therefore although a man be deſpiſed of his neighbour, he muſt not deſpiſe but love him, becauſe he is made after the image of God, and he that loveth his neighbour therefore, loveth the great God himſelf and honoureth him. Rab. Menahem. Another Rabbin ſaith thus, To love his neighbour as himſelf is to ſpeak in his commendation, and to ſpare his goods, as he would his own, and he that honoureth himſelf by the diſhonour of his neighbour, hath none inheritance in the world to come. Maimony. To love a neighbour, as my ſelf, is to rejoyce at his good, ſaith Heſychius, as at mine own: as, is a note of ſimilitude not of equality, for a mans ſelf is the patern, according to the love unto whom, the love muſt be to a neighbour: ſo Burgenſis. By neighbour who is meant, was ſhewed before, verſ.13. i.e. Every man, even an enemy.

Rab.Menahem. Maimony in Degnoth.c 6. Heſychius. Burgenſis.

Verſe 19. Thou ſhalt not let thy cattell gender with a diverſe kinde, thou ſhalt not ſow thy field with mingled ſeed, neither ſhall a garment of linen and woollen come upon thee. The reaſon of theſe prohibitions, as the Hebrewes have it, was firſt, becauſe God in the Creation made every thing after his kinde, and perfect, as it ſhould be for the beſt good of man, but he that cauſeth gendering of divers beaſts, doth, as if he thought that the holy bleſſed God had not perfected whatſoever is needfull, but himſelf would adde more creatures and help in the Creation of the World, and in the mixture of ſeeds he altereth the order of the Creation, when every thing was brought forth apart after his kinde. And therefore the firſt words here uſed by way of preparative to theſe laws, ye ſhall keep my Statutes, are by them expounded of Statutes or bounds, as the word ſignifieth, whereby God bounded the world in the Creation, and theſe bounds, whereſoever they are ſpoken of, are as a Kings decrees, and as the Kings coine, ſo that he which mixeth divers kindes, as a falſifier of the Kings coin: ſo Rab. Menahem. And therefore if any man cauſed his beaſt or any wilde beaſt or fowl to ingender with another kinde, although moſt like unto it, he was beaten, yet they held ſuch cattell, as came of theſe mixtures to be lawfull for uſe, and if of both clean beaſts, for meat alſo. And for ſuch as came of divers kindes, if the dammes of them both were of one kinde, they might gender together, as an he and ſhe-mule, that were both brought forth by aſſes, or mares, but if one came of a mare and the other of an aſſe, it was unlawfull: ſo Maimony. And there might be a reaſon of this alſo taken from the firſt, that ſinned herein, Anah one of the poſterity of Eſau, whom it was impious for an Iſraelite to imitate. Touching the ſowing of a field with divers ſeeds, and Deut.22.9. the ſowing of divers ſeeds in the vineyard, the Hebrewes teach, that not onely the ſowing of divers graines together, but the graffing of one tree into another that is of a divers kinde, is forbidden, becauſe if in a vineyard it may not be ſo, by the like reaſon it might not be ſo in any other kindes of trees. But the ſeeds of trees and grain they ſay may be ſown together, becauſe this is no mixing. And for grains, they ſay, that the mixing of ſuch onely is forbidden, as were for the food of man, not ſeeds for medicine or the like uſe. And if there were any rootes of corn growing in any mans field, where he intended to ſow another grain, he muſt firſt purge the ground of them. And ſuch care was had hereof, that Proclamation was made for it yearly the firſt day of Adar, that is, February, and the 15 day officers were ſent by the Magiſtrates to ſearch. Out of their own land, they held that they might ſow divers kindes; notwithſtanding mixing of divers ſeeds they determine to be, when one peck of wheat is mixed with 23 pecks of barley, for if leſs wheat be mixed with it, then it is not unlawfull.

R. Menahem in Levit.19. Maimony in Kilaim,c.9. Gen.36.24. Maimony in Kilajim,c.1.

For

For garments of linen and woollen, theſe they ſay, are ſuch as be made of ſheeps wooll and flax onely, not of wooll and hemp, or any other thing, if a garment of woollen be ſewen onely with a thred of flax, it is a mixture and unlawfull. But if a man putteth flax and camels hair together, or flax and hemp together, and the greateſt part is camels hair or hemp, if he mixeth this with woollen, it is not the unlawfull mixture, but onely if the greateſt part of the firſt mixture be flax. The word tranſlated linſey-woolſey is שעטנז, which in the Cabala, as Rab. Menahem obſerveth, is turned by tranſpoſing ſome letters into שטן, Satan, and עז, the Idolater, for Satan, one of the high Rulers, they ſay, is clothed with Sagnatnez. The Chaldee rendereth it by the ſame word, the Septuagint Kibdelos, adulterate and imperfect. And the word may have another denomination, from שוז, ſmooth, טוי, thred, and נז, to twiſt, ſo Oleaſter. And the Hebrews held onely the wearing of ſuch garments unlawfull, becauſe this onely is forbidden here, and *Deut.*22.11. ſo that to make them to ſell them, or to uſe them for carpets or hangings was not unlawfull. *Deut.*22.10. plowing with divers kindes, as an ox and an aſſe is alſo forbidden. Such as offended againſt any of theſe laws were puniſhed with beating. Moſt of theſe things may well be received, but if a woollen garment be ſewed onely with a thred of flax, it ſeemeth improbable that it ſhould be linſey-woolſey for this, and I cannot ſee why there ſhould not be the like reaſon of flax and of hemp, ſeeing one is linen as well as the other. But theſe laws being not renewed under the Goſpel binde not us, to whom all things are now lawfull, in reſpect of the uſe of the creature, eſpecially ſeeing this is no where numbered amongſt thoſe precepts, the breach of which is threatened with death, as *Ezech.*18. and *Ezech.*22. For the myſtery of all this (for chiefly for the myſtery theſe laws are made) Heſychius ſaith, to mingle Circumciſion and Baptiſme together is here forbidden by catteil of divers kindes, which muſt not gender together, and to impoſe the yoke of the Law together with the yoke of the Goſpel, the one being heavie and importable, the other eaſie and light, by the Law againſt yoking an ox and an aſſe together. Again, by mixing divers kindes of ſeeds in the field, teaching doctrine divers from that of the Lord, Mark 7.21. is meant, for this is unlawfull. Laſtly, by wearing garments of linſey-woolſey, or putting them on, the putting on of Chriſt is meant, and together of the Devil by idolatry, which is unlawfull: and therefore Theodotion, as he found it in the Hebrew, to make the intent of the Lord more manifeſt, rendered it, Thou ſhalt not put on Satan. This myſtery although I refuſe not, yet whereas Heſychius ſeeketh to overthrow the literall ſenſe, as if it were ridiculous to hold, that the Jews might not ſuffer ſuch gendering of divers cattell together, &c. becauſe they commonly uſed mules, and made garments of wooll and flax, Prov. 30.13. herein I muſt needs go from him, for the making of theſe, and the uſing of them is not here forbidden, but onely the putting on of the one, and the cauſing of the other by confuſed ingenderings, as hath been already touched. Calvin and ſome others will have ſimplicity underſtood here, and that there ſhould be no deceit, which is incident to things mingled, for to go a little from ſimplicity and ſingleneſſe in our dealings, is to contract ſome corruption. Moreover, hereby, ſaith he, is ſhewed that other inventions ſhould not be brought into the worſhip of God, leſt in time they paſſe for parts thereof; and laſtly, that they ſhould not live after the manner of the Heathen, but keep themſelves even in theſe things diſtinguiſht from them, leſt by doing as they did, they ſhould come to be as one people with them, and follow their ſuperſtitions, for which cauſe it is prefixed, ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes, theſe are the cancells or marks, within the compaſſe of which ye muſt keep, and not go over to the Heathen. But S. Paul ſeemeth to allude to this law of cattell, when he biddeth, Be not unequally yoked with Infidels. The Jews making marriages then with the Heathen, and all confuſed conjunctions by inceſt, &c. ſaith Brentius, were hereby forbidden. And divers

Rab. Menahem, עז ſignifieth ſtrong.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

Acts 15. Matth.11.28.

Calvin.

2 Cor.6.14.

Br. [illegible]

ſeeds could not be ſowen together without loſſe, becauſe both the ground and the husbandry muſt differ for divers ſeeds, that they may proſper beſt, whereby was taught, that following divers doctrines is to be avoided, as tending not to edification, but to confuſion. Laſtly, mingled garments were uſed by the Heathen, from whom the Lord would have them diſtinguiſht, as was before ſaid. So Brentius, and moſt rightly. Some, ſaith Calvin, by the firſt law here underſtand chaſtity, by the reſt ſimplicity to be commended unto us. One noteth, that the Egyptians offered beaſts of ſuch confuſed ingenderings to their Idols, as mules, &c.

Willet.

Verſe 20,21

Verſe 22. Whoſoever lieth carnally with a bond-woman, betroathed to an husband, ſhe ſhall be ſcourged, they ſhall not be put to death, &c. Hebr. If a man ſleepeth with a woman by the ſleep of ſeed, and ſhe be a bond-woman. But the tranſlation is according to the ſenſe, but the words נחרפת לאיש, rendered, betroathed to an husband, hath more difficulty in it, for חרף ſignifieth to publiſh or to reproach, whereupon ſome think, that one publikely betroathed is meant, Maimony ſaith, one eſpouſed to an Hebrew ſervant, which eſpouſall yet is not compleat till the time of her liberty, when it was perfected, being in the mean ſeaſon but as the eſpouſals of a girle, that one betroathed is meant, a ſtranger bond to an Hebrew, holdeth alſo Rab. Solomon, Heſychius, Lyranus, Calvin and Pelican. Others expound it of one reproached or infamous, being made ſo by another man, her maſter, or ſome other, as Vatablus, Junius, Cajetan, Oleaſter, and therefore Junius rendereth it, deſpecta cuique; and Brentius, ancilla à viro corrupta, vel viro unita, non ut uxor, ſed ut concubina. And this is followed by Willet, becauſe Deut. 22.23. death is appointed for a puniſhment, if the woman be betroathed; but from the ſame reaſon I think it may be gathered, that one betroathed is meant, becauſe it is ſaid, they ſhall not die: for why is this ſpoken of, but becauſe according to the generall law in this caſe they ſhould be put to death; but when ſhe is a bond-woman that is betroathed, forſomuch as her bondage hindereth a perfect betroathing, as hath been already ſaid, not death, but another puniſhment ſhall be inflicted; for in all other incontinencies puniſhable by ſtripes, as the Hebrews obſerve, both the woman and the man were puniſhed alike, but not in this. For betroathed, the Vulgar Latine hath nubilis, and by a corruption of this word, Heſychius and Toſtatus, non nubilis, but theſe are errours. She ſhall be ſcourged, Hebr. Bikoreth, of Bacar, an ox, her ſcourging is ſet forth by this word, becauſe the whip was made with thongs of an oxes skin, the ſtripes were but fourty at the moſt, Deut. 25.3. and becauſe they would be ſure not to exceed, they gave but thirty and nine, whereupon S. Paul ſpeaketh of his ſtripes, being fourty wanting one. Here although it be plain, that the woman onely ſhould be ſcourged, ſo likewiſe the Chaldee, and the Hebrews, yet Toſtatus and Pelican, &c. refer it to both; but the word being a feminine, proveth the contrary. No ſacrifice is appointed for her, becauſe ſhe is a ſervant, and hath nothing, and haply a ſtranger, not an Iſraelite, but he muſt bring a ram to be ſacrificed for his treſpaſſe: Of this kinde of offering ſee before, Chap. 5.15. and Chap. 6. And hereby was ſhewed, although he had none other puniſhment, that he was worthy of death, but his ram is killed for him, by the bloud of Chriſt he is delivered. Heſychius by the maid-ſervant underſtandeth the Jew eſpouſed to the Law, as to an husband, till Chriſts coming, lying with the Jew is embracing his doctrine without the right underſtanding of the rites of the Law, for the Jew under the Law is as the iſſue of Hagar, in bondage. If any man before Chriſts time did thus joyn with the Jews, although he erred, he ſhould not die, but they ſhall be viſited, for ſo he rendereth the word tranſlated ſcourged, as if hereby were figured out viſiting in mercy at the coming of Chriſt, who as the ram, ſhould be offered to make atonement for him. But of this myſtery let the Reader judge.

Maimony Treatiſe of Wives. Chap. 4.
R. Solomon.
Heſychius.
Lyranus, &c.
Vatablus.
Junius.
Brentius.

R. Suadiah.

2 Cor. 11.24.
Toſtatus.
Pelican.

The Myſtery.
Rom. 7.1.
Gal. 4.24.

Verſe 23,24

Verſe 25. Here they are commanded to count the fruit of the trees planted by them in Canaan uncircumciſed three years, and the fourth year to praiſe God with it, and the fifth year to eat it. The Rabbins upon this law teach, that it holdeth onely in Canaan, not in any other Countrey, and for trees planted by the Hebrews, or by any other for them. The fruits of theſe are ſaid to be uncircumciſed, that is, unclean, and ſo unlawfull to be eaten, as other unclean meats, untill that in the fourth year they had ſanctified. And if any man in three years did eat ſo much as an olive of theſe fruits, he was to be beaten. But in ſpeaking upon this they have ſome over-curious diſtinctions, as if a man planted fruit-bearing trees, not intending them for fruit, but for fencing of his garden, they were not ſubject to this law, or if he intended them for timber, or if at the firſt he planted them for fruit, but by and by changed his minde, intending them for ſuch uſes. But if at any time he intendeth them for fruit, which he firſt planted for other uſes, although three years be paſt, they are not ſanctified till three years fulfilled from the time of that his intention. A tree tranſplanted is ſubject alſo to this law. The firſt day of the moneth Tiſri was counted the beginning of the year for theſe fruits, and this anſwered to our September. For the fourth year, in which the fruit was ſanctified, they alſo hold, that this was by bringing it, or the price of it to Jeruſalem to the Temple, there to eat it to the praiſe of God with the Levite, the ſtranger and the poor, as the ſecond tithe of the third year: or if any man would, he might redeem it by giving the price, and adding a fifth part, as in the law of redeeming tithes, Levit. 27.30. but the fruits of the vineyard the fourth year muſt either not be redeemed, but carried up, and if they were redeemed, the price muſt be carried up to be eaten at the holy place. If the fourth year happened to be in the ſeventh year, which was a year of freedome for all to come and eat in any mans ground, the owners of ſuch trees muſt mark them with clods of earth, that they might not be eaten of till they were redeemed, and all trees within the three years muſt be marked then with potters clay, leſt any ſhould unawares eat thereof: ſo Maimony, and Talmud Babyl. But Aben-Ezra alone will have their ſanctifying to be by giving them the fourth year to the prieſts, as the firſt fruits, Numb. 18.12,13. The fifth year every one might freely eat of his fruits as of other things, and in counting theſe years, they went by the time of their planting, whereby we may gather how great the fruitfulneſſe of that Countrey then was, becauſe amongſt us the fruit of trees, after their planting is little or none, of moſt trees for three years after their planting. If they obſerved duly this law, it is promiſed, that their trees ſhould yield them great increaſe.

Maimony of forbidden meats, Ch. 10

Deut 12.17.

Maimony in Magnaſeſ ſhem. Talmud. Babyl. Aben Ezra.

For the myſtery; Heſychius by fruit-bearing trees underſtandeth men having the Word of God taught amongſt them, but they brought no fruit for God in three ages, ſet forth by three years, that is, 1 From the beginning to David. 2 To the captivity of Babylon. 3 To the time of Chriſts incarnation, but in the forth age, Chriſt being come they were ſanctified, and God was praiſed and glorified for his miracles, and in the fifth of the Apoſtles preaching, fruit was yielded abundantly in every Countrey. But this is farre fetcht, and not ſo probable. Rather the Lord would hereby ſet forth the curſe upon the earth for the ſin of Adam in eating of the forbidden tree, and that all fruits and meats muſt be ſanctified unto us, before we can lawfully eat thereof, and this ſanctifying is by the word and prayer, and when by grace we are ſanctified that eat, becauſe to the impure all things are unclean. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the fruit of trees newly planted is not ſo good but weak, ſmall and unpleaſant; and therefore not fit to be brought unto God, till the fourth year, before which bringing and offering, it was impiety to eat it. Brentius ſaith, that God hereby provided for the good of poſterity, becauſe trees ſuffered to bear fruit the firſt three years do ſoon decay again, but being pruned, and the fruit plucked off, they take the deeper rooting, are the more fruitfull afterwards, and laſt the longer, but the fourth year he would have the fruit ſanctified, that in the fifth they might gather and eat, to lead them hereby to acknowledge all fruits to come of the gift of God. Ly-

Heſychius.

Junius. Calvin.

1 Tim. 4.5. Titus 1.15. Chryſoſt. hom. de Aſcenſ.

Brentius.

Lyranus.

ranus

ranus ſaith, that the Heathen offered their firſt fruits in theſe years unto their gods, wherefore God would have his people in deteſtation of their manners to count them unclean then. But theſe may be morall and naturall reaſons the other before-going the myſticall.

Verſe 26. Ye ſhall not eat any thing with blood, nor uſe inchantment, nor obſerve times. Againſt eating blood, ſee *Chap.*17. The blood muſt all be let out, before that any fleſh be eaten. But this is here again repeated, ſaith Baalhatturim, nor obſerve fortunes, being added, becauſe ſuch as were given to inchantments or fortunes did uſe to eat bread over the murthered body, that the revenger of blood might not purſue them, thus alſo Cazkuni, and the words עיי-דם, by blood, or over blood, maketh this the more probable, and thus underſtood, there is the better coherence of that which followeth in this Verſe with it. But ſome will have nothing elſe but the eating of fleſh, before that all the blood is run out, and thus theſe words are uſed, 1*Sam.*14.33 or a thing ſtrangled, and not having the blood let out in the killing of it, and ſo it will be a different precept from that, *Chap.*17.10. For eating with blood here forbidden, the Septuagint have, Ye ſhall not eat upon the mountains, miſtaking דם, blood, for הרים, mountains. This is indeed a ſin alſo, *Ezech.*18.6. but not here forbidden, but under idolatry. Nor uſe inchantment, Hebrew, מנחשו, of נחש, to conjecture, and therefore Junius rendereth it conjectation, divining by looking upon the entrails of birds or beaſts, or by any accident: Cajetan reſtraineth it to divining by ſerpents, becauſe נחש ſignifieth alſo a ſerpent, but it is more generall, and therefore the Septuagint reſtrein it too much alſo by turning it by οἰωνίζεσθε, to divine by birds. Heathen men, ſaith Willet, divined either by things without life, by unreaſonable creatures, or by humane actions. Things without life were either the earth, divining by which was called Geomantia, or water, Hydromantia, or fire, Pyromantia, or air, Aëromantia, or pictures, for ſo it is thought that Laban uſed to divine by his idols, which Rachel ſtole away. The creatures unreaſonable were either birds flying, the divination whereby was called Auſpicium, or by birds chattering, Augurium, ab avium garritu, or by birds dead, as Ornimantia, the inſpection of the entrails of hens, or by beaſts dead being killed for ſacrifice, by looking into their entrails, and this was called Aruſpicina. Touching men, the divination by their actions was by their ſpeaking, paſſing by or going away, as Heſychius noteth, and by them, dead conſulting with them, as Saul by the witch of Endor with Samuel, this was called Necromantia, or by looking into the entrailes of children, called Pædomantia, as Toſtatus hath it. Now all theſe wayes of divination are unlawfull, and becauſe one word onely is uſed here, whereby it may ſeem that other kindes are not forbidden; many more are alſo uſed, *Deut.*18.10,11. but another word is there put for divination, and this is rendered, as here, Uſe inchantment, but by Junius, Conjector, but it is the word uſed by Joſeph, *Gen.*44. ſaying, Know ye not that ſuch a man as I can divine? of this ſee more, *Exod.*7.8,9. and *Deut.*18.10. Such divinations have been often proved to be vanities, Craſſus was hereby certified that he ſhould have an happy end, but he died ſhamefully neer Euphrates; and Pompey, but he was ſlain in Egypt; and Cæſar, but he was ſlain in the Senate: ſo Cicero, who hereupon derideth divining by birds, ſaying, that the Augurs moderated in matters of life by the crying of Ravens and Jackdawes. And Cyprian, telleth the like of Regulus and Mancinus taken captives, and Paulus ſlain at Cannas going out by their Augurs counſel. Yet moſt highly were theſe wicked Diviners honoured in Rome, where they had a Colledge, and the Magiſtrates and all others were enjoyned to obey them upon pain of death. The reaſon, ſaith Brentius, why the Heathen divined by birds, was becauſe they thought the birds being neereſt unto the gods, as their meſſengers, declared their will by their flying or ſinging, according to that of Ovid.

Baalhatturim.

Cazkuni.

Junius

Cajetan.

Willet.

Gen.31.

Heſychius.
Toſtatus.

Cicero lib.2.de divinat. Corvi & Corvi-culæ cantibus vitæ, conſilium moderantes.
Cyprian.

Brentius.

Sed

Sed nihil iſta juvant, quia linguæ crimen habetis,
Diiq; putant mentes vos aperire ſuas.
Non tamen hoc falſum, nam diis ut proxima quæq; eſt;
Nunc pennis veras, nunc datis ore notas.

Ovid. 1. Feſtor.

But one Meſſolanus a Jew being in the army of the ſucceſſours of Alexander did notably declare the vanity of this: for the whole army ſtanding ſtill, as they were marching at the warning of an Augur: he asked the reaſon; it was anſwered, that they ſtayed to obſerve that bird, and to be directed thereby: but he preſently ſhot the bird, and when they raged at him for it; he ſaid, Ye ſee, that ſhe knew not to fly moſt ſafely for her own life, & how then can ſhe direct us for the beſt? And amongſt the Heathen themſelves there were ſome that ſaw well enough into the vanity of this divination, as Hector, who ſaid, There was no reaſon to go by the flying of birds that want reaſon, for all is, at the diſpoſing of Jupiter, there is one beſt augury, and that is to fight for thy Countrey. Appius Claudius, when the Augurs told him as an evil ſigne that the Pullen would not eat, ſaid, Caſt them into the Sea, and ſo they ſhall drink their fill, if they will not eat, thus ſlighting this divination; and Epaminondas before his firſt Leuctrian victory being warned not to fight, cited this example, and went on and prevailed. All things to come conjectured by birds or beaſts are not here condemn'd, as touching the weather, but touching good or evill events, as if a Crow and a Pie be ſeen on the left hand, and a Raven and Eagle on the right, to hold it a ſigne of good luck. And not onely, as Brentius hath well noted, is ſuch divining here condemned, but from any other thing, wherein there is no reaſon of good or evill to come, as to put on the left ſhoe before the right, which Auguſtus Cæſar held to be a bad ſigne, the falling of the ſalt, the going by of the hart on the right hand, or the fox on the left, &c.

Joſeph. in Flacc. contr. Appion.

Homer. Iliad.

Nor obſerve times: this is the Septuagint render almoſt as the former word, as if by the firſt were meant divining by the chattering of birds; by this, by the flying of birds, but it is תְּעוֹנְנוּ, either of עָנָן, a cloud, divining about the weather being meant by Aſtronomy, or of עוֹנָה, a ſet time, obſerving of times according to our new Tranſlation being meant, as if one day were good and another bad to go about any thing. As the firſt is an uſurpation above the module of a man, becauſe God onely knoweth what ſhall come, ſo this is a derogation from his providence, who can make any day good to ſuch as fear him; and hereby man is drawn from that truſt, and gratitude which he oweth to God for any good.

Ye ſhall not round the corners of your heads, nor marre the corners of your beard, nor make any cuttings in your fleſh, &c. Chap. 21.5. the like law is for the High Prieſt, when any neer to him died; and ſo in this place, in the caſe of mourning for the dead, as is expreſſed, *v.*28. becauſe the Heathen uſed thus to do, the people of God might not do it, and ſo disfigure themſelves out of extremity of ſorrow, as being without hope in reſpect of the dead. The word rendered, round, is תְּקַפֵּו, to compaſſe, as when the head in cutting is polled round about, the hair at the temples and behinde the eares being cut round off; for this is not the ſhaving of the whole head, ſaith Maimony, but of the corners, leaving it like a round diſh, as the Heathen uſed to do, Jerem. 9.26. Chap. 25.23. Chap. 49.32. and the Arabians, ſaith Herodotus, in particular. Marring the beard was by ſhaving it off, as appeareth, Chap. 21.5. for thus alſo the Heathen did, Eſa. 15.2. Jer. 48.37. And if any man offended herein, he was beaten ſo often as he had corners on his head and beard ſhaven off. An exception from this law of not ſhaving is, Chap. 14, touching the leper that muſt be ſhaven for his diſeaſe, and Numb. 8.18. touching the Nazarite, for the ſhaving after the manner of idolaters onely is forbidden here. Upon this it is like, that Davids men having their beards halfe ſhaven, were aſhamed.

Verſe 27,28

Maimony.

Herodot. lib. 3.

Maimony.

2 Sam. 10.4.

Heſychius.

Maimony.

med. Heſychius underſtandeth the prohibition here of nouriſhing locks to the honour of the Devill, or as if they would hereby adde unto the forme wherein God had made them; but herein he is wide from the charge here given, which is not againſt nouriſhing but cutting of the locks round. But this, ſaith Maimony, is not with ſizers to trim the head or beard for decency, but vvith a raſour to ſhave the corners off.

Plutarch in Demoſthen.

For cutting the fleſh and marking it, this was alſo uſed by the Heathen, *Jer.*16.6. who when they had cut a place, would put ſtibium or ink into it, thus marking themſelves to idols: ſo Maimony. And if the beard, according to the ſentence of this law, be marred by ſhaving it off, and likewiſe the head by rounding it, ſo that a man may be aſhamed that hath thus done; (yea it is ſaid of Demoſthenes, that he once ſhaved his beard purpoſely that he might keep in, and ſtudy two or three moneths, becauſe it was a ſhame to be ſeen in that caſe;) it is ſtrange that any ſhould glory in rounding of their heads, and cutting in an affected faſhion their beards, as is the manner of gallants in theſe times. For although this law bindeth not us, yet it ſheweth us what is decent, even touching hair, and what otherwiſe. And if cutting and marking the fleſh be Heatheniſh, what elſe can be thought of thoſe that cut their bodies with whips amongſt the Papiſts, the ſcars whereof remain as marks long after, or of thoſe that cauſe the name of Chriſt, or the ſigne of the Croſſe to be burnt into their hand or arm, as Lorinus ſaith ſome do? For even thus, Toſtatus ſaith, the Heathen with a golden plate uſed to burn the name of their idol into their fleſh, and in the feſtivals of Berecynthia, they gaſhed and cut their fleſh, and ſome of the chief Prieſts ſpared not to cut off their privities to the honour of that idol: as alſo the Scythians are ſaid at the Funerall of their Kings to have uſed to cut off their ears, lanch their arms, and with arrowes to pierce their hands. But this was unnaturall, and an hurting and disfiguring of the body, which God made, and therefore juſtly forbidden, as deteſtable to God: to ſay nothing of the reaſons of this law before yielded, that they might not be like the Heathen, or ſhew to be without hope in reſpect of the dead.

Lorinus.
Toſtatus.

Herodot. lib 4.

Verſe 29.

Do not proſtitute thy daughter to be an whore, &c. The word חל here uſed, ſignifieth to pollute or to make common, and it is not ſtrictly to be underſtood onely that no man ſhould do thus by his daughter, but not by any daughter in Iſrael: ſo Hugo, and according to this it is ſpoken, *Deut.*23.17. And to make her common thus, is not onely by command or counſell, ſaith Heſychius, but by example, when the mother is an whore. Vatablus expoundeth it of ſpirituall whoredome following the Chaldee, but unfitly. This law is put here for further explication of the ſeventh Commandment, upon which ſee more againſt fornication. Amongſt the Cyprians there was a common moſt wicked cuſtome for maids by this means to get their dowry. And amongſt the Locrians ſome uſed to vow when they went to war, if they prevailed, to proſtitute their daughters in the temple of Venus. Yet ſome Heathens ſo deteſted fornication, as that they puniſhed it with death; as an Athenian, who finding his daughter to have been corrupted, ſhut her up in an houſe, and famiſhed her. And Auſidianus a Roman, his daughter being corrupted by Faunius Saturnius, by the treachery of her Schoolmaſter, killed them both.

Hugo.
Heſychius.
Vatablus.

*Juſtin. lib.*18.

*Valer. lib.*6.c.1.

Verſe 30.
See the ſame again, *c.*26.2.

Ye ſhall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my Sanctuary. Of Sabbaths keeping he ſpake before, *v.*3. but repeateth it again here, partly becauſe he forbade whoredome, *v.*29. whereby eſpecially the Sabbaths were prophaned by wicked people being then idle, and committing this ſin: ſo Cajetan, and partly that reverencing the Sanctuary by attending upon the Divine Worſhip there, before omitted, might here be brought in, ſeeing the keeping of the Sabbath ſtandeth chiefly herein: ſo Calvin. The reverencing of the Sanctuary was the reverencing of him that dwelt therein, ſaith Maimony, and this was by not preſuming to come into the mountain of Gods houſe with a ſtaffe in his hand, ſhoes

Cajetan.

Calvin.

Ezech.46.3.

*Maimony in Beth habchirah, c.*7.

shoes on his feet, or any dust, or in his working clothes, or with a bag of money about him. He might not spit in any part of it, but wrap up his spittle in his handkerchief, and not make the house of God a thorowfare, but come in only to worship there: when he had accomplisht his service he went backward by little and little, and then softly sidelong till he was out of the court, and he came and was there with fear and dread, considering that he stood before the Lord, neither might any man sit down there, but Davids house, viz. the kings thereof onely, for whom and for none else there was a seat. And no man might make an house like it, or any other thing like the things therein for reverence to God dwelling there. Compare with this Christs whipping of the buyers and sellers out of the Temple, &c. Joh. 2.14 and his not suffering a vessell to be carried through the Temple, Mark 11.16. and something is said of going right on and not turning, Ezech 46.9. and c. 8.16. This sanctuary was a figure of Christs body, Joh. 2.19.21. and therefore mystically the reverencing of him is here pointed at, Joh. 5.23. Heb. 1.6. Phil. 2.6. And withall we should learn from hence to use more reverence towards our Temples, because whersoever God is in a speciall manner, as he is there by his promise, the place is dreadfull, as Jacob said of Bethel.

The Mystery.

Note.

Gen. 28.

Regard not them, that have familiar spirits, nor seek after wizards to be defiled, &c. This followeth aptly the precept of reverencing the sanctuary, as Cazkuni noteth, because there were the Urim and Thummim to inquire by, and therefore they must not inquire by familiar spirits. The word translated, such as have familiar spirits, is אוֹבוֹת, signifying bottels, because they speak with an hollow voice, as out of a bottell, in Greek they are called ἐγγαστριμύθοι, speakers out of the belly; for as Tertullian saith, a small voice came, as it were from their secret parts, they are also called πύθωνες from uncleannesses, because this spirit, by which they spake was an unclean spirit keeping in corrupt and filthy places, as the word signifieth, such was the Witch of Endor, and the word is of the feminine gender, because women for the most part are such. The word rendered, Wizards signifieth knowers, and they are men that take upon them the like skill, touching secrets, but that they divine by the flying of birds, &c. as was said before. This law is had again, Deut. 18.11. a promise of the Prophet, to whom they should resort, being added, v. 15. that is, of Christ Jesus. The punishment of such is death, Ch. 20.27.

Verse 31.

Cazkuni.

Tertullian.

1 Sam. 28. Acts 16.16.

Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God, &c. By the hoary head the Hebrews understand one of 70 years, and by the old man one of 60. But Targum Jonathan expoundeth the old man, the wise man; the Chaldee, the skilfull in the law, for the learned are to be reverenced, as the aged, and the elders which were Magistrates, Deut. 22. 18 c. 25.7. the not doing of this is threatened for sin, Deut. 28.5. and lamented, Jer. Lament. 5.12. as a great evil in Jerusalem. The honour due to the aged is to rise up, say the Hebrewes, when they come within 4 cubits of thee, and likewise to others here meant, but other reverence in giving them place, and the priority of speech is here intimated also. Never was this law more practised, then in Sparta of Lacedemonia, whereupon Lysander used to say, It is a most honourable house for old age, meaning Sparta; and it grew into a Proverb, It is good onely in Sparta to wax old. So that even the Law of nature taught this Of honouring the aged, Ephraim giveth this reason, because they have served God a long time; Borrhæus this, because old men are often wisest, and can moderate their passions; Hesychius this, because young men growing shall thus be honoured in way of compensation; Plutarch this, because by using to honour old men, parents shall the more readily be honoured. But most generally this, because they represent the ancient of dayes, God, the fear of whom is immediately here next spoken of, as if he had said, in reverencing them, thou shalt reverence God represented by them. Deut. 7.9. Dan. 7.9. But the aged most worthy of honour according to the first reason are the godly aged, a gray head in the way of righteousnesse,

Verse 32.

Targum Jonathan.

Lysander. In Sparta sola expedit senescere.

Ephraim Serm. de timore Dei.

Borrhæus.

Hesychius.

Plutarch. Apothegm.

Prov. 16.31. Prov. 20.29.

neſſe, and yet ſimply the gray head of old men is called their beauty.

Verſe 33,34 If a ſtranger ſojourn with you in your land, ye ſhall not vex him, &c. of this, ſee before, Exod. 22.21. but is again repeated here, that it might be added, he ſhall be as one born in the land, thou ſhalt love him as thy ſelf, verſ. 34. as was ſaid before of a neighbour, verſ. 18. vexing was by objecting to him his former unbelief, and uncircumciſion.

Verſe 35. Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſſe in judgement, in mete-yard, in weight, or in meaſure. Againſt doing unrighteouſneſſe in judgement was, *v.*15. but it is here repeated again, that a law againſt other unrighteous doings betwixt private men in their dealings might be added thereunto. The word tranſlated mete-wand is מדה, a meaſure by the yard or ell; weights were pounds, and the meaſure a veſſell containing ſuch a quantity, a buſhell, peck or the like of things ſold by meaſure, and therefore an Ephah is named and an hin, *verſ.*36. the Ephah being a meaſure of dry things containing a buſhell, and an hin of wet containing 72 Eggs. Concerning weights and meaſures the Hebrewes have theſe rules. 1 They muſt not uſe divers, ſome leſſe, and ſome greater, to buy by the greater, and to ſell by the leſſe. 2 They muſt not keep ſuch, leſt another happen to uſe the falſe. 3 They might not make their weights of lead, iron or other metall, which might ruſt or canker, fret and ſo in time grow leſſe, but of ſtone or glaſſe. 4 Becauſe there might be a deceit in the balances alſo, theſe muſt be juſt and right, *verſ.*36. Laſtly, the Judges appointed officers in every City to go into mens ſhops, and to ſee to theſe things, and if they found any deceit, to puniſh the offender. And as amongſt Gods people of old, ſo amongſt Chriſtians, Theodoſius and Arcadius would have weights and meaſures kept in every City, whereby all others ſhould be tried. Juſtinian in Churches, and that offenders ſhould be beaten ἰσχυρῶς, ſtoutly. The Councell of Mentz impoſed 30 dayes penance with bread and water upon him that uſed falſe weights or meaſures; and they are an abomination to the Lord but a perfect weight is his delight, *Prov.*11.1. Myſtically, Heſychius ſaith, that here is forbidden the weighing and meaſuring of our ſelves and others with divers weights and meaſures our ſelves partially, and them exactly, againſt which ſee ſomewhat, 2 *Cor.*10.12,13.

Maimony.

Theodoſius.

*Juſtinian. Conc. Mentz. de Empt. & Vend. c.*2.

Deut.25.13,14

Heſychius.

CHAP. XX.

Verſe 1,2,3. DIvers Lawes having been hitherto ſet down, in this chapter the puniſhments for offenders againſt them are appointed. And firſt ſuch as ſacrificed their children to Molech, againſt that, *Levit.*18.21. they muſt be ſtoned to death, and God ſaith that he will ſet his face againſt them to cut them off, yea although the people or Magiſtrate connived at it. Now becauſe ſuch heavy mulcts are appointed here for malefactours, ſome, ſaith Brentius, have held, that the old law came not from our gracious God, but ſome god, cruell and truculent, that delighted in bloodſhed. But this is a fond conceit ſeeing without ſuch ſevere puniſhments no Common-wealth can ſtand, as a body with putrefied ſores cannot be made ſound without cutting and lanching. Of the divers wayes of cutting of divers ſorts of malefactours ſee before, *Exod.*21.12. The manner of ſtoning was thus, when the malefactour came within four cubits of the place of execution, he was ſtript out of his clothes, his privities onely being covered and if it were a woman ſhe was ſtript to her ſmock, the place of execution was high, and unto it the malefactour aſcended his hands being tied, and with him the witneſſes, whereof one ſtrook him with a ſtone upon his loines, and the reſt upon his heart, and then all the people ſtoned him: ſo Maimony and Talmud. Babyl. This puniſhment for offending againſt Gods lawes is noted by ſome not to have been ſet down before in giving the lawes, but here apart, becauſe we ſhould obey for love, and not for fear of puniſhment; but if any will not be ſo moved let them fear the puniſhment: and for the like reaſon the ten Commande-

Verſe 4,5.

Brentius.

Maimony in Sanedrim. Talmud Babyl. Irenæus.

ments

ments are set down without punishments annexed. In that corporall punishments are here set down, but none in the Gospel, but onely eternall in hell, yet novv tears and repentance vvill avert this heavy judgement, whereas then they prevailed not. Origen well noteth a great difference betwixt the Law and the Gospel, and that hereby is intimated a continuall expectation now of the day of judgement. Here is but one kinde of idolatry put, viz. with Molech, but all others are understood. And so grievous is this sin, as that if the idolater escapeth the hands of men, yet God threateneth, that he shall not escape his, but he will set his face against him, &c.

Origen. hom. 12 in Levit.

Because he hath given of his seed to Molech to defile my Sanctuary, and to prophane my holy name. Of the prophaning of Gods name see before, Chap. 18. 21. For defiling the Sanctuary by this meanes the idolater is said thus to do, because his offering to idols elsewhere was in effect a professing to hold it unclean and not worthy to have all divine service done therein, thus almost Tostatus. And generally, because idolatry is not without most foul pollution defiling all things about the place, where it is committed, and therefore the Sanctuary also in the midst of them, so Junius. As also, because they that served idols in other places, came sometimes before the Sanctuary to worship, which is a defiling of it. Jer. 7. 9, 10. 2 Cor. 6. 16. The Hebrewes note, that there be 36 sorts of malefactours, which the Lord threateneth to cut off. And Chazkuni expoundeth this case, when he transgresseth without witnesses and evident proof: for how secretly soever this wickednesse be committed, the Lord alone shall be witnesse, Judge and executioner to all such, for he seeth all things, Ezech. 8.

Verse 3.

Tostatus.

Junius.
Levit. 15. 31.
Ainsworth.
Maimony.
Chazkuni.

If others did see and would not, then both he shall be cut off, and his family, and all that go a whoring after him. The Chaldee hath it, he and his helpers, for they that see such wickednesse, and seek not to have it punished, are helpers forwad of it, and accessory. Thus then not onely his particular family, but all Israel for not punishing him, as helpers herein should be cut off. And thus it is threatened, Jerem. 32. 28, 29 and where idolatry was committed, the whole City must be destroyed, Deut. 13. 16. partly that none any way guilty might escape, and partly to shew the greater detestation of idolatry in the Lord, whose all are, and therefore even the guiltlesse might be dealt with as he pleased, and therefore if they fell together with others, they could not justly complain as wronged.

Verse 4, 5.

Here is the punishment of such as go after wizards, spoken of, Chap. 19. 31. God will cut them off. This was verified in Saul, 1 Sam. 28. in Ahaziah, 2 King. 2. in Jezebel, 2 King. 9. 22. in Nineveh, Nahum 3. 4. in Babylon, Esa. 47. 8. and in Jerusalem, Micha 5. 12. And Exod. 22. 18. the Judges are commanded not to suffer such to live, but the repeating of that is here spared, and Gods cutting of them off which went to them before not spoken of added here. Constantine enlarged this law, and would have not onely them, but their followers and sufferers to be put to death also. Yet, vers. 27. stoning to death of wizards is appointed.

Verse 6.

Constantius Magnus.

Sanctifie your selves and be ye holy, &c. Here is repeated again that of ch. 19. 2. upon occasion of so foul an evil as witchcraft. To sanctifie, saith Tostatus, is to begin in holinesse, and to be holy, to persevere therein. But I think nothing else is meant, but that they should apply their mindes to be holy, and separate from such wickednesses, that they might be holy. Whereas he concludeth, vers. 8. I am the Lord which sanctifieth you. The meaning is, that he had set them apart to be holy to himself from all other peoples, as v. 26. and that they should seek power to live holy according to his laws by his grace.

Verse 7, 8.

Tostatus.

For every one that curseth his father or his mother shall be put to death, &c. See the same before, Exod. 21. 17. where it hath been shewed, that he must be put to death by stoning, and this is intimated in the words here added, his blood shall be upon him, for hereupon Maimony noteth, that whersoever this phrase is used, his bloods shall be upon him, stoning to death is meant. And this Verse 9.

Maimony.

this is joyned to the law of being holy, by this word, for, as if he had said, for if ye will not be holy, but sin against my laws, ye shall die by the sword of the Magistrate, and none shall be therefore counted guilty, but your selves who are the cause of your own ruine, as appeareth by the law against those that curse father or mother.

Verse 10,11. Here death is appointed for the adulterer and adultéresse, and for the incestuous with his fathers wife. What death they should be put to that are adulterous is not here expressed, but *Joh.*8. it is said to be stoning, yet Maimony saith strangling, because whensoever putting to death is spoken of, and not the kinde of death expressed, strangling is meant, but by that reason another of his rules would fall, viz. that when it is said, his blood shall be upon his head, stoning is meant, whereas putting to death with this addition is somtimes spoken of, but not what death expressed. Of the punishment of adulterers, see more in my Catechisme, Command. 7. and of adultery with the betroathed woman, *Deut.*22.23. this answereth to *Chap.*18.20. and in Deut 22.24. it is put out of doubt, that the Rabbins rule is false, because stoning is expressely mentioned, and therefore strangling was not for the adulterous.

Maimony.

Verse 12. The like punishment is for him that lieth with his daughter in lavv, it being doubtlesse meant both in this and in the former case, the first husband being dead, because othervvise it is adultery also, for which death is appointed, *vers.*10

Verse 13. To lie vvith mankinde also is death, according to the rule before-going, by stoning. By the Imperiall Lavv such a man vvas to die by the svvord, by the law of Theodosius and Arcadius by burning in the fire. Amongst the Athenians he must die, and the party abused never bear any office. In a Councell at Vienna certain Templers being found guilty of this sin, vvere adjudged to the fire. Touching the impurity of the Popes of Rome in this, see somevvhat before, Chap 18.22.

Leg. Julian. de adult.
Æschin. contra Timar.

Verse 14. If a man take a wife and her mother, he shall be burnt, both he and they, &c. This was forbidden, *Levit.*18.17. but why is it more sharply punished, then to take a fathers wife? To this Hesychius answereth, because it breedeth the greatest confusion, they that are born thus being both uncles and sons, &c. But Tostatus better, because this sin vvas more common, therefore the punishment is made greater, to strike the more terrour. But vvhy must they be burnt also, seeing one that was first taken must needs be innocent? Tostatus answereth, if they be taken both together; and Calvin, by mutuall consent; Junius, they, that is, the mother if she be thus taken after, or the daughter if she be taken after. Any of these wayes the sense will be good. Of burning see again, *Chap.*21.9.

Hesychius.
Tostatus.
Quest.
Calvin.
Junius.

Verse 15. *If a man lie with a beast, he shall surely die, and ye shall slay the beast, vers.*16. The like is also decreed for a woman, they must be stoned, beast and all for greater detestation.

Verse 17. If a man take his sister, &c. Here because her seeing of his nakednesse is spoken of, Rab. Solomon saith, that the very seeing of the privie parts was death, although no further sin vvere committed: but this is improbable; to uncover the nakednesse in man, and to see in woman are all one. Whereas cutting off before the people is spoken of, but not putting to death, the Hebrews understand it by the hand of God; and that by the Magistrate they should onely be beaten, as alvvayes vvhen cutting off is spoken of, say they, is to be understood. But Gods cutting off is sometimes secret, and therefore cutting off before the people cannot set forth that, but stoning to death, as in other like uncleannesses. So also Tostatus and Oleaster.

R. Solomon.
Tostatus.
Oleaster.

Verse 18. If a man shall lie with a woman having her sickenesse, &c. Of this law see before, *Levit.*15.24. and *Chap.*18.19. here the punishment threatened is, they shall be cut off, that is, by the hand of God, as Maimony saith, and beaten by the Magistrate.

Verse 19. Thou shalt not uncover the nakednesse of thy mothers or fathers sister, &c. Of this his law ſee before, *Levit.*18.12,13,19. The penalty ſet down here is, They ſhall bear their iniquity, that is, as Calvin hath it, the puniſhment of their iniquity, death: ſo likewiſe Toſtatus, Pellican, Procopius, Cajetan. But the Hebrews, They ſhall be beaten; and Pelargus and Brentius, Some puniſhment, according to the quality of their offence at the diſcretion of the Magiſtrate, to which I do rather agree, becauſe death is not named. The Septuagint adde further here, They ſhall die childeleſſe, but this followeth, *v.*20.

Calvin.
Toſtatus.
Pellican.
Pelargus.
Brentius.
Septuagint.

If a man lieth with his Uncles wife, &c. they ſhall bear their ſin, they ſhall die childeleſſe. Here is a ſtrange expoſition made by Junius, that they ſhould be put to death, although the woman were with childe, without ſtaying, till ſhe was delivered, for this were barbarous and inhumane cruelty. And not much better is that of Toſtatus, They ſhall be put to death, and not ſuffered to live to have children; for it is not ſaid, They ſhall be put to death, but die childeleſſe. Wherefore Calvin ſaith beſt, For corrupting the ſeed of Abraham they ſhall be barren: and Rab. Solomon, If they have any children, when they come together, thoſe ſhall be taken from them. Auguſtine and Heſychius will have the meaning to be, that their children ſhall not be reputed unto them, as legitimate, but I reſt in the former.

Verſe 20.
Junii analyſ.
Toſtatus.
Calvin.
R. Solomon.
Pelican.
Lyranus.
Aug. queſt.76.
Heſychius.

The like puniſhment is for him that taketh his brothers wife. Now it is to be underſtood, that although barrenneſſe be threatened, as a puniſhment for ſin, yet it is not ſo in all, but as other wants to the godly for chaſtiſements or trials, or that the ſervants of God, who want children, may be the more free from worldly cares, and fuller of charity to the poor. And becauſe here are greater puniſhments for ſome inceſts then for others, we may ſee that theſe ſins are not all alike, but of them there are degrees.

Verſe 21.

Here it is concluded with a generall exhortation to obedience, as Levit. 18.26,27, &c. ſpuing out of the land being threatened, if they defiled themſelves in theſe things, as alſo there.

Verſe 22,23

This land is ſaid to be a land flowing with milk and honey, but of that ſee *Exod.*3.8.

Verſe 24.

The ſtatutes to be obſerved in particular are ſaid to be thoſe of putting difference between beaſts clean and unclean, &c. of which ſee, Chap. 11. Rab. Menahem ſaith, theſe are here ſpoken, becauſe he that tranſgreſſeth by carnall copulations before cenſured, is as a beaſt and no man.

Verſe 25.
Rab. Menahem.

Becauſe the puniſhment of Wizards, &c. hath not been yet ſet down, but of thoſe that ſeek unto them, their puniſhment is here appointed to be ſtoning to death. And ſo, as *Chap.*19. it was forbidden either to uſe inchantment, *v.*26. or to ſeek to ſuch, *v.*31. they have both their judgements ſeverally appointed here, and *v.*6.

Verſe 27.

CHAP. XXI.

THere ſhall none be defiled for the dead amongſt his people, but for his kinne, that is neer to him, &c. The Lord having given a charge for the peoples keeping of themſelves holy, Chap. 19. now preſcribeth ſpeciall rules of holineſſe, and avoiding defilements to the Prieſts. Baal Hatturim and Caskuni note, that this followeth immediately after the law againſt wizards, and ſuch as uſe familiar ſpirits, and ſeeking to them, becauſe the prieſts keeping themſelves alwayes from pollution, and ſo being fit to inquire for them by Urim and Thummim, they ſhould not have any need to go to wizards to inquire in any caſe. And theſe lawes are given to the ſons of Aaron onely, not to the Levites, nor to Aarons daughters, and firſt to the whole company of prieſts, and then to the High Prieſt more ſtrictly, *v.*10. For theſe words, for the dead, Hebrew it is, for a ſoul, ſo likewiſe, *Chap.*19.28. but *v.*11. it is further expreſſed, The ſouls of the dead: for a ſoul, then here is for a ſoul departed, for that one is dead, and polluteth, when his ſoul is departed. The Septuagint render it, for a ſoul; the

Verſe 1,2.
Baal Hattur.
Caskuni.

the Chaldee, for the dead, according to the meaning, amongst his people, that is, amongst the Israelites, of whom he is one. How a man might defile himself by the dead, is shewed, Numb. 19. 14, 16. viz by being in the tent, where he lieth, by touching the corps, or the grave, or a bone, and this defilement lasted seven dayes. The Hebrew Canons also say, that whoso cometh within four cubits is defiled, and by the Analogy of that, Levit. 11. 25. he that beareth the corps, and by following the beer to the buriall, as may be gathered, Levit. 10. 7. in that Eliazar and Ithamar might not go from the door of the tabernacle to the buriall of Nadab and Abihu, wherefore Brentius summeth this up also as a meanes of defilement. And most of all did he defile himself that shaved or plucked off the hair of his head or beard, or cut his flesh in an heathenish manner through sorrow; for not onely the Priests might not thus defile themselves, verse 5, but not the people, Chap. 19. 27, 28.

Brentius.

Verse 3.

Those that are neer of kin to the Priest for whom he may defile himself, are father, or mother, son, or daughter, brother, or sister dying a Virgin, and the Hebrew Canons adde, for his wife also, because she must needs be understood as neerest to him, saith Rab. Solomon. And indeed in reason, if the Priest might mourn for any, because neer unto him, for his wife especially, as neerest of all. Therefore Ainsworth and Willet subscribe to this, and bring that, Ezek. 24. 16, &c. for a proof, because Ezechiel was particularly bidden, being a priest, not to mourn for his wife, dying in an extraordinary case, which he would not doubtlesse have done, although this prohibition had not been given him: if generally the Priests might not have mourned for their wives, yet the common opinion is, that for his wife a Priest might not be defiled, but onely for the particulars here named, being of his consanguinity, and therefore, Ezech. 44. 25. the same particulars onely are repeated again. And to this I subscribe, because if Gods will had been that the wife should be mourned for, he would have named her as well as others that were neer. And that argument drawn from the charge given to Ezechiel 24 rather proveth this opinion then the other, because there is an instance of a priest forbidden to pollute himselfe for his wife, which that singular love which he bare unto her expressed, v. 16. would haply have made him to do, although unlawfull, had not God interposed this speciall charge against it. If it be demanded, what reason that the wife may not be lamented after the manner of a mother or daughter? I answer, haply because the love of the wife exceedeth the love of all others, and therefore lest measure should have been exceeded, if a Priest had been permitted to mourn for her, he was not permitted in this case.

R. Solomon.

Ainsworth & Willet.

Tostatus.

Quest.

For the neer kin then here nominated a Priest might defile himself, and for them onely, that is, be in the room with them, provide for their Funerall, accompany them thereunto, and mourn for them, but this no longer then till the grave was covered, saith Maimony; for thenceforth they were, as others dead, and the punishment of tranigressing in any of these things was to be beaten. And he expoundeth this, for his neer kin, as not a permission to mourn for such, but as a command: so that if any would not in these cases, he was to be compelled to it. For his sister a Virgin he might do this, because she had none husband to mourn for her, but being married, she was joyned to another family, and therefore not to be mourned for in the family of the priests, but in that of which she was now a member.

Calvin. Maimony.

For the reason, why mourning or comming neer the dead should be counted a defiling, and yet permitted to the priests in some cases, but in all others prohibited, the legall was, because they ought continually to attend about the tabernacle, and to be fit to do the service thereof, but by ministring about the dead they were polluted, and so made unfit for seven dayes, yet because nature requireth these duties towards father or mother, &c. here being a greater necessity, the law of Ceremonies, by which they were bound to daily attendance, was to give way thereunto, lest the decent interring of the dead should be neglected, as also the law of Circumcision in the wildernesse for 40 years, and Calvin. Bonfrer.

and of the priests eating the shew-bread, when David was in necessity, &c. was for that time dispensed withall. Thus it was under the law, but under the Gospel the son is not permitted to go and bury his dead father being called to follow Christ, to shew, that no duty, how necessary soever, that standeth not with obedience to Christs calling, can dispense therewith, but contrariwise all duties must give way hereunto. The mysticall reason was, to shevv, that Gods priests should not partake of other mens sins and so be defiled, as they are, if they admonish them not hereof, and do all that they can to reforme them: for to be defiled by the soul of one dead, is to be defiled by one dead in sin, and therefore to point at this, the soul is here put for the dead, vvhich is properly the seat of sin, and is dead by sin. For his being defiled for the neerest to him, father and mother, &c. hereby vvas shevved, that although he be not defiled by the sins of the people, if he admonisheth them, yet by the sins of those of his family that be most neer to him, he is defiled, because his exhortations, and charges, and admonitions to them should be daily & hourly, which if they were, it is presumed, that they would reform: and therefore a Bishop is described to be one that can govern his own house well. Indeed if his sister be married away, he shall not be defiled for her, because now she is not any longer in the same family, but during the time of her Virginity, and for others most neer unto him, but are separated and gone out of the family. Thus Hesychius, and to this effect Procopius, and Cyril. Alexandrinus. And indeed for the most part they of the family of a faithfull minister of God are brought to reformation by his godly endeavours, and yet sometimes in some particulars it is otherwise, as in Judas, one of the family of our Lord Jesus; wherefore we may best put the case thus: For his people in generall, if any of them, over whom he hath a charge, be dead in sin, he shall not be defiled, so that he by his instructions and admonitions publickly doth his best endeavour to convert them; but if any of those that be more neer unto him be dead, he shall be defiled, unlesse, besides the instructions given to them and to others together in publick, he doth privately seek by admonishing and instructing to reform every one of them daily.

Note.

The Mystery. Hesychius. Ezech. 3.

1 Tim. 3.

Procopius. Cyril. Alexandr. de adorat.

But he shall not defile himselfe, being a chief man amongst his people, to prophane himselfe. The Hebrew, לא יטמא בעל, a Lord shall not defile himselfe, seemeth to be rightly rendered thus. Yet Caskun saith, that the common rendering of these words is, he shall not defile himselfe for a chief man, no not for the High Priest, not being of his neer kin, although for one neer to him, being far meaner he might. Some say it is meant, he may not defile himselfe for the Prince, as Tostatus, Calvin, &c. because בעל signifieth the Prince, Judg. 9. 51. But against both these maketh this, that there is no word signifying for; howsoever Oleaster to avoid this, compoundeth the word of two, ב and על super, rendering it, for him that is above. But forsomuch as the Prince or High Priest is a father as it were of the Countrey, and neer to every one, I cannot think, that God would forbid a generall mourning of all for him; and experience sheweth, when Moses died, and when Josiah died, all mourned. Neither can it be taken in the nominative case, A Prince or High Priest shall not defile himselfe, as some expound it, for the High Priests charge followeth, v. 10. and with Princes and their duties it is not medled here, but with Priests onely. Junius rendereth it, An husband shall not defile himselfe, but in his Analysis he retracteth this, because it is contrary to the common opinion of the Hebrews, who held that the wife was to be understood, v. 2. as most neer unto him. But according to that which I have already said hereupon, there was no cause of this retractation, especially forsomuch as בעל signifieth an husband, Exod. 21. 3, 22. yet his other exposition may indifferently be received, A master shall not defile himselfe, that is, although for his neer kin he may, yet for any other of his family, he being a Priest may not, for for a master is, בעל put also, Judg. 19. 23. viz. the master of an house, as בעלה, Bagnelah, is for the mistresse, 1 King. 17. 17.

Verse 4.

Cazhuni.

Tostatus. Calvin. Ostander. Pellargus.

Deut. 34. 8.

Ar. Mont. Vat. Pagninus. Junius.

Chald. Septuagint.

17.17. wherefore the Chaldee rendereth it here Rabba, a maſter; but of all the Septuagint erre moſt ſtrangely, rendering it, ſuddenly, but this is by miſtaking בהר ſuddenly, for בעל maſter; and therefore Heſychius herein doth but irritum opus, in applying his being defiled ſuddenly to a myſtery. Whereas another word, prophane, is here uſed; this vvas to ſhew, that the polluted vvere made for the time prophane perſons, and ſo unmeet for the ſervice of the Sanctuary.

Verſe 5. They ſhall not make any baldneſſe upon their head, or cut the corners of their beards, &c. of this forbidden to all Iſrael in their mournings ſee before, *Ch.*19.28. but rounding of the head is there condemned, here making it bald, but this was either by ſhaving or plucking off the hair for ſorrow. When the Prieſts did defile themſelves by mourning for their near kin, they might not thus do, becauſe it was heatheniſh, and the practice of idolaters, 1 *Kin.*18.

Verſe 6. They ſhall be holy unto their God, and not prophane his name, for they offer the offerings, &c. Here is a reaſon ſet down, why the Prieſts muſt not be defiled, viz. becauſe they muſt be holy to God. All the people are charged to be holy. *Levit.*11.45. 19.1. 20. 26. becauſe God had peculiarly choſen them above all other peoples, but becauſe from amongſt them the Prieſts were more ſpecially choſen, they above all muſt be holy, and not defile themſelves any way. And the reaſon is added, becauſe if they ſhould come polluted to offer ſacrifices, Gods name ſhould be prophaned, that is, himſelf and his ſervice ſhould thus come to be vilified, whereas all good care being had to come purely and reverently before him, a more reverend regard is wrought towards him and his worſhip in all that ſee it. How the name of God was prophaned by others alſo being pollute, ſee *Chap.*18 22. 19.12. For ſacrifices made by fire, Hebrew is אשי fires, and therefore Toſtatus and Hugo render it incenſe; the Septuagint, θυσιας, ſacrifices by fire, and all fire-offerings moſt probably are meant, as Oleaſter hath it, becauſe next unto theſe bread is named, as the other thing offered by them alſo, that came not into the fire, as the ſhew-bread, for by bread here Toſtatus underſtandeth ſhew-bread; ſome, flour and all things made thereof; and ſome, becauſe לחם ſignifieth food, all other offerings, which are called the food of God, becauſe he is delighted therewith, as with food. But I rather think a diſtinction to be made here of things burnt in the fire, and offered without burning, and therefore ſhew-bread meant in the laſt place, and all other burnt-ſacrifices in the firſt. As this verſe is begun, ſo it is concluded, therefore they ſhall be holy, Hebrew holineſſe: that is, ſingularly holy.

Toſtatus. Hugo. Septuagint. Oleaſter. Junius.

Verſe 7. They ſhall not take a wife, that is an whore or prophane, or put away from her husband, &c. By whore the Hebrewes underſtand one, with whom a man hath lien unlawfully, either by conſtraint or willingly on her part, with ſuch a Prieſt may not marry: or prophane, that is, a woman coming of an whore, or of one put away, and if of a Widow, ſhe is the prophane forbidden to the High Prieſt, *verſ.*14. ſo Maimony, &c. for as the daughter of a Prieſt playing the whore is ſaid to prophane her father, *verſ.*9. ſo parents prophane their children by their lewdneſſe. A woman put avvay vvas one divorced, which was then practiſed upon divers occaſions. According to this law touching Prieſts wives, is that direction, 1 *Tim.*3. But Junius by one prophaned will have one forced underſtood, and by the whore, one willingly ſuffering this abuſe, I reſt in the former eſpecially for the ſingular skill of the Authours in theſe lawes. The myſticall meaning of this law was to ſhew that the prieſts under the New Teſtament ſhould not meddle with any of the rights of the Jewiſh Synagogue: for an whore is that Synagogue often called, *Eſa.*1. *Ezech.*16. *Hoſ.*2, &c. and a woman put away with a bill of divorce, *Hoſ.*2. *Eſa.*50. and Chriſt, whom his Miniſters do repreſent, was moſt aptly figured out by the prieſts offering the bread of their God, becauſe he was a prieſt after the order of Melchiſedeck, that brought forth bread and wine: thus Heſychius, who alſo reaſoneth from the plurall and ſingular numbers

*Maimony in Iſſurei Biah, Ch.*19 Sol. Iarchi.

Deut.24.1.

Junius.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

Gen.14.

numbers joyned together, they ſhall not take a wife, and then the ſingular, for he is holy, wherein muſt needs be a myſtery. And for an whore or prophane, he readeth ſcortum, & vile proſtibulum, as if the laſt were worſt, ſo alſo Toſtatus, but Cajetan and Vatabl. contrariwiſe will have the proſtituted whore meant by the firſt, and the ſecret by the other. Toſtatus. Cajetan. Vatablus.

Verſe 8.

Thou ſhalt ſanctifie him therefore, &c. In concluding, *verſ.*7. he ſaith, for he is holy to his God, and here, thou ſhalt therefore ſanctifie him, that is, thou who art a ruler in Iſrael, ſhalt not ſuffer him to be thus defiled, but have a care in all things to keep him from ſuch things as pollute, and hereupon it was, that the Magiſtrate provided, he ſhould he beaten, that thus defiled himſelf. He ſhall be holy to thee, that is, thou ſhalt have him in high honour: for every man in Iſrael, ſaith Maimony, muſt give much honour to the prieſt. And let him be firſt for every thing in the Sanctuary, to open the law firſt, to bleſſe firſt, and to receive a ſeemly portion firſt. Toſtatus and Junius will have it ſpoken to Moſes, Thou ſhalt ſanctifie him, that is, command him theſe things, that he may be holy. Here becauſe that ſame that is before called holy, is bidden to be ſanctified, Heſychius will have Chriſt pointed at, who is both holy in himſelf, and ſanctified in his Miniſters, and by them, when they keep the holineſſe by his grace given unto them. *Maimony in Cleba mikdaſh, chap.*4. Toſtatus. Junius. Heſychius.

Verſe 9.

The daughter of any Prieſt, who prophaneth her ſelf by playing the whore, ſhe hath prophaned her father, and ſhall be burnt. Not onely the prieſts, but their wives and children muſt all be holy, becauſe they alſo did eat of the holy things of the Lord, and therefore incontinency in a prieſts daughter muſt be more ſeverely puniſhed, then in another woman in the like caſe, ſhe muſt be burnt with fire. Maimony limiteth it and ſaith, onely being under an husband ſhe was to be thus puniſhed: but in the text there is no ſuch limitation, wherefore I hold rather with Lyranus, that although ſhe were ſingle ſhe muſt die thus, for the reaſon rendered is, ſhe hath prophaned her father, that is, brought him into diſgrace, whereas if a married woman were meant onely, the reaſon would as well have been rendered from her husband, who was moſt abuſed: the man with whom ſhe played the whore, ſay the Hebrews, muſt be ſtrangled. For prophaning her father, the Septuagint hath her fathers name; the Chaldee, her fathers holineſſe; Solomon Jarchi ſaith, ſhe contemneth his honour, and men will now be ready to ſay, Curſed be the man that begat ſuch a daughter, and curſed be he that brought her up. The Veſtall Virgins amongſt the Romans were buried quick, if they played the whores, becauſe it was thought to be a diſgrace to the gods, to whom they miniſtered. And under the daughter by the like reaſon, the ſon and the wife of a Prieſt alſo were to be underſtood by a Synecdoche, ſaith Calvin, whereby one is named, and the reſt underſtood, ſo likewiſe Pelican. The Prieſts daughter is ſpoken of, ſaith Heſychius, in a myſtery, the Jewiſh Synagogue being meant, for as that State is called an whore, ſo ſhe is called a daughter, *Eſa.*1. and how ſhe came to an end by burning, is notoriouſly known, under Titus and Veſpaſian. *Maimony. Lyranus. Solom. Jarchi. Auguſt. lib.*3. *de Civit. c.*5. Calvin. Pelican. The Myſtery. Heſychius.

Verſe 10,11

Verſe 12.

And the high Prieſt, upon whoſe head the anointing oil was poured, ſhall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes, &c. Becauſe the High Prieſt came yet neerer to God then the other Prieſts, he muſt be yet more holy, and is reſtrained from mourning for father or mother, &c. he muſt not go out of the Sanctuary to follow any corps to the buriall. The word high Prieſt, Hebr. is great Prieſt, or Prieſt greater then his brethren, not onely one high Prieſt being meant hereby, but the ſecond to him alſo, who if he by any accident were unclean at any time, ſerved in his room, as was noted, *Chap.*16.33. and the Prieſt anointed for the war, *Deut.*20.2. ſo Maimony, none of theſe might be defiled for any dead, or marry any other but virgins, as followeth, *verſ.*13. for they were greater then their brethren. Of the anointing oil ſee, Exod. 30.25. and of the garments belonging to him, *Exod.*28. If there were none oil, they were conſecrated by putting on the garments onely, ſaith Maimony. 2 Kings 2 28. *Maimony in Iſſurei Biah, Ch.*17.

Of uncovering the head and rending the garments in mourning, ſee before, *Chap.*10.6. By the Hebrew Canons beating is appointed for the High Prieſt, if he goeth into a tent where a dead body is, or any way defileth himſelf for the dead; but in caſe that he being alone upon the high-way findeth a dead body of an Iſraelite, he ſhall defile himſelf by burying it, unleſſe he can forthwith call and appoint ſome other to do it. If another be with him, Prieſt or Nazarite, one of them ſhall rather do it, and he may not. For his not going out of the Sanctuary, this is expounded, in the time of his ſervice, and at ſuch time none other Prieſt might go out upon pain of death, ſee *Chap.*10.7. To go out now is ſaid to be a profaning of the Sanctuary, becauſe the ſervice thereof is ſleighted for other occaſions, the crown of the holy oil is upon him. The Septuagint, the holy oil, the anointing of his God is upon him. But it is נזר, the crown; but the holy oil may well be thus called, becauſe the word ſignifieth alſo ſeparation, and hereby he was ſeparated from others of the Prieſthood, having an higher degree of holineſſe upon him, and he ware a crown of gold, *Exod.*29.6. upon which the holy oil being poured, it might therefore be called the crown of the holy oil.

Maimony of mourning, *Ch.*3 Verſe 12.

Toſtatus.

Verſe 13. Maimony.

He ſhall marry a wife in her virginity, &c. Not onely the women before forbidden to other Prieſts, but a widow alſo is forbidden to the High Prieſt. And ſhe is counted a widow, after whoſe betroathing onely her husband died, although ſhe were not married to him. The virgin muſt be one of his own people, that is, of one of the twelve Tribes, and not of other people, although other Iſraelites might marry with other, ſo *Ezech.*44.22. they ſhall take maidens of the ſeed of the houſe of Iſrael; and the Hebrew Canons, Prieſts, and Levites, and Iſraelites may lawfully marry one with another; but the iſſue is counted after the male, if the father be a Prieſt, the ſon is a Prieſt alſo; but if another Iſraelite marrying a Prieſts daughter, the ſon is but a common Iſraelite. If the High Prieſt tranſgreſſed herein, he is ſaid to profane his ſeed, becauſe a ſon begotten by him of a widow or whore taken to wife is unlawful, and may never ſerve, and therefore beating was appointed for High Prieſts and Prieſts in theſe caſes, ſo *Maimony Iſſurei Biah, chap.*19. In ſpeaking of the virgin here, whom the high Prieſt ſhould marry, the Septuagint adde, of his kinred, but this is not in the Text, and his liberty hath been ſhewed to be more. A virgin he muſt marry, becauſe this is a marriage more honourable, and whereas if he be old, it may ſeem unfit for him to marry a young maid; Calvin ſaith well, he ought to have reſpect unto yeers, and to chooſe one neerer to his own age. Whereas that, *Ezech.*44.22. forbidding all Prieſts to marry widows, may ſeem to differ from this forbidding the High Prieſt onely, it may be eaſily anſwered out of the Text, where the widows of Prieſts are excepted, with whom they might marry, but the High Prieſt might not, ſo alſo Borrhæus. Of all applications of theſe laws, that of the Church of Rome is the worſt and the moſt abſurd: for from hence they gather, that no Prieſt under the Goſpel may marry a widow, or go to the ſecond marriage againſt that of the Apoſtle, A biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife, and therefore whoſo hath done thus, ſay their Popes, let them be removed from all Sacerdotall dignity, and they condemn marriage in Prieſts, becauſe it is here ſaid, that the Prieſts muſt be holy, altogether from the purpoſe of this place, if here were a lavv for our miniſters now, as there is not, but onely for the legall Prieſts, ſo Brentius. By the high prieſt Chriſt was undoubtedly figured out, who had the oil of gladneſſe poured upon his head above all his fellovvs; but hovv did not he uncover his head, according to theſe lavvs, rend his garments, or mourn for father or mother, or marry a virgin, and not go out of the Sanctuary? Heſychius ſaith, The Father was as his head, from vvhom he vvas never diſ-joyned; his humane nature, his garments, which his divine never left, no not in death; the Jevvs, his father and mother, by vvhom he vvas not polluted, although dead in ſin; and out of the Sanctuary he went not, becauſe although he kept company with publicans and

Verſe 14.

*Maimony in Iſſurei Biah, Ch.*19.

Verſe 15.

Calvin.

Borrhæus.

1 Tim.3.

Decret. Siricii, Innocentii, Leonis.

Brentius.

Pſal.45.

The Myſtery.

and ſinners, yet his Sanctimony remained alwayes unſpotted, the Jews, who were as an whore or wife put away, as was before ſhewed, and as a widow in regard of true knowledge, of which they were deprived, he married not, as his Church, but took the Gentiles, as a Virgin, for thus the Apoſtle calleth the Corinthians, and his company being 44000 are called Virgins. And well may by the Gentiles a Virgin be underſtood, and not an whore, although they were guilty of idolatry alſo, becauſe to be adulterous by idolatry, argueth ſuch as have been taken and married unto the Lord before, as the Gentiles were not, but the Jews, and for the ſame reaſon can they not be a wife put away, and the knowledge of the truth given unto them exempted them from widowhood. Thus therefore in generall, and as Origen in particular, this may be applied to every faithfull ſoul, for ſhe is the Virgin wife of this High Prieſt. And Jerome likewiſe in his Epiſtle to Fabiola, telling her that ſhe muſt have nothing left in her of the old man, that ſhe might be a wife for Chriſt. To imbrace the pure doctrine of Chriſt, and none other, and to ſtick conſtantly to it alone, and live accordingly, is to be his pure Virgin wife in whomſoever, but to go a whoring after errours, or to be given over to them, or to corrupt manners is to be in a ſtate uncapable of this high dignity.

2 Cor.11.2. Revel.14.4.

Origen.Hom.12

Hieron.Epiſt.12 Note.

Verſe 17.

Whoſoever he be of thy ſeed that hath any blemiſh, let him not approach to offer the bread of his God. What theſe blemiſhes were which diſabled any from this miniſtery, is ſhewed, *v.*18.19,20,21. and the offerings which he ſhould not offer, are further expreſſed, and *v.*22. he being allowed yet to eat of the moſt holy things, *v.*23. he is forbidden to come unto the vail, or nigh the altar. The word tranſlated blemiſh, is מוּם ſignifying any thing to be blamed for deformity, want, or ſuperfluity, and it was a blemiſh in the prieſts onely, that diſabled them, not in the Levites, for they offered not the bread of their God. Touching the bread of God and his fire-offerings alſo mentioned here, *v.*21. ſee before, *v.*6. The blemiſhes reckoned up here are twelve, blindeneſſe, lameneſſe, a flat noſe, any thing ſuperfluous, a broken foot, a broken hand, a crookt back, a Dwarf, a blemiſhed eye, the ſcurf, the ſcab, and broken ſtones. Firſt, he muſt not be blinde, becauſe ſuch cannot ſee to do the prieſts office; by blinde, Ainſworth and others underſtand alſo the pur-blinde, the dim-ſighted, the blemiſhed in the eye alſo, or in the eyelid; but for blemiſhes in the eye I ſee no reaſon to bring them in here, becauſe they follow in particular expreſſion, *v.*20. Heſychius thinketh that theſe things are not at all to be underſtood literally, but myſtically onely, becauſe a man might get theſe blemiſhes by caſualty, and God looketh to the heart, and not to the outward man. But becauſe by outwards he would teach inward things concerning the ſoul, that the blemiſhed by ſin are unfit to miniſter before him, for which cauſe alſo beaſts for ſacrifice muſt be without blemiſh, and to ſet forth that ſervice with the greater grace, leſt offence ſhould be taken by the waiward people at the blemiſhed prieſt, the meaning of the Lord was even according to the letter, that no ſuch ſhould ſerve as prieſt. Wherefore Theodoret better underſtandeth theſe things firſt literally, and then maketh a myſticall application hereof: ſo likewiſe, Baſil, Cyril. Alexandrinus, and Cyprian. And even amongſt the Heathen the perfection of their prieſts was much ſtood upon. Amongſt the Greeks none could be a prieſt to Iſmenus Apollo, unleſſe both in forme and ſhape of body, and in birth he were excellent: amongſt the Romans no veſtall Virgin might be taken that had any blemiſh of body. Seneca, who telleth of Metellus in adventuring to ſave the image Palladium in the temple of Veſta, that was on fire, loſing his eyes was for this put from his prieſthood, ſaith hereupon, the prieſt muſt be perfect; and Pliny ſaith, That Sergius having loſt his right hand was likewiſe put by. And amongſt the Perſians, he that was blinde might neither miniſter about the holy things, nor be admitted to any place of government in the Common-wealth. By the blinde, ſaith Heſychius, was ſet forth one ignorant and unlearned, that cannot ſee into the light of the truth, he muſt not be a

Verſe 18,19 Verſe 20.

1 Blindneſſe. Ainſworth.

Heſychius.

Theod.quæſt.30 Baſil.de Bapt. Cap.2. Clem.Alex.12. de adorat. Cyprian.Epiſt. 64. Pauſan l.9. Fenſtel.de Magiſt.Rom c.7. Seneca Contr.2. Sacerdos omnis ſit integer. Plin.l.7.c.38.

Heſychius.

1 Tim. 3. 2.

2 Lameneſſe.

Pallad. χωλὸν ἔχεις τὸν νοῦν ὡς τὸν πόδα.

2 Sam. 5. 8. Heſychius.

1 Kings 18. Heb. 12. 13.

miniſter of the Goſpel, and he paralleleth the twelve properties required in a Biſhop with theſe twelve; amongſt which one is, that he muſt be apt to teach, oppoſed to blindeneſſe, and thus the Lord taxeth inſufficiency and darkneſſe in the underſtanding, as blindeneſſe, Matth. 23. 16, 17, 19.

The ſecond blemiſh, lameneſſe, which was when a man went halting, or upon crutches, or had an unſeemly gate, diſabled to this office, becauſe to ſee one go ſo was an ill ſight, and there was danger of ſpilling the liquid things about which he ſerved, and creeples and lame perſons have oft-times lame conditions, whence that ſaying was taken up by the Poet, Thou haſt as lame a ſoul as feet, ſuch were the lame Jebuſites that kept the Fort of Zion againſt David, whom his ſoul abhorred. By the lame, ſuch as in part corrupt and overthrow the Law and Word of God, are ſet forth, becauſe as in the lame there is one foot ſometimes ſound, but the other is lame: ſo ſuch holding of God, and boaſting of his ſervice corrupt his law; and therefore of halting the Prophet Elijah ſpeaketh, reproving it moſt ſharply, and the Apoſtle of halting, as dangerous.

3 A flat Noſe.

Junius. Oleaſter. Cajetan.

The third blemiſh is a flat noſe, in the Septuagint, a ſhort noſe, or a noſe cut off, it is a noſe any way blemiſhed: The Hebrews ſay, there be of theſe nine ſorts, a hookt noſe, a crooked noſe, too long or too ſhort, too great or too little, boared through, cut or broken. In Hebrew it is, חרם, cut off, but what member cut off or curtail'd is not expreſſed, whereupon ſome expound it of any member or part cut off: but becauſe he goeth through particular members, it is beſt to underſtand one in particular alſo here; and becauſe a noſe cut off is a great blemiſh, and is not elſewhere ſpoken of, if not here, a noſe cut off, or flat, which deformeth almoſt as much, although it be counted a grace amongſt the Chinois to have ſuch a noſe. To ſhew what a diſgrace it is to have the noſe cut off, we may bring the practice of the Egyptians, amongſt whom adultereſſes and adulterers had their noſes cut off, and Leo the Emperour made the like law, and Juſtinian for ſuch as violated Virgins. Now becauſe the noſe is the organ of ſmelling, hereby are ſuch ſet forth as want the ſmell of their cogitations, ſaith Heſychius, who can well enough endure any evil ſent of wickedneſſe, and are not troubled at it.

Diodor. Sicul.

Heſychius.

4 Any excreſcency.

Heb. 12. 1.

The fourth blemiſh is any thing ſuperfluous in any part of the body or member, ſee the like again touching ſacrifices, Chap. 22. 23. Heſychius refereth this alſo to the noſe, if it be over-great, but it is doubtleſſe more general, and therefore the Hebrews in numbering the blemiſhes taxed here ſpeak not onely of an over-great noſe, but of lips upper or nether hanging out, belly or navil over-hanging through fat, or breſts like a womans breſts, ſix fingers of an hand, or ſix toes of a foot, a ſwelling in the thumb, &c. And by an excreſcency what can more fitly be ſet forth then ſin, for which in any kinde a man is notorious? It is called therefore a weight, as any excreſcency is, that muſt be put off.

5 A broken foot.

6 A broken hand.

Heſychius.

Epheſ. 6. 15.

Jer. 1. 17. Math. 10.

The fifth and ſixth are a broken hand and broken foot, that is, having any part or finger of it cut off, and much more if it be all cut off. By the one of theſe Heſychius underſtandeth the foot of pride, by the other the hand of rapacity or covetouſneſſe. But becauſe we are bidden to have our feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, that they may not be hurt or broken, an undaunted going on to ſet forth and to profeſſe the Goſpel being ſet forth hereby, I think, that in the broken foot timerouſneſſe in ſtanding for the truth is pointed at. And becauſe the hand is the inſtrument of giving and helping the diſtreſſed, which a broken hand cannot do, in the broken hand unmercifulneſſe and denying to help is pointed at; and the rather, becauſe a Biſhop muſt be hoſpitable, and the Prophet is to ſpeak all commanded him without any fear. The Hebrews name theſe blemiſhes alſo in the feet or hands, if a bone be broken in either, if the fingers or toes be joyned together, or they be bowed up, and a crooked foot, and broad ſoal of a foot like a gooſe, &c.

The

The ſeventh blemiſh is a crookt back, or a back with a bunch hanging out, the Targum Hieroſol. a bunch in the eye-brow hanging over the eye; but the Septuagint, a back ſticking out, being therefore thus taken, it is a great deformity; that of Thyrſites in Homer being thus ſpecially ſet forth, and it oftentimes argueth crooked conditions. By this the covetous are ſet forth, bearing a bunch of worldly cares, as the camel, to whom they are compared, a bunch on his back, ſo Ambroſe; and to this anſwereth that, 1 Tim. 3. not given to filthy lucre. Touching the eighth blemiſh, for dwarf, in Hebrew is דק, ſignifying ſmall or thin, ſo that it may either be expounded a dwarff, or a thin, over-macilent conſumed body. Maimony will have a ſmall white ſpot in the black of the eye meant hereby, but the blemiſh of the eye followeth next. The Septuagint render it ἐμπλαῶν, one having a rugged or pimpled face; Heſychius, Vatablus, and Oleaſter, a thin film over the eye: but imperfections in eyes are next ſpoken of, as hath been already ſaid, and the word doth not ſignifie rugged, and therefore the little, thin body is rather to be underſtood, ſo Junius and Pagninus. And thus one decaying in grace, and falling herefrom is ſet forth; for the blemiſh here taxed, ſaith Cajetan, is the conſumption.

7 A Crookt-back. Targum Hieroſol. The Myſtery. Ambroſ. Serm. 4

8 A Dwarf. Maimony. Septuagint. Vatablus. Oleaſter. Heſychius. Junius. Pagninus.

Ninthly, the blemiſhed eye, חבלי, a ſuffuſion in the eye, ſaith Maimony, is a white gotten into the black of the eye, and mingled with it. Some render it a whiteneſſe in the eye, ſome a film drawn over, ſome bloud-ſhotten, ſome ſquint-eyed, but the word בלי ſignifieth to mix or confound; and hereby any blemiſh in or about the eye may beſt be underſtood, of which the Hebrews reckon up nineteen. 1 White mixt with black. 2 A white ſpot. 3 A black ſpot ſinking in. 4 A pain in the eye. 5 The ſtanding out of the eye, ſo that the eye-lids cannot cover it. 6 The eye too great. 7 Too little. 8 Too high placed. 9 Too low. 10 Too round. 11 Watery eyes. 12 Winking. 13 Squint-eyed. 14 One great, and another ſmall, &c. And in the eye-lids they number ſeven blemiſhes, no hair, too thick, one unlike another, cut, boared, hurt, too cloſe and in the eye-brows fine, no hair, meeting, but one, more then two, one unlike another. By ſuch as had a blemiſh in the eye, Heſychius well underſtandeth thoſe that have the knowledge of God, but corrupted through pride, according to that, 1 Tim. 6. 4. for where knowledge enlighteneth, pride darkeneth, ſo Greg. in Moral.

9 A blemiſhed Eye. Maimony. Pagninus. Toſtatus. Junius. Oleaſter.

For the tenth blemiſh, the ſcurf; this is a kinde of mange in any part of the body, being worſe then a ſcab, but not ſo bad as the leproſie, Levit. 22. 22. Deut. 28. 27. it is ſpoken of as incurable. Hereby Heſychius underſtandeth a detractour, who alwayes itcheth as it were to be ſlandering and ſpeaking ill of other men.

10 The Scurf. Heſychius.

For the eleventh, by the ſcab, ſaith Maimony, the Egyptian ſcab is underſtood, which is hard; it is an itching ſcab that ſpreadeth round, by which the libidinous, ſaith Heſychius, are ſet forth, becauſe their luſt is as an itching in them after fleſhly uncleanneſſe.

11 The Scab. Heſychius.

For the twelfth blemiſh, the ſtones broken or bruiſed, in Hebr. it is מרוח, bruiſed; the Septuagint render it, having but one ſtone, but it is ſtones broken, or bruiſed, or ſwelled, as ſome have it. And becauſe from hence the ſeed cometh for generation, ſuch as are unapt to beget children unto God are ſet forth hereby, and they are ſuch as ſay and do not, as Heſychius noteth. And hitherto of the twelve generall blemiſhes in any of the ſons of Aaron, making them unfit to miniſter, but of others of the tribe of Levi nothing is ſaid here, and therefore it is held that they might miniſter in their places notwithſtanding. And hitherto alſo of ſome particulars comprehended under ſome of theſe generals. Now as there have been many enumerated about the eyes, the noſe, and excreſcencies in any part; ſo the Hebrews reckoning up all others together with theſe make all the particulars an hundred and fourty. In the ears eleven, black, blue, ſore, cut, boared, round, withered, without bloud, a double ear, too little, too broad, ſlender below, unlike one another.

12 The broken ſtones. Heſychius. Ex Munſtero.

ther. In the head eight, a flat crown, narrow temples, broad behinde, cloſe to the neck, no hair on the crown, before, behinde or bound about, &c. In the mouth nine, a lip wanting, or torn, or boared, a bigger lip, the mouth ſmall, the tongue ſlow, the mouth ſlabbering, &c. In the back three, hollow, crooked, riſing. In the hand ſix, one finger joyned to another, one finger too little or too much, &c. In the inſtruments of generation 16. a nerve bruiſed, cut off or pulled away both the ſtones in one place, an Hermophrodite, &c. In the whole body 9. A dry ſcab, a running ſcab, warts, ſcars, feebleneſs, members diſproportionable, &c. To omit the numbering of any more, but theſe I have ſet down to give an hint of the great curioſity of the Rabbins about this law: and their ground for all theſe is, becauſe it is ſaid, Who hath any blemiſh, whereby I grant, that any blemiſh deforming may well be underſtood, or diſabling, and therefore in moſt of theſe they are to be ſubſcribed to, and in that which they ſay of crooked legs, or unequall, or bunches ſticking out, but in ſome they were doubtleſſe over-curious, and ſtretch the law further then was ever intended. In imitation of this law ſince the time of the Goſpel, in the Pontifician decrees it is ſaid, Let no man preſume to prefer to Clergy-orders any that are blemiſhed or diminiſhed in any part of the body. And particularly no deformed perſons, or that had gelded themſelves, or cut off their fingers, or had their eyes put out, might be admitted; but if one had been gelded by the enemy, or made lame by the inciſion of Phyſicians, or if one being of excellent parts, whom the Church could not ſpare, had gelded himſelf, as Origen, or cut off his thumb, as Marcus did of purpoſe to decline the prieſt-hood, he might be admitted. If by the enemy in battell a man be mutilated in any part, or lamed, it is, as Alexander ſaid to Philip, a mark of vertue, every ſtep that he taketh. Brentius commemorating the law againſt bodily blemiſhes in prieſts in theſe days, condemneth it as a reviving of Lawes abrogated long ago, as being made onely for the prieſts under the law, and ſaith, that no outward blemiſh ſhould now bar any man from the Miniſtery. It is beſt indeed, ſaith he, if it may be to chooſe ſuch onely both for the publike Miniſtery and Magiſtracy, as are not any way deformed, but comely, if enough ſuch may be had, that are fit: but if this cannot well be, the profitable, and able are to be choſen rather, then the ſpecious. As when the ſouldiers deſired to have Ageſilaus, being lame of one foot to be their Captain againſt the Perſians, the Spartans having long conſulted hereabout, at length reſolved, that the Captain had better be lame in his gate, then the army lame in their Captain. And herein I ſubſcribe to Brentius, parents ſhould not, for the indecorum, and the outward ſcandall in it, although, we be not bound now by this law, deſtine ſuch of their children to the Miniſtery, as have any deformity; but in caſe, that they ſee in them excellent parts, which is a thing yet little or not at all regarded in theſe times. But whereas Brentius is againſt the applying of theſe blemiſhes in the body to vices in the ſoul, ſtanding onely for Chriſt myſtically ſet forth here, I am not of his minde. For although Chriſt be firſt and chiefly the end of all the Law, yet becauſe the Miniſters of the Goſpel are moſt near unto him, yea and all the faithfull, for they are his members, I doubt not, but in many things inſtructions are given obſcurely to them in theſe lawes, and in this to Miniſters, in ſpeciall. So alſo Ainſworth, who is 1 For Chriſt. 2 For his Miniſters, as 1 *Tim.*3. 3 For all faithfull, his royall prieſt-hood, 1 *Pet.*2.9. *Epheſ.*5.26. The myſtery touching Chriſt here is excellent, for he was without all blemiſhes both outwardly, and in ſoul, and therefore he is ſaid to be fairer, then the children of men. He was not blinde, for he had the full knowledge of all divine things, and ſaw into all ſecrets of the heart, neither was he lame or broken-footed; for he is not ſlow to come to help thoſe that be in adverſity, He that ſhall come, ſaith the Prophet, will come, and will not tarry. He had no broken hand, or cut off; for his hand is not ſhortened, that it cannot help. He was not ſcabby or ſcurvy to infect or taint others, but ſanctifieth all that touch Diſtinct.36.c.illiteratos. Nemo præſumat ad clericatûs ordines promovere aliquâ parte corporis vitiatos vel imminutos. Diſtinct.55.

Alexander memmisse virtutis per ſingulos gradus.

Brentius. Ad poſtremum ſtatuerunt, melius eſſe inciſum ducem, quàm ducatu exercitum claudicare.

The Myſtery. Pſal.45.2.

touch him by faith, and purifieth them; he was not crook-backt, or any way elſe diſabled to bear the burthens of the ſanctuary, for he alone hath born the moſt heavy burthen of all our ſins, and inſtead of being any other way blemiſhed, he was a very treaſury of all vertues. And to figure out all this chiefly was the Lord ſollicitous about theſe things. I will adde here but a little more out of the Rabbins touching theſe blemiſhes, and then proceed. If any man having had ſome of theſe were cured, he might thenceforth miniſter. If any having not theſe did ſtink of ſweat, or had a ſtinking breath, he prophaned the ſervice, as the blemiſhed, and the old man trembling and ſhaking as he ſtandeth, and the ſick and feeble. Moreover, whoſo fell to idolotry, although he repented, was blemiſhed hereby, ſo as that he might never miniſter any more in the Sanctuary, or if he had offered in any other place contrary to the charge given by the Lord, although this were not counted idolatry. If any ſuch, or any blemiſhed perſon came near the Altar, he was to be beaten. For the due execution of this law, the great Synedrion made it moſt of their work to examine men touching their genealogies and blemiſhes, and if any were found not lawfull for their blemiſhes, whoſe genealogies were found good, they were put into the wood-chamber, and hewed wood for the altar, but they had their portion of the holy things, as their brethren had, which they ate in their fathers houſes. If any were found unlawfull for their genealogies, they put on blacks, and went out of the Court, but they that were found lawfull, put on whites, and went to the altar and miniſtred.

Maimony in Biath hamikdaſh, Ch.7.

See the like 2 Kings 23.9. Ezech.44.10, 13.

He ſhall eat the bread of his God, both of the moſt holy and the holy. By bread here all food is meant, as in the Lords prayer, both the ſhew-bread and the cakes and flour of the meat-offerings, and the fleſh of the ſacrifices, wherefore panis bread, is by ſome derived from πᾶν, all; the moſt holy was the ſhew-bread, the ſin-offerings and treſpaſſe-offerings, the holy, the food of others called light holy, as hath been before ſhewed, *Chap.*1. and of the prieſts being permitted to eat unleavened bread, who had turned to idolatry, it is ſpoken, Ezech. 44.10. herein the blemiſhed were permitted that, which the unclean were not, *Ch.*22.4. This ſhewed, ſaith Heſchius, that now in the Church of Chriſt, they that are found to have ſouls blemiſhed by ſin, that are of the prieſt-hood, meaning by falling to idolatry, or any other groſſe ſin, may not be admitted to miniſter at the Altar, that is, at the Lords Table any more, but they may upon repentance be received to the Communion of this holy food. Radulphus underſtandeth by theſe, ſuch as ſerve God onely outwardly, and have a temporall reward, but by thoſe that come to the Altar, ſuch as ſerve him in ſpirit within, and are finally admitted within the vail, that is, into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Verſe 22.

Heſychius.

Radulph.

Onely he ſhall not go into the vail, nor come nigh the Altar, that he prophane not my ſanctuary: for I the Lord ſanctifie them. How far a blemiſhed prieſt might come, and what he might do, ſee *Ezech.*44.19, &c. he might not come to the Altar, nor thenceforward where the vail was, within which the lawfull prieſts went daily, for they went daily into the firſt Tabernacle, *Heb.*9.6. to do their ſervice: if a blemiſhed prieſt came but to the Altar therefore, although he ſerved not, he was beaten. And this is ſaid to be a prophaning of the Sanctuary, becauſe it was by this meanes made ſubject to be more baſely thonght of: for I the Lord ſanctifie them, that is, as Cazkuni noteth, the Altar and the vail before mentioned.

Verſe 23.

Maimony.

And Moſes told it to Aaron, to his ſons, and to all the children of Iſrael. Here Moſes may ſeem to exceed his commiſſion, which was to ſpeak to Aarons ſons, and to Aaron, verſ. 1. *verſ.*16. whereas he ſpeaketh to the people alſo. In reſolving this divers Expoſitours trouble themſelves with ſeeking divers wayes in vain; Junius, by referring it unto all that hath been ſpoken from the 18 chapter hitherto, where he is bidden alſo to ſpeak to the people; Radulphus, by referring it to the words of the chapter following. Toſtatus, becauſe the prieſts

Verſe 24.

Junius.
Radulph.
Toſtatus.

prieſts marrying with any of their daughters had been ſpoken of, they are acquainted with it that they might be willing. For although Moſes were expreſly bidden to ſpeak onely to Aaron and his ſons, yet he is not bidden to conceal theſe ordinances from the people, wherefore it is much concerning them all to look to the obſervation hereof, he could not but in diſcretion out of his common care of the good of them all, tell them all of theſe things when he had told them unto Aaron and his ſons. Wherefore in ſpeaking of the firſt, verſ 8. he turneth to apply it to Iſrael in generall, ſaying, Thou ſhalt ſanctifie him therefore. And of all the lawes given by him, he is full of applications in all the book of Deuteronomie.

Oleaſter.

CHAP. XXII.

Verſe 2. SPeak to Aaron and his ſons, that they ſeparate themſelves from the holy things of the children of Iſrael, and that they prophane not my holy name in thoſe things that they hallow unto me. The Lord having debarred unclean perſons from eating or touching of his holy things, Ch. 7. 20, 21. leſt the prieſt ſhould think himſelf priviledged, becauſe every male of Aarons family is allowed to eat of the moſt holy things, Chap. 7. 6. yea even the blemiſhed, Chap. 21. 22. he now maketh a particular law againſt their eating till they be cleanſed. And this followeth aptly after the law of blemiſhes, which debarred from coming to the Altar, but not from eating, but this even from eating. This then is not ſo ſpoken to Aaron and to his ſonnes, as if none of them ſhould eat of the holy things, but onely of the unclean amongſt them, as is expreſſed, v. 3.

Calvin.

Verſe 3. Whoſoever he be that goeth unto the holy things, having his uncleanneſſe upon him, that ſoul ſhall be cut off, &c. This comming nigh, ſaith Solomon Jarchi, is not meant but of eating, as is expreſſed, v. 4. But becauſe he that might not come to eat, much leſſe might come to miniſter about the holy things, I can ſee no reaſon, but that a gradation of prohibitions ſhould be admitted here. And the rather becauſe, v. 2. they are commanded to ſeparate themſelves from the holy things, and to come nigh and to eat are diſtinguiſht as two ſeverall things, Chap. 21. 21, 22. the blemiſhed being denied the one, but allowed the other. Wherefore it is, as if he had ſaid, The unclean ſhall not come nigh to miniſter, as neither the blemiſhed, yea they ſhall not onely not come nigh, but not eat thereof, v. 4. nor touch them, as is alſo implied, in that it is ſaid, ſhall not go unto, &c. But what holy things are they that he may not eat? Anſw. The ſacrifices and offerings of all ſorts, yea the heave-offering of the firſt fruits: for every one onely that was clean amongſt the prieſts might eat thereof. But the tithes, although they were holy, yet the tenth being ſeparated from them for an heave-offering might be eaten, as other common things by any.

Sol. Jarchi. Queſt.

Numb. 18 13.

Numb. 18. 31.

Verſe 4, 5.

Verſe 6.

Verſe 7.

Verſe 8. The unclean perſons here taxed are ſuch as be lepers, have a running iſſue, touch any thing made unclean by the dead, from whom any thing goeth by night, touch a creeping thing, or a man in his uncleanneſſe, for the two firſt muſt be cleanſed before they can eat, the lawes whereof ſee before. 1 For the leper, Levit. 13. 14. 2 For him that hath an iſſue, Chap 15. The other muſt waſh his fleſh with water, and at even eat, as the clean, according to the lawes made in theſe caſes for all, Levit. 15. 16. Chap. 18. and Chap. 21. If any unclean did eat of the holy things, God threatened to cut off ſuch, as Levit. 7. 21. where I have already ſhewed, what is meant hereby, and the myſtery, as in the other places conteining the lawes of uncleanneſſes, the meaning and myſteries of them.

That which dieth of it ſelfe, or is torn with beaſts, he ſhall not eat, &c. See the ſame, Leviticus 17. 15. for all Iſraelites, but here it is ſpecially enjoyned the prieſts, as who ſhould moſt carefully of all others abſtain from all polluting things.

They

Verſe 9.

They ſhall therefore keep mine ordinance, leſt they bear ſin for it, and die therefore if they prophane it; I the Lord do ſanctifie them. To bear ſin is ſometime put for bearing the puniſhment of ſin, as Levit. 19. 17. Numb. 9. 13. Chap. 18. 32. but here it ſeemeth to ſet forth, he ſhall be guilty, becauſe the puniſhment death is next expreſſed, or elſe that latter ſaying may be taken as an explication of the former, and then it is to bear the puniſhment: ſo Toſtatus, for it, that is, for mine ordinance againſt eating, when he is unclean, becauſe he hath tranſgreſſed againſt it, or for the holy thing thus prophaned, Junius underſtandeth the Sanctuary: They ſhall keep the ordinance of my Sanctuary, that they bring not ſin to that holy thing, and die in it, that is, in the Sanctuary, as Nadab and Abihu did; and this is moſt agreeable to the Hebrew, I the Lord do ſanctifie them; that is, ſaith Junius, by vindicating the things here offered to me from profanation. But Toſtatus & Vatablus better, I cõmand them, that is the prieſts to be holy, when they miniſter about theſe holy things. Radulphus will have it underſtood of ſanctifying them to be prieſts, and enabling them to do thus, that none might complain of inſufficiency to keep theſe ordinances.

Toſtatus.
Junius.
Toſtatus.
Vatablus
Radulph.

Verſe 10.

No ſtranger ſhall eat of the holy thing, &c. Becauſe he is now in making ordinances about the eating of the offerings of the Lord, here follow lawes, ſhewing who may not eat of them, although he be in the prieſts houſe, and who of his houſhold may. The ſtranger, the ſojourner, and the hired ſervant may not. The ſtranger is not onely one of another Nation, or of another Tribe, but if he were a Levite, and not one of the prieſts family, he is the ſtranger meant here, as may be gathered by conſidering, that onely the conſtant members of his family are allowed to eat of the prieſts portion, called the holy thing. The ſtranger then is any other man that may haply come and be entertained by him, but is no dweller with him. The ſojourner is well known to be one that harboureth with him by agreement for a time; the hired ſervant one that ſerveth in his houſe for wages by the day or week. Maimony by the forreigner and hireling underſtanding the uncircumciſed, as Exod. 12. 45. where they are forbidden to eat the paſſeover, ſaith, That if a prieſt be uncircumciſed, this is a barre to him from eating of the heave-offering, & not onely is it meant that he ſhould not eat, but he that ſhould not drink or anoint himſelf with the holy things. But although Exod. 12. 45. b ſtranger the uncircumciſed onely is meant, yet elſewhere any other is meant hereby, that is not of the prieſts, as Numb. 3. 10. And according to this it is ſaid, verſe 12. If a prieſts daughter be married to a ſtranger: for to a ſtranger uncircumciſed it is not to be thought, that any prieſt would marry his daughter.

Maimony in Trumoth, Ch. 11

Verſe 11.

The perſons that may eat, were ſuch as were bought, or born in his houſe, and his children, not onely males, as was often ſaid before, Levit. 6. 18. Ch. 7. 6, &c. but his daughters alſo, viz. of the heave-offerings of the tithes, Numb. 18. and of the peace-offerings, Levit. 7. 19. and other things, that were the prieſts portion, except thoſe that were ſpecially limited to the males, they might eat thereof, and their wives and daughters. But for the daughter, provided, that ſhe be not married, and living away, v. 12. for then ſhe may not eat, becauſe ſhe is now as a ſtranger, and not a member of a prieſts family, unleſſe ſhe be a widow, or divorced, and ſo returned again to live in her fathers houſe, as in her youth, not having any childe, or, as Maimony ſaith, her childe being dead, for if ſhe hath a childe living, or be with childe, ſhe may not eat, unleſſe it be by a prieſt, by whom to have a childe being his wife was counted by the Hebrews a priviledge unto her in this reſpect. Inſomuch as if ſhe had been firſt married to another and had a childe by him, whereby ſhe was diſabled even when he was dead, yet being after married to a prieſt, and having a childe by him, ſhe was priviledged. Touching thoſe that were bought, Rab Solomon underſtandeth this of Canaanitiſh ſervants, who being once bought were both they and theirs after them his ſervants for ever, whereas the Hebrew ſervants, although bought, went out free the ſeventh year, or

Verſe 12.
Verſe 13.

Maimony.

R. Solomon.

in the year of Jubile. But if the Canaanitiſh ſervants, and the children comming of them might eat of the holy things, becauſe born in the prieſts houſe, and ſo continuing members thereof, much more the bought Hebrew-ſervant, as Toſtatus reaſoneth.

Toſtatus.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

For the myſtery; Heſychius by the ſtranger underſtandeth a ſtranger from the faith, an Infidel that hath not imbraced the true Religion, and by the ſojourner and hireling the wicked wordling in the Church of God, as in the prieſts houſe, who ſet their mindes upon worldly gain or glory by their religion, ſuch ſhall not partake of the holy things, or if they do, their ſouls are not fed herewith. Again, by the bought ſervant he underſtandeth one truly redeemed by Chriſt, and called by the preaching of the Goſpel to be the ſervant of God for ever; by one born in the houſe, the truly regenerate that cometh of believing parents, ſuch ſhall eat and be fed by the holy things to eternall life. Laſtly, by the prieſts daughter married to a ſtranger he underſtandeth one born in the Church, but revolting to Paganiſme or Judaiſme or any hereſie, and by her becoming a widow, &c. one repenting of ſuch revolt, and returning to the true faith again, ſuch ſhall eat, but not the other; the parents faith ſhall not benefit the apoſtatizing childe. Moreover, the Lord would by theſe ordinances make the ſacrifices, which all figured out Chriſt, the more venerable in the peoples eſteem. Brentius.

Ezech 18.

Brentius.

Verſe 14.

Here, becauſe a man haply ſometime may eat of the holy things, which it is not lawfull for him to eat of unawares, it is provided in this caſe, what is to be done by him, viz. he muſt put a fifth part to the holy thing, and give it to the prieſt; that is, ſaith Maimony, He muſt pay to the worth of the thing eaten, and adde a fifth part more: the worth of the thing to that prieſt in particular, whoſe it was, and the fifth part more to which of the prieſts he would; and the eſtimation was to be made according to the worth, when it was eaten, not when it was paid, although it were then dearer. And he defineth that to be eating in ignorance, when he knoweth not that death is the puniſhment for eating, although he knoweth the thing eaten to be holy. If he eateth hereof preſumptuouſly, it is cutting off by the hand of God. And from the generall law of treſpaſſes, Chap. 5. he muſt offer a ram for this his treſpaſſe alſo.

Maimony.

Verſe 15, 16 Pelican. Oleaſter. Lorinus.

They ſhall not prophane the holy things of the children of Iſrael, &c. Or ſuffer them to bear the iniquity of a treſpaſſe, &c. Some by, they ſhall not prophane, underſtand the people. But it is plainly ſpoken of the prieſts, and againſt others being meant, make theſe words, the holy things of the children of Iſrael, not the holy things of the Prieſts. They ſhall not prophane then, is, they ſhall not give of theſe holy things, which be their portion for them and their families to feed upon, to others, to be indifferently eaten: yea, v. 16. they ſhall not ſuffer them, they ſhould do their beſt endeavour to preſerve them from treſpaſſing herein, and if they have faulted, urge them to this reſtitution, that ſin may not remain upon them. And the reaſon of all this is, I the Lord ſanctifie them, theſe holy things are made ſo by me, and therefore not to be prophaned.

Verſe 18.

Whatſoever he be of the houſe of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers in Iſrael, that will offer his oblation for all his vowes, and for all his free-will-offerings, &c. Of free-will-offerings it was ſpoken before, Chap. 1. and of offerings upon vowes, Chap. 7. 16. and of peace-offerings, Chap. 3. and in the firſt it is required, that it ſhould be without blemiſh, and a male; and in the other, that it ſhould be without blemiſh. Now becauſe theſe blemiſhes were not particularly determined, what they were, theſe ordinances are here repeated again, that the blemiſhes meant might in particular be made known, and withall, whereas Iſraelites with their oblations onely vvere ſpoken of before, the caſe is alſo here put. If an Iſraelite or ſtrangers in Iſrael, that is, any of another Nation converted to the true faith, vvherefore the Septuagint render it, Proſelytes, but the vvord ſtrangers is othervviſe taken, v. 25. for the uncircumciſed vvhereſoever inhabiting.

Blinde

Blinde, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvie, &c. or that hath any thing superfluous, or lacking on his parts, &c. Here are the particular blemishes reckoned up which make Sacrifices unlawfull, that is, the offerings upon vow, the voluntary and the peace-offerings. Of sin-offerings or trespasse-offerings it is not here spoken by name, but they also are to be understood: for if free-will-offerings must have none of these blemishes, then these necessary Sacrifices enjoyned by the law much more. The Hebrews note, because it is said that it must be without blemish and perfect, that two things are set forth hereby; without blemish, externally and perfect within, so that if being killed, any defect or redundancie were found within, it was unlawfull, and must be carried out to the place of burning, as if it had but one kidney, or three, &c. and for blemish, they say, If any man did cut an ear of it off, or the like, it was blemished. In particularizing the blemishes, the Lord followeth in some sort the order before touching the Priests blemishes, *Chap.*21.18,19. For he beginneth with the blinde, as there, and then although not in the same order, the broken, the scurvie and the scabbed are mentioned, of all which see, *Chap.*21.18,19, &c. Of any thing superfluous also, *vers.*23. but for the word translated lacking, Hebr. קלוט, curtum, vel contractum, it is not used there, but חרם, signifying cut off, in stead of it, and that hath been expounded of a nose cut off in particular; but this by the Vulgar Latine is rendered, a tail or an ear cut off, which Hesychius followeth, making the mystery of it accordingly. The Septuagint render it curtailed, but the word signifieth any member cut off, wanting, or shrunk up. Junius, any member over-short or long, but this is not all meant hereby, but cut off or wanting, as hath been already said. A wen, Hebr. יבלת, of יבל, to draw or raise, it is therefore any rising upon the body, as of a wen or wart, &c. so Vatablus & Pagninus. The Septuagint, an itching. For maimed, Hebr. is חרוץ, cut or mutilated in any part: the Septuagint render it ἠσθμησον, the tongue being cut.

Verse 22.
Verse 23.
Tostatus.
Maimony in Issurei mis'eath c.2.
Hesychius.
Junius.
Vatablus. Pagninus.

That which is bruised, broken, or crushed, or cut. The Septuagint, and after them the Vulgar Latine understand this particularly of bruised or broken stones, and so Hesychius applieth it mystically, and Radulphus, and because it is added here, Ye shall not do it in your land, it is gathered, that they might not cut or break away the stones from any beast, they might not geld them, or men, or birds, so Maimony; and therefore it is read, as also the word will bear, Ye shall not make such, לא-תעשו. So likewise Tostatus and Cajetan. But others will have broken or bruised, &c. in any part understood, as Willet, and by doing this they understand offering such in Sacrifice, or suffering them to be offered, as Junius, Vatablus, Pellican. I prefer that Exposition, whereby stones broken or cut off are understood, both because thus the beasts blemish shall answer to the Priests in the same part, *Chap.*21.20. and also because broken in generall in any part goeth before, *vers.*22. yet certainly the gelding of any beast is not here forbidden, although men indeed ought not to be gelt, *Deut.*23.1. for, ye shall not do thus in your land, is nothing but a conclusion of this law against offering blemished beasts, and therefore rightly rendered in our New Translation, ye shall not offer such. If it should be understood as spoken against making such, it may as well be taken to be against cutting an ear, or a tail, or any other member of a beast for a mans private use, because a beast having any thing cut off, is blemished according to this law.

Verse 24.
Hesychius. Radulph.
Maimony, in Issurei biah, c. 16. Willet. Junius. Vatablus. Pelican.

If any beast, say the Hebrews, having a blemish, were brought, it might not be carried away again, because it was now made an offering to the Lord, but it was to be sold, and with the price another fit for Sacrifice was to be bought with the money, and after this redeeming of it, it might be used or eaten any where, as any other common thing, so saith Maimony, we have heard that, *Deut.*12.15. expounded of such beasts, as have after offering been redeemed. But he that brought such for an offering was to be beaten. The reason of all this carefull provision against blemishes in Sacrifices was, as againſt blemiſhes in prieſts, to maintain the dignity of this ſervice, which otherwiſe would have grown contemptible. For it is againſt the dignity of an earthly prince to have beaſts blinde or maimed or withered offered unto him, *Mal.*1.8. But what meaneth it, *v.*23. that a bullock or a lamb having ſomething ſuperfluous or wanting may be offered for a free-will-offering, but not for a vow? Maimony anſwereth, that by a voluntary offering here is meant an offering for the maintenance of the Sanctuary, but not to come upon the Altar, for nothing imperfect or blemiſhed muſt be offered in any caſe upon the Altar; it is meant then, that whoſo would, might give ſuch a beaſt, of which money being made it might ſerve for the maintenance of the ſanctuary.

Maimony in Issurei bisbe, c.1.

Mal 1.8 14,15
Queſt.
Verſe 23.

Maimony in Erachin c.5.

This is alſo followed by Lyranus, for even in ſpeaking of free-will-offerings before, *Chap.*3. it is ſaid, they muſt be without blemiſh. But Toſtatus oppoſeth this, becauſe offerings for ſacrifice are here ſpoken of, and not any other, and becauſe even unclean beaſts might be given to make money of them for the maintenance of the Sanctuary, and therefore a beaſt blemiſhed much more; and ſo if ſuch an offering were meant here, a blemiſh of ſuperfluity or deficiency onely ſhould not doubtleſſe have been ſpoken of: wherefore he reſolveth, that in free-will-offerings, to which a man is not tied either by vow, or by the Law of ſin-offerings, it was permitted to bring an offering with ſome little blemiſh of excreſcency, &c. ſo that it were without the greater, that men might not be diſcouraged from bringing their gifts, as otherwiſe they might have been. And this ſeemeth to me moſt reaſonable. For the myſtery of this, the Lord would hereby ſhew, ſaith Brentius, that ſuch duties as are done by us in faith, although accompanied with imperfections, are acceptable, but becauſe in other ſacrificings to expiate ſin there muſt be no blemiſh at all, otherwiſe they could not be acceptable, this ſhewed, that by nothing, that we can do or ſuffer is ſin expiated, it is not accepted of as any ſatisfaction before God for our ſins, the ſacrifice of Chriſt alone, which was without all blemiſh, can do this, and nothing elſe. And whereas immunity from blemiſhes is ſo ſtrictly ſtood upon in ſacrifices in this law, this ſhewed, ſaith Calvin, that our prayers and worſhip, that we offer to God at any time, muſt not be blemiſhed with by thoughts of ſin or any worldly thing, but we muſt onely be intent hereunto, or elſe it is not acceptable.

Verſe 18.
Levit.27.12.

The Myſtery.

Brentius.

Calvin.

Verſe 25.

Neither from a ſtrangers hand ſhall ye offer the bread of your God of any of theſe, becauſe blemiſhes be in them, &c. By ſtranger here the heathen are underſtood, who yet ſome of them have brought offerings to the Lord at Jeruſalem, as Cyrus, Ezra 6 8, 9, 10. If the heathen, ſaith Maimony bring peace-offerings, they offer them for burnt-offerings, for his heart is towards Heaven, but the heathen bring no meat or drink-offerings, for they are of the congregations, neither do they impoſe their hands upon the head of the beaſt, for this the Iſraelite onely may do: and the ſacrifices brought by ſuch muſt be without blemiſh, although blemiſhed things might be offered by the ſons of Noah, except ſuch as lacked a limb, yet upon the Altar of the Lord nothing blemiſhed may now come, ſo Solomon Jarchi. The Hebrewes then expound this of blemiſhed beaſts brought by the heathen to be offered to the Lord: as ye that are Iſraelites, ſhall bring no blemiſhed offering, ſo ye ſhall take no ſuch from the hand of a ſtranger. Lyranus oppoſeth this, uſing divers reaſons againſt it. 1 Becauſe it is bread, which is here ſpoken of, but in that is no blemiſh. 2 An heathen uncircumciſed might not come into the Temple to bring an offering. 3 He might not eat the Paſſeover, much leſſe any part of other ſacrifices. 4 He might not impoſe his hands upon a ſacrifice. And therefore he ſaith it is meant, that no ſuch ſhould be permitted to bring any offering, becauſe they had the corruption in them, which blemiſhed all their offerings. Munſter and Fonſeca by ſtranger underſtand here one uncircumciſed indeed, but yet living after the ſeven precepts of Noah to be juſt in judgement, to bleſſe, to acknowledge God, to flee inceſt, ſhedding Maimony in Magnaſeh hakarbanoth, c.3.

Sol. Iarchi.

Lyranus.

Munſter.
Fonſeca.

ſhedding of blood, rapine and idols, and not to cut off a member from a live beaſt. Of theſe, although they might receive ſacrifices to offer, yet not any blemiſhed ones Calvin by receiving from their hand, will have buying of blemiſht ſacrifices of them underſtood: for as they might not bring a beaſt of their own which had a blemiſh, ſo they might not buy one ſuch of a ſtranger for an offering. Brentius followeth the firſt, becauſe God had his elect even amongſt the heathen. Junius, that of Lyranus, becauſe the heathen is both polluted himſelf and whatſoever he hath, by ſuperſtition and idolatry. Toſtatus alſo reaſoneth for the ſame, becauſe ſacrificing was a profeſſion of the faith of the Meſſiah that was to be ſlain, which the Heathen wanted. For this alſo Willet ſtandeth, ſaying, That the ſacrifices of the wicked might not be taken, neither as the hire of an whore. And it was decreed accordingly in a Councel, that the Church ſhould not receive oblations of them that did not communicate, nor of them which committed rapine. And Liberius having money offered him of an Arrian in his baniſhment under Conſtantius, refuſed, ſaying, Primò diſce eſſe Chriſtianus.

Calvin.

Brentius.
Junius.

Toſtatus.

Willet.
Deut. 23.18.
Elibert. Conc. c. 18.
Carthag. 4. c. 94.

I prefer the firſt Expoſition, and the Text doth plainly favour it, The bread of your God of theſe, that is, of theſe blemiſhed offerings, becauſe their corruption is in them, a blemiſh is in them, that is, in ſuch offerings by whomſoever they are brought, or from whence ſoever, the blemiſh maketh them alike unlawfull. And this law ſeemeth to be added for ſtrangers, leſt it ſhould be thought, if any ſuch not being ſo well inſtructed, ſhould bring, he might be born withall, and their offerings taken, though blemiſhed, eſpecially to incourage them in the good affections to Gods worſhip, appearing thus to be begun in them. That offerings were ſent by Cyrus a ſtranger, and taken and offered cannot be denied. And receiving cannot ſo well be put for buying of a ſtranger, as Calvin would have it. To Lyranus his reaſons I anſwer. 1 The word rendered bread, is commonly put for all offerings brought unto God. 2 Although a ſtranger might not come into the Temple, yet he might ſend by another. 3 For eating or impoſing hands, although he might not do theſe, yet this hindered not, but that he might ſend an offering. And for his idolatry that might ſeem to pollute all things coming from him, it could not but argue ſome repenting and turning of his heart herefrom towards heaven, as the Rabbin ſpeaketh, in that it came into his minde to offer to the God of heaven. They ſhall not be accepted for you, that is, becauſe of their blemiſhes, if ye take and offer them, ye ſhall not do to me any acceptable ſervice, but rather for ſo doing incur my diſpleaſure.

When a ſheep or bullock or goat is brought forth, it ſhall be ſeven dayes with the dam, and from the eighth day it may be offered, &c. Of this law ſee before, Exod. 22.30. It is repeated here again, to adde more unto it, viz whether it be cow or ewe, ye ſhall not kill it and her young both in one day, that is, when the young commeth to be eight dayes old; ſo that an oblation may be made thereof, the dam ſhall not die the ſame day alſo. This the Hebrews expound of all clean beaſts, and of them onely; and if the male which begat the young be certainly known, they underſtand by it both the female and him alſo. A like precept is, Deut 22.6. But becauſe the end of this law, as all agree, is to beat down cruelty even towards the beaſt, that cruelty towards man might be much more avoided, it is better to underſtand it of all beaſts, whether clean or unelean. My people, the ſons of Iſrael, ſaith Targum Jonathan hereupon; Be ye mercifull upon earth, as our father is mercifull in heaven, a cow or an ewe and the young ye ſhall not kill both in one day.

Verſe 27.

Verſe 28.

Targum Jonathan.

For the myſtery; Heſychius applieth it to the Jews paſſeover as the dam, and to the paſch of Chriſt, as the young, becauſe in time it was after it, both ſhould not be kept upon one day. But it may better be applied unto Chriſt and his diſciples, for when he as the mother, was taken, he bade let the diſciples go. Procopius applieth it to the Jews, of whom a remnant vvas reſerved, vvhen the reſt vvere deſtroyed. See a like precept, Exod. 34.26.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

Procopius.

When

Verſe 29,30

When ye will offer a ſacrifice of Thanksgiving, offer it at your own will, it ſhall be eaten the ſame day. Of theſe lavves ſee before, *Chap.*7.12,18. but the Lord repeateth the ſame here again, leſt this charge about the voluntary offerings ſpoken of in that Chapter ſhould be forgotten or neglected the more, if ſo juſt an occaſion being offered, it had been omitted.

Verſe 31,32

Here is a coucluſion of all theſe precepts, *Ch.*21. 22, preſſing them to the obſervation of all things, to do othervviſe being a prophaning of Gods holy name, vvhereas the children of Iſrael eſpecially ſhould hallovv it, becauſe God had hallowed them, that is, ſeparated them as his peculiar people from all others, and done more for them in bringing them out of Egypt, that they might be holy to him, and keep themſelves from all ſinne againſt any of his lawes, becauſe to be tainted with ſin, even in theſe things, was to be polluted.

CHAP. XXIII.

Verſe 2,3.

THeſe are my feaſts, ſix dayes ſhall work be done, but the ſeventh is a Sabbath of reſt, an holy convocation, &c. Of this precept ſee before, Exod 23.12. Chap. 34.21. But here it is further added, an holy Convocation, to ſhew, that they ſhould not onely reſt, but aſſemble together to worſhip God at his Sanctuary by ſacrifices, that muſt be doubled now, Numb. 28.9,10. and afterwards in their Synagogues in every City, *Act.*15.21. For herein was the difference between this and the other feaſts following in this Chapter, all muſt for the celebrating of them aſſemble from all parts to Jeruſalem.

Exod.23.17.
Exod.34 23.

Verſe 4.

Theſe are the feaſts of the Lord, holy Convocations which ye ſhall proclaim in their ſeaſons. The ſame feaſts were inſtituted, Exod 23.15. but neither was it ſaid, that they ſhould be holy Convocations, or proclaimed, or the manner in particular of keeping them ſet down, or the times. Wherefore to ſupply this defect, theſe feaſts are anew again inſtituted in this place.

Verſe 5.

In the 14 day of the firſt moneth at even is the Lords paſſeover, &c. Touching the paſſeover I have ſpoken fully upon *Exod.*12. and therefore will not repeat any thing there ſaid again. But it is to be noted here, that he ſaith, The 14 day at even is the Lords paſſeover, and *verſ.*6. The 15 day is the feaſt of unleavened bread. Whereupon Cazkuni, the evening of the firſt good day, and that night is called the paſſeover, but thence-forward to the end of ſeven dayes was called the feaſt of unleavened bread. The firſt and the ſeventh of theſe dayes there muſt be holy Convocations, and no ſervile work done, and all the ſeven dayes they muſt offer offerings made by fire to the Lord. All manner of work upon the firſt and the laſt of theſe dayes are forbidden, *Exod.*12. 15,16. Saving about that which every one muſt eat: but here ſervile work is ſpoken of, but that is any work, beſides about dreſſing of meat to be then eaten. And here the Rabbins put a difference between the prohibition of work upon theſe dayes, and upon the Sabbath of the ſeventh day, and of the atonement-day: for upon thoſe they might not ſo much as work about making ready their meat, upon the other they might, *Exod.*16.23. *Levit.*16.29. And they ſay there were ſix dayes in the year wherein no ſervile work might be done, beſides the atonement-day, and the Sabbath of the ſeventh day, in which no manner of work might be done; that is, the firſt and ſeventh day of the paſſeover, the firſt and eighth of the feaſt of tabernacles, the feaſt of Pentecoſt, and the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth. For doing works not neceſſary upon theſe dayes beating was the puniſhment; for working any work upon the Sabbath, upon proof by witneſſes, ſtoning to death, as *Numb.*15.35. And the evenings of feaſts no work might be done, yet the puniſhment for faulting herein was none, unleſſe upon the evening of the paſſeover, for which he was excommunicated. But in extending the command againſt doing any work upon the Sabbath-day, they were over-curious. For they held

Cazkuni.

*Maimony in Iom. tob. c.*1.

Philo de vita Moſis.

held it unlawfull to pull a branch, or fruit from a tree upon this day, to go up into a tree, or to hang up any thing, or to eat an apple gathered then, or to roaſt an apple, to wring a wet cloth, to ſtop a bottle or veſſell leaking, to rub the dirt from a garment, to unſaddle an horſe, or to go up on his back, to kill a flea unleſſe it bite, or to light a candle, to eat an egge laid that day, to play upon an inſtrument, to ſtill a childe crying, or to take a beaſt out of a ditch, but to feed him there till the Sabbath be paſt, or to fetch any thing out of an houſe being on fire but neceſſary food and apparell, or to ſail, wherefore a Jewiſh Pilot being upon the ſea would not upon this day handle the rudder to guide the ſhip. But hereof and of the like it may well be ſaid, Who required this at your hand? And as they ſtrained the precept about the Sabbath moſt fondly, ſo upon the dayes of unleavened bread coming betwixt the firſt and the laſt, the Scribes impoſed more then the Lord hath done; for becauſe they were convocations of holineſſe, they were dayes of feaſting in the Sanctuary; and therefore, ſay they, it was unlawfull to work in them, that they be not like other profane dayes, wherein there is no holineſſe at all: yet they allowed in theſe dayes to gather fruits, which would otherwiſe be marred, and to reap, and threſh, and fan for his neceſſity, he wanting food at that time, to judge matters, and to write in the Court, to write reckonings and letters to friends, and to do needfull things about the dead, &c. ſo Maimony. And the like they taught touching the dayes in the feaſt of boothes betwixt the firſt and the laſt. Touching the offerings to be made upon theſe dayes, ſee *Numb.*28.19,20,21.

Upon the Sabbath the Jews ſtucti ff.

Cataloz. negat. præcep. 66 Synef. Epiſt.

Eſay 1.12.

Maimony in Iom. tob. Ch.6. But a man might not in this time marry a wife, leſt the joy of it be forgotten through the joy of wedding.

Verſe 10,11

When ye ſhall be come into the land which I give you, and reap the harveſt thereof, then ye ſhall bring a ſheaf of firſt-fruits unto the Prieſt. And he ſhall wave the ſheaf, &c. on the morrow after the Sabbath he ſhall wave it, &c. This time was within the dayes of the Paſſeover, when the harveſt began to be ripe in that countrey, the ſixteenth day of Abib, which was the day after the Paſſeover here called the Sabbath: the word tranſlated ſheaf, עומר, Homer, becauſe a ſheaf being threſhed commonly made an Omer, the tenth part of a buſhell, and this was barley, for barley in that countrey was ripe firſt, and wheat not till Pentecoſt, and it was not meant that every one ſhould bring a ſheaf, but that one ſhould be brought for all the congregation, of the manner of doing which ſee before, *Chap.*2.14. and of the myſtery; where alſo three ſorts of firſt-fruits are ſet forth. 1 This of ears of corn. 2 One of bread at Pentecoſt. 3 The firſt-fruits of all their increaſe that yeer, which is ſaid to have been the ſixtieth part at the leaſt, and was brought the ſeventh moneth, *Exod.*22.29. at the feaſt of tabernacles.

So the Chaldee, and Targum Ionathan, after the good day or the Feaſt, the Septuagint after the firſt of the Sabbaths.

And ye ſhall offer upon the day when ye wave the ſheaf, an he-lamb without blemiſh, &c. and a meat-offering, two tenth-deals of fine flour, &c. It is to be underſtood, ſaith Jarchi, that this lamb was to be offered now with the wave-ſheaf, beſides all other offerings made upon this day, *Numb.*28.24. And whereas uſually one tenth part of an Ephah was appointed with a lamb, that is, an Homer, *Numb.*15.4,5. with this ſingularly there muſt come two tenth parts, and with none elſe, yet the oil is not doubled, nor the wine, but as in other burnt-offerings of a lamb, a fourth part of an hin. Of oil it is not here expreſſed how much, but a log for each Omer, that is, half a pinte is underſtood, for ſo much went to every Omer, ſaith Maimony. But herein he was deceived, for *Numb.*15.4,5. the fourth part of an hin of oil, as of wine is appointed, and an hin contained twelve logs or half pintes, ſo that the ordinary for an Omer of fine flour was a pinte and half, and ſo likewiſe of wine, and thus much and no more was now offered with theſe two Omers. Before this offering made it was unlawfull to eat either bread, green ears, or parched corn of that yeer. If any tranſgreſſed herein he was beaten, and if in all three, three times; but this ſixteenth day of Abib or Niſan being come, at mid-day it was lawfull to eat new corn by thoſe that dwelt far off, becauſe they were ſure that the Synedrion would provide before that time, that this offering

Verſe 12,13

Solom. Jarchi.

Maimony.

Verſe 14.

*Maimony of forbidden meats, Chap.*10

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

offering ſhould be finiſhed. Heſychius by the ſheaf now offered underſtandeth Chriſt, who roſe again the morrow after the Jews Sabbath, by whom all things are ſanctified unto the faithfull, as by theſe firſt-fruits all their corn was ſanctified to the Jewes; and by the two tenth-deals he underſtandeth the two natures of Chriſt; and by the oil, the Spirit reſting upon him, and likewiſe by the wine, according to that, Epheſ. 5. 19. and Act. 2. 15, 17. The myſtical applications of others here I omit. Moreover, by bringing the firſt ripe to the Lord, it was ſhewed, that all increaſe of the fruits of the earth come from him, and are his, neither may we uſe them but by his leave and allowance, which we have not, unleſſe we look up thankfully before we eat thereof, to him the giver, bleſſing and glorifying his holy name.

Note.

1 Cor. 10 30.

Verſe 15. Verſe 16.

And ye ſhall number ſeven Sabbaths from the day wherein ye brought the ſheaf, even untill the morrow after the ſeventh ſabbath 50 dayes, and ye ſhall bring a new meat-offering, &c. The Hebrewes ſay, that as at the feaſt of the Paſſeover was their barley-harveſt, ſo now was their wheat-harveſt. Seven Sabbaths which they muſt number, are put for ſeven weekes, for ſo the Hebrewes call weekes, and therefore, Mat. 28. 1. the firſt of the Sabbath, is put for the firſt day of the week, and they called the next day the ſecond of the Sabbath, and ſo the 3, 4, &c. Becauſe of the 50 dayes alſo here ſpoken of this feaſt was called Pentecoſt, Acts 2. 1. and it is noted to be the very time of giving the law, Exod. 19. For that was 50 dayes after their coming out of Egypt, as may there be gathered, ſo that although it was kept to praiſe God for the increaſe of their wheat, and to ſanctifie it unto their uſe; yet this day in particular was choſen to celebrate the giving of the law, and the great terrour and majeſtie accompanying the ſame, that they might be the more ſtirred up to the obedience thereof. And as the Paſſeover did apparently in the time thereof ſet forth Chriſt dying and riſing again for our ſalvation, ſo this feaſt of Pentecoſt figured out the giving of the ſpirituall law, the Goſpel at this time by the Spirit coming down like fiery tongues upon the Apoſtles, and inabling them to preach the Goſpel to all peoples and nations, thus reaping as it were that which others had ſowed, as this was the harveſt-time and ſo a time of reaping. And a new meat-effering, ſaith Heſychius was now brought, to ſhew, that all things now were made new, the old were paſt, that is, the old rites and ceremonies, wherewith God was worſhipped under the law, now ceaſed, and a ſpirituall ſervice altogether was brought in, in the room thereof.

The Myſtery. Heſych.

John 4. 35. Heſychius.

John 4. 23.

Verſe 17.

And ye ſhall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth-deals of fine flour, they ſhall be baked with leaven, they are the firſt-fruits. In their offering of barley there was but one Omer, but now of their wheat there muſt be two, becauſe that was better, and therefore fitteſt to be brought unto the Lord, who required the beſt of their fruits. And it muſt be brought out of their habitations, that is, at all the congregations charge, not fetcht out of another land, but growing that year in their own countrey. But herein theſe loaves were ſingular, that they muſt be leavened, clean contrary to the law, Levit. 2. 11. no meat-offering ſhall be with leaven. For the reconciling of theſe places, ſee the notes upon, Levit. 2. 11. Leaven is ſometime taken in a good ſenſe for the Spirit working ſecretly in the heart, as leaven in the meal, as well as in a bad, for corruption, and therefore it is appointed here; when the Lord would ſet forth the Spirit ſeaſoning and leavening his in that Pentecoſt, they are a new meat-offering of the Goſpel, that are thus leavened with the Spirit; and the loaves are two, becauſe two natures of Chriſt, perfect divinity and perfect humanity are held by thoſe that are ſo ſeaſoned by the Spirit: to this effect alſo Heſychius, adding moreover, that theſe two did ſet forth the Law and the Goſpel, obedience to both, that muſt be offered now by all the faithfull. For the preparing of theſe loaves, the Hebrewes ſay, that as in providing the barley-ſheaf, they threſhed

Numb. 18. 12. Harmony. Junius.

The Myſtery.

Heſychius.

Maimony in Tamidim. Ch. 8. e three three Seahs, that is, a buſhel, ſo they did now of wheat, and out of that took two Omers, making two loaves or cakes, not upon the feaſt-day, but the evening before, the length of each loaf being ſeven handbreadths, the breadth four, and the thickneſſe four fingers.

And ye ſhall offer with the bread ſeven lambes without blemiſh, one bullock and two rams for a burnt-offering, and their meat-offering, &c. If we compare this with, *Num.*28.27. where the ſacrifices of this day are again ſpoken of, we ſhall finde a difference, for there two bullocks and one ram are appointed to be offered with ſeven lambs for a burnt-offering. But this is reſolved thus, thoſe beaſts and meat-offerings, &c. ſpoken of, Num. 28.27. were offerings added over and above theſe here mentioned, which were offered with the two loaves, ſo that 14 lambes in all were offered upon this, and other beaſts making the number up 24 in all; ſo Maimony and Toſtatus alſo. What the meat-offerings and drink-offerings added hereunto were, ſee *Chap.*2, &c. now all theſe ſacrifices ſerved to ſet forth Chriſt, and ſo many muſt be offered at a time to draw the people the more away from ſacrificing to Idols, and not that God took ſuch pleaſure herein. Verſe 18. *Maimony in Tamedin. Ch.*8. Toſtatus. Pelican.

And ye ſhall ſacrifice one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering, &c. That there might be no kinde of offering omitted upon this day, a ſin-offering and peace-offerings are alſo here appointed, a ſin-offering in acknowledgement of their ſins and unworthineſſe, and a peace-offering which was an offering of payments, to pay thankfulneſſe to God for his benefits. The Hebrews note that the Congregation never offered peace-offerings but at this time onely. But the offering for ſin, (*Chap.*4.14. for the whole Congregation is appointed to be a bullock, here a kid; but that, as Toſtatus ſaith, was in the caſe of ſome particular ſin committed by the Congregation, this for ſin in generall, and therefore it being no ſpeciall but a common ſacrifice, it was not burnt without the campe as that, but as other ſin-offerings went to the Prieſts. Verſe 19. Maimony of Offerings, *Chap.*1. Toſtatus.

They ſhall be holy for the Prieſts. Whereas it is ſaid, The prieſt ſhall wave them with the bread, &c. the Hebrews ſay, the manner was thus: They brought the two lambes, whileſt they were alive and waved them, then having killed and flayed them, the breſt and right ſhoulder were cut off, and the prieſt putting his hands under them together with the loaves waved them on the Eaſt-ſide, and then having burned their fat, the prieſts ate the fleſh, and the High Prieſt taking one loaf for himſelf, the reſt of the prieſts had the other to eat: ſo Maimony. In other peace-offerings of particular perſons the prieſts had onely the breſt and right ſhoulder, and the owner the reſt, but all this went to the prieſts, becauſe it was the Congregations, and ſo could not go to all. From this feaſt of Pentecoſt our Pentecoſt took the beginning, being as the paſchall day, a ſolemn time of baptizing, the baptized being clad in white, whence the name Whitſunday, or Dominica in albis came. Some have kept this feaſt upon the 40 day, and are therefore cenſured, as Hereticks by the Melevitan Councell, but there was no need under the Goſpel to be ſo ſtrict herein. Verſe 20. *Maimony in Tamedin, Ch.*8. Levit.7.32. Melevit. Concil. 3.*c.*43.

When ye reap your harveſt, ye ſhall not make clean riddance of the corners, nor gather the gleanings, &c. For this ſee before, *Chap.*19.9. but the ſame is here again repeated, to ſhew, what a care the Lord hath of the poor, and ſpecially that they might hereby be made to rejoyce at this time of joy, and that the rich might be in the better way of enjoyning a bleſſing in their crops, and not have all their ſacrifices at theſe times for want of this charity fruſtrated, as they ſhould, if relying upon them they ſhould harden themſelves, and not leave the gleanings for the poor. Moreover, hereby was intimated, that charity to the poor is a ſacrifice well-pleaſing to God, as Hebrews 13.16. Verſe 22. Deut.16.11. Deut.24.19.

The ſeventh moneth, the firſt day of the moneth ye ſhall have a Sabbath, a memoriall of blowing trumpets, &c. The firſt day of the moneth was amongſt the Verſe 24.

Hebrews the new Moon, for by the Moon they counted their moneths, and every first day was a festivall, and had many sacrifices offered thereupon, *Numb.*28.11. But the first day of the seventh moneth, answering to our September, which of old was counted the first of the year, was a greater festival, and therefore over and above the sacrifices of other new Moons, there were more singularly appointed for this day, *Numb.*29.1,6. This moneth was called Tizri in Syriack, of Tizesh new wine which was then made, and in Hebrew Ethanim, strengths, as is most probable; because the strong foundations of the world were then laid. And although for Ecclesiasticall affairs the moneth Abib, or Nisan in the Spring was the beginning of the year amongst the Hebrews since *Exod.*12. yet for Civill affairs the moneth Ethanim was the beginning, as for the year of Jubile, *Chap.*25. and for every seventh year, and if it had been otherwise begun in the Spring, they could not in the seventh year of rest have reaped that which they had sowne the year before, neither could they have sowne for the year following. For the blowing of trumpets, from which this feast had the name, it is ordeined, *Numb.*10.10. that in all their new Moones they should blow with trumpets over their sacrifices for a memoriall before God. Of this it is again spoken, *Psal.*81.3. Blow up the trumpet in the new Moon, &c. and *Psal.*98.5. With trumpets and the sound of cornet make a joyfull noise. And this is spoken not onely of new Moons, but of all festivall and joyful times also. But forsomuch as in every new Moon and feast there was blowing of trumpets, the question is, Why there was one feast specially called the feast of blowving trumpets? The Hebrevvs holding that this blowving vvas vvith cornets made of rams hornes, do some of them think, that it was in remembrance of Isaac delivered, when he should have been sacrificed, a ram being offered in his stead. Some in remembrance of the law given vvith sound of trumpet; and some, that it vvas onely a preparative to the atonement-day followving soon after, viz. the tenth of this moneth, that God might remember them to forgive them all their sins. Some, that they might be put in minde of their sins to repent seriously against the day of atonement: so Maimony, The sounding of the trumpets novv, saith he, had a mysticall signification, as if it had been said, Avvake ye sleepers, ye deep sleepers, avvake out of your sleep, and consider your vvorks, and turn by repentance, and remember your Creatour: ye that forget the truth all the year, and go astray in vanity and emptinesse, that vvill not profit; look novv to your souls and your actions, and amend your vvayes, and forsake your wayes and thoughts that are not good. Wherefore, as admonished to this effect, he saith, that from this time to the atonement-day they rose and went to the synagogues to pray in the night, and did many almesdeeds and good works, and kept the Commandments more carefully. To make good that reason drawn from Isaacs deliverance by the ram, they say, that it was a cornet made of a crooked rams horn, wherewith they now sounded, and all cornets made of any thing else were now unlawfull; For although a cornet be not here expressed, yet *Levit.*25.9. for the Jubile it is, Shophar trugnah, the loud sounding cornet, and therefore most probably at this feast it was the same, and so it was anciently taught. They sounded with one cornet of a rams horn now in the Sanctuary and two trumpets, because *Psal.*98.5. a cornet and trumpets are sppken of, but in all other Cities they sounded with a cornet onely. And all, they say, were bound to hear this sound, but women, servants, and children: so Maimony. And to this it seemeth to be alluded, *Psal.*89.15. Blessed are they that hear the joyfull sound. For, blowing trumpets, in Hebrevv is, תרועה, signifying in generall a loud sounding noise for joy, as with trumpets, *Numb.*10.5,7. or with shouting, Ezra 3.11. 1 *Chron.*15.28. and sometime it is put for a sound made in sorrow, as *Jerem.*20.16. *Mich.*4.9. But here it is put for a joyfull sounding with trumpets and cornets, *Numb.*10.10. *Psal.*81.3. But of all the reasons hitherto given of the instituting of this feast none satisfieth me, because in the institution

Quest.

Rab. Solomon.
Cajetan.
Fonseca.
Calvin.
Maimony of repentance. c 3

Maimony in Shophar, c.1.

tion of feasts some miraculous thing done for the people was in every of them respected, that they might now remember it and be thankfull, except the atonement-day onely, which was not for rejoycing, but for sorrowing and humiliation. Wherefore it seemeth to me to have been instituted in remembrance of the miraculous overthrow of Jericho, with the sound of rams horns, although this was not done till afterwards, but by appointing a time of rejoycing now with sounding, having the name herefrom, as Gods miraculous aiding of them in generall against their enemies, upon sounding with their silver trumpets was prophetically as it were pointed at, according to the promise made, *Numb.*10.9. so that in particular about Jericho, which was the most famous; and that it might not afterwards be forgotten, this institution tended to preserve the memory thereof, and of Gideons victory by soundings, Judg. 7, &c.

Joshua 6.

If it be demanded, what day in particular vvas this, becauſe if they reckoned by the Moon, that being but 28 dayes, and the civill moneth 30, there vvould every year be a variation? It is answered, the rule that they went by for this vvas the Autumnall Equinoctiall, the nevv Moon after vvhich they alwayes counted to be the first of this moneth, so that their seventh moneth was not just the same vvith our September about the 12 of vvhich is the Equinoctiall, but part of September and part of October, as in the Spring they likevvise observed the Vernall Equinoctiall, March 11. and the nevv Moon followving began their first moneth, upon the fourteenth day vvhereof vvas the passeover, and that moneth vvas part of March, and part of April.

Quest.

Mystically, by this feast of blovving trumpets the sounding of the Gospel vvas set forth, or, as Ainsworth hath it, John the Baptists coming to prepare the vvay of the Lord, by crying out against mens sins, for by this phrase taken from a trumpet, the Prophet Esay is bidden to lift up his voice as a trumpet, to cry aloud, and to tell the people of their sins. And blessed is he that heareth his sound to repent, that an atonement may be made for him by Christ, who followed soon after, as the atonement-day followed soon after this. Thus Origen applieth it also to the preaching of the Gospel, but Hesychius to the sound of the trumpet at the day of judgement. But the sounding of the Gospel, when Christ came, was more aptly typified in the Jubile sounding, *Levit.*25. and at the day of Judgement there will be no time for repentance to atonement.

The Mystery. Ainsworth. Esay 58.1.

Origen. Hesychius.

And on the tenth day shall be an atonement, &c. Of this day see before, Chap. 16.29. but now because a catalogue of the holy feasts is set down, this is again spoken of amongst others, and that an holy convocation should be called now, and that it should be kept from the evening of the ninth to the evening of the tenth day, which were before omitted, and this from *vers.*27. to *vers.*32. and here is laid down a generall rule of keeping their Sabbaths from evening to evening. In refreining from work, say the Rabbins, there was no difference betwixt this and the Sabbath, but onely if a man did any upon the Sabbath, he was to be stoned to death; if upon this day presumptuously, he should be cut off, if ignorantly, he must bring the offering in this case appointed: so Maimony.

Verse 27.

Maimony of the rest of the tenth day.

The 15 day shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven dayes, the first shall be an holy convocation, &c. and on the eighth day, &c. From henceforth to the end of the Chapter the manner of keeping this last feast of the year onely is set forth, and the due keeping of those before-named inculcated.

Verse 34,35
Verse 36.

This was called the feast of booths or of Tabernacles, because now they took green boughs, and therewith made booths, & dwelt in them seven dayes, in remembrance of their dwelling in booths or Tabernacles 40 years after their coming out of Egypt. And because they had now gathered in all their fruits, Deut. 16.13. so that there was a double occasion of rejoycing and praising God. Touching the booths then made, the Hebrewes have these

Verse 40,41
Verse 42,43

But ſee the contrary to this *Nehem.*8.16.

obſervations. 1 The boughes of trees were not to build their booths withall, but with ſome of them they finiſht their booths, and with ſome they went about rejoycing and dancing before the Altar, carrying them in their hands, and ſaying, Hoſanna ſave us now. 2 They were not ſo tied to keep in their booths all theſe ſeven dayes, but they might walk abroad, and if it rained, go into their houſes for ſhelter, but ordinarily they muſt feed and lie there.

Nehem.8.16. Ioſephi l.3.c.10

3. Theſe booths were ſet on the roofes of their houſes, in their courts, and in the courts of Gods houſe, and in the ſtreets, and afterwards people increaſing more without the City, as Joſephus hath it. 4 Every one muſt carry branches now, even the childe, that was able, but only in the Sanctuary and only the fifteenth day. 5 The ſick and their attendants were excepted both from this and from dwelling in booths. 6 The wiſemen and Elders onely danced in a lowly manner, the other looked on. 7 They fetcht every of the ſeven dayes three logges, that is, a pinte and half of water in a golden veſſell from the brook Shiloah, and poured it with wine upon the Altar, ſhouting as they came with it. But whereas it was before ſaid, that they ſhould carry branches but the firſt of theſe dayes onely, that is expounded, upon expreſſe command, but becauſe it is alſo ſaid, *ye ſhall rejoyce before the Lord ſeven dayes, verſ.*40. Upon this ground they carried them every day once round about the Altar, waving them three times towards every of the four windes, and then the 118 Pſalm was read, vvhen they vvere going, and there vvas muſick made with pſalteries, harpes and Cymbals and voices, and clapping of hands.

Maimony in Shophar,c.7.

Verſe 40.

Touching the boughs & branches to be taken, they are named boughes of goodly trees, branches of palmes, boughes of thick trees, and of Willowes of the brook. By the firſt the Hebrevves underſtand the pome-citron-tree, vvhich beareth fruit continually, ſome ſpringing, ſome ripe, ſome falling off at the ſame time, as Pliny ſaith: and the vvord tranſlated boughes, is fruit, and ſo the Targ. Hieroſol. rendereth it the fruit of the pome-citron. Whereas, *Nehe.*8. 15. for the celebrating of this feaſt they are bidden to fetch Olive-branches, but no pome-citrons are ſpoken of, Solomon Jarchi ſaith, that vvas for building the booths, and not to carry in their hands, as appeareth, *verſ.*16. For the branches of palms, theſe they ſay vvere right ſhoots, like a rod. The boughes of thick trees vvere of the myrtle. And vvhereas, *Nehe.*8.15. both the myrtle and the thick tree are ſpoken of, they diſtinguiſh and ſay vvhen it hath upon a branch three leaves or more together covering the vvood, this is called a branch of the thick tree; but vvhen there are but tvvo leaves together, it is not thick, and is called a branch of the myrtle. This tree is mentioned amongſt others figuring out the proſperity of the Church, Iſa 41.19. *c.*55.13. *Zachar.*1.8. Laſtly, the vvillovves of the brook are again ſpoken of, *Eſa.*44.4. the godly being compared hereunto. The boughes, of vvhich they made their booths, ſay the Hebrevves, might be of theſe or of any other trees, but of theſe trees onely, and of all theſe fout to carry and vvaves in their hands. The Pome-citron was carried alone in the left hand, and muſt be as big as an egge at the leaſt: the other three tied together in the right hand, the palm-branch not being leſſe then four hand-breadths, and the other two not leſſe then three hand-breadths, and when they took them up to carry, they bleſſed God. The firſt ſtation of the children of Iſrael when they came out of Egypt was called Succoth, booths, and this in remembrance thereof, and of their paſt miſeries, was called, the feaſt of Succoth and now ſingularly every ſeventh year was the law appointed to be read to all the people, *Deut.*31.13. and this was accordingly performed, *Nehem.*8. 18. For the offerings to be made in theſe ſeven dayes, ſee more, *Numb.*29. 12. where the ſacrifices of each of theſe dayes, and of the eighth day alſo are ſet forth at large. This feaſt in the number of dayes exceeded all others, for that beſides the ſeven dayes an eighth is alſo appointed for a ſolemn Aſſembly, as in the paſſeover the ſeventh day, and this is called the laſt and great day of the feaſt, John 7.37. when Chriſt cried out, If any man thirſteth, let him

Sol. Iarchi.

Exod.12.37.

Verſe 36.

come come and drink of the water of life freely, in which speech he is thought to have alluded to the water before spokn, which they brought in a golden vessel from Siloam to the altar.

It is a solemn Assembly. Hebrew, עצרת, a restraint or shutting up, because they were restrained from labour upon this day, and held in the house, of God about his worship The Septuagint render it, ἐξόδιον, a going out of the feast, the vulgar Latine, collecta, from the gathering of money, which Tostatus thinketh was then made for the Sanctuary. This was added over and above the seven dayes of the feast of booths, being no part of it, (for now they dwelt not in booths any longer, for that was but for seven dayes) it was added, saith Burgensis, for a mysticall signification, of which it shall be by and by.

Junius
Septuagint.
Tostatus.
Burgensis.

Mystically, by the feast of tabernacles, saith Hesychius, is set forth the life of the godly to be as the life of strangers here dwelling in tents: for he that will live so here, as that he may receive an heavenly habitation hereafter, must dwell as it were in tents, use the world as if he used it not, set his heart not upon things earthly but heavenly: so did Abraham, &c. *Heb.*11. and David, Psal. 39. and our bodies are called tabernacles, 2 Cor 5.1. By the eighth day was set forth the life to come, to which we shall be gathered at the last, so many as dwell in tabernacles here. And in that a commemoration being made of all other feasts and offerings, this is again repeated, as being after all others, it serveth to shew that this is the principall thing, and the summe of all that we must ever aime at, viz. to be mortified to the world, and to intend that which is next figured out in the taking of boughs of goodly trees, or the fruit thereof, branches of palm-trees, and boughs of thick trees, and of the willowes of the brook, that is, a true faith in Christ, who is the fruit of the goodly tree, and justice, which is as the palm, *Psal.*92. and other vertues, but specially mercy, which is as the thick tree, and continency or chastity in that estate, wherein we are, which is as the willow, because that beareth no fruit, and all this the first day, there must be no deferring to ensue these graces. But for the willow in the brook he further saith, continency must be used by the married at some times, that they may attend to fasting and prayer, which must be as it were in a brook of tears for sin. To this effect Hesychius in many more words. Moreover, in their taking of branches, and crying, Hosanna save us now, as was before noted, the joyfull entertaining of Christ at another time, when he rode to Jerusalem with strewing the way with branches, and joyfull acclamations agreeable hereunto, was doubtlesse mystically pointed at. Brentius saith, that we keep this feast of tabernacles, when we recount what we were in times past, viz. Gentiles and strangers from the life of God, or Papals, and so overcast with a thick darknesse, and comparing it with our present most happy state and light, we heartily praise God therefore, as the Israelites were now to recount their fore passed miserable condition, when they had not an house to dwell in, with that most flourishing estate in Canaan, where they had fair houses and Cities, and abundance of all manner of good things. In imitation of this feast of booths, the Athenians had their feasts called σκίρα, from the shadowes of their boughs and tents dedicated to Minerva, of which Strabo writeth. And hitherto of the mysteries of these things imbraced by divers learned Expositors. Whereunto we may adde that the eighth day did not unfitly figure out as the solemnity to come in heaven, so the solemnity of the Lords day to be kept by all faithfull Christians upon earth, in remembrance of Christs resurrection throughout all ages.

The Mystery.
1 Cor 7.
Hebr 12 23. the generall assembly.
1 Cor.7.
Matth.21.8,9.
Brentius. Eph.5.2.
Strabo lib.9.

Whereas, vers. 38 it is said, these things ye shall do, besides your Sabbath, your gifts, your vows, and your free-will-offerings which ye give to the Lord. And a like speech is had, *Numb.*29.39. the meaning is, that the offerings of the Sabbaths happening upon any of these dayes must be offered also, two lambs in the morning, and two in the evening, none of the Sacrifices prescribed for

Verse 38.

Chr on.35 28

for this feaſt upon their day being diminiſhed therefore, ſo likewiſe notwithſtanding any gifts given at this time for tithes, or firſt-fruits, or free-will-offerings, as Joſiah is ſaid at the Paſſeover to have given thirty thouſand ſheep, or gifts that came in upon vow.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verſe 1,2. Verſe 3,4.

HEre is firſt a repetition of a law made, *Exod.*27.20. about oil providing for the lamps, and Aarons ordering it, that they might burn continually. The ſame law ſeemeth to be repeated here again, partly to ſhew what lamps they were which ſhould be ſupplied with this oil, viz. the lamps upon the pure candleſtick, *Exod.*25.37. the ſeven lamps upon the candleſtick of pure gold, and partly becauſe the ordering of it had been before committed to Aaron and his ſons, the High Prieſt and other inferiour Prieſts, leſt upon this ground there ſhould be a confuſion, the ſame is here repeated again, and the ordering of it is committed to the care of the High Prieſt ſingularly, as being conſtituted the ſole Superintendent over this matter, the reſt being to receive directions from him, and to be appointed to it by him. See more of the ſame, *Numb.*8.1,2. For the myſteries ſee before, Exod. 27.20. and *Chap.*25.37.

Verſe 5,6.

Here the law for the ſhew-bread that muſt ſtand continually upon the golden table before the Lord, ſet forth, *Exod.*25.30. is repeated. There it is onely briefly ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſet upon the table ſhew-bread before me alway. But how many breads, or when they ſhould be ſet on, or whereof they ſhould be made, or for what uſe they ſhould ſerve, or what frankincenſe ſhould be put upon them, or whoſe they ſhould be, are all omitted there, and therefore ſupplied in this place. They muſt be twelve cakes made of fine flour, two tenth-deals to a cake ſet in two rows, ſix on a row, frankincenſe being put upon each row, and every Sabbath they muſt be changed, and thoſe taken away muſt be Aarons and his ſons. Of the length, breadth and height of theſe cakes, and how they were laid and ſupported upon the table, hath been already ſhewed, *Exod.*25.29,30. as alſo the myſtery thereof. For the frankincenſe appointed here to be put upon each row to be burned, the Hebrews ſay, that it was not put upon the cakes, but by them, as the word לידם here uſed alſo ſignifieth, *Gen.*14.6. *Chap.*16.7. *Exod.*14.9. and it was ſet in two veſſels or vials of gold, an handfull of frankincenſe in each, and ſalt with the frankincenſe, becauſe no Sacrifice was to be without ſalt, *Levit.*2.13. The manner, they ſay, was thus, the cakes being prepared upon the evening before the Sabbath-day in a mold of gold, the Levites helping the Prieſts herein, (for although none but the Prieſts might come to bring them in and ſet them upon the golden table, yet the Levites might help to prepare them) they being, I ſay, prepared, were upon the Sabbath-day brought in with the frankincenſe by four Prieſts, two carrying the ſhew-bread, and two the veſſels with frankincenſe, four other Prieſts going before them to take off the old bread and frankincenſe. And at the ſame time that the old was taken away by thoſe four coming on the oppoſite ſide of the table, the new brought by the other four on the other ſide were ſet on, then the frankincenſe carried away was burned upon the altar of incenſe, and after this, the High Prieſt taking half of the bread for his part, the reſt was divided half to the Prieſts, whoſe courſe came in to ſerve that Sabbath, and half to thoſe whoſe courſe went out then. So Maimony.

Verſe 7,8,9.

1 Chron.9.32 Chap.23,28.

Maimony in amedin. 6.4,5.

Verſe 7.

Touching this, That it may be on the bread, or by the bread for a memoriall. That is, as the handfull of the meat-offering, *Levit.*2.2. burnt upon the altar was for a memoriall to all the reſt, ſo was this for the ſhew-bread, and for the twelve Tribes ſet forth hereby, to ſhew how much the Lord through the ſweetneſſe of Chriſts merits is delighted in his Church, and her ſervice done before before him continually. Wherefore ſhe is ſaid to be perfumed with myrrhe and frankincenſe, *Cant.*3.6. And all this muſt be taken of the children of Iſrael, that is, money to buy it withall, which the Hebrews ſay was the half ſhekel levied of each man yeerly, *Exod.*30.13, &c. for herewith the daily ſacrifices, the ſhew-bread, ſalt and wood, and vvave-ſheaf for firſt-fruits were provided, together with the incenſe, the tvvo wave-loaves, *Levit.*23.17. the ſcape-goat, *Levit.*16. the red heifer, *Numb.*19. and the like. Verſe 8.

Maimony of Ch. 4.

And the ſon of an Iſraelitiſh woman, whoſe father was an Egyptian, went out amongſt the Iſraelites, and he and an Iſraelite ſtrove together in the camp: and he blaſphemed the name of the Lord and curſed, &c. The mother of this man is ſaid to be Shelomith, of the tribe of Dan, whether ſhe had him in fornication or in marriage is not expreſſed, but ſome Hebrewes think, in fornication. Lyranus, that he was the ſon of the Egyptian, whom Moſes ſlew. But leaving theſe things, as uncertain, he is ſaid to have come out of Egypt with the children of Iſrael, being for his mother numbered amongſt them. For blaſphemed, Hebrew is יקב he named, for in this ſenſe the word נקב is uſed, *Eſa.*62.2. and by the Septuagint it is accordingly rendered, named, by the Chaldee expreſſed. But the word ſignifieth alſo to pierce or to ſtrike thorow, *Eſa.*36.6. Habbac. 3.14. and therefore is put for blaſpheming, *Num.*23.13, 25. which is, as it were a ſtriking thorow with words, and ſo it is doubtleſſe to be taken here, and *verſ.*16. and not for the bare mentioning of that holy name. Some of the Hebrewes yet gather from hence, that it is unlawfull to name this ſacred name יהוה out of the Sanctuary, it belonging to the prieſts onely to name it in bleſſing, according to that, *Num.*6.23. otherwiſe for it they uſed the name Adonai: and after Simeon was dead, they named it no more at all, leſt any unworthy ſhould learn it, neither did the wiſe men learn any to pronounce it; but onely ſuch as were meet and honeſt once in ſeven years: ſo Maimony. And ſome again, ſaith he, have held, that none were to be put to death for blaſpheming, unleſſe he named this name, but I, ſaith he, ſay, that for Adonai alſo he is to be ſtoned; the name of the Lord, in the Hebrew it is onely blaſphemed the name, the other word being underſtood, as ſome think for revereuce, it being ſo foul a thing to blaſpheme this ſacred name, as that it is a ſhame to ſpeak fully of it. Mark 14.61,62. there is the like ecliptick ſpeech, but *verſ.*16. it is ſupplied in the law-making againſt blaſphemy. The Hebrews did ſo abhor from blaſpheming, that if any man heard it, or heard it related by another, he was bound to rend his cloathes, unleſſe it were from an heathen. And hence it was, that the High Prieſt rent his cloathes at the ſuppoſed blaſpheming of our Saviour: whereas Eliakim and Shebna rent their cloathes, hearing the blaſphemy of Rabſhakeh, who was an heathen, they ſay it was, becauſe he was an apoſtate from the faith, *Eſa.*36.22. For the occaſion of this mans ſtriving and blaſpheming, Lyranus ſaith, that he was drunken, and Rab. Solomon that his ſtrife was about the ſhew-bread: but theſe are conjectures without ground, and therefore it is better to be ignorant, what the cauſe was, then to follow either of them or any other, ſeeing it is here concealed, and onely to know, that he ſpake vilely and contemptuouſly of God, which was a moſt horrible ſinne. Verſe 10. Verſe 11.

Lyranus.

Septuagint. Chaldee.

Maimony of Prayer, *Ch.*14.

Matth.26.65.

Lyranus. R. Solomon.

And they put him in ward, &c. Some witneſſes, that heard him, or inferiour Judges, for whom this matter was too hard, brought him to Moſes, and by his appointment he was kept, till his puniſhment were appointed by the Lord. Verſe 12.

And the Lord ſpake to Moſes, ſaying, &c. All hard cauſes Moſes is adviſed by Jethro to bring to God, *Exod.*18,19. and ſo he did, *Num.*15.34. and *c.*27. 1,2,5. and the like he is to be ſuppoſed to have done here, and this moſt probably was by going into the moſt holy Place where God had promiſed to meet Moſes. Verſe 13.

Exod.29.42.

Bring forth him that hath curſed out of the camp, and let all, that heard him, lay Verſe 14.

Maimony.

lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation ſtone him. This laying on of hands, ſaith Maimony, was not onely by the witneſſes but by the Judges alſo, they ſaying, Thy blood be upon thine own head, for thou haſt occaſioned it unto thy ſelf, and this Ceremony was uſed in no other caſe, but onely of blaſphemy. Of the manner of ſtoning to death, ſee before, *Chap.*20. 27. and out of the campe he was carried to be ſtoned, that it might not be defiled by ſuch a wretch being dead.

Verſe 15,16

He that curſeth his God ſhall bear his ſin, and he that blaſphemeth the name of the Lord, &c. all the congregation ſhall ſtone him, &c. Upon occaſion of this mans blaſpheming and curſing this generall law is made: but becauſe here is a diſtinction, If any man curſeth, he ſhall bear his ſin; if he blaſphemeth, he ſhall be ſtoned; A queſtion ariſeth, what difference there is between curſing and blaſpheming? To this ſome anſwer, that curſing is out of ignorance, and raſhneſſe, the choler being greatly ſtirred, but blaſpheming wittingly and willingly, out of an unreverent regard unto God. Some, that curſing is of Magiſtrates called gods, Exod 22.28. Some of falſe gods, for even they might not be curſed by ſuch as ſerved them. And Joſephus to this effect ſaith, that the Jews might not rail upon the gods of the Heathen, which may be true, becauſe Michael did not rail upon the devil, when he contended with him about the body of Moſes. But if ſuch gods had been meant here, he would not have ſaid his God. Laſtly, ſome underſtand the latter clauſe as an explication of the former, as if it had been ſaid, He that ſhall curſe God, that is, blaſpheme the Lord, for curſing of God is a blaſpheming of his ſacred name, ſhall bear his ſin, that is, ſhall be ſtoned to death. And this I ſubſcribe to as the beſt. For there was no reaſon to enact any thing about Magiſtrates here, and why railing out of paſſion ſhould be more excuſable in this caſe, I cannot ſee, forſomuch as he, upon occaſion of whoſe curſing this law was made, was doubtleſſe in paſſion, when he curſed, for it was upon ſtrife with another. And how can we conceive of any curſing of God, that is not a blaſpheming, and that theſe are not two lawes, as againſt two ſinnes, is plaine, becauſe איש-איש, whatſoever man, in the firſt is not repeated again in the ſecond.

Queſt.
Heſychius.
Hieron. in Epiſt. Epheſ.
Chryſoſt.
Cajetan.
Procopius.
Joſeph. antiq. l. 4. c. ult.
Jud. Epiſt. v. 9.
Toſtatus.

Hieron. in Epheſ.

To blaſpheme is not onely to rail upon God, ſaith Jerome, uſing any of his titles, or to derogate from any of his glorious attributes, as his wiſdome, juſtice, &c. but to finde fault with any of his works, or affirm hereſie to be his true doctrine. And to curſe God being the higheſt degree of blaſpheny, it was juſt that it ſhould be puniſhed with the greateſt puniſhment. For the peoples ſtoning of the blaſphemer, this was appointed; 1 That the greater terrour might be ſtricken into all, Deut 13.11. 2 That all being Gods people, might the more expreſſe their zeal for his glory. 3 Becauſe all vvere othervviſe endangered.

Toſtatus.

Verſe 17.

He that killeth a man ſhall be put to death. See the ſame, Exod 21.12. and this lavv is repeated again here next to that of putting to death the blaſphemer; becauſe, as Theodoret hath it, man cannot kill God, but the blaſphemer goeth as farre herein as he can, piercing him vvith his vvords, as the murtherer doth his neighbour vvith his ſvvord, both proceed from a malevolous and malicious minde, and therefore they are both joyned together.

Theod. quæſt. 33

Verſe 18,19

He that killeth a beaſt ſhall make it good; See the like, Exod 21.33.

Verſe 20.

He that cauſeth a blemiſh in his neighbour, as he hath done, it ſhall be done to him, breach for breach, eye for eye, &c. Of this ſee Exod 21.24. The Hebrevvs do not onely condemn hurting, but ſmiting of another unjuſtly alſo, becauſe in giving ſtripes to a malefactour, if the number preſcribed be exceeded, it is a ſin, much more to ſtrike the innocent, yea to lift up the hand againſt ſuch, though he ſmite him not, is to be a wicked man, ſaith Maimony.

Deut.25.3.
Maimony in Chobel. c. 5.

Verſe 21.

He that killeth a beaſt ſhall reſtore it. Although he did not directly kill it, yet if he did that to it, whereby it came to die, ſaith Maimony, he muſt reſtore it, and if he killeth not, but hurteth it, he muſt by the equity of that law, Exod, 22.5. make ſatisfaction. But herein he is over-ſtrict in ſaying, that if a man a man stumbleth and falleth, and so breaketh a vessel of his neighbours, he shall pay for it as well as if he had done it willingly, or killed or hurt his beast, because the law putteth no difference.

Ye shall have one manner of law, as well for the stranger, &c. that is, if any stranger being an Infidel, coming amongst them cursed or blasphemed, or killed, he must have the like punishment; and if a Jew killed such unjustly, he must have no prerogative herein. And the same law of retaliation should hold for both. Some by the stranger understand the stranger proselyte, but although in lawes of Religion the stranger is thus to be understood, as Chap. 22.18. Numb. 9.14, &c. yet in lawes of common equity, such as these for the punishing of offences not tolerable in any, there is no reason to make this restraint. Verse 22

Here is the execution upon the blasphemer done in stoning him by all Israel: of the manner see before. Verse 23.

CHAP. XXV.

When ye are come into the land that I shall give you, then your land shall keep a Sabbath to the Lord, &c. Here is instituted the Sabbath of the seventh year, and this the Lord is said to speak *in mount Sinai, v.*1. but hitherto out of the tabernacle, Chap. 1.1. but Junius rightly understandeth, out of the tabernacle standing upon mount Sinai. Haply the tabernacle is not expressed yet here, but mount Sinai to intimate the servile estate of those that were under the lawes given here about servants and debtors, according to that of the Apostle, who compareth mount Sinai to Hagar gendering to bondage, Galat. 4.25. that if the whole land had rest and comfort the seventh year, and the 50 year, even under the law given upon mount Sinai, we might be comforted much more in the inward rest coming from mount Sion to us by Christ Jesus. Of this law of the lands resting the seventh year, see before, Exod. 23.10,11. where is fully shewed both the reason of this rest, the manner and the mystery thereof: and therefore to avoid needlesse repetitions, I will say nothing more thereof in this place. Onely the Reader must know, that this year was counted to begin the seventh moneth, as may be gathered, *v.*9. and as the Hebrews hold it to begin for all civill affairs, and as it must needs, because otherwise if the beginning had been in the Spring, they could neither have reaped the corn sowne the year before, nor have sowne to reap upon the eighth year, *v.*6. The Sabbath of the land shall be meat for thee, &c. that is, the fruit of this Sabbaticall year. Verse 2. Junius.

And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years, even 49 years, &c. and ye shall cause the trumpet to sound the seventh moneth the 10 day, and hallow the 50 year, and proclaim liberty, &c. This command, saith Maimony, was given onely to the great Synedrion, which should cause the trumpet now to be sounded, but he saith, every one was hereby bound to sound. For the name of the Jubile, some think, that it came from Jubal, who was the first maker of musicall instruments, *Gen.*4. some from יבר, to carry, because it brought every one to his possession again, and some from יובר germen, because every one then enjoyed his own germinating land. But all these are far-fetcht imaginations, the true reason is, because יובר, signifieth a trumpet made of a rams horn, as *Josh.*6.5. and a trumpet, Exod. 19.13. and with these they blew in proclaiming the Jubile, as hath been already shewed, Levit. 23.24. For the year of the Jubile, some think that it was the 49 from the Jubile before, reckoning inclusivè, and so the seventh and the Jubile concurred, because otherwise two years a Sabbath of the land must be kept together. But this cannot stand, both because seven Sabbaths of years must be counted, and after followeth the Jubile, not Anno 49. but, as is expressed, Anno 50. and because in reckoning to the first Jubile that ever was kept, no Jubile before- Verse 8,9. Verse 01. Maimony. Servarius. Oleaster. Cajetan. Iosephus Scaliger. Junius.

Toſtatus.

Maimony in Iobel. c. 10.

going, a former Jubile could not come in to the reckoning, ſeeing there was none: ſo Toſtatus in part alſo argueth againſt it, and the Hebrews generally are for the 50, and not the 49 year. For the concurrence of two Sabbaths, if it were Gods will, that the land ſhould lie unhusbanded all this time, it is not to be doubted but that he made it without husbandry to fructifie ſufficiently for their ſuſtenance, as in the ſeventh year of reſt he promiſed that they ſhould be ſupplied for three years out of the increaſe of the ſixth year, v. 21.

Object.

Maimony.

If it be objected, by this reckoning the firſt year of the Sabbath of years after the Jubile muſt be the Jubile-year, and then the Sabbath of the ſeventh year would have been upon the ſixth year after it: The Hebrews anſwer, that the firſt of the next Sabbath of years counted was not the Jubile-year, but the year following. For the day of this years beginning, it was the firſt of Tizri, that is, the ſeventh moneth, ſay the Hebrews, but was not proclaimed, till the tenth being the atonement-day, becauſe ſervants went not out free till then, upon the dayes before-going they did eat, and drink, and rejoyce, and wore garlands, but that was the day of their going out free, and of lands returning to their owners. Some think, that the Jubile began in the Spring, although it was not proclaimed till now, or that it was proclaimed the ſeventh moneth to begin the firſt moneth of the year following, but erroneouſly, for it began the ſeventh moneth, which for civill matters was the beginning of the year, and thus alſo the Hebrews hold. According to ſome (ſaith Comeſtor) trumpets were blowne every New Moon ſeven years before the Jubile, and ſeven dayes together immediately before, but if ſo, it was beſides the appointment of the Lord, except in the new Moons, for in theſe they blew all years.

Lyranus.

Scholaſt. hiſtor. Toſtatus.

Verſe 10, 11 Verſe 41.

For the end of blowing with trumpets now, it was to proclaim liberty to men to return to their poſſeſſions, to the land to reſt, as in the ſeventh year, and to ſervants to go out free. The Jubile and the ſeventh year, as Maimony noteth, agree in all things touching the reſt of the land, and the uſing of the fruits thereof, but herein the ſeventh is above the Jubile, that debts are alſo releaſed, Deut. 15. 1. which are not in the Jubile, but the Jubile is above the ſeventh in this; that ſervants who go not out free in the ſeventh year, yet go out in the Jubile, that is, he who is bored in the ear to ſerve for ever: for thus Rab. Menahem explaineth the word לעולם, for ever, ſaying, that it is ſometime put for a time determined, that is, to the Jubile, as when it is ſaid, He ſhall ſerve him for ever; ſometime for a time, the limit whereof is unknown, but yet it hath a limit, as Let King David live for ever: and ſome time for a time that ſhall have no end, as The Lord ſhall reign for ever. Again, the Jubile is above the ſeventh year, in that men returned now to their poſſeſſions, and that in the beginning thereof, whereas in the ſeventh, debts were not releaſed till the end of it, Deut. 15. 1. The Hebrewes, becauſe it is ſaid, Ye ſhall return every man, gather, that although a man hath given his poſſeſſion away, yet it ſhall return now again unto him.

Exod. 21 6.

R. Menahem in Levit. 25.

Pſal. 10. 16.

Verſe 15.

According to the number of years after the Jubile thou ſhalt buy of thy neighbour, &c. Here becauſe years are ſpoken of, Maimony noteth, that the buyer of any houſe or land muſt enjoy it two years at the leaſt, and if one of the two next following after the buying be a ſeventh year, then he muſt enjoy it another year for that, neither might it be redeemed before the expiring of this time. But how rightly this is grounded here, let the Reader judge.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

For the myſtery of the Jubile; Hereby, ſaith Heſychius, was figured out the conſummation of the world in the ſeventh Sabbath of years, and the reſurrection following, when we ſhall all return to our poſſeſſions figured out by the poſſeſſions in Canaan. For as in Adam we loſt our heavenly inheritances, ſo then by Chriſt we ſhall have them reſtored to us again; & as in the year of Jubile there was no ſowing nor digging, ſo at that time ſhall be a ceſſation of all worldly labour and travell for ever. Wherefore as the ſeventh year, ſaith he, figured out the reſt of every particular faithfull perſon at his death, death, so the Jubile figured out the generall of all at the resurrection But the Jubile did also without doubt first point at the authour of this rest and comfort, Christ Jesus, who came with the joyfull sound of the Gospel, as he shall come to judgement at the last with the sound of a trumpet. For of him the Prophet speaking saith, He hath anointed me to preach good tidings, to proclaim liberty, and to preach the acceptable year of the Lord, as appeareth by his own application, *Luc.*4.18. and the Jubile began by Christ continueth alwayes to the worlds end, where the Gospel is preached, saith Brentius. And therefore it is noted, that Christ suffered in a yeer of Jubile, viz. the seventieth, and the last that ever the Jews had, to shew that in the Gospel by him set forth there was an end of the Jubile, he being now come that was figured out hereby. For by him we attain freedom, and by faith in him we return to the inheritance of Heaven.

Mill. t. Ainsworth. 1 Thes.4. Esay 61.1,2.

Here the Lord returneth again to the seventh yeer. If they should doubt how they should then live; if they did not sowe, he saith, that he vvould blesse the increase of the sixth yeer, that it should yeeld enough for three yeers, that is, both for the seventh and the eighth, in which they should not reap till the latter end of the yeer, and so could not well make use of the fruits thereof, till the beginning of the ninth yeer. But when the yeer of Jubile came they had need of fruit upon the sixth yeer for three whole yeers. This living upon the fruit of the sixth yeer long after, did mystically set forth our labours in the Lord here following us when we are dead, that we may then have the comfort thereof for ever. To this effect Hesychius.

Verse 20,21
Verse 22.
The Mystery.
Revel.14.13.

The land shall not be sold for ever, for the land is mine, and ye are strangers and sojourners with me, &c. For these words, for ever, Hebr. is לצמתו, to binding fast, that is, to the buyer; the Septuagint render it, to confirmation. Thus also the word is used, *vers.*30. it is also used for cutting off, *vers.*24 and then the meaning will be, to the cutting off of the owner from it for ever. For the land is mine, that is, in a more peculiar manner then any other land, vvherefore it is called the Lords land, *Hos.*9.3. and Emmanuels land, *Esa.*8.8. and the holy land, Zach 2.12. sequestred for the Church of God to dvvell in. And this is the reason vvhy it might not be sold by any man, as the gifts of God may not, *Act.*8.20. Ye are sojournours with me. Rab. Menahem hereupon, Ye must be, as I your master, understanding that the Lord set forth himself together with his people, as sojourners in this world; vvhich may vvell be received, if it be referred to Christ our Lord; for he useth the like words, *Matth.*10.25. But the vvord is varied, 1 *Chron.*29.15. vvhere David speaketh of himself and all Israel, as sojourners before God. The Septuagint render it also before me. But vvhether it be read before me, or with me, as Psal. 39.13. the better sense is, that God vvas the great Lord and Owner of it, and they sojourners vvith him there; intimating that they must not look for any long continuance upon earth, but as strangers here look for a better place to dvvell in for ever, as Abraham did, *Heb.*11.14,15, &c. and when we come there, we can never be cut off again from that possession for ever, yea, when the Jubile of the last trumpet shall come, we are now sure by faith, that we shall enjoy it, and cannot for ever be kept therefrom.

Verse 23.
Rab. Menahem.

If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, &c. Here is laid down the law of redeeming land amongst the Israelites. He must be driven by povertyto sell, saith Maimony, or else he transgresseth that selleth any part of his possession; if to put money in his purse, or to buy cattell or servants, for none should sell, but onely to get food, yet the sale out of this case is good to the buyer. If any of his kin come to redeem it, &c. that is, if he hath any kinsman, whose love is such towards him, that he will redeem it for him. The word גאלו, rendered by redeeming, If there come a redeemer, one neer to him, or a kin to him, signifieth also a kinsman, *Numb.*5.8. Ruth 2.9 because to him the right of redeeming belonged. Tostatus understandeth this, as if the kinsman redeemed it not for his poor brother, but for himself; for

Verse 25.
Maimony.
Tostatus.

he ſaith, If the kinſman redeemed it, he that firſt ſold it could not redeem it again, but muſt ſtay till the Jubile; but if ſo, his kinſman ſhould not have ſhewed any love towards him, but have done as any other man by him moſt far off, viz. dealt for his own benefit onely herein, which is not to be imagined.

Verſe 26. If he himſelf be able to redeem it. This the Hebrews underſtand of ability by his gettings ſince the ſale, for if he hath other land, he may not ſell that to redeem it, neither may he redeem it with money borrowed.

Maimony in Iobel, c. 11.

Verſe 27. Then let him count the yeers of the ſale thereof, and reſtore the overplus, &c. That is, ſay the Hebrews, if he ſold for an hundred crowns, it being ten yeers to the Jubile, he ſhall pay leſſe according to the yeers which the buyer enjoyed it, as if three yeers, then he ſhall pay ſeventy; if four, ſixty, &c. If he cannot lay down ſo much, yet in the Jubile it returneth to him, but not together with the trees, for the buyer may take them, becauſe there is nothing ſaid of returning to them, but to his poſſeſſion onely.

Verſe 28.

The Myſtery. Heſychius.

For the myſtery of this, Heſychius by a man impoveriſhed and ſelling his poſſeſſion, underſtandeth one fallen into ſin, and by his kinſman redeeming, one that admoniſheth and bringeth him to repentance, and if there be no ſuch, he ſaith his own redeeming is by his riſing up in private by repentance. But how this can agree I ſee not, becauſe neither is he that converteth another a Redeemer, neither without repentance ſhall any ſinner ever attain to the heavenly inheritance, as he that was not able to redeem his land did in the yeer of Jubile. The Hebrews ſay, that the Redeemer is the bleſſed God, as it is ſaid, Jer. 50. 34. and he that is neer unto him is the bleſſed God, as it is ſaid, Pſal. 148. 14. a people neer unto him. And accordingly ours, Jeſus Chriſt was figured out by the Redeemer, who was neer to us even in our nature, and is called גואל, a Redeemer, according to the word here uſed, Eſa. 59. 20. But if by the Redeemer we ſhall underſtand Jeſus here, how ſhall his returning in the Jubile, although there be no Redeemer be underſtood, or his redeeming for himſelf out of his own gettings? I think rather, that hereby is ſhewed that neither can ſinfull man of himſelf, nor by the help of any other that loveth him dearly, recover his loſt inheritance of Heaven, but this is reſtored onely of the grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt.

In Tanchuma.

Verſe 29, 30 Verſe 31. If a man ſelleth a dwelling houſe in a walled citie, he may redeem it within a yeer, and if not, it ſhall be eſtabliſhed to the buyer for ever, &c. Here is an exception to the generall law of the Jubile, ſuch an houſe not being redeemed within a yeer may never be redeemed, neither ſhall it return as land in the Jubile, but houſes in villages ſhall be counted as fields, and return as they. The houſe that might be redeemed within a yeer, or elſe never, the Hebrews ſay, might not be redeemed by any kinſman as land, but by the ſeller himſelf, neither might he borrow to redeem it, but ſell his goods he might for this purpoſe, & he might redeem it any time within the yeer from the day that he ſold it, but he muſt pay for it ſo much as he took, and if the yeer were leap-yeer, that is, a moneth longer then another yeer, by reaſon of the moneth Adar coming twice in it, by reaſon of the odde dayes in the yeer, according to their reckoning, then he might redeem not onely it within the twelve moneths, but in the thirteenth. And if he were dead that bought it, he might redeem it of his heir; if he were not to be found, he might having laid down the price before the Judges, go and break open the doors and enter, and the buyer, when he came again, went to the Judges to receive his money. If the Jubile fell in the yeer of the mans ſelling his houſe in a walled citie, it returned not unto him, unleſſe he paid the money received. Now for the difference between cities walled and not walled, the Hebrews ſay, that from the dayes of Joſuah to the captivity of Babylon, the cities onely that had walls when Joſuah brought them into the land, were counted walled cities, yea although their wals were fallen down, neither were any other counted walled, although they had wals built about them afterwards. And from the time of their Maimony in Iobel. h. 12.

return

return out of captivity all Cities then found walled were counted walled, becauſe that was as their entring the land in Joſhuahs time, but none elſe, and in Jeruſalem, they ſay, that no houſe in it might be ſold abſolutely, although that were a walled City. Moreover, they obſerve, that an houſe upon the wall, as Rahabs was, not as an houſe in a walled City, but in a village, and that dove-houſes, gardens and Orchyards, as appendices of houſes, and bathes within the walls, were as the houſes, but not any field lying within the wals.

But the houſes of villages, that have not wals, &c. The word rendered not, here is לו, to it, but if it ſhould thus be read, here would be a contradiction, and therefore it is to be rendered, as לא, not, as it is alſo, Exod. 21.8. *Levit.*11.21. yet the Septuagint and Chaldee render it, which have a wall, and this is juſtified by ſome, ſaying, that the meaning is, which hath a wall now, but had none at Joſhuahs coming in, and ſo is reckoned, as an unwalled village. But thus villages onely walled ſhall be excepted here, whereas all villages are meant, and the houſes in them. For the myſtery, Heſychius thinketh, that unleſſe this diſtinction betwixt walled and unwalled towns be made for a myſticall end, as alſo betwixt the houſes of others in walled townes, and of *Levites, verſ.*33. there can no reaſon be rendered thereof: wherefore he will have the firſt to ſet forth the Church of the Jewes, which, becauſe in the year of Chriſts preaching they turned not, continueth ſtill alwayes unredeemed, the other, the Church of the Gentiles, like unwalled villages, which was turned year after year at divers times, ſince the Lords Paſſion. And as the Levites houſes might be redeemed at any time, and their fields might not be ſold, ſo he ſaith, the Apoſtles, and ſuch as by them, of the Jewiſh Nation were converted, or by their ſucceſſours, had Redemption at any time, and the Heavenly inheritance is eſtabliſhed to them for ever.

Verſe 31.

Heſychius.

The Myſtery.

Origen by the walled Cities underſtandeth greater ſins, from which if a man turneth not ſpeedily, there is danger of never turning to be ſaved, but by the unwalled villages leſſer ſins, which a man may be converted from more eaſily. This of Origen ſeemeth not ſo good, as that of Heſychius But whereas he ſaith, that no literall reaſon can be given, this may be yeelded as a reaſon, God hereby provided for the better peopling and fortifying of walled Cities, wherein the chief ſtrength of the Kingdom conſiſted, when thoſe that had bought houſes there ſhould not be in danger of being put out again for ever, whereby they might be incouraged to ſeek more earneſtly the proſperity of their City: to this effect alſo Toſtatus. Touching the Levites, they may redeem their houſes at any time, and if not, in the Jubile they returned again unto them, but for their lands ſingularly it is provided, that they ſhould in no caſe be ſold. Maimony upon this law ſaith, that another being an Iſraelite might not redeem for a Levite, but a Levite onely, yet the ſon of a Levites daughter might redeem his mothers fathers houſe. And touching their fields, he ſaith, we have been taught, this, the field of the ſuburbs of their Cities may not be ſold, meaneth nothing elſe, but that they may not be altered, a City being made of ſuburbs, or fields, or ſuburbs of a City. And accordingly, Acts 4.36. Barnabas a Levite is ſaid to have ſold his field. The Cities of the Levites were 48 with their ſuburbs, whereof ſix were appointed for Cities of refuge; beſides theſe the Levites had none inheritance, and therefore they were more firmly eſtabliſhed to them, then the poſſeſſions of other men, and falne into decay.

Origen. lo. 35

Toſtatus.

Verſe 32, 33

Verſe 34

*Maimony in Iobel, cap.*13.

Numb.35.

Ier.32.

If thy brother be grown poor with thee, thou ſhalt releeve him, yea though he be a ſtranger, &c. for falne into decay, Hebrew is מטה-ידו his hand be moved, that is, ſay ſome, be lifted up to ask relief, or as others, if his hand be moved or come under thee, becauſe he worketh for thee, as a poor man. But the word מוט ſignifieth to decline or to wax weak, and therefore the meaning is, if he be unable to help himſelf, and to maintain himſelf and his,

Verſe 35.

Geneveſ.

Cajetan.

thou

thou ſhalt releeve him: the ſtranger and the ſojournour; thus it is in the Hebrew; and, yea though he be, are ſupplied by the Tranſlatours; but as ſome note, by ſtranger and ſojourner, the brother before ſpoken of may be meant, for all the people of Iſrael are thus called, *verſ.*13. and then they may be taken, as put here by Appoſition, thou ſhalt relieve him a ſtranger and ſojourner with thee, that is, not differing now in his condition from ſuch, becauſe being without a poſſeſſion for the time and means of maintenance, he laboureth for thee, as a ſtranger of another nation hired to do thy work. Others hold, that beneficence even to ſtrangers is here injoyned, if they be poor, and dwell in that land, and therefore much more to brethren: and I do acknowledge, that charity was to be exerciſed by the Jews, even towards ſtrangers, but that is elſewhere injoyned. Here that ſtrangers of other Nations are not meant, it ſeemeth to me by the words following againſt letting money to uſury to him, *verſ.*36. which is added as an explication of this generall of relieving him. For the man, whom the Lord meaneth they ſhould relieve here, is one to whom they may not let upon uſury, but to a ſtranger this is permitted, *Deut.*23.20. and yet haply by a ſtranger is not meant any one of another Nation, but both of another Nation and Religion, for Religion maketh the ſtranger as a brother, that he may live with thee, that is, that by thy help he may recover and come to a more proſperous eſtate again, a means whereof will be to lend him thy money freely, as is commanded, *Deut.*15.8. for thus living is oppoſed to being in miſery, *Nehem.*4.25. 1 Chron. 11.8. *Gen.*45.27.

Ainſworth. Calvin. Junius. Vatablus.

Verſe 36. Take thou no uſury of him or increaſe, &c. This law was propounded before, *Exod.*22.25. but becauſe it was not ſo fully ſet forth, it is here repeated again with theſe additions, nor increaſe, but fear thy God, that thy brother may live with thee.

Verſe 37. Thou ſhalt not give him thy money upon uſury, nor lend him thy victuall for increaſe. 38. I am the Lord, which brought you, &c. But touching the ſin of uſury I have ſaid enough upon Exod. 22.25. where this and *Deut.*23.20. have been conſidered alſo.

Verſe 38.

Verſe 39. If thy brother be waxen poor, and be ſold unto thee, thou ſhalt not compell him to ſerve as a bond-ſervant, &c. Of Hebrew ſervants, and of their going out free in the ſeventh year it hath been already ſpoken, Exod. 21.3. But here the law is much more inlarged, and his going out free in the Jubile is appointed, if he had not ſerved out ſix years, nor two years, and it is alſo provided for his good uſage, &c. of all which enough hath been ſaid upon *Exod.*21.3.

Verſe 41. Whereas it is ſaid, he ſhall depart, both he and his children, but no mention is made of his wife; the Hebrewes ſay, If he came a married man to his maſter although he were a ſervant, yet ſhe was not, and therefore her going out free could not be ſpoken of: if he married in the time of his ſervice with his maſters conſent, the wife ſo married was as the other, and his maſter inſtead of having any benefit by her work muſt finde her meat, as he muſt alſo do for the other, but her work was for her husband, not for her maſter: If his wife were a ſervant, when he married her, ſhe went out free by the ſame ordinance, that he went out by, if ſhe were an Hebrew ſervant, but not if a ſtranger: and if in the time of his ſervice he married without his maſters conſent, his maſter was not bound to finde her meat. Moreover they adde, that there have never been any Hebrew ſervants taken ſince they had Jubiles.

Maimony of ſervants, *Ch.*3.

The Myſtery. For the myſteries of ſervants going out free in the Jubile, this ſerved to ſhew, that vvhen Chriſt came as in the Jubile here pointed at, he brought freedom vvith him to all the truly faithfull, vvho are Hebrevves ſpiritually; for if the Son ſhall make you free, ſaith he, ye ſhall be free indeed. Heſychius vvill have the Hebrew ſervant a type of a ſervant turned Chriſtian, he muſt not now be uſed as a ſervant any longer, but as a brother, as Paul writeth of One-

John 8.31.32. Heſychius.

ſimus,

ſimus to Philemon. Again, he maketh him a type of a brother ſalne into ſin, as ſuch into decay, he muſt be gently and not rigorouſly admoniſhed, as he muſt not be ruled over with rigour. Touching the ſervants from amongſt the Heathen, whom they might buy and poſſeſſe alwayes, Theſe, ſaith he, figured out unbelievers, Jews or Hereticks converted by any to the true faith, when a Preacher hath gotten thus as it were poſſeſſion of ſuch, he muſt keep them alwayes, and his ſon, that is, his ſucceſſour after him, both them and theirs. Ainſworth ſaith, that this both figured the converſion of the Heathen, and that being turned ſervants to Chriſt they ſhoold alwayes ſerve him, *Eſa.*14.1,2. or elſe theſe ſervants figured the reprobate, over whom the faithfull ſhall rule with a rod of iron, *Revel.*2.26,27.

Epiſt. Philem. Gal.6.1.

If a ſojourner or ſtranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother poor, ſo that he ſell himſelf, &c. From hence to the end of the Chapter it is provided both for the redemption of an Hebrew ſold to a ſtranger, and for his good uſage with him, and if he be not redeemed, for his going out free in the Jubile. Touching the redeeming of ſuch, Maimony ſaith, that his kinred: firſt, the uncle, or uncles ſon ought to redeem him, and if he hath none, his next kinſman, and if he will not, the Synedrion may compell him to it, and if he hath no kinred able, any Hebrew or Hebrews, his brethren ought to redeem him, or he may borrow to redeeem himſelf, and if he be redeemed by any, he ſhall not be his ſervant that redeemed him, but go out free. But for ſuch as are ſold to Hebrews, their brethren, the kinſman might not redeem them, neither might they borrow to redeem themſelves; but if they had money enough to pay for the years behinde, they might redeem themſelves. Unto that of others of their brethren redeeming them, anſwereth that, *Nehem.*5.8. We after our ability, have redeemed our brethren, the Jews. But in caſe that their redemption were neglected, they muſt be well uſed in their ſervice, as with an Hebrew, and go out free in the Jubile. As the Hebrews, under what Maſters ſoever were free in the Jubile, ſo the faithfull through Chriſt are made free to be ſervants no more to ſin and Satan, as at the laſt Jubile, in the time whereof Chriſt ſuffered, the Hebrews were made free, and never were ſold for ſervants any more; for, as hath been already noted, ſince the ceſſation of Jubiles there hath been a ceſſation of Hebrew ſervants; and therefore we ſhould now flee the ſerving of ſin, and uſe the freedome which Chriſt hath purchaſed for us, to ſerve God in holineſſe, *Rom.*6.11. Heſychius by the ſtranger buying an Hebrew, underſtandeth one newly converted to the faith, by his good admonitions raiſing a brother in the faith who is falne, up to repentance, ſaying, that ſome Doctor of the Church muſt take him, and inſtruct and confirm him more in holineſſe, which is the Uncles or other kinſmans redeeming of him, or he muſt labour himſelf by prayer and meditation in the holy Scriptures to be more and more ſanctified.

Verſe 47.

Maimony of ſervants, *Ch.*2.

Verſe 53,54

John 8.34,36. Heb.2.14,15. Heſychius.

CHAP. XXVI.

YE ſhall make you no idols, nor graven images, nor rear up a ſtanding image, &c. Againſt idols it was provided before, *Exod.*20.23. *Exod.*34.17. *Levit.*19.4. but the ſame law is here again repeated, that it might be inlarged. The word rendered ſtanding image, Hebrew is מצבה, a pillar or ſtone, having the name from ſtanding, as *Gen.*28.18. *Chap.*35.14,20. 2 *Sam.*18.18. where it is put ſometime for an altar or ſtone to offer upon, as alſo, *Eſa.*19.19, and ſometime for a civill monument. Rab. Solomon Jarchi ſaith, מצבה, is a ſtone to offer upon, for ſince the conſtituting of one altar to ſet up any ſuch is unlawfull, although it be to offer upon it to the God of heaven. But out of the caſe of worſhipping to ſet up a pillar is not unlawfull, if it be onely for a monument, as that altar ſet up by the Reubenites, &c. *Joſh.*22. and therefore it is expreſſed

Verſe 1.

Sol. Jarchi.

expreſſed here, to bow down to it. Ye ſhall not ſet up any image of ſtone: Hebrew Ye ſhall not give, לא־תתנו, it being meant, not onely that they ſhould not ſet up, but not permit ſuch to be ſet up in their land: for this uſe of the word, ſee Gen. 20.6. and againſt the ſuffering of them, Numb. 33.52. The ſtone of Imagery is ſaid by the Hebrews to be a pavement of ſtone to fall down upon in adoration, and accordingly the Chaldee calleth it the ſtone of inclination or of adoration; and to make this good, to bow down to it, is rendered to bow down upon it, as indeed the word עליה, will well bear. Not only then he that worſhipped an idol ſinned by idolatry, but even he that laid a ſtone ſmoothed and fitted every way for the purpoſe to fall down upon to worſhip the true God: for thus the Heathen uſed to do, painting the ſtone which they uſed for this purpoſe, and falling down thereupon before their idols, for which cauſe, ſaith Maimony, it was condemned in the Hebrews to do thus before the true God; and therefore, if any prepared him ſuch a ſtone to worſhip God upon it, he was beaten; if to worſhip an idol, he was ſtoned to death, according to that, Deut. 13,10. Whereas the Temple was paved with ſtone, and therefore they could not fall down there but upon ſtone, he ſaith, that it is to be noted, that it is ſaid here, Ye ſhall not make an image of ſtone in your land: that is, in any part of the land, beſides in the Temple, for here they might fall down upon the pavement of ſtone, but not elſewhere, and therefore in their Synagogues which were paved likewiſe, they uſed mats continually, which were laid upon the ſtone to fall down upon them. But this ſeemeth to have been done beſides the intention of this precept, which is not againſt falling down upon ſtone, wherewith a room is paved, but which is ſet for the purpoſe of adoration Heatheniſhly. For the iterating of this precept here again, beſides the reaſon before alledged, Rab. Solomon ſaith, it was becauſe the Hebrew's ſelling of himſelf to a ſtranger, which haply was an idolater, was ſpoken of immediately before, leſt being in this ſtate he ſhould be drawn to idolatry. And this might alſo be a reaſon of the iteration of the law touching the Sabbaths-keeping and reverencing the Sanctuary, verſ. 2. And therefore at the end of theſe two verſes endeth the 32 Lecture of the law after the Hebrews computation; and verſ. 3. beginneth the 33, theſe two verſes being reckoned as appurtenances to the 32 Lecture beginning at the beginning of Chap. 25.

Chaldee Paraphraſt.

Maimony of Idolatry, Ch. 6.

R. Solomon.

Verſe 2.

Of keeping the Sabbaths and reverencing the Sanctuary here again ſpoken of, ſee before, Chap. 19.30. whereunto we may adde that to reverence the Sanctuary was alſo to refrein from comming to it in any uncleanneſſe, Levit. 15.31, &c. ſo Toſtatus: and to deck it and keep it decent: ſo Hugo upon Pſal. 144.12. and Haggai reproveth the neglect of it, and Jerome commendeth Nepotianus for dreſſing up the Church with boughs and flowers, and keeping it clean in every part, and to refrein from all prophane uſage of it, as by dancing in it, vociferations, &c. againſt which Auguſtine ſpeaketh, as uſed in their Agapæ, or Love-feaſts, ſaying for this, that they came Chriſtians and went away Pagans. And ſpecially to abhorre from polluting the Temple by ſin, as Elies ſonnes did, defiling the women that came thither. And laſtly, to be affected with reverence to him that dwelleth there eſpecially, and to all the parts of his worſhip, Pſal. 5.8. Gen. 28. Exod. 3.5. Joſh. 5.15. Pſ. 84.11. I have choſen to be abject in the houſe of God, that is, ſaith Nicephorus, to lie proſtrate in humility.

Toſtatus. Pſal. 63.5. Hugo Hag. 1.4. Hieron. ad Nepotian. Epiſt. 3. Aug. de Temp. Serm. 235. 1 Sam. 2.12. Nicephorus.

Verſe 3,4.

If ye keep my Commandments, &c. I will give you rain in due ſeaſon, &c. After the lawes given, here the Lord preſſeth his people to obedience to them, partly by promiſes, and partly by threatenings, as alſo Moſes again, Deut. 28. And he beginneth with a promiſe of rain in due ſeaſon, Hebrew, raines, that is, the early and the latter rain, as is ſaid, Deut. 11.14. whereby the earth is made fruitfull: for it rained there commonly but twice in the year, or at two ſeaſons 1 In September, at the time of ſowing. 2 In April; by the firſt, called the early rain, corn was made to grow; by the ſecond, called the latter,

it it was watered before the harvest, Hieron. in Amos 4. And he saith, I will give, because rain cometh of God onely, *Jer.*14.22. *Chap.*5.24. *Deut.*28.12. and therefore to him we should be thankfull for it, and for the fruits made to increase hereby. Of his giving rain, see more, Psal. 147.8. Acts 14.16. Job 38.28. There be indeed naturall causes of rain, but God worketh by these causes, besides them or against them, as it pleaseth him, so Tostatus. Upon a time, saith S. Ambrose, there being a great drought, men had divers hopes of rain, saying, This new moon or that will give us rain, but there came none, and I was glad of it, that not coming, but upon the prayers of the Church it might appear, that not the change of the moon, but the providence of God is the cause of rain, and we might depend not upon the one, but upon the other.

Tostatus.

*Ambros Hexam lib.*4.c 7.

Mystically by rain, both Origen and Hesychius understand the heavenly doctrine, which maketh fruitfull unto eternall life: for where the Commandments of God are transgressed, he sendeth a famine of hearing the word, but where they are kept, he raineth hereby plentifully to fructification. The Lord beginneth with rain and fruitfulnesse as the greatest worldly blessing, as on the contrary to be pined with famine is the greatest curse, and to die thus more grievous then by pestilence, or the sword of the enemy. Tostatus.

The Mystery. Origen. Hesychius. Amos 8.

Tostatus.

Verse 5.

And your threshing shall reach to the vintage, and the vintage to the sowing time, &c. See a phrase like this, Amos 9.13. This is spoken to shew what great plenty they should have of all things: for where they must be threshing the corn out, till the gathering of their grapes, and be gathering & treading out their grapes till the sowing for another yeer, there must needs be great abundance. Tostatus restraineth this to the sixth yeer, but without reason, for it is a blessing generally promised to obedience, as all others note. And ye shall eat your bread to the full, that is, not onely having enough, but being well satisfied and contented, Joel 2.26. see the like speech in this sense, *Psal.*132.15. *Psal.*22.27. *Prov.*13.25. and ye shall dwell safely, Hebr. in confidence, for they that trust in God are safe from all dangers. Mystically, by the threshing, vintage, and sowing, Origen understandeth the labours of Ministers in the Law, the Gospel, and the writings of the Apostles, which are never at an end. Petrus Chrysologus will have the threshing to set forth our reading and studying; the vintage, our praying, and contemplation; and the sowing, our preaching and well living. Radulphus, by the threshing, our labouring in the service of God; by the vintage, joy that followeth hereupon, because wine maketh glad the heart; and by the sowing, new courage to labour again in Gods service, through the joy received. Others not so apt I omit.

Tostatus. Pelican. Osiander. Junius. Vatablus.

Origen.

Petrus Chrysologus. Radulph.

Verse 6.

And I will give peace in the land, &c. Peace although it sometime signifieth all manner of prosperity, yet here it is opposed to war, as also Psal 120.7. And I will rid evil beasts out of your land. This is added also here, and that the sword should not go thorow the land, to shew that they should be safe from all manner of judgements which God useth to send for sin. For he hath these four sorts, the sword, the famine, the evil beast, and the pestilence, *Ezech.*14.21. and *Revel.*6.8. in promising rain he secured them before against famine, here it is expressely promised that they should be safe from the sword and evil beasts; of which destroying men for sin in that countrey, read 2 *King.*17. 2 *King.*2. and peace may well imply the fourth; safety from the pestilence, which when God sendeth, he is not at peace with men, but draweth out his sword against them, as 1 *Chron.*21.12. By evil beasts, Rab. Menahem understandeth evil lusts, from which we shall be free in that world which is on high, and Maimony saith, that here is not meant onely that we shall have all things that the body hath need of, but we shall by this supply of bodily things be supported to do the Commandments cheerfully, that we may be worthy of the life to come. Thus we see, that even the Jews, whereas Gods promises were of temporall things, went higher, arising from hence to the spirituall and heavenly, which are the best reward of keeping the laws of God, but because we cannot do this perfectly, we must not seek them by the righteouſneſſe of the law, but onely of faith in Jeſus Chriſt, in whom we are juſtified and ſaved. Touching the evill beaſts here ſpoken of, to ſay ſomething more in particular, God having promiſed peace with men, here promiſeth it with the beaſts alſo, ſaith Toſtatus; for by reaſon of ſin, theſe have ever ſince the fall of Adam, been ready to war againſt and to deſtroy wicked men, when God would, as not onely the lions, 2 *King.*17. and bears, 2 King. 2. and in forreign ſtories, Lucan writeth of whole Countreys depopulated by wilde beaſts; but even the leaſt and moſt contemptible, as flies, frogs, and lice ſent againſt Pharaoh; and Pliny writeth of Countreys left deſolate for frogs or locuſts; and Ælian, that the Megarenſes fled their Countrey for fear of mice, and the Phaſelites for waſpes, and the Rhethienſes for wormes called Scolopendræ. Myſtically, by evill beaſts, Heſychius underſtandeth Devils, from which the godly ſhall be preſerved, and the Devil is as a lion, 1 *Pet.*5.8. as a ſerpent, *Gen.*3. Baſil. Magnus likeneth him to the Pardalis, which is ſo fierce againſt man, that if he ſeeth but a picture of man he will tear it: ſo the Devil infeſteth man the image of God. Some by evill beaſts underſtand men like beaſts, as 2 *Tim.*4.17. *Luk.*13.32. *Tit.*1.12.

R. Menahem. Maimony.

Note.

Toſtatus.

Lucan.lib.7.

Plin.lib.8 c.29.

Heſychius.

Baſil. Magnus.

Lorinus.

Verſe 7. And ye ſhall chaſe your enemies, and they ſhall fall before you with the ſword, five of you ſhall chaſe an hundred, &c. Here may ſeem to be a contradiction to that which vvent before; for if they ſhould have peace and no ſword in their land, hovv ſhould there be any enemies for them to chaſe? Toſtatus anſwereth, it is meant they ſhould have peace amongſt themſelves, there ſhould be no civill vvars, and if forreign enemies aſſaulted them, they ſhould eaſily repell them. But this diſtinction is not neceſſary here, for all peace being promiſed unto them before, a caſe is here put, if enemies ſhould at any time come againſt them, &c. ſo Calvin. Inſtances of this vvonderfull proweſs in ſome of this people, we have in Davids Worthies, 1 *Chron.*11. 2 *Sam.*23.8,18. 1 *Chron.*11.18. 1 *Chron.*12.8. in Shamgar, *Judg.*3.31. and Sampſon, *Judg.*15.5. amongſt vvhom ſome one hath prevailed againſt 600, ſome againſt 800, and one againſt 1000, as this promiſe is enlarged, *Joſh.*23.10. One of you ſhall chaſe 1000. See alſo, Pſalm. 18.38. 2 Samuel 22.38. *Deuteron.*32.30. Judg. 7.22, &c.

Queſt.
Toſtatus.

Calvin.

Verſe 9. And I will make you fruitfull, and multiply you, &c. This promiſe made to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob is here renued to their off-ſpring, as being of a ſingular bleſſing in this world, they had had experience of it in Egypt, growing there from 70 to 600000, and now it is promiſed again in Canaan.

Auguſt.

Verſe 10. Myſtically, the fruitfulneſſe and great increaſe of Chriſts Kingdome under the Goſpel amongſt the Gentiles is here pointed at, ſaith Auguſtine.

And ye ſhall eat the old ſtore, and bring forth the old: becauſe of the new; that is, they ſhould have ſuch abundance, that having fed liberally upon the old ſtore all the year, yet there ſhould ſome remain in their barns, which they muſt bring forth to make room to lay in the new.

The Myſtery. Myſtically, here is ſet forth, that when the Goſpel ſhould come, which is the new temporall things which were promiſed under the law ſhould be brought out and diſtributed; as not being made any account of in compariſon of the grace and comfort of the Goſpel: ſo Lyranus. But Heſychius and Origen, when the Goſpel ſhould come, the law ſhould be aboliſhed. That bodily food onely is not here reſpected, the Rabbins taught upon this place, as Rab. Elias, who ſaith, He that ſerveth God becauſe of bodily things, on which his ſervice dependeth, it ſhall not be confirmed to light in the light of the living; for when thoſe things ceaſe, for which he ſerveth, his love will alſo ceaſe, but he that ſerveth God out of entire love, his love ſhall be in everlaſting life, and his reward eternall.

Lyranus.
Heſychius.

R. Elias in reſhith Cochmah.

Verſe 11. And I will ſet my tabernacle amongſt you, and my ſoul ſhall not abhor you. Of this tabernacle, in which the Lord promiſed to dwell amongſt them, it was ſpoken before, *Exod.*25.8. and both of his dwelling amongſt them and being their God, that they might know that he was the Lord that brought them out out of the land of Egypt, *Exod.*29.45. This is iterated again here as the greateſt of all comforts to incourage them to keep his Commandments. Aben-Ezra ſaith, It is as if he had promiſed, My glory ſhall reſide with you, ſo that ye ſhall not fear ever to come into want, and I will not be as a man whoſe ſoul loatheth alwayes to dwell in one place. For amongſt you, Hebrew is, in the midſt of you, which is ſo ſaid, ſaith Toſtatus, both becauſe the tabernacle was in the midſt of the campe, and afterwards in Jeruſalem, which was in the midſt of that land, and as is ſuppoſed by many, in the midſt of the whole world, becauſe it is ſaid, *Pſal.*74.12. God is my King of old, working ſalvation in the midſt of the earth, and alſo to intimate his protection and favour equally to all his people. Of what the tabernacle was a figure it hath been ſhewed before, viz. both of Chriſt Jeſus and of heaven, 2 *Cor.*5.1,2. *Revel.*21.3.

Aben Ezra.

Toſtatus.

But if ye will not hearken unto me to do all theſe Commandments, &c. The Lord herein threatening the tranſgreſſours of his lawes calleth them ſuch as deſpiſe his ſtatutes, abhor his judgements, and break his Covenant againſt thoſe that are ready to extenuate the wickedneſſe of their evill doings. And they are ſaid to break the Covenant that continue not to do all things required thereby, *Heb.*8.9. as they are ſaid to confirm or to keep, that continue to do them, *Deut.*27.26.

Verſe 14,15 Verſe 16. &c.

I will appoint over you terrour, conſumption, and the burning ague, &c. What the conſumption and burning ague are all know, although the Septuagint here for ague read jaundiſe, but better, *Deut.*28.22. fever or ague, for it hath the name from burning, and for conſumption they read ſcabbedneſſe, of which it is ſpoken, *Deut.*28.22. Of terrours there are three ſorts. 1 A brutiſh fear, called by Ariſtotle, δειλία θηριώδης, which is to be afraid of every thing, yea if a mouſe doth but peep. 2 A timerouſneſſe, cauſed by ſome diſeaſe, as by melancholy or the phrenſie, called νοσηματώδης. 3 A fear ariſing inwardly from an evill conſcience, this the Heathen called a Pannick fear, becauſe they thought it to be ſent by their god Pan, but it is truly a terrour, wherewith the conſcience is ſtricken by the judgement of God for ſin, ſee alſo, *v.*36. Deut. 28.65. *Prov.*28.1. *Pſal.*53.6 and Job 15.21. Of the wicked, Eliphaz ſaith, There is alwayes a ſound of fear in his eares: and of this fear it is here ſpoken, and not of that fear of cowardlineſſe, or of melancholy, becauſe, as Toſtatus noteth, it maketh one flee when none purſueth, *v.*17. and this is the moſt grievous of all puniſhments, The ſpirit of a man will ſuſtein his infirmity, but a wounded ſpirit who can bear it? this ſoon quelleth the ſtouteſt heart. Ye ſhall ſowe your ſeed in vain, for your enemies ſhall eat it. How this was verified, ſee *Judg.*6. and for the ruling of their enemies over them next ſpoken of, *Judg.*2. 14. 1 Sam 4.2, *&c. Pſal.*106.41. *Nehem.*9.28.

Verſe 16.

*Ariſt.Ethic.*7.6

Toſtatus.

Prov 14.14.

I will puniſh you yet ſeven times more for your ſins, &c. By threatening here to puniſh them ſevenfold, if by the former judgements they would not be reformed, it is not meant that he would puniſh them ſo much more then they deſerved, but as they were worthy for ſo notorious hardening of their hearts, they ſhould have a full meaſure of judgements poured out upon them, the number of ſeven being named to ſet this forth. So Heſychius, who reckoneth the judgements mentioned after this, and findeth them to be but ſix, and this phraſe ſeven times is commonly uſed to ſet forth that which is full and every way perfect, as ſeven dayes make a week, whereby our whole time in this life is meaſured, he threateneth then by thus ſaying judgements day after day: and week after week during life.

Verſe 18.

Heſychius.

And I will break the pride of your power, and make the heaven as braſſe, and the earth as iron. The Sanctuary is called the excellency of their ſtrength, Ezek. 24.21. much like unto the phraſe here uſed, but not onely the prophaning of that is here meant, but the bringing of them down in all other things, wherein their excellency lay, *Ezek.*20.6,18. and 33.28.

Verſe 19.

To make the heaven as braſſe or as iron, for both wayes it is ſpoken of here and *Deut.*28.23. is nothing elſe but to ſhut it up that it rain not, and to make Ambroſ. Epiſt. 52. *lib.*7.

the earth ſo, to harden it by droughts, ſo as that it ſhall yield no more increaſe than iron or braſſe, out of which none can grow. And this phraſe is uſed to anſwer to their hardneſſe of heart, to ſhew, that they ſhould be puniſhed in their own kinde. The Heathens have taught heaven and earth to be as man and wife, the earth by rain, as by ſeed infuſed from heaven, bringing forth fruits plentifully, but otherwiſe being barren But he ſaith, your heaven and earth, to intimate the heaven, where the clouds uſe to move over their heads, for God will not for the ſake of one ſinfull people judge another thus, but it ſhall rain in one place where he is not ſo provoked, and not in another, as the Egyptians were plagued, but the Hebrews ſpared, Exod. 8. 22. Of this judgement ſent read 1 King. 17. Jerem. 14. 1, 2, 3.

Amos 4. 7.

Verſe 21. If ye walk contrary & wil not hearken to me, I will bring 7 times more plagues &c. The word contrary Hebrew is קרי, ſignifying both contrariety & ſtubborneſs, chance; the Septuagint render it contrary or thwart; the Chaldee, with hardneſſe, or ſtubbornly; Maimony, when tribulation cometh for ſin, if ye ſay, it is a chance; as if he ſhould have ſaid, If ye ſin after puniſhments, happen what may, as if ſuch judgements came not upon you by Gods puniſhing hand, but by chance, for thus the Philiſtines ſpake of chance, 1 Sam. 6 9. I prefer the Septuagint and Chaldee, being both to one effect, contray to me or to my lawes, ſtubbornly refuſing to be reformed. Hovv this is complained of afterwards, ſee Jerem. 5. 3.

Maimon

Verſe 22. I will ſend wilde beaſts among you, which ſhall rob you of your children, &c. v. 6. the ridding of evil beaſts out of their land is promiſed to them being obedient, here contrariwiſe the ſending of them is threatened for ſin. Of this judgement by beaſts enough hath been ſaid upon v. 6. and according to this Jeremy threateneth lions, wolves, and leopards to come againſt them

Jerem. 5. 6.

Verſe 23, 24 And if ye will not for theſe things be reformed, but walk contrary to me, I will walk contrary to you. The Septuagint for theſe words, I will walk contrary to you, have with contrary wrath, it being meant, that he will puniſh them in their kinde, as Pſal. 18. 27. With the froward he ſheweth himſelf froward, againſt ſuch as harden themſelves in ſinning, he will harden himſelf to puniſh, and not be moved for pity to take off his judgements.

Verſe 25. I will ſend the ſword, and when ye are gathered together into your cities, the peſtilence. This anſwereth to that, v. 6. where to ſuch as keep the Commandments, it is promiſed, that none ſhall make them afraid, &c. here contrariwiſe they that tranſgreſs ſhall no where be ſafe. And he ſaith, Which may avenge the quarrell of my Covenant; that is, for that ye have tranſgreſſed the words of my law, as the Chaldee hath it: ſee a like paſſage, Jerem. 50. 28.

Chaldee.

Verſe 26. When I have broken the ſtaffe of your bread ten women ſhall bake in one oven, &c. The ſtaffe of bread is ſo called, becauſe hereby the life is ſuſteined, and this ſtaffe is broken, when there is a great want hereof, wherefore the Septuagint render it, I will afflict you with penury of bread; of this ſee more, Ezech. 4. 16, 17. Pſal. 105. 16. By breaking the ſtaffe of bread here Calvin underſtandeth not a want of bread, but of a bleſſing upon it, ſo as that it ſhould not nouriſh them, becauſe it is ſaid, Ye ſhall eat, and not be ſatisfied. But others better underſtand a famine in their beſieged Cities, becauſe it is ſaid, Ten women ſhall bake in one oven: argued a very great penury, becauſe at other times there was bread enough in one houſhold for one oven; and it is ſaid, that they ſhould deliver their bread by weight, intimating, that they ſhould not eat what they would, but as in times of great ſcarcity, onely ſo much a day by weight, and thus remain unſatisfied, when they had eaten. To this effect Theodoret; So great a ſcarcity ſhall overtake you, that ten women may bake all their bread in one oven through the want of neceſſaries. Ten is put for many, as alſo, Gen 31. 7. Numb. 14. 22. Job 19. 3. Eccleſ. 7. 20. and Cyril ſaith, ten is the ſymbol of perfection.

Septuagint,

Calvin.

Toſtatus. Vatablus. Pelican. Lyranus.

Theod. queſt. 36 in Levit. Cyril. Alex. in Zach. 8. τελειότητος συμβολον δέκα & ἔστιν ἀριθμός.

Solomon.

Whereas it is laid, They ſhall return your bread by weight: Rab. Solomon ſaith, They ſhall bake it altogether in one lump, and then weigh to each one his portion.

portion. Toſtatus will have it underſtood of the bread of each family given out by weight to each one of the family. However, as was ſaid before, a great penury of bread is meant, as Revel. 6.5,6. Of a ſpirituall famine, ſee Amos 8. 11,12. in the like phraſe. Toſtatus.

And ye ſhall eat the fleſh of your ſons, and of your daughters. Here ſtill is further ſhewed a greater extremity of famine, as alſo, Deut. 28.53. Ezech. 5.10. This was fulfilled, 2 King. 6.29. Lament. 4.10. Verſe 29.

And I will deſtroy your high places, and cut down your images, and caſt your carcaſes upon your idols, &c. High places were ſuch as they erected to worſhip idols in, as is ſet forth, Jer. 32.35. Ezech. 16.16. 2 Chron. 11.15. c. 33.3. the deſtruction whereof is threatened, Ezech. 6.3,4. Hoſ. 10.8. Amos 7.9. yet there were high places ſometime in which they ſacrificed to God, 2 Chron. 1.3. 1 King. 3.4. but that was onely when the Tabernacle was there, otherwiſe it was a ſin, as hath been noted upon Levit. 17. and ſuch Kings as took them not away, it is noted as a blemiſh in them. The word rendered images, is חמנים, Chamanim, for by this name חמה the Sun is called from חמם to heat, and therefore particularly their Sun-images were ſet forth hereby, and from hence was the appellation of Jupiter Hammon amongſt the heathen, in whoſe Temple in Africa there is ſaid to have been a famous image of the Sun. Macrobius ſaith, that Jupiter and the Sun were all one, in proving which he laboureth by many arguments: but I think rather there being divers images of Jupiter in divers places, in his Temple in Africa he was placed together with Hammah or the Suns image, being hence called Jupiter Hammon; for who knoweth not, that all the heathen have ever held Jupiter and Sol to be two diſtinct things? Some render the word here uſed by Solaria, places into which the Sun ſhone pleaſantly to the refreſhing of thoſe that walked there, but Toſtatus reſolveth better, that Sun-images were meant hereby, becauſe things pertaining to a wicked Religion are here threatened. The Lord foreſaw, that by this ſin eſpecially they would provoke him to wrath, viz. by offering in high places, and worſhipping images, and therefore he before threateneth the deſtruction of theſe and of them ſo groſſe idolaters together. Of images of the Sun ſet forth by this name Camanim read alſo, Eſa. 17.8. c. 27.9. Ezech. 6.4,5. and of the horſes and chariot of the Sun, which the Kings of Judah had given, but Joſiah took away, 2 King. 23.11. and theſe moſt probably were images of four horſes made drawing a chariot wherein the Sun was placed, as Ovid writeth of the Sun thus drawn about continually, Phœbus being feigned to be the driver, or rather they were fair horſes indeed dedicated for the drawing about of the chariot of the Sun, whenſoever it removed, becauſe it is ſaid of the horſes, he took them away, but of the chariots he burnt them with fire, the one being put to other ſervice, but the other conſumed to aſhes. The Septuagint render them wooden images made with hands. The word rendered idols is גלולים ſignifying excrements, or dung, ſo that hereby he ſetteth them forth with the greateſt ignominy as dunghill-gods, as before, Chap. 19.4. by the word אלילים things of nought. Junius rendereth the former word, ſubdiales ſtatuas, that is, images ſtanding in the Sun, till they are tanned herewith, and this, deos ſtercoreos, upon theſe dunghilly baſe gods, which they ſet up unto themſelves, the Lord threateneth to caſt their carcaſes, meaning, that they being ſlain and theſe broken down they ſhould be caſt together: of this judgement ſee more, Ezech. 6.4,5, 13 and Jer. 8.1,2. Pſal. 79.1,2,3. 2 King. 23.20. Toſtatus noteth it to have often come to paſſe, thorow the juſt judgement of God, that idolaters in the time of danger have fled to their idols Temples, and have there been ſlain, and their idols broken down, and ſo they have been caſt out together, and this ſaith Apollinarius was fulfilled, when the enemy entering brake down the Jewes venerable places, and ſlew them amongſt the ruines thereof. Moreover it is to be noted, that he ſaith upon the carcaſes of your idols, becauſe idols ſtanding are amongſt idolaters counted as men living, but being Toſtatus.

Verſe 30.

Macrobius, lib. 1. c. 31.

Munſter. Vatablus. Toſtatus.

Junius in annot.

Toſtatus.

Apollinarius.

being broken down, they are as dead carcaſes. This caſting out of their dead bodies without buriall is threatened amongſt the greateſt judgements, becauſe it was by the Jews accounted moſt grievous, for that they held that the ſoul was continually tormented by evil ſpirits, whileſt the body remained unburied, but when the body was buried it entered into Gods chamber and had reſt, to which effect alſo Virgil writeth, Æneid.6. ſo Cornelius à lapide. And my ſoul ſhall abhor you, this is oppoſed to that *verſ.*11. where the contrary is promiſed to the obedient.

Cornel. à Lapide in Deut.21.

Verſe 31.

And I will make your cities waſte, and bring your ſanctuaries into deſolation, &c. The making waſte of their cities is alſo threatened, Jer.9.11. and fulfilled, Nehem.2.17. But what is meant by ſaying, your ſanctuaries, ſeeing they had but one ſanctuary? Anſw. This one ſanctuary was diſtinguiſhed into three, the court-yard, the holy place, and the moſt holy, and therefore is ſometimes called plurally ſanctuaries, as both here, and Pſal.73.17. the Hebrew word is plurall, and Pſal.74.7. Jer.51.51. God threateneth then, if he be provoked by ſin not onely to deſtroy the monuments of idolatry, but alſo to lay waſte their cities, and ſanctuaries ſet up for his own worſhip, contrary to the promiſe of the obedient, *v.*11. Now it is to to be underſtood, that the Jews had alſo many Synagogues, of the ruining of which it is complained, Pſal.74.8. and of which it is ſpoken, Luc.4.16. Act.15.21. and of them do the Hebrews alſo expound the word ſanctuaries here. Synagogues were in every citie and village, wherein if there were but ten men of Iſrael, they muſt prepare them an houſe to aſſemble in to prayer, called Bethhacneſeth, the houſe of aſſembling, Græcè, a Synagogue, and they muſt here have a Bible, and an ark wherein to lay it up, and a pulpit of wood, out of which the Miniſter read the Law, and ſpake to the people, and this Synagogue muſt be built upon the higheſt ground, and higher then any other houſe in the city. In their Synagogues there muſt alwayes be great reverence uſed, there might be no lightneſſe, laughter, or playing, vain talking, eating, drinking, or walking; they might not go in out of the heat or rain for ſhelter, but onely for divine worſhip, &c. ſo Maimony: and he ſpeaketh alſo of the holineſſe of ſchools wherein the Law was taught, affirming that they were held to be more holy then the Synagogues, and that of them there were in Jeruſalem four hundred of ſchools, read Act.19.8,9,10. They that were taught in them were called ſons of the Prophets: none might be admitted into them, but being firſt converted. And I will not ſmell the ſaveur of your ſweet odours, that is, ſaith the Chaldee, I will not accept with favour; thus the ſame phraſe is uſed alſo, 1 Sam.26.19. Amos 5.21. *Gen.*8.21.

Quæſt.

Lament.2.7.

Maimony in Miſneh ot prayer, Chap.11.

2 Kings 2.3,4. 38.5,22.

Verſe 33.

And I will ſcatter you among the heathen, &c. The word rendered ſcatter, is alſo, I will fan you like chaff, ſo *Pſal.*44.12, or ſcatter, as with a whirlwinde, *Zach.*7.14. This and the ſword alſo here threatened to be drawn out after them is oppoſed to *verſ.*5,6. where dwelling in their own land ſafely, and preſervation from the ſword is promiſed if they obeyed.

Verſe 34.

Then ſhall the land enjoy her Sabbaths as long as it lieth deſolate, &c. By Sabbaths here ſome underſtand reſt from bearing the burden of ſo ſinfull a people; for whileſt they lived there, ſaith Calvin, the land which ſhould have reſted every ſeventh yeer, could never enjoy one yeers reſt, but alwayes wanted the Sabbaths by law appointed, forſomuch as ſhe did bear upon her ſhoulders not without great trouble, the impious contemners of God, ſo likewiſe Radulphus, Vatablus, and Ainſworth. But Theodoret ſaith, It is as if he had ſaid, Becauſe amongſt other ſins this hath been one of breaking the Sabbaths, ye ſhall go into captivity ſeventy yeers, to which number the Sabbaths amounted from the firſt yeer of the reign of Saul to the Babyloniſh captivity, being three hundred and ninety yeers, and the ſeventh part hereof being ſeventy yeers. He then by the Sabbaths underſtandeth thoſe of the ſeventh yeers appointed, *Levit.*25. but if it be counted, the ſeventh part of three hundred and ninety yeers, is but fifty and eight at the moſt, unto which indeed indeed if we adde the Jubile-years in this time being almoſt eight, together they will make 66 years, and theſe, that the land might enjoy her full of Sabbaths for thoſe things, which ſhe had formerly wanted, might well be made up three or four more, and ſo the number will be ſeventie. This is followed by Lyranus, Pellican, Hugo, and Junius, and Toſtatus. Rab. Solomon ſaith, that the 70 years captivity anſwered to all the years, wherein the land loſt her Sabbaths, from the firſt time of their inhabiting it till the captivity, we may receive both theſe Expoſitions, the land ſhould enjoy her Sabbaths of the ſeventh years loſt through the Jewes covetouſneſſe, and of the Jubiles, there being none of them left in the whole time of the captivity to till the ground, who before would not ceaſe from tilling it, as was commanded, and this is confirmed, 2 *Chron.*36.21. If it be objected, ſome poor people were left to till the ground even in this time; It is anſwered, this was but for a very ſhort time, till Gedaliah their Governour was ſlain, for then all fled into Egypt, 2 *King.*25.12. And as the land reſted in reſpect of tilling, ſo it reſted in reſpect of bearing the moſt heavy burthen of a wicked generation, when it was rid of them.

Calvin. Terra aſſidua inquietudine fuit turbata, atque ita Sabbatis ſuis legitimis caruit, cùm humeris geſtaret non ſine gravi moleſtia impios Dei contemptores.

Theod.quæſt.37 in Levit.

Lyranus.
Hugo.
Pellican.
Junius.
R. Solomon

And upon them that are left alive of you I will ſend a faintneſſe into their hearts in the lands of their enemies, and the ſound of a ſhaken leaf ſhall chaſe them, &c. Of the inward terrours of an evill conſcience ariſing from ſin, ſee before, *v.*17. but here it is further ampliſied: and *v.*37,38. The land of your enemies ſhall eat you up. The Chaldee, ſhall conſume you, ye ſhall die there. When God would ſhew grace unto them, it is contrariwiſe promiſed, that they ſhould be brought out of the land, where they were periſhing in Aſſyria, *Eſa.*27.13. and to the ſame effect to them being penitent in their enemies land: here followeth a gracious promiſe of the Lord, remembring his Covenant, *v.*40,41, &c. and not quite caſting them off.

Verſe 36.

Verſe 37,38

If they ſhall confeſſe the iniquity of their fathers, and their own iniquity, &c. The Hebrews, becauſe of this paſſage, hold, that they were to humble themſelves and to faſt certain dayes in the year in remembrance of the calamities of their fore-fathers, brought by their ſinnes; and upon their faſting and mourning in the time of their captivity the fifth and the ſeventh moneth, it is ſpoken, *Zach.*7.3,5. and of the 4, 5, 7, and 10 moneth, *Zach.*8.19. where the Prophet promiſeth that theſe faſts ſhall be turned into joy, upon which they gather, that in the time of the Meſſiah they ſhall keep no faſts any more, but ſuch dayes ſhall all be turned into good dayes, and into feſtivities. Compare with this that ſaying of our Lord, The children of the bride-chamber faſt not when the bridegroom is with them. But they through their blindeneſſe, not ſeeing this time, keep Faſts, and rend their garments ſtill unacceptably. Of confeſſing according to this paſſage, ſee *Dan.*9.3,4,5. and *Nehem.*1.4,5. *Chap.*9.1,2,29, 30. and how the iſſue was, as is here promiſed. We ought then to confeſſe both our own ſins and the ſins of our fathers, as *Jer.*3.25. and if ſo, then we ſhould pray that they may not be remembred againſt us.

Verſe 40.

*Maimony of Taanith. c.*5.

Note.

If their uncircumciſed heart be humbled, and they then accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity. For uncircumciſed heart, the Chaldee hath fooliſh heart; the Targum Jonathan, proud heart: and an uncircumciſed heart is alſo an unbelieving heart, as *Act.*7.51. and a wicked heart, *Ier.*9.26. contrary to that, *Rom.*2.29. For, accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity, it is, accept of their iniquity, Hebrew; but the meaning is the ſame, bear patiently that which their ſins have brought upon them: ſee the like phraſe, *Eſa.*40.2. Her iniquity is accepted of, &c. they confeſſe themſelves in all humility worthy of this great puniſhment.

Verſe 41.

Caldæus.
Targum Jonathan.

I will remember my Covenant with Iacob, with Iſaac, and with Abraham, &c. The Targum Jonathan more explicitly paraphraſeth upon theſe words thus, I will remember my Covenant made with Jacob in Bethel, with Iſaac in mount Moriah, and with Abraham between the pieces, *Gen.*15. God is ſaid to remember his Covenant, when he ſheweth mercy, as he covenanted, Verſe 42.

Targum Jonathan.
Gen.28.
Gen.22.

as

as Exod. 6. 5, 6. Pſal. 106. 45. Deut. 4. 31. and when Chriſt came, God is ſaid to have remembered his covenant, Luk. 1. 69. But why Jacob is firſt named here contrary to the order in other places is a queſtion, for every where elſe it is Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, as Exod. 2. 24. 6. 3, 4. 32. 13, &c. Theodoret ſaith, Jacob is here firſt named, becauſe they onely came of him, but of Iſaac came alſo the Idumeans, of Abraham the Iſhmaelites, Madianites, &c. Moreover he ſaith, that the Lord here aſcendeth by degrees to Abraham, with whom he firſt made the Covenant: ſo likewiſe Rickelius. As if he had ſaid, the Covenant which I made with Jacob your father, from whom ye have your name of Iſraelites, as he was alſo called Iſrael, and not onely then firſt, but before that with Iſaac, and before that with Abraham, whom I firſt ſingularly loved. So that he aſcendeth thus to aſſure them the more upon their repentance, ſith he had not once but ſundry times bound himſelf by Covenant unto them, and not lately, but long ago, having hitherto perſiſted in the ſaid Covenant and not altered. Toſtatus very unreverently, that Jacob is firſt named caſually. Heſychius myſtically underſtandeth by the Covenant with Jacob that of the Goſpel, with Iſaac that of the Prophets, and with Abraham that of the law, and therefore for the dignity of the Goſpel Jacob is firſt named, as having Chriſt more clearly revealed unto him, Gen. 49. But I reſt in the firſt. And I will remember the land, that is, your Cities to make them to be inhabited, and the ground to cauſe it to be tilled, and to become fruitfull, whereas by your ſins it was made deſolate, ſee the ſame thus promiſed, Ezech. 36. 33, 34. and thus ſpoken of, as bleſſed herein, Pſal. 85. 2, 13.

Here the Judgement of deſolation is again repeated, and, v. 44. the promiſe of not breaking his Covenant, their Anceſtours being mentioned again, v. 45. whom he brought out of Egypt. Thus the Lord endeth the threatenings of the law with promiſes of grace, prophetically pointing at their converſion to come under the Goſpel, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh more fully, Rom 11, 5, 23, &c.

Theſe are the ſtatutes and judgements, &c. Here is the concluſion of all, theſe lawes being ſaid to have been made betwixt him and his people in mount Sinai by the hand of Moſes, whereby, ſaith Heſychius, a certain time is intimated of the laſting of theſe lawes and ordinances, viz. till the Lord himſelf ſhould come and immediately teach his will to his people, which was fulfilled, when God took fleſh, and plainly declared the Father and the myſteries of his Kingdome inſtead of teaching by figures of the law, Joh. 1. 18.

Queſt. Theod queſt. 37 in Levit.

Rickleius.

Toſtatus. Heſychius.

Verſe 43, 44 Verſe 45.

Verſe 46.

Heſychius.

Pſal. 50 2, 3. Mal. 3. 1, 2.

CHAP. XXVII.

When a man ſhall make a ſingular vow, the perſons ſhall be for the Lord by thy eſtimation, &c. This ſingular vow, ſaith Aben-Ezra, is made, when any man ſaith, If God doth ſo to me I will give him the value of my ſoul, or I will redeem my ſoul according to my value, or my ſons or daughters ſoul, &c. for thus a man voweth ſingularly himſelf, or ſome of his to the Lord, which muſt be redeemed. And here the Lord preſcribeth rules about duties voluntary, as he hath hitherto done about duties neceſſary, and enjoyned by his lawes. A vow, ſaith Maimony, is when a man ſaith, The value of ſuch or ſuch a thing be upon me; for then he is to give it: and if he ſaith of himſelf, The value of my head, heart, or liver be upon me, or the value of the half of me, he muſt give for his whole perſon, becauſe he cannot but die if any of theſe be taken away: but if he ſaith, The value of my hand be upon me, it muſt be conſidered, what he is worth leſſe without an hand then with it, and a price muſt be conſidered accordingly. Of the rules of the Hebrews about vowes ſee ſomewhat before, Chap. 7. 16. by thy eſtimation, when men are in any great diſtreſſe, they are apt to make vowes to the Lord, if they be delivered, now, becauſe if a man vowed himſelf, or any of his, and all that were ſo vowed ſhould have been emploied about the ſervice of the tabernacle, and Verſe 2. Aben-Ezra.

Maimony.

and not redeemed, the tabernacle might have been over-much cumbred, therefore the Lord provideth for their redemption, it being understood; yet, as Tostatus hath it, that such as vowed their service there to the Lord, must serve in person, and not be redeemed, as Samuel vowed by his mother, but generally by vowing of any to the Lord, his value vvas to be understood, and that vvas to be given, but his person vvent free. By these vvords, by thy estimation, Maimony understandeth, by thy estimation vvho art an Israelite; because this lavv is given to all Israel, v. 1. but not to Heathens, vvhereupon he noteth that if an Heathen saith, My value be upon me, or the value of one an Israelite in my hands be upon me, he saith nothing, it is as no vovv, but any Israelite vovving, an Heathen servant must pay his value, according to the price hereafter set dovvn. Some others referre these vvords to the Priest, as if it had been said, By thy estimation (O Priest.) 1 Because the age and quality of the person vowed vvas to be considered by the Priest. 2 Because the value was to be by him received.. 3 Because for his benefit. Junius understandeth Moses, whom God used as his Instrument to set down the valuations, because their severall values are here by him expressed from the mouth of the Lord, and when he cometh to the Priests valuing in any case, he is expressed, as *v.*8. and *v.*12. and this seemeth most probable, as if he had said, By thy estimation, whereby I shall now direct thee to value each one; viz. the male from 20 to 60 years old at 50 shekels, &c. *v.*3,4,5. and the value went not to the Priests maintenance, but to the reparation of the tabercacle, as is expresly said, in the dayes of Jehoash, 2 King 12.45. and Maimony accordingly saith, all valuations were laid up in a chamber prepared in the Sanctuary for things hallowed to the repairing of the house of God. Or if, by thy estimation, we understand the Israelites estimation it may agree very wery well Tostatus. 1 Sam.1. Maimony. Vatablus. Junius. *Maimony in Erachin, Ch.*1.

And thy estimation shall be of the male from 20 years to 60, 50 shekels; of the female 30: from 5 to 20, of the male 20, and of the female 10: from a moneth old to 5 years of the male 5, and of the female 3: but from 60 and upwards of the male 15, and of the female 10, &c. What a shekel of silver is, according to the shekel of the Sanctuary, which is here also added, see Exod 30.12,13. We may note here first, that before a childe be a moneth old no vowing of him is of any force, which is thought to be, because in this time a new Moon came over his head to sanctifie him, as the young of a beast was not for the Lord till the eighth day, at what time a Sabbath for Sanctification had passed over it. And accordingly the first-born were to be redeemed at the age of a moneth, Numb 18.16. and not before, and the Levites taken in their stead were numbred from a moneth old, *Numb.*3.40. and five shekels was the redemption-money of the first-born at a moneth, as here from a moneth to 5 years old, a proportion being kept herein. 2 The female of every age was still redeemed with lesse then the male, and the more infirm ages before 20 and after 60 with lesse, then the strongest from 20 to 60, because women are the weaker sex, and not of that excelleney by nature that the man is of, for she was made for man, and fell first, and children and old persons are weaker and lesse serviceable then the middle aged. 3 There is no difference between rich and poor, fair and foul, bond and free, but the value of every one of the same sex and age is alike. 4 Although it is said before, by thy valuation, yet these rules were by every one to be followed alwayes without alteration, except in the case of such poor persons as the Priest should not judge able, as *v.*8. 5 An old woman cometh much neerer in value to an old man, then the young to the young man, for she is set at 10 shekels, and the old man but at 15; but before 60 he at 50, she at 30, the full third part, but he not so. 6 If any were neither perfect man nor woman, or both, such were not estimated, because the rules are onely for males or females: so Maimony.

Verse 3,4. Verse 5. Verse 6. Verse 7. Aimsworth. Levit.22.27. 1 Tim.2.12. *Maimony in Erachin, c.*1.

For the mysticall applications of these divers valuations, Hesychius goeth very far, by the males from twenty to fiftie years old understanding the best hearers of the word, because they are valued at fiftie shekels, making 100 drachmaes, Hesychius. Matth.13.

drachmaes, as they are ſaid to be like that good ground, which bringeth forth 100. fold; by the Females between theſe ages, a ſecond ſort of good hearers, like the ground bringing forth ſixty-fold, as the thirty ſhekels, at which they are valued make ſixty drachmaes. By the Males from five to twenty valued at twenty ſhekels, which make fourty drachmaes, thoſe that faſt and pray much, but yet are not of the perfection of the former, becauſe the number of fourty dayes hath been ſpent in faſting by thoſe that have been moſt remarkable for this, as Moſes, Elias and Chriſt; by the Females valued at ten ſhekels, thoſe that though they faſt not ſo much, yet bend their minds to the keeping of the ten Commandements. By the Males from a moneth old to five years valued at five ſhekels, ſuch as are new-born in Chriſt; by the Females, ſuch, as have faith in the Trinity. By the Males from ſixty and upward, the continent formerly, but now marrying; by the Females the continent, but after fornicating, &c. for all that he ſaith in this kinde were both over-tedious to relate, and excogitated with little colour of reaſon. I think generally, that all, who devote themſelves to Gods ſervice, are here myſtically ſet forth to be of price before God: but as in ſexes and ages there is difference amongſt men, ſo all the Religious are not eſteemed alike before God, but ſome more highly and ſome leſſe, according to the greatneſſe or ſlenderneſſe of the graces found in them.

Verſe 8. But if he be poorer then thy eſtimation, the Prieſt ſhall value him according to his ability; Hebrew, according to that which the hand of him that vowed can attain. This is added in favour of poor men, that vow, who have not ſo much, as to give after the rate before ſet down. Some think, that this is not to be underſtood of a man being poor, when he vowed, but falne into poverty ſince, becauſe the rate being certain and well known, he not being able to give it, deſerved rather to be cenſured for vowing, then favoured. But the Hebrews contrariwiſe, if a rich man voweth, and before performance becometh poor, he muſt pay what he hath, and be indebted the reſt, till he is able; but a poor man vowing payeth onely what is found in his hand, if it be but one ſhekel, and is diſcharged according to this law, but under a ſhekel there is no taking of any thing, becauſe it is ſaid, according to the ſhekel of the Sanctuary. It ſeemeth more probable, that both a poor man, and one of rich becoming poor are meant, they muſt be dealt favourably withall, leſt others ſhould be diſcouraged from vowing. And a poor mans vowing, that hath not wherewithall to pay the whole rate is not worthy to be cenſured, but becauſe he ſheweth herein his good will, & payeth what he is able, as the widow bringing but two mites to the Sanctuary, to be commended. But forſomuch as in the caſe of numbering the people the poor were bound to pay as much as the rich, and likewiſe in the redemption of the firſt-born there is no difference, why are the poor favoured in this caſe? To this Toſtatus anſwereth. 1 That thoſe rates were far leſſer, and ſo might the better be born by any one. 2 They were rates impoſed neceſſarily, but theſe upon a vow, which was voluntary, wherefore that none might be diſcouraged, they are not preſſed, that be poor, beyond their ability, and if any were ſo poor, ſaith Maimony that he had not a ſhekel to pay for his vow, he muſt if he groweth rich afterwards, pay the whole.

Toſtatus.

Maimony in Erachin, c. 3.

Exod. 30. 12. Numb. 18. 16. Toſtatus.

Verſe 9, 10. And if it be a beaſt, whereof men bring an offering to the Lord, it ſhall be holy, he ſhall not alter it. After the law of men vowed, here followeth the law of beaſts vowed, whereof ſome be clean and fit for ſacrifice, and ſome unclean, touching the clean it is here decreed, that all being vowed ſhall be holy, that is, may not be redeemed. But whether all ſuch beaſts vowed are to be offered in ſacrifice is not here determined, Toſtatus ſaith, if a beaſt be vowed to God, it goeth to the prieſt, as is appointed, Num 18. 14. unleſſe it be vowed expreſly for ſacrifice, for then it muſt neceſſarily be ſacrificed. The Hebrewes ſay, that any thing vowed abſolutely goeth to the maintenance of Gods houſe, it being ſold, and a price taken for it. But if a clean beaſt vowed might be ſold, I ſee

Toſtatus.

Maimony in Erachin, c. 5.

no

no reaſon, why the ovvner might not redeem it and give the price for it, as well as another man, It is therefore, as I take it, rather to be held, that if it vvere not vovved for ſacrifice expreſly, the prieſt muſt have it for the ſuſtenance of him & his family, as other holy things, that none elſe might eat of.

For the change forbidden, it is not onely ſaid, He ſhall not give a worſe for a better, but alſo, a better for a worſe, becauſe men being covetous, vvhen upon the ſudden they have vovved a good beaſt, are ready eftſoones to alter their minds and then to give a vvorſe inſtead thereof, and to colour it over, to ſay this is better: ſo Maimony. God vvould hereby cut avvay all occaſion of fraud. Then both it and the exchange ſhall be holy. Here Maimony maketh ſome exceptions. 1 If the beaſt vovved hath a tranſitory blemiſh, or a fixed blemiſh come upon it after it vvas ſanctified, it may be changed. 2 A firſtling may be changed all the while, that it is in the houſe of the owner, but not afterwards. 3 The High Prieſts ram may be changed, but not his bullock, ſo Maimony; in the firſt of which onely there is reaſon, but not in the other. And for the uſe of the beaſt forfeited by exchange, he ſaith, If the beaſt vowed were for a burnt-offering, the exchange alſo muſt be offered, unleſſe it were a Female, and then it muſt feed, till ſome blemiſh befalleth it, and be ſold, and with the price a burnt-offering muſt be bought, ſo likewiſe if it he a treſpaſſe-offering, &c. but in theſe rules I can ſee ſo little reaſon, that I ſpare to ſet down any more of them.

Verſe 10.

For the myſtery; as one beaſt muſt not be brought to be offered for another, whether worſe or better, ſo one man cannot do the duties of Gods ſervice, that properly belong to another, but every one is bound to perform his duty in his own perſon, ſo Hugo Cardin. and as the Hebrewes hold that if a man for a beaſt, which he hath vowed, bringeth another mans beaſt, it is nothing, and therefore in this caſe the law of forfeiting the change holdeth not, ſo when one man doth a duty for another, it is nothing. Oleaſter applieth it to the Miniſter of Gods Word in particular.

The Myſtery.

Hugo Card.

Oleaſter.

And if it be an unclean beaſt, of which they offer not in ſacrifice, then he ſhall preſent the beaſt before the Prieſt, &c. By unclean beaſts here Maimony underſtandeth not onely thoſe that are ſo by nature, but a clean beaſt becoming ſuch by a blemiſh that befalleth him, after he is vowed. By the law it ſeemeth, that an unclean beaſt might be vovved unto the Lord, either for the ſervice of the prieſts, or to be ſold, that benefit might be made hereby to the uſe of the Sanctuary, yet a dog in particular is excepted, Deut. 23.18. Heſychius ſeeketh hereby to overthrow the literall ſenſe, and to eſtabliſh the myſticall, becauſe an unclean beaſt not fit for ſacrifice could not be vowed acceptably to the Lord: but Calvin better, ſaith, The ſervice or price of it might be acceptable, ſeeing his prieſts and Sanctuary were hereby in part maintained, although it were not fit for ſacrifice. The beaſt devoted muſt be preſented before the Prieſt, this was a common rule, ſaith Maimony, both for a beaſt upon which a blemiſh was falne, and which was perfect, it muſt be preſented before the prieſt, and if it died before, it was not redeemed, but buried. And if the party vowing would redeem it, the prieſt muſt value it to him, and ſet upon it a fifth part more, ſo that the owner, if he would redeem it, muſt give a fifth part more, then another man. This law may ſeem ſtrange, both becauſe the prieſt, who muſt take the money, is appointed to value it, and as if he could not ſet price enough upon it, he muſt have both his price and a fifth part more, and that the owner ſhould be made to pay dearer then another man. But it is anſwered, in appointing the prieſt to value it there is no more done then ordinary, for who ſetteth the price upon a mans own beaſt but himſelf? and a beaſt vowed is the prieſts, who is Gods ſubſtitute. For his ſetting price enough at the firſt, herein it is likely that he went by the rule of equity, what another man would give for it, and more is impoſed by a fifth part upon the owner, then upon another, nomine pœnæ, as Maimony ſpeaketh, for his inconſtancy, in that having vowed the beaſt,

Verſe 11.

Maimony.

Heſychius.

Calvin.

Verſe 12, 13

Maimony.

beaſt, he now deſireth to keep it ſtill. And it ſtood with reaſon, that the Prieſt ſhould have more of him for it then of another, becauſe if he would have it upon the conditions here ſet, he could not keep it from him, of what benefit ſoever it would have been to the Prieſt, but to another it was at his own liberty, whether he would ſell it or not. Lyranus ſaith, This mulct was impoſed, that he which vowed might be kept hereby from deſiring to keep it ſtill after his vow.

Lyranus.

Verſe 14,15

The ſame order is ſet down for an houſe vowed, and thus ſanctified; if the owner will redeem it, he muſt adde a fifth part: whereas it is ſaid, he ſhall adde the fifth part of the money, &c. Maimony noteth, that a man might not redeem his houſe by giving land for it, but money onely, or other moveables which are as money, and that the liberty of redeeming was to the wife or the heir, and an houſe might be redeemed at any time, if it were in a citie or walled town. But what if the owner would not redeem it, muſt the Prieſt needs ſell it to another? Toſtatus, and after him Lorinus anſwer, yes, becauſe the Prieſts ought to be content with the poſſeſſions given them amongſt the other tribes, and if they had not been bound to ſell, in time more might have devolved to their tribe then to two others. But how can they prove that the Prieſts muſt never have any more poſſeſſions then the firſt aſſigned unto them? and for the over-great increaſe of their poſſeſſions by this means, the people of other tribes were to look to that at their perill, as is ſhewed touching a field ſanctified, *verſ.*20,21. If it be not redeemed it ſhall be holy for ever, and not return in the Jubile, but be added to the Prieſts poſſeſſions, which words may ſerve alſo to confute the fore-cited opinion. Beſides that, it were unreaſonable that the Prieſt ſhould be bound to ſell, ſeeing haply there might be none that would buy at a juſt price, but at an undervalue.

Maimony.

Queſt.

Toſtatus.

Verſe 16.

If a man ſhall ſanctifie to the Lord ſome part of the field of his poſſeſſion, &c. The field of his poſſeſſion, is that which cometh to him by inheritance, not purchaſed; for of fields purchaſed another law is made, *verſ.*22. Thine eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſeed thereof, an homer of barley-ſeed ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels of ſilver. The homer, Hebr. חומר, is not the ſame with an omer, Hebr. עומר, *Exod.*16.36. ſaid to be the tenth part of an ephah, but a meaſure containing ten times as much. For homer, Junius hath corus, a core containing ten ephahs, that is, thirty meaſures, and *Ezech.*45.11. an ephah is ſaid to be the tenth part of an homer, and ſo likewiſe it is ſaid a bath ſhould be. Maimony more fully, an homer is a core, that is two lethecks, of which, *Hoſ.*3.2. a lethech is fifteen ſeahs, of which Abraham ſpeaketh, *Gen.*18.6. make ready three ſeahs or meaſures, ſo that an homer is thirty ſeahs or meaſures, and of theſe three make an ephah, ſo that as was ſaid before, it is ten ephahs, and an ephah is generally held to be as much as Medimnus Atticus, which Budæus eſtimateth to be ten omers or gallons, that is, a buſhell and a peck; but others, a pottle leſſe then a buſhell. But if a ſeah, as ſome hold, be no more then a peck, and three ſeahs make an ephah, it wanteth a peck of a buſhell, and the homer, or core will be but ſeven buſhels and an half, and by this account an omer ſpoken of, *Exod.*16.36. was but a pottle and the tenth part of a gallon. In this place for homer, both the Septuagint and the Chaldee have alſo a core: of the core read more, 1 *King.*4.22. where for thirty meaſures of fine flour, are thirty cores, Hebr. כור, and *Eſa.*5.10. whereas it is ſaid, This homer of ſeed ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels, the meaning is, as the Hebrews ſay, and after them Lyranus, this is the redemption-money to be given for the whole time between one Jubile and another, a ſhekel for a yeer, and ſo as many ſhekels as there be yeers to the Jubile that is to come, and the ſame price is to be given for the worſt and the beſt land in Iſrael, none being prized higher for the goodneſſe, or lower for the barrenneſſe, ſo much ground as is commonly ſowen with an homer of barley, ſhall be at fifty ſhekels. Toſtatus and ſome others after him hold, that fifty ſhekels muſt be given for a yeer, and that the goodneſſe of the ground was to be reſpected. But how the

Junius.

Maimony in Erachin.c.4.

Budæus.

Lyranus.

Maimony.

Toſtatus.

the goodneſſe ſhould be reſpected more then by the quantity of ſeed laid upon it, an homer ſeeding leſſe of the fertile, and more of the barren ground, I cannot ſee, becauſe ſo much is expreſly eſtimated without putting difference at 50 ſhekels, as the perſons of men of the ſame age at the ſame ſum, no difference being put betwixt the more and the leſſe able of body. And for the 50 ſhekels per annum, as it is unreaſonable, ſeeing two acres of ground or thereabout, could not be any thing neer worth ſo much a year, 50 ſhekels being above 4 lb. ſo it is againſt the text following, *v.*17,18. where the rate aforeſaid is expreſly determined from the Jubile; and if ſome years be paſt, an abatement muſt be made accordingly. Whereas they object, a ſhekel for a year is too little; this may ſeem ſtrange, ſeeing the rent of ground in times paſt, even in our fruitfull England hath been but four pence or ſix pence an acre, and this rate was after ten pence, and the money paid down before-hand for divers years, and a fifth part added, as *v.*19 yea if the ſhekel of the Sanctuary, be as ſome count it, half an ounce, that is, 2 ſhillings and 6 pence, the rate was after 15 pence or more for the acre. Solomon Jarchi ſaith, but upon what ground I know not, that a ſhekel and half a Gerah, that is, three farthings muſt be given for a year, and that this muſt be done before all the years expiring before the Jubile, except one, for it muſt be done two years before at the leaſt, becauſe it is ſaid, According to the years that remain: what a Gerah is, ſee *v.*25. Sol. Jarchi.

If he will not redeem the field, or if he hath ſold it to another man, it ſhall not be redeemed any more, &c. There was, ſay the Hebrews, a Treaſurer of the Sanctuary, to whom belonged the ſelling of conſecrated fields; if the owner refuſed to redeem a field, conſecrated according to the order here ſet down, the ſon, if he would, might redeem it for him, and then it went to the father again, as if he himſelf had redemed it; if the ſon did not, the daughter might, or a kinſman, or a ſtranger, but then it returned not to the firſt owner, unleſſe he redeemed it againe of ſuch an one before the year of Jubile; but went then to the Prieſts for ever. Thus Maimony. Verſe 20. Maimony in Erachin.

And if this were ſo, then by theſe words, he hath ſold it, muſt be underſtood the Treaſurer, and by theſe words, to another man, one that neither was a kinſman, nor bought it as a kinſman to do him that firſt devoted it a good office, but meerly for his owvn benefit, in this caſe it is gone upon the ſale from the firſt owvner for ever, but not in the other, becauſe till the Jubile he hath liberty to redeem it. Of the proviſion that a kinſman may redeem for his kinſman ſee before, *Levit.*25.25. The time, hovv long the Treaſurer muſt tarry before that he ſelleth to another, is by none determined, but I ſuppoſe that either upon the owvners reſolution made knovvn that he vvill never redeem it, or if he ſeemeth deſirous to redeem it; but delayeth till within two years, then it may be ſold, that in the Jubile it may come to the Prieſts, according to the order ſet down here.

The field that goeth out in the Jubile ſhall be holy to the Lord, &c. For hereupon Maimony noteth, that if the field remaineth conſecrated till the Jubile, and is ſold to no man, the Prieſts muſt give a price of redemption for the uſe of the Sanctuary, and ſo enjoy the field, becauſe no hallowed field muſt go without redemption, but if it were ſold before, then they enjoyned it freely, as men did their own at that time, becauſe the price of redemption had been paid by another. And if it be doubted which of the Prieſts ſhould have it, he alſo reſolveth, they that were at the coming on of the Jubile in the ward or courſe of their miniſtration, as 1 *Chron.*24. and if the Jubile began upon a Sabbath-day when one courſe went out and another came in, it muſt go to that courſe that went out. If the queſtion be here, what if the field conſecrated be no corn-field, but beareth trees, or paſture onely? Maimony anſwereth, then he muſt give the worth thereof, and of the trees therein alſo, becauſe the ground being ſanctified, the trees go with the ground. Verſe 21.

If

Verſe 22. If a man ſanctifie a field which he hath bought, that is not of the fields of his poſſeſſion, &c. Here is a different caſe from the former, in which, as equity requireth, the field ſanctified muſt return in the year of Jubile to the firſt owner, neither can he by the buyers ſanctifying of it be deprived thereof for ever, becauſe he onely ſold it, and in this caſe the law is, *Levit.*25. that it ſhall return in the Jubile, whatſoever the buyer in the mean ſeaſon hath done with it, yea, as Maimony ſaith, although the buyer ſell it to another, and he to another, and ſo it goeth to 100. men, yet being ſanctified by the laſt man, the owner ſhall not be deprived of it, but have it again in the Jubile. And in this caſe, the ſame Maimony alſo ſaith, that the Redemption was not as of a mans own poſſeſſion being ſanctified, viz. the fifth part being added, but onely according to the rate before named. And it ſeemeth, becauſe it is not ſaid in caſe that he would not redeem it, what ſhould be done with it, that he muſt redeem it without fail, as a perſon being devoted to God, and what he ſanctified it, then he did in effect but ſanctifie the price thereof. For the myſtery of houſes and grounds thus ſanctified and redeemed, Heſychius is large in proſecuting his own imaginations: but becauſe I think all things here brought by him much ſtrained, I paſſe them over.

Maimony.

Verſe 25. All thy eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſhekel of the ſanctuary. Of this ſee before, *Exod.*30.13. A ſhekel was a piece of ſilver, that went by weight, and it vveighed, ſaith one, preciſely half an ounce, that is, two ſhillings and ſix pence. It had on the one ſide the meaſure for manna vvith this inſcription, The ſide of Iſrael, and on the other ſide Aarons rod flouriſhing with this inſcription, Holy Jeruſalem: the common ſhekel was half ſo much: the valuing by the ſhekel of the Sanctuary did ſet forth Gods eſtimating of every man according to which he ſhall be counted, and not as he or others account of him.

Hen Bunting Patriarchs travails.

Verſe 26,27 Here leſt any ſhould miſtake the Law of ſanctifying things to the Lord, and vow the firſtling of any beaſt unto him, it is provided, that no ſuch might be vowed, becauſe the firſtlings are all the Lords by a former ordination, *Exod.*13.2. and therefore if any man ſhould vow ſuch, he ſhould vow that which was not his own, and therefore Maimony hereupon obſerveth, that nothing, which was not a mans own, could be vowed, or if he had ſomething in another mans cuſtody, unleſſe the keeper acknowledged it to be his, for then he might vow it.

Maimony.

Verſe 27. But if it be of an unclean beaſt, he ſhall redeem it, &c. Here by unclean beaſts, Solomon Jarchi underſtandeth ſuch beaſts devoted to the reparation and uſe of the Sanctuary, as *verſ.*11. but ſo there ſhould be an iteration of the ſame law without cauſe. It is better then to underſtand it of the firſtlings of ſuch, who are the Lords, and were before appointed to be redeemed; but becauſe there no addition of a fifth part was ſpoken of, it is here again repeated, and this is added, it being meant, as Junius noteth, that if the owner will needs redeem it, and will not have it ſold to another man, he muſt pay a fifth part more: but for an aſſe in ſpeciall, if he will not give a lamb for it, as was before appointed, there is no price of redemption, but the neck muſt be broken. Therefore that cometh not within the compaſſe of this law, but other unclean beaſts in generall appointed to be redeemed, *Num.*18.15. The firſtlings that were clean, might not be redeemed, but ſacrificed: theſe muſt be redeemed.

Solomon Jarchi

Exod.13.13. Junius.

Num.18.17.

Verſe 28. Notwithſtanding no devoted thing, that a man ſhall devote unto the Lord, whether of man or beaſt ſhall be ſold, or redeemed, &c. This may ſeem to be contrary to all the lawes about devoted things before-going, which they were allowed to redeem, unleſſe they were clean beaſts fit for ſacrifice. But it is to be noted, that the word here uſed differeth from all before-going; every חרם that a man ſhall make a חרם of, may not be redeemed, that is, every thing, that he doth ſo devote, as that he utterly cutteth it off from the liberty of redemption, becauſe חרם ſignifieth, to cut off, the Septuagint render it Anathema.

Before

Before onely things vowed, or made to come neer, or sanctified were spoken of, which was a more expresse devoting to the sanctuary, as Maimony noteth, but here an absolute devoting without any such expression; for if any man said, This be devoted to God, or to his Sanctuary, it might be sold, and the price went to the reparation and maintenance of the Sanctuary; but if he said, This be devoted absolutely, it was the Priests, according to that law, *Numb.*18.14. and might not be redeemed. And yet he saith, These things coming into the Priests possession are as other common things in every respect to be used, as he pleaseth, onely to him that voweth, whilest he still hath them, they are most holy, as is here said. Lyranus saith, that the word חרם, may be taken two wayes, either for sanctification, or for destruction, which destruction yet is for the glory of God: that it is put for destruction, see *Exod.*22.20. *Deut.*7.20.20.17. And this sense is followed by Cajetan, who calleth it a vow of destruction, because destruction hangeth over their heads, that usurp any thing thus vowed, as of Achan, *Jos.*7. but the former vow he calleth a vow of estimation. And by the words following, *vers.*29. it may seem that a vow to cut off or to destroy is here meant: for it is there added, None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed, but shall be surely put to death. But what, might men devote men to death then to the glory of of God, because either men or beasts are expressely named, *vers.*27? It is answered, that they might, both generally the congregation, as *Levit.*21.2,3. who vowed the destruction of the Canaanites, and destroyed them, from whence the place where, had the name Hormah, from Cherem, the word here used: and particularly the Magistrates might devote men in judgement to die, after which they might not be redeemed, but must be put to death, and to this doth Maimony apply this law, *vers.*29. and Solomon Jarchi, and Chazkuni, and to justifie this exposition, *Exod.*22.20. is brought, where he that sacrificeth to other gods is appointed to חרם. Tostatus saith, that some Hebrews have held from this law, that a private man might devote his servant to death, if he were a Canaanite; but he rejecteth this. For my part, I cannot see, how the man said to be devoted here, that must die, should be particularly understood of a malefactour appointed in course of judgement to die, &c. if it be understood of men, because it is a law generall in the case of any private mans devoting of any thing, man, beast or field, and this provision, *vers.*29. must answer to the Law fully, *vers.*28. and therefore admitteth no such restraint. And the like reason is against expounding it of a servant, a Canaanite. And whereas some will have these words understood of a civil death, as touching men devoted, as if nothing else had been meant, but that he should be dead unto the world, being cut off from all service, but onely about the Sanctuary, as Samuel being devoted by his mother Hannah, & Sampson to be a Nazarite, and the Gibeonites to be drawers of water and hewers of wood for the Sanctuary: I cannot subscribe; because this is apparantly a forced construction, the words being no where thus used. If therefore I may give my poor conjecture; I think the meaning is, all devoted by men, if they be fit for sacrifice, shall die, be killed and offered; for who knoweth not, although men devoted be not excepted, that the killing of such cannot please God, seeing when all other first-born must either be killed for sacrifice, or that of the asse have the head cut off, in case it be not redeemed? It is absolutely provided that men shall be redeemed. It is the Devil, who was a murtherer from the beginning, whom the Gentiles worshipped, that delighted in humane sacrifices, and not God; for he alwayes abhorred from them, as we may see in the example of Abraham stayed suddenly, when at his command for triall of his obedience he was about to kill his son Isaac for a sacrifice: and Micah, when the question is made, Shall I offer the first-born of my body for the sin of my soul? in the the name of the Lord renounceth this, and teacheth the true Sacrifice. See also, *Esa.*66.3. and that men devoted were not to die, may be gathered,

Maimony in Erach.c.6.

Lyranus.

Cajetan.

Quest.

Maimony.
Solom. Jarchi.
Cazkuni.
Tostatus.

Verse 28.

Lyranus.
Tostatus.
Lorinus.

Exod.13.

Mic.6.7.

Note.
Verse 30.

gathered, *Numb.*18.14. where every thing devoted is aſſigned to the Prieſt, and the word חרם is uſed, and if the man devoted be put to death, how ſhall the Prieſt have him? In that the Lord will not, that things devoted be redeemed, he hereby intimateth, what conſtancy he would have in us in vowing our ſelves to his ſervice, or any of our goods to him.

Note.

Verſe 30.

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the ſeed of the field or of the fruit of the trees is the Lords, &c. Tithes, ſay the Hebrews, were either the firſt or ſecond: the firſt were tithes ſet on every year, after the Terumah, or heave-offering taken out, the tenth part of the corn, or of fruit, or of any thing like unto theſe, the ſecond were the tithes of the remainder, which were carried up to Jeruſalem, and there eaten by the owners, and given to the poor. Of the firſt tithe, *Numb.*18. they are appointed to the Levites, and *Deut.*14.22. Of the ſecond tithe, *Deut.*14.28. and of carrying it to Jeruſalem, and eating of it there, *v.*23. and of communicating it to the poor, *v.*29. and of this tithe of the third year onely is that to be underſtood, *Deut.*12. 6,7. And of this ſecond tithe onely do they underſtand the law here, becauſe the firſt tithes have no holineſſe in them at all, but may be eaten in any place by any perſons, clean and unclean, as *Numb.*18.27. but the ſecond muſt be eaten onely before the Lord in Jeruſalem, and as things vowed, if they be redeemed, a fifth part muſt be added, that is if the way be far, and therefore to ſave carriage, the owner will give money for it, then he muſt follow this order, and with his money buy at Jeruſalem what food he pleaſeth to make merry withall, *Deut.*14.24,25.

Some ſay that tithes were of three ſorts: the firſt, as hath been ſaid, the ſecond, a tithe out of the nine parts carried to Jeruſalem at feſtivall times every year, and a third upon the third year over and above both theſe to be ſpent at home upon the poor. And hereunto I cannot but aſſent, becauſe all theſe three ſorts are plainly ſpoken of. 1 The tenth of all to be paid yearly to the Levites, *Numb.*18.21. *Deut.*14.22. and out of this the Levites paid the tenth again to the High Prieſt. For although, *Deut.*14.22,23. this may ſeem to be one and the ſame with the tithe brought up to Jeruſalem, yet it is plain, that it is not becauſe the tithe brought thither was to be ſpent in feaſting at the will of the owner, whereas this is pronounced to be the inheritance of the Tribe of Levi, *Numb.*18.24. and part of it muſt be paid to the High Prieſt. 2 The tithe taken out of the nine parts remaining, when the firſt tithe was paid, 3 A tithe over and above both theſe every third year for the poor, of which it is ſpoken, *Deut.*14.22,23,24,25,26,27,28. They are generally indeed confounded together, and taken for one and the ſame, becauſe they are ſpoken of together without any apparent diſtinction, but hereby it appeareth that they are two divers ſorts of tithes, becauſe the one is ſpoken of as payable yearly, and to be carried to the Sanctuary; and the other, as the tithe of the third year onely, and to be ſpent upon the poor at home. And with the ſecond tithes, it is likely that each man filled his hands when he appeared before the Lord at Jeruſalem, which he was to do three times in the year, and then we muſt appear empty, *Exod.*23.15. Jerom calleth the tithe paid out of the tithe to the High Prieſt, δευτεροδεκάτην, the ſecond tithe, but although that was a ſecond, yet it was not the ſecond tithe, according to the diſtinction before-going. For Maimony's applying of that which is here ſaid to the ſecond tithe, and not to the firſt, it ſeemeth to be againſt the true meaning, becauſe it is ſaid, all the tithes, & therefore if any would redeem their tithes, they muſt pay a fifth part above the principall. Of theſe three ſorts of tithes, two which were now firſt inſtituted are done away, as Ceremoniall, ſaving, that for the tithe of the third year alwayes almes muſt be given to the poor, but the firſt tithe, of which it is ſaid, All the tithe of the land is the Lords, is morall and perpetuall, becauſe it is ſpoken of, as the Lords before, and not now firſt ordeined to be his, and it is the maintenance of his Miniſters. As the firſt fruits, ſo the tithes are applied to the godly, as ſetting them forth to be be holy to the Lord, Esa.6 13 Jerem.2.3, &c. under these tithes specified, all others, say some, are meant, as prediall and personall and mixt tithes.

Hieron. in Ezech.c.45.

Concerning the tithe of the herdor of the flock, the tenth shall be holy to the Lord, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod. Maimony, according to the letter here, restreineth this tithe to clean beasts onely, and saith, that they were killed for sacrifice, and that the Priest had no part in them, no more then of the paschal lambe, but the fat was burnt, and the rest eaten by the owners. But Tostatus and some others hold à pari, that the tenth of the increase of all other cattel serviceable to man was to be paid also, and it may seem by that, Luc.18.12. I give tithe of all that I possesse; that tenths were paid then more generally, this being understood to be the meaning of the law of tithing. Upon these words, passeth under the rod, Maimony also saith, the manner of setting out the tithe-lambes or kids was pointed at, viz. to bring them altogether into a fold, and the dams being without to let them go out at a little door, alwayes marking the tenth with red, laying the rod upon the head thereof. For the second and third tithes, how they were used more shall be said afterwards upon Deut.14.22, &c. Verse 32. Maimony. Tostatus.

He shall not search whether it be good or bad, or change it, &c. The same penalty for changing is here set down, and v.10. It shall not be redeemed, that is, if it be unblemished, it may not be sold, because it is for sacrifice. Maimony. In appointing tithes to be paid unto him the Lord taught us to acknowledge, that all our increase cometh from him, that we might accordingly be thankfull, and honour him with this part thereof, Prov.3.9. Deut.8.13,18. Hos.2.8. and this is done when we communicate thus of all our goods to his Ministers, Gal.6.6. 1 Cor.9.11. and give almes to the poor, Luk.11.41. being of much avail to be known, because hereby especially God executed his wrath against the Jews, as formerly by the Monarchy of Assyria and Babylon, great varieties occurring herein, being full of delight and profit to the discreet Reader. Verse 33.

Now to God onely, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, who hath strengthened me to perfect this great Work, extending from the beginning of the World to the foresaid fatall downfall of Jerusalem through 4034 years, be all Honour, Praise, and Glory for ever and ever, Amen.

A COMMENTARY UPON THE BOOKE OF NUMBERS.

CHAP. 1. Verſ. 1.

AND the Lord ſpake to Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, in the Tabernacle of the congregation, the firſt day of the ſecond moneth, the ſecond year, &c.] This book called the book of Numbers, in Hebrew hath the name במדבר in the wilderneſs; a word uſed in this firſt verſe, and beginneth with a conjunction copulative, as alſo the book of Leviticus did, becauſe all the books of Moſes at the firſt were but one entire body, but the Septuagints afterwards thus diſtinguiſhed to avoid tedioſneſs in the reading, and they gave the name of the book of Numbers hereunto, becauſe, as Ambroſe hath it, it containeth the number of the men that came out of Egypt, which God commanded to be taken; thus alſo Athanaſius, Iſidor, and Jerom.. Toſtatus noteth that there were four numbrings, which might give occaſion to this name: Firſt, of men fit for war, Chapter. 1. Secondly, of the firſt-born, Chapter 2. Thirdly, of the Levites, Chapter 3. Fourthly, of their Manſions, Chapter 33. Aureolus mentioneth divers numbrings more, as of the offerings made by every Prince, Chap 7. Of Prieſts and Levites, with their deputation to their Offices, Chap. 8. &c. Of ſearchers ſent out, Chap. 13. &c. Of rebells, Chap. 16. Of thoſe that were born in the wilderneſs, before they came into the Land of Canaan, Chap. 26. And of Cities of Refuge, Chap. 34. So that although divers ceremonial lawes be in this book ſet forth alſo, yet becauſe ſo many numbrings are made here more then in any other book, it may well have the name of the book of Numbers.

Ambroſ. de manſion. 42.

Toſtatus.

Aureolus.

It may be demanded, why the Lord would now have the people numbred? Theodoret anſwereth that his promiſe to Abraham of a moſt numerous Poſterity might appear to be fulfilled: but this appeared as much before, Exod. 12. 37. where they are numbred to be 600000. and therefore the reaſon of Oleaſter is better; they were numbred now becauſe they were to travel, and to take up divers manſions, that every Tribe knowing his place, there might be no con-

Queſt.

Theodoret.

Oleaſter.

tention amongst them, and because they were to fight with their enemies they were numbred, that the fittest for war might be chosen out from amongst them. And hereunto we may add the reason of Rab. Solomon, the Lord would have them often numbred to shew that he took great delight in his people, as a man in his mony that he telleth often over; and to this we may add further, that his care over them all might appear, of which his numbring is a sign, Luc.12.

Exod.19.1. The time when God spake to Moses about numbring the people, was the first day of the second moneth of the 2. yeare after their coming out of Egypt. They came to this mount the third moneth of the first year, and having continued

Exod.4.1. there all the time of the giving of the law, and of erecting the Tabernacle, unto the first day of the first moneth of the second year; from thence to the end of that moneth, the laws and events related in Leviticus, were given and fell out, so that all contained in Leviticus, is the history but of one moneth: from their coming out of Egypt to the present time was a year and fifteen dayes; from their coming to mount Sinai eleven moneths, and before they departed twenty dayes more, as is to be seen *Numb.*10.11. so that they were a whole year wanting ten stayes about mount Sinai. And here all things are done in excellent order, the Tabernacle is finished, and the lawes are declared unto the people, and they are taught therein, and then order is taken for their going forward, they that were fit for war being first numbred, and put into the ranks. The appointing of the people to be numbred after the giving of the law, the institution of Sacrifices, and the Rites of purifying from uncleannesses served to shew, that they that will come into account with God, and be in the number of his chosen people, must first endure many things, be purged from sin, and turn to the lawes of God, living according to the same; so Origen, and after him Ambrose, Rabanus, Rickelius, Hugo, &c. Whereas it is said, the second moneth of the second year, Rabanus noteth, that mystically hereby was set forth the time of grace under the new Testament, wherein we must walk towards the land of the heavenly Canaan by newnesse of life; after that we have passed through the red sea of Baptism, and have been delivered out of the Egypt of sin and thraldom to the divel, by faith in Jesus Christ; as they at this time were disposed to pass on towards Canaan by divers journeyes in the wilderneſſe. Ferus saith, that God kept the people a year about mount Sinai, instructing them in the law, before they went forward toward the Land of Canaan, to shew, that whoso will come to the true Land of Promise, must first be well instructed in the lawes and ordinances of the Lord.

Note.
Suscipere primò debet legem dei & sp. St offerre sacrificia & explere purificationes, & peragere cuncta quæ lex spir. docet.
Origen. Hom.1. in Numer.
Ambros. Raban.
Ferus.

Vers. 2. Take ye the names of all the congregation of the children of Israel after their families &c. God, saith Ferus, appointed them to be numbred that they might be brought into order, every one taking his proper place, for God is the God of order. 2. That his works might be the more magnified both for that he had increased the Israelites in so short a time to so great a multitude, according to his promise to Abraham, that we might never doubt of his promises, and also for that he meant now to sustain this huge multitude in the wilderness a long time without natural means, that we might hope alwaies and never despair of his providence; 3 which was had before, that it might appear, what delight he took in his people, as a shepheard in his sheep, which he often numbreth. 4. To shew that all the Elect are numbred with God and their names are written in his book never to be blotted out again: for according to this the Lord saith, rejoyce that your names are written in heaven; and he that over-cometh, I will not blot his name out of my book.

1 Cor.14.

Luc.10.20.
Revel.3.5.

In this numbring the children of Israel only are comprehended, and those males only, not females, and from twenty years old and upward, not children, to shew, that none are in the number of Gods people, but Israelites, if any Egyptians or other heathens in manners intrude themselves amongst them, they shall be cast out again, as not being of this number, as *Matth.*22. He that had not on the wedding garment, and the incestuous person was cast out, and others like unto him. In that no females are numbred, this shewed, that the effeminate are none of this number, the tender, the fearful, and the inconstant, but only the valiant, and constant denyers of themselves and of carnal pleasures: for denying a mans self, see Matth. 16.24. and for constancy, Luc. 9. 62. Math 24.13. Revel. 2.10. And touching the effeminate, it is said they shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven, 1 Cor 6.9. Lastly in that children are not numbred, but men, this shewed, that they who are of childish conditions are not of this number, that is, they, in whom there is levity, ignorance and foolishness, and therefore it is said, be not children in understanding, and Let not foolish talking, or jesting be once named amongst you. And again, be not foolish, but wise and understand what the will of the Lord is. It is not thus ordered to shew, that men of other nations are excluded, for God hath his sealed ones of all nations in very great numbers, Revel. 7.9. Nor that women belong not to his number, for the faithful woman is heire together of the grace of life, and in Christ neither is there male nor female, but all are one: nor that children are not of this number, for of such is said to be the Kingdom of God. To this effect Ferus, who also addeth, that the people are numbred here and again before their entrance into the Land of Canaan, to intimate two elections; 1. To be members of the Church militant: 2. To be members of the Church triumphant: the first we are made by baptisme and Faith, for hereby we are incorporated into the Church: the second by the Angels gathering us from the four parts of the World at the last day into the Kingdom of heaven. But as at their second numbring, there were not above two of all these remaining to enter into Canaan, so there be many called, but few then chosen. All do not run so as to obtain. As the fire devoured some of them, serpents some, the earth some, and the sword some; so amongst Christians, the fire of concupiscence destroyeth some, the poyson of heresie some, the earth of covetousness some, and the sword of contention others. This numbring is appointed to be by their families, the houses of their Fathers and by their names, as Tertullian hath it, that none might be unknown, but every one pay the taxe imposed at the numbring Exod. 30.13. and this numbring whether it were yearly or not, see before Exod. 30.13. Here be three names, saith Beda, of those, by whom they were to be numbred, families, Fathers, and names, to intimate mystically that in every one Elect there must be three virtues, Faith, Hope, and Charity; or these three, Knowledg, Word, and Work, or faith in the three persons of the blessed Trinity. The males only are numbred, because the women are not fit for the warr, to which they were now prepared, although in some countryes women have been great warriours, as the Amazons &c. But that the Hebrew women were not so, appeareth, because the Egyptians suffered the female children to live, as a weak sexe and killed the males only.

1 Cor.5.5,7, 11.

others

1 Cor. 14. 20. Ephes. 5. 14. v. 17.

1 Pet. 3. 7. Gal. 3. 28. Marc. 10.

Numb. 26.

Matth. 25.

Caleb and Joshuah. Matth. 20. 16. 1 Cor. 9. 24.

Tertull. contra Marcion. c. 36.

Beda.

from 20 years old and upward] The Romans are noted to have numbred to the wars from 17 years old to 46 or 50. but here from 20. those under this age not being numbred, but whether all above twenty were numbred, how old soever, is not said, but implyed, and it standeth with reason, that every one even the most aged man should be numbred, because not only for the wars to come, but to be distinguished into their mansions they were numbred here, as Tostatus, and Vincentius do well reason. But Josephus saith, they were numbred but from twenty to fifty; and Lyranus and Caietan, that they which were sick of incureable diseases were not numbred, because only such, as were able to go forth to the warr are appointed to be numbred; which exception I cannot see, how it may be excepted against, although that of Josephus may, because after fifty, men are still strong and lusty, at the least some, as Caleb at eighty and therefore neither that of R. Menahem bounding it at sixty, is to be received.

Tostatus. Vincentius. Joseph. lib. 3. Antiq. c. 11.

By their Armyes, the צבאותם rendred Armyes or Troops, setteth not forth precisely thirty persons, as commonly it doth; but so many as were of one family, saith Tostatus, which were gathered together to march in one body.

Tostatus.

tention amongst them, and because they were to fight with their enemies they were numbred, that the fittest for war might be chosen out from amongst them. And hereunto we may add the reason of Rab. Solomon, the Lord would have them often numbred to shew that he took great delight in his people, as a man in his mony that he telleth often over; and to this we may add further, that his care over them all might appear, of which his numbring is a sign, Luc.12.

Exod.19.1. The time when God spake to Moses about numbring the people, was the first day of the second moneth of the 2. yearafter their coming out of Egypt. They

Exod.4.1. came to this mou there all the time the first day of t that moneth, the that all contained coming out of I their coming to dayes more, as wanting ten stay lent order, the T ple, and they are they that were pointing of the of Sacrifices, an they that will co people, must firs of God, living Rabanus, Rickel
cond year, Rab grace under the heavenly Canaa red sea of Ba thraldom to th sposed to pass o faith, that God the law, before whoso will com
lawes and ordi

Note. Suscipere primò debet legem dei & sp. St offerre sacrificia & explere purificationes, & peragere cuncta quæ lex spir. docet. Origen. Hom.1. in Numer. Ambros. Raban. Ferus.

Vers. 2. Take ye the families &c.
might be broug
God of order.

1 Cor.14. he had increased the Israelites in so short a time to so great a multitude, according to his promise to Abraham, that we might never doubt of his promises, and also for that he meant now to sustain this huge multitude in the wilderness a long time without natural means, that we might hope alwaies and never despair of his providence; 3 which was had before, that it might appear, what delight he took in his people, as a shepheard in his sheep, which he often numbreth. 4. To shew that all the Elect are numbred with God and their names are written in his book never to be blotted out again: for according to this the Lord saith, rejoyce that your names are written in heaven; and he that over-cometh, I will not blot his name out of my book.

Luc.10.20. Revel.3.5.

In this numbring the children of Israel only are comprehended, and those males only, not females, and from twenty years old and upward, not children, to shew, that none are in the number of Gods people, but Israelites, if any Egyptians or other heathens in manners intrude themselves amongst them, they shall be cast out again, as not being of this number, as *Matth.*22. He that had not on the wedding garment, and the incestuous person was cast out, and 1 Cor.5.5,7, 11.

others

NOTE

This volume tight binding an effort has been duce the centres result in acade microforms

others like unto him. In that no females are numbred, this ſhewed, that the effeminate are none of this number, the tender, the fearful, and the inconſtant, but only the valiant, and conſtant denyers of themſelves and of carnal pleaſures: for denying a mans ſelf, ſee Matth. 16.24. and for conſtancy, Luc. 9. 62. Math 24.13. Revel. 2.10. And touching the effeminate, it is ſaid they ſhall not inherit the kingdom of heaven, 1 Cor 6.9. Laſtly in that children are not numbred, but men, this ſhewed, that they who are of childiſh conditions are not of this number, that is, they, in whom there is levity, ignorance and fooliſhneſs, and therefore it is ſaid, be not children in underſtanding, and 1 Cor. 14. 20.
[illegible] among ſt you. And again, be not Epheſ. 5. 14.
v. 17.

t is not thus orl hath his ſealed
: women belong
the grace of life, 1 Pet. 3. 7.
: : nor that chil- Gal. 3. 28.
om of God. To Marc. 10.
bred here and a- Numb. 26.
:e two elections;
f the Church tri-hereby we are in-
:ring us from the Matth. 25.
f heaven. But as ieſe remaining to Caleb and Joſhuah.
oſen. All do not Matth. 20. 16.
rpents ſome, the 1 Cor. 9. 24.
: fire of concupi-i of covetouſneſs s appointed to be es, as Tertullian Tertull. contra ie taxe impoſed at Marcion. c. 36.
ere yearly or not,
f thoſe, by whom Beda.
itimate myſtically ope, and Charity;
e three perſons of he women are not ough in ſome coun-&c. But that the otians ſuffered the s only.
ive numbred to the under this age not being numbred, but whether all above twenty were numbred how old ſoever, is not ſaid, but implyed, and it ſtandeth with reaſon, that every one even the moſt aged man ſhould be numbred, becauſe not only for the wars to come, but to be diſtinguiſhed into their manſions they were numbred here, as Toſtatus, and Vincentius do well reaſon. But Joſephus ſaith, they were numbred but from twenty to fifty; and Lyranus and Caietan, that they which were ſick of incureable diſeaſes were not numbred, becauſe only ſuch, as were able to go forth to the warr are appointed to be numbred; which exception I cannot ſee, how it may be excepted againſt, although that of Joſephus may, becauſe after fifty, men are ſtill ſtrong and luſty, at the leaſt ſome, as Caleb at eighty and therefore neither that of R. Menahem bounding it at ſixty, is to be received. Toſtatus. Vincentius. Joſeph. lib. 3. Antiq. c. 11.

By their Armyes, the צבאותם rendred Armyes or Troops, ſetteth not forth preciſely thirty perſons, as commonly it doth; but ſo many as were of one family, ſaith Toſtatus, which were gathered together to march in one body. Toſtatus.

tention amongst them, and because they were to fight with their enemies they were numbred, that the fittest for war might be chosen out from amongst them. And hereunto we may add the reason of Rab. Solomon, the Lord would have them often numbred to shew that he took great delight in his people, as a man in his mony that he telleth often over; and to this we may add further, that his care over them all might appear, of which his numbring is a sign, Luc.12.

Exod.19.1. The time when God spake to Moses about numbring the people, was the first day of the second moneth of the 2. yearafter their coming out of Egypt. They Exod.4.1. came to this mount the third moneth of the first year, and having continued there all the time of the giving of the law, and of erecting the Tabernacle, unto the first day of the first moneth of the second year; from thence to the end of that moneth, the laws and events related in Leviticus, were given and fell out, so that all contained in Leviticus, is the history but of one moneth: from their coming out of Egypt to the present time was a year and fifteen dayes; from their coming to mount Sinai eleven moneths, and before they departed twenty dayes more, as is to be seen *Numb.*10.11. so that they were a whole year wanting ten stayes about mount Sinai. And here all things are done in excellent order, the Tabernacle is finished, and the lawes are declared unto the people, and they are taught therein, and then order is taken for their going forward, they that were fit for war being first numbred, and put into the ranks. The appointing of the people to be numbred after the giving of the law, the institution of Sacrifices, and the Rites of purifying from uncleannesses served to shew, that they that will come into account with God, and be in the number of his chosen people, must first endure many things, be purged from sin, and turn to the lawes of God, living according to the same; so Origen, and after him Ambrose, Rabanus, Rickelius, Hugo, &c. Whereas it is said, the second moneth of the second year, Rabanus noteth, that mystically hereby was set forth the time of grace under the new Testament, wherein we must walk towards the land of the heavenly Canaan by newnesse of life; after that we have passed through the red sea of Baptism, and have been delivered out of the Egypt of sin and thraldom to the divel, by faith in Jesus Christ; as they at this time were disposed to pass on towards Canaan by divers journeyes in the wilderneſſe. Ferus saith, that God kept the people a year about mount Sinai, instructing them in the law, before they went forward toward the Land of Canaan, to shew, that whoso will come to the true Land of Promise, must first be well instructed in the lawes and ordinances of the Lord.

Note.
Suscipere primò debet legem dei & sp. St offerre sacrificia & explere purificationes, & peragere cuncta quæ lex spir. docet.
Origen. Hom.1. in Numer.
Ambros. Raban.
Ferus.

Vers. 2. Take ye the names of all the congregation of the children of Israel after their families &c. God, saith Ferus, appointed them to be numbred that they might be brought into order, every one taking his proper place, for God is the God of order. 2. That his works might be the more magnified both for that he had increased the Israelites in so short a time to so great a multitude, according to his promise to Abraham, that we might never doubt of his promises, and also for that he meant now to sustain this huge multitude in the wilderness a long time without natural means, that we might hope alwaies and never despair of his providence; 3 which was had before, that it might appear, what delight he took in his people, as a shepheard in his sheep, which he often numbreth. 4. To shew that all the Elect are numbred with God and their names are written in his book never to be blotted out again: for according to this the Lord saith, rejoyce that your names are written in heaven; and he that over-cometh, I will not blot his name out of my book.

1 Cor.14.

Luc.10.20.
Revel.3.5.

In this numbring the children of Israel only are comprehended, and those males only, not females, and from twenty years old and upward, not children, to shew, that none are in the number of Gods people, but Israelites, if any Egyptians or other heathens in manners intrude themselves amongst them, they shall be cast out again, as not being of this number, as *Matth.*22. He that had not on the wedding garment, and the incestuous person was cast out, and others like unto him. In that no females are numbred, this ſhewed, that the effeminate are none of this number, the tender, the fearful, and the inconſtant, but only the valiant, and conſtant denyers of themſelves and of carnal pleaſures: for denying a mans ſelf, ſee Matth. 16.24. and for conſtancy, Luc. 9. 62. Math 24.13. Revel. 2.10. And touching the effeminate, it is ſaid they ſhall not inherit the kingdom of heaven, 1 Cor 6.9. Laſtly in that children are not numbred, but men, this ſhewed, that they who are of childiſh conditions are not of this number, that is, they, in whom there is levity, ignorance and fooliſhneſs, and therefore it is ſaid, be not children in underſtanding, and Let not fooliſh talking, or jeſting be once named amongſt you. And again, be not fooliſh, but wiſe and underſtand what the will of the Lord is. It is not thus ordered to ſhew, that men of other nations are excluded, for God hath his ſealed ones of all nations in very great numbers, Revel. 7.9. Nor that women belong not to his number, for the faithful woman is heire together of the grace of life, and in Chriſt neither is there male nor female, but all are one: nor that children are not of this number, for of ſuch is ſaid to be the Kingdom of God. To this effect Ferus, who alſo addeth, that the people are numbred here and again before their entrance into the Land of Canaan, to intimate two elections; 1. To be members of the Church militant: 2. To be members of the Church triumphant: the firſt we are made by baptiſme and Faith, for hereby we are incorporated into the Church: the ſecond by the Angels gathering us from the four parts of the World at the laſt day into the Kingdom of heaven. But as at their ſecond numbring, there were not above two of all theſe remaining to enter into Canaan, ſo there be many called, but few then choſen. All do not run ſo as to obtain. As the fire devoured ſome of them, ſerpents ſome, the earth ſome, and the ſword ſome; ſo amongſt Chriſtians, the fire of concupiſcence deſtroyeth ſome, the poyſon of hereſie ſome, the earth of covetouſneſs ſome, and the ſword of contention others. This numbring is appointed to be by their families, the houſes of their Fathers and by their names, as Tertullian hath it, that none might be unknown, but every one pay the taxe impoſed at the numbring Exod. 30.13. and this numbring whether it were yearly or not, ſee before Exod. 30.13. Here be three names, ſaith Beda, of thoſe, by whom they were to be numbred, families, Fathers, and names, to intimate myſtically that in every one Elect there muſt be three virtues, Faith, Hope, and Charity; or theſe three, Knowledg, Word, and Work, or faith in the three perſons of the bleſſed Trinity. The males only are numbred, becauſe the women are not fit for the warr, to which they were now prepared, although in ſome countryes women have been great warriours, as the Amazons &c. But that the Hebrew women were not ſo, appeareth, becauſe the Egyptians ſuffered the female children to live, as a weak ſexe and killed the males only.

1 Cor.5.5,7, 11.

others

from 20 years old and upward] The Romans are noted to have numbred to the wars from 17 years old to 46 or 50. but here from 20. thoſe under this age not being numbred, but whether all above twenty were numbred, how old ſoever, is not ſaid, but implyed, and it ſtandeth with reaſon, that every one even the moſt aged man ſhould be numbred, becauſe not only for the wars to come, but to be diſtinguiſhed into their manſions they were numbred here, as Toſtatus, and Vincentius do well reaſon. But Joſephus ſaith, they were numbred but from twenty to fifty; and Lyranus and Caietan, that they which were ſick of incureable diſeaſes were not numbred, becauſe only ſuch, as were able to go forth to the warr are appointed to be numbred; which exception I cannot ſee, how it may be excepted againſt, although that of Joſephus may, becauſe after fifty, men are ſtill ſtrong and luſty, at the leaſt ſome, as Caleb at eighty and therefore neither that of R. Menahem bounding it at ſixty, is to be received.

By their Armyes, the צבאותם rendred Armyes or Troops, ſetteth not forth preciſely thirty perſons, as commonly it doth; but ſo many as were of one family, ſaith Toſtatus, which were gathered together to march in one body.

1 Cor. 14. 20. Epheſ. 5.14. v. 17.

1 Pet. 3. 7. Gal. 3.28. Marc. 10.

Numb. 26.

Matth. 25.

Caleb and Joſhuah. Matth. 20. 16. 1 Cor. 9. 24.

Tertull. contra Marcion. c. 36.

Beda.

Toſtatus. Vincentius. Joſeph. lib. 3. Antiq. c. 11.

Toſtatus.

Verſ. 4. Verſ. 16. they are called Princes of the Tribes. Toſtatus.

Thou and Aaron ſhall number them and with you ſhall be one of every Tribe, the head of the houſe of his Fathers.] Here were twelve Princes of the twelve Tribes joyned with Moſes and Aaron in numbring the people, becauſe it had been over-laborious for them two alone to do it; but how they proceeded in numbring is not ſaid, yet Toſtatus gueſſeth probably, that each prince numbered his own Tribe, and brought the names to Moſes and Aaron, who ſet them all down together in a catalogue. Moſes his calling of the twelve Princes, ſaith Ferus, figured out Chriſts calling the 12 Apoſtles, to teach not one, but divers Nations all over the world, as they numbred the men in every tribe. Ainſworth under Moſes, Aaron, and theſe twelve Princes, will have the 12 Apoſtles and Paul and Barnabas underſtood: but rather to make up the number, we may underſtand the Son and Holy Ghoſt taking unto them the twelve Apoſtles for this Miniſtery.

Ferus.

Ainſworth.

Verſ. 5.

Theſe are the names of the men that ſhall ſtand with you, of the Tribe of Ruben Elizur the ſon of Shedeur, &c.] Divers wayes in divers places are the 12 Tribes reckoned up, the order differing in each one from another; as Gen. 49. 3, &c. Deut. 27. Numb. 2. chap. 7. c. 34. Upon which I have touched before, Gen. 49. 3. the reaſon is, becauſe ſometime the birth is reſpected, and ſometime the dignity, and ſometime the order of their encamping about the Tabernacle, and ſometime happily ſome myſtery, which yet what it is, is uncertain, and generally that no tribe ſhould inſult over another, as being alwaies more dignified. Touching the Princes here named in particular, ſome will have ſtrange myſteries ſet forth by them; but letting them paſſe, as ſtrained, we may conſider the ſignification of theſe names, and hereby take notice of the care that was had amongſt the people of God of old, to impoſe upon their children ſignificative names tending to piety, that we may follow their godly example herein. Elizur, ſignifieth my God a rock. Shedeur, the light of the Almighty. Shelumiel, God is my recompence. Zuriſhaddai, the Almighty is my rock. Naaſſon, experiment. Amminadab, my people is noble. Nethaneel, the gift of God. Eliab, my God the Father. Helon, ſtrength. Ammihud, my people hath the glory. Eliſhama, my God hath heard. Gamaliel, God is my reward. Pedabzur, the Rock redeemeth. Abidan, my Father is the Judge. Gideoni, the cutter down. Ahiezer, the brothers help. Ammiſhaddai, the people of the Almighty. Pagiel, God hath met me. Eliaſaph, God hath added. Deguel, know God. Ahira, the friend of my brother. Enan, a cloud, according to Jerome; but Rabanus hath it, a fountain of ſorrow.

Verſ. 6.
Verſ. 7.
Verſ. 8.
Verſ. 9,10.
Verſ. 11.
Verſ. 12.
Verſ. 13,14.
Verſ. 15.

Verſ. 16.

Theſe were the renowned of the congregation, Princes of the tribes, heads of thouſands in Iſrael.] For renowned, Hebr. is קריאי called, becauſe they as the chief were called to counſel about matters of State, as Numb. 16. 2. thoſe rebels are alſo called. R. Solom. Jarchi ſaith, theſe were the Officers ſet over them in Ægypt, who had been beaten for them. For Princes, Hebr. is נשאי lifted up or lifters up; becauſe Princes are both lifted up in dignity above others, and do lift up, and eaſe the burthens of the people by their government; as Numb. 11. 17. Exod. 18. 22. Heads of thouſands they are alſo called, becauſe they were Captaines of the bands of their Tribes, conſiſting every one of a thouſand, as the diſtinction is to be found, Exod. 18. 21. And from this number of 1000, the name was given to ſuch a company and their generation, Judg. 6. 15. Mich 5. 2. in Greek theſe are called χιλιάρχοι.

Sol. Jarchi.

Verſ. 17.

And Moſes and Aaron took theſe men which are expreſſed by their names &c.] This reading is according to the Hebrew, but the vulgar Latine much different which Moſes and Aaron took with all the multitude of the common ſort: which hath put Toſtatus to ſome trouble in ſhewing the meaning, either that the common ſort helped Moſes in numbring the Princes, or that the Princes were numbered together with their Tribes; neither of both which do pleaſe Lorinus, who affirmeth our reading to be the moſt plain and ſenſible. Moſes and Aaron took theſe men with them to help number the people.

Toſtatus.

Here beginneth the numbring of the tribes, families and perſons. Of the Tribe Tribe of Reuben, 46500. Of the tribe of Simeon, 59300. Of the tribe of Gad, 45650. Of the tribe of Judah, 74600. Of the tribe of Issachar, 54400. Of the tribe of Zebulun, 57400. Of the tribe of Ephraim, 40500. Of the tribe of Manasseh. 32200. Of the tribe of Benjamin, 35400. Of the tribe of Dan 62700. Of the tribe of Asher 41500. Of the tribe of Nephtali 53400. Altogether 603550. And yet the Levites were not numbred amongst them, as not being for the service of the Warrs, but of the Tabernacle. Vers. 18, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29, 31, 33, 35, 37, 39, 41, 43, 46. V. 47, 48. Notes 1.

In these numbrings it is observed: 1. That all the numbers mentioned are even, none odde. neither is there a 50 in any but Gad; whereas in other numbrings there be odd numbers, as of the first born, *Numb.*3. and of those that returned out of captivity, *Ezr.*2. *Neh.*7. Wherein the singular providence of God appeared at this time, in that the bands under several Captains of thousands, hundreths and fifties were all full, and no more.

2. Of all these tribes not the eldest, but Judah hath the greatest number, almost 12000 more then any other tribe, to make this tribe the more remarkable, as whereof Christ was to come, Gen 49.8,9,10. and the Kings. 2.

3. Dan is next to Judah in number, as Judges were foretold to come of him, *Gen.*49.16. 3.

4. Reuben although the eldest, had not so many as 6 of his younger brethren, Judah, Dan, Simeon, Zebulun, Issachar, Naphtali, either of which had many more; as it was foretold, that he should lose his dignity for his incest, Gen. 49. 3, 4. 4.

5. Simeon although at this time among the most numerous, yet at the next numbring hath but 22200, and is utterly omitted by Moses in his blessing of the tribes, *Deut.*33. a thing to be marked, as the fruit of a curse for his cruelty against the Shechemites, Gen.45.5,6,7. 5.

6. Ephraim though younger then Manasseh, had above 8000 more then he, and more by 5000 then one whole tribe, Benjamin and these two together, more then any other, except Judah; which is to be noted, that we may see how Jacob's blessing of Joseph with fruitfulnesse, and distinguishing these his two sons into two tribes, took effect, although Ephraim is spoken of as lamenting the Philistims slaying of his sonnes, whilest they dwelt yet in Egypt, 1 *Chron.*7.20, 21, 11. 6. Gen.48.19. Gen.49.22.

7. Benjamin, who is here counted to have the least number of all, except Manasseh, was at the beginning most fruitful, *Gen.*46.21. Afterwards being more increased he was almost wholly cut off, for which cause he is set forth with this epithite, little Benjamin. Psal 68.28. that no man may be proud of his suddain prosperity, but serve the Lord in fear. 7. Judg. 20.

Lastly, the whole number here is just the same that it was the year before, when they were numbred to levy half a shekle of each man for the Tabernacle, and yet the whole tribe of Levi was left out in this numbring, but not in that, those that were but 19 years old then, being now 20, and so coming in to make up their number of the tribe of Levi; a thing to be noted, that we may see, how that by dedicating things to God, as the Levites were dedicated, and giving for his service, there is nothing lost; thus Ainsworth: but it is rather to be held, that the Levites were not numbred before to pay a tax, because they served about the Tabernacle, and lived hereupon: Whereas in concluding with Naphtali it is said, the sons of Naphtali, but not of the sons: as in speaking of other Tribes, Baal Haturim noteth, that this is so said, because Naphtali had more daughters then sons, for which cause he is compared to an Hind let loose, which is a female. But I leave this as uncertain, and what the reason hereof may be. The Vulgar Latine without difference rendreth it, of the sons of Naphtali, but it is בני only, not לבני 8. Exod. 38.26. Gen.49.21.

But the Levites after the tribe of their fathers were not numbered amongst them, &c.] God would not that they should be numbred amongst the rest, because they were not to go to the Wars, as others, but to attend upon the service of the Tabernacle: and accordingly the Ministers of the Gospel are and ought to be Vers. 47.

be free from warfare, that they may attend upon a better warfare, except it be in case of necessity; as *Exod.*32.29. 1 *Sam.*4.11. and in the history of Judas Machab. a Priest. Sorrow, weeping, prayers, and tears, saith Ambrose, should be our weapons against the enemies, neither ought we nor can we otherwise resist, these are all the muniments of a Priest. It was a decree of the 4. Councel of Tolledo, that whatsoever priest in a sedition took up arms should be degraded and thrust into a Monastery to do pennance alwayes therefore.

Ambros. Dolor, fletus, orationes & lachrimæ debent esse arma adversus hostes. Conc. Toll. 4.

Vers. 50. Thou shalt appoint the Levites over the Tabernacle and over the vessels thereof and all things out of it, and they shall bear the Tabernacle, &c.] How they were to bear these things; see *Numb.*4.25,31,36. yet to help them in their carriages six Wagons were allowed them, *Numb.*7.7,8,9.

Tostatus. Some make a question here, whether under the name of Levites not to be numbred the Priests came; but it is plain, that by the Levites all the males of the Tribe of Levi are meant, for they all both Priests and Levites are numbred by themselves, *Numb.*3.

Vers. 51. When the Tabernacle removeth, the Levites shall take it down, &c. and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.] Although the Levites were to take it down, yet the Priests must first go in and cover the Ark; neither might the Levites see it, and then the Coathites came and carried it, and the Merarites the curtains, the Gershonites the boards, the pillers and the sockets, Chap.4.

the stranger] That is, any not being of this Tribe; but whether a stranger coming nigh should be put to death by the Judge, or by God is not expressed: Vatablus thinketh, by the Judge, but Lyranus contrariwise: the Targum Jonathan saith, he shall be killed with fire flaming out from before the Lord; so Uzzah was stricken of the Lord, and the men of Bethshemesh, 2 Sam.6. 1 Sam. 6. The same judgment is threatned to a Levite touching or seeing, *Num.*4.15. 20. & *Num.*16.40. any man, that was not a Priest, although a Levite, is set forth by the name of a stranger.

Vatablus. Lyranus. Targ. Jonath.

Quest. Aug. Qu. 3. in Numer. But why should such dye for coming nigh? Answ. Not for any pollution contracted, as August. hath it, for the Tabernacle sanctified, but for his presumption to serve in that, to which he was not called.

Vers. 52,53. And the children of Israel shall encamp every one by his own camp, &c. 53. But the Levites shall encamp round about the Tabernacle of the testimony, that there be no fierce wrath, &c.] In what order all the Tribes were to encamp, is shewed Chap.2. and in what Order the Tribe of Levi about the Tabernacle, Chap.3. and Gods fierce wrath is here spoken of, as whereof they should be in danger, if the Levites kept not about the Tabernacle: the meaning being, if they did not carefully keep others from coming nigh or ministring about the Tabernacle, which charge belonged to them onely, it being counted an irreverence and temerity for any other to approach, and therefore worthy of severe punishment. Of Gods wrath also against all the congregation for the sin of the Priests, see Levit. 10.6. This proviso, that others should keep aloofe and not nigh the Tabernacle, mystically shewed, how unworthy we are to have accesse unto God, and how far our sins have removed us from his habitation. And therefore the benefit redounding to the faithful by the blood of Christ is exceeding great: for in him we are made Kings and Priests unto God, and we have liberty to enter into the holiest.

The Mystery.

Rev. 1. 5,6. Heb. 10. 19.

Chap. II.

Vers. 1. And the Lord spake to Moses and Aaron, saying, the children of Israel shall encamp round about the Tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] The Levites were appointed to camp round about the Tabernacle, Chap.1.53. but they camped nearer about it, the other Tribes further off, and therefore it is said, over against againſt, round about; ſo this word over againſt, or from before it, is explained Pſal.38.12. a far of, yet it is meant that their doors of their tents ſhould be towards it for due reſpect. According to this R. Solomon expoundeth it over againſt, a far off, a mile diſtance, 2000. cubites, as it is ſaid in Joſhuah, there ſhall be a ſpace between you and it, 2000. cubites by meaſure. With their enſignes according to the houſe of their fathers: Here is mention made of their ſtandards alſo, every man by his ſtandard; the Sept. render it his order, the Chald. tekes, from whence cometh the Greek word τάξις, order. But as in other armies they had their ſtandards, or banners, and enſignes in them of colours and mottoes for diſtinction, that one might be known from another, ſo had the children of Iſrael. What the colours of each of them were the Scripture ſaith nothing; but Cazkuni ſaith, that the pourtraiture of a man was upon Reubens ſtandard dyed with the colour of a Sardin, which in the breaſtplate was ſet for that tribe, becauſe he found Mandraks, which are after the faſhion of a man. A Lion on Judahs ſtandard, becauſe he is compared to a Lion, and it was of the colour of a Calcedoni. An ox on Ephraims ſtandard, becauſe he was likned to a bullock, it was in the colour of a Beril, &c. ſo likewiſe Aben Ezra. But the Targum Jonathan ſaith, the ſtandard of Judah in the enſign thereof was of three colours, according to the colours of the three precious ſtones repreſenting that tribe; and Iſſachar and Zabulon joyned with it, and that the names of theſe three were ingraven in them, and in the midſt of it was written, riſe up Lord ollet thine enemies be ſcattered; and there was the figure of a lion. The ſtandard of Reuben with Simeon and Gad, was alſo in the enſign thereof of three colours of the three precious ſtones repreſenting them, and their names, in the midſt being written, Hear O Iſrael, the Lord our God, the Lord is one, &c. that of Cazkuni and Aben Ezra ſeemeth moſt probable, becauſe every of theſe tribes could not have ſeveral colours, according to the 12. precious ſtones in the breaſtplate, as the Targum ſaith, ſeeing Ioſeph here diſtinguiſhed into two tribes, had but one ſtone ſet for his, and Levi not here numbred had one of them. To leave this then as uncertain, it is to be noted that the tribes were ſet in ſuch order, as that every one might know his place and keep him to it, whereby was intimated, as Ferus noteth following Origen, as alſo Rabanus doth that al things in the Church of God ought to be done in order, as the Apoſtle alſo urgeth, 1 *Cor.*14.40. and that none ſhould go out of, but continue in his calling, 1 Cor. 7.20. that is, living orderly, and proceeding rightly, as they were joyned to the houſes of their fathers, ſo we ſhall one day be received into the manſion houſes of our heavenly father. Now for every one to keep in his place and order, is to do that diligently, which belongeth to him in his calling; for as all cannot be in the ſame tents, but in diverſe, ſo all cannot do the ſame offices, but ſome muſt attend upon one, and ſome upon another. Again to keep in our order, ſaith Rabanus, is firſt to ſeek the kingdom of God and the righteouſneſs thereof, being chiefly Intent to heavenly duties, and not now and then to pray or to go in and hear a Sermon, as we paſs by. Laſtly, in our ſpeech, carriage, and apparel, to keep ſuch order as that the name of God may not be blaſphemed by our means. By Enſigns alſo he underſtandeth the divers qualities of divers men, whereby, as by ſigns, their divers minds are known; ſome are mild and quiet, ſome rough and turbulent, ſome circumſpect, provident, careful, diligent, others ſluggiſh, and negligent; there is not more difference in mens faces then in their minds. To keep with our Enſigns then, is not to think better, or to carry our ſelves more highly, then agreeth with our conditions. Touching the form of the Camp here appointed generally, Ferus obſerveth four things.

R. Solomon.

Septuag. Cald,

Cazkuni in Numb.3. Gen.30.14. Gen.49.9. Deut.33.17. Aben Ezra in Numb.2. Targ Jonathan

Numb.10.35.

Deut.6.4.

Note.

Ferus. Origen. Rabanus.

Matth.6.33.

Ferus.

1. It is diſtinguiſhed into four parts, three tribes being appointed to one ſtandard, and theſe four parts are placed towards the four parts of the world, to ſhew that we muſt look four waies; before us to God, and to eternal happineſſe, behind us to hell and to judgment; on the right hand to the deceits of the world, and on the left to the ſubtilties of Satan, that we might be on every part the better armed. Again three tribes are joyned in one, to ſhew that we

Chriſtians

Christians should be joyned together by the band of charity, because we are all members of the same body, having one and the same spirit, faith and hope.

2. They pitch round about the Tabernacle, one part of the army being as near to it as another. 1. That they might all have a like comfort of God being amongst them. 2. That he being alwayes before every one of their eyes they might stand in awe and flee sin. 3. That they might alwaies be mindful of Gods worship. So we must have a confidence in God, worship him in our ranks, and fear to sin, and as they were so placed, that their tents looked all towards the tabernacle, so we must refer all that we do well in our several places to Gods glory.

3. Next unto the tabernacle were placed the Levites round about, in whose placing five things are to be considered: 1. They are separated from the common people, to shew that Priests should live free from the sins, that common people are tainted withal. 2. That they must abide about the tabernacle, to shew that Priests must count themselves dedicated to the service of God, and therefore intend it. 3. They were in the midst of the people, to shew, that they must be ready to teach, help, and serve for the furtherance of their faith. 4. As the other tribes, so they are distinguished into four, Moses and Aaron on the East at the entrance of the tabernacle, the Kohathites on the South, the Gershonites on the West, the Merarites on the North, to shew, that amongst the Ministers of God there must be an order kept, and the Inferiours must be subject to the Superiours. 5. They are placed towards the four parts of the world to shew, that they should instruct beginners as set forth by the East, whereby they entred the tabernacle, stirre up and quicken the slothful and negligent, as set forth by the South; comfort those that were terrified with the fear of death and judgment, set forth by the West; and strengthen the pusillanimous against the assaults of the devil, who are set forth by the North.

4. All leprous persons and such like were removed out of the camp, to shew, that we must not do any thing undecent and unclean in our tents and stations: Thus almost Ferus. And by the East may well be understood before us, because Judah pitcht foremost, and that was on the East, and then the contrary the West must needs be behind, and then the South will be on the right hand, and the North on the left, Psal. 89. 13. of all which it is spoken Job 23. 8. and Sol. Jarchi noteth the same. And it is to be noted, that in describing the Throne of God, *Rev.*4. there is a proportion held in some sort with the placing of the tabernacle and armies here: for as here the Tribes are round about the Tabernacle, so there the 24 are round about the Throne; but here are only twelve Tribes, there 24 Elders; the reason may be, because of the Church so much increased under the Gospel, and the Tabernacle is called Gods Throne, Ezek.43. 7. Again, as here the Priests and Levites, who are as the eyes and light of the people, are about the Tabernacle between it and the people, so there between the Throne and the Elders round about are four living creatures full of eyes, Rev. 4.5. and accordingly the Levites are distinguished into four.

Rev.4.2,4.

Esay 54. 2.

Vers. 3, 4,5,6,7,&c.

The foremost eastward shall be Iudah with his standard, and next the Tribe of Issachar, and the Tribe of Zebulun.] From vers.3. to vers.10. the Camp of Judah is described; in which it is remarkable, that it is first placed, and is the greatest army almost by 30000. Judah was thus honoured, because Christ was to come of the Tribe of Judah, both to be a valiant Leader, as a Lion, which was the sign of Judah, and to give entrance into the heavenly Tabernacle, as this Camp was placed Eastward, where the entrance of the material Tabernacle was: and lastly to be, as the Sun, life and comfort to his Church, because that riseth eastward; wherefore he is called the Sun of Righteousnesse. Issachar and Zebulun are joyned to Judah, because they were his brethren coming of the same mother Leah, and his younger brethren, and therefore they might the more willingly be under him. Whereas of all the army there are twelve Princes, which were before named; Rabanus noteth, that they figured out the 12 Apostles

Mal. 4.2.

Rabanus Maurus.

Apoſtles as Captains to the Church of Chriſt: the diſtinguiſhing of all into four parts, ſet forth four eſtates of the Church in this world: 1. In the primitive times at the riſing of the light of the Goſpel in the Land of Judea. 2. Long before under the Law amongſt thoſe, that had an earneſt love unto God, ſet forth by the army on the South, which maketh hot and fervent. 3. The Church of the Gentiles ſet forth by that on the North part, becauſe they were cold and dead before in ſin, as the North is a cold climate. 4. The Church, which ſhall be at the end of the world under the reign of Antichriſt, ſet forth by the Weſt, where the ſun ſetteth, becauſe ſoon after that time the Church ſhall reſt in everlaſting happineſſe. Thus he, and he addeth alſo, that this quadripartite diſtinction did ſet forth a fourfold diſtinction of the future glory of the faithful in heaven, Mount Sion, the heavenly Jeruſalem, Gods City, a company of heavenly Angels, and the Church of the firſt born, unto the chief degree of which if we cannot attain, yet let us ſtrive at the leaſt to come to Mount Zion. Again, the placing of three tribes in each army, and the ſumming up of all together again in one at the laſt, he will have myſtically to ſet forth the bleſſed Trinity, one ſubſtance and eſſence. Heb. 12.

Here the place of Reuben is appointed South, and with him Simeon and Gad are joyned, and that aptly; for although Reuben were eldeſt, yet he had loſt his dignity, and Judah was therefore ſet before him, but none of the reſt, wherefore he is put off no further, but to the ſecond place; and Simeon was his next brother, and Gad the firſt by the ſame mother Leah her maid. Verſ. 10, 11 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Gen. 49. 3.

Then the tabernacle of the congregation ſhall ſet forward with the camp of the Levites, in the midſt of the Camp, &c.] Becauſe the Tabernacle and the Levites about it were placed in the midſt, therefore next unto the two Armies, that moved firſt, their moving is appointed, after whom the other two armies followed. Thus God provided for his Miniſters, that whileſt they attended upon his ſervice, they might be without fear or danger of any enemies, their brethren ſtanding round about to defend them. Verſ. 17. Numb. 3.

Here Ephraim, and with him Manaſſeh and Benjamin are appointed to encamp on the Weſt ſide. Theſe were all of Rachel, and therefore placed together, but Ephraim the younger is preferred before Manaſſeh the elder, as Jacob had propheſied, Gen. 48. 14. For Weſt here in Hebr. is ים the ſea, but this word is ſometime put for the ſea, and ſometime for the Weſt, for both the ſea of Tyberias, and the Mediterranean ſea, and the Egyptian, ſaith Eugubinus, were Weſtward to the land of Canaan. V. 18, 19 20 21, 22, 23, 24.

Here Dan the fourth is appointed to camp on the North, and with his ſtandard Aſher and Naphtali. Dan was the ſon of Bilhah, Rachels maid, yet appointed, as was before noted by the propheſie of Jacob, to be a Judge, as the name ſignifieth, and therefore he is made the chief of this company; but that all the preeminence might not be given to the children of one handmaid, Naphtali his brother is put laſt, and Aſher the ſon of Zilpah between, ſo that this army conſiſted altogether of handmaids children, being placed laſt; the children of the free women being preferred for honours ſake, and yet the number of them was greater then any other, except Judah, here being 157600, but in the army of Reuben 151450, and in that of Ephraim 108100. God in his providence diſpoſing it ſo, that the greateſt ſtrength might be before and behind, where they were moſt ſubject to aſſaults. Anſwerable to this four-ſquare army about the Tabernacle is the four-ſquare city of the new Jeruſalem, three gates being to each quarter; as here three Tribes. Rev. 21. 16. Ezek. 48. 20. and it is called the Camp of the Saints, Rev. 20. 9. Targum Jonath. ſaith, the camp was 12 miles long, and 12 broad. Verſ. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31.

Amongſt all theſe tribes it is noted, that the apoſtles were of the Tribe of Zabulon and Naphtali, Zabulon in the firſt army, and Naphtali in the laſt, but neither chief, to ſhew, that God is no accepter of perſons, but hath his elect even amongſt the meaneſt; the laſt with him are firſt. Note.

Chap. III.

After the numbring of the twelve Tribes, and placing them in their orders, here followeth the numbring of those of the Tribe of Levi and the placing of them. But first Moses and Aaron, and Aaron's sons are spoken of as the chief.

Vers. 1, 2. These are the generations of Aaron and Moses in the day that the Lord spake with Moses in Mount Sinai; these are the names of the sons of Aaron.] The word generations, Hebr. is תולדות, which signifieth both generations and accidents befalling them, as was noted Gen. 5. 1.

Quest. But why is Moses named here as well as Aaron, seeing his children are not spoken of, but Aarons onely?

Lyranus. Lyranus answereth, that Moses had instructed the sons of Aaron, for which in some sense they might be spoken of, as his sons.

Lorinus. But here only natural generations are described. The better answer then is, that under the word generations, are comprehended not onely children coming of such a father, but also kinsmen.

Quest. But why is Aaron set before Moses here? Answ. This indeed, as Lorinus noteth, hath never been done else, but only here, and in speaking of them with their sister Miriam when they were born, but Moses is alwaies put first. The reason of the difference in this place was, because Aaron was Gods high Priest, the dignity of which office was exceeding great, and was to transcend to his posterity, so that although Moses were of greater dignity, yet for the dignity to continue in Aarons Family, as it did not in the family of Moses, he is here first named; now that his son, who was to be High Priest after him was to be named, under whom and the other son of Aaron the sons of Moses as other ordinary Levites were placed. For that the sons of Moses were as other Levites, both Gershom and Eliezer of the Family of the Kohathites, is shewed, 1 Chron. 23.12,13,14. neither are they made chief of the Kohathites, but Elizaphan is Cajetan. made chief, vers. 30. Others say, that Aaron is named first, because the elder brother; but if this only were the reason, he should have been so named in all other places also. It is true indeed, because he was the first born, God chose him to be his Priest, and his eldest son from age to age after him, because by Gods ordinance the first born of old was the Priest of God; and because Moses was a younger brother, his sons, as children of a younger brother, keep but their Petrus Vincentius. rank amongst other Levites, that no first born by their preference for their fathers dignity might be put from their right. Others think that Moses named Aaron first, in humility; but the best reason was yielded before: and that of Aarons eldership may be a reason, because every one here is named according to his birth.

Vrs. 3, 4. In naming the sons of Aaron, not only the living Eleazar and Ithamar are mentioned, but also the dead, Nadab and Abihu, of whom see before, Levit. 10. and they are mentioned again, Numb. 26.6. & 1 Chron. 24. 1,2. that the remembrance of their punishment might stirre up the more reverence in all the priests surviving. The two sons of Aaron, that lived now, saith Maimony, Maimony of the instrument of the Sanct. c. 4 that is Eleazar and Ithamar, had either of them four sons, and therefore Moses distinguished the priests at the first into eight courses, four of Eleazars Family, and four of Ithamars, which took their turns by the week, when one course went out, another coming in every Sabbath day: and thus it continued till Samuels and Daniels time, and then they being more increased were distinguished 1 Chron. 24. 3, 4, &c. into 24 courses, 16 of Eleazar, and 8 of Ithamar, one chief man as a provost being set over each course. Eleazar and Ithamar are said to have executed the priests office before Aaron their father, or in his sight, that is, while Aaron lived, as the phrase is used, Gen. 11.28. the Sept. render it, with Aaron, 1 Chro. 4.24.19. it is said, by the hand of Aaron, that is, attending upon him, and from him taking directions.

Vers. 6. Bring the Tribe of Levi near, present them before Aaron the Priest, that they may may minister to him.] Before the numbring of the rest of the Tribe of Levi, they are appointed to their service, and pronounced to be given to Aaron and to his sons to serve under them about the Tabernacle for ever. And it is shewed, in whose stead they come thus to be separated from others to this holy service, viz. instead of all the first born in Israel, v.12.

Vers. 7.

And they shall keep his charge or custody, and the charge of the whole congregation before the Tabernacle &c.] The Vulgar Latine rendreth it, they shall keep the watches, and observe whatsoever pertaineth to the Worship of the multitude. But the other is word for word according to the original, and the Chald. and Septuag. follow the same. And August. also, custodient custodias ejus, & custodias filiorum Israel, as the Sept. for charge, have φυλακὰς αὐτῶ, the custodies, with which he is charged. And what are custodies, saith Augustine, but watches of 3. houres, for which cause ours expound it watches, of which there be four in the night. Junius, they shall observe his observation, that is, they shall serve the priest with observance, serving instead of the whole congregation, whose duty it was to serve before the Lord, but before this the first-born were appointed to it; now the Levites instead of them. The Levites then were to serve not only in keeping the watches, but by the appointment of the Priest, who was to command over them.

August. qu. 4. in Num.

Matth. 14.23.

Junius.

Maimony by the charge here understandeth all things commanded them by the priest, saying, that if any would do all but one thing, he was not to be received in, till he take all upon him.

Maimony of the instrum. of the sanctuary c. 3.

And they shall keep all the instruments of the Tabernacle, &c.] By instruments are meant not only all the vessels, and things used about the Tabernacle, but also the parts; as is further expressed. vers. 25, 26, &c. which they must look to with great care, and carry at times of removing.

Vers. 8.

Thou shalt give the Levites to Aaron and to his sons, &c.] How this was, see *Numb.*18.2,6. viz. to minister to them, that they might minister in their offices about the Tabernacle. Whereas Moses is bidden to give them to Aaron, that is to be understood, as Gods deputy giving them for him, who is said to have given them; *Numb.*8.19. As for Aaron and his sons, they must wait on the Priests Office, that is, offer sacrifice, burn incense, set up and cleanse the lights, &c.

Vers. 9.

Vers. 10.

the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.] Of this, see before, Chap. 1.51. & Num.16. Corah dyeth for his presumption herein, although he was a Levite.

I have taken the Levites from amongst the children of Israel instead of all the first born, &c.] How the first born specially came to be Gods right, see before *Exod.*13. why the Levites were here taken in their stead rather then any other Tribe, is not expressed; but it may easily be conceived to have been done in favour to Moses and Aaron, who were of this Tribe; and it was fittest, because the least of all others, as will appear to him, that shall look upon their number, vers.39. being but 22000 from a moneth old and upward. Origen saith, that God chose them for their constancy in the truth foreseen: But Tostatus well refuteth this, because so election should be for merits foreseen: but Lorinus saith, that Origens opinion is not unprobable; but it is certainly most improbable, because so election should not be altogether of grace; contrary to Rom. 11.6. Rupertus according to that which was said before; It was fit, that from what Tribe there was a temporal deliverance out of Egypt, the people should have Ministers of a temporal sacrifice. Aaron to whom the first, and then the Levites for them were given, may fitly figure out Christ, to whom the congregation of the first born is given, being as the first fruits, James 1.18. Revel. 14.4.

Vers. 12.

*Origen.*Hom.3.

Tostatus.

Lorinus.

Rupertus.Decuit ac dignum fuit, ex qua tribu salus temporalis fuerat in liberatione ex Ægypto, ex eadem populus haberet ministros sacrificii temporalis.

Number the children of Levi after the house of their fathers by their families, every male from a moneth old, &c.] The reason why the Levites must be numbred from a moneth old whereas the other Tribes were numbred from 20 years old, was, because the first born were counted from a moneth old, for the redemption demption of whom they were given: according to the house of their fathers; hereupon Maimony noteth, that if a woman of that Tribe had a son by an Israelite, he was not counted amongst the Levites; but the man Levites son, by what woman soever being his wife he had him, was counted, because it is said, after the house of their fathers.

Vers. 15.

Maimony in Issure biah c. 19.

Vers. 17. The Fathers, by which the Levites were distributed, were three, Gershom, Kohath, and Merari; by the Septuag. rendred Gerson Kohath, & Merari, and of the first the families 2. of the Libnites of his son Libni, and the Shimites, of his son Shimei; these were 7500, and were placed

Vers. 22,22. behind the Tabernacle Westward, Eliasaph the son of Lael being set as chief

V.24,25,26. over them; and their charge was the Tabernacle, and coverings and cords: but of this, see more Num.4.25. For Libni the Septuag. have Lobnei, and for Shimei, Semeei. Eliasaph signifieth God hath added, and Lael, for God; but the Sept. read it Elisaph.

Vers. 27. Of the second, Kohath, the Families were four: 1. Of the Amramites, of his son Amram. 2. Of the Izeharites, of his son Izehar. 3. Of the Hebronites, of his son Hebron. 4. Of the Uzzielites, of his son Uzziel: the Sept. for these two last read Chebron and Oziel. The Kohathites were 8600. the Vers. 28, 29, 30, pitched south, and had the charge of the ark, the table, the candlestick, altars vessels and hanging, and Elizaphan the son of Uzziel is made their chief. Elizaphan signifieth, my God hath stirred up; and Uzziel, God is my strength. Uz-

31. ziel was youngest of Kohaths four sons, yet his son is made chief over all these Families: this, as the Hebrews hold, gave occasion to Corah and his company to rebel, because he came of the second son, and yet the son of the youngest was preferred before him. Over all the chiefe of the Levites, Eleazar the eldest son

Corah, Numb. 16.

Vers. 32. of Aaron is made cheif to have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the Tabernacle. To have the oversight in Greek is Ἐπισκοπεῖν, from whence Ἐπίσκοπος, a Bishop cometh, so that he was their Bishop. And as Eleazar, so when he was high 1 Chron.9.20. Priest, Aaron being dead, his son had this dignity; from whence it was, that the high priest and the second Priest are spoken of, 2 *King.*25.18.

Vers. 33, 34,35,36. 37. Of the third, Merari, were two Families, of Mahlites, by his son Mahli, and Mushites, by his son Mushi, these were 6200, and their charge were the boards, pillars, barres, and sockets of the Tabernacle, they pitched Northward, their chief was Zuriel the son of Abihail. Zuriel signifieth, God is my rock; and Abihail, my Fathers strength: the Sept. read Sonriel.

Note. We may note here, that although the sons of Moses in particular are not advanced to dignity for their fathers sake, yet his Family, of which he and Aaron were, was most remarkable for sundry things, that is, the Family of Kohath: 1. For that from this Father came as many Families, as from Gershon and Merari both. 2. He had more children by 1100, then his elder brother Gershon, and more by 2400 then Merari. 3. The Kohathites had the chief place about the Tabernacle next to Moses and Aaron and his sons, vz. on the South next to the East; and therefore in setting down their service more particularly they are first named, Chap.4.1,2. 4. They had the charge of the most holy things, the ark, table, altars, &c.

Jos. 21. 5. Whereas to the Levites were assigned 48 Cities in Canaan; those that came of Kohath had 23. for the Priests had 10. and the rest 13.

Rabanus. The Mystery. By the Levites thus distributed, Rabanus mystically understandeth the Ministers of the Gospel; for Levi signifieth added, or taken; and the Doctours of the Church are taken or added in their Ministery to the holy Angels. Again, the three sons of Levi set forth these Ministers famous for their preaching of the Faith of the holy Trinity, and of faith, hope, and charity. And as Gershon signifying a stranger, they live as strangers in this world; as Kohath signifying patience, or the grinding teeth; so they enduring labour grind, as it were, with their teeth, the seed of Gods Word to feed soules; and as Merari signifieth bitternesse, so they do continually endeavour to make the sweet pleasures of this world to seem bitter to their hearers, and draw them from them. His further extent of this allegory to the parts, where each of these pitcht, I let passe as strained:

strained; onely he saith well, they were numbred from a month old, to shew, that Gods Ministers should be blamlesse in life from the beginning, as 1 *Tim.*3.

Vers. 38,

What the Levites of all these three houses were to do about the Tabernacle, and what their charge was, see more chap.4. Here Moses, and Aaron, and his sons are appointed to the east being at the entrance of the Tabernacle, to keep others from approaching, lest they died, that is, if any presume to come to take up their station there. From this seating of Moses and Aaron together, and that at the entrance of the Tabernacle Ferus noteth well, that the sword secular and Ecclesiasticall should be joyned together and help one another, and that the higher powers of both sorts should chiefly practice piety and herein give example to others, in the midst of whom they are placed, directing their studies to God. to whom they are nighest, and having a care of the people placed round about them in their view, that they should provide, that nothing in respect of justice, good Government and teaching be lacking to any of them.

Ferus. Potestas secularis & ecclesiastica Conjungantur, inter se invicem Conveniant & se mutuo adjuvent.

All that were numbred of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbred &c. were 22000. Over Aaron here in the Hebrew be many prickes extraordinary even 4. which Sol. Jarchi saith, do serve to shew, that Aaron was not numbred amongst this multitude, but by this reason there should have been prickes over the name of Moses also, for onely Levites were numbred. Rather it may be held, that these 4. prickes pointed at the 4. dignities of Aaron. 1. That he was elder Brother to Moses, the ruler. 2. That he was joyned with him in the government of the people. 3. That he only might enter into the most holy place and offer for the sinnes of all the people. 4. He was by marriage brother to Naasson prince of Judah. Exod. 6.23. This pointed at the dignitie of our high Priest, for he is the first born amongst many brethren, ruleth and sacrificeth, and hath for his wife the Church the King of Kings daughter. But whereas the sum being cast up, the Levites are said to be 22000. if we look back to the former sums 7500. 8600. and 6200. We shall find, that together they make 22300. But it is to be understood, that the first born of the Levites were the Lords before, and therefore the intent of this numeration being for exchange to take Levites for all the first born of Israel, their first born were to be left out of the number, and the rest only to come into the grosse sum, thus almost Ainsworth, who also noteth, that the least Tribe was 32200. From 20 years old, but this from a month old only 22000. and they that were fit for service only 8580. Whereby we may see, how small a part of the people the Lord contented himself withall, that they might not be overcharged with their maintenance. And here again is commended the grace of God in choosing the least Tribe for himself more peculiarly, the least and meanest in wordly respects are sometimes greatest and most esteemed before the Lord.

Vers. 39.

Sol. Jarchi.

Ainswor h

Scholast: histo ria. the Hebrew's say, they there were of the first born of the Levites 300.

Note

Number all the first born of the males of the children of Israel from a moneth old &c. From hence to the end of the chapter the first born of Israel are numbred, and the Levites are taken for them, and their first born cattel for theirs, and whereas there were of them 273, more then of the Levites, they are appointed to be redeemed with five shekels a peice, and the price to be given to Aaron and to his sons. After this all the first born of man and beast were to be given to the priest or to be redeemed. *Numb.*18.15. What the shekel was, and the gerah here spoken of see before *Exod.*30.13. If it be demanded, of whom this money was levyed, of the odd persons or of the whole congregation ? R. Sol. Jarchi saith, that it was paid by lot, 22000. papers being written upon each of them, a son of Levy, and 273. upon each of them five shekels, the first born came and drew their lots, and whoso drew the paper inscribed with five shekles paid it, and the rest went free. Here it is to be noted, that if there were any overplus cattle, they were not redeemed, but the men only; this is noted by August. but no reson rendred of it, but the Lords will was at this time to shew favour to the people, and therefore that their cattel might now go free although there were many more of their first-born in all likelyhood, then of all the Levites cattel he appointeth them not to be numbred, but taketh one for another, although Vers. 40.41. 42.43. &c.

Qu.

Solom: Jarchi

August.

though with loſſe, that they might the more chearfully pay them afterwards. Moreover the Lord would hereby ſhew, that cattle & worldly goods are of no reckoning in compariſon of man made after Gods image, that we may learn not to ſet our hearts upon them. The redeeming of men was a figure of the redem ption by Chriſt to come. 1 *Pet.*1.18. Whereas I am the Lord, is repeated here v. 41. and v. 45. It was to ſhew that the thing here commanded was by him, that had ſoveraigne power over them all. The number of the Levites being 22000, is moſt remarkable both for the 22 Bookes of the old Teſtament, the 22 letters of the Hebrew Alphabet, for that Jacob the father of the Iſraelites was the 22 from Adam. This number then intimated, that the Levites ſpecially ſhould have ſtudied the law of God, and have imitated in holineſſe Iſrael their Father; which becauſe they did not, they were carried away captive into Babylon in the dayes of Johozadak the Prieſt, who was the 22 from Aaron. Thus almoſt Rabanus, but more fully Ainſworth. And for the 273. Rabanus, will have this number of the overplus firſt born of the children of Iſrael to figure out all mankind, becauſe in 273. dayes man cometh to perfection in the wombe and is brought forth into the world, and as for theſe a price of 5. ſhekles was given for a perſon, ſo Chriſt hath paid a price ſufficient to redeem all men, although the Faithfull onely have the benefit.

Deut. 33.10.

1 Chron. 6.3. 15.

Rabanus.

Ainſworth

CHAP. IIII.

AFter the numbring of the Levites from a month old and upward, and the taking of them in exchange for the firſt-born of all Iſrael, here followeth the numbring of them that were counted fit for ſervice from 30 years old to 50. and firſt of the Kohathites, to whoſe charge the moſt holy things belonged, and theſe were 2750. Their charge was when Aaron and his ſons had covered the Arke, and the table of ſhewbread, the candleſtick, the golden Altar and all the veſſels thereof to take and carry them at every removing of the camp, but they muſt not touch them leſt they die; nor ſee them, when they are covered, v. 20. But why were they not counted fit for ſervice till 30. and diſmiſſed at 50? Anſ. *Numb.*8.24. They were indeed appointed to begin at 25. years of age, and 1 Chron. 23.24. at 20. years; ſo likewiſe 2 Chron. 31.17. and after that Ezra, 3.8. For the different times in this book of Numbers, the Rabbins ſay, ſome of them that at 25. they began to be inſtructed in the ſervice of the Tabernacle, and when they had been learning five years they began to ſerve; others, at 25. they began to do the lighter works, as to watch and ſee that no ſtranger entred into the Tabernacle, but not till 30. to bear the burthens. I thinke, that at 25. they were but learners, and kept no charge, for then they are ſaid to have entred *Numb.*8.24. but at 30. here to do the work ſee more c.8.24. Thus alſo Liranus, and Abulenſis. For the Prieſts age there is no time ſet, but in reaſon, becauſe of their imploiment, they muſt be of a perfect age both for ability of body and gifts of mind required. For Prieſts under the Goſpel, becauſe Chriſt began his Miniſtry at 30. and John the Baptiſt, it is provided by Councels, that none ſhould be made Deacon before 25. or Prieſt before 30. as Concil Agathenſ. c. 16.17. Concil Tollet. 4. c.77. Concil Neocæſar. c.11. and Ierom. Proæm. in Ezech. but ſuch as have been found fit have been Ordained younger. Nicephorus ſaith, that Eleutherius was made Biſhop of Illyricus at 20. and Remigius at 22. a bright beam ſhining miraculouſly about him to confirme the election; although the ordinary age of a Biſhop be 50. For the Levites beginning afterwards at 20. the people increaſing, it is likely that there was need of more Miniſters, and therefore they were taken in younger, neither had they then theſe carriages to carry, when the Arke was fixt in one place, that they ſhould not need to tarry, till they were grown to 30. years of age to be ſtrong enough to bear burthens. For their going out at 50. it was alſo but from carrying burthens only, for after this age they ſtill kept the charge of the ſanctuary, *Numb.*8.26. and it is probable that Verſ.1.2, 3.4. verſ.5,6,7,8, 9,10,11,12, 13,14,15. Qu.

The Septuag. here for 30. have 25. years. Maimony. Cazkuni.

that in the age of 50. reſpect was had to the Jubilee. But what meaneth he to ſay, all that enter into the hoaſt? Anſ. The Sept. have it to miniſter, this phraſe is uſed to intimate, that Gods Miniſters are as ſouldiers ſet to warfare, as Timothy is called 2 *Tim.*2.3,4. 1 Tim. 1.18. and we read of weapons of their warfare, 2 *Cor.*10.4. The Levites being numbred, ſaith Cyrill, from a moneth old ſerved to ſhew, what innocency ſhould be in Gods Miniſters, and their nnmbring from 30. to 50. how wiſe and couragious they ſhould be, but whereas they are numbred no further then 50. when natural ſtrength beginneth to decay, that ſuch as decline to vice, are not fit to be held in the miniſtry; what the vail was, wherewith the Arke muſt be covered, ſee *Exod.*26. 30,31. and the cover of badgers ſkins ſerved to keep all from the weather. The covering of all, and denying the ſight thereof to any, myſtically ſhewed the hiding of the things repreſented hereby from common underſtanding for a time. Of all the things here ſaid to be covered, the Arke had moſt coverings, the vail, a covering of badgers skins, and of blue, other things had but two, and amongſt theſe the table only a cover of ſcarlet, and the brazen altar for ſacrifices although it might be ſeen at other times, yet now it had two coverings alſo. Rabanus would have it underſtood hereby, that ſome things are to be kept covered, and hidden from the underſtanding of the common people, for whom it is enough to bear the burthens of devotions impoſed upon them, although they know not the reaſon thereof, but the Prieſts only, as Aaron and his ſons only muſt ſee theſe holy things, but the Levites bear them covered. But this covering may better be referred to the times of the law, it being hereby ſhewed, that then all things were myſtically ſet forth by types and figures, and for this was the Lord ſo ſevere againſt thoſe, that preſumed to look into theſe holy things, untill the time of the rending the vail came at the paſſion of Chriſt.

Qu.

Cyril Alex. 13 de adorat.

Rabanus.

Epheſ.3.5. Col.1.26.

Amongſt all the things appointed to be covered Ainſworth noteth, that the laver of braſſe, an appurtenance of the alter of burnt offetings is not mentioned, although leſſer things, as fire-pans, fleſhhooks &c. are mentioned, and yet that is numbred amongſt the holy things, *Exod.*35.16. 38 8.39 39.40.30. and herein he thinketh, not improbably that there was a myſtery, viz. that by this amongſt all other holy veſſels covered, ſtanding open it might be intimated that even when the face of the Church is hidden, ſet forth by the Arke covered, and the light of the word ſhineth not by preaching, neither is there comfort to be had by the publike adminiſtration of the Sacraments, yet the laver of Chriſts blood is never hid, but alwaies remaineth open for the faithfull to waſh and cleanſe their ſouls, that they may be fitted to come at the laſt into Gods glorious preſence in heaven. But the Septuag. ſpeak alſo of the laver covered, they ſhall take a purple cloth, and cover the laver and the baſe thereof, and put them into a covering of Hyacinth skin, and put them upon barrs, and this happily they thus ſupplyed, becauſe they underſtood that this ſhould alſo be covered, although it be not expreſſed by Moſes.

Ainſworth.

Septuag.

Toſtatus.

Qu.

Whereas it is ſaid v.5. that Aaron and his ſons ſhall enter, when the camp removeth it is meant, into the very holy of holies into which otherwiſe none but the high Prieſt alone might come, and that but once in a year. *Levit.*16. But for the taking of all things down and making them fit for the carrige, they might enter at other times: for then, the divine glory hindring, the entrance was removed, and ſo that great reverence was not required, of the removing of the divine glory the cloud taken up at ſuch times was a ſigne, *Numb.*9.21. whereas v.10. it is ſaid, that the golden candleſtick together with the veſſels thereof being covered ſhould be put upon a barr; it may be doubted, how this could be, but Lyranus anſwereth well, that although we do not read of any barr made to be put through rigles for the carrying of this, as of the Arke, yet when all were bound together, a barr was appointed to be faſtened on for the more facil tranſportation. Thus alſo Toſtatus but he hath moreover, other wayes of clearing this doubt, yet he reſteth in this: And the like is ſaid of all other other veſſels of the ſanctuary v.12. being covered they were to be carried upon barrs.

Lyranus.

Verſ.16. And to the Office of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, the Prieſt pertaineth the oyl for the light, and the ſweet incenſe and the daily meat offering, and the anointing oyl, &c. Before he hath done with the Kohathites, he appointeth the things that ſpecially Eleazar ſhould take care of, becauſe he was appointed tobe over them, and their chief, chap.3.32. yea he is ſaid to be over the chief of all the Levites, but over the Kohathites he was in ſpecial, as their biſhop; Ithamar over the Gerſhonites and Merarites v.28. and 33. but Eleazar, as Toſtatus hath it, as an arch-Biſhop to him their Biſhop. For the things committed to the care of Eleazar in ſpecial, they are four, and theſe Cazkuni and R. Elias out of the Jeruſol. Targum ſaith, that he was to carry the oyl for the light in his right hand, the oyl for the anointing in his left, the incenſe in his boſome, and the meat-offering on his ſhoulder. And herein Ainſworth maketh him a notable type of Chriſt, who hath the oyl for the lights, becauſe he enlighteneth his Church *Joh.*1.16. *Luk.*4.18,24,45. and the anointing oyl, becauſe he ſanctifieth *Joh.*7.39. 1*Joh.*2.27. and the ſweet incenſe to perfume our prayers, that they may come up acceptably before the Lord, *Revel.*8.3. 1*Tim.*2.5. and he preſenteth his Church as a pure meat-offering and ſacrifice to his father, *Epheſ.*5.26,27. 1*Cor.*5.7. And as it is further added, that Eleazar ſhould have the overſight of the ſanctuary, and of all the things and veſſels therein; ſo our Lord Jeſus is the great overſeer of his whole Church, and miniſters to the worlds end, *Math.*28.20. *Revel.*1.13.21,2.

Toſtatus.

Exod.30.

Cazkuni.

R. Elias.

Ainſworth.

Verſ.18.19. Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites, but thus do unto them &c. Here the charge is again inculcated of the Levites not coming in to ſee the holy things, of which Aaron and his ſons had the charge, both diligently to do their office in covering them and making them ready for the carriage and directing them in their ſeverall offices to avoyd confuſion, becauſe otherwiſe there would be danger of being cut off by the hand of the Lord, either ſome or all of the Kohathites. And it is ſaid, cut them not off, to imply that if through their default they erred in doing their offices about theſe moſt holy things, the Prieſts ſet to direct them ſhould be the cauſe thereof, and of their deſtruction, that they might be the more careful to give directions unto them, and to keep them each man to his office; upon this Maimony ſaith, the Levites were to be warned not to do one anothers work, the ſingers the porters work, or the porters the ſingers, for if a Levite did the Prieſts ſervice, or imployed himſelf in a work, that was not his own, he was in danger to be cut off by the hand of God. This ſtraight charge of not coming in or ſeeing ſerved to intimate the great difference betwixt God and us by ſin; ſo that without a mediator we may not approach unto him. Touching the prohibiting of the Kohathites to ſee, hereby it was implyed, that it ſhould be much more unlawful for others, as the men of Bethſhemeſh found it to their coſt. 50000. being cut off for this thing, although Joſephus hath but 70. Oleaſter ſaith here, it is ſtrange, that they are bidden not to cut off the Kohathites, for if by their negligence, they came nigh, or faulted, one would thinke, that they rather viz. the Prieſts ſhould have been puniſhed. But both he that ſinneth, and the watchman through whoſe negligence, are dangered, as *Ezech.*3.17. Rupertus applyeth this not unfitly to Biſhops admitting the unworthy to holy orders, that ſo they may come to handle the moſt holy things, they expoſe them thus to the danger of perdition.

Maimony in Miſneh. of the inſtru. of the Sanct. ch.3.

Note

1Sam.6.19.

Joſeph. antiq. L.1.c.2.

Oleaſter

Rupertus.

Note

Verſ.22. Take alſo the ſum of the ſons of Gerſhon &c. From hence to verſ. 28. the charge of the ſons of Gerſhon, is ſet forth, viz, to carry the curtains and cover, and cords of the Tabernacle, and Ithamar, the ſecond ſon of Aaron is placed over them, as alſo over the Merarites. What curtains and coverings belonged to the tabernacle, ſee before *Exod.*26. In that the Gerſhonites are appointed to carry only ſoft things, Rickelius ſaith, that by them ſuch are ſet forth, as endeavour indeed to keep the commandements, but the hard things things of counſel they will not meddle with in favour of their bodies, leſt they be put to endure over-much. By the Merarites carrying the boards, &c. ſuch as by an indiſcreet zeal toyl themſelves in enduring any hardſhip, but are not ſo intent to the reformation of their hearts, and to inward devotion; by the Kohathites alſo carrying the Ark but covered, he underſtandeth thoſe religious perſons, that by faith in Chriſts paſſion bear the Ark of God, but wanting that knowledge of the Divine attributes by them bearing the table with ſhew-bread, the ſame religious bearing the Scriptures in their minds, by them bearing the Candleſtick, the ſame following the life and inſtructions of the Apoſtles, and having the altar of incenſe in them, for that they daily offer the ſacrifice of praiſe, and have in their hearts the incenſe of love. And for Moſes and Aaron and the Prieſts, that might go in and ſee all the moſt holy things, the moſt excellently heroical and divine are ſet forth by them, ſo Rickelius. But if by thoſe, that avoid hard things, he underſtandeth ſuch, as will not enter in a Monaſtery or Anchorites Cell, they are the wiſer; or if ſuch, as will not whip themſelves, or wear hair-cloath in way of pennance, for who required theſe things at their hands? Rather becauſe every of theſe ſorts of Levites bear the ſeveral burthens appointed unto them, ſome harder, and ſome ſofter, ſome moſt holy and pretious, and ſome holy things not ſo pretious; the divers conditions of Miniſters are ſet forth hereby, ſome meeting with more hardſhip then others, in the execution of their miniſterial functions; and ſome, who although they being holy and good things for the ſetting up of the Sanctuary, yet not ſo excellent as others, as is touched 1 Cor. 3.12. that all may be content with the task aſſigned unto them, and be accepted of faithfully labouring according to their gifts, although not ſo excellent.

Rickelius.

The myſtery.

Eſa. 1. 12.

From Verſ. 29. to 33. the charge of the Merarites is ſet forth, which was to carry the boards, the barres, the pillars and ſockets, &c. Here ſingularly it is added, by name ye ſhall reckon the inſtruments of the charge of their burthen, becauſe there were many of theſe and not of ſuch ſpeciall account; leſt any of them ſhould be forgotten, they are appointed to be delivered by name, to ſhew the ſingular care, that the Lord hath of his Church, and of every member thereof, that not one of them may be loſt, to which effect he ſpeaketh, Joh. 10.3. he calleth his own ſheep by name. How many the boards and pillers, &c. were. ſee before, Exod. 26. 27. with all their inſtruments, and with all their ſervice: the vulgar Latine, With all their veſſels and ſtuffe; and by veſſels, Toſtatus underſtandeth the cords and pins; by ſtuffe, the boards and pillers. But it is, with all their inſtruments and ſervices. Theſe words in general ſerving to ſet forth all the things before mentioned.

Verſ. 29, 30, 31. 32.

Toſtatus.

From Verſe 34. to the end of the Chapter, is nothing elſe but the execution of the thing given before in charge, viz. the numbring of theſe three houſes, and the ſumming up of them. Of the Kohathites, 2750. Of the Gerſhonites, 2630. Of the Merarites, 3200. together, 8580. wherein is to be noted, that the Merarites, who were feweſt, being counted from a moneth old and upward, were moſt, when the able men only were counted, as their burthens were greateſt, and they had alſo four waggons and eight oxen given unto them for their carriages, whereas none elſe had any but the Gerſhonites two, and four oxen. Thus God provideth, where he impoſeth an hard task for the inabling of his ſervants to perform it, as David being appointed to warr, had extraordinary ſtrength and courage, and Champions in his Army, 1 Chron. 11. 12. whereas more words may ſeem to be uſed in theſe numbrings, then are neceſſary, this was to move to the more reverent and due regard to the very numbrings of the Levites, who were neareſt to the Lord, as intimating the ſpeciall account that they were in with him. And therefore Toſtatus noteth,

Verſ. 34

Numb. 7. 8.

Note.

Toſtatus.

noteth, that whereas they of other Tribes were but once numbred from 20. and upward, theſe were numbred four times, 1. from a moneth upward 2 from 30. to 50. 3 from 25. to 50. 4 from 50. to the end of their lives.

Numb. 8. 24, 26.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 2. COmmand the children of Iſrael, that they put out of the Camp every leper, and every one that hath an iſſue, or is unclean by the dead. Levit. 13. 46. It was appointed, that the leper ſhould dwell without the Camp. And touching iſſues in men or women it is concluded, that the unclean ſhall be ſeparated from the clean, Levit. 15. 31. of touching the dead and the uncleanneſſe thereby, the Law followeth, Chap. 19. 11. viz. of touching the dead body of a man, which is here meant, for the word נפש, is here uſed for the dead, which properly ſignifieth a ſoul, and is commonly put for a carkaſſe of a man, Numb. 6. 6. Levit. 21. 1. He that toucheth the dead body of a man ſhall be unclean ſeven dayes. For touching other dead things one was unclean but till the even, and therefore was not to be put out of the Camp for this uncleanneſſe. For the putting of unclean perſons out of the camp, as it was in other places ordained, that they ſhould dwell apart out of the camp or army, ſo here that decree is now appointed to be put in execution, the army being muſtered and ſet in order.

Levit. 11. 39.

Touching the Camp here ſpoken of, R. Solomon, and after him Lyranus ſay, that there were three Camps. 1. Of the Sanctuary, called the Camp of the Lord, 2 Chron. 31. 2. The camp of the Levites, Numb. 3. 3. The camp of the other Tribes, Numb. 2. and out of all theſe camps the lepers were caſt, becauſe moſt unclean, ſuch as had an iſſue, out of two, of the Lord, and of the Levites; but ſuch as had touched the dead only out of the firſt, and this is followed by Munſter, Fonſeca, Rickelius, Clarius, &c. But as Oleaſter well noteth, here is no ſuch diſtinction in the text; and therefore it is better to hold, as Cajetan, that they were all caſt out of omnem ambitum omnium caſtrorum, the whole compaſſe of all the Tents, but reſpectively, as Toſtatus hath it under their ſeveral banners. And the reaſon hereof is good, the polluted ſhall waſh his cloathes and enter into the tents, that is, the tents, out of which he was before caſt out, in which he dwelt, which was not in the Tabernacle, or with the Prieſts and Levites, unleſſe he were one of them, but in the common tents of the people. For the perſons, by whom this ſeparation was made, Comeſtor ſaith, it was by the hands of the Prieſts, but verſ. 4. it is plain, that the children of Iſrael did it. For the myſtery hereof, Rabanus by the leprous underſtandeth the Hereticks, by the iſſue in the fleſh the incontinent, through fleſhly luſts breaking out, and by thoſe that have touched the dead, ſuch as follow the evil examples of thoſe that are dead in ſin.

R. Solomon.
Lyranus. ſo likewiſe
Maimony.
Talmud. Babyl.
Munſter.
Fonſeca.
Clarius.
Oleaſter.
Cajetan.

Scholaſt. hiſt.
The Myſtery.
Rabanus.

Verſ. 5, 6, 7. When a man or woman ſhall commit any ſin or treſpaſſe againſt the Lord, they ſhall confeſſe their ſin, and recompence the treſpaſſe, which he hath done with the principal, and adde thereto the fift part, &c.] This is a brief repetition of the Law more largely delivered, Levit. 6. 1, 2, &c. where it appeareth, that it is meant of ſins in doing injury, an oath being falſly interpoſed. And the Hebrews ſay, that this Law holdeth onely for ſuch as confeſſe, not for thoſe that are convicted by witneſſes; for unleſſe the guilty confeſſe, they reſtore not the fift part, but the principal only, but then no ſacrifice is offered, or atonement made for them. And this is a general rule not only for treſpaſſes, whereby damage is done to a neighbour, and an oath is falſly taken, but alſo for all other ſins, if there be no confeſſion, there is Maimony of Repentance, Chap. 1. S. 1.

no

no remiſſion, yea though a man ſatisfieth his neighbour for the wrong done, unleſſe by word of mouth he confeſſeth it, and turneth away from doing ſo for ever, there is no atonement made for him. And the confeſſion was in this form; O God, I have ſinned, I have done perverſly, I have treſpaſſed before thee, and have done thus and thus, and loe I repent and am aſhamed of my doings, and will never do this thing again. And this Law is here repeated, that this touching confeſſion, which was before wanting, might be added, and in caſe the party wronged be dead, or hath no kinſman, it might be ordered, to whom reſtitution ſhould be made.

If the man wronged hath no kinſman, let the treſpaſſe be recompenced to the Lord, even to the Prieſt &c.] By reaſon of this order the Hebrewes underſtand by him, that hath done wrong, and cometh to make reſtitution, a ſtranger and no Iſraelite; as if it had been ſaid, but if he be a ſtranger, to whom the wrong hath been done, and he be dead, and hath no kinſman, becauſe an Iſraelite can never want a kinſman, for ſo much as they are all akin one to another, being of one bloud. And why to the Prieſt the recompence ſhould be made for God, they yeeld this reaſon. The holy bleſſed God is the Father of the ſtranger, and meet to inherit that which is his, therefore it ſhould be given to the ſon of his houſe, that is, the Prieſt; and by the Prieſt ſaith Cazkuni, is to be underſtood the Prieſt of that Ward, but if a Prieſt hath done wrong to one that is dead, and hath left no kinſman, reſtitution muſt be made to the other Prieſts, and in no part to him, although in the time of his ward or courſe. Verſ. 8. Sol. Jarchi. Maimony. Cazkuni.

And here it is provided, that all things belonging to the Lord ſhould be the Prieſts, ſo likewiſe Numb.18.8,9. and Ezech.44.30. And herein, ſaith Ainſworth, the Prieſts were a type of Chriſt, to whom the Father hath given all things, Pſal.2. Heb.1.2. Theodoret, becauſe in ſpeaking of the ſin, for which ſatisfaction muſt be made, it is ſaid, any ſin, that men commit, underſtandeth hereby lighter ſins, into which we are apt daily to fall: but Auguſtine better underſtandeth thoſe ſins, that may be recompenced with money, becauſe otherwiſe ſuch a ſatisfaction ſhould not have been preſcribed. Yet it is true, that was ſaid before, generally all ſins, that we remember, that we have committed, muſt be humbly confeſſed, and we muſt break off from them, or elſe there will be no remiſſion for us, Prov. 28.13. Job 33.27,28. Verſ.9,10. Ainſworth. Theod.quæſt. 8. in Num. Auguſt. qu. 9.

If any mans wife go aſide and commit a treſpaſſe againſt him &c.] It is hard to ſhew any coherence betwixt this law of jealouſie, and that before going, of giving the things belonging to the Lord to the Prieſt. Yet Aben Ezra, and Rabbi Solomon ſay, that it is a juſt puniſhment of God upon thoſe, that deal deceitfully with the Prieſt, and give him not his dues, but ſecretly wrong him herein, that they ſhould be wronged in their wives ſecret adultery with other men, and therefore to intimate, that when they deal falſly about the holy things of the Lord, they ſhall be in danger of being dealt falſly withal by their wives; ſo that they ſhall be forced to come with confuſion before the Prieſt, this law cometh next after the other. Lyranus and Toſtatus, the Lord having before provided for the publick tranquillity in reſtitutions making for wrongs; now provideth for the tranquillity of families, in ſetting down an order to compoſe differences in the caſe of jealouſie, and this coherence ſeemeth the beſt of theſe two, and yet there is a better, viz. the Lord having taken order for the purging of his Congregation from uncleanneſſes, in the beginning of this Chapter, and then for the expiation of ſins confeſſed; now ſetteth down an order in the caſe of ſin concealed betwixt the wife and the husband. Ver. 12. Aben Ezra. R. Solomon. Lyranus. Toſtatus.

In deſcribing this ſin, he ſaith, and ſhe hath hid her ſelf and is defiled, that is, if ſhe hath been in ſecret with another man, whereby juſt occaſion of Verſ. 13.

ſuſpition was given, but ſhe cunningly hideth it, as the whoriſh woman, Prov. 30. 20. Thus Maimony in explaining this Law of jealouſie, ſaith, when a man hath given his wife warning before two witneſſes not to be in ſecret with ſuch a man, if after this ſhe be in ſecret with him ſo long, as that ſhe might be defiled, it is unlawful for him from thence forward to company with her, untill ſuch time as ſhe hath been brought to this tryal, and if there be no jealouſie water, of which it is here afterwards ſpoken, he may never company with her any more, but put her away without a dowry. But no woman is brought to this tryal, unleſſe there be two witneſſes of her being in ſecret with the man forbidden her by her husband, if upon his own ſeeing he putteth her away therefore, he muſt give her a bill of dowry. If a man giveth his wife no warning before witneſſes, or ſaith onely, ſpeak not with ſuch a man, although ſhe be in ſecret with him ſo long, that ſhe might be defiled, ſhe is not to be brought to this tryal, but onely in caſe that before witneſſes ſhe hath been warned not to be in ſecret with him, and there be witneſſes, that ſhe was ſo long with him. and there be no Witneſſe againſt her. This is added, becauſe if ſhe be convicted of adultery by two witneſſes, ſhe is not to be tryed, but ſtoned to death. If there be but one witneſſe, ſaith Solom. Jarchi, ſhe is put away untryed without a dowry; if one witneſſeth againſt her, and another or two for her, that ſhe was not defiled, then ſhe cometh to this tryal.

Maimony in Sotah. c. 1.

Levit. 20. 10. Sol. Jarchi.

Verſ. 15. He ſhall bring his wife to the Prieſt and bring an offering for her, the tenth part of an Ephah of barly meal, he ſhall not put oyl upon it, &c. This offering was not to expiate her ſin yet hidden, but to make a memorial thereof before the Lord, to whoſe judgment ſhe was by this offering bringing committed. And barly meal, not wheat is appointed to be brought, ſaith Sol. Jarchi, becauſe barly was the food of beaſts, and ſhe was now called in queſtion for doing like a beaſt, no oyl was put to, becauſe grace figured by oyl was wanting in her action, nor frankincenſe, becauſe ſuch actions have no ſweet, but a ſtinking ſmell before God. For the manner of the jealous husbands bringing his wife to this tryal before the Prieſt, the Rabbins ſay, it was thus. He firſt acquainted the Magiſtrates of his City with his ſuſpition, and brought his witneſſes, with whom when they had talked, and found cauſe of ſuſpition, they ſent the man and his wife away to Jeruſalem to be tryed, appointing two men to accompany him, and to ſee, that he lye not with his wife, till ſhe hath drunk of the water. Being come to Jeruſalem, the woman is brought and ſet in the midſt of the great Synedrion in the Sanctuary, who terrifie her, and urge her to confeſſe without drinking, whereupon if ſhe confeſſeth her ſelf to have been defiled, ſhe is put from her husband without a dowry, if not, but ſhe ſtandeth upon her juſtification, ſhe was brought to the eaſt gate of the court right over againſt the moſt holy place, and there being unveiled, and all ornaments and good apparel being taken from her, and many women being called together to ſee, that they might fear to do after her lewdneſſe, as is ſaid, Ezech. 23. 48. the Prieſt adjured her, as verſ. 19. It is a meat-offering of jealouſies. Here becauſe it is ſaid jealouſies in the plural number, Maimony noteth, that if ſhe be ſuſpected not only for one, but for many men, yet one offering of jealouſies onely is brought.

Maimony in Sotah. ch. 3.

Verſ. 16, 17. Then the Prieſt ſhall make her ſtand before the Lord, and he ſhall take holy water in an earthen veſſel, and duſt of the floor in the Tabernacle, &c.] By his making her to ſtand, Cazkuni underſtandeth his leaving of her without, till he went into the Tabernacle for ſome duſt to be put upon the holy water, but when ſhe was ſet in the place of tryal before the ſanctuary, ſhe is ſaid to have been made to ſtand before the Lord, whoſe the judgment was, and not mans. Lorinus relating out of the Hebrews the order of proceeding with the ſuſpected wife, ſaith, firſt her husband brought Cazkuni.

Lorinus.

brought her before the Judges together with his witneſſes, profeſſing, that he would carry her to Jeruſalem to be tryed according to the law, coming thither ſhe was admoniſhed to confeſſe her ſin, into which alſo famous perſons had falne as Reuben, Ammon and Tamar. If hereupon ſhe confeſſed, ſhe went away from her husband without a dowry, but if not, ſhe was led about the Court from place to place, even to the wearying of her, and if ſhe ſtill denyed it, her ornaments were taken off, and black weeds put on, and the tying of her hair was undone, that it might be ſhed abroad, then the Prieſt adjured her, and wrot her name in parchment, and the words of the adjuration, caſting the parchment into an earthen veſſel, which was new, putting in water out of the laver, and wormwood and other bitter things. Then he razed out the womans name, and bad her drink the water, which being done, if ſhe were guilty, her face waxed pale, her eyes ſtarted out, her belly ſwelled, and her thigh fell, and ſhe dyed, and the adulterer being judged by God in all things like unto her dyed the ſame hour. But if ſhe were innocent, ſhe was healed of whatſoever diſeaſe ſhe had, and if ſhe had had hard travail in bringing forth before, now ſhe had eaſie; and Toſtatus addeth, that they ſaid, ſhe conceived one child without ſeed after this, wherein he oppoſeth them as fabulous, as he juſtly might: but for her conceiving, the text is plain, verſ. 28. yet I doubt not, but the Lord would have us to underſtand by her husband, who ſhould now take her home to him again, and not meerly by virtue in the water cauſing conception, for to conceive without the knowledge of man, was peculiar to the bleſſed Virgin Mary onely. Toſtatus.

But if the Hebrewes believe conceptions of women without man, it is a marvail that they ſhould be ſo hard of belief touching the conception of the Virgin Mary. Joſephus ſaith, that the name of God was written in a parchment and blotted out again, but amongſt the affirmative precepts of the Hebrews, præcepto 56. her name was written, and the words of the curſe as was ſaid before. Philo touching the new earthen veſſell, into which the water was put, ſaith, that the inquiry of the truth was noted hereby, and that the woman ſuſpected ſhould wiſh death, if ſhe were guilty, and water and duſt were put into this veſſel, to intimate, that the water and the earth, from whence all generations are, were witneſſes in this matter. The holy water here appointed to be taken, was that of the laver, Exod. 30. 18. as the Hebrews generally hold, and the Cald. therefore rendreth it, water, of the laver; but the Sept. living water: the quantity is not ſet down, but the Hebrews ſay, it was half a log, or ſextary, that is three quarters of a pint. Calvin maketh a quære, whether this holy water were not that, Numb. 19. but then this uſe of it ſhould have been ſet down there. The earthen veſſel, wherein, ſaith Maimony, muſt be one never uſed before, and in ſuch a veſſel water was given her, becauſe it was ſuppoſed, that ſhe had drunk wine with her adulterer in bowles before. Upon this duſt was put, not firſt the duſt, and then water, for that was unlawful, but the duſt muſt be to be ſeen upon the top of the water, and duſt is put in for her to drink, as a baſe thing and the curſed Serpents food, to ſhew, that if ſhe were guilty, ſhe ſhould be curſed with him for hearkening to his temptation, but it was duſt of the Sanctuary to ſtrike into her the terrour of judgment from the Lord, who dwelt in that ſanctuary; or elſe duſt was put in deteſtation of the crime, as Calvin hath it. Joſeph. lib. 3. Antiq. c. 10. Philo lib. de ſpecial. legibus. Maimon. Gen. 3.

And the Prieſt ſhall ſet the woman before the Lord, and uncover her head. &c. Of his ſetting of her before the Lord it was ſpoken once before, verſ. 16. and becauſe it is here ſpoken of again, Maimony noteth, that after her firſt ſetting and urging to confeſſe, ſhe was led about to weary her, to ſee if by this means ſhe might be brought to confeſſe, and then ſhe was ſet Verſ. 18.

before the Lord again, and one of the Prieſts rent her garments down to the heart, and uncovered her hair, and untyed the locks of her head, which things were done to ſhew her ſorrowful caſe, becauſe to uncover the head, and to rend the garments, are ſigns of ſorrow. But Calvin better, this uncovering of her was oppoſed to her former being in ſecret, becauſe now ſhe ſhould be manifeſted. Then the jealouſie offering muſt be put into her hands, her holding of that there being a ſign of her offering her ſelf to be tryed by the Lord, and the Prieſt muſt hold the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe in his hands, that ſhe may ſee it. Bitter water it is called, ſaith Maimony, becauſe Wormwood, or ſome other bitter thing was put to it, ſo the Hebrews generally; but here is nothing appointed to be put in, but duſt of the Sanctuary; ſo that if the Hebrewes put in any other thing, they took that cuſtome up without warrant. This water, though no bitter things were put into it, might well be called bitter for the effect, becauſe nothing is more bitter, then the ſentence of condemnation, becauſe death is bitter, 1 Sam.15.32. Eccl.7.28. For theſe words, water that cauſeth the curſe, the Septuag. have, water of conviction, and curſed alſo.

Levit. 21. 10.

Verſ. 19. And the Prieſt ſhall charge her by an oath, ſaying, if no man hath lyen with thee, and thou haſt not gone aſide to uncleanneſſe with another, &c.] The form of the oath is at large ſet down, Verſ. 19, 20, 21, 22. the woman ſaying amen, amen to all the words of adjuration uſed by the Prieſt. Now this oath may not, as the Hebrews note, be given to the woman, whether ſhe lay with any other man before her betroathing or marrying to her husband, or if being once put away, he took her again, in the time of her divorce, but only whileſt ſhe lived under him, for in Hebrew it is ſaid, if thou haſt not gone aſide to uncleanneſſe with another man under thy husband.

Verſ. 21. The Lord make thee a curſe and an oath amongſt thy people, &c.] That is, an oath of execration, ſo that when they call for any curſe upon themſelves in any caſe, they ſhall mention thee, God make me like ſuch a woman whoſe belly did ſwell, &c. if I did ſuch a thing. Thus Jerem.29.22. of them ſhall be taken up a curſe by all the captivity, ſaying, the Lord make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, &c. Eſay 65.15. ye ſhall leave your name for an oath.

Calvin. If it demanded, why the ſuſpected wife was brought to her oath more then any other malefactour? Calvin anſwereth well, the ſin of adultery had more opportunities to be committed in ſecret, and therefore to preſerve the marriage bed chaſte, and to ſhew, how diſpleaſing impurity in this kind is to the Lord, under whoſe ſpecial patronage the marriage bed is, he would, that there ſhould be a means of tryall in caſe of juſt ſuſpition herein. When the Lord doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to ſwell. In Hebrew it is, thy thigh to fall; but becauſe to fall is put for to dye, as 1 Cor. 10.8. it is rendred to rot, becauſe dead fleſh rotteth; and the judgement is denounced upon the thigh, becauſe the place from whence is generation, and children come, is called the thigh, Gen.46.26. ſo that by the falling or rotting of the thigh, the falling of the womb abuſed to adultery is ſet forth, and the making of it unfit for generation: and thy belly to ſwell, the Sept. thy belly to burſt. The like effect, ſay Sol. Jarchi and R. Menahem, had the powder of the golden calf in thoſe, that were guilty of that idolatry, being drunk in water: but this is no better, then other traditions of theirs, ſeeing if it had been ſo, ſome mention would have been made of thoſe that periſhed by this means.

Sol. Jarchi. R. Menahem.

Exod. 32.

Verſ. 22. And the woman ſhall ſay, Amen, Amen.] The word Amen, is commonly known to ſignifie verily, or truth; and the Septuag. render it, ſo be it. The doubling of it was for the exaggeration of the curſe, and to ſhew her moſt earneſt deſire, that God would make her a curſe, if ſhe were guilty, as Nehem.8.6. the ſame doubling is uſed at the end of a prayer, to ſhew an earneſt deſire to be heard.

And the Prieſt ſhall write theſe curſes in a book, and blot them out with the bitter water.] What this book was, hath been ſhewed before upon verſe 15. a piece of white parchment; for the Hebrewes called any writing a book, as Deut.24.1. 2 Sam.11.14. Eſa.39.1. and hereupon not only theſe curſes, but alſo the womans name was written; and about this writing Maimony noteth, that it muſt be in parchment, not in any other thing, by day and not by night, after the denouncing of the curſes, not before, and with ſuch ink, as might eaſily be blotted out again. Joſephus alſo ſaith, that the name of God was written, and immediately blotted out again, as was noted before. The waſhing off of the curſes written into the bitter water, ſerved to ſhew, that if ſhe were guilty, the curſe ſhould go down into her belly with the water, and have ſuch effects, as were before ſaid. Verſ. 23. Maimony. Joſeph. Antiqu. 3. c.10.

The water, that cauſeth the curſe, ſhall enter into her, and become bitter,] That is, in the effects, bringing bitter pangs and death. Verſ. 24.

And afterwards ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the water] His cauſing of her to drink the bitter water was ſpoken of before, verſ.24. but it is to be underſtood, that the offering brought verſ.25. muſt firſt be waved, and a memorial of it burnt, and then the water drunk, as is here explained; and if ſhe be guilty, it ſhall be turned into bitterneſſe, that is, have bitter and curſed effects in her, cauſing her thigh to rot, &c. but if ſhe be not defiled, ſhe ſhall be free, and conceive ſeed. Of which I have ſaid enough before: but Maimony addeth, beſides all the fore commemorated priviledges, that if ſhe uſed in times paſt to bring females, thenceforth ſhe ſhould bring males, and touching the womans drinking of this water, he ſaith, that ſhe was not forced to it, unleſſe ſhe would; but if ſhe ſaid, although I be guilty, I will not drink, ſhe was put away without a dowry; or if ſhe ſaid, I am not defiled, but refuſed to drink: but if her husband lay with her before he offered her to the tryal, ſhe was put away with a dowry. Verſ. 26. Ver. 27. Ver. 28. Maimony in Sotah.

Again, ſome women might not be brought to the tryal by drinking, viz. the blind, the lame, the deaf, the dumb, or ſuch as want an hand, or women, that have ſuch husbands, thus Maimony: but theſe are additions of the Rabbins. Whereas he further ſaith, a woman brought once to the tryal for ſuch a man, and cleared, if after this ſhe be with him in ſecret, ſhe may not be brought to drinking again the ſecond time for the ſame man, but ſhe is unlawful for her husband for ever, and is to be put away without a dowry: this tendeth to an allowance of divorcements upon any diſpleaſure, which is the fruit of hardneſſe of heart, as our Saviour teacheth. After her clearing touching one man, ſhe may be brought to the tryal by drinking for another, but a woman onely betroathed may not be brought, except after marriage; for then if her husband will, he may bring her to be tryed: but if ſhe ſtanding to be tryed, or any other wife, her husband dyeth, ſhe is diſmiſſed without tryal. Matth. 19 8.

Then ſhall the man be guiltleſſe from iniquitie and this woman ſhall bear her iniquitie] That is, ſaith Caskuni, the man ſhall be free for that he doth not ſuffer his wife to play the whore under him, whereas otherwiſe by conniving at her ſinne, he ſhould become guilty of the ſame. But the Targum Jonathan thus. If that man be free from ſinnes, that woman ſhall bear her ſin, and according to that as Maimony ſaith, any man, that hath uſed unlawfull copulation in his dayes, the curſe bringing water doth not try his wife; whereby they ſeem to inferre, that ſuch as live incontinently themſelves, cannot bring their wives to this triall. But it is plainly meant, the man ſhall be guiltleſſe from iniquitie, his wife thus periſhing through Gods juſt judgement, or being cleared, although he in jealouſie brought her to the triall, ſuſpecting upon lawfull ground, that ſhe had ſinned, For howſoever it falleth out, he went according to the direction of Gods Law, not cheriſhing ſecretly an hard opinion touching his wife, nor remiſly paſſing over her fault, which he had juſt occaſion to ſuſpect; in either of which Verſ. 31. Cazkuni. Targum Jonathan. Maimony in Sotah.

which caſes he ſhould have been guiltie; but now having done nothing contrary, but according to Gods Law, he ſhall be guiltleſſe; God will not count this act of his jealouſly a ſinne in him, but the woman thus proved an adultreſſe, ſhall bear her ſinne; that is, the puniſhment thereof, thus alſo Lyranus and Cajetan. And hence it may be rightly inferred, that a man not ſeeking to ſtay the courſe of ſinning in others under him is himſelf guilty of their ſinnes, becauſe he that proceedeth according to this law againſt his wife, whom he may juſtly ſuſpect, is affirmed to be guiltleſs; therefore on the contrarie ſide, he that ſuffereth evill in appearance without queſtioning it, is guilty. And if God ſo ſeverely puniſhed corporall adultery, how much more will he be ſevere againſt the ſpirituall, that is, idolatry and ſuperſtition, as Lorinus, a Jeſuite himſelfe reaſoneth unwittingly, cenſuring his own idolatrous religion herein! And hitherto of the miraculous means of trying a ſuſpected wife. In imitation of this, there have in divers ages been ſundry means deviſed by the ſuperſtitious to trie the like, and for triall in many other caſes, as by gads of iron made red hot: thus Cunegundis, to the wife of Charles the third, is ſaid to have proved her chaſtitie, by going upon them barefooted; and Tuſcia a veſtall virgin by carrying water in a ſeive, and as Q. Claudia by drawing a ſhip with her girdle, &c.

Lyranus
Cajetan.
Note.

Boier. annal. lib. 4.
Pet. Gregor. Syntag. lib. 48. c. 15.
Theod. Balſamon ad Can. 6. Concil. Trullani.

Theod. Balſamon telleth of a certain Prieſt, that proved theft, by giving holy bread to the ſuſpected, making a croſs upon his head and a croſs upon his feet, adding divers prayers and an imprecation, that if he were guilty, his tongue and throat might be tied from ſwallowing it, and he ſhould grin and make a noiſe, and have torment without ceaſing. Delrius telleth of trialls by lots, by oath, by the Euchariſt, &c. and others by holy water drunke with theſe words; Let this water of the Lord become a triall to thee this day through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is a true and juſt Judge; then the tried kiſſed the holy Goſpel and the Croſſe. And Monomachies alſo have been much uſed for trials; as by Gundebaldus King of the Burgundians, anno 509. amongſt the Longobards, anno 659. and this triall was offered by Lodovike King of France, to Duke Hugo, anno 948. and hath been uſed amongſt the Germans, French, Spaniſh, Muſcovites and Danes, as Delrius ſaith. But the triall ſpoken of in this Chapter, was the onely triall appointed by God, and in other caſes an oath, according to that petition made by Solomon, 1 King. 8. 32. and therefore other means of triall are to be condemned, as in which there can be no faith to expect a juſt event, for that they are not of Gods, but of heatheniſh or ſuperſtitious mans ſetting up: And for this cauſe, both Gregory the great and Honorius the third, forbad the triall of hot irons and waters; and ſo did Charles the great, and Gratian, and Ino Carnotenſis ſaith, that theſe trialls have been forbidden by many Canons. In the Valentin. Councel in France, the trialls by Monomachy were moſt ſeverely prohibited.

Delrius lib. 4. Magic. diſput.

Gregor. magnus. Carol. magnus. lib. 2. Gratian. 2. qu. 5. 6.

The Myſterie.

For the myſticall application of the triall here ordained, Rabanus and Rickelius apply it to the Paſtour, and the ſoul under his charge ſuſpected for hereſie. But Rupertus better to the Jewiſh Synagogue playing the adultreſſe againſt God; this they hide by denying it, but being brought before the high Prieſt Chriſt, they are made manifeſt to the world to have provoked the Lord to jealouſie, by their oppoſing and perſecuting of the true faith, being uncovered of the divine protection, when they were beſieged by the Roman army; and as by the bitter water, ſo corrupted belly and thigh, as that this Synagogue hath never ſince been able to bring forth one childe unto God, but remaineth miſerable and accurſed, according to that imprecation of their own once uttered, his bloud be upon us and upon our children, as the woman here to the imprecation of the Prieſt ſaying, Amen, Amen. For touching her adultery it was prophecied, as a woman hath deſpiſed her husband, ſo the houſe of Iſrael hath deſpiſed me; and again, Rupert. l. b 1. in Levit. c. 10.

Matth 27. 25.

Ier. 3. 20.

gain, thou haſt a whores forehead: He alſo applieth other particulars of the barly offering, and the want of oyl and incenſe hereupon to their holding to the literall ſenſe of the Law, in which there is nothing almoſt but branne as it were; no mercy or ſweet ſmelling ſavour, before the Lord, &c. of which the Reader, if he pleaſeth may ſee more in the Authour. Ver. 3.

Cap. VI.

THe Lord having hitherto provided for the purging of the camp in reſpect of neceſſary purgings from uncleanneſſes, now provideth for voluntary wayes of more exact holineſſe in ſome, even ſo many as were ſtirred up by his ſingular grace to vow the life of Nazarites. When either man or woman ſhall ſeparate themſelves to vow the vow of a Nazarite, &c. The word נָזִיר a Nazarite ſignifieth one ſeparated, and therefore to vow the vow of a Nazarite was to vow to be ſeparated, from the common ſort in a ſtrict holy courſe of life. If any out of their great devotion to God would doe thus; that they might have a warrant for it: this ordinance is made, wherein the rules, by which they were to live, are preſcribed, becauſe to undertake any extraordinary courſe of holy life without warrant from God is rather ſuperſtition then devotion. Such as voved and lived according to the vow of Nazarites, were the moſt excellent amongſt the people of God, as being a means of much good unto others when they beheld their abſtinence and holineſſe of life; and therefore they are numbred with the Prophets Amos. 2. 11. and ſpecially lamented when they failed, Lament. 4. 7. And it is not to be doubted, but that Jacob by the ſpirit of Propheſie pointed at this order, when he ſpake of Joſeph, as ſeparated from his brethren: thus Calvin, who alſo will have the perfect holineſſe and extraordinary of Chriſt pointed at in thoſe of this profeſſion, becauſe they were extraordinarily ſtirred up as guides and leaders to others herein. Yet Chriſt was not for this called a Nazarite, becauſe he was of this order, for he drank wine and ſtrong drinke; but from the citie Nazareth where he dwelt, and from נֵצֶר a branch, becauſe he was the branch ſpringing out of the root of Jeſſe, as is ſhewed more at large in my notes upon Matth. 2. Of Nazarites there were two ſorts, ſome that vowed this vow for their life time, and ſome for ſome yeares or dayes, onely, of the firſt ſort was Samuell, 1 Sam. 1. 11. ſo vowed by his mother; of the other ſort it is here ſpoken, ver. 4. 5. 13. Samſon and John the Baptiſt were appointed by the Lord from their birth to be Nazarites. A Nazarite, ſaith Comeſtor, is as much as holy, florens, germinans: and it ſeemeth by that Lament. 4. 7. that their habite was white. By a certain book of the Hebrewes called Inchaſin the Rechabites ſpoken of Jerem. 35. and ſaid to be Nazirites perpetuall, and the Eſſees or Haſſidæi. 1 Machab. 7. 13. and verily in their holineſs and manner of life being led ſo ſtrictly there was a great ſimilitude betwixt them, but yet they were not the ſame; for we read not but that they cut their haire, as the Nazirites did not. Touching a vow made by any in this kinde: the Hebrewes have theſe rules. 1. He that ſaith, I will be a Nazirite before I die, is bound to be one out of hand, leſt he be prevented by death. 2. He that ſaith, I will be a Nazirite from the fruit of the Vine onely, or onely from ſhaving the head, &c. Is bound to be a Nazirite in all things, becauſe in vowing one he hath vowed to be a Nazirite, and hereby is bound to obſerve all rites; and this rule ſeemeth to be the ground of the forealledged tenet of the Hebrewes, that the Rachabites and Eſſees were Nazirites; but being granted to be a true rule, this followeth not, becauſe although they obſerved ſome things which the Nazarites did, yet they vowed not to be Nazirites in any thing. 3. He that ſaith, I will be a Nazarite, upon condition that I will drink wine,

Numb. 6. 2.

Calvin. Gen. 49. 26.

Eſa. 11. 1.

Judg. 13. 5. Luk. 1. 15. Scholaſt. Hiſtor.

Maimony in Nezirath. c. 1.

which caſes he ſhould have been guiltie; but now having done nothing contrary, but according to Gods Law, he ſhall be guiltleſſe; God will not count this act of his jealouſly a ſinne in him, but the woman thus proved an adultreſſe, ſhall bear her ſinne; that is, the puniſhment thereof, thus alſo Lyranus and Cajetan. And hence it may be rightly inferred, that a man not ſeeking to ſtay the courſe of ſinning in others under him is himſelf guilty of their ſinnes, becauſe he that proceedeth according to this law againſt his wife, whom he may juſtly ſuſpect, is affirmed to be guiltleſs; therefore on the contrarie ſide, he that ſuffereth evill in appearance without queſtioning it, is guilty. And if God ſo ſeverely puniſhed corporall adultery, how much more will he be ſevere againſt the ſpirituall, that is, idolatry and ſuperſtition, as Lorinus, a Jeſuite himſelfe reaſoneth unwittingly, cenſuring his own idolatrous religion herein! And hitherto of the miraculous means of trying a ſuſpected wife. In imitation of this, there have in divers ages been ſundry means deviſed by the ſuperſtitious to trie the like, and for triall in many other caſes, as by gads of iron made red hot: thus Cunegundis, to the wife of Charles the third, is ſaid to have proved her chaſtitie, by going upon them barefooted; and Tuſcia a veſtall virgin by carrying water in a ſeive, and as Q. Claudia by drawing a ſhip with her girdle, &c.

Lyranus Cajetan. Note.

Boier. annal. lib. 4. Pet. Gregor. Syntag. lib. 48. c. 15. Theod. Balſamon ad Can. 6. Concil. Trullani.

Theod. Balſamon telleth of a certain Prieſt, that proved theft, by giving holy bread to the ſuſpected, making a croſs upon his head and a croſs upon his feet, adding divers prayers and an imprecation, that if he were guilty, his tongue and throat might be tied from ſwallowing it, and he ſhould grin and make a noiſe, and have torment without ceaſing. Delrius telleth of trialls by lots, by oath, by the Euchariſt, &c. and others by holy water drunke with theſe words; Let this water of the Lord become a triall to thee this day through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is a true and juſt Judge; then the tried kiſſed the holy Goſpel and the Croſſe. And Monomachies alſo have been much uſed for trials; as by Gundebaldus King of the Burgundians, anno 509. amongſt the Longobards, anno 659. and this triall was offered by Lodovike King of France, to Duke Hugo, anno 948. and hath been uſed amongſt the Germans, French, Spaniſh, Muſcovites and Danes, as Delrius ſaith. But the triall ſpoken of in this Chapter, was the onely triall appointed by God, and in other caſes an oath, according to that petition made by Solomon, 1 King. 8. 32. and therefore other means of triall are to be condemned, as in which there can be no faith to expect a juſt event, for that they are not of Gods, but of heatheniſh or ſuperſtitious mans ſetting up: And for this cauſe, both Gregory the great and Honorius the third, forbad the triall of hot irons and waters; and ſo did Charles the great, and Gratian, and Ino Carnotenſis ſaith, that theſe trialls have been forbidden by many Canons. In the Valentin. Councel in France, the trialls by Monomachy were moſt ſeverely prohibited.

Delrius lib. 4. Magic. diſput.

Gregor. magnus. Carol. magnus. lib. 2. Gratian. 2. qu. 5. 1. 6.

For the myſticall application of the triall here ordained, Rabanus and Rickelius apply it to the Paſtour, and the ſoul under his charge ſuſpected for hereſie. But Rupertus better to the Jewiſh Synagogue playing the adultreſſe againſt God; this they hide by denying it, but being brought before the high Prieſt Chriſt, they are made manifeſt to the world to have provoked the Lord to jealouſie, by their oppoſing and perſecuting of the true faith, being uncovered of the divine protection, when they were beſieged by the Roman army; and as by the bitter water, ſo corrupted belly and thigh, as that this Synagogue hath never ſince been able to bring forth one childe unto God, but remaineth miſerable and accurſed, according to that imprecation of their own once uttered, his blood be upon us and upon our children, as the woman here to the imprecation of the Prieſt ſaying, Amen, Amen. For touching her adultery it was prophecied, as a woman hath deſpiſed her husband, ſo the houſe of Iſrael hath deſpiſed me; and again,

The Myſterie.

Rupert. l. b 1. in Levit. c. 10.

Matth 27. 25.

Ier. 3. 20.

gain, thou haſt a whores forehead: He alſo applieth other particulars of the barly offering, and the want of oyl and incenſe hereupon to their holding to the literall ſenſe of the Law, in which there is nothing almoſt but branne as it were; no mercy or ſweet ſmelling ſavour, before the Lord, &c. of which the Reader, if he pleaſeth may ſee more in the Authour. Ver. 3.

Cap. VI.

THe Lord having hitherto provided for the purging of the camp in reſpect of neceſſary purgings from uncleanneſſes, now provideth for voluntary wayes of more exact holineſſe in ſome, even ſo many as were ſtirred up by his ſingular grace to vow the life of Nazarites. When either man or woman ſhall ſeparate themſelves to vow the vow of a Nazarite, &c. The word נזיר a Nazarite ſignifieth one ſeparated, and therefore to vow the vow of a Nazarite was to vow to be ſeparated, from the common ſort in a ſtrict holy courſe of life. If any out of their great devotion to God would doe thus; that they might have a warrant for it: this ordinance is made, wherein the rules, by which they were to live, are preſcribed, becauſe to undertake any extraordinary courſe of holy life without warrant from God is rather ſuperſtition then devotion. Such as voved and lived according to the vow of Nazarites, were the moſt excellent amongſt the people of God, as being a means of much good unto others when they beheld their abſtinence and holineſſe of life; and therefore they are numbred with the Prophets Amos. 2. 11. and ſpecially lamented when they failed, Lament. 4. 7. And it is not to be doubted, but that Jacob by the ſpirit of Propheſie pointed at this order, when he ſpake of Joſeph, as ſeparated from his brethren: thus Calvin, who alſo will have the perfect holineſſe and extraordinary of Chriſt pointed at in thoſe of this profeſſion, becauſe they were extraordinarily ſtirred up as guides and leaders to others herein. Yet Chriſt was not for this called a Nazarite, becauſe he was of this order, for he drank wine and ſtrong drinke; but from the citie Nazareth where he dwelt, and from נצר a branch, becauſe he was the branch ſpringing out of the root of Jeſſe, as is ſhewed more at large in my notes upon Matth. 2. Of Nazarites there were two ſorts, ſome that vowed this vow for their life time, and ſome for ſome yeares or dayes, onely, of the firſt ſort was Samuell, 1 Sam. 1. 11. ſo vowed by his mother; of the other ſort it is here ſpoken, ver. 4. 5. 13. Samſon and John the Baptiſt were appointed by the Lord from their birth to be Nazarites. A Nazarite, ſaith Comeſtor, is as much as holy, florens, germinans: and it ſeemeth by that Lament. 4. 7. that their habite was white. By a certain book of the Hebrewes called Inchaſin the Rechabites ſpoken of Jerem. 35. and ſaid to be Nazirites perpetuall, and the Eſſees or Haſſidæi. 1 Machab. 7. 13. and verily in their holineſs and manner of life being led ſo ſtrictly there was a great ſimilitude betwixt them, but yet they were not the ſame; for we read not but that they cut their haire, as the Nazirites did not. Touching a vow made by any in this kinde: the Hebrewes have theſe rules. 1. He that ſaith, I will be a Nazirite before I die, is bound to be one out of hand, leſt he be prevented by death. 2. He that ſaith, I will be a Nazirite from the fruit of the Vine onely, or onely from ſhaving the head, &c. Is bound to be a Nazirite in all things, becauſe in vowing one he hath vowed to be a Nazirite, and hereby is bound to obſerve all rites; and this rule ſeemeth to be the ground of the forealledged tenet of the Hebrewes, that the Rachabites and Eſſees were Nazirites; but being granted to be a true rule, this followeth not, becauſe although they obſerved ſome things which the Nazarites did, yet they vowed not to be Nazirites in any thing. 3. He that ſaith, I will be a Nazarite, upon condition that I will drink wine,

Numb. 6. 2.

Calvin. Gen. 49. 26.

Eſa. 11. 1.

Judg. 13. 5. Luk. 1. 15. Scholaſt. Hiſtor.

Maimony in Nezirath. c. 1.

wine, ſhave my head,&c. is bound to be a Nazarite in all things, becauſe theſe conditions are againſt the law of Nazarites, and ſo are fruſtrated hereby, he being tyed as if he had put no ſuch conditions at all. 4. He that voweth, when I have a ſon, I will be a Nazarite, beginneth then to be a Nazarite, as he vowed. 5. Such as vow in ignorance or conſtraint, are ſet free again. 6. If a father ſaith to his child, thou ſhalt be a Nazarite, and the child be ſilent, he is not.

Verſ. 3. Verſ 4. He ſhall ſeparate himſelf from Wine and ſtrong drink, and ſhall drink no vineger of wine or of ſtrong drink, neither ſhall he drink any liquor of grapes, or eat moiſt grapes, or dryed grapes. He ſhall eat nothing of the vine tree from the kernel to the huſk &c.] All theſe things, ſaith Calvin, are particularly expreſſed, to meet with the wicked wilineſſe of man, who although he refraineth from ſinning one way, yet he is ready other wayes to fall into the ſame more covertly. And wine and ſtrong drink are chiefly forbidden to the Nazarites, to ſhew that the ſober uſe of theſe is chiefly required to Chriſtian temperance. By ſtrong drink here Maimony underſtandeth only that which is made with the mixture of wine, affirming, that the Nazarite might drink ſtrong drink made of Dates, or ſome other thing; but this a preſumptuous Rabbinical tradition, and ſo is that of his, that the Nazarite might drink a little wine mingled with honey, ſo that it had no taſte of the wine, and that the juyce of the leaves was lawful. But whatſoever cometh of the vine is altogether prohibited, Judg.13.14. And as the foreſaid Rabbine is too looſe, where God hath commanded ſtrictneſſe, ſo he is too ſtrict wherein God is not ſtrict, viz. that a Nazarite might not come near a vineyard, as he ſaith, their wiſe men taught, nor be in the company of them that drink wine, but far away, becauſe ſo a ſtumbling block ſhould be laid before him. Indeed ſo far forth as hereby he may be tempted to break his vow, it was good to keep afar off, but if he were in ſuch places at ſometimes, it was no ſin in him, becauſe not forbidden of God.

Calvin. Note.

Maimony in Nezir.

Hieron. in Amoſ. 2.

